PEBBLES IN MY BOOTS Vol. 2

A SELECTION OF
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS INCLUDING:
"Special Forces at Khe Sanh,"
"The 1967 Hill Battles,"
"Khe Sanh Glossary,"
Selected letters and miscellaneous writings,
"The Wounded Healer"

BY
CHAPLAIN RAY WILLIAM STUBBE

WAUWATOSA, WISCONSIN
01 October 2011

PEBBLES IN MY BOOTS Vol. 2

A SELECTION OF
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS INCLUDING:
"Special Forces at Khe Sanh,"
"The 1967 Hill Battles,"
"Khe Sanh Glossary,"
Selected letters and miscellaneous writings,
"The Wounded Healer"

BY

CHAPLAIN RAY WILLIAM STUBBE

WAUWATOSA, WISCONSIN
01 October 2011

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Army Special Forces at Khe Sanh (1998) 1
- Why we were at Khe Sanh
- JTAD (Joint Technical Advisory Detachment) 11
- Special Projects
  - Elephant 16
  - Warnings 17
  - "Skip" Minnicks 19
  - Fred Patton 20
  - Maj George Quamo 28
  - On the Precipice 31
- DENVER1 35
- FOB3 39
- Patrols to Khe Sanh Village 41
- Hill 471 - 29 January 1968: Part 1: The Contact 49
- Hill 471 - 29 January 1968: Part 2: The Follow-Up 52
- Mission Impossible 58
- Chronology of Events (fall of Lang Vei) 64
- Life and Death at FOB 3 72
- The Mysterious Disappearance 80

The 1967 Hill Battles 83
- Background 83
- 24 April 1967: The Battle of Khe Sanh Begins 86
- 25 April 1967: Decimation in the Fog 90
- 26 April 1967: Agony 95
- 27 April 1967: Posturing 100
- 28 April 1967: Hill 861 Taken 101
- 29 April 1967: Caring for Each Other 102
- 30 April 1967: Conflict, Carnage, Conquest 104
- 01 May 1967: Preparation 116
- 02 May 1967: 881-South Seized 117
- 03 May 1967: 881-North 119
- 04 May 1967: Attack on Echo 120
- 04 May 1967: Attacked from Within 125
- 05 May 1967: Hill 881-North Captured 127
- The Battle Won 128
- 09 May 1967: Lurking Death 128
- A Mystery 130
- Message from Colonel Lanigan 130
- The Numbers 131
- "Home From the Woods" by Bill Stross 132

Khe Sanh Glossary 133

Letters written from Vietnam pertaining to Khe Sanh 161

Why Vietnam Poetry? 11 August 1997 184

Where Two or Three Are Gathered (An Essay on a Picture) 19 May 2011 187

Presentation to Those Helping Combat Veterans with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, 25 May 2011 195
- Eclipse 197
- Shame and Defilement 199
- A Few Thoughts on Handling PTSD 201

Memorial Day Address, 30 May 2011 204

Flag Day Prayers, 14 June 2011 209

Letter to General Christmas, 04 Sep 2011, upon learning of the death of Colonel Lownds 209

The Wounded Healer 212
- Letter 212

The Unhealing Wound 213
Example: The Vietnam Veteran Remembers 221
A Position: The Wounded Healer 225
Six Perspectives 227
The Shaman 227
Ασκλήπιος 231
Suffering Servant 234
Heschel and the Prophet 236
Transference 237
Theology of the Cross 241
A Parting Word 247
Bibliography 248
Maps and Diagrams for Khe Sanh Manuscript, 06 June 1989 252

ILLUSTRATIONS

USSF team A-131, October, 1962 4
James H. Turner, III 13
Khe Sanh Area 15
SOG Team with Maj Fred Patton 22
Lao Bao Prison and area 26
Old French Fort 27
George Quamo 28
Some soldiers of Special Projects and FOB-3 for Christmas card 32
Construction of FOB-3 39
Captured NVA Weapons from Khe Sanh Village 42
Patrol to Khe Sanh Village, 26 Jan 1968 43
Khe Sanh village aerial and locations 45
Hill 471 and Khe Sanh Base - map 49
View from top of 471 to Khe Sanh Village 51
Hill 471 action 53
View from Hill 471 to Khe Sanh Combat Base 54
Site of B5-T8 NVA Front Headquarters controlling Khe Sanh Siege 59
Chaplain Stubbe leading worship on top of future TOC, Lang Vei 62
Lang Vei TAOR 62
One-Time Pad Trigraph encryption 74
FOB3 Plaque 82
Marines of G/2/3 move through bomb crater on Hill 861 on 30 April 1967 83
1967 Hill Battle Area 86
NVA Positions During 1967 Khe Sanh Battle of the Hills 96
26 April 1967, Marines of B/1/9 carrying KIA/WIA in stretchers. 99
26 April 1967, Marines of B/1/9 carrying KIA/MIA. Above: Capt Michael E.Sayers. 99
Enemy Bunkers on Hill 881-South 109
Hill 861 as occupied by Marines on 28 July 1967 111
Hill 881-South as occupied by Marines on 09 November 1967 111
NVA Bunkers on Hill 881-South 118
The Old Rugged Cross 131
Reid Photograph 190
Swanson Photograph 190
Unpublished Swanson Photograph 190
Casselli drawing 192
Raffaele painting 193
NVA Picture 193
Paplham Display 193
Wisconsin State Veterans Museum Display 194
National Marine Corps Museum Display 194
CD/DVD Jacket 194

Picture in Vietnam Magazine	194
South Vietnam	252
I Corps Tactical Zone	253
Khe Sanh Area	254
Khe Sanh Area During Siege	255
1967 Hill Battle Area	256
North Vietnamese Positions During Battle of the Hills	257
Enemy Bunkers on Hill 881-South during Hill Battles	258
Khe Sanh AO May 1967	259
3RD MarDiv OpOrder 6-67 AO	260
Operation CROCKETT Area of Operations	261
Lang Vei Area of Operations Late 1967	262
Bridge Site	263
TAOR CAC OSCAR and Bru Villes	264
Hill 861, August, 1967	265
Khe Sanh Village, early January, 1968	266
Site of drowning of Meggs, Rao Quan River, XD 843437	267
1/26 Operation 28-30 Dec 1967	268
Operation NIAGARA AO	269
Positions of 1/9 During Siege	270
Positions of 2/26 During Siege	271
Area of 1/9 Contact, 16 Apr 1968	272
Are Light Strikes 27 Feb 1968 involving total destruction of Khe Sanh village	273
Arc Light Strikes 01-05 March 1968	274
Hill 881S During Siege	275
NVA Trench System during Siege	276

FOREWORD TO VOLUME 2 OF PEBBLES IN MY BOOTS

The first volume of Pebbles in My Boots, published earlier this year, contained mainly personal documents–poems, prayers, some reports and letters, talks and presentations, chronologies and a few essays. This volume contains some major articles (The Special Forces at Khe Sanh, the 1967 Hill Battles); a glossary (of terms, places, equipment, and operations); additional talks, prayers, essays, and some maps and diagrams.

This volume will help explain just why were at Khe Sanh, why Khe Sanh had strategic significance. It will explain just why we occupied Hills 861 and 881-South but not 881-North, and how Hill 950 happened to be occupied. It portrays heroism and bravery and the agony and ugliness of war. This volume includes many little-reported aspects of Khe Sanh, perhaps too classified at the time for most to know, including intelligence activities, some operations in Laos launched from Khe Sanh, signals intelligence, and certainly the under-reported 1967 Battle of the Hills. Also included are maps and diagrams indicating positions manned and locations. An essay indicating how veterans may have gained positive abilities to be healing agents to other vets and all of society concludes this volume.

Hopefully, these may be of some value to you.

Ray William Stubbe
01 October 2011
Wauwatosa, Wisconsin

ARMY SPECIAL FORCES AT KHE SANH [Originally printed as "The Army at Khe Sanh" in Khe Sanh Veterans, Inc.: Red Clay, Issue No. 41 (Spring, 1998). Revised article with new information.

WHY WE WERE AT KHE SANH

Khe Sanh, perched in the mountainous, jungle-covered area near the border with Laos and just under the DMZ, far from the populated areas to the east, sat on Route 9,[1] provided one of the very few passages through the mountains, an ancient invasion route, and one that needed to be plugged to prevent large forces from invading South Vietnam and also an afrea through which recon units could be dispatched to determine forces moviong south from North Vietnam. Later, Khe Sanh became a launch site from which operations were launched into Laos.

Following World War II, the Potsdam Conference made the 16th Parallel (runs just south of DaNang) the dividing line for occupation troops: the Chinese were to administer the area to the north and the British the area to the south. The 1954 Geneva Accords, however, signed by the DRVN, made the 17th parallel, not the 16th, the dividing line, probably because the USSR in 1954 was attempting to induce France not to join the European Defense Community.[2] The area of land between the 16th and 17th Parallels, basically, I Corps Tactical Zone (ICTZ), became an area of intense dispute, and Khe Sanh, the only inhabited area in the entire western half of it was to become the deadliest battle of the Vietnam War.

The situation in contiguous Laos had rapidly deteriorated following the coup on 09 August 1960 led by Kong Le who overthrew the Laotian government of Prince Tiao Somsanith.[3] The city of Tchepone on Route 9 in Laos was overrun 01 May 1961,[4] and, being concerned over a "porous border,"[5] the Americans paced a Special Force "A" team in Khe Sanh ville on 8 July 1962.[6]

The Khe Sanh area reflected Communist strategy developed in the 1950s and 1960s which involved capturing the periphery and working back towards the center of power: exploit situations existing in outlying villages and move towards the centers of power.[7] National Route 9 (QL-9), the principle east-west road extending from Dong Ha in the east to the Thai border, naturally became one of the major infiltration routes intensively employed since the end of 1958 by Communist forces.[8] As early as 1959, Route 9 was considered too insecure to be included in a request for general road improvements in SVN.[9] William Colby (later, director of the CIA), travelled from Saigon to Hue, picked up a vehicle, and drove with his son and a friend to visit the prison ruins at Lao Bao in 1960, around July.[10] The enemy situation in the summer of 1961 indicated North

---

[1] Constructed between 1904 and 1910 by Khas, Lao, and Phouthai workers under the supervision of a French engineer. [Ref: Letter from Soulang Phetsomphou, 09 Sep 1997. Phetsomphou was CO of BV-33 at Ban Houei Sane]

[2] Bernard B. Fall, "Indochina (1946-1954)," Dept. of Military Art & Engineering, U.S. Military Academy, HM381, Revolutionary Warfare.

[3] U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961 - 1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961,Wshington, D.C.: Gvernmanet Printing Office, 1988, p. 126.

[4] U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, pp. 126, 232, 311; CIA: Current Intelligence Weekly Summary, 4 May 1961, p. 1 [MORI 207619]. South Vietnam took emergency measures, moving a battalion to the border and a 150-man special forces unit in civilian clothes penetrated 6 mi. into Laos [CIA, Current Intelligence Weekly Summary, 11 May 1961, p. 1, MORI 207620]. A 120-man South Vietnamese Army special forces unit penetrated into Laos and assumed effective control of Laotian Army garrison which abandoned Tchepone 01 May and was guarding 9 bridges west of the Lao/S. Viet. border. [CIA: current Intelligence Weekly Summary, Weekly Review: Laos, 18 May 1961, p. 1, MORI 207661] The Lao Army unit, BV-33 subsequently located at the Ban Houei Sane airfield.

[5] "Porous border:" Telegram from the Ambassador in Vietnam to Dept. of State, 08 Dec 1960 in U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1958-1960, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1986, p. 719.

[6] Stanton, Shelby L., Green Berets at War, Novato, Ca.: Presidio, 1985, p. 46. Comments of Jacques Standing, 20 Mar 1989 and 27 Mar 1989; Comments of Gerald J. Howland, 20 Mar 1989; Comments of Frank Fowler, 21 May 1989.

[7] "The revolutionary apparatus would find its bases far from the capital and gradually work inward against the government in the hope that after a number of years it would be strong enough either to assault the capitol itself or bring the government to its knees in a protracted struggle." [George K. Tanham and Dennis J. Duncanson, "Some Dilemmas of Counterinsurgency," Foreign Affairs 48:1 (Oct, 1969) p. 166.]

[8] "Memorandum From the President's Military Representative (Taylor) to the President (Kennedy)," 18 Sept 1961, U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1988, p. 304.

[9] "Memorandum of a Conversation," 21 Nov 1959, U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1958-60, Vol. 1, Vietnam, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1986, p. 260.

[10] Conversation with William Colby, 28 April 1990. Colby, William, Lost Victory, Firsthand Account of America's Sixteen-Year Involvement in Vietnam, with James McCargar, Chicago and New York: Contemporary Books, 1989, p. 42.

Vietnamese forces pushing eastward along Route 9 toward Hue.[11] Over 700 Communists were infiltrating into SVN per month. "The fall of Laos has placed Route #9 in Communist hands .. and gives the RVNF [Republic of Vietnam Armed Forces] commander the task of delaying from both North and West."[12] The focus became plugging a "porous border:" The Chief of the MAAG, Vietnam[13] was "..convinced that this guerrilla war cannot be won by free world unless effective steps taken to plug up porous border."[14]

In late 1961, an international force to guard against infiltration from Laos into South Vietnam was considered.[15] The Chief of Naval Operations reported that since the fall of Tchepone, "Communist forces have had free access to the Vietnam border by this secure and well concealed route [Route 9]."[16]

The Taylor Mission Report proposed a "Frontier Force, Vietnam," to deny the northwest frontier bordering Laos to Communist infiltration as well as penetrate Communist-dominated areas outside South Vietnam to disrupt Communist lines of communication[17] The Report indicated that as of the summer of 1961, the 325th North Vietnamese Army Division was just north of the 17th Parallel and the 304th and 324th NVA Divisions were in the vicinity of Route 9. The concept of the Frontier Force included securing the willing assistance of the Montagnards initially in intelligence and later securing their own area to make Communist infiltration along the 103-mile "hot" area of the border impossible.[18]

A U.S. Army Special Forces "A" Team arrived at Khe Sanh and established a permanent camp in Khe Sanh Village on 08 July 1962[19] to check infiltration along Route 9 by North Vietnamese Army units. They located on top of a hill just to the east of Khe Sanh Village, an old French fortified stronghold (XD 859387) on a plateau that was neither secure nor easily defended; it was later referred to as "the old French Fort," or "Fort Dix." by the SOG unit that later located there in the summer of 1967.

The initial "A" Team, led by Capt Weaver, was on a 6-month rotation, most of which had already been near DaNang to train Bru Montagnards. The team included Lieutenant Hancock (XO), Jacques Standing (Team Leader), Sgt Jerry Howland (Medic), Westbrook (Medic), George Grooms, Frank Quinn, and Hugh Sharon (Weapons). Grooms and Quinn had been captured by the VC at DaNang, but were turned loose to return! A possible explanation, "One of the guys who we still consider an awful good friend, was a chronic complainer. We always told him the VC turned him loose because they got tired of hearing of his bitchin'."[20] Eventually, the team was able to depart DaNang and travel to Khe Sanh via an old WW II 2-1/2 GMC truck. "When we left DaNang, the Vietnamese government and everybody else said, 'Oh, you'll never make it up there. The VC will get you for sure,'" but the trip proceeded and we arrived uneventfully.

Upon arrival, the team occupied the abandoned Old French Fort position. All that remained was one crushed-in, small bunker, which they called "the Alamo." The position contained only hulks of former buildings, and the Americans were informed there had been a bitter battle at this site involving a besieging of the French. The French force was eventually defeated, the wounded killed, and they, together with their dead, dumped into the well out of spite from the ferocity of the

---

[11] "Memorandum from Edwin F. Black of the office of the Secretary of Defense to the president's Deputy Special Assistant for National Security Affairs (Rostow)," 27 July 1961, U.S. Dept,. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, Washington, D.C.: 1988, p. 245.

[12] "Memorandum from the Secretary of Defense's Assistant for Special Operations (Lansdale) to the President's Military Representative (Taylor)," U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, Washington, D.C.: 1988, p. 239.

[13] Military Assistance and Advisory Group.

[14] Telegram from the Ambassador to Vietnam to the Dept. of State, 08 Dec 1960, U.S. Dept of State, Foreign Relations, 1958-1960, p. 719. At a meeting of President Kennedy's Task Force on Vietnam, both General Bonesteel [JCS representative] and Mr. Colby [CIA representative] stated their doubts that the 1500 mile border could be sealed. Ambassador Young [Ambassador to Thailand from 22 June 1961] said that this raised the question of why we should pour hundreds of millions into Vietnam if we can't choke off the problem. Gen. Bonesteel noted this to be the central point: "..How seriously are we to take the objective .. preventing Communist domination of Viet-Nam," noting that this would require a sizeable force commitment. ["Draft Memorandum on the Conversation of the Second Meeting of the Presidential Task Force on Vietnam," at the Pentagon, 4 May 1961, U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, Washington, D.C.: 1988, p. 118.

[15] Westmoreland, A Soldier Reports, p. 145.

[16] Memorandum from the Chief of Naval Operations (Anderson) to the Secretary of Defense *(McNamara)," 9 Oct 1961, U.S. Dept of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, Washington, D.C.: 1988, p. 329.

[17] The Ho Chi Minh Trail network, and, closer to Khe Sanh, the "Santa Fe Trail System."

[18] "Letter from the President's Military Representative (Taylor) to the President," Washington, 3 November 1961, App. F, Paper Prepared by the Members of the Taylor Mission, U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-1963, pp. 520-521.

[19] Shelby L. Stanton, Green Berets at War, Novato, Ca.": Presideo, 1985, p. 46.

[20] Comments on the initial SF team at Khe Sanh are based upon: Conversation with Jacques Standing, 20 March 1989 and 27 March 1989; Gerald J. Howland, 20 March 1989; and Frank Fowler, 21 March 1989.

battle.[21]

The mission of the first SF team was to build a campsite and train the Bru. Under control of a CIA Case officer, they were prohibited from venturing into the surrounding area: "..every time we would try to do something, we would meet with objection. "Stay within your close proximity to necessary security patrols, and that's it; don't wander the area."[22] We were told when we went in there to stay away from everybody. We were told: "Just build your camp, protect yourself, and we'll give you orders down the line."[23] The team medic, Sgt Gerald J. Howland recalls: "We were camp-bound. We weren't allowed to go out. And we done very little patrolling action. So when the guys–any kind of security patrol or listening or anything, we listed it as a 'tiger hunt,' and we went, just me and the Frenchman."[24]

There was no reserve force to fortify or relieve them, if necessary. Support for the extremely tenuous life at Khe Sanh was almost non-existent, other than a small Caribou aircraft from Thailand that landed at the Lao Bao Penitentiary airstrip. Once, the plane slid off the runway[25] and suddenly 30 - 40 armed Laotians in camouflaged utilities appeared–to assist! "It was crazy! The whole situation up there was crazy!"[26] The border was as ambiguous as it was artificial: "..neither the Vietnamese nor Laotians knew where the border was, and they didn't care. We saw Laotian troops in Khe Sanh routinely then. They came in force."[27] The Caribou, having skidded off the runway, remained that way for several days. "We'd sit down there at night guarding the stupid thing. The Bru would leave us if the tigers came. That was every night! They didn't believe you could kill a tiger, so they wouldn't mess with them. They attributed a lot of religious power to a tiger."[28]

Prohibited by the CIA from patrolling only increased the apprehension by the Americans that enemy forces could have seized their position any time they wished. Vehicle food runs to Quang Tri City involved an uncertain venture along the hazardous, sinuous Route 9, wending through cliffs, over rickety bridges, and passing through dozens of ideal ambush sites. Only two Americans were permitted to travel on these runs, and any Bru standing along the road were picked-up; it was felt this would diminish the possibility of ambush.

The team eventually completed construction of a team house for the team that would relieve them. It was never occupied by that team, however: a typhoon blew it away better than an artillery attack might have. Ironically, communication with Saigon, which had always been difficult, was suddenly rectified by the typhoon. It knocked down their 15-ft. high antenna into the surrounding protective barbed wire alongside the eastern side of their perimeter, and suddenly, comm was "5 by 5."

Another source of apprehension was the position itself:

> One of the stories that we got a hold of real early–and it really alarmed us–was the fact that there was a tunnel in our camp, and it came out in the well–which had collapsed on us where they had filled it in. But we could see where the well was. And they said there was a tunnel from that well, down across that field and it came out the back slope near the jungle. And when the last elements escaped from that fort, that's the way they got out of there. We even went down to see if there was any places down along the embankment going down. They didn't need to charge us, just send us sky-high! That was a very uncomfortable feeling; but the more people you talked to you didn't know whether it was old wives' tale.[29]

The second SF team, A-131, to arrive at Khe Sanh (around September, 1962), the first one to spend its entire 6-month tour at Khe Sanh, was led by Capt Chuck Korchek. At the end of 1962, a Vietnamese engineer unit built the Khe Sanh airstrip using PSP;[30] prior to this time, it was merely a dirt plateau. With the exception of the local French priest who was an intelligence source, contact with others in the area was prohibited. They were even prohibited from going near Lao Bao by the CIA case officer, who also took away their .50 caliber machinegun to the discouragement of the team's light weapons specialist, Frank Fowler.[31] The rat infestation was considerable: "I remember one time we went into the village and bought

---

[21] Conversation with James Whitenack, 06 Oct 1988, and COL Bruce B.G. Clarke, 07 October 1988. Both were District Advisors, Huong Hoa District in 1967.

[22] Conversation with Jacques Standing, 20 March 1989.

[23] Conversation with Jacques Standing, 27 March 1989.

[24] Conversation with Gerald J. Howland, 20 March 1989.

[25] The Lao Bao runway was 1,100 x 65 feet, capable of landing C-7a aircraft. [Collins, John M., Military Geography for Professionals and the Public. Washington, D.C.: Defense University Press, 1998, p. 373.

[26] Conversation with Jacques Standing, 20 March 1989.

[27] Conversation with Gerald Howland, 20 March 1989.

[28] Ibid.

[29] Conversation with Jacques Standing, 27 March 1989.

[30] Pierced Steel Plate.

[31] Conversation with Frank Fowler, 21 March 1989. Fowler comments:" We had a .50 caliber machinegun when we first established it. And they came and took it away from us because they said there's too much of a chance of it falling into the hands of the north Vietnamese if we got overrun, and they didn't want to jeopardize aircraft in our area. It really makes you some metal rat traps because it was so bad. We were using mosquito nets on our bunks to keep the rats out. I remember one night there was a big metal rat trap with teeth on it. And I remember the first rat we got. When it snapped, it woke me up. And then the rat started dragging the thing off!"[32]

Second U.S. Army Special Forces team to occupy Khe Sanh, October, 1962, at "Old French Fort" position east of Khe Sanh Village (A-131). Left to right, standing: Interpreter, Ray Norton (Operations Sergeant), Tom Whitley (Demolitions Specialist), Dick Dalton (Intelligence Specialist), Paul Harvey (Heavy Weapons), and Sgt. Burnett (radio operator on lean from DaNang). Left to right, kneeling: Robert Korchek (Detachment Commander), Frank Fowler (Light Weapons), John Hardman (Radio Operator), and Ethel Duffield (Demolitions Specialist). Missing from photo: Roger Kluckman (radio operator), Tom Ross (Medic), and Ken Patterson (Detachment Executive Officer). Photograph from collection of Frank Fowler

The tempo of USMC helicopter sorties in late 1962 and early 1963 was significant. On 13 December 1962, 12 helicopters of HMM-163 made 92 sorties, transporting 304 troops of the First ARVN Division from Hiep Khan Air Strip (YD 635275) into a landing zones at XD 960330 and XD 783356, the latter to become the site of the Lang Vei camp that was overrun by tanks during the 1968 Siege at Khe Sanh. On 31 March 1963, ARVN paratroopers made 70 jumps from H-34D helicopters into the Khe Sanh jump area (XD 859361, the Ft. Dix position), and on 06 April 1963, 6 UH-34D helicopters lifted 130 ARVN troops from the Khe Sanh heliport, "Fort Dix" (XD 859381) into a LZ located in the extreme northwest corner of South Vietnam, just under the DMZ and about two clicks from Laos (at XD 682505), encountering negative opposition. On 11 April 1963, two 0-1Bs encountered small arms fire while flying in the area between Hills 861 and 881S (at XD 784445). The Marine helicopters also conducted various evacuations of POWs, WIAs, and KIAs from the Khe Sanh area.[33]

In June, 1963, Capt Schwar arrived at Khe Sanh with half of an "A" team; the other half was at Kam Duc, led by the XO, 1/Lt Wayne Long who visited Khe Sanh twice a month. During this time, the situation at Khe Sanh "..was pretty good: you could come in by air or you could drive down the road from Dong Ha. you'd get shot at from time to time. in fact, the joke was, 'How do you get to Khe Sanh? You drive down Route 9 and a sniper takes a shot at you and you take the next right!' We had one incident where the team took some fire on that little road between the French Fort and the airstrip [the access road], but that was ordinary."[34]

During this time, Army Special Forces companies switched from control by the CIA to control by what was then "Special Forces Group, Provisional, Vietnam" and later, "Fifth Special Forces Group.[35] The French coffee planter, Felix Poilane, became one of Captain Schwar's primary intelligence sources; Schwar spoke fluent French.[36]

A Royal Lao artillery unit pursued by Pathet Lao forces took refuge at Lao Bao in January, 1964. Capt. Francis X. Harrison, who had just reported to Quang Tri as an advisor to the 3rd Battalion of the 1st Regiment of the 1st ARVN Division (the maneuvering regiment), recalls BV33 as a sort of fortified city: feel good!"

---

[32] Ibid.

[33] TE 79.3.3.6 Command Diary, 6 Nov 1962 - 28 June 1963, pp. 1, 3; TE 79.3.3.6 Command Diary, 29 Jan 1963, pp. 18,. 19, 20-22. Task Element 79.3.3.6 was part of MAG-16, commanded by LtCol A. W. McCully, USMC.

[34] Conversation with Wayne Long, 06 Sep 1991.

[35] Ibid.

[36] Ibid.

..they had their families with them. They had kids. They had supplies all over the place. I mean the whole area was just one big ammo dump. There were open boxes of grenades, open boxes of mortar shells, and machine gun ammunition. They had more ammunition. They must have kept pulling their ammunition with them as they withdrew.[37]

The Commanding officer of the "A" Team at Khe Sanh in early 1964, Capt. Floyd Thompson, became the longest-held American POW of the Vietnam War. Thompson had accompanied an 0-1 "Bird Dog" plane piloted by Capt. Richard Whitesides. It was shot down 26 March 1964. When Thompson regained consciousness, he was surrounded by a group of enemy guerrillas, one of which was attempting to cut off his finger to obtain a ruby ring he wore. His back had been broken and there was no sign of Whitesides, who was later presumed KIA.[38]

Capt Allen B. Imes, Commanding Officer of USSF Team A-728, operating from 7th Special Forces, Ft. Bragg, was sent to Khe Sanh with his team with the mission to determine the whereabouts of Capt. Floyd Thompson. He questioned numerous Bru Montagnards who recalled the plane going down, but little else. When Capt Imes returned in November, 1964, his report concluded was that Floyd Thompson was dead.[39]

While Capt Imes was at the Old French Fort position, he turned one cement block building into a combination mess-hall, operations center, and Comm Office, while a medical dispensary was established down from the hill along Route 9. His men were housed in wood and thatch huts. His unit consisted of the normal 12-man "A" team as well as an Australian Captain and two Australian Sergeants-Major. Although Captain. Reginald Pollard, son of the Chief of Staff of the Australian Army, was actually senior in rank to Capt. Imes, he subordinated himself in order to work with A-728. The Aussies became part of the team, accompanied the Americans on patrols, sometimes in charge of the patrols. In addition, Capt imes hired some 35 to 40 Nung soldiers as personal body guards to the Americans. The Americans, Australians, and Nungs occupied an inner perimeter of the camp; the Vietnamese were placed in an outer perimeter.

A special Scout Platoon of Bru tribesmen was organized and trained. Two of the Bru scouts were particularly trusted and established the intelligence network of agents. The Bru of the Scout Platoon had contacts with Bru in the villages and occasionally ventured into Laos to gather information. BV-33 became another source of information; its Commander occasionally travelled eastward along Route 9 with his family, escorted by Capt Imes' soldiers to the Khe Sanh position. Once every month or two, Imes travelled to visit the Commander of BV-33. The Commander of BV-33 was killed in 1964 (as was Eugene Poilane) when his vehicle struck a land mine while travelling Route 9 east of the Khe Sanh area.

During April, 1964, Major Alfred M. Gray, Jr., arrived and established SESU (Signal Engineering Survey Unit) on Tiger Tooth Mountain (XD 835540), perhaps in connection with the introduction of guerrilla teams into Laos during Operation LEAPING LENA.[40] The presence of the first U.S. Marine infantry forces in Vietnam (which was at Khe Sanh, a 76-man infantry detachment from Co G, 2/3, reinforced with an 81mm mortar section commanded by 1/Lt Raymond J. Otlowski) was a great relief to Capt Imes who was convinced that because that platoon was present he avoided attack. Abruptly, one day, Capt Imes received a message that General John K. Waters was coming to Khe Sanh. Waters was USARPAC (U.S. Army Forces, Pacific), a 4-star General and General Patton's son-in-law. Capt Imes gave a briefing, and then General Waters said, "OK, now it's my turn," and proceeded to explain the presence of 15,000 North Vietnamese Army soldiers massed on the DMZ which the American command expected to attack and seize northern I Corps, cut it off, declare a neutral country and receive the recognition of Russia, China, and North Vietnam.. The General continued: the mission of Special Forces would then involved going underground as a "stay-behind" force to wage guerrilla warfare. Imes recalls: "It scared me to death! Our mission from the mouth of USARPAC Commander was to let the Vietnamese and Montagnards fend for themselves, take our Nungs and the Scout Platoon, and become our own guerrilla force."[41]

During 1964, the A Team also made the decision to abandon the Old French Fort position and establish a base on the airstrip, a decision based on a meeting of Capt. Imes at the "B" Detachment in DaNang, commanded by Maj Nantz. The Executive officer of the "B" Detachment, Maj David Watts (who later became a General) was the real brains behind the idea

---

[37] Conversation with Francis X. Harrison, 26 February 1989.
[38] John G. Hubbell, P.O.W., New York: Reader's Digest Press, 1976, pp. 383-384.
[39] Conversation with Allan B. Imes, 14 October 1988.
[40] Major Gray and his unit occupied Tiger Tooth Mt. on 13 May, and during Operation LEAPING LENA, 8-man reconnaissance teams with 2 Americans per team parachuted into Tchepone, Laos, 24 June. Only 5 survived. SESU departed Tiger Tooth Mt. 16-19 July. [Asst CoS Memo AO1a (JCSO-kh 001A32564, 13 Nov 1964, to CMC, Subj: USMC participation in Vietnam, Encl (1), p. 2; Capt Robert H. Whitlow, U.S. Marines in Vietnam, the Advisory and Combat Assistance Era, 1954-1964, Washington, D.C.: HQMC, 1977, p. 139. Maj Gray later became General Gray, Commandant of the Marine Corps.
[41] Conversation with Allan B. Imes, 14 October 1988.

and engineered the entire operation.[42]

By November, 1964, Capt. Chuck Allen's team had already arrived together with several months of food supplies. At this point, Special Forces teams rotated in and out of Khe Sanh on 6-month tours. Due to socked-in weather, conditions became difficult with two different teams occupying the same area, each with different ways of doing things. Finally, a Caribou aircraft suddenly appeared, Imes and his team left behind all their crossbows and other souvenirs, even official records, and hopped on the aircraft with only their fatigues and rifles.[43] Chuck Allen's team from First Special Forces, Okinawa, made the move to the Khe Sanh airstrip and spent its 6-month tour building a central command bunker, bunkers in the four corners, and about 15 additional buildings,[44] all later assumed by Marines to have been constructed by the French.

Capt Allen established a civilian council that included Felix Poilane, Father Poncet, the Millers, and a number of other French residents of the area, to promote a civic action program with the Bru tribes people. He also established various agent nets to gather intelligence and maintained liaison with BV-33.

The next "A" Team, arriving at Khe Sanh in March, 1965, had trained at Ft.Bragg, NC; they were led by Capt Bostick and consisted of Pete Morakon (Team Leader), Claude Rule (Intelligence Sergeant), later relieved by Charlie Biddle, O'Leary and Sgt Cobb (Medic), SSGT McFadden (radio operator), SGT Louis Wells (junior radio operator, Higgins, Charles Black, and Al Keating (weapons).[45] When they arrived at Khe Sanh, construction of the concrete bunkers begun by Chuck Allen was not yet completed. The team continued to patrol its AO, roughly 40 kilometers north to south and 20 kilometers east to west with patrols lasting 3 - 15 days and consisting of two Americans and a varied number of indigenous,. Once or twice a month, a patrol crossed the border to visit BV33, a unit 200 to 300 strong "..with all their families, chickens, and everything else." A C-47 airplane frequently landed at the Khe Sanh airstrip with supplies to be transported along Route 9 to BV33.[46]

The camp at Khe Sanh consisted of concrete bunkers in the corners on which were placed some makeshift rocket launchers firing numerous 2.75-inch rockets left behind by Marine H-34 helicopters during a previous operation. They made a terrific noise upon being fired; General Walt, during one of his visits, was puzzled over the apparent new weapon until he was informed of what they were. He thought it was a grand idea.[47] The airstrip, constructed of PSP, was C-130 capable. When the large birds landed on the east end of the runway and taxied uphill towards the western end past the camp, they made a terrific racket as the PSP rolled in front of the aircraft on each landing.[48]

When Captain John D. Waghelstein (Callsign "BRONCO ONE") reported as Commanding Officer on 9 October 1965, the camp consisted to two companies of Montagnards, a company of Vietnamese LLDB,[49] plus 30 Nungs. The Khe Sanh camp was the only one of the seven camps in I Corps that had Chinese mercenaries. As he glanced out of his window the very day he arrived, Captain Waghelstein spotted one of the Nungs laying a machinegun pointed at the LLDB team house. There was no love lost between the Vietnamese and the Montagnards and the Nungs; while the Nungs and Montagnards got along fairly well, both being oppressed minorities in Viet Nam, neither group got along well with the Vietnamese, and the hatred and suspicion were mutual. The Nungs worked directly with the twelve American advisors but were constantly being given orders by the LLDB who resented that special relationship. The Nungs were highly valued by Americans as good soldiers more than earning their pay in every engagement. The Vietnamese company, on the other hand, was assumed to be infiltrated with enemy agents. The Bru Montagnards were especially well-liked by the Green Berets as a "..very simple people who were patient, steadfast, loyal.[50]

By October, 1965, recon patrols reported enemy moving into the Khe Sanh area. "We knew it would only be a matter of time and we would get hit because we started to be a thorn in their side. We were hitting them on the trail networks."[51] Miss Nancy Costello, one of the Wycliffe Bible Translators who arrived in September, 1965, and lived in Rev. Loc's[52] "guest house," recalls that the situation was always tense, the local people continuously reporting they saw the enemy and their friends in

---

[42] Conversation with Allan B. Imes, 23 October 1988.
[43] Conversation with Allan B. Imes, 14 and 23 October 1988.
[44] Conversation with Church Allen, 19 June 1986.
[45] Conversation with Pete Morakon, 26 May 1986.
[46] Conversation with Peter Morakon, 21 July 1985.
[47] Ibid.
[48] Taped comments of COL John D. Waghelstein, 9 May 1986.
[49] LLDB = Luc Dong Dac Viet" (Vietnamese Special Forces), a group conducting unconventional and covert operations. They wore red berets.
[50] Taped comments of COL John D. Waghelstein, 9 May 1986.
[51] Conversation with Mr. Peter Morakon, 24 September 1985.
[52] Rev. Loc was a Vietnamese pastor who built a church structure in Khe Sanh village, ministering to Bru.

Laos reported the enemy moving into the Khe Sanh area.[53]

During November, cross-border reports warned that NVA units were no longer moving south; they had halted and were stockpiling large quantities supplies. November monsoon rains socked the camp in for 28 consecutive days, finally breaking around December 1st. Patrols were doubled, and there was an increase in agent reports and increased reliance on information provided by local inhabitants. Reports from the local Bru were considered trustworthy. They were completely loyal to the District Chief who had made a Bru, Mr. Onya, his number two man.[54]

Similar reports were received during December such as one on 6 December 1965 that reported four enemy battalions had crossed into South Vietnam at XD 6655. All indications pointed to a buildup of a rather considerable enemy force.[55]

During this monsoon fog that the better part of a NVA regiment became lost and took a wrong fork when they crossed the border. Blundering into a small border village protected by Popular Forces, they overran it and established antiaircraft positions in the adjacent hills. These positions, visible when the fog temporarily lifted the next day, were struck by U.S. Air Force fixed wing, but the weather again deteriorated, shrouding their position. One of the Montagnards from the village managed to report to the USSF camp that he had seen many dead enemy soldiers from the air strikes and that the enemy force was now moving northeast.[56]

The enemy movement was confirmed by agent reports which indicated two regiments of NVA crossed the border. Capt. Waghelstein dispatched a 65-man patrol to screen the western flank of the district along the Laotian border, attempting to locate the enemy unit. By the night of 22 December, the friendly patrol was ten kilometers northwest of the camp. Foggy conditions restricted visibility to less than 40 meters.[57] The patrol was able to monitor Chinese voice transmissions on their radio.[58]

The USSF patrol engaged the North Vietnamese unit for about two hours of battle. The patrol leader kept moving his men despite the growing volume of enemy fire. As the weather improved, artillery was called to strike the enemy's rear supporting elements. USAF FACs directed artillery and fighter aircraft, annihilating the scattered and rapidly retreating enemy force. The friendly force returned, suffering only minor casualties. One of the enemy KIA was obviously a Chinese advisor, and the abandoned equipment was brand new, some still packed in cosmolene. The enemy KIA were green; all had fresh haircuts.[59]

Victory was temporary. Reports were then received of NVA returning to the area, this time with 120mm mortars carried by elephants. Miss Nancy Costello, who was to have Christmas dinner at the Poilane's at 1000 that day, was told to come instead to the Special Forces camp for her protection. The situation had become very grave. A platoon of Marine engineers arrived in December, 1965, to assist improvement of the camp's bunker defenses.[60]

On 3 January 1966, a company of Nungs arrived to augment the camp's strength. Also arriving that date were two U.S. Air Force Bird Dog observation planes to begin Operation TIGERHOUND. General Westmoreland had given it this name, "Tiger" for aggressiveness and "hound" for smelling out the enemy. Their mission was to conduct aerial reconnaissance inside Laos to a depth of 12 miles "..to interdict enemy supply routes in northern Laos through air strikes, support U.S. Army Special Forces operations, and to conduct visual air reconnaissance of the area for intelligence purposes." If the acquired target were especially significant, B-52 strikes were conducted after clearance had been first obtained from the American Ambassador in Laos.[61]

---

[53] Comments of Miss Nancy Costello to Stubbe at Khe Sanh, 10 December 1968.

[54] Letter of Mr. John Miller, 09 Oct 1969: Due to his education and prominence, he was appointed by the government as Assistant District Chief of Huong Hoa. "Among the Bru people, however, he would not have been in a position of authority since such positions were hereditary."

[55] Waghelstein, CPT John D., "A Vital Link," Infantry Magazine, Ft. Benning, Ga: Infantry Magazine, p. 286; 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, Quarterly Command Report for Period Ending 31 December 1965, dated 15 January 1966, Incl (1), Khe Sanh Operations, 29 Nov 1965, dated 1 January 1966.

[56] Waghelstein, "A Vital Link," p. 286; Taped comments from COL John D. Waghelstein, 9 May 1986.

[57] Ibid., pp. 286ff.

[58] Incl (1), Subj: Khe Sanh operations, 29 Nov 1965 in 5th Special Forces (ABN), 1st Special Forces, Quarterly Command Report for Period Ending 31 December 1965, dated 15 January 1986.

[59] Waghelstein, taped comments, 9 May 1986.

[60] Comments of Miss Costello, 23 July 1987; Taped comments of COL Waghelstein, 9 May 1986; Comments of Miss Costello to Navy Chaplains at Camp Tien Sha, DaNang, Vietnam, 10 December 1968. [Philippians 4:6-7: "Do not worry about anything, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God. And the pece of God, which surpasses all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus." The original Greek word for "guard" is a Greek military term; Paul's metaphor implies that the peace of God is like a military guard over a believer's heart.

[61] Westmoreland, A Soldier Reports, pp. 196, 198; CPL Mick Taylor, "Tigerhound O1E's 'Hunt' for Marines," III MF: sea

The evening formation was "enjoying" the usual evening harangue right before supper at dusk on January 3rd over which Capt. Waghelstein had become increasingly apprehensive. (It must be noted and emphasized that the Special Forces camp at Khe Sanh, as also later the camp at Lang Vei, was a Vietnamese camp with American advisors, not an American installation with Vietnamese; the Vietnamese had the final word).

Suddenly, three rounds of 120 mm mortars exploded in the midst of the formation, causing almost all of the casualties that were to be sustained during the ensuing battle.[62] Khe Sanh was to be the place where the enemy introduced 120 mm mortars, the heaviest ordnance in Vietnam to this point.[63] The newly-arrived Bird Dog aircraft had not yet been placed in large underground revetments that were to be dug by the engineers and were severely damaged before they were put in operation.

The defenders scrambled to underground shelters; once underground, they took no further casualties. The enemy shifted fires attempting to hit the bunkers, striking the team house where, because it was the coldest time of the year, there was always a fire. Fires from the burning team house provided all the necessary illumination in the darkness of the night. Although antennas began collapsing, the Communications Sergeant, McFadden, continued to maintain communications until he was eventually pulled out of the burning rubble and taken to the bunker in the center of the camp

A large underground bunker in the center of the camp which had been used to store ammunition had earlier been cleared for use as an operations center and now, as a medical bunker. (This was later the 26th Marines COC before and during the Siege battle). Since Doc Cobb, the senior medic of the team, was unfortunately in DaNang at the time, Doc Robinson, the junior medic, the missionaries (Nancy Costello and Eugenia Johnson), and four Bru girls the Army had been training as nurses, attended and saved the wounded. Their work was well done: of the 12 or 14 that were medevaced as critical, only one was lost.[64] Miss Nancy Costello recalls that during the attack, the words of Philippians 4.6-7 kept coming to her mind and, that during the attack, she lost her translation notes–and her purse![65]

Counter-mortar fire was impossible. The 120s were fired just outside the range of the camp's 81s, although within the range of 105s, but there were no recoil pits to allow high angle fire. The enemy had positioned their tubes within this "dead space" and fired unmolested, a tactic that was to be repeated during the 1968 siege battle when the enemy moved into an area they considered to be safe from B52 strikes but sufficiently distant from the perimeter to avoid fire from within the camp.

About midnight, the "Ridge Runners," Marine Corps medevac helicopters, landed inside the camp without assistance other than the light from the burning camp, and the critically wounded were lifted out as the enemy continued pounding the camp until about 0300.

There had been a rather strange CRUMP explosion, maybe one round out of ten, nowhere as loud as the other 120 rounds; it was first assumed these were 81s. They were actually 120s with a delayed fuse, a round that could cut through twelve feet of the laterite soil and detonate. Those that landed on the PSP sheets only penetrated six feet. The enemy was obviously aiming for the bunkers, attempting to annihilate the camp. Fortunately, none ever hit the medical bunker in the center of the camp.

Clear skies the next morning enabled evacuation of the remainder of the wounded and a continuation of airstrikes that had started during the night. The NVA forces had already departed from their revenge mission. Another company of Nungs arrived, giving the camp commander a total of five companies: two Bru Montagnard, one Vietnamese, and two MIKE forces of Nungs in addition to the Nungs already assigned to the camp.

The combined effects of this operation and B-52 strikes in the Khe Sanh area during the first two weeks of January, 1966, resulted in a report of a NVA unit moving some 200 wounded from a point six miles south of the DMZ to a tunneled area containing a hospital about six miles to the west.[66]

After rebuilding the camp, life returned to the normal pattern of continuous patrolling of the area. Every major operation

---

Tiger 3:28 (14 July 1967); History of 20th Tactical Air Support Squadron, Jan-Mar 1968, Tab T, 20th TASS, in Vol. II, Quarterly History, 504th Tactical Air Support Group, Jan-Mar 1968, App. 6, Subordinate Unit Histories.

[62] There were 11 friendly KIA and 30 WIA. Two 0-1 aircraft were destroyed. {"Chronology, 1 Jan - 30 Jun 1966," in LBJ Library, Papers of Wm. C. Westmoreland, Box 8, History Backup File #7 (24 May - 16 Jul 1966), Doc #72.]

[63] Sharp and Westmoreland, Report on the War in Vietnam, p. 123. The 120 mm Soviet mortar can fire 12-15 rounds per minute, each round weighing 75.4 KG, max range is 5,700 meters; minimum range is 460 meters. Weight of the weapon in traveling position is 500 KG (1100 pounds); it has a crew of 6 men. [Weeks, COL John, ed., Jane's Infantry Weapons, 7th ed., London & New York: Janes, 1981, pp. 495-496].

[64] Taped comments of COL John Waghelstein, 09 May 1986.

[65] Comments of Nancy Costello to Navy chaplains at Camp Tien Sha, DaNang, Vietnam, 10 December 1968.

[66] DIA, Intelligence Summary #13-66, 17 Jan 1966, p. F-1. Note: This is the location occupied by B5-T8, the Khe Sanh Front Headquarters that supervised the 1968 Khe Sanh siege battle.

from the camp contained at least two Americans of the dozen assigned, plus six Nungs and a variety of other indigenous.[67]

Meanwhile, in Laos to the west, the North Vietnamese were moving up to 600 tons of supplies per day in the dry season and 125 tons per day in the rainy season, using Route 9 as part of their effort to supply forces operating in South Vietnam.[68] The magnitude of such traffic occupied the efforts of TIGERHOUND and SOG who attempted to locate caches and supply routes branching off the major Ho Chi Minh and Santa Fe Trail systems, intercept radio and land-line communications, as the enemy meticulously and relentlessly prepared the Khe Sanh battlefield. The NVA forces, dependent on foot travel for the most part upon entering the rugged mountains and thick vegetation, developed a communication system that was also their greatest vulnerability. They were forced to remain within one night's march of supporting bases which provided storage, troop concealment, hospital, communications centers, training areas for new cadres for personnel which had been kidnapped or recruited from the villages. Lacking maps, they were dependent on the use of guides or carefully marked trails for movement.[69] The requirement for trail guides became their Achilles' Heel: SOG patrols were dressed and armed to appear as enemy guides and thus obtained information on the quantity and quality of troops, type and quantity of weapons and supplies being introduced into South Vietnam, unit identification.

Some consideration for using Khe Sanh as a jumping-off base to launch an operation to sever the Ho Chi Minh Trail had been considered in 1964. A Memorandum to the Secretary of State, concluded: (1) Route 9 "..should be considered .. to block, limit, or detect infiltration into South Vietnam." (2) This route "should be improved in the course of the long range peace-time development of the region as a component of a regional highway system .. and as an access to land-locked Laos." (3) "Route 9 runs through territory held by the Pathet Lao and used by North Vietnam,ese in support of the campaign in the south." (4) "Introduction of foreign military forces is prohibited by the I962 Geneva Agreement without exception. Therefore, any operations in the PL-held positions of the road would entail either a basic United States policy change to permit open violation of the Agreement, or elaborate diplomatic preparation to reconcile the action with the Agreement and establish an acceptable non-military rationals."[70] Although the plan initially aroused interest, officials in Washington quickly abandoned the idea.[71] In a later memo, Bundy wrote Rusk: "This sealing-off project which would require overt introduction of foreign forces in vi9olation of the Geneva Accords, might serve to seal off the Ho Chi Minh Trail ... However, we would immediately be trading that gain for the outbreak of a new war in Laos at least as intense as the war we were unwilling to fight in 1961. Can we not assume that North Viet Nam would throw itself into that fight as least as hard as the one in the south ..? It seems likely also that Communist China would feel more threatened and .. favor intervention."[72] The idea was not abandoned, however, and detailed plans were developed in 1966 after American Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge returned to Saigon in 1965 and his successor, Ellsworth Bunker also enthusiastically endorsed Westmoreland's proposal. The plan involved the Third Marine Division moving along Route 9 to seize Tchepone.[73] The decision not to sever the Ho Chi Minh Trail network was made in Washington in April, 1967, much to Dr. Walt Rostow's chagrin.[74]

By late 1966, General Westmoreland firmly believed North Vietnamese forces were about to descend in large numbers into the Khe Sanh area.[75] General Walt, CG of III MAF, did not concur and noted: "I believe far too much emphasis is being

---

[67] Conversation with COL John D. Waghelstein, 14 May 1986.

[68] CIA Memorandum, "The Vietnamese Communists' Will to Persist," SC No. 09624/66, "An Analysis of the Vietnamese Communist's Strengths, Capabilities, and Will to Persist in Their Present Strategy in Vietnam," 26 Aug 1966, Fig 1-4.

[69] Davis, LtGen Raymond E., USMC, "Military Operations in Counter-Insurgency," Presentation for CIRADS-4, 15-17 Sep 1970, Ft. Bliss, Texas.

[70] Information Memorandum from the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Bundy) to Secretary of State Rusk, 30 Nov 1964 in U.S. Dept. of State, foreign Relations of the United States, 1964-1968, Vol. XXVIII, Laos, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1998, pp. 294-296.

[71] Westmoreland, A Soldier Reports, p. 145.

[72] Information Memorandum from the Assistant Secretary for Far Eastern Affairs (Bundy) to Secretary of State Rusk, 3 Dec 1965, in U.S. Dept. of State, F*oreign Relations of the United States, 1964-1968*, Vol. XXVIII, Laos, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1998, pp. 418-420.

[73] Ibid., p. 366.

[74] Transcript of video interview of Dr. Walt Rostow by Mr. John Wright, 31 January 1989. General Westmoreland had convened a small joint staff during November, 1967 - March, 1968, to prepare a plan to conduct a corps-size operation into Tchepone to sever the Ho Chi Minh Trail at Tchepone known as Operation Plan EL PASO. It was to be launched from Khe Sanh Combat Base. [Collins, John M., Military Geography for Professionals and the Public, Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1998, pp. 367-385, provides a summary of this operation]. Due to the eruption of the siege battle, this was abandoned, but later became the basis of Operation LAM SON 719 launched 8 February 1971.

[75] FMFPAC, Trip Summary, Visit to Western Pacific by Commanding General, Fleet Marine Force, Pacific, 29 August - 7

placed on the importance of the infiltration threat."[76] The Defense Intelligence Agency on 22 September 1966 reported "..possible elements of the 324B Division or some other unidentified units were .. reorganizing near the Khe Sanh Special Forces Camp on 16 September and about 14 elephants were said to be transporting supplies.[77]

Despite their dissenting evaluation, CG, III MAF, acquiesced to MACV's concerns. CG, FMFPAC, noted: "Intelligence reports of heavy NVA infiltration south across the DMZ into northern Quang Tri Province have been received regularly during the month [of September, 1966]. They have been in the form of agent reports of units on the move using the mountains of western Quang Tri to screen them, of aerial observers who have sighted recently well-used trails and river crossing sitexs, bivouac areas, etc.; of aerial photography (including SLAR)[78] in the DMZ and along roads leading south from North Vietnam showing heavy night trime motor traffic; and of enemy POWs claiming membership in NVA regular units. Results of the analysis of these reports present the possibility that two NVA divisions (341 and 324B) or significant elements of them may be in or near the objective area of Operations PRAIRIE, with the capability now or in the near future of initiating a major offensive operation near the DMZ. To capitalize on this information in the hope of reducing the enemy concentration before the enemy can launch an attack, CG, III MAF has directed .. Reinforcement of the Khe Sanh Special Forces Camp (XD 8438) with one battalion.."[79]

The staff of CG, 3d Marine Division, immediately began research to compare Khe Sanh with Dien Bien Phu, the French outpost that fell, preparing, "Khe Sanh Area Report,"[80] and concluding that Khe Sanh was indeed very similar to Dien Bien Phu; no essential differences were noted–from a geographical perspective.

The G-2 of 3d Marine Division, Colonel Thomas M. Horne, reported to Khe Sanh as "SOP Khe Sanh/III MAF Rep" and found only a small Special Forces camp. "I've never seen anything like it. It was remote and it had been inhabitated by Montagnards for so long that iet was full of rats. My memory of that place is waking up with 15 or 20 rats on the bed with me."[81] A detachment of 65 Navy Seabees from U.S. Naval Mobile Construction Battalion TEN operating out of DaNang arrived 10 September 1966 to upgrade the airstrip. The project involved removal of some 3300 feet of heavy World War II type pierced steel matting, construction of a parking apron and two 300-ft. extensions, and laying some 3900 feet of the new aluminum matting, AM-2[82] delivered in over 300 sorties and emplaced in deteriorating weather.[83] Marine baqttalion 1/3 deployed to the Khe Sanh Special Forces camp on 29/30 September, 1966 "..in response to an expected major offensive by NVA to attempt to overrun Khe Sanh."[84]

The USSF detachment at Khe Sanh maintained outposts at Co Put (XD 788383), Lang Vei (XD 791365), a site that later became the new Lang Vei camp in late 1967 (XD 787356), and at XD 800356,[85] and established a permanent OP on Hill 950 (XD 844455 manned by 30 CIDG and 3 USSF personnel.[86]

The original mission of 1/3 "..was that we were going up there to be the protective cordon around the Special Forces camp," to protect the vital intelligence-gathering activities and protect the airfield comlex during its repair.[87] Officially, the mission of 1/3 was "Conduct recon in force operations, coordinate activities of USMC forces assigned, advisors to Project DELTA, LLDB/CIDG, ARVN, RF/PF forces in the Khe Sanh TAOR, to provide security for the Khe Sanh CIDG Camp/Airfield and detect VC/NVA movement into RVN from sanctuaries in laos and DMZ; conduct offensive operations against enemy forces located, within capability."[88] COL Thomas M. Horne, the "Senior Officer Present, 3dMarDiv/III MAF Representative, Khe Sanh," was assigned the mission: "assume authority as III MAF executive agent in the exercise of CG III MAF authority relative to SOG operations emanating from the Khe Sanh TAOR," and operate under the direct supervision of CG, 3d Marine Division and

---

September 1966, 8 September 1966, p. 5.

[76] LtGen L.W. Walt, ltr to LtGen H.W. Buse, Jr., Ser 000200966, TOP SECRET, of 29 December 1966, appended to III MAF OPLAN 121-66, PRACTICE NINE.

[77] DIA Intelligence Summary, 22 September IDAS 222-66, p. A-3.

[78] SLAR = Side Looking Airborne Radar, used to detect moving vehicles.

[79] FMFPAC 300316Z/Sep66, SITREP #549.

[80] Appended to 3dMarDiv Command Chronology, January, 1967.

[81] Conversation with COL Thomas M. Horne, 11 January 1987.

[82] AM2 sheets are 12-ft. long, 2-ft. wide, and weigh 144 pounds each.

[83] NMCB10 News Release, "Seabee Detachment Upgrades Vital Airstrip Khe Sanh Special Forces Camp, Khe Sanh, RVN, November, 1966.

[84] G-2, 3dMarDiv ltr 2/PAW/cis, 22 Aug 1967, BSM file on Maj Anthony Lukeman. Maj Lukeman was the S-3, 1/3, who planned the move.

[85] G2, 1st Infantry Division Hue 240300Z/Oct66 in III MAF COXC Journal and File 28-29 Oct 1966 #83.

[86] III MAF COC 281837Z/Oct66 to MACV COC J-234 in III MAF COC Journal and File 28-29 Oct 1966 #131.

[87] Conversation with G. W. O'Dell, 11 May 1986

[88] 3dMarDiv FragO 427-66 in 3dMarDiv Command Chronology, November, 1966.

exercise operational control of Detachment A-101, Fifth SFGA, and Third Marine Division forces operating within the Khe Sanh TAOR.[89]

During 19-25 December 1966, the USSF camp at Khe Sanh relocated to the ARVN camp at Lang Vei, replacing ARVN battalion 3/2 (which then located at the old French Fort on 24 December.) The move was assumed to be temporary, and the Marines were directed not to destroy the permanent structures of the camp "..in the event future repositioning of the Khe Sanh USMC BN requires relocation of the CIDG camp back to Khe Sanh." These structures by this time included: underground concrete living qurters, underground concrete Tigerhound quarters, underground III MAF CIC [Combined intelligence Center], underground concrete communications bunker, mortar pits in inner perimeter, three underground timber CIDG corner living barracks (diagonal in the corners of the camp), underground concrete dispensary, USASF underground mess, above ground timber CIDG cookhouse, and the portion of CIDG supply byuilding that has concrete floor.[90]

III MAF requested SOG for in-country reconnaissance, sn extension of SHINING BRASS to the area bounded by the DMZ on the north, Laos on the west, Grid Line (GL) 50 on the south, and GL 90 on the east, 17 September through 15 October 1966.[91] This area was suspected to be a major infiltration zone and an Arc Light (B-52) strike was requested in the extreme northwest corner of South Vietnam due to numerous SPAR[92] reports.[93] On 18 September 1966, just under the DMZ and in this area, a pilot of VMFA-323 observed a heavy-travelled road and trench line adjacent the road, together with numerous gun positions.[94] One of the SOG patrols uncovered an enemy base camp on 27 September at XD 837653 with 150 to 200 enemy eating; three tunnels, and numerous enemy soldiers.[95]

In addition to the increased AO of SHINING BRASS in South Vietnam, a temporary extension of the SHINING BRASS AO in Laos was approved by the Department of State to include an area that subsequently became the NVA Front Headquarters controlling the Khe Sanh Siege battle in 1968, given the secret designation, B5-T8, "..a heavily infested area north of Route 9 and to a depth approaching 20 kilometers from the Vietnam border."[96]

In mid-October, 1966, III MAF reported JTAD bilateral collection capability,[97] and soon thereafter a JTAD Station was located at Khe Sanh.

JTAD [Joint Technical Advisory Detachment]

Americans walking the jungles of the Khe Sanh area and neighboring Laos in civilian clothes, former NVA now loyal to us reporting on NVA units operating in the area, reports of NVA regiments and battalions and of Russian advisors–which made the Khe Sanh area—seemingly so serene, even a Garden of Eden—to be the playground of lurking demons of destruction which suddenly devoured life: this was the world of JTAD, the Joint Technical Advisory Detachment.

By the time of the Hill Battles of 1967,[98] reports from JTAD began pouring into the command at Khe Sanh. For example, on 13 May, JTAD reported a long established NVA bivouac area at Co Roc (XD 741317) into which two battalions of the 95C Regiment had moved.[99] On 27 May, capitalizing on agent reports from JTAD of 15 May, an afternoon of air strikes against a trail complex, harbor site and supply area, produced a virtual 4th of July fireworks display when, at 1305, jet strikes in an area 8 - 9 clicks directly south of Khe Sanh village produced one large secondary explosion and five secondary fires. Subsequent air strikes during the next two hours produced several additional large secondary explosions and fires.[100] JTAD reported

---

[89] MACV ltr J3 00539 of 12 Apr 1966; 3d MarDiv FragO 427-66 in 3d MarDiv Command Chronology, November, 1966.
[90] CO CO C 5th SFGA DaNang 180900Z/Dec66, Movement of Khe Sanh CIDG Camp to Lang Vei, and III MAF COC 250251Z/Decv66, in III MAF COC Journal and File #J35 and 39.
[91] CG III MAF 140935Z/Sep 66 to COMUSMACV in III MAF COC Journal and File 14-15 Sep 1966, #J-92.
[92] Special Agent Report, i.e., detections by signals intelligence, SIGINT.
[93] III MAF COC 121303Z/Sep66 to COMUSMACV in III MAF COC Journal and File 12-13 Sep 1966, #152.
[94] I MAW telephone call to III MAF COC 181453H/Sep66 in III MAF COC Journal and File 18-19 Sep 1966, #J48; Cf. #J56.
[95] III MAF COC 280341Z/Sep66 to MACV COC, Immediate Arc Light, in III MAF COC Journal and File, 28-29 Sep 1966, #30.
[96] Memorandum From the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Ungar) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs (Donnelly), 3 Oct 1966, in U.S. Dept. of State: Foreign Relations of the United States, 1964-1968, Vol. XXVIII, Laos, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1998, p. 500.
[97] III MAF COC 201311Z/Oct66, in III MAF Journal and File, 20/21 Oct 1966, #123.
[98] 24 April - 10 May 1967.
[99] 26 MAR 190430Z/May67, in Operation CROCKETT INTSUM #6.
[100] 26 MAR Operation CROCKETT INTSUM #15 The target area was 8 - 9 clicks directly south of Khe Sanh village. At 1345H, jets striking XD 844296 produced one large secondary explosion and 5 secondary fires from what appeared to be small arms ammo burning, resulting in one automatic weapons position destroyed. At 1440H, an airstrike on the trail complex resulted in 2 secondary fires. At 1515H, a strike on the supply point and harbor site at XD 796282 produced 2 secondary fires. At 1515H, a strike on the supply point and harbor site at XD 796282 produced 2 secondary fires. Shortly thereafter (at

Russian advisors entering the Khe Sanh area accompanying NVA units.[101] JTAD continued to report caves, 130mm mortars on rails, large troop concentrations, and logistic activity on the Co Roc area throughout the summer and fall of 1967.[102]

III MAF's G-2, MGEN Kenneth J. Houghton, was cautious, however: "They were a funny outfit," he noted, "When I inspected them and took over as G-2, they were wearing civilian clothes! I said, 'Why are you wearing civilian clothes?' They said, 'Well, we're under cover!' Well, you know anybody who wore civilian clothes stood out like a sore thumb!"[103]

Although located in the small Huong Hoa District Headquarters in Khe Sanh Village, the MACV Advisor to the District Chief, Capt. James Whitenack, recalls: "I never talked with them that much. They were off by themselves. They had a radio there. I never saw them do much of anything. They'd come and go."[104]

Nagging concerns by those in the "2" shops who received their reports varied from "Are they saying this because this is what they think we want to hear?" (which is a typical Oriental propensity) to "Is their loyalty still to North Vietnam, and they're feeding us information to divert our resources or disregard a major enemy activity." The Army Advisor to the District Chief in late 1967, Capt Bruce Clarke, when asked, "Did they just say what they thought we wanted to hear?" reponded, "Hard to tell. I don't remember any strategic intelligence being gained, but conversely, I do remember there being some accuracy in a few small, almost peripheral matters."[105] Furthermore, the information was usually many days old by the time it was received, and then, there was no way to evaluate the information since the track record of individual sources was unknown. Their reports were always reported as "F-6" by the 26th Marines Regimental S-2, Harper Bohr, Jr., at briefings.[106]

1550H), a jet strike at a supply point at XD 821305 resulted in one large secondary explosion and 3 secondary fires. At 1610H, airstrikes on XD 778286, a harbor site and storage area, produced one large secondary fire. Ten minutes later, a strike at XD 821240, a harbor site and storage area, resulted in a small secondary fire of powder explosives. Finally, at 1645H, an airstrike at a harbor site and supply point at XD 821286 produced two small fires which appeared to be in caves or holes and a third hole which was burning intensely with little smoke and red flames. [26 MAR Operation CROCKETT INSTUM #15].

[101] JTAD report of 14 May indicated 2 Russian and 3 Chinese acted as Signal advisors of a NVA regiment located at XD 716256. [26 MAR Operation CROCKETT INTSUM #2]. On 5 September 1967, JTAD reported 2 NVA battalions moved from XD 675248 to XD 781245 (Pe Louang 1), 1600-men strong and including 6 very tall men believed to be Russians acting as advisers (JTAD Report #074]. The 26th Marines S-2, Maj Harper L. Bohr, Jr., noted this was the second report of NVA units in the Khe Sanh area with Caucasian/Russian advisers, but this was the first report of these advisers accompanying units into South Vietnam [26 MAR 090400Z/Sep67, Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #54].

[102] JTAD Report of 15 June 1967 noted that on 13 June a large NVA unit was located in a triangular area formed by coordinates XD 700308, XD 740317, and XD 709328, an area containing a large tunnel with entrances at XD 700308, XD 740317, XD 709328m and XD 704314 containing large quantities of food, about 1800 men armed with many heavy weapons, anti-aircraft weapons, machine-guns, and individual rifles. It was believed to be a staging area for North Vietnamese Army units infiltrating to the south from which they are broken into smaller units to continue their infiltration. [26 MAR 160730Z/Jun67, Operation CROCEKTT INTSUM #34]. During the first three days of August, 1967, agent reports from JTAD and reports from Special Forces and District identified enemy forces from a battalion to a regiment within a 3-kilometer radius of XD 7530, some 2000 meters south of Co Roc, all with the mission of attacking the Army Special forces camp at Lang Vei. [26 MAR 030545Z/Aug67, Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #17]. JTAD Report #072 of 25 August 1967, reported a NVA company camped in stone caves in the vicinity of Lang Vuc Tonc (XD 775324), the foot of Co Roc Mountain Massif. The unit consisted of approx. 150 men and was armed with 2 81mm mortars, 4 60mm mortars, 3 machineguns, 6 automatic rifles and individual weapons. [26 MAR 030625Z/Sep67, Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #48]. A JTAD report of 30 Sep 1967 placed a NVA battalion just east of Co Roc, on the Laotian bank of the Xe Pone River of 600 men and an additional 600-man battalion further to the south. [26 Mar 041110Z/Oct 67 Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #79]. Another JTAD report placed a 800-man NVA battalion just inside the Laotian border 16 clicks north of Route 9 (XD 687547 - the location of what was to become the Headquarters of B5-T8, the NVA Front Headquarters controlling the siege of Khe Sanh) [Ibid.] According to JTAD Report #103 of 05 October 1967, on 02 October a NVA battalion was camped at XD 689547 (about 3 clicks inside South Vietnam from the Laotian border), consisting of 550 men armed with 3 82mm mortars, 4 60mm mortars, 2 anti-aircraft weapons mounted on two wheels, and 2 .30 caliber machineguns. [26 MAR 061001Z/Oct67, Operation ARDMORE INSUM #81].

[103] Conversation with Major General Kenneth Houghton, 25 Sep 1988. When 1Lt Jaimie Taronju was the senior Military Advisor of JTAD (arrived in the Fall of 1967 and departed a few days after the District HQ was attacked and the Americans evacuated to KSCB), he wore a uniform, but his assistant, Sgt. Amos, did not [Conversation with Jaime Taronju, 06 Feb 2004 and letter from Jaime Taronji, Jr., 4 Nov 2004].

[104] Conversation with James Whitenack, 06 Oct 1988.

[105] Conversation with COL Bruce Clarke, 07 Oct 1988.

[106] "F-6" refers to an evaluation by an intelligence officer designating reliability of the source (A=Completely reliable, B=Usually reliable, C=Fairly reliable, D=not usually reliable or unreliable, F=reliability cannot be judged), and according to accuracy of the information (1=confirmed by other sources; 2=Probably true, 3=Possibly true, 4=Doubtful, 6=Truth cannot be judged).

Col Daniel Lord Baldwin, III (the SOG OP-35 desk at CCN, DaNang) when asked once if one could really turn the loyalty of a North Vietnamese or if they simply reported what we wanted to hear, said, "They brought back ears. They brought back some fantastic photos too."[107]

Capt. Wayne Long provided another long-range reconnaissance asset. Long flew in from Laos to brief Col. Lownds and his S-2, Maj Jerry Hudson, during the Siege during the last week of Feb '68 and the second week of March on what had been coming down the Ho Chi Minh Trail in Laos and what targets he could utilize, felt that the JTAD was quite successful: "I think that by the time the Siege started, the Regiment had a pretty fair intelligence picture that we updated and kept fairly accurate. I don't think there were any surprises in terms of forces." Col Lownds, nevertheless, would ask him, "Was this seen by a round eye" [an American]? (1Lt Wayne Long (later Col) operated out of Pakse, Laos,[108] in a unit headed by Ray Gonzales which consisted of Road Watch teams observing the Ho Chi Minh Trail. "We were primarily working in the 'denied areas' with some indigenous assets. We'd set up a little base camp, sit beside the road for about 20 days, sometimes with an American, more often without one, and then we had a thing called a 'HARK' radio which had counters—a different frequency for each counter—for people, trucks, motorcycles, weapons of various sizes, and even for armor. Then, there was a "1", a "10" and a "50" counter. "We trained these guys how to use them and all they had to do was push one every time they saw something of that type or size. The radio's signals wee picked-up by C-130s that orbited 24 hours a day.)[109] NVA headquarters (Division, Regiment, etc.) were very mobile, sometimes occupying some of the numerous caves that filled the area. "We'd pinpoint the comms, go after the comms with airstrikes or raids–mostly airstrikes–and not find them there, and then try to trace the comms to where they might be and find them or not. They were both underground and mobile."[110]

JAMES H. TURNER, III, IN KHE SANH VILLAGE, SUMMER, 1967

JTAD was actually part of Company C, 519th Military Intelligence Battalion (and previously SMIAT, Special Military Intelligence Activities Team), which was part of the 500th MI in Japan. The Vietnamese counterpart was the 924th Support Group.[111] The Combined Action Company OSCAR at Khe Sanh was tasked with the responsibility of

---

[107] Conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 14 Jan 1990.
[108] WB 846728 in MR IV.
[109] Conversation with COL Wayne Long, 12 Sep 1991. Long was in Vietnam 1963-1964, then in Laos 1967-1968, leaving in Dec, 1968, and returned to Vietnam 1970-1971.
[110] Ibid.
[111] 519th MI BN Association: The Sphinx, Issue No. 36 (June, 1999), p. 4. The 149th Group assumed the cover of "Joint Technical Advisory Detachment' (JTAD)." [Khe Sanh microfilm archives, p. 100693] Letter from James H. Turner, III, 19 March 1998: "Through one of our old Admin Colonels, I've been told that JTAD was also described as the 149 MI Group, a part of the 525 MI Grp. The structure is as follows: 525 MI Group, [and] under the 525 there was the 519th MI Bn, 149th MI Grp, 45th MI Grp. At one time or the other, my records floated through the 519th and 149th. My assignment never changed, but administratively, I guess they juggled our records around. Spooks are a weird group anyway. When I was in Khe Sanh, I am sure I was assigned to the 519th MI Bn, Company C. As the war progressed, I think the structure changed. The 519th MI Bn had 3 companies, A, B, C. A Company was the intelligence analyst, B Company was the counter-intelligence operation, and C Company was the collection unit. C Company handled most of the human intelligence gathering. B Company handled prisoner of War interrogations. A company would analyze it and send it to the combat field units. Because of the fast changing situation in Khe Sanh, many times, raw intelligence data was given directly from our field office in Khe Sanh to the Marine commanders. This can be detrimental sometimes, due to the fact that many field commanders do not understand the complexities of intelligence gathering and fail to properly analyze the data given them. Because intelligence is a process of collecting data from many sources it should be analyzed, combined and then given to the field commanders. Even high ranking officers didn't understand." See also: Deposition of James H. Turner, III, Select Committee on POW/MIA Affairs, United States Senate, Mon., 23 Nov 1992. in which Turner states he arrived in Vietnam 19 Nov 1965 and departed 27 Jun 1967 and was assigned to the 519th Military intelligence Group, Company C [p. 10], assigned to a 2-man unit at Khe Sanh; the other man was Edward H. Bowman (who died in the 1970s from cancer) [p. 12]. He never wore a uniform in Vietnam. [p. 13]. They were documented as "geographical specialists" and issued non-combatant cards [p. 13]. They were at the District Headquarters in Khe Sanh village [p. 15]. They briefed the American Marines on the base, "But they never really believed what we told them.. After a while we got tired of talking to them because they were kind of hard headed." [p. 16] He persuaded the French coffee planter, Llinares, to work for them. Also, a NVA Captain in Laos became one of their sources [p. 20] The JTAD at Khe Sanh paid about 10 informants per month. [p. 22] [See Khe Sanh microfilm archives, pp. 78114-78178].

feeding and housing the Americans of JTAD Station co-located in the MACV District HQ compound in Khe Sanh village.[112]

From late 1966 to mid 1967, JTAD at Khe Sanh included a Sergeant James Turner and Sergeant Ed Bowman (known to the Vietnamese as "Mr. Ed"); but both wore civilian clothes, had civilian ID indicating a GS 7 (equivalent to a Captain), and their cover story was that they were drawing maps of the area for National Geographic. They used a light blue truck at Khe Sanh with a STP sticker on the side door.[113] Cover names for all personnel began to be used in 1966. James Turner's name at Khe Sanh was "Jim Thomas."[114]

One of their informants was the Vietnamese official in Khe Sanh ville from the National Police, a powerful person once seen by Corporal Kelley (of the Marine CAC OSCAR unit) torturing Bru with electric generators.[115] When Cpl Kelley reported it, he was promoted to Sergeant, but transferred from the CAP in Khe Sanh village to the CAP just outside the main gate of the Combat Base (Ta Cong). The National Police representative was known to be feeding information to the North Vietnamese and became a channel to feed false information to them.

Another contact was a coffee planter, not the Poilanes, but the Basque named Llinares who lived southeast of Khe Sanh village near Lang Kat (1) and (2). It had been rumored that he had killed a Bru woman with an ax, and was regarded by the Bru as "really mean."[116] James H. Turner (JTAD) recalls him as "a pretty evil looking fellow"[117] and suspected him to be a double agent, feeding information to the North Vietnamese, and thus was given misleading information.[118] He perhaps was connected with the death of Eugene Poilane in the 1964 ambush on Route 9. Llinares had been with Eugene when the Citroen car they were driving came under rifle fire,[119] mortally wounding Eugene (who had arrived at Khe Sanh in 1918 following his WW I service in Vietnam and planted the coffee trees). Poilane's coffee plantation is responsible for the origin and development of Khe Sanh village. Llinares had been very wealthy in North Vietnam, lost everything, and settled at Khe Sanh at the former plantation owned by M. Rome.[120] During WW II, the Llinares plantation was occupied by the French planter, Monsieur Rome who lived here with his Japanese wife and a Japanese gardner. When the Japanese arrived at the end of WW II, they lived "pretty high," but then mysterious disappeared. According to Madame Madeleine Poilane, the wife spied both for the Japanese and the Viet Minh on French positions and was killed—some say by the Viet Minh, others say by the French. Her body was never found and the property reverted to the government.[121] It was here that Llinares had contacts with the Viet Cong; a network of VC was discovered in the village at the bottom of the Llinares plantation. Following this, the Bru were resettled,[122] and any pro-VC Bru departed into the hills. Following a double assassination of two workers of Llinares in his house, his wife departed, demanded protection from the Province Chief of Quang Tri, and never returned.[123]

James Turner recalls the Marine Force Recon detachment at KSCB in early 1967, and the LtCol at the Combat Base who, when informed of NVA units operating in the area, responded, "O, these numbers—they can't be right. I don't know where you guys are making all this up!" Turner replied, "Well, I tell you this much, Colonel: they're up there, and they're dug-in, and they're digging in pretty big up there, and the longer you wait–They're up there, believe me!." The information was disregarded. In fact, the Colonel told the Marine Lieutenant, "Don't ever bring that guy down here again, because he's down there in that village, he get captured or something and knows.[124]- The Special Forces also disregarded their reports "until they were nearly overrun one time [04 May 67] and we had given them the coordinates where the mortars were set up before they

---

[112] The structure of the 525th Military Intelligence Group: under the 525, there was the 519th MI Bn, 149th MI Bn, 45th MI Grpoup. While at Khe Sanh, Turner was assigned to the 519th MI Bn, Company C, but the structure was always changing. 519 had three companies: A Company was the intelligence analyst, B Co was the counter-intelligence operation, and C Company was the collection unit. C Co. handled most of the human intelligence gathering, B Co. handled prisoner of war interrogations, and A Co. analyzed and sent information to combat field units. [Letter from James Turner, 1`9 March 1998]/

[113] Photograph included in letter from James H. Turner, III, 18 February 1995.

[114] Letter from James Turner, 19 March 1998.

[115] Conversation with Daniel Kelley, 23 May 1988.

[116] Conversation with James H. Turner, III, 17 February 1995

[117] Conversation with James H. Turner, III, 24 February 1995.

[118] Conversation with James H. Turner, III, 17 February 1995.

[119] See discussion in Stubbe: Battalion of Kings, 2nd Ed, 2008, p. 13. The incident, on Monday, 20 April 1964, involved both Eugene Poilane and Llinares. Eugene was killed by three shots, one of which near the heart was fatal. The chauffer was told to leave the Citroen car and was shot in the foot. Llinares was unharmed.

[120] Conversation with Mrs. Carolyn Miller, 27 May 1986.

[121] Comments of Madeleine Poilane during a personal visit, Wednesday, 19 July 1967. Stubbe: Khe Sanh Chaplain, p. 32.

[122] The Bru were resettled in the Strategic Hamlet program by 1954.

[123] Letter from Madaleine Poilane, 07 May 1971.

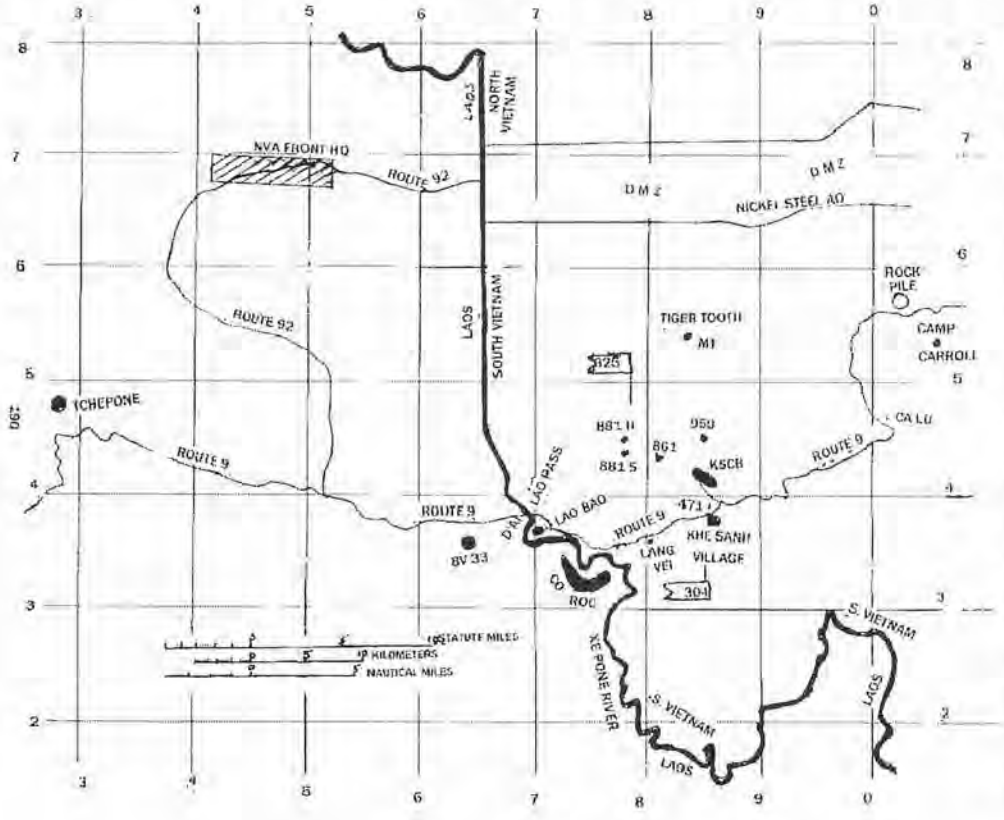
[124] Conversation with James H. Turner, III, 17 Feb 1995.

even started shooting. After that, they listened to us pretty well."[125]

Ed Brown and James Turner frequently ventured out for a week or so, no radios, perhaps deep into Laos. "We carried United Nations Non-Combatant cards. Supposedly you had two of them, duplicates, and if you got captured, you gave one to the enemy, kept the other, and they'd let you go!" Yeah! Sure![126]

"We'd just go out, and there were a couple of times we went out to learn the territory. We went around with the Montagnard troops that were stationed there in the village. We had one guy that went with us all the time who knew the area really well. We'd tell him where we wanted to go, and he'd take us there.. He knew where the North Vietnamese walked and he just took us. Sometimes we'd set up in the hills there and watch a battalion go by—it would be just tons of equipment. But it was kind of a crazy operation because we had no radios, they didn't know where we were, they didn't even know where we were going. If we turned up missing, they wouldn't have any idea what happened to us."[127]

When James H. Turner, III, departed 27 June 1967, he was replaced by Jaime Taronji, Jr., as Station Chief of JTAD, Khe Sanh with the other American, Sgt. Amos. Major Whitenack and Captain Bruce B.G. Clarke were at the District when he reported aboard as a member of the 525th MI Group with the primary mission of supporting the primary mission of supporting the South Vietnamese military intelligence unit at Khe Sanh Village.[128] He remained through the attack on the District Headquarters, 21 January, displaced by Marine helicopter when the CAC "O" was evacuated, and subsequently served from the Dona Ha Combat Base. When he reported, he was a Second Lieutenant, and Amos, a Sgt., but since the Vietnamese they were advising were both First Lieutenants, he was directed by his seniors to wear 1Lt bars and Sgt. Amos, to wear a Warrant Officer rank. First Lieutenant Taronji wore a uniform while at Khe Sanh, and worked with two Vietnamese ARVN First Lieutenants who lived in the village and managed a net of Bru Montagnards who were sent to observe the Ho Chi Minh trail network in Laos to determine troop movement, kind of equipment, etc The Vietnamese counterparts, who lived in Khe Sanh Village, not in the District compound, managed to escape during the attack on the Huong Hoa District Headquarters on 21 Jan and arrive at Dong Ha.[129]



KHE SANH AREA

A JTAD report of 23 January 1968 perhaps explains why Col Lownds recalled Co D/1/26 which was moving towards Khe

[125] Ibid.
[126] Ibid.
[127] Ibid.
[128] Conversation with Jaimie Taronji, 06 February 2004. After graduating from the Army Intelligence School at Fort Hollibird, Baltimore, Maryland, his first assignment took him to Vietnam. He went to Saigon where the 525th Group was headquartered and assigned to the section that dealt with Military Advisors to the South Vietnamese military intelligence group. He then went to Hue and then to Khe Sanh. The headquarters to which he submitted his reports was at Hue. [Conversation with Jaimie Taronji, 06 February 2004].
[129] Letter from Jaime Taronji, Jr., 4 Nov 2004. Taronji's unit was the 525 Military Intelligence Group. Conversation with Jaime Taronji, 06 Feb 2004.

Sanh Village to reinforce it:[130] Three North Vietnasmese regiments, which had infiltrated into South Vietnam from Laos on 20 December 1967, had established ambush positions and emplaced three anti-aircraft guns around the hill south of the Huong Hoa District Headquarters and at Cu Bac (XD 873405). An undetermined number of Chinese troops accompanied the regiments. Only a battalion attacked the District headquarters while three regiments assumed ambush positions around the area.[131]

SPECIAL PROJECTS

1. ELEPHANT

"Where are they?" They could only feel the reality of what was to unfold: we know they're everywhere, but we do not see them. In the eerie, silent, depopulated jungles of eastern Laos near the Co Roc Massif, the three Americans with their Bru soldiers of FOB-3 team PENNSYLVANIA waited, watched, wondered. They knew the NVA were there—and in large force. Patrolling this area was like moving on the surface of an enlarged, great hornet's nest: suddenly, without warning, they could violently be lethally stung. Vietnam was that way: you could enjoy peace and tranquility and then, like throwing a light switch, suddenly be in the clutches of terror.

They had visited the nearby camp of a Royal Lao volunteer battalion, BV-33,[132] located (at XD 625379) astride Route 9 at the Ban Houei Sane airstrip,[133] some 22 clicks due west of Khe Sanh village—roughly 13 miles, which may seem far except for the fact that the assigned mission for Operation SCOTLAND included artillery support for BV33.[134]

BV-33 (or "ELEPHANT" as Americans referred to it), was a CIA-supported unit with drug-trafficing as a "cover"; North Vietnamese Army units supposed it to be simply a Lao group running drugs which obviously would have no connection to the Americans, and passed it by—until 25 January 1968 when they overran it with tanks. Billy Waugh, at Khe Sanh from June, 1966, to January, 1968, as the senior person at the FOB-1 Khe Sanh Launch Site,[135] recalls, "That battalion knew how to get along with the North Vietnamese. if the North Vietnamese came through there and wanted some chow, they gave it to them."[136] The BV-33 CO in late 1967, Col Soulang Phetsomphou, states, "My principle mission there was to maintain liaison with US troops operating in this area, to provide information about NVA activities on the Ho Chi Minh Trail and prevent any attack from Laotian border (Lao Bao)."[137]

The 500 soldiers of BV-33 were a sort of home guard or militia and lived at this location with some 2300 dependents, chickens and pigs, in an austere area offering no food other than fish and frogs from the nearby Xe Pone River, wild vegetation such as bamboo root, and an occasional deer or wild buffalo. COL Soulang Phetsomphou notes, "It is impossible to find food locally because this zone is very poor. For water, we have no problem."[138] The camp was resupplied by CIA's Air America flights, originally from Savannakhet, Laos. On 05 Sep 1963, a CIA C-47 flight using Chinese National registry, made three resupply flights to BV-33, some 200 kilometers east of Savannakhet but less than eight from South Vietnam. The aircraft was piloted by Americans Capt Joseph C. Cheney and Co-pilot Charles G. Herrick. The radioman was To Yick Chin, a citizen of Hong Kong, and the "kickers" (who threw out the supplies) were Eugene Henry DeBruin (a former smoke jumper for [130] About 1100, 21 January 1968, Col Lownds dispatched Co D/1/26 to rescue those trapped in Khe Sanh Village. Captain Stamper (CO, CAC OSCAR) radioed BLACKBUD DELTA (D/1/26) to use extreme caution since every house in the village seemed occupied by NVA, but that when they arrived, the CAC Marines would guide them into the District Headquarters perimeter. After awhile, INTRIGUE (the 26th Marines' radio callsign) advised Stamper that BLACKBUD DELTA could not pursue its rescue at that time. LtCol James B. Wilkinson (CO, 1/26) had recalled the company, under the leadership of Lt Walt Chapman (the USMC Commandant's son) which had arrived on the summit of Hill 471. Wilkinson feared they were entering a trap. One of the Marines in the patrol, Sid Patricio, recalls passing through Hill 471 and into the Bru ville [of Breh], and just before entering the District compound, were told "to get the hell out of there--fast!" [Conversation with Sid Patricio, 13 July 1989].

---

[131] JTAD Intelligence Report IR/UA/D/68/53, III MF COC 251511Z/Jan68 to MACV COC, in III MAF COC Journal and File 26/27Jan68 #31.

[132] BV-33 was the 3d battalion in MR III, thus, "BV-33." "BV" is the abbreviation of the French term, Battalion Volontaire.

[133] Airstrip was 3,500 x 90 ft., capable of handling C-130 aircraft. [Collins, John M., Military Geography for Professionals and the Public, Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1998, p. 373.]

[134] CO, 26th Marines, Ser 0023-67, 9 Aug 1967, Subj: Command Chronology for July, 1967, Pt. 2, Narrative Summary, Para. A (2), p. 2, indicates as one of the missions assigned: "...to provide artillery support for BV 33 Bn..".

[135] Letter from Billy Waugh, 22 October 1988.

[136] Conversation with Billy Waugh, 18 March 1989.

[137] Letter from Soulang Phetsomphou, 18 May 1997.

[138] Letter from Soulang Phetsomphou, 09 September 1997.

the US Forestry Service), and three Thai nationals: Pisidhi Indradat, Prasit Promsuwan, and Prasit Dhanee. On their third trip, while passing over the major NVA logistics center at Tchepone at 4,000 feet, the C-47 was struck by 37mm antiaircraft and crashed at XD2748. DeBruin is still MIA.[139] As a result of this incident, the CIA Air America flights to resupply BV-33 were subsequently launched from Khe Sanh, and then, mainly DaNang, though using Khe Sanh occasionally.

The CO of BV-33 in 1967-68, Col Phetsomphou Soulang,[140] had briefed team PENNSYLVANIA of NVA positions near the Lao/S Vietnam border, including the newly-developed road, Route 92 that wended through some karst limestone spire-like formations full of caves some ten miles west of the DMZ, which American signal intelligence had indicated to be a suspected Front Headquarters[141] controlling two NVA Divisions that were encircling Khe Sanh, not moving through the area, but remaining. The S-2 of 26th Marines, Maj Harper Bohr, Jr., referred to this trail and its associated network going into S. Vietnam as the "Santa Fe Trail." Col John Roberts ("Col Jack") of the USAF 20th TASS detachment at Khe Sanh (operation TIGERHOUND), was a good friend of Soulang and had flown over this developing route on numerous occasions, spotting "pink elephants" colored because of the red clay, along with numerous NVA. On one occasion, he had obtained the assistance of "Doc" Secor [MSGT Gilbert A. Secor] from Team PENNSYLVANIA to administer shots to the children of ELEPHANT during an outbreak of a disease. Wearing the uniform of a USAF officer provided by Col. Jack, he was flown by him to give the shots. A few days later, Col. Jack was called "on the carpet" to DaNang to appear before half a dozen Colonels to explain why he violated orders from Ambassador Sullivan by having an American Air Force "flight surgeon" in Laos! They asked who the Flight Surgeon was (since they had contacted all USAF flight surgeons in all of WESTPAC and could account for all of them).[142]

---

[139] Eugene DeBruin was a former USAF man who attended college in Missoula, MT, and subsequently served as a smoke jumper in Alaska before joining Air America. After his capture, he was moved 13 different times to various POW camps, and escaped in 1964, but it was the dry season and the Pathet Lao surrounded all the water holes, and caught the escapees. Eugene and six other prisoners again escaped on 28 Jan 1966. The group broke up to lessen chances of being detected and Eugene went with the Chinese navigator who was "badly infected--big balls, couldn't walk, fairly near death." [Conversation with Dr. Jerry DeBruin, 15 August 1996. Jerry is Eugene's brother]. Dieter Dengler was successfully rescued 20 July 1966. [Director, CIA, Memo for BGen Alexander Haig, 16 Feb 1972 [CIA MORI Doc. ID 108494]. The pilot and co-pilot were killed in the crash after the plane veered off course and was shot down by Pathet Lao (PL) and crashed 2 kilometers west of Tchepone [XD 2748]. [CIA Report TDCS-3/561,478, Subj: Status of Survivors of CH-46 crash and Pathet Lao Plans for them. {CIA Memo Doc. ID 22156]. See also, Dr. Jerry DeBruin, "Personality: In 1963, Gene DeBruin's C-46 was shot down, His brother, 32 years later, continues to search for him," Vietnam (June, 1993), pp. 8, 54-57.

[140] Phetsomphou was born in the vicinity of Savannakhet, at Bakut, near Dong Heme, in 1924. [Ref: Conversation with Soulang Phetsomphou, 04 Feb 1996].

[141] The NVA Front Headquarters was located approx. 9 miles west of the DMZ in Laos. [Map of "Communist Military Positions" in CIA, Directorate of intelligence, Memorandum, 13 March 1968]. A JTAD Report in the 26th Marines 041110Z/Oct67, Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #79, placed an 800-man NVA battalion just inside Laos, 16 clicks north of Route 9 (at XD 687547).. The official NVA designation for the Front Headquarters was "B5-T8" [Cong Tac Hau Chien Dich Duong 9 Khe Sanh Xuan He 1968 (Rear Service Operations: 1968 Spring-Summer Khe Sanh Route 9 Campaign), Published by the Tong Cuc Hau Can (General Directorate for Rear Services under direction of Major General Tran Chi Cuong, Senior Colonel and first Level Professor Ngo Vi Thien. Hanoi, June 1988, p. 207 footnote: B5-T8 is the cover name for the 1968 Highway 8 Khe Sanh Campaign)]. The NVA Front Headquarters was reported in the National Security Agency's Daily SIGINT reports, e.g., "Traffic-passing communications serving the new major PAVN headquarters northwest of Khe Sanh have been isolated in SIGINT. Since at least 18 January, this headquarters--last located on 27 January at 16-53N 106-24E (XD 498674)--has been noted in traffic passing communications with three unidentified subordinates. One of the subordinates, located at 16-40N 106-36E (XD 714422) on 28 January, also communicates with the DMZ Front." [DIRNSA 292135Z/Jan68, TOP SECRET TRINE, Ser: 3/0/.../R25-68, pp. 49-50 of microfiche, forwarded to CPT Ronnie E. Ford, USA, by NSA on 16 June 1998 (Ser: MDR 95-0059].

[142] Conversation with COL Jack Roberts, 19 August 1997. When the children at BV-33 became sick, COL Jack Roberts (of 20th TASS) had flown Doc Secore to DaNang to obtain the medicine, and then flown him to BV-33. Then, the US Ambassador to Laos, Sullivan, informed Maj Quamo, "No more trips to Laos. Get outta there. This is my territory." Quamo told Col Roberts that the inoculations could be completed in one more trip. So Col Roberts said, "With your permission, ask Secore to work for me, bring the medications." Col Roberts then told Doc Secore, "You're Air Force; you dress like Air Force." He was called to DaNang and seated before five Colonels bent on trapping him, wanting to know who the Flight Surgeon was. "We went round and round and they said, 'Are you denying that you go into Laos?' And I said, 'I go in there practically three times a week; sure I go into Laos.' And they said, 'Well, look in your records.' I said, 'I don't keep records.' And we went round and round. I said, 'If you want me to keep records, send me a clerk.' They kept insisting. They wanted to know who it was. They said they checked all the bases: Taiwan, Thailand, and there was no Air Force Flight Surgeon missing at the time. Finally, they said that was all for that day." [Conversation with Col Jack Roberts, 19 August 1997].

2. WARNINGS

The information PENNSYLVANIA obtained only confirmed what had already been reported. On 25 Aug 67 the Khe Sanh Station of the JTAD had reported[143] a NVA company camped in stone caves at the foot of Co Roc. Another JTAD report—this one dated 30 Sept[144]—placed a 800-man NVA unit just inside the Laotian border, 16 clicks south of Route 9 (at XD687547), the eastern part of the NVA Front HQ (noted in a CIA report as 9 miles directly west of the DMZ).

A document captured 06 Nov 67 providing the NVA plans for the Winter-Spring Offensive, listed as its first objective: "the annihilation of a major U.S. troop unit and inflicting heavy casualties, to draw U.S. troops away from populated areas." By Dec., a CIA report warned "..the VC/NVA are undertaking something very much like an all-out punch.."[145] FMFPAC's estimate of enemy capabilities (written in Dec 67) noted: "That the enemy would plan a major offensive in the western DMZ region was logical.. and the Marine combat base at Khe Sanh would appear, to him, to offer some hope of military advantage."[146]

Col Lownds, speaking to a group of Marines of B/1/26 in the chilling fog enveloping Hill 881-South on Marine Corps Birthday of 1967 said: "We here at Khe Sanh are going to be remembered in our American history books!" making the scene even more chilling.[147] Lt Don Jacques, Platoon Commander of Third Platoon, B/1/26, had volunteered his platoon that day to do the patrol; he and his men were slipping through the muddy, slippery slopes and slushing in treacherous streams, bamboo thickets and razor-cutting elephant grass while Col Lownds spoke to the rest of their Company. Three months later (25 Feb 1968), 2/Lt Jacques and his platoon would find themselves trapped in a NVA ambush and decimated.

The day before, Gen Starbird visited the hill.[148] Gen. Starbird, head of Defense Communications Program Group (DCPG), a CIA-front research agency at the Pentagon, was in charge of developing the electronic sensor program. Gen. Starbird and Maj Bruce Greene, CO of B/1/26, walked apart from everyone else and sauntered to the north side of the hill where the General pointed north, an omnious visual signal portending conflict.

During August and September, the rumor among the troops was a prophecy by Jeanne Dixon of "1200 American dead at Khe Sanh."[149]

Capt Jerry Crews, S-2 of FOB-3, who arrived in August, 1967, reported to his CO, Maj Lucius Campbell, that the local Wycliffe Bible missionaries, John and Carolyn Miller, mentioned many people moving through the trees and bushes at night. He notes: "I was telling everybody, but nobody was listening. And then when Khe Sanh proper [the village] got overrun, Major Campbell remembered that I'd said all this stuff asnd wrote all that in my Efficiency Report.."[150]

During November and December, 1967, signals intelligence pattern analysis revealed two North Vietnamese Divisions (the 304th and 325C Divs) were moving toward South Vietnam. Components of these divisions began to arrive in December, each division had a strength of at least 8,000 men.[151]

Reports from "People Sniffer" missions disclosed hundreds of indications during October, 1967, when they first started flying these missions in the immediate area around Khe Sanh. The acetate overlay covering the tactical map, a red dot for each sighting, appeared to be solid red to those sitting in chairs for the briefing. For example, during the evening regimental brief on 15 December 1967, the 1:50,000 tactical TAOR map indicating groups of 45 or more people indicated several hundred dots. They literally covered the entire northern portion of his briefing map at about five dots per grid square like a face with small pox or chicken pox.. "The reports of the sniffers are jolting everyone here into the reality of the enemy presence around us. They are indeed out there–uin numbers, and they are close."[152] The Airborne Personnel Detector (APD)

---

[143] JTAD report #072 in 26 Marines 030625Z/Sep67 in Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #48.

[144] 26 Marines 041110Z?Oct67, Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #79.

[145] CIA, Vietnam Station Report No. 65/67 (3-9 Dec 1967), 100700Z/Dec67, Saigon #5624, in CIA's Westmoreland v. CBS, Vol. II, pp. 1394-1404.

[146] FMFPAC, Operations of U.S. Marine Forces, Vietnam, January, 1968, p. 8.

[147] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 April 1970, p. 375.

[148] CG. 3d MarDiv 061337Z/Nov67, Subj: Visit by LtGen Starbird, USA (Defense Communication Planning Group), indicates his itinerary at Khe Sanh 1510-1530.

[149] During the period Jan 1967 - 11 July 1968, official records indicate 1232 Americans KIA at Khe Sanh.

[150] Conversation with COL Jerry Crews, 12 February 1996, and his letter of 21 February 1996. Following his service in FOB-3 at Khe Sanh, Capt Crews was at CCN, DaNang, preparing to rotate to the States when it was attacked Wednesday, 21 August 1968. Upon return to the States, he attended flight school and returned to the Hue/Phu Bai area with the 101st Airborne Division (Airmobile) and participated in Operation LAM SOM 719 in early 1971, which launched out of Khe Sanh. He was shot down over Laos, but was rescued.

[151] Carver, George A., Jr., Special Assistant for Vietnamese Affairs (SAVA), CIA, SC No. 05497-68, p. 2, in CIA's Westmoreland v. CBS documents, Vol. VI, pp. 304-378.

[152] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, 06 June 1989, p. 281.

"people sniffer" had over 80 detections on 30 October 1967.[153] Of course, each intelligence source had its short-comings and needed to be compared and integrated into information from other sources. On 06 January 1968, in an area the same distance west of Hill 881S as Khe Sanh is east of it, an APD mission conducted 1350H - 1530H on 06 January 1968 recorded 27 significant detections in the area between Hill 918 and the Laotian border north of Route 9.[154] An APD mission conducted the afternoon of 18 January 1968 recorded several medium strength detections in the area just north of Route 9 and west of Lang Vei, and the District Advisor reported a large size enemy force in the vicinity of XD 736402 at 181015H.[155]

"There was a new hootch–very small and oddly-shaped–near the LZ atop Hill 881S when I landed there on Thursday, 09 November 1967. During all the noise made by the helicopters, I briefly went inside and saw a man peering at a manual which had spots like bars of music over the pages here and there–probably because Vietnamese is a tonal language. There was a large metal box with the compass directions indicated on top and a revolvable, diamond-shaped antenna. The Marine, from First Radio Company of III MAF, shouted that the area was restricted. He seemed shocked to see a chaplain standing thee, looking in. In later conversation with these men who are building a living bunker on 881S, I mentioned what everybody else talks about: that the enemy could sneak up the hill during daily fog and overrun us. 'One of the reasons we're here is to stop that from happening,' he said."[156] Signals intelligence can easily be flawned by a transmitter placed here or there, broadcasting to resemble a regimental or Bn headquarters, even coordinated by having one transmitter respond to another, to reflect a "chain of command;" people sniffers (a device mounted on UH-1E choppers which fly 50 feet above ground level to detect ammonia smells given off by people) can detect the urine smell of families of passing monkeys or other animals; electronic sensors might detect noises from our own exploding rounds. USAF numbers on NVA casualties, based on secondary explosions from most close air suipport strikes, are erroneous since, unknown to them, artillery at Khe Sanh fired into their boxes. Lt Tom O'Toole, a 3d Marine Division AO who flew missions at Khe Sanh, was present at a briefing of Major General Rathvon McClure Tompkins, the CG, when he happened to look down at his knee pad board and noted the coordinates mentioned by the sensor officer. "I put up my hand and said, "Exeuse me, General, we have a problem here." "What's the problem?" "Well, these people are saying enemy rockets were fired at such and such a time, and I assume that's from their sensors. But in point of fact, what they were, was friendly bombs landing." "General Tompkins jumped up and said, "I've had it up to here with 'mental midgets." You mean no one's cross-referencing where supposedly the enemy's shooting from and where we're dropping bombs?"[157] It is only when all intelligence sources (sensors, signal, patrols, agent reports, overflights, ralliers) are integrated that the emerging picture of an enemy presence unfolds–and, at Khe Sanh, it was unfolding on a grand scale during the last few months of 1967!

Those in command could only reflect on what was happening, waiting orders to withdraw or be reinforced. The decision "on the top" (actually, all the way to the White House), was to reinforce Khe Sanh, make all of us there into a lucrative target, a bulls-eye, or fly-paper, to take advantage of the approaching large NVA force, engage and fix them and, like a wrestler, use their strength against them, destroying them.

3. "SKIP" MINNICKS

Charles ("Skip") Minnicks, a Master Sergeant, was known as "an absolutely fearless recon man."[158] He was known as tough, perhaps a bit wild. He once drove a truck along Route 9 to BV-33 so drunk, he couldn't see straight. On his return, he ran intio a ditch and blew a tire. COL Harold K. Rose (CO, CCN) wanted to ground him. Six months later, after having performed so well on missions, Col Rose asked him to come to DaNang. There, he again was "well into the cups" and told Col. Rose he needed to go back to "House 22," a safe house downtown. Col Harold K. Rose lent him his own vehicle, and the first thing he did was have a wreck! The Colonel grounded him for life![159]

PENNSYLVANIA observed units of NVA in khaki and units of NVA in olive drab. "We knew that there was a huge, strong force."[160] Part of the NVA plans included preparation of Co Roc, that massive dark theater-curtain-like sight one could see from Hill 861 that made one wonder when the curtain would be pulled back and the tragic play commence.

---

[153] 26 Mar 301235Z/Oct67 to CG, 3d MarDiv in III MAF COC Journal and File, 01/02 Nov 1967 #38. Largest concentrations were at XD 859265, XD 949413, and XD 832295.
[154] III MAF COC 140823Z/Jan68 in III MAF COC Journal and File 13/14 Jan68 #188. Stubbe: Khe Sanh, 06 June 1989, pp. 305f.
[155] 26 Mar 180915Z/Jan68 in III MAF COC Journal and File 18/19 Jan 68 #119.
[156] Stubbe: Diary entry for 09 November 1967.
[157] Conversation with Tom O'Toole, 08 August 1990.
[158] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 25 November 1990.
[159] Letter from Billy Waugh, 22 October 1988.
[160] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 December 1991.

Co Roc was shrouded in an eerie silence. It was mid-January, 1968, and no NVA were here! (Actually, as signal intercepts later confirmed, they had already moved most of their units into positions to attack Khe Sanh).[161] Earlier, Major George Quamo arrived at Colonel Soulang's BV-33 location and was now on the western slopes of Co Roc, about a day's patrolling away from Minnicks, and had not made any contact.[162]

Among those standing atop Co Roc was Master Sergeant Charles "Skip" Minnicks and Maj George Quamo.[163] At 38, Skip was the oldest SOG team leader; Maj George Quamo was probably the youngest SOG Major. Both were members of "Special Projects," an effort to develop a guerrilla force to operate in Laos in the area from the Mu Gia Pass to Tchepone, the first leg of the Trail in Laos.[164]

Overhead, a Birddog aircraft circled with its passenger, Col Harold K. Rose,[165] whom Skip recalls as "a wonderful, wonderful man."[166] Col Rose radioed to Quamo: "I want you out of there. I want you out of there now!" Quamo, in his black uniform—he had all his team dress in black—simply responded, "To my knowledge, I am in command at this location. Out."[167]

Skip Minnicks stood in awe of this man—as did everyone who came in contact with him, a sort of "Lawrence of Arabia" of Vietnam: handsome, brilliant, forceful, charismatic.

It hadn't always been that way. The arrival of George Quamo to the small (one-half of an A-team) unit which was then located at the Old French Fort on the eastern edge of Khe Sanh ville (also called "Fort Dix") was not a happy event. Skip Minnicks recalls, "Here comes this new Captain. He looked like a kid I resented him! And I made it apparent."[168] As deeply as he resented him, however, his admiration for this new officer would eventually know no limits, and Minnicks was not alone. Robert Cavanaugh recalls: "We received a message that they were sending an officer to command our little group.. Needless to say, we were quite upset and couldn't understand why the Army was fixing something that wasn't broken. Quamo arrived on site about three days later, and you can believe that he was not on friendly ground. Before the year was finished [the 3 months remaining in 1967] I truly believe that every American on those teams would have followed him to hell to put out the fire if he asked."[169]

When Minnicks reported to the Sergeant-Major of CCN [Command and Control North, the SOG Hq in the northern part of S. Vietnam], he was told to report to FOB-1 (at Phu Bai) to become the temporary Sergeant-Major there since the SgtMaj was rotating back to the States. "I said, 'No, let's talk. This is my fourth trip. I didn't have to make any trips. The only reason I came here was because I was allowed to volunteer for this outfit. I want a team.' He said, 'You're too old. You can't keep up.' I said, 'Give me a shot. If I can't keep up, I'll be the first one to come to you.' So he begrudgingly gave it to me. I had team PENNSYLVANIA.'"[170]

When he first arrived and took over a small detachment, there were three or four teams of Bru in the beginning of their training phase; the officer in charge, Maj Patton, had already departed. Under the supervision of Skip Minnicks, the guerrilla unit trained, conducted missions, and a very close rapport developed between him, the other Americans in the Special Projects unit and the Bru. "Once I got very ill while I was at Khe Sanh. I had black water fever. I wouldn't eat. I'd quit eating. And they brought me their food, knowing that I could not honorably refuse it. Twice a day they brought it, and then they would stand there. They brought me out of my illness."[171]

4. FRED PATTON

Maj Fred Patton had preceeded Skip Minnicks, arriving just before the 1967 Hill Battles.[172] The Special Projects effort was first launched by himself, and later together with E-7 Charles Berg (26 years old) and SFC James Hetrick. Patton, at SOG headquarters, had devised the concept, and the three Americans, together with eight Bru Montagnards, commenced the [161] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 14 Oct 1994.

---

[162] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[163] Quamo was promoted to Major on 01 October 1967.
[164] Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995.
[165] COL Rose died suddenly on 11 May 1990 from an aneurysm.
[166] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 December 1991.
[167] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 December 1991.
[168] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 04 November 1990.
[169] Letter from Robert Cavanaugh to Ernie Spencer, postmarked 01 March 1996. Printed in Khe Sanh Veterans, Inc.: The Khe Sanh Veteran 2:2 (Spring, 1996) [Khe Sanh Red Clay No. 35], p. 8.
[170] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 04 November 1990.
[171] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 December 1991.
[172] Conversation with Fred Patton, 09 September 1997. Patton remained at Khe Sanh approx. 6 months. [Conversation with Fred Patton, 26 March 1994].

planning phase for a guerrilla force that would use the BV-33 Lao Battalion as a base of operations extending north of Route 9, along the Lao/Vietnam border up to the border of China.[173] Laotians aren't fighters–their religion and non-violence culture obviate that. Although North Vietnamese Army units travelled through BV 33's area, they regarded it as a drug-running outfit, a good cover story that implied no American involvement–"Obviously this is a drug-running Lieutenant Colonel; he would have nothing to do with the Americans whatsoever."[174] Additionally, BV-33 provided water to NVA as they travelled through its area.– David F. Donahue, at Khe Sanh January - March, 1967, recalls Lao Bao as "..in another world, almost like being on another planet. Being there made me believe I had zipped back in time a hundred years or more. I thought the area was beautiful. I enjoyed being with the people."[175] Donahue recalls a visit to BV-33:[176] He travelled there:

> ..with Major Jim Van Sickle, FOB-1 Commander, Major Su, the Vietnamese SF liaison to C&C Det, and a Vietnamese SF officer we called 'Dai Uy Frankie.' We flew out of DaNang on a Vietnamese Air Force single engine Cessna-type aircraft.. After about an hour or so, we landed at this dirt airstrip just across the border in Laos, west of Khe Sanh.
>
> We were met by Colonel Sisivath and the village chief. The Colonel was wearing fatigues with a pistol strapped to his waist. The village chief was dressed out in his finest; a blue serge suit coat, a yellowed shirt and rumpled brown trousers. He was very proud of his 'French' suit. he was equally proud of showing us around his village. We toured through a couple of living quarters, the village weaving center, and ended up at the 'long house.' We would return to the 'long huse' later after we had our meeting with the Colonel.
>
> Colonel Sisivath personally conducted a tactical situation briefing, in French, in an open air hut. My French was abysmal, but I caught the drift of what he was saying with the help of a rather detailed operations map.
>
> After the colonel's briefing, Major Van Sickle gave his pitch. Major Su acted as interpreter and translated everything into French. Basically, as best as I can remember, we wanted the Colonel's cooperation and help in what was to become 'Operation Nickel Steel' which was the recruitment and Bru tribesmen for reconnaissance and intelligence gathering teams. We also wanted to get up to date intelligence from the colonel's forces and we wanted to establish a radio link between his headquarters and ours. We, of course, would supply the radio set up and training for his troops. After about an hour of back and forth dickering and social discourse, we adjourned to the 'long house' for a feast in our honor.
>
> Food and drinks were set up on woven mats that lay the width of the stilted building. The village chief, village elders, Colonel Sisivath and his staff, and the rest of us sat all around the mats. The rest of the village people were all gathered behind us in the length of the one huge room.
>
> Many toasts were made. We drank from small, wooden bowls that were continuously being refilled with a rather potent rice wine. After we were sufficiently mellowed, we started on the main course of the meal. Mostly, it was roast duck in a tangy sauce that smelled and tasted a little like teriyaki. There were plates of all sorts of vegetables and fruits and all I kept thinking was the host of bacteria that I was probably picking up from this mélange of food.
>
> 'Desert' ended by being very special. Brown tubers about the size of a banana were passed out to everyone. you had to peel it open with a fingernail or knife and eat the fibrous insides. The taste was somewhat like a sweet potato, but that wasn't all. All the Laotian natives got plain tubers, but when we 'guests' opened ours, we discovered that each of our tubers had a little white worm inside. Major Van Sickle used a very strong expletive when he asked Major Su how come we had got the worm. Major Su related the question to Colonel Sisivath who explained that to receive the worm was a very great honor and we were supposed to eat it with relish and nod our approval to the village chief. The Laotians seemed to be enjoying our culinary problem. We watched Colonel Sisivath and his staff pop the worm in their mouths, then take generous gulps of wine-laced coconut milk. Major Su made a remark about 'barbarous customs,' but he, Captain 'Frankie' and the pilot took their worms with grimaced expressions. We Americans all looked at each other at the same time with 'what the hell' looks on our face.
>
> I deftly picked up the wiggling body with my right hand and, with my left, got a good hold onto the coconut milk container. With a swift swing of my arm I tossed the little bugger inside my mouth. Before it even landed on my tongue, I was washing it down with huge draughts of coconut mi9lk. I kept drinking until I felt I

---

[173] Conversation with Charles Berg, 13 November 1994.
[174] Ibid.
[175] Letter from David F. Donahue, 24 September 1990. Donahue was the Signal Officer for C&C at the time |Conversation with David F. Donahue, 26 June 1990.
[176] Donahue, David F., "Lao Bao," included in letter of 24 September 1990.

had drowned it down in the inner recesses of my stomach. I immediately got a refill of the liquid while the Laotians continued with, what I was sure was, joking comments about the pansy Americans. I had to eat a sheep's eye once in Mali, but at least it wasn't alive.

After the repast and a lot more rice wine, the party broke up and we went outside to take pictures. Major Van Sickle was an instant hit as he had a Polaroid and the villagers were astonished with the instant photos. As we headed out towards the aircraft, the village chief stopped Major Van Sickle and myself and jabbered something that sounded real sincere. A quick double translation from Colonel Sisivath to Major Su told us that we were 'courageous and honorable men' and he remembered that the last time French officers had been in the village none of them would eat the worm. That made us feel better–I think."

The three Americans in Special Projects and their Bru located across from the Huong Hoa District Headquarters. Patton told Berg and Hetrick: "You're by yourself. The people across the street can't help you."[177] They were told to have nothing to do with the "advisory people," who couldn't be informed of their activities, and where classified information was not secure.[178]

Patton's arrival had been the result of a meeting in early October, 1966, attended by Secretary McNamara, accompanied by Nicholas Katzenbach (Attorney General of the US), Robert Komer (CORDS), Gen Wheeler (Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff), General Westmoreland (COMUSMACV), and Ambassador Lodge with Premier Nguyen Cao Ky. During the course of the meeting, Ky emphasized "his belief that a secret base of non-Communist Vietnamese should be established in the mountains along the Laos border in the southern part of North Vietnam; specially trained teams operating from such a base could do a great deal through sabotage and other methods to work against infiltration."

SOG team with Maj Fred Patton (in tiger stripes), summer, 1967, Khe Sanh Village. Photo by Maj James Whitenack, District Advisor, Huong Hoa District

The problem of the "porous border" had been recognized and identified by the American Ambassador as early as Dec 1960,[179] with the warning that if the border could not be closed, all our efforts would be in vain. In 1963—and, we may assume, years earlier—Vietnamese patrolled into the eastern Laotian area up to 15 KM.

The borders near Khe Sanh, both the DMZ and with Laos, were highly in dispute—not simply "porous;" they may have prompted subsequent conflict.[180] Concerning the DMZ: The Potsdam Conferences of 1945, discussing arrangements for the Japanese surrender, divided Indochina at the 16th parallel, having the Japanese surrender to the Chinese (Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek) north of that parallel and surrender to the Brittish (Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten) south of that parallel which runs just south of DaNang.

At the Geneva Conference, however, the Demarcation Line (DMZ) was placed at the 17th parallel. The Vietnamese representative, Dong, insisted it be at the 16th parallel; Mendez-France insisted it be at the 18th, and Molotov said, "Then we agree that the split should be at the 17th parallel." Bernard Fall (in a very difficult to locate printed study)[181] explains the 17th parallel as the result of "the conciliatory role played at Geneva by the USSR which in 1954 was trying to induce France not to join the European Defense Community." Events in Europe were casting long, dark shadows as far away as Vietnam. The Khe Sanh area, as with all of Northern I Corps Tactical Zone, was thus an area of contention even before hostilities erupted.

---

[177] Conversation with Charles Berg, 18 April 1994.

[178] Conversation with Charles Berg, 09 July 1994.

[179] Telegram from the Ambassador in Vietnam to the Dept. of State, 08 Dec 1960, in U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1958-60, p. 719. See discussion of border in Stubbe: Battalion of Kings, 2d Ed., 2008, pp. 9-10.

[180] For references concerning the borders and a full discussion, see: Stubbe: Battalion of Kings, 2nd Ed., 2008, p. 6.

[181] Fall, Bernard B., "Indochina (1946-1956)," part of the 3-volume series, Challenge and Response in Internal Conflict, Dept. of the Army: The Center for Research in Social Studies (CRESS) of the American university, p. 26. [Copy in archives of the United States Military Academy, W#est Point, New York].

Frances FitzGerald, writing in 1967, noted that when the French departed from Saigon in 1955-56, they left behind a "regroupment zone" just beneath the 17th Parallel, "..a political jungle of sects, local warlords, Viet Minh, partisan troops, and Saigon politicians, all of them rooted in provincial issues and family feuds." He writes that this Parallel, by including the southern half of the ancient empire of Annam, exposed the South to the larger political passions of such Central Vietnamese as Ho Chi Minh. During the 300 days of regroupment ("Passage to Freedom") nearly a million Northerners, mainly Catholics, moved south, but the former Viet Minh cadres waited to begin hostilities. Concerning the Lao/Vietnam border, a survey team investigating MIA sites discovered on 31 Oct 1992 that the border had been moved from just west of the 66 North/South line to the 63 line. Moving in the opposite direction, many Laotians regard Lao Bao as Laotian territory.[182]

On 2 March 1964, the Joint Chiefs of Staff forwarded a strong recommendation to the Secretary of Defense to lift restrictions on military operations into Laos, stating that while there was no hard intelligence on exact dimensions of infiltration of men and material into South Vietnam from the North, "there was mounting evidence that these were of such proportions to constitute an increasingly important factor in the war. The JCS cited increasing firepower of the Viet Cong which could only have been achieved through introduction of modern infantry weapons from outside the country."[183] On 24 Jan 1964, MACSOG was organized. Consideration of cross-border operations into Laos had been considered in the spring of 1964, but "the fragile condition of the Royal Laotian Government and the US policy of maintaining the façade of Laotian neutrality had prevented Washington approval of any cross-border operations into Laos."[184] In May of 1964, JCS (along with the Dept of State and SecDef) authorized COMUSMACV to begin planning for limited patrols "..for the purpose of gathering information on VC logistic activities in the area of Laos between Route 9 and the 17th Parallel adjacent to the border," but no Americans were initially authorized to accompany these patrols.

As a result, Operation LEAPING LENA was conducted 24 Jun - 1 Jul 64.[185] Five teams were inserted by parachute into Laos along Route 9 east of Tchepone. It was a dismal failure: only five survivors returned to Vietnam.[186] They did detect, however, a NVA battalion crossing into Vietnam west of Khe Sanh. Planning for cross-border operations was suspended due to the failure, as well as "recent problems with Vietnamese Special Forces, CIDG Program and general disruption of high command [making] it unlikely that effective crossborder operations on ground can be mounted before November [1964]."[187]

In March, 1965, COMUSMACV submitted to CINCPAC and JCS a concept for cross-border operations developed by his Studies and Observations Group (MACSOG): "The concept was designed to gain better intelligence on the infiltration routes and to interdict them more effectively. The concept provided for an expansion of operations in three phases, beginning with 'short-stay,' tactical intelligence missiosn, progressing to 'longer-stay' intelligence/sabotage missions, and cul;minating in long-duration missions to develop resistance cadres, utilizing secure base areas in Laos and SVN."[188] Operations would be staged from secure bases in Laos and South Vietnam, and infiltration/exfiltration would be conducted via overland routes and [182] COL Soulang Phetsomphou, Commander of BV-33, writes: "Lao Bao Village was and is at the present time considered to be part of Lao territory. 'Lao Bao' means 'Lao people. 'Ai-Lao' means 'Lao Brother." [Letter of Soulang Phetsomphou, 30 June 1997]. "This area belonged to Laos." [Conversation with Soulang Phetsomphou, 04 February 1996]. During the French administration, Lao Bao was held by the 7th Commando Company. [Letter from Soulang Phetsomphou, 30 June 1997].

---

[183] JCSM-168-64 to SecDef, 2 Mar 64, Encl A to JCS 2343/330, 25 Feb 64, JMF 9155.3/3100 of 5 Feb 64, in Historical Division, The joint Secretariat, Joint Chiefs of Staff, The History of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: The Joint Chiefs of Staff and the War in Vietnam, 1960-1968, Part 1, pp. 9-8 and 9-9].

[184] Ibid., p. 24-25.

[185] National Security Action Memorandum (NSAM) 288, approved by the President 17 March 1964, resulted inCINCPAC OPLAN 37-64, CINCPAC OPLAN 98-64 and CINCPAC OPLAN 98A-64, the former prepared as a direct result of the NSAM, the latter prepared by COMUSMACV to support 37-64.. [JCS memo DJSM-1069-64, 25 June 1964 [LBJ Library, NSF NSAMs, Container #3]. The mission of OPLAN 98-64: "This plan provides for expanding RVN covert cross-border operations into Laos south of the 17th Parallel. The operations are designed to obtain positive evidence of communist use of Laos and an infiltration route into RVN and to disrupt such infiltration. The operations are covert to the extent that no SVN or US uniforms will be worn and equipment will be sanitized to allow plausible denial of responsibility by RVN and the US. No US Military personnel will participate outside the limits of RVN." [Ibid.]

[186] Ibid., pp. D-7 and D-8. "The survivors reported that they had encountered company size VC troops and that the bridges on Route 9 were guarded by soldiers appearing to be Pathet Lao." Conboy, Ken, and Morrison, James, "Project Delta Disaster," Vietnam (Oct, 2000), pp. 46-52.

[187] JCS 090805Z/Oct 1964 in LBJ Library, National Security File, Vietnam Country File, Vol. 19, cables, Box 9]. MACV 221115Z/Oct64 noted "It was originally anticipated that operations could be conducted soon after 1 November. This date now appears too early to tell whether the necessary preconditions will be met and when political crises not resolved, Montagnard problem not yet settled, and changes in GVNAF high command continue. It now seems unlikely that we can contemplate significant cross border ground operations prior to 1 Jan 65."

[188] JCS, History of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: The Joint Chiefs of Staff and the War in Vietnam, 1960-1968, Part I, p. 24-25.

by air employing US, VNAF, and MACSOG aircraft."[189]

The three phases were further clarified: Phase 1: 10-man teams penetrate Laos for up to 10 days to collect intelligence and acquire targets; Phase 2: duration is extended to 3 weeks and the quantity of missions increase; Phase 3: deep penetration for periods up to 12 months and "in specific areas, mission includes organizing indigenous into resistance and intelligence nets, physical destruction, sabotage."[190]

The cross-border operations were given the nick-name SHINING BRASS and were approved on 20 Sep 1965 and inaugurated 17 Oct as limited, covert operations by small ten-man (later eleven) teams including not more than three Americans to a maximum depth of 20 kilometers west of the border for intelligence/reconnaissance patrols in the southern Laos panhandle, a rugged, sparsely settled area. The teams were to conduct their operations so that they would be undetectable, i.e., avoid contact with the enemy and/or villagers and not engage in sabotage or harassment."[191]. The memo went on to state the political sensitivity of the operation: "The Prime Minister of Laos [Souvanna Phouma] has on various occasions specifically told senior US officials, including Ambassador Sullivan, that he could not and would not approve of U.S. ground operations in Laos. in view of this stance, no attempt has been made to inform him of Shining Brass and to obtain his concurrence. These armed incursions, unauthorized by the Lao Government, are thus territorial violations of the sovereignty of laos, and of course, violations of the 1962 Geneva Agreements. The involvement of U.S. personnel is the element in this program which creates greatest difficulty for us."[192] The first mission was 2 Nov 65.[193]

By Apr 66, use of helicopters for insertion was approved. SOG teams were authorized to patrol up to 5 KM inside Laos and, in Jun 1966, up to 10 KM with teams having no more than 3 American advisors.

It was during June 1966 that Col Charles Norton arrived at the Special Forces Camp, Khe Sanh (later KSCB) and developed a launch site for FOB-1 (campsite located at Phu Bai). (It was important that the Launch Site be different than the camp site to have a minimum number of people at the launch site and, for security, to prevent conversations with Special Forces, natives talking with natives, etc). Billy Waugh, who worked at the Khe Sanh Launch Site at Khe Sanh from June, 1966, to January, 1968, joined the Army in 1948 and was first assigned to SVN from the 1st Special Forces in Okinawa in 1962 following a stint with the WHITE STAR operation in Laos. His initial impressions of Khe Sanh when he arrived in 1966 (before the Marines of 1/3): "Khe Sanh was cold, terrible. For combat operations, it was pitiful; it was terrible. You could not depend on decent weather. You couldn't get any further away from the flag pole." His last tour in Vietnam ended in Jan, 1972 where he was the Sergeant-Major of the Special Operations Reconnaissance Company. He spent seven years in Vietnam.[194]

On 1 Mar 67 the nickname SHINING BRASS was replaced with PRAIRIE FIRE,[195] and the main mission was: "to conduct special operations to counter enemy infiltration through Laos and into South Vietnam." "We used the phrase, 'SHINING BRASS UP YOUR ASS.' We were trying to come up with a phrase with NICKEL STEEL[196] and PRAIRIE FIRE and nothing would

---

[189] JCS Memo J3M-1242-70, 16 July 1970, Subj: Draft MACSOG Documentation Study, Appendix D, Cross-Border Operations in Laos," p. D-1.

[190] Ibid., p. D-11.

[191] "Memorandum from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs (Ungar) to the Under Secretary of State (Katzenbach), Washington, Dec 2, 1966, Subj: Expansion of Shining Brass Operations ion Laos," in US Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1964-1968, Vol. XXVIII, Laos, Washington, D.C.: US Government Printing office, 1998, p. 534].

[192] Ibid., pp. 534-535.

[193] Some of the targets included: GOLF-4 (XD 628586), HOTEL-4 (XD 563564), INDIA-4 (XD 553513), and JULIETTe-4 (XD 645659), each target being on an infiltration route used by NVN and VC supporting Communist troops in RVN, and each target suspected of enemy troop concentration and logistical support. [COMUSMACV 040430Z/Aug66, TOP SECRET]. Other target code-names included: ALPHA-1 (YB 834937), KILO-1 (YC 703034), INDIA-1 (YC 666104), CHARLIE-1 (YB 673344), HOTEL-1 (YB 693290), TANGO-3 (YC 729083). [JCS Memo J3M-1242-70, 16 July 1970, Subj: Draft MACSOG Documentation Study, Appendix D, Cross-Border Operations in Laos," p. D-15-D16].

[194] Conversations with Billy Waugh, 22 October 1988 and 30 March 1989.

[195] HQ, MACV, Command History 1967, Annex G, Studies and observations Group, Appendix IV, Cross-Border Ground Operations p. G-IV-1. JCS Memo J3M-1242-70, 16 July 1970, Subj: Draft MACSOG Documentation Study, Appendix D, Cross-Border Operations in Laos," p. D-30.

[196] NICKEL STEEL was a FOB-3 operation in the western half of the DMZ [Conversation with Harve Saal, 16 June 1990 and 09 Feb 1991], designated in JCS message #6319, 142123Z/Jan67. [Saal, Harve, SOG MACV Studies and Observations Group (Behind Enemy Lines), Vol. I, Historical Evolution, Milwaukee, WI,: Edwards Brothers, Inc., 1990, p.xi.]. NICKEL STEEL, an operation of MACSOG-35, was "a recruitment effort to employ Bru Montagnards as intelligence gathering and reconnaissance teams for operations in the western end of the Demilitarized Zone and adjoining Laos SOG had used Vietnamese-led agent teams from MACSOG-34 in the area with very limited success and wanted positive results which could lonely be obtained by using the local Bru Montagnard tribesmen in combination with American-led reconnaissance teams.."

come out of it."[197]

To implement Phase 3, MACV in Mar 1967 proposed that a guerrilla force be organized from the hill tribes of the Annamite mountain region. Training in South Vietnam, the force would then establish contacts with village leaders in Laos. PRAIRIE FIRE teams, accompanied by these trained personnel, would enter an area, establish contact and proceed in the classical role of developing a guerrilla force and conduct guerrilla warfare. SOG OPLAN 37b-67 (Phase III, PRAIRIE FIRE) provided for a 3,000 man guerrilla force, responsive to U.S. direction, to conduc t operations against the NVA/VC/PL in Laos adjacent to the RVN border."[198]

Major Patton first located at a structure immediately across the road from the huong Hoa District Headquarters, referred to as the "Howard Johnson's" by the Marines, a building with barbed wire security and perhaps 15, 20 men, according to the US Army District Advisor, James Whitenack. They used Whitenack's helo pad for launches, and from there, relocated to the old French fort position just east of Khe Sanh village (a position that had been overrun in 1953 in which the wounded were killed and thrown down the well to contaminate it and the position burned). Aluminum sheeting was delivered, and the position was developed.[199]

Maj Patton's mission was to determine whether or not the Bru could be organized and trained for border security, and had started training them.[200] The Bru tri bal area covered both eastern Laos and northwestern South Vietnam; they freely travelled back and forth as though the artificial national boundary didn't exist. The force being dedveloped was to operate in the area between Mu Gia Pass and Tchepone, but, as James W. Moore notes, "That was day-dreaming if there ever was!"[201]

Maj Patton determined the Bru were especially good in the jungle, detecting the presence of others—almost magically attune to scents, noises, and visual signs that they knew whenever someone was nearby. Also, they had a mechanical ability: "They learned how to drive and take care of weapons faster than any group I've ever worked with."[202]

The local missionary family at Khe Sanh who were involved with developing a written Bru language, making the Bru literate for the first time in their tribal history, and translating the Bible into Bru, provided a Bru boy to assist Patton.[203] Patton reciprocated by providing building materials to refurbish an old, abandoned French house in Khe Sanh Village to be their home.[204] Mr. John Miller recalls that Patton claimed he was writing a history of the Bru tribe. Gradually, more and more Amereicans arrived for the "history" project, notes Mr. Miller, "but just how many people do you need to write a history?" The American group then gathered a dozen Bru to work with, then 20, then 40, and located at the Old French Fort.[205]

Fred Patton temporarily ruined the local economy, paying an extravagant rent of 20,000 to 24,000 P [Piastres] per month! The Bru were very disturbed; it wasn't "right." When Mr. Miller informed the SOG officials that this was gross inflation, they replied that this was what they were required to pay. Some Bru received more pay than their village chiefs, the salaries ranging from 8,000 to 18,000 "P"[206] per month. In addition, some Bru received "hazardous" pay for going on patrols, and could not understand why some should be paid more for doing that.

Skip Minnicks remembers the basic honesty of the Bru: "They didn't even have a word in their language for 'theft' or 'steal' or 'rob'. Here we come. The first thing we did—because we thought we were being generous—we gave them three uniforms, two pair of boots. Well, they found out immediately that they could trade, barter for food and necessities, and so they became capitalists like us. They began to steal from each other, and I thought, O my God!"[207] He also can never forget how they cared for him when he caught black water fever: "They would have done anything. Once I got very ill and they brought me their food. I wouldn't eat; I'd quit eating. They brought me their food, knowing that I could not honorably refuse it.

[Capt David Donahue, "Coordination of the Nickle/Nickel Steel Operation," in Saal, Harve, SOG MACV Studies and Observations Group (Behind Enemy Lines), Vol. III, Legends, Milwaukee, WI,: Edwards Brothers, Inc., 1990, p 110]. To establish this effort, Maj James Van Sickle, Commander of FOB-1 operating out of Khe Sanh, visited and made liaison with COL Sisivath, Commander of BV-33 at the time. Major Su translated Maj VanSickle's conversation into French for COL Sisivath in which he solicited "assistance with Bru recruiting and up-to-date intelligence reporting from the Colonel's men. We also wanted to establish a communications link, using radios, between Lao Bao and the C&C Det in DaNang." [Ibid.]

[197] Conversation with David Donahue, 28 June 1990.

[198] USMACV, Studies and Observations Group, Command History 1967, Annex G, p. G-VII-2.

[199] Conversation with James Whitenack, 06 October 1988.

[200] Conversation with Fred Patton, 26 March 1994.

[201] Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995.

[202] Conversation with Fred Patton, 26 March 1994.

[203] Conversation with Fred Patton, 26 March 1995.

[204] Comments of John and Carolyn Miller during a visit, 16 December 1967. [Stubbe: Khe Sanh Chaplain, p. 459].

[205] Comments of John and Carolyn Miller at Khe Sanh, Fall of 1967.

[206] Piastres.

[207] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 07 July 1990.

Twice a day. They fed themselves twice a day. They would stand there: they knew that I couldn't honorably not eat that food. They were wonderful people."[208]

Maj Patton sought a location for his proposed Bru guerrilla force. It was important to keep isolated from Vietnamese units, such as District and Lang Vei, as the Operations Chief of FOB-3, James Moore, later commented: "..if you let MACV know what you're doing, you're letting the Vietnamese Army know, and that's a sure way to get yourself killed."[209] and focused on the abandoned prison site at Lao Bao where Route 9 passes through the Lao/Vietnam border. Located on flat terrain mostly surrounded by a loop in the Xe Pone River, the area afforded fields of fire of at least 1500 feet and contained an abandoned airstrip, 1100 x 65 ft. capable of handling C-7a aircraft.[210]. Walls of the abandoned prison/fort were mostly intact except for one corner, and the interior walls were concrete several feet thick.

A Bru named "Onya" [pronounced "on" "yah"], while not a "chief" in the Bru tribe (which was hereditary) was nevertheless a spokesman and representative for the Bru.[211] Onya had been educated in Hue with Felix Poilane, the son of the original French coffee planter, Eugene, who had established his plantation here in 1918. It was said by some that Onya was actually Eugene's son by a Bru woman.[212] (Eugene Poilane did father ten children, five born after he was 60).[213] Onya said he had been a guard at Lao Bao while Giap was imprisoned there.[214] (There were many legends about Onya, who was a man shrouded in mystery. During the Siege, Dan Kelley of CAC OSCAR noted that he would disappear for several days at a time, and then reappear in the FOB-3 compound).[215]

LAO BAO area in isthmus formed by Xe Pone River dividing Laos and Vietnam. USAF photo mission AM4389, 28 Jan 1968, flown by 460th Tactical Reconnaissance Wing

LAO BAO PRISON. Photo by Maj Fred Patton, Summer, 1967

Onya enthusiastically advised Major Patton to locate at Lao Bao. He showed Patton the cell in which Ho Chi Minh had been a prisoner.[216] Walls of the old fort "..were pretty well intact except on one corner, and they had all kinds of heavy walls still standing inside. It would have taken a minimal amount of materiel and effort to make one hellacious fort out there. And Onya was just beside himself. He said, I'll put 1500, 2000 people sout here in nothing flat. He was really looking forward to

---

[208] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 December 1991.
[209] Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995.
[210] Collins, John M., Military Geography for Professionals and the Public, Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1998, p. 373.
[211] Letter of Mr. John Miller, 09 Oct 1969. Mr. Miller notes that because of his education and prominence with the French, his literacy and knowledge, he was appointed Assistant District Chief of Huong Hoa. Although Bru Chiefs are hereditary, Onya thus became their spokesman. [Ibid.] He was appointed Assistant District Chief in December, 1965, and became the link between American intelligence nets gaining information on the NVA through the Bru. [Taped comments of Mr. John Waghelstein, 09 May 1986].
[212] Conversation with Daniel Kelley, 23 May 1988.
[213] Obit., Eugene Poilane.
[214] Conversation with Fred Patton, 09 September 1997.
[215] Letter of SGT Daniel Kelley, 28 March 1970.
[216] Ibid.

it."[217] The plan was shot down, however, by the SOG HQ who noted it "was within mortar range of surrounding territory!" One might ask: what area in Vietnam wasn't? Around the 4th or 5th of August, 1967, Capt Lee Dunlap's team was training Bru at the Old French Fort; he soon realized the Old French Fort location did not provide a good launch site and had no suport facilities[218]. Capt Lee Dunlap recalls visiting the Lao Bao site because his superiors had said, "We're going to put FOB-3 there."[219] It is interesting to speculate what may have happened during the Siege with the force occupying massive bunkers that they had at FOB-3 if they had, instead, been situated at Lao Bao on the border. Patton notes that had they been there, they might have delayed the NVA's progress: "..we would have had a vast array of weaponry for level ground fighting like that. They could of taken the area, sure, but boy would it have cost them!"[220] He always regretted not having had the chance to locatre at Lao Bao.[221]

Although much of the initial training was conducted in the Khe Sanh area itself, many of their initial efforts involved contact with BV-33 in Laos. On one "visit," Berg and Hetrick, together with about four "yards" drove from Khe Sanh to Ban Houei Sane in a jeep.[222] Patton had ordered them, "Do not take any weapons." It was a direct order from Ambassador William H. Sullivan.

"Do you have a weapon," asked Berg.

"Yeah, I got two 9mm in my belt, grenades in the pocket," responded Hetrick.

Berg looked over to Hetrick, "Why are we doing this? O God, I don't believe all of this is happening! It's amazing how many grenades and how many magazines you can get for a 9mm underneath the top jacket or in baggy clothing–the baggiest ones you can find!"

One of their first missions involved working with a Special Forces A-Team on the Vietnamese side while the Special Projects team went over into Laos as a blocking force for their flank.[223] A young Special Forces Captain who asked to accompany them as a "strap-hanger," started up a hill by himself during a break, triggering a battle which seemed like "the world opened up." Charles Berg was hit in both legs; he couldn't walk.

"Roll me down in the ditch here and cover me up in this gully with enough stuff and give me a weapon and ammunition and come back tomorrow," Berg told his Bru. "They'll just pass over it."

"Nah, I'm going to take you with me," said the short Bru soldier, who carried Berg on his back. Berg carried the weapon.

The two men got to the middle of the river. "Stay here!" yelled Berg.

Hetrick, on the other side, looked incredulous. "What the —— you doing?"

"The cold water feels so good in these bullet holes in my leg!"

"Get outta that water! Git!"

Berg was medevaced 14 Feb 1967.

During the Battle of the Hills, Patton attempted on several occasions to inform the Marine staff where his training patrols in country had discovered NVA positions. In one case, a patrol near 881-S had located a cave in which the NVA force was staging. At one point, six Bru "dragged" Patton to a hill to show him. But the Marines wouldn't "buy it." "What cave?" Patton reported the North Vieetnamese soldiers were staging right behind Hill 881-South. "I came back in and told the Marines where they were staging. They had a cage back there that they were putting prisoners in. Nobody would buy it at the time. ... I grew so disgusted with the old full bird Colonel because of his inability to face up to the fact that there were other people around and there was other information to be had. There were about six of my Yards come to me and almost dragged me back to that hill.

OLD FRENCH FORT SUMMER 1967
Photo by Maj James Whitenack

AERIAL PHOTO OF OLD FRENCH FORT
Photo by Maj James Whitenack

[217] Ibid.
[218] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 13 September 1997.
[219] Conversations with Lee Dunlap, 11 July 1990 and 10 September 1988..
[220] Ibid.
[221] Ibid.
[222] Following information from conversation with Charles Berg, 05 June 1994.
[223] Following information from conversation with Charles Berg, 18 April 1994.

They were excited about what they had seen. We went back there and stayed for darn near a full day because we couldn't get out of there once we went in. I went up and talked to the marine Commander. He was intent on shoving those platoons up that hill in that enfilade fire one right after the other."[224]

Fred Patton had been at Khe Sanh some six months when he departed to take over FOB-1, and Skip Minnicks arrived. Skip moved the cadre to the Old French Fort position (from the house directly across from the MACV District compound, referred to as the "Howard Johnson's"), an abandoned French military position on the eastern edge of Khe Sanh village. Frequent visits were made to BV-33 and from them, much was learned of the NVA activity in the area. Skip Minnicks was able to run 19 missions until the Siege abruptly stopped the development of their guerrilla force.

On one mission, he found his team being chased by a large NVA force. "I didn't know how large; I just knew it was large. We got too close and couldn't get out. They were actually looking for us with flashlights; that's how confident they were that they were strong enough. The next day, help came and I completely disregarded the KAK code—everything. I said, 'Birddog, this is me.' He said, 'You go ahead, me!'"[225]

There were several expedient KAK or Shackle Codes, of course, to encrypt the location in grid coordinate numbers. The code involves a word with ten non-repeating letters to replace the numbers. For example, using "CHAPEL FUND", C=1, H=2, A=3. Shackling the numbers of a grid coordinate is simply a matter of giving the right letters.[226] One shackle code used by SOG teams operating out of Khe Sanh was "TIGERHOUND," the name of the USAF operation of 20th TASS flying the Bird Dog aircraft.[227] Another was "the famous word." If the shackle code was lost, the team would be asked to remember "the famous word," and give their location by shackling the coordinates using it. The "famous word" is "MOTHERFFK," "if a guy was in trouble on the ground, we'd say, 'OK, what's the famous word? You can tell me your grid coordinates using the famous word.' We used that as a shackle code."[228]

6. MAJ GEORGE QUAMO

GEORGE QUAMO

Captain George Quamo arrived around August/September, 1967, and was promoted to Major 01 Oct 1967.[229] He was 27.[230]. His mission was to move the "Special Projects" effort from the initial planning, conceptual phase, to an operational phase (training and then conducting a long-range UW role in the Mu Gia/Tchepone area). Strikingly handsome, brilliant and fluent in several languages, including Vietnamese (he even was an instructor in Vietnamese at the school in Monterey, California), charismatic, Gunny George Bailey (of the Marine 1st Radio Bn Det at Khe Sanh) referred to him as "the cat;"[231] others thought he was the kind of person who might disappear and ten years later reappear having led a guerrilla force in some remote region of the world.[232] He was a kind of "Lawrence of Arabia" of Vietnam. Capt Jerry Hudson, S-2 of 26th Marines during the Siege, remembers George sharing information he probably was not authorized to divulge, and yet it was the right thing to do under the circumstances. He notes:

"He was one super man. He and I spoke from the same 'Bible.' He had so much

---

[224] Conversation with Fred Patton, 09 September 1997.

[225] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 Dec 1991.

[226] Examples of shackle codes: QUIET WORLD, WALT DISNEY, CHAIN SMOKE, BLUE SHADOW, BRICK HOUSE,BLUE SHADOW, QUIET WORLD, VIOLET RAYS, TWO NUMBERS, PHONY FEAST, DOG WHISTLE, FLY QUICKER PEARL S BUCK, CHARLESTON, WASHINGTON, COUP DE GRAS, SQUAD FORCES, TEN OF CLUBS, CRIMSON TAP, BALTIMORES, TURKEY LOAF, THE COMPANY, STOMPED BUG, TWO QUAKERS, VOLKSWAGEN, WHITE VODKA, JOURNALIST, AFORESIGHT, BLACKSTONE, FIVE CLOCKS, BLUE MONDAY, REPUBLICAN, BLACK SHIRT, QUALIFY NOW, LONG SQUEAK, FRUIT CAKES, BASILONE RD, DIRTYWOMAN, WRONG BLAST, BEAUFORT SC, BROWN CHIEF, SHACKELING, ENGLISH BOY, HEAVY DRINK, SQUARE MIND, QUADRICEPS, BRIGHT POLE, HYDRAULICS.

[227] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 10 September 1988.

[228] Conversation with Harve Saal, 29 June 1990.

[229] DA Form 66, Officer Qualification Record, Service Record of George Quamo.

[230] George Quamo, SSN 155 32 8806, was born 20 June 1940 in Lynn, MA. [DD-214 of George Quamo in his Service Record].

[231] Conversation with George Bailey, 19 Oct 1989.

[232] Conversations with Jerry E. Hudson, 23 June 1994 and James Quamo, 04 June 1995. Hudson was S-2 of 26th Marines during the siege battle.

credibility; if he said it, I didn't care what somebody else said. Quamo was Special Forces to the heart. When Special Forces started I was a recon instructor at [Naval Amphibious Base], Little Creek, Virginia, and we got a message one weekend: we'd like you to train 50 Special Forces in submarine lock-in/lock-out. [Note: a technique for moving in and out of submerged submarines near a shoreline, day and night, to enter or depart for recon, involving use of special light signal devices, use of tanks, etc.] It was difficult to obtain a submarine—on a weekend—but I replied, 'Submarine will be available. Create curriculum. Be prepared to go.' This was in 1950 or so. We put 300 of them through there, 50 a week. And so we had very close ties with those people, and Quamo respected me because I knew alot of people he knew from back when that 'club' [of Unconventional Warfare types] was very small."[233] He continues:

"Quamo wasn't directed by Lownds to come over; he came over on his own initiative. Quamo really saved us during the first few days of the attack by giving us all sorts of significant information—instead of simply forwarding it on to Saigon and then receiving, via Saigon, digested abstractions much later"[234] when the NVA units had long ago moved and the information had become "history.". Headquarters and units of the NVA were exceedingly mobile—even mortar positions. A Battalion or Regimental or Divisional Headquarters could be fixed in a specific location only to relocate very soon thereafter. There were so many NVA positions (sometimes manned, sometimes not), in fact, that the Target Information Officer in the FSCC, Mirza Baig, had over 3,000 targets within a 15 KM radius of KSCB[235] (positions of anti-aircraft, automatic weapons, mortars, artillery, bunkers, fortified areas, trenches, logistic dumps, camp assembly areas, truck and track vehicle parking, rocket launchint sites, headquarters).

Quamo "..would sometimes talk in riddles:[236] 'If you're looking for H&I fire, I would suggest this area here might be one super great area to concentrate on,' or 'If you're just not sure where to put your sensors and your other assets, this area over here seems to me to be alot of activity and you'll probably get some good target information if you concentrate in that area,' and that type of thing."

George Quamo was the oldest son of Alexander and Kaliroi Quamo, who emigrated with their daughter, Yllka, from Albania to the United States in the 1930s when that country became Communist.[237] Three other daughters (Tefta, Andronika, and Marietta), and two sons (George and James) were born after they arrived in America.[238] His parents were hard workers and family values were important. His elderly father worked for GE until he died when George was 12 and his brother James was 10. Albania had been an austere life, and the family, living in the "Brickyard" section of Lynn, Massachusetts, was difficult. His mother knew five languages, none of which was English. Upon the death of his father, the family moved to Averill Park, just outside of Albany, New York. James notes, "My father worked until midnight. We were kids–eight, nine, and ten years old, and there was always love in the house and there was discipline. We sold newspapers and got home around eleven thirty at night."[239] The neighborhood's difficult conditions molded its residents into survivors and achievers.[240]

George Quamo had been an exceptional athlete in Averill Park, NY, high-school: he was either MVP or Captain of football, basketball, and baseball teams.[241] He was Class President as a Junior, and the students wanted him as President the next year, but he declined in order to let someone else have the limelight. Colleges attempted to recruit him, but he enlisted in the Army on 23 Oct 1958, and trained at Ft. Benning, GA, and later attended the Officers Candidate School where he graduated as a 2Lt. (He subsequently attended Jump School, Ranger School, and Vietnamese Language School.[242] In Dec, 1959, he

---

[233] Conversation with Jerry Hudson, 04 July 1991.
[234] Conversation with Jerry Hudson, 23 June 1994.
[235] Letter of MAJ Mirza M. Baig, 23 Dec 1968, to HQMC, Historical Division, in Khe Sanh Monograph Cpomments file.
[236] Conversation with Jerry E. Hudson, 23 June 1994.
[237] Conversation with James Quamo, 02 January 2003.
[238] His father, Alexander Gregor Quamo, was born 17 April 1895 in Albania. His mother, Kaliroi Kaye Quamo was born 15 April 1905 in Albania. His sister, Yllka was born 17 April 1925 in Albania. His sister, Tefta, was born 3 Dec 1937 in Lynn, MA. His sister, Andronika, was born 28 May 1939 in Lynn, MA. His brother, James, was born 25 May 1942 in Lynn, MA. His sister, Marietta, was born 9 Oct 1945 in Lynn, MA. [DD form 398, Statement of Personal History, 27 Jan 1964, in Service Record, George Quamo].
[239] Conversation with James Quamo, 15 January 2003.
[240] James Quamo notes that one became head of an insurance company in California, one became a high school principal, James became an educator. One became an Orthodox priest who teaches in college, and one led the nation in scoring in football in 1961, Pete Pako from West Texas State. [Conversation with James Quamo, 02 Jan 2003].
[241] Conversation with James Quamo, 04 June 1995." "George was a year and eleven months older than me. When he was in high-school, he was a very good athlete, exceptional athlete--in football, basketball, and base\ball. In all three sports he was either Captain or MVP or both. He was a Class president, and then the next year they wanted him as Class President and he just turned it down." [Ibid.] James Quamo is George's brother.
[242] Quamo's Service Record notes completion of Vietnam Language School (6 weeks) in 1962, Thai Language (at DLIWC, 41 was assigned to Ft. Riley, KS, where he served as a Platoon Leader, XO, and Company Commander of infantry units on the post. Bob Stevens, his first commander, later wrote of George:

> George and I met for the first time in Fort Riley, Kansas, back in 1960 and I was his first commander. I rode him hard and put him up wet every night. He spent a great deal of time at my house. I was a First Lieutenant and not making very much money but we enjoyed many a bologna sandwich together and he would fall asleep on our couch while watching TV. He became close to my son Jim and called him Timmy for some reason. My wife taught him to dance and one night he was embarrassed when my daughter kicked him as my wife was pregnant at the time. We both ended up in Special Forces with me joining first. After his return from Vietnam as an Advisor, we spent Christmas together at my home here in Mississippi. George was really surprised because the area is a big tourist resort with all types of night spots and activity. He was out every night until the wee hours and my children would wake him up for a late breakfast. He always wore an old pair of black VC pajamas and they had a large hole in the pants. .. We had a great time as George enjoyed the area and the people. He even spoke of the possibility that we would retire in the area.
>
> We were assigned together almost continually. We were together at language scholol with George studying Thai and I had Korean. We met each other coming and going in Okinawa. it seemed that either one or the other was always off on mission. I had my car shipped over so he was never without transportation as my wife did not drive at that time. He took my wife, Jean, wherever she needed to go. He also used the car to cat around and it was funny to Jean as she was starting to get the reputation of a big playgirl as people began to see the car parked in front of all the lively night spots. Oddly enough, our Group Commander and I had the only two white Falcon station wagons on the island so George and I blamed it all on him. We had taken SCUBA together in California and dove several times in Okinawa.
>
> When I was in Korea on a mission, George received orders for Vietnam. He bummed a flight over and we spent one hell of a week together. When I arrived in Vietnam we got together in Da Nang for a weekend. George spoke fluent Vietnamese and was quite an operator. ... At that time we talked about his joining me in Nha Trang as my Executive officer and he was due to visit me at the time he came up missing. We had talked about going into some type import/export business together after service.
>
> The last time I saw George, he appeared concerned that he was predestined to die on that tour. He told me that he expected to go out in a big way and specifically mentioned an airplane crash. It worried me but both of us were doing a great deal of flying over enemy controlled territory and such a worry would only be a bit natural. He was not afraid in the sense of fear but was definitely concerned.
>
> We were close enough to embrace each other at departure and greeting times and did not give a damn who saw us or what they might think. Once we were walking in Carmel, California, when we approached a group of hippie looking characters. I started to move aside when George said, 'Steve, this is our damn sidewalk and if it wasn't for guys like you and I these hippies wouldn't have a sidewalk to be on.' They moved aside very quietly. We were much closer than my brothers are to me. He was the only true friend that I have ever had and I am afraid that many men will go through life never knowing that kind of friendship and camaraderie. For that, I am truly sorry. ... God, do I ever miss him.[243]

Quamo was awarded a Silver Star for gallantry in action on 27 Mar 1963 while moving through heavy enemy fire to put a friendly machinegun back in action and rallying the Vietnamese troops he was advising.[244]

Then, when George Quamo reported as Team Commander of a SOG team in Mar 1964, Don Koch recalls that Les Mason, the XO of the team, was several years older and a West Point graduate. George "..was absolsutely fantastic! He said, 'You guys all know what your job is; I don't have to tell you what your job is; let's go do it!' I mean, he didn't command that thing; he led it... He was brilliant. If they would have sent him to college, he would of got through college in a year and a half. The people around him were just magnetized by him, and if you didn't have the magnetism, he somehow transferred it to you."[245] wks) in 1965 [3AA Form, DA, 2-Year College Equivalency Evaluation Worksheet, 14 Feb 1966], completed Special Forces officer training 23 May 1964 [DA Form 66, Officer Qualification Record], Parachutist (4 weeks, on 10 Jan 1960), Ranger school (8 weeks) on 6 Apr 1960, and Pathfinder training 5 Feb 1966. [DA Form 66, Officer Qualification Record].

---

[243] Letter from Bob Stevens to James Quamo, 6 Nov 1974, sent in letter from James Quamo, 21 Feb 1996.

[244] hq, Dept. of the Army, General order No. 36, 14 Sep 1967, in Service Record of George Quamo. This replaced an earlier award of the Bronze Star Medal (announced in General Orders No. 122, HQ, Military Assistance Advisory Group, vietnam, 16 Apr 1964.

[245] Conversation with Don Koch, 02 May 1995.

Quamo received a 2-year college equivalency in 1966,[246] completed Advanced Officer's Infantry Course the same year, and returned to Vietnam, arriving at Khe Sanh a few weeks prior to his promotion to Major 6 Oct 1967.

7. ON THE PRECIPICE

George Quamo, Skip Minnicks, and Doc Secor, of the Special Projects unit, having made contact with Col Soulang at BV33 now moved east to scour the Co Roc Massif.[247] Formed when the Kontum Massif collided into the Southeast Asia mainland, lifting up an ancient sea bed of what is now Laos (like shoving a hand under a stack of newspapers), this sheer cliff of the limestone sediment from that sea bed, doused with monsoon rains over many millenia, had formed numerous caves where the water trickled into cracks. Caves, in ancient myths, are openings to the realm of demons of the deep, an entrance to the underworld; evil beings bent on destruction dwell here.

Special Projects had developed to include three teams: PENNSYLVANIA, OKLAHOMA, and WISCONSIN. The Americans in Special Projects had puchased an engraved Randall knife for Maj Quamo with the team names engraved as the Bru pronounced them: ST WISSICON, ST OKLAHOME, and ST PENNSYLVANE. (The knife was never presented, however, due to what subsequently happened to Quamo.) Each team had three Americans and about seven Bru,[248] although this varied with the mission since, the largest being ten indiginous, but larger teams made the mission of intelligence gathering more difficult.[249]

During their reconnaissance on top of Co Roc, the soldiers of FOB-3 were to be fogged-in.[250]

SFC Robert CAVANAUGH, Team Leader of Spike Team OKLAHOMA, had enlisted in 1953 at age 17, just missing his opportunity to serve in Korea (which upset him at the time), and become a communicator. He reenlisted to become a CW operator, trained at Ft. Gordon and, upon graduation, was "drafted" into Special Forces at a time when they lacked qualified CW radio operators.[251] He had served in Laos in 1961 during Operation WHITE STAR with Bull Simon and then transferred to 1st Special Forces Group on Okinawa from where he served in Vietnam part of every year from 1963 to 1968. He always volunteered for these missions, was never ordered. He also served in Project Delta with Col Beckwith. After arriving in Vietnam in 1962, he served part of every following year in Vietnam up to 1969. Cavanaugh was involved in some unusually dangerous missions. "I never refused to go on any mission. I never refused to go on any patrol." Yet, he was only wounded once: "I always did mofre than my share.I always say to myself, "Why? Why am I still here?".[252] After reporting at DaNang, Cavanaugh was uncomforable in the comfortable setting while others were out in the field, and requested duty in a forward unit. The Sergeant-Major sent him to Special Projects at Khe Sanh, then located at "Fort Dix"[253] which at the time was led by Charles Minnicks. There were no officers at the time.[254]

Then, Captain George Quamo arrived. Master Sergeant Charles Minnicks was the oldest team leader of SOG in Vietnam, in his late 30s. When he arrived in Vietnam, the Sergeant Major said, "You're too old!" and was about to be sent to FOB-1 to take over as temporary Sergeant-Major. Minnicks objected: "This is my fourth trip [to Vietnam]. I didn't have to make any trip. The only reason I came here was because I was allowed to volunteer for this outfit. I want a team!" He said, "You're too old; you can't keep up." Minnicks replied, "Give me a shot. If I can't keep up, I'll be the first one to come to you." So the Sergeant Major begrudgingly sent Minnicks to take over team PENNSYLVANIA at Khe Sanh. Minnicks recalls: "I had that group. I was in charge of that group. So when he [Quamo] came–. He looked like a kid! Here comes this new Captain. I resented him! And I made it apparent. And he called me into his tent, and he just sat me down, and we just talked. And he made me aware of my [246] DA Form 66, Service Record, George Quamo.

---

[247] Co Roc, 14.8 KM southwest of KSCB, just inside the Lao border, "..is a granite ridge that runs along the border from XD 725348 southeast to XD 768321 and then south to XD 753270. Varying in height from 850 meters to 515 meters above sea level, Co Roc is more than 300 meters higher than the Khe Sanh plain and the crest of the ridge is only one to three kilometers inside Laos." [HQ, 1st Inf Brig, 5th Inv Div (Mech): Combat AAR, Operation TASK FORCE REMAGEN, 16 Mar - 29 Apr 1969, 4 Jun 1969, Para 8.c. Tab E to 3d MarDiv Command Chronology, May, 1969]. Co Roc's precipitous eastern face and south slopes are a sheer cliff (facing KSCB) and the entire area is covered by forest and laced with trails and streams. [MACV, "Khe Sanh Analysis," 9 July 1968, p. 2.]

[248] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993. The knife was retained by SFC Charles Minnicks "ST" refers to "Strike Team."

[249] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 05 May 1990.

[250] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 27 Oct 1993.

[251] Those who are qualified in Morse code; "CW"=Continuous Wave.

[252] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.

[253] The Old French Fort position just east of Khe Sanh village.

[254] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.

short-comings! He really did."[255] When "Skip" Minnicks became upset, Cavanaugh reminded him that sooner or later an officer would be sent there and they didn't yet know anything about Quamo. "I can't understand why we're fighting this man; we don't even know him."[256] Cavanaugh deeply respected Skip "because the man had absolutely no fear. in fact, I named my youngest son after him."[257] In short order, Minnicks and Quamo were the best of friends.[258]

Operating 07-17 January, the Special Projects unit, led by Maj Quamo and SFC Minnicks, discovered extensive NVA positions in Co Roc. On 11 Jan, a team found a 50-man foxhole complex right on the top of Co Roc. Two days later, a patrol observed 75 NVA soldiers and sighted heavy ground fire, including .50 cal machineguns, firing at an airplane. On 15 Jan, a team observed long wire antenna adjacent a hut with indications of heavy foot traffic in the immediate vicinity.[259]

Then, on the 14th, SFC Robert Cavanaugh, the ONE ZERO of Spike Team OKLAHOMA, along with 1/Lt Harlan "Rip" Van Winkle, leading a Hatchett Force of 8 Americans and about 30 Bru, was about to touch down on the south end of Co Roc, on a finger coming off the ridgeline off the backside, when a command detonated (Claymore type) mine was detonated. Van Winkle recalls: "It just shredded the left side. My platoon commander was in a bad way. The Platoon Commander was LUA, who had given three or four parrots to Fusco and Tredennick. It totally destroyed the helicopter. When I got off, I hit the ground and started to get up, and something just told me to get down again. I started to duck, an d as I ducked, the blade of the helicopter flopped around and knocked my hat off! It did a complete 180. And I said, 'God, if I'd of just stood there, well, it would have taken my head right along with it."[260] SFC Cavanaugh's trousers were "just about blown off. Another chopper came in to evacuate the pilot and door gunner and then another chopper came, tied a pair of pants to a sandbag, flew over, and dropped it to me."[261]

From the top of Co Roc, one could view KSCB and Lang Vei, but not Khe Sanh ville which was in a valley.[262] Cavanaugh said "What are we going to do with this thing?" and "Rip" replied, "Go ahead and burn it." Cavanaugh reponsed, "I hate to tell you this, but it's going to take more than an O-2 to tell me to burn this chopper," and called Maj Campbell at the FOB who gave permission to destroy the bird after the wounded were extracted. It was burnt by thermite grenades.[263] "It didn't take long for that helicopter to go up in smoke. We picked up and married up with Cavanaugh, and I think Minnicks, and we set up a perimeter. Three or four hours later, Quamo with another team came in. I guess Baker was up there. There was a bunch of us and we started running patrols out of there,"[264] fanning in different directions.

Sgt Fusco had been carrying an American flag for five-and-a-half months, looking for the proper place to put it. The top of Co Roc Mountain seemed appropriate to him, and there it was planted.[265]

Some soldiers of Special Projects and FOB-3 Khe Sanh, 1968. Left to right: SFC Cavanaugh, MSGT Minnicks, SFC Sherron, SFC Secore, SP5 Harris, SFC Baker, SSGT McCabee.[266] [In Christmas card to members of Congress, governors, the President]

---

[255] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 04 November 1990.
[256] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[257] Ibid.
[258] Ibid.
[259] Warren A. Trest, Khe Sanh (Operation NIAGARA), 22 January - 31 March 1968, HQ PACAF, Directorate, Tactical Evaluation, Project CHECO [Contemporary Historical Evaluation of Combat Operations], 13 Sept 1968, p. 18.
[260] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 23 October 1994.
[261] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 27 October 1993.
[262] Conversation with Harlan Van Winkle, 23 October 1994.
[263] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[264] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 23 October 1994.
[265] Ibid.
[266] Photo originally appeared in Khe Sanh Veterans, Inc.: The Khe Sanh Veteran 2:2 (Spring, 1996), p. 36. [Red Clay #35]

On the 16th, SFC Cavanaugh happened to peer over the edge of the cliff and spotted a peculiar object sticking out of the face of the sheer cliff. It was man-made, not natural. "I hit one of my Bru and pointed down there. O they got excited! Then we found a little trail—you could hardly see it—a little trail that went down this cliff face right there, and that's when we found the first of the big caves."[267] Searching the caves, Robert Cavanaugh remembers: "They were so dark, and there were so many of them, and I was only a small team."[268] The large caves contained bunks and walls full of things.[269]

One cave contained two tons of rice. Three enclosed structures were located nearby which could house 30 men each. Approximately 900 meters southeast of the caves, an extensive bunker complex was discovered. The team counted 500 bunkiers and reported that many were of 10-man capacity. One large bunker was estimated to be a regimental command post.[270]

Cavanaugh's team proceeded to burn everything. No NVA were encountered, but everyone knew they were there—somewhere. Donald Rumph later recalled: "That mountain top was unbelievable—the positions they had up there. It was just amazing. There weren't any troops there; they had gone some place else—didn't hurt my feelings at all!" The "missing NVA," however, did concern them: "..we talked about it afterwards; all of us knew that had there been anybody at all there, they would have eaten our lunches. I mean, there was just no way that we could of done anything other than just get blown away up there."[271]

The three Special Projects team leaders (SFCs Skip Minnicks, Bob Cavanaugh, and Bob Baker) were reconning the area, came to a clearing near a river, and still hadn't made any contact. Cavanaugh said, "I'm going to check over the top of this rise—see if there's anyting over the top. You guys wait here." Skip and Bob Baker said, "No, we're going to go with you." "OK."[272]

SFC Robert Baker was on SFC Cavanaugh's left; SFC Minnicks was on his right. The scene of what happened next is branded upon Cavanaugh's memory:

"We had maybe ten yards between us as we're walking up there, and to this day, I can still hear `click click,' which is Bob and Skip taking their weapons off `safe' and putting them on `full automatic.' I can hear that to this day. So we're going up there. As soon as we got to the hill, this guy jumped up out of a hole to shoot me, and when he did that, Bob was no more than three to four feet away from me, and the NVA swung his weapon away from me, and hit Bob."[273]

SFC Baker took three very serious shots to his gut. Doc Secor went right to Baker and miraculously—considering the wounds—kept him alive. "I remember Bob kept hollering, `I gotta take a crap! I gotta take a crap!' and Doc was saying, `Don't do that! Don't do that! Just be good! Stay in there!' Doc told me later he didn't want Bob to take—it was something that was keeping him alive, giving him something to think about, keep his mind on something else."[274]

SFC James W. Moore, at the FOB-3, heard Maj Quamo request the evacuation aircraft. "We were supposed to have our standard mission complement: 3 slick Hueys and 2 Cobras, and they pulled that off. So we had to ask the Marines—purely in asking, because their mission does not entail crossing that mythical border. When Maj `Bulldog' Smith asked Col Lownds, Col Lownds said, 'I can't do that without permission from III MAF, even if I wanted to.' So, Maj Quamo, when he heard the answer: `there will be no air extraction with the Marine helicopters at Khe Sanh—' he lost his temper and he became very profane; he came up on the Marine command frequency and he called some people a series of very bad names. Now some Marine pilot—a very large guy—in those H-34s—heard this, and he went up and got in his H-34 ... and he took off in a full fog. "[275]

A 200-ft. overcast and ground fog completely obscured forward visibility. The H-34 (Maj Charles R. Upshaw, Capt Bradford Jealous, Sgt. J.E. Johnston, Cpl Jesus L. Mena, Cpl Santiago Villarreal, and Cpl C.D. Chester), and a UH-1E (of VMO-3: Maj Charles R. Upshaw, Capt James H. Knox) proceeded at extremely low altitude, in and out of clouds, dodging mountains and hill masses, while also fully exposed to possible enemy ground fire.[276]

Captain James Hargrove Knox recalls:

> The situation was: I was up there, and my Plane Commander was Horace Lowrey, 'Hoss Lowrey,' kind of a legendary, gutsy aviator, mustang officer. I'm his co-pilot, and we've got another plane as a Number Two

---

[267] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[268] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 11 July 1993.
[269] Ibid.
[270] FMFPAC 280335Z/Jan68, FMFPAC WESTPAC SITREP #1034; Trest, Khe Sanh, op. cit., pp. 18-19.
[271] Conversation with Donald Rumph, 07 October 1994.
[272] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 27 October 1993.
[273] Ibid.
[274] Ibid.
[275] Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995.
[276] Letter of Maj Ira Snell, Jr., Commander of FOB-1, in Air Medal file of Capt. James Hargrove Knox.

plane... Once the Army figured that all of us were instrument qualified, and also most of us were TACA–we could control fixed-wing airstrikes, then the Army's SOG people.. wanted to use us on all their missions because we were relatively flexible. We could do a lot of different stuff. So we're up there on one of these little set-to's, and things really could not have been much worse at Khe Sanh and the general area.

There was a patrol out on Co Roc. The Army SOG people had a team down there [and] one of their guys got very seriously wounded, and it was morning, and the weather was absolutely horrendous! And a decision was made to try to get the whole team out. So we attempted to launch with either two or four gunships and a number of transport helicopters, and didn't even make it to the end of the runway. We almost ran into one another. It was just an impossible weather sityuation to control that number of aircraft in. So we all got back down on the ground, fortunately without a midair collision, and there was a debriefing.

The Army people were screaming at us that we had to get this wounded guy out of there. We were swaying that we would do what we could And an extremely gutsy guy named Charlie Upshaw, a Major, said that he would take a H-34 and go out and try to hoist this guy out if we would send one gunship to at least give him a little cover. So 'Hoss' and I volunteered and jumped in the gunship and decided it was safer with two planes than with six or eight, and decided to just give it a go. We got out there, and Charlie led the flight. We just stayed behind him with the gun switches hot and headed south from Khe Sanh, and basically went over the treetops the entire way; we didn't dare go up in the goo because it was so damn mountainous up there we were afraid we would crash, and no way also to get down into the zone of the other end reliably. So Charlie just went over the treetops, and we followed him, up and down and in and out of fog. In at least one point, I saw a guy run out of a hut, stand there in front of the hut, and opened up on us with a submachinegun. All I did was give him 'the finger' as I went by. There was absolutely nothing we could do, OK? Because you didn't dare turn around and go after the guy 'cause you'd lose the H-34.

We got into the zone, a little depression, like a little valley in the top of Co Roc. Charlie found the team and we kept orbiting around low, ready to shoot. He lowered his hoist in that H-34, and he hovered motionlessw over this jungle cliff-type sityuation, had to have been there for 15 minutes, in this absolutely steady hover. They got the kid up in the plane... The wounded guy was shot in the stomach, and we made it back to Khe Sanh–and all changed our underwear!"[277]

SFC James W. Moore recalls the Marine command at KSCB was extremely angry with the Marine pilots for the Co Roc rescue. "But we told the Colonel—because we record everything that happens on the radio; we put it on tape: 'I don't know what you're going to do with the men, court-martial them or whatever, but we're going to put them in for a DFC for flying that kind of condition and making a rescue of a man under that circumstance.'"[278]

The evening before the extraction, Maj Quamo had an early version of a "smart bomb" strike from Navy aircraft, and the morning of the extract, he fired a "mad moment,"[279] and the force departed with a bang by helicopter to Lang Vei (to brief them) from where they were trucked back to FOB-3 to brief both the Marines and FOB-3. SFC Cavanaugh's truck broke down shortly after departing Lang Vei, however.

"It's a funny feeling. When you run missions over into Laos, you always think when your plane picks you up and brings you to South Vietnam that you're safe. Our truck breaks down. I set out security. My guys were out dancing in the road. They had the booty that we got out of the caves. I'm sitting on top of my truck, and about an hour later, another truck comes down there. It's almost dusk. The only thing that I can think of that might of saved my butt out there from that stupidity was that [277] Conversation with James Hargrove Knox, 04 October 1994. Knox reported that Maj. Horace Lowery had subsequently died. The wounded, evacuated man, SFC Robert Nelson Baker, subsequently died of wounds on 24 Feb 1968.

---

[278] Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995. MAJ Ira Snell, Jr., CO of FOB-1 wrote CO of HMM-362, MAG-36 [Letter dated 16 Feb 1968, Subj: Letter of Commendation, appended to in Air Medal file of Capt James Hargrove Knox]: "On 16 January 1968 an emergency medical evacuation of a seriously wounded team member was requested at about 1500 hours. Due to the adverse weather conditions at that time all aircraft were grounded. Fearlessly and with complete disregard for their own safety, Major Lowery, Major Upshaw and their crews decided to attempt the evacuation. Since there was no suitable landing zone near the wounded man, Major Upshaw was required to exert maximum power to remain stable while the wounded man was being extracted by winch. Without their support during extremely hazardous weather conditions the wounded man would have died. It is with the deepest gratitude that I extend my appreciation and the appreciation of all my men to Major Upshaw, Major Lowery and their crews for their heroic and outstanding effort on behalf of the team."

[279] Conversation with Harlan "Rip" Van Winkle, 23 October 1994. "Mad moment" refers to everyone firing their weapons simultaneously, corresponding to an artillery "TOT ("Timed on Target") when all guns in a battery (or several batteries) plus mortars, etc., fire simultaneously on a specific target.

the next night Khe Sanh was attacked."[280]

DENVER

Captain Lee Dunlap had grown up in Wyoming: "I was just a little, skinny kid born and raised in Wyoming."[281] He attended Jump School at Ft. Campbell in 1959, and then had been an instructor in Jungle Warfare School in Panama. He served three tours in Vietnam starting in 1962-1963 when, as a buck Sergeant, his mission (operating in III Corps) was "to go to the hamlets and villages wherever there was a Regional or Popular Force unit stationed. They were still equipped with French weapons, and we'd reequip them with American equipment, remain with them a couple of weeks to train them to do basic maintenance, clean rifles, fire mortars, do ambushes."[282]

Upon his return, he attended Officer Candidate School at Ft. Benning, and then returned to Ft. Bragg where he was Officer in Charge of the HALO Committee[283] and Skyhook Committee,[284] and then attended language school at Monterey for Thai for a year before arriving in Okinawa. Lee Dunlap notes: "All members drew TDY pay as part of their cover because they really weren't supposed to be there."[285] Although TDY pay was lucrative,[286] those drawing it later discovered they were ordered to Vietnam since their TDY tour didn't count as "in-country."

First Special Forces Group on Okinawa was assisting the effort in Vietnam along with 7th Special Forces Group at Ft. Bragg by sending TDY[287] units which were mainly border surveillance efforts to deny enemy infiltration.[288] The augmentation effort was known as SNAKEBITE.[289]

Capt. Lee Dunlap led Operational Detachment A-221 [ODA-221], 1st Special Forces Group, to Vietnam in July, 1967, reporting to Col Harold K. Rose in DaNang[290] who gave him orders to support the effort of FOB-1 at Phu Bai. The other team leaders, John Corley and John McClasky, were to report to FOB-2 at Kontum, and Joe Bain to FOB-3 at Khe Sanh.[291] Although FOB-1 had conducted operations into Laos from a Launch Site at Khe Sanh since the summer of 1966, Dunlap was delighted, as were his men, for "already the word was out that Khe Sanh was not the best place in the world to go if you really valued

---

[280] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993. The NVA obviously did not want to show their hand by prematurely triggering their attack.

[281] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988.

[282] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 22 August 1988.

[283] HALO=High Altitude Low Opening, or free-fall parachute jumping.

[284] The Sky Hook was originally tested by the U.S. Navy (for the CIA) in 1954 for long-range air-to-sea rescue work beyond the range of helicopters. It was tested in the arctic and tropics, and since 1961 has been operationally employed on scientific research projects in inaccessible areas of the world. [Task ID 141812XXX02 TRECOM Technical Report 64-17, Feb 1964, prepared by Robert Fulton Co., Newtown, Ct., for the U.S. Army Transportation Research Command, Ft. Eustis, Va.] The aircraft is equipped with a "yoke" on its nose. At an altitude of approximately 500 feet, it flies straight and level into a nylon line suspended below a balloon. Upon contact, the balloon tears loose and the line locks to the nose of the plane. The man, affixed to the end of the line into a harness, is lifted about 200 feet vertically before he travels 80 feet horizontally, thereby enabling retrieval in an area containing high obstacles. The Skyhook was tested by Marines of Second Force Reconnaissance Company, Camp Le Jeune, N C, in 1958. The CO of 2nd Force Recon Co., Capt Joe Z. Taylor (later Commandant of the Marine Corps and then Inspector General of the US State Dept.) had attended some CIA schools and R&D conferences in which this method was presented. When Pax (Patuxant) River Air Facility notified Taylor the system was ready for testing, he was away in the 1958 Lebanon Crisis and his equipment NCO, Levi Woods made the test. On the first pass of the recovery aircraft, the propeller severed the balloon and it, together with the lines, came tumbling down on Wood's head. The second attempt was satisfactory and Woods was later awarded the Navy and Marine Corps Medal for the accomplishment. [Stubbe, Ray W., Paddles, Parachutes, and Patrols, unpublished manuscript, pp. 164 and 413; interview of Mr. Joe Z. Taylor at US State Dept., 22 May 1975.

[285] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 08 April 1989.

[286] TDY pay includes pay for housing and subsistence, and is therefore not taxable income. It was approximately $50.00/mo.

[287] TDY=Temporary Additional Duty.

[288] Rather than the true mission of a Special Forces "A" Team in which the 12 men develop an indigenous division-sized unit of 10,000 people. [Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988].

[289] Conversation with Harlan Van Winkle, 23 Oct 1994. Conversation with Lee Dunlap,. 08 April 1989.

[290] "We arrived in DaNang where the headquarters for the effort to interdict the border or enhance the border interdiction through this intelligence collection effort that was being made in Laos was located. It was clandestine and of course it was TOP SECRET. We were told, 'If you get caught, you're on your own. We're going to deny your presence.' A lot of times we went 'sterile' which is, we did not have any U.S. weapons; it was all foreign weapons and indigenous clothing.
The teams were called SPIKE teams, normally made up of three Americans and nine indigenous, sometimes three Americans and six indigenous." [Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988].

[291] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 08 April 1989.

your life. I went back and briefed the team we were going to Phu Bai and everyone went, 'O whew! Thank the Lord!'."[292]

About two hours later, Col Rose sent for Capt Dunlap.

"On second thought–and after discussing this with Capt. Bain, I've decided to send you're a-team to Khe Sanh and Capt. Bain's team to Phu Bai."

"Well, Sir, would you explain to me the reasoning behind that?"

"Well," said the Colonel, "Captain Bain has a pretty good argument. He just graduated from the Defense Language institute in Chinese and the majority of the recon team and Hatchett force at Phu Bai are Cholon Chinese [They were not Nung]. And so we feel because of his language ability, he'd be much more–"

"Sir, you know that's a bunch of crap! That's just a bunch of bull. He's just trying–this is not fair."

"Well, I've made the decision."[293]

Dunlap returned to his team who probably now felt, "This is some Captain we got as a team leader!"

Operational Detachment A-221 was issued weapons–but no ammo–and departed for Khe Sanh to become one of the three basic components of FOB-3, (the other being the nucleus of MACSOG, CCN, soldiers, and secondly, George Quamo's Special projects group). In addition to Capt Lee Dunlap and 1/Lt Harlan VanWinkle (known as "Rip"), other members of DENVER (oda-221) included James Fusco[294] (light weapons man), Craig Lansing, Donald Rumph, and John Frescura.[295]

The nucleus group included Charles Berg who had been medevaced on 14 Feb 1967, and four months later, the FOB-3 Sergeant-Major, Richard Pegram, saw him in DaNang and said, "Come on up with me to 'Camp Yuk!'"[296] Camp Yuk referred to Khe Sanh). SOG was one of those clandestine units that reminds one of the "Mission Impossible" TV series where "the Secretary will disavow any knowledge of you." They were told, "If you get caught, you're on your own. We're going to deny your presence."[297]

Arrival at Khe Sanh would have made anyone feel unwelcome. The XO of Det A-221, Harlan "Rip" Van Winkle, recalls: "We hadn't even spent the night in DaNang when we flew in from Okinawa. We flew into Phu Bai on a Caribou and spent the night there. The weather was so bad, we couldn't get up to Khe Sanh until late the next afternoon. A big Marine helicopter brought us there about three o'clock, 3:30, in the afternoon. There wasn't anybody there at first to meet us. We called up the old French Fort, and Sergeant First Class Walt Hetzler, who had been my Squad Leader back when I was in the 503rd Airborne Combat Team in Okinawa back in 1962, showed up with a sawed-off M2 Carbine and two 20-round magazines taped back to back in an old, beat-up deuce-and-a-half."[298]

"You got any ammo?" asked Rip.[299]

"Nah, we don't need no ammo," replied Hetzler.

Thoughts raced through Rip's head like bullets from a sprung ambush he anticipated: five of the new team members had previously served in Vietnam and the other seven Americans had read enough After Action Reports to make them true believers of evils lurking in old French plantations. The monsoon season was pouring its misery and it was four days before the national elections (when one would expect enemy activity, attempting to disrupt elections). The area surrounding Khe Sanh was by no means pacified. And there were no damn bullets! We had three people who had been in country before: Lee Dunlap, Chuck Treddenick, and James Fusco; nobody else had been there. It makes no difference how much training you've got, the first time you're in enemy territory and you haven't got any ammo, the 'pucker factor' goes up!"

"We loaded all of our gear, mounted the truck, and departed for the old French Fort. At about the half way point of a road that had been totally washed out and never designed for much more than wagons and bicycles, the left front wheel slid off on a mud hole that probably could have concealed a submarine. No amount of work on our part could extract us from our dilemma. The radio that Hetzler had with him was wet and refused to cooperate. We didn't have batteries for ours as that was another item that would be issued upon our arrival. Hetzler decides he will have to walk the remaining distance to get [294] Harve Saal recalls Master Sergeant Fusco: "He was the guy who used to sit around and pull the pins on a hand grenade--the safety pin, and let the spoon fly and untwist the top before it exploded. You'd be walking and you'd see people diving out of this tent, you knew exactly what it was: Fusco was doing a hand-grenade again! And you'd hear 'pop,' and that was it. He was so strong in his hands. He was taking off the tops of hand grenades that were put on by wrenches. His nick name was "Fuzzy." [Conversation with Harve Saal, 23 June 1993].

---

[292] Ibid.

[293] Ibid.

[295] Harlan E. Van Winkle, email to Dennis Tredinnick, 10 July 2005 (included in letter from Dennis Tredinnick, 23 Oct 2006).

[296] Conversation with Charles Berg, 18 April 1994.

[297] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988.

[298] Conversation with Harlan Van Winkle, 22 October 1994; Van Winkle, "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Van Winkle, postmarked 31 Dec 1996.

[299] This incident was related in conversation with Harlan Van Winkle, 23 October 1994.

help. Now we have a choice. We can either stay with the truck and all of our equipment or we can load up what we can carry on our backs and accompany Hetzler and the only weapon that would shoot. Some choice! Lee decided that security of our equipment was more important, so ten of us stayed with the truck and two accompanied Hetzler on the hike to the old French fort. They were met on the way by the 'search party' in another truck. We managed to get out of the ditch a few minutes after total darkness set in. Without doubt, that two hour stretch was the most terrifying time I spent throughout two tours in Vietnam. Absolutely nothing happened, but the lesson it instilled in me never left and never again was I caught without enough ammunition to hold off a battalion by myself."[300]

Eventually, the truck started up and all drove to the Old French Fort which also was unwelcoming. "The main building–the kitchen/operations room was best, and the rooms for Capt. Wayne Snow and Lt Cripes and Tony Di Bello were decent, but as for the rest–we ended up building hooches outside."[301]

They were soon briefed by Skip Minnicks, Bob Cavanaugh, Capt Wayne Snow, and Tony Di Bello. "It was just solid 'red' around us.[302] Well, I think we put the Marines in 'blue,' but other than that, I think there were five or six NVA Divisions that were damn near shouting distance, identified. That had a tendency to get your attention in a hurry."

DENVER (or ODA-221) began recruiting and training Bru, mainly from the village just to the north of Khe Sanh Village and south of Hill 471 called "Breh." "We went over there and met the village chief and all the village elders and got invited to a big party. Shortly thereafter, a couple people came in that evidently we felt pretty good about. Next thing you knew, we had a pretty good recruiting program going on."[303].

Not all Bru were non-Communist.[304] Rip Van Winkle feels: "We really thought that we were probably getting bout one [Communist] out of four [recruits]. Certainly they weren't hard-core Communist, but they leaned that way. We ended up with what we thought was a pretty good nucleus. We never got as large a unit as we were supposed to get, however. The mission was to develop a kind of 'haymaker' force, a battalion of 250 Bru broken down into companies led by American NCOs. They would exploit targets detected by a Spike Team or a small 'hornet' team, such as a motor park.."[305]

Marine recon teams occasionally stopped by the SOG unit at the Old French Fort. "Sir, if we find ourselves in a hum, can we count on you?" The very seasoned soldiers looked at the 19 year-old recon team members: "You got that, partner. By the way, it looks like you're a little over-loaded. Want to leave a little bit of that crap here? We got a four-deuce mortar here, a couple of helicopters, and here's our radio frequency. If you get in trouble let us know."[306]

The SOG team continued to improve their Old French Fort positions, and Bru and American soldiers filled sand bags. One morning after Capt. Dunlap awoke, he lifted his tent flap "..and there, squatting down on their haunches, were about a hundred Bru Montagnard wives!" "Hey, what's this?" he said. One of the Bru replied, "They here fill sandbag." Dunlap replied, "OK, we can pay them." "So every morning they'd show up and I'd put them to work and at the end of the day, they'd show up at the supply tent, and for filling sandbags all day they got paid a canteen cup and a half of rice, and I was all set. You know we got a lot of money. I had a footlocker full of money, for intelligence or whatever, to use. I didn't have to go through a ton of paperwork. I wanted to pay these ladies some hard cash. 'O, no! You gonna screw up this whole economy!' Got all kind of flak from 'downtown.' 'Well, how about giving them three cups [of rice]?' 'No, give them a cup and a half.' They'd laugh. They didn't understand me. They giggled, and gave me bracelets, and every day somebody would bring me something, a piece of fruit or something."[307]

Harve Saal, Team Leader of Recon team BEAR at FOB-3, notes that indigenous were paid either in money or rice. "Bru

---

[300] Harlan E. Van Winkle, "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Van Winkle postmarked 31 Dec 1996.
[301] Ibid.
[302] Red on tactical maps indicates enemy positions, while blue indicates friendly positions.
[303] Conversation with Harlan Van Winkle, 23 October 1994.
[304] A considerable number of Bru, in fact, were Communist and had fled to the hills in 1962 when the Strategic Hamlet Program resettled most of the Bru near Route 9 and Khe Sanh Village to provide them with security. Following the Siege battle of 1968, the Bru were resettled at a refugee camp at Mai Loc just south of Cam Lo, and a considerable number of the Bru refugees were "now-former" Communists that had previously fled to the hills and now fled to safety. Thus, the population census of the Bru at Khe Sanh before the siege minus the census number of the Bru at the refugee village does not equate to the number of Bru KIA at Khe Sanh. The KIA figure is even larger since the census of Bru at Mai Loc included many Bru which were not at Khe Sanh before the Siege.
[305] Conversation with Harlan Van Winkle, 23 October 1994. A "hornet" team was a platoon of 35-40; a "Hatchett" force was company-size, 80 up to a whole battalion of 250. Spike teams were permanent party.
[306] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 10 September 1988. I recall a conversation with a soldier at the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei who mentioned it was a good idea to carry a belt with nothing but a knife on it. "If you have to run, shed everything except the belt with the knife so you can move faster and maneuver better," he said.
[307] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988.

chose rice. Interpreters wanted money and rice. An interpreter was paid $400.00 a month."[308] Although they liked it, indigenous troops were never given American food: it was too rich for them and they got sick.[309]

While at the Old French Fort position, hunting missions from helicopters sometimes brought food for the Bru. "The Bru liked their meat on the hoof, freshly killed. You couldn't interest them in a case of T-bone. They wanted that blood! So we hunted pigs and deer and great big, monitor-type lizards along the banks of that river. We killed some deer up there, the biggest I've seen in my life. We killed a doe that weighed 250 pounds."[310] The new FOB-3 camp included a pig pen for fresh meat. "One time, during the Siege, they brought in a cow. They couldn't land with it, so they cut it loose from the helicopter and it came slamming into the camp. So we had a cow free-fall into our camp."[311]

In November, 1967, shortly after the training phase began,

> ..we decided it was time to see how our unit could perform as a platoon-sized organization ... We selected our area of operation with great care to assure that a contact of major consequence would not take place. To assist us we had our own helicopter organization which consisted of four UH1H "slicks" and two UH1C "Gunships. ... All went well on the insertion and after assuring all were present and prepared, we moved off the LZ. ... We had been moving for perhaps a half-hour when all hell broke loose on the next ridge line north of us. SGT Craig Lansing had our radio and was trying to find out the nature of the 'enemy' contact. ... Craig was unable to get a response from either of the pilots and handed the receiver to me. I was just in time to hear the transmission, 'There he goes! Shoot him! Shoot him! Get him with the rockets!' The two gunships had just brought down an elephant! I was more than a little unhappy! Our pilots had expended nearly an entire basic load of ammunition. ... I felt that our operation had been compromised and called for an extraction. We arrived back at the FOB shortly after noon.[312]

SP5 John Frescura, the team's demolitions expert, noted that it was a waste of food which was very important to the Bru soldiers. "He stated that it would endear us even more to the Bru if we could help them recover such items as the hair from the tail end trunk, the tongue and I don't remember what all. John said it might be nice to have an elephant footstool with which to grace his 'living quarters.' Craig [Lansing] said that an elephant hide wallet would be a memento that would last a lifetime. A short time later, SGT Don Rumph, one of our team medics, came to me with A Den, Lao, and Lua, the three most influential leaders of my Bru soldiers [and] all agreed that it would be a marvelous gesture to recover the important parts of the elephant that could later be used in some type of ceremony."[313]

They departed for the elephant, armed with personal weapons, machetes, a very dull ax, two hand saws, and 120' of climbing rope. and recovered the parts of the elephant.

> The FOB commander had never been overly impressed with the somewhat over exuberance of the younger members of our detachment. He had been unaware of our 'mission' but did witness our homecoming in all of its swinging glory. To say that he was incensed would be a gross understatement of the facts. Only the intervention of our team leader, CPT Lee Dunlap, saved us from the wild vindictive forms of punishment being vocalized by the FOB commander. [And concerning any NVA that might have witnessed the expedition to retrieve the elephant parts] they must have been laughing so hard they didn't have the heart to bother with us. There is probably some ex-NVA soldier telling his grandchildren what he saw that day.[314]

The Old French Fort position just east of Khe Sanh village didn't afford room for training and was too "public" with security issues becoming more evident. The decision was made to move to the Marine base.[315]

> When Snow's team was getting ready to go we said, 'Hey, this is getting too tenuous up here'. We told the folks at DaNang we ought to make provisions to build a pretty decadent FOB and we ought to do it down on the Marine base. We were really exposed up there [at the French Fort] and if they had got artillery on that hilltop like they did later on, nobody could have survived that.

---

[308] Conversation with Harve Saal, 30 July 1989.
[309] Ibid.
[310] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 10 September 1988. The "deer" was probably a kouprey.
[311] Conversation with Harve Saal, 30 July 1989.
[312] Harlan E. Van Winkle, "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Van Winkle postmarked 31 Dec 1996.
[313] Ibid.
[314] Ibid.
[315] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 05 May 1990, and Lee Dunlap, 08 August 1989, who stated: "Wayne Snow's detachment and my detachment were at the Olf French Fort, which some people called Fort Dix. We moved out of there when it got too hot, and that's why we went down to the Marine base and built there. My A Detachment built that along with some engineers from DaNang and the Seabees. We got in all the wire, all the defensive positions, and then the Seabees came in. Wayne Snow's team had departed by that time."

So we moved down to the Marine base. We were recruiting Bru and training at the same time. We were getting replacements from the main pipeline. We did use the FOB-1 launch site which was over next to the Marine command bunker. We still had to train and we built and trained and went on little local operations for training.

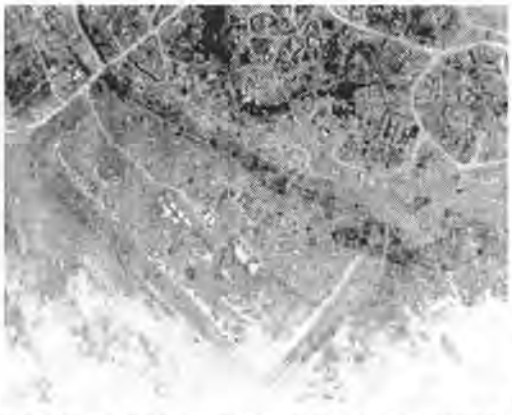
Major Campbell was the commander of the FOB. He was my boss. A Major White was there for awhile as XO and then later went down and took over FOB-4.

My mission, in addition to commanding the team there, was to develop what we might call a 'HAYMAKER' force, a battalion of 250 Bru broken down into companies led by my NCOs, responsible to react to any of the SPIKE team or small unit HORNET team that might go in to exploit something that the SPIKE team found. We had an incremental force that responded to certain contingencies.[316]

FOB-3

Before FOB-3 became operational on 01 November 1967, a detail of 65 Navy Seabees of Detail JULIETT, US Naval Construction Battalion TEN (NMCB-10) had arrived on 11 October from Gia Le to construct their base. That this was to be a major installation is reflected in the description of their work order: 54 underground bunkers, 16' x 36', eight standard 16' x 32' tin-roofed huts; six underground bunkers, 32' x 36'; 10 standard burn-out heads (4-hole); one Strad building, wood 40' x 100'; 3 lounges, wood frame 20' x 60'; one wood frame vehicle repair 20' x 40'; 3 standard 250-man mess-halls; 3 standard 400-man showers, 16' x 32'; one wood frame dispensary, 20' x 72'; one wood water tower; 3 electrical and water distribution systems, and 16 helo pads with revetments and matting. All material is to be provided by the Special Forces. Of course, the proposed cost of $370,000. is only material and does not include labor! Phase I ended 28 Dec 1967 when 11% of the project had been completed.[317]

FOR-3 UNDER CONSTRUCTION [Photos from Jerry Cfrews]



FOB-3 AREA [USAF aerial photo, 28 January 1968]

Major Lucius Campbell, CO of FOB-3, ensured the construction effort proceeded despite the monsoon rains of Biblical proportions from the days of Noah. "If it hadn't been for Campbell, that place probably wouldn't of got built. He was dead on anybody who took one piece of material to build a creature-comfort thing. He understood that if we're going to get this place built, we need all these materials; we didn't need guys building their own personal hooches. The other thing he was death on–he said: we only have so many trucks up here, and if I find you guys didn't pull maintenance on those trucks! Campbell was a super-duper manager."[318] The troops regarded Major Campbell as "..a country boy. We called him 'country.' He chewed and he was slow-going. He was slow talking. He didn't seem to get things done, but he DID get things done!"[319]

When the FOB-3 camp was occupied adjacent KSCB, that portion of the KSCB perimeter shared with FOB-3 did not disappear. Much to the vexation of American soldiers and Marines inside FOB-3, who daily saw Marine bunker positions, machineguns, and even tanks pointed into the FOB-3 camp, this common, shared portion of both perimeters reminded one of

[316] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988.
[317] CO, US Naval Mobile Construction Battalion TEN letter NMCB10/30:ajg, 5213/1, of 15 July 1968, Subj: End of Deployment Completion Report; forwarding of, pp. 3 and F-IV-57. [Khe Sanh microfilm archives pp. 28468-28476].
[318] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 02 Aug 1990.
[319] Conversation with Harve Saal, 23 June 1990.

Frost's poem, "Something there is that doesn't like a wall."[320] Originally, Marines even had claymore mines pointed into FOB-3, but the FOB-3 Sergeant-Major, Richard E. Pegram, told the Marines, "This is not acceptable! We don't care what you say that you're concerned about, claymore mines is not acceptable." They were removed.[321]

From the Marine's understanding, the memory of what had happened not only at Lang Vei on 4 May 1967 (when NVA, posing as PF recruits, had killed perimeter guards and led sapper squads inside who then killed both the CO and XO as well as wreaking general havoc), but countless other experiences of Special Forces units where indigenous troops had so many turn-coats and spies among them that turned on Americans in the middle of a battle, dictated extreme caution, if not a barbed wire barrier!

Lt Thomas Simcox, S3 of FOB-3, "talked to Col Lownds about it a couple of times and after he explained, I could understand their reasoning. To be really honest, I don't think we really knew what we had either."[322]

The American soldiers of FOB-3 and the Marines of CAC OSCAR (who had moved into the FOB-3 camp after the Siege began since they had indigenous soldiers and could therefore not be let on the KSCB itself[323] and also because there wasn't sufficient turf to house them and since FOB-3 needed bodies to man the trench positions) this was folly, nonsense, rejection and abandonment of those loyal to us. They reasoned that these indigenous troops have fought valiantly by our side, and in numerous instances, saved our butts, sometimes at the loss of their own. How does this square with "winning hearts and minds of local people, and aren't we here to protect them?" But the barrier remained, and while it may have been easier–and certainly less dangerous because of incoming–to have had an opening to the fence to permit water trucks from FOB-3 to get water at the water-point on KSCB instead of moving the extra half mile around the perimeter, the fence remained–with no openings.

Gradually, the recon teams filled. Harve Saal, the Team Leader of Recon Team BEAR, recalls his Point Man, MAT, was captured while working for the VC.

> He was working out of Laos and we got him over there, brought him back as a prisoner. We interrogated him and found out that he had never seen an American. He was very curious. We played volleyball with him. We left him out of confinement, but he didn't run. He had no idea that there were other people in the world other than the VC. We won him over to our side. I used him as a Point Man. He was devastating! He could see in the dark! One night we were out. It was pitch black and it was so dark we were holding on to each other's packs. That's how we moved. We held on to the guy's pack in front of us. All of a sudden you felt these packs dropping in front of you. I was the third guy back. (The Team Leader was always the third guy back). I went down and as we were going down the machinegun fired. It was him [Mat] in front. he told me then that there was VC. They called all the bad guys VC. We went up and it was a trench line, and he had shot a NVA who was obviously waiting for us. He shot him in the head! And the guy was in a foxhole! I asked him the next day, 'Did you see the guy or did you smell the guy or did you hear the guy?' He said, 'Yes.' That's all he said was 'Yes'."[324]

Another indigenous man on Saal's team was ACAT, the M-79 man. "He didn't know how to aim it, so he fired it from the hip. His accuracy was ten times better than an American's using the sights. It was unbelievable. There was a jeep at the Old French Fort that was totally destroyed. We walked back about 150 meters and he fired and hit the engine. he did nothing but lay that thing on his hip. I figured it was a mistake and told him to do it again. He hit that engine block every time. I started winning five bucks from the Americans. Another [team member] was LAT. Lat had been at Dien Bien Phu and escaped. LA

---

[320] Frost, Robert, Collected Poems, Prose, and Plays, New York: The Library of America, 1995, p. 39.

[321] Conversation with Russ Mann and Charles Berg, 08 July 1994.

[322] Conversation with Thomas Simcox, 02 November 1994. Simcox arrived at FOB-3 for duty on 18 January 1968. [Conversation with Thomas Simcox, 02 November 1994].

[323] James W. Moore, Operations Sergeant of FOB-3 who arrived at FOB-3 in September, 1967, [Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995] recalls: "They came up to the wire. They came back intact! A Lance Corporal that was in charge of one of those teams kept his team together, organized, and withdrew as a tactical combat unit. When he got up there, Colonel Lownds told him, 'Disarm your Bru and bring the marines inside the wire and send the Bru overland to Ca Lu, down Highway 9.' And the Corporal lost his temper and said, 'The hell with you, sir; I ain't doing that shit!' So Bulldog Smith [then CO of FOB-3] told him, 'Bring your people inside our wire.' I was out at the gate when that happened. Major Quamo, Major Smith, and I had a little three-way conversation there. Hey, look, these guys got 98 Bru. We got two companies of Bru and we've got a large perimeter to defend. We don't know their Bru. We know we've got some NVA infiltrators in our Bru. He's probably got some NVA infiltrators that he don't know about in his Bru. So we brought those in and let them keep their weapons, and put them at two different places on our perimeter wire." [Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995].

[324] Conversation with Harve Saal, 30 July 1989.

HOI was the tail gunner. He once offered Saal "two water buffalo for my [Saal's] daughter who right now lives in West Allis [Wisconsin]. he was mad when I wouldn't take them! He knew that she lived more than a village away [laughs]. they had no comprehension that there was an ocean!"[325]

Just before Christmas, 1967, the soldiers at the new FOB-3 had a Christmas card made with a photo of several "scruffy-looking guys from FOB3. It was sent to all of the Congressmen. It was sent to every Governor. It was sent to President Johnson. It said PEACE ON EARTH and then, in small letters in parenthesis underneath, AND WE AIM TO KEEP IT THAT WAY. It was taken of guys who were standing in front of a fallen tree. We got a letter back from [President] Johnson. The letter ended up basically saying: YOUR NAMES WILL BE REMEMBERED IN BLOOD, NOT IN MEDALS. It was a beautiful letter. We put it on the bulletin board outside. And January 21st, it was gone. I mean, it was wiped out. It got hit. It took shrapnel, and of course, nobody really went out of their way to get it. If I'd of used my head, I'd of gone and gotten what was left of it."[326]

Although still attempting to fill the teams and train them, commanders and their staffs in DaNang needed information on the rapidly evolving enemy encroachment and encirclement of Khe Sanh. Operational requirements were not lessened.

The first mission of the new FOB-3 met with disaster, not because of unqualified or untrained men, but simply due to the overwhelming presence of NVA in the target area.

> On the 5th of January [1968] we were supposed to go in for a wire-tap [mission]. We got briefed and got loaded on the helicopters and were going off. We were riding in American Hueys and as we were on our way in, at least 15 minutes or maybe even half an hour out of the landing zone of the area we were going to infiltrate, all of a sudden there was a lot of conversation [in the aircraft]. I couldn't figure exactly what was going on. People were talking and shouting at each other–big eyed. Then the Crew Chief came in and said, 'Mission's aborted; we're going back.' And I said, 'Why?' And he said, 'They shot down the other chopper.' We were at 3,000, 3,500 feet above ground level, and they apparently shot him with a 37mm or 57mm anti-aircraft gun, and the whole helicopter went down. It was spinning down. [The NVA] shot the tail rotor off. It hit the ground and exploded. There was no fire on the way down, and nobody that I talked to saw any bodies fall out, although spinning end around end there should have been one or two bodies come out of the thing. It hit the ground and just exploded in a fire ball.[327]

PATROLS TO KHE SANH VILLAGE

The District Headquarters of Huong Hoa District, led by Captain Nhi, and MACV Advisory Team #4, led by Captain Bruce B.G. Clarke, together with the CAC OSCAR headquarters and two platoons of that unit, abandoned their position in the village the afternoon of 22 January following a ferocious battle leaving some 200-300 NVA KIA an enormous amount of weapons on their wires.

Colonel Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, the Chief of SOG Op35 (Ground Studies Division) in DaNang in charge of the four FOBs in I Corps, learned of the weapons and was determined that the NVA would not regain possession of them to use against us.

The bearing, voice, and actions of Colonel Baldwin might easily remind one of General Patton of World War II[328] audacious, bold, and very direct. He had been in Vietnam two-and-a-half years, attended Army Staff College as a Captain in 1960 from where he worked in the Pentagon as a junior member of the Army Chief of Staff office. Promoted to Major, he volunteered to go to Vietnam in 1962 and served as an advisor in a Vietnamese Ranger unit and then a Vietnamese Airborne unit until he was shot and received his seventh Purple Heart (he had three from Korea). He then started to work for the Agency.[329] Now we was at FOB-3 at Khe Sanh. "I happened to be there at the time, so I made the decision to go in there [in Khe Sanh ville]. [General] Singlaub and people down at Saigon were at my neck telling me I should get out of there, and I quoted a thing from the Manual: A Commanding Officer should be where he can best influence actions of his command."[330] "I called up Lownds and said, 'make it a "no Fire Zone".' I was going to go on the ground, but they said, 'Sir, we need you in the air. Can you fly as Gunner?' I said, 'Asshole, let me tell you, I qualified as Gunner in 1964'."[331] And off he went into the wild blue yonder.

Lt Thomas Simcox, an OCS classmate of George Quamo,[332] led SFC Bruce R. Pross' team as the ground element into Khe

---

[325] Ibid.
[326] Conversation with Harve Saal, 25 January 1992.
[327] Conversation with William S. Wood, 18 November 1997. A full account of this incident is found in Stubbe, Ray W., Battalion of Kings, 2d ed., 2008, pp. 107-108.
[328] Conversation with Grenville Sutcliffe, 06 April 1990.
[329] conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 25 Sep 1989.
[330] Conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 14 Jan 1990.
[331] Conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 31 May 1992.
[332] Conversation with Thomas Simcox, 06 Aug 1991.

Sanh village.[333] "I took the raiding party back into there to destroy the rice and the ammo dump [the NVA weapons]. We loaded all those on the helicopters and brought them back because we only took a limited amount of C-4 with us. We really didn't get the detonation we wanted in the ammo bunker. We ended up bringing a lot of the weapons back. I was in charge. I took the raiding party in. [Captain Bruce B.G.] Clarke went with me because he knew the area. he knew exactly where everything was. I took about 10 or 11 Americans. Colonel Baldwin didn't go on the ground but stayed in the helicopter above us, flying air cover over us. There were dead all over the place! There was no combat activity. In fact, we received no resistance at all. But there was dead lying all around there. [Clarke] concentrated on going back into their office and into their safe, and I think he got most of the documents he felt was necessary. I think we were on the ground probably only about an hour, maybe not that long. They brought one chopper in, picked up part of us, and I had to stay. We had already set the charges and time fuses, and so consequently we had to sit there until the charge went off because they didn't want to bring the chopper back in because they were afraid the chopper would get too close. So we had to wait until the ammo dump blew up before they would bring the chopper in to pick me up and the last group. I thought we were going to have to walk out. We just held tight. The ammo dump went off, and they brought the chopper in and picked the rest of us up."[334] Captain Bruce B.G. Clarke accompanied them.[335] Colonel Daniel Lord Baldwin, II[336], in a helicopter overhead, notes: "We caught them with their pants down, continually hosed down the area, and brought in some fire all around the area, and we were in and out of there in about an hour. We brought back hundreds of weapons."[337] "We captured over 150 weapons that we had collected that morning off of the wire and the bodies laying around the wire, and we had then stacked. Plus, we had our own ammunition and stuff. So what we did was: we went back in, rigged everything to blow and carried all the weapons out, all the NVA weapons. That was the first time that a RPG-7 had been seen in country. There were NVA coming in the front gate as we were lifting off from the helipad in the back."[338] The captured NVA weapons were loaded aboard helicopters because they had not brought enough C-4 to destroy them in place. GySgt Max Friedlander[339] upon seeing the vast amount of captured weapons was in awe: "They had a whole row of captured weapons out and I remember how awe-struck I was by those weapons that I saw–how modern. I couldn't believe that they had that kind of weapons, some pretty potent stuff in there."[340]

CAPTURED NVA WEAPONS FROM KHE SANH VILLAGE PATROL [Jerry Crews]

In addition to the vast quantity of weapons captured, the patrol also found a ChiCom radio that "was a self-contained

---

[333] This patrol went to Khe Sanh village the day the Americans abandoned the District Headquarters, 22 January 1968. [Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 15 July 1993].

[334] Ibid.

[335] Conversation with Bruce B.G. Clarke, 7 August 1994.

[336] COL Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, commanded all the FOBs in I Corps. He had commanded five companies, two battalions, a Group, and a Brigade He received eight Purple Hearets and performed seven combat jumps. He was in Vietnam two and a half years. Went to Staff College as a Captain in 1960, and upon graduation in 1961, went to the Pntagon as a junior member of the Army Chief of Staff. He made Major and volunteered to go to Vietnam in 1962 where he served as an advisor to a Vietnamese Ranger battalion about three months and then with the Vietnamese airborne. He received three Purple Hearts while in Korea, went to work for the Agency, and then reported to SOG headquarters, OP-35, in Saigon. [Conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 25 September 1989].

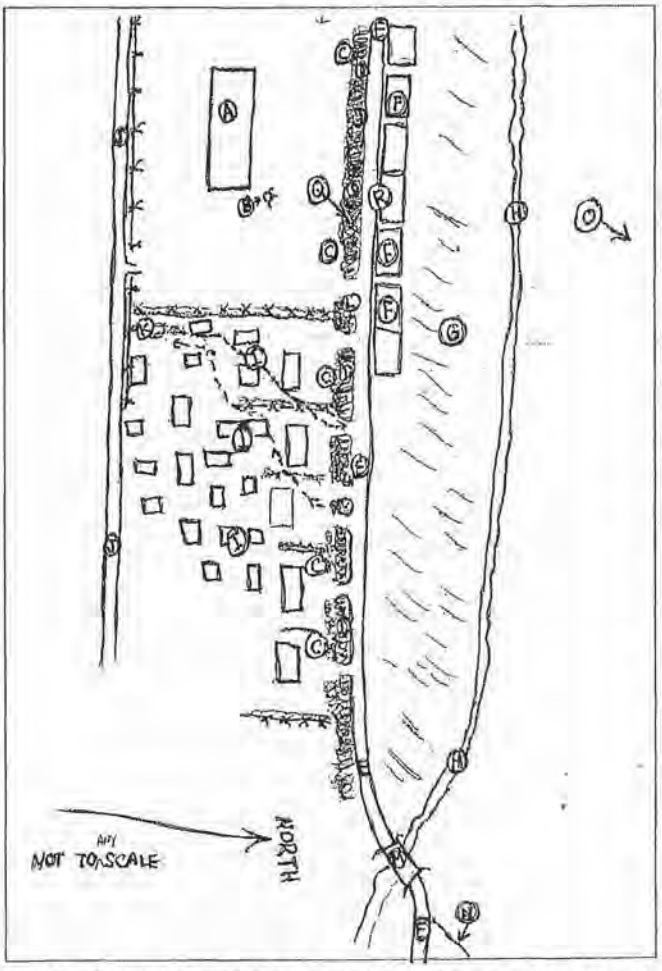
[337] Conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 14 January 1990.

[338] Conversation with Bruce B.G. Clarke, 02 August 1994.

[339] 17th ITT (Interrogator Translator Team) on KSCB.

[340] Conversation with Max Friedlander, 06 March 1990.

radio station. It was like a drafting desk, about four to five feet high, like a secretary's desk. It opened up and there was a board that came down like a drafting desk. it had drawers and doors in it, and a stool was attached underneath it, and it rolled out. The whole thing was on wheels. That's when the code book was captured; it was left in that station, in that piece of equipment. And they brought that out. It was Chinese. The indications we had was they were moving forward with it, and they used wire, field wire. As they moved forward, this guy would drag the wire with him. This is what the North Vietnamese did in all their assaults; they used landline communications. That's all they used. But they abandoned that particular station in such a hurry that they left the wire intact, but they took the hand telephone. It was still stretched out to the position where the hand telephone was, and it was the gray wire."[341]



PATROL TO KHE SANH VILLE 26 JAN 1968 [drawn by Wm Wood]

KHE SANH VILLAGE ACTION [Diagram by William Wood]

A District HQ. Large, hip-roofed stucco or cement bldg. one and one-half stories with all fire coming from ground-floor windows which were maybe one foot from ground. Surrounded by clear yard, 75-100 meters wide on all sides. A few tall trees, no brush or low cover.

B Bunker, 10-15 meters from corner of bldg.

C Wire 3 or 4 strand cattle fence about 3-4 ft. tall with hedge growing in it. Cut by driveways.

D Shallow ditch, 1-1/2 to 2 ft. deep, cut by driveways running over culverts maybe 1 ft. in diameter.

E Route 9

F Row of buildings. All shops closed, all people gone.

G Steep slope

H Small stream, maybe 3-4 ft. wide

I Bldgs, flimsy

J Lane or alley behind HQ

K Where my Spike Team moved to initially put flanking fire (routes to and from indicated)

L After being recalled so gunships could fire, I took psn here with Crone standing above me. Most of Bru spread down the ditch to my rear,.

M Railless cement bridge; a good chopper pad for medevacs

N Path to access road to KSCB

O Hill 471 and pimple

P Bunker 500-600 meters to westfrom which fire was taken

Q Approx. location of those stuck west of the driveway

R Appros;. psn of Rip and party behind 4x4 posts

Once the Siege battle was triggered and General Tompkins[342] laid the restriction that no Marines could venture outside the wire other than local wire-checks,[343] Colonel Lownds asked FOB-3, in effect, "Do you think that some of your folks would [341] Conversation with Harve Saal, 16 February 1991.

[342] Major General Rathvon McClure Tompkins, Commanding General, Third Marine Division.

[343] Major General Tompkins had planned a "set piece" battle. "..my whole plan for a defense of Khe Sanh was to make the enemy come to us. Now General Westmoreland has been criticized .. and other people have been criticized in Saigon for tying the marines at Khe Sanh to their perimeter. It wasn't Westmoreland; it was me. I told them 500 meters was the absolute max in any position, 500 meters, no more." [Interview of MajGen Rathvon McClure Tompkins, 13 April 1973, HQMC, Historical Division, transcript, p. 3. General Tompkins feared that patrols would become sucked into ambushes. [Ibid.] Furthermore, there was no need to send patrols: our intelligence was such that we knew where enemy forces were and there was no need to risk the piecemeal ambush of small, exposed Marine patrols. [HQMC, HistDiv (Oral History), Memorandum for the Record HDH/JS/srp, 15 Sep 1976, Subj: Conversation with Major General Rathvon McC Tmpkins, USMC (ret), 07 Sep 1976]. Tompkins testified before a Senate committee: "I planned.. a set-piece type of defense that would require the enemy to come to us." [Comments of Gen Tompkins in U.S. Senate, Committee on Armed Services, Electronic Battlefield Subcommittee on the Preparedness Investigating Subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services, Investigation into Electronic Battlefield Program. Hearings, 91st Congress, 2nd Session, Nov. 18, 19, and 24, 1970, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, p.

be willing to do some of the local patrolling?" "It was not a tasking, simply a suggestion–for everyone's benefit, including FOB-3! The response was, 'I don't see why not. Right now we're in a pickle and we'd like to see what's out there too!'"[344]

As a result, on 26 January, Major Lucius Campbell, the FOB-3 Commander, at the request of Col Lownds, tasked Hatchet Force (HF) DENVER to dispatch a patrol to determine the status of Khe Sanh ville, whether it were occupied by NVA forces.

One of the Marines from Combined Action Company (CAC) OSCAR, Lacey Lahren, heard that SFC Fusco (nicknamed "Fuzzy") was going on a patrol to Khe Sanh village to gather intelligence. "Fuzzy was a burly individual, over 30 years old, and to my juvenile eye he looked like he had ridden with Genghis Kahn and had taught the old gook some bad habits. Fuzzy looked like the Next Great Adventure. I asked him if I could go along."[345]

Lahren got up the next morning at 0600.

Captain "Rip" Van Winkle led the patrol (which consisted of six other Americans and 24 Bru) through the east gate of KSCB, through the garbage dump, and proceeded southeast along the ridge line through Poilane's coffee plantation to Route 9. At that point, the patrol followed the "highway" into Khe Sanh ville,[346] entering it from the east on the south side of Route 9, and slowly proceeded to a point just east of the District Headquarters compound.[347]

A recon team, Spike Team TIGER, led by MSGT William S. Wood, was in the process of training Bru replacements for the five Bru lost, including his ONE-ONE (second in command) in when Gallagher's helicopter crashed.[348] TIGER departed the FOB3 compound separately but married up with Van Winkle's patrol to avoid a "collision" in which friendly patrols fired on each other, not realizing who they were. The team consisted of three Americans and an unknown number of Montagnards, probably six or seven, and would break away from the Hatchet Force and proceed on a separate reconnaissance mission.[349] Spike Team TIGER had recently been filled with new Bru following losses in the Gallagher recovery attempts, decided that he needed to train his team as well as find out what was in Khe Sanh ville, and proceeded out of FOB-3, past the house of the Millers, the Wycliffe Bible Translators, to warn them of the NVA, only to discover they had already departed.[350] TIGER soon joined with DENVER: "I know we were tagging onto the tail of your column before we reached the small cement bridge.."[351]

Lahren relates the movement from KSCB:

> We zigzagged single file on the six inch wide maze through the land mines and tangle-foot and concertina wire that formed the barrier between us and the jungle outside. ... Fuzzy leaned into his job, head swiveling side to side, shoulders bunched, walking down the middle of the dirt road to Route 9. Three Montagnards in a staggered column on his left, me with two Montagnards on the right. Behind us the main force split into two columns that slipped into the trees to our right and left. Except for an occasional flicker of camouflage there was no evidence of the flanking columns pacing us. ... the hatchet force floated through the jungle. ... We converged on a farm house about a kilometer south of FOB3 [the residence of Felix and Madeleine Poilane and their two children: Jean-Marie and his sister, Francoise. Madeleine named the plantation, Le Petite Fleur] ... Stone buildings with sunlight dappling tile roofs, wooden farm implements sitting in the yard, curtains fluttering in the windows, a French farm had been plucked from the Ardennes and dropped in the jungle. ... The kitchen table was still set for a meal for four. ... Today the place was silent and foreboding.[352]

83].

[344] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988.

[345] Lacey Lahren, "The Gunfight at Khe Sanh Ville," p. 4, in Letter from Lacey Lahren, 18 March 2001.

[346] Harlan E. Van Winkle, "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter postmarked 31 Dec 1996, p. 6.

[347] Harlan E. Van Winkle, Letter of 16 Sep 1994, Subj: Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion.

[348] Conversation with William S. Wood, 18 November 1997.

[349] Harlan E. Van Winkle, Letter of 16 Sep 1994, Subj: Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion. Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997.

[350] Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997. On Fri, 05 Jan, Col. Lownds had "strongly suggested" to John and Carolyn Miller that they depart the Khe Sanh area with their children for their safety, but to do it in such a way to avert panic. Since there was a scheduled Bible conference, there was a legitimate reason for them to leave, and they did. Amazingly, on 20 January 1968, John Miller suddenly reappeared at KSCB, much to the chagrin of the regimental command. It was a day in which Lt Tonc had surrendered and INDIA Company, 3/26, made extensive contact while attempting to patrol to Hill 881-North. The MACV J-2, LtGen Philip Davidson was visiting the base. Mr. Miller returned in order to rescue his Bru helper, and both safely departed before the Siege battle erupted the next day.

[351] Ibid.

[352] Lacey Lahren, "The Gunfight at Khe Sanh Ville," pp. 5-6, in Letter from Lacey Lahren, 18 March 2001.

After arriving at a bridge on the eastern edge of the village, approximately 150 meters east of the District Headquarters compound, the point element waded across the river, took up a defensive position and covered the rest of the patrol's advance.[353] SFC Fusco, leading the point element, signaled Van Winkle forward and the decision was made to send the point element to the MACV compound while Van Winkle moved with the first squad through the houses on the north side of Route 9 and the other squads through the houses on the south side of the highway.

As the point proceeded approx. 50 meters ahead of the flanking elements led by a Bru soldier with Fusco number two, Fusco yelled, "Recon by fire!" Lahren "damned near jumped through his web gear. 'Do what?' 'Fire into the buildings, make the bastards fire back!' He fired a three round burst into a tin roofed shack and grinned. The yards went white. I whipped my M-16 around in my right hand and used it like a pistol, firing single shots into door jams and window sills. ... I saw blood bubble from a knuckle on my right hand. I felt a punch in my right shoulder. I saw a Yard jerked upright by the impact of a bullet and then made a second lunge for the ditch on our left. I saw Fuzzy hunkered down in the ditch. I saw muzzle flashes dancing in front of the dark holes of a bunker firing slits, and I was doing a Calaveras County Championship leap. I landed in the ditch on my side. Fuzzy was five feet to my right and the yards were lined up on my left."[354] Lahren was hit again, this time in his left thigh. Fusco was explaining what he intended to do when he got inside the compound: "..he gave me intimate details of the conjugal visit he had planned for the survivors."

KHE SANH VILLAGE
Left: USAF aerial photo taken 28 Jan 1968, showing Khe Sanh village (bottom) and bombed-out area of Hill 471 (top) with Bru village of Breh in top center
Right: Key to locations

Recon team TIGER, meanwhile, had positioned itself on the southeast corner of the District compound and fired on the doors and windows in the back (south side), about a magazine apiece, but received no return fire. MSGT Wood then received a radio message calling TIGER back to Route 9 since air support was enroute, and TIGER "got into the ditch along with everyone else. ... the gunships arrived and made some runs about this time, which caused me to get much lower.."[355] Wood moved to the head of the column and found half a dozen men trapped on the west side of the road at the driveway into the district compound.[356]

[353] Ibid., p. 4
[354] Ibid., p. 7
[355] Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997.

Heavy fire from two machineguns inside the compound pinned the point in a shallow ditch between the road and the compound.[357] The NVA had policed the area, and none of the 200-300 NVA KIA were to be seen.[358] Van Winkle, with about four Bru, was able to move to a point directly across the road from Fusco.

Suddenly, Fusco shuddered, his head recoiled forward into the ditch, and he exclaimed, "I been shot in the neck. Hope they didn't get that big artery." Lahren reassured him the wound wasn't spurting like a carotid artery had been hit. Lahren heard a message on his radio that air support was on its way. He shouted this to Fusco, "but he ignored me. He was firing again but he seemed oblivious to everything but the compound. For the first but not the last time that day I underestimated the man. He was probably going into shock but he concentrated all the attention he could muster on the job in front of him."[359]

Van Winkle took a M-79 frenade launcher, but realized it was too close to the Fusco and his men: "I couldn't go through the fence because I was afraid I'd hit the wire and it would blow up and hurt Fusco. Fusco finally said, 'Dai Uy, you're going to have to knock this guy out; he's bothering us!' I said, 'Well, the only way I can do it is perhaps go through the fence,' and that's what I tried to do."[360]

Van Winkle stood up in the middle of the road with a 40mm M-79 grenade launcher and fired a low shot, splattering Fusco with debris who responded with curses at the Captain.[361] Wood recalls: "loud, outraged yells of accusation from those across the driveway."[362] Van Winkle, unaware that Fusco had already been wounded by the NVA, thought he had wounded Fusco

Then occurred a humorous albeit black humor incident.. The only weapons available were four M-16s and one M-79. The M-16s were not making much of an impression so we decided to try the M-79. The problem was the high fence running past the compound and less than twenty feet from Fusco. I was about 20 yards from the fence .. [and] told Fusco to get his butt down and attempted to fire directly through the fence. The round didn't make it through, detonating in the wire. The next thing, Fusco is cursing and saying, 'Damn it! Captain, you shot me!' The next round made it through the fence and took out the enemy bunker. Within a minute, SP5 John Frescura had commandeered a M-60 machine gun and charged up the middle of the highway laying down a solid base of fire.[363]

It was obvious that the wound that Fusco sustained was from an AK: ""When we got him back, what we found out was that an AK round that was a ricochet and was almost spent, had hit him in the neck, went completely around his neck, and lodged up under his chin. It was the luckiest neck wound you'll ever get in your life."[364]

Wood grabbed a M60 machinegun from a Bru and got into a ditch across from those trapped at the wire of the district compound. "I called across to the guys on the other side. I'd fire a burst and as I was firing, one of them was to dash across the gap. Crone came up with Xon (my 01) and Tu. The 2 Bru got inside the fence along the highway into the yard just east of the district compound and Crone either straddled or stood up next to the fence. I shouted, we all fired, and those west of the driveway came across, one at a time. Most of the Bru were strung out down the ditch behind me where they couldn't bring fire to bear on the district compound."[365] Wood recalls "another American" shooting at the district headquarters, noting "I was glad to see him because I was running low on ammo. While he was shooting, several more of the group stuck on the other side of the driveway scrambled back across."[366]

It was shortly after noon when SP5 John Frescura, seeing that the Point element was pinned down under intense fire, immediately directed his men to fighting positions along the road. Braving the fire himself, he repeatedly exposed himself to draw the enemy fire and pinpoint their locations. He stood up and dashed through the murderous fusillade and shielded Fusco with his own body and laid down a heavy base of fire on the enemy to cover the evacuation of the wounded.[367]

---

[356] Ibid.

[357] Harlan E. Van Winkle, "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter postmarked 31 Dec 1996, p. 7. Harlan E. Van Winkle, Letter of 16 Sep 1994, Subj: Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion.

[358] Conversation with John Frescura, 13 September 1994.

[359] Lacey Lahren, "The Gunfight at Khe Sanh Ville," p. 9, in Letter from Lacey Lahren, 18 March 2001.

[360] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 15 July 1993.

[361] Ibid.

[362] Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997.

[363] Harlan E. Van Winkle, Letter of 16 Sep 1994, Subj: Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion. Harlan E. Van Winkle, "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter postmarked 31 Dec 1996, pp. 7-8.

[364] Conversation with Donald Rumph, 14 October 1994.

[365] Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997

[366] Wood, William, "Further Notes," 28 Feb 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997

[367] Headquarters, United States Army Vietnam, General orders No. 2263, 15 May 1968, Silver Star Medal award to John

SP5 John Frescura "claimed ownership of Route 9 and was tearing up [the road]. Under Frescura's covering fire SOG medic [Gary] Crone skidded into the ditch next to me. he cut away my shirt and put a field dressing on my shoulder. Then he crawled over to Fusco and dressed his neck wound. Frescura kept laying on the machine gun fire. ... Lansing was shouting at us to get out, the jets were on the way in."[368]

Back at KSCB, Capt Lee Dunlap went to the 26th Marines COC to request air support and met the S-3, Major Wills who said, "I can't fire any artillery in there so your guys can get back; there might be friendlies in the town." Astonished, Dunlap responded, "There are no friendlies; my people are under fire. A stream of fire is coming out of the District Headquarters and the compound onto my people." Major Wills was adamant: "I'm not going to help." Dunlap then went to the large Air Force bunkers just a few yards from the COC, to TIGERHOUND. The Air Force LtCol said, "What do you need?" "Within about two minutes I had more jets than I could handle from the PRAIRIE FIRE[369] alert, and they went down there and just blew the hell out of the place. A Marine FAC reported that all this was going on to Wills. And so I'm to report to the regimental commander immediately. I go over there and I thought it was Colonel Lownds and I was going to get ripped and I was going to say, 'Well, Sir, I had to use my best judgment as a commander.' I get over there and Major Wills–. First thing I found out was Colonel Lownds didn't know anything about it. Second, Major Wills asked me to explain. I did. Then he said, 'That was dereliction of duty' and I should consider myself under arrest! I said, 'Well, sir, fine, but we will sort this out later; I got lots of stuff to do. My team is coming out. He told the guard, 'Marine, restrain that person!' Anyway, his voice level is coming up and a little heated, and Colonel Lownds comes walking out of his little hootch and said, 'what's going on here?' So I explained. And he said, 'Captain, why don't you go on over and check on your men and I'll take care of this.'"[370]

> When the rockets went off Fuzzy went apeshit and started firing again. He wouldn't respond to Lansing's calls and a running gunfight had started as the team was moving back towards the bridge. I ran back in the ditch and grabbed Fusco by the web gear, his eyes were wild and I thought this will never work. He took off on the run, dragging me with him and reached down and grabbed the PRC-25 radio on the way. Amazing.[371]

F4s flew overhead, dropping cluster bombs. Sutcliffe recalls: "There's nothing like a F4 screaming over you at 200 feet or so. They dropped the canisters [cluster bombs], and they hit the ground, and skipped up into the air, and then the bomblets all flew out. The little bomblets or grenades or whatever they were, coming down on us. And I rolled behind one of those buildings because they just blew up all over us."[372] "My CAR-15 submachine gun jammed. I grabbed Sergeant Fusco's M16."[373]

Lahren recalls backing up from the village towards the bridge, firing from his hip. With three Bru, he made it to the river taking fire from the west (the village) as they hit high grass, "wheeled on line and slid our asses down the river bank, rolling to face the village and I sent the three lead Bru across." The Bru fanned out and covered the river crossing. He slipped into the right-foot deep river, weighed down by the magazines in his pockets and a weakening right arm. He dropped is rifle, jackknifed down and grabbed it but found he was unable to kick back to the surface and stuck the barrel out of the river. A Montagnard soldier grabbed it and pulled him out. He saw the fast-movers blast the village. "Fireballs rolled through the village fifty yards in front of us and we sighted down our rifles looking for targets, payback, payback. ... A CH-34 helicopter whop-whopped us back up to FOB 3 and in minutes we were in the command bunker. SF medics fished a slug out of my thigh and probed my shoulder wound. They couldn't get at the round in my shoulder and said I would be medevaced to DaNang."[374]

SFC Robert L. Scully,[375] a medic on the evacuation helicopter, "ignored his own welfare as he leaped fifteen feet to the ground as the pilot hovered over the evacuation zone. He immediately moved to the wounded and began to aid them. At times, he shielded the casualties with his own body. Working quickly and skillfully, he treated all of the wounded, moved them to a nearby building and returned to the landing zone to guide in the helicopter. Again, the aircraft was prevented from landing by intense enemy fire. Sergeant Scully deployed the able-bodied friendly forces in a tight defensive perimeter around

---

Frescura.

[368] Lacey Lahren, "The Gunfight at Khe Sanh Ville," p. 9, in Letter from Lacey Lahren, 18 March 2001.

[369] PRAIRIE FIRE ALERT refers to SOG operations in Laos, which penetrated up to 30 KM from the border. "If we sent a team and it got in trouble you had this little radio that you turned on, a survival radio, and it started emitting a signal on a particular frequency that means PRAIRIE FIRE ALERT. That had Number One priority in Southeast Asia [for air support]." [Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 25 August 1988].

[370] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988. The term PRAIRIE FIRE ALERT, referring to the SOG operation in Laos, gives a number one priority for air support,.

[371] Lacey Lahren, "The Gunfight at Khe Sanh Ville," p. 10, in Letter from Lacey Lahren, 18 March 2001.

[372] Conversation with Grenville Sutcliffe, 05 Feb 1994.

[373] Grenville Sutcliff, memoirs of the ville fight and 471, Sep, 1994, included in note from F. James Taylor, 18 Oct 1994.

[374] Ibid.

[375] Scully later became the first Physicians Assistant in the U.S. Army. He died at the age of 45 from cancer.

an area suitable for a pickup site and directed their fire on the insurgents. He then successfully guided the helicopter to a landing, and, despite the continuing enemy fusillade, carried the casualties to the waiting aircraft. His heroic actions in the heat of battle were responsible for the rapid and successful evacuation of six badly wounded soldiers."[376]

Fusco survived, only to die of a heart attack shortly after his retirement.[377]

After the casualties had been medevaced via a Marine H-34, DENVER moved down Highway 9 toward the old French fort.

> We were being shot heavenly, green tracers ripping in on us at one point and I returned a lot of fire. I'll never forget this green tracer coming straight at me. I kind of rolled to my right and that tracer ripped just above my shoulder and to the left of my head as I rolled down. It was really strange because everything was in slow motion. ... We continued to work our way back toward Khe Sanh. Just as we approached the outer perimeter next to the drop zone the NVA started dropping artillery on us. I was still pretty green and dove into a drainage ditch that was filled full of mud, which jammed my submachine gun. Everyone had a big laugh at the new Lieutenant. As the artillery barrage continued, a Sergeant and I started joking with each other. I got out of my ditch, ran over to his crater, and jumped in. Artillery was blowing off all around us. Not to be outdone by a Lieutenant he walked over to another crater holding his hands up as if it were raining. We should have both been killed.[378]

MSGT William Wood gathered his Spike Team, TIGER, and took a path just east of the bridge to the road to the camp. Wood recalls:

> We turned onto the road to camp and got a radio call from the FOB: was that us coming onto the road. Seems that the FOB CO had dispatched a support force to back us up. That force had met or seen you [Van Winkle] turning from Hwy #9 onto the road to camp and had turned back. They saw my Spike entering the road and wanted to know were we friend or enemy? I popped a panel at them, which seemed to be reassuring. Without further adventures we walked in the camp gate and down to our part of the perimeter on the west side, close to the southwest corner. Later that evening, a delegation of Bru approached me (they had all been in Khe sanh town that day) wanting to know if I would get the camp truck and take them to their village, which was west of Lang Vei. They hadn't been home in 2 or 3 days. Sometimes I wasn't sure the Bru were real.[379]

When DENVER reached the FOB-3 gate, they were met by a heavy NVA rocket barrage. Once inside the compound, Majors Campbell and Quamo said that FOB-3 radio operators had intercepted NVA radio traffic; the NVA leaders were concerned about still holding Khe Sanh village and were sending in a larger force to reinforce it. Van Winkle commented, "They're welcome to it. My mission had been to confirm they were there. They were."[380]

The special unit monitoring NVA radios, deep inside the FOB-3 command bunker, reported that the NVA assumed they had lost the village during the 45-minute heavy battle.[381]

When asked "Why did you go back in there, to the ville–to destroy rice or something?" 1Lt Grenville Sutcliffe noted, "Well, it was really critical. The Marine CAC teams had pulled back in,I but one of the Marines was a kind of Scotch fanatic and had this big Scottish flag and he played the bagpipes. That's how I got shot! I was going in to liberate his damn bagpipes!"[382] The marine, a 20 year-old PFC Freeman James Taylor even had the nickname "Bagpipes," had conteracted malaria and was medevaced several weeks before the Siege began, leaving his bagpipes in the CAC O-2 compound while he was hospitalized for four weeks at the NSA Hospital in DaNang. An Afro-American Marine who was the driver for the platoon, Tyson, had managed to save his Scottish flag during the very desperate attack on O-2 on the western edge of the ville, but the bagpipes remained.[383] While at O-2, Taylor had frequently played his bagpipes, entertaining the local Bru tribes-people who referred to it as blang kong tour or "something like that, which meant 'big reed flute'. I learned a few of their tunes would go out there and jam and sing songs. Sometimes I would play their tunes and they loved that."[384] Due to the intensity of the battle, 1 Lt Sutcliffe wasn't able to retrieve his bagpipes which are now perhaps a war sourvenir in some North Vietnamesde soldier's home.

---

[376] HQ, United States Army Vietnam, General Orders No. 2453, 24 May 1968, Award of Silver Star Medal to SFC Robert L. Scully.
[377] Harlan E. Van Winkle, Letter of 16 Sep 1994, Subj: Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion.
[378] Grenville Sutcliffe, Memoirs of the ville fight and 471," Sep., 1994, appended to letter from F. James Taylor, 18 Oct 1994.
[379] Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997.
[380] Harlan E. Van Winkle, "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter postmarked 31 Dec 1996, p. 9.
[381] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 15 July 1993.
[382] Conversation with Grenville Stucliffe, 06 April 1990.
[383] Conversation with Freeman James Taylor, 08 April 1993.
[384] Ibid.

HILL 471 - 29 JANUARY 1968
(Part 1: The Contact)

Master Sergeant William S. Wood, Patrol Leader of Spike Team TIGER, relates the patrol:[385]

On 29 January 1968, we left the camp later than I would like to have, later than I'd planned. As I recall, there was no one big delay, but several small, annoying ones. Among other things we had to turn in all our emergency radios: they were in short supply and another team was to launch that day. It must have been 0830 or later, and I was irritated when we walked out of the gate: me, Don Voorhees, Gary Crone, Xon,[386] To, Tu,[387] and seven other Bru whose names I can't remember, and Mike Mahoney as a straphanger. Mahoney was new to the FOB and wanted to gain experience. I think he and Crone had known one another somewhere before, because I remember Gary asking if his coming along would be all right. Voorhees and 6 of the 7 Bru were new on the team. This would be their first patrol out of the FOB.

There was a heavy fog that morning, which was one of the reasons I was hurrying. The fog at Khe Sanh usually lifted between 0900 and 0930 and I wanted to be close up under the hill mass before it did. We were going to the 'pimple' southeast of hill 471 to look down into Khe Sanh town and, if necessary, up onto Hill 471...

Vietnam Special Use 1:12,500, Series L803, Sheet 6342 III H] HILL 471 AND KHE SANH COMBAT BASE Army Map Service [Location of FOB-3 and names of Bru villes added

We moved directly toward the hill across the shallow valley that extended west and southwest from our perimeter. To, the point man, chose a path where the weeds were shorter, avoiding the taller weeds where some others and I had spread gasoline the day before, and we moved right along. Still, we were too slow. The fog lifted while we were in the middle of that open area, still 900 meters or more from the foot of 471. We continued to the hill and mounted it diagonally, up across hill 471 to the saddle. I noted the grass, which was about 2-1/2 - 3 ft. high, had been mowed in a swath 300 or more meters wide on the east slope of 471 itself. ... There was plenty of evidence that the AF [Air Force] had bombed the hell out of the general area in the last couple of days. Those bomb craters hadn't been there two days before.

Upon reaching the saddle between Hill 471 and the 'pimple' .. the Bru stopped. The Bru could best be described as agitated, saying 'No! No! Beaucoup VC! They were all huddled together. After some minutes of talk I said, 'Well, come on, let's go.' and started toward the pimple. The grass was two-and-a-half feet to three foot tall. The crest of the pimple was only six or eight feet higher than where we were, but that ridge got higher to my right front. I was walking on a path, not a bare-earth path but a trace where the grass had been worn down and beaten off by passing feet. At that time I never thought anything of it. It was not my [385] Wood, William S., "Fiasco on Hill 471 or How not to Manage a Reconnaissance," 28 February 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1987.

---

[386] "Xon was the 01 and had been (so I was told) the 1st Sgt of the Bru Company when the Bru were formed in a company." [Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997]

[387] "Tu was carried as the interpreter and had been through some training to qualify him for that position, but I used Xon as my interpreter. Tu had that title to give him more money." [Wood, William, "Episode in Khe Sanh Town," 4 January 1997, in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 6 May 1997] most perspicacious day.

As stepped aside, we took fire from directly ahead of us, from a range of about five meters. I returned two magazines full auto but don't think I hit anyone, as the 5.56 bullet was notorious for its poor penetration in grass or weeds. About the time I finished firing three or four M-79 rounds on the top of the pimple, I looked back to find that I was again alone. Crone lay face-up some 3-4 meters behind me and I could hear a lot of firing back about where we had stopped to talk. I scrambled back to Crone[388] to find he'd been shot in the right cheek, the right eye, and the right forearm, which was broken. He may have had other wounds, too. As I tried to find signs of life I noticed that his head was intact: the bullets hadn't exited although there was a large pool of blood under the back of his head. It causes me some embarrassment to admit that what distressed me the most at that moment was not Crone's death (we were good friends) nor the manner of it, but the fact that the cord to the PRC-25 handset had been shot in two, and we had NO other radios.

While trying to get Crone up into a fireman's carry his .45 fell out onto the ground. I picked it up, finding I couldn't carry him: he was a big man, 6'1" or 2" and 200 lb. or more. Movement caught my eye from the grass on the near slope of the pimple. It was a soft snap. I fired 3 or 4 shots from the .45 at it and it disappeared, and when there was no more movement there, I fired the rest of the clip into the radio. (NOTE: I am not that good of a pistol shot. Maybe I scared him or maybe what I saw was a waving tuft of grass. If I hit him with a .45 at a range of 10 meters, it would have been a miracle as great as any sanctified by the Church). Firing from the pimple stopped.

I started to drag Crone back to the rest of the team, but a grenade came in and knocked me loose. I scuttled back to where the rest of the team was to find Xon wounded in the ankle, one Bru dead (the M-79 gunner) and only Voorhees and 3 Bru firing at the top of 471. Voorhees greeted me by asking, 'Did you see that wire?' I had not. It ran in the grass beside the trail and led to the pimple. It looked like the heavy WD-1, not WD-110. Now we were taking fire from the pimple, too. I counted 2 MGs and a couple of AKs there. I told Voorhees that Crone was dead and asked after Mahoney and the rest of the Bru. He replied, while changing magazines, that he didn't know. They had disappeared when the shooting started, presumably downhill, back to the east or northeast. He sounded a bit upset about it. Then (he was on the other side of a grass clump from me) he announced that Xon was killed. I remarked that in my opinion it was about time we left, and suddenly I was alone again. Not for long, though. After a hurried scan of the area (during which I spotted not less than 4 auto weapons on the military crest of 471) without sign of Mahoney or the other Bru. I was gone too.

Caught up with Voorhees and crew in a bomb crater 20 or 25 meters from the crest of the saddle. We may have been in defilade again as the NVA had stopped firing. I mentioned that a bomb crater, unless you could see out, was a poor position. They scrambled out and we ran the roughly 50 or 60 meters to the foot of the hill, across the small dry stream bed there, and continued across the flat for 75-80 meters to a thin hedgerow at the foot of a fallow field. Voorhees and 2 Bru, in the lead, got through this hedgerow but Tu, apparently beat out, slowed to a walk just before reaching it. I slowed, too, put my hand on his shoulder (he was on my right) and was saying something like: 'Let's go, Tu,' when more than one auto weapon opened fire behind us. I think we had come out of defilade, and one weapon was aimed directly at Tu and me. I could see the bullets striking just ahead of us. I think one of the rounds went between my legs and a couple between Tu and me. One went through my knee (it felt like someone slapped me with a ruler) and several hit Tu in the abdomen and chest. I pushed Tu through the hedgerow while screaming the oldest cliché in war movies, 'I'm hit!' and dived through myself. The firing stopped again. The burst that hit Tu and me was an almost classic example of what they used to teach in MG or BAR classes of what happens if you fire a bi-podded weapon with your shoulder high. The bullet stream travels from lower left to upper right, where there is a cluster of holes.

After ascertaining I couldn't help Tu I took out my KAK pad from the last mission (the only paper I had) and printed on the back of it: 'In deep trouble. Team split. Some wounded. Need out. Wood.' This I gave to the Bru and in my best pidgin Bru, mangled English and hand and arm signals, told them to take it to camp and give it to an American. They left, moving carefully along the hedgerows and not hurrying.

---

[388] SSGT Gary L. Crone was posthumously awarded the Silver Star. His Citation reads (in part): "Sergeant Crone, after ordering the remainder of the team to withdraw to a safer position a few meters away, willfully exposed himself to intense enemy fire to deliver suppressive fire on the enemy, allowing the remainder of the team to withdraw. ... Sergeant Crone was mortally wounded as, with complete disregard for his own safety, he attempted to assist the team." [Dept. of the Army, HQ, United States Army Vietnam, General orders No. 2805, 11 June 1968].

At that time I was wearing tiger stripe trousers and carried 3 field dressings and 2 cravats in my right hip pocket. I pulled up my trouser leg and checked the wound. It wasn't bkeeding very much but from the position of the exit hole, square in the middle of my kneecap, I didn't think I wanted to try any marathon runs. I dug in my hip pocket for a dressing and in 5 tries produced 5 cravats. On the 6th try I gave up and tied a cravat around it.

Turned out sending the message was unnecessary, as someone in the FOB had heard the firing and launched a gunship to see what was going on. By the time Voorhees had cached Tu's body under the hedgerow and I had bandaged myself (and given me a shot of morphine: I anticipated some strenuous activity) the gunship found us. We both frantically popped panels and tried a mirror flash, but there wasn't enough sun. Neither of us was willing to give away our position with smoke. The gunship overflew us and dropped a smoke grenade, which unfortunately landed about 500 meters south of us,. Not being sure what he was doing, both Voorhees and I expended a couple magazines in that direction then fled.

We moved generally north under cover of the hedgerow, eventually arriving in a field of elephant grass north of a chain of the small triangular rice paddies that the Bru built in the ravines in that country. I don't know how we got there: we must have gone around them. For sure, I wasn't wading any rice paddies.

We weren't long in the elephant grass when Lt. Thieu appeared overhead in his raggedy old H-34. I scooted up to the edge of the rice paddy and popped a panel. Voorhees was popping another from the middle of the elephant grass and shouting, 'Why doesn't he come down?' with profane embellishments. Being more familiar with the way Viet pilots operated, I said, 'He's looking us over. He'll be down in a minute!' Sure enough, in about that time he 'dropped it on a wing' (if you can do that in a helicopter) and down he came, like those Viet pilots did, like a rock! Just before he hit the ground he pulled pitch and RPM. the airframe shuddered, the engine screamed, the rotor blades groaned, and he hovered 3 ft. above the rice paddy. From some part of 471 someone shot out the left windshield (so I was told) and the rest of the bird began to grow holes. I pointed at my knee and motioned him toward me. He came, sideways across the paddy. Scully jumped off. Voorhees came up. They threw me onto the chopper and scrambled on behind me. Scully asked about the rest of the team and I told him, 'We're it,' meanwhile shouting for Lt. Thieu to Go! Go! Go! He looked down between his seat and the driveshaft housing and grinned at us, and flew away. I think at least one gunship was making runs on Hill 471 at this time, but I was busy with my own affairs. Also, I don't remember anyone on the chopper except Scully and the crew chief.

VIEW FROM TOP OF 471 TO KHE SANH VILLAGE (bright metal roofs) and Bru villae of Breh
Photo taken 26 Sep 1967 by Ray W. Stubbe

Scully had a PRC-25 with which he talked to the FOB, so on our landing (very close to the aid station bunker) there were people there with a stretcher. Someone helped me shift my butt from the chopper to the stretcher and someone else grabbed my shoulders and laid me down. I bounced back up to a sitting position. He laid me down. I bounced back up, screaming, 'Wait a goddamn minute!' and took off my belt. One cannot lie comfortably on loaded canteen covers. Besides, they should have been grateful. Without the belt I was 75-80 pounds lighter.

They carried me down into the aid station (TOC?) bunker, and God knows how they managed the corners. After bouncing me up and down and flopping me from side to side to see if I had any more holes (they did me almost as much damage as the bullet had) Scully slit up my trouser leg, cut off my cravat and said, 'You're going out,' and put a new dressing on the wound. Then he took off my boot and sock, but my pants leg off, slit up my trouser into my pocket, took my lighter and put it into his own pocket. I protested. He said, 'You're gonna be evacuated and can get another one. I lost mine day before yesterday.' He gave me 2 books of matches and some kind soul brought me my billfold, my checkbook, and 2 packs of cigarettes..

After Master Sergeant William Stanley Wood retired, he enrolled at the University of Missouri where he earned a doctorate in history. He applied for a teaching job with the University of Maryland Extension Program and was sent to the Far East Division in Korea. While there, he suffered his first heart attack and was diagnosed with congestive heart disease. He then retired and moved to New Mexico.[389]

HILL 471 - 29 JANUARY 1968

(Part 2: The Follow-up)

ODA-221, DENVER, was preparing to rotate back to Okinawa from its TDY status and was, at this time, short-handed.[390] SP5 John E. Frescura recalls what happened next: "Just after inspection, a H-34 helicopter came in and Sgt Lansing and Lt Sutcliff went out to it, and I stayed in the area of our positions of defense. The H-34 contained two wounded Americans and they were taken up to the disp. Lansing and Sutcliffe helped to carry them. As this was being done, a Sgt Coward came down to my position and notified me that we would be going out. I told our force to get their gear and equipment and to get into formation. At this time I left and went up to where the rest of the American members were to see if they knew. They had got the word up by the command bunker. Cpt. Van Winkle at this time notified us that he would be going with us. I asked him if SFC Tredinnick was going and he said yes. I then went down to his position to see if he was ready to go. He was and he and I tested our weapons and moved back to the command bunker. Sgt Lansing and Sgt Rumph in the meantime had moved our force up to the Command bunker. We were notified at this time that we would be going in with a force of 24 men. The mission was to try and recover the bodies of one known KIA American, two KIA indig. and try to find one American MIA."[391]

After the helicopter that rescued MSGT William S. Wood at about 1000 landed at FOB 3, it was decided that Hatchet Force DENVER would be dispatched to Hill 471 (about 2500 meters from the FOB) to retrieve the two missing Americans. Captain Harlan E. Van Winkle, the XO of A-221, DENVER, was unable to speak with Wood prior to his medical evacuation, leaving a void in vital information. The decision was made to insert with eight Americans and sixteen Bru. The force included:[392]

CPT H.E. "Rip" Van Winkle	XO, A-221
1LT Granville Sutcliffe	FOB-3 Assistant S-3
SFC Robert Scully	Senior Medic, FOB-3
SFC Charles N. Tredinnick	Senior Combat Engineer, A-221
SGT Dennis C. Lansing	Junior Communications NCO, A-221

[389] Harlan E. Van Winkle, letter of 3 January 1997 to Members and Friends of ODA-221, [390] Harlan E. Van Winkle, email to Dennis Tredinnick, 10 July 2005, in letter from Dennis Tredinnick, 23 Oct 2006.
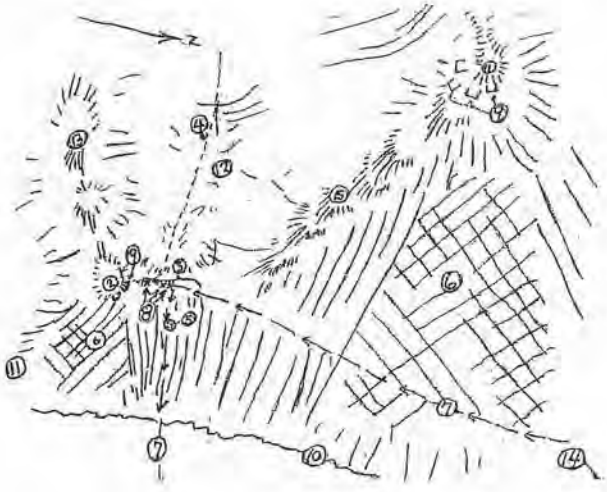
[391] Statement of SP5 John E. Frescura, 8 February 1968, contained in documents mailed by Mr. Lee Dunlap on 13 September 1988.
[392] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Van Winkle, 31 December 1996.

SGT Donald R. Rumph	Junior Medic, A-221
SP5 John L. Frescura	Junior Combat Engineer, A-221
PFC James Taylor	from CAC OSCAR

Capt Van Winkle was due to leave FOB3 on 30 January. SP5 Frescura and Sgt Lansing suggested to the Captain that SFC Tredinnick be added "as we were under-manned American wise."[393]

PFC James Taylor was a Marine from the Second Platoon of Combined Action Company (CAC) OSCAR that had relocated to the FOB-3 when Khe Sanh village was overrun and the CAP O-3 position just across the road from FOB-3 had been abandoned. Taylor had been medevaced to the NSA hospital in DaNang for malaria and pneumonia about three weeks before the siege battle erupted, and had left his prized bagpipes at the CAP O-2 position. He eventually was sent to the hospital at Cam Ranh Bay for recuperation, "And I was damned if I would be down there filling sandbags and line the General's walk. So I told the doctor checking me in–I was still 'weak as a kitten'–but I told him, 'I'm fine. I need to go back to my unit. They need me. If I'm going to be filling sandbags, it'll be for my own ass and not for the General's sidewalks.' He laughed and filled out a slip. He said, 'You don't look good, but I'm going to send you back anyway. Your attitude is certainly good enough to make-up for it.' He tried to talk me out of it, but I wasn't having any. It took me three days. I caught a ride back, got in before they closed he airstrip."[394] Taylor had come from a family with a Marine heritage. His father fought in World War II, from Guadalcanal and almost to Iwo Jima but got wounded a third time just before the Iwo landing. His uncle (father's sister's husband) was an old China Marine with 4th Marines in Shanghai before the war, captured in Corregidor and survived four hears as a POW of the Japanese in Burma, only 95 pounds when freed. Taylor's brother was a Marine, as was his ex-wife.[395]

PFC Taylor was in the area where DENVER was preparing for its Hill 471 patrol and noticed Captain Van Winkle moving through the FOB-3 area. "He was a very impressive soldier, especially to this young PFC. I looked up at this big guy, and 'Call me Rip, son!' He didn't want me calling him 'Sir' and all that sort of thing. He was a big, easy-going fellow with a [Southern] draw and a ready laugh."[396] The 20 year-old Taylor, still "weak as a kitten,"[397] was eager for action, asked if he could come along. "I had been growing edgy with the forced inactivity. The term 'Siege Mentality' took on a new dimension for us at Khe Sanh. I had numerous requests in for any mission going outside the wires."[398] Van Winkle simply asked, "Can you operate a radio?" and when he replied he could, "that was all I needed to hear."[399]



HILL 471 ACTION [Diagram by Wm Wood

1 Hill 471
2 The "pimple"
3 The Saddle
4 Line of path & telephone wire
5 Bomb crater
6 Approx. areas where grass was mowed
7 Our route onto & away from the saddle, directions indicated
8 Positions of the bodies. Crone furtherst south. The M-79 gunner in the middle and Xon to the north
9 NVA positions from which we took fire.
10 Small dry streambed
11 Khe Sanh town, about 500-600 meters
12 Fairly wide, gentle valley
13 Smaller, lower ridge
14 FOB-3, about 1-1/2 miles
15 Finger from 471 to saddle

---

[393] Statement of SP5 John E. Frescura, 8 February 1968, contained in documents mailed by Mr. Lee Dunlap on 13 September 1988.
[394] Conversation with Freeman James Taylor, 08 April 1993.
[395] Ibid.
[396] Conversation with F. James Taylor, 06 Sep 1993.
[397] Conversation with Freeman James Taylor, 08 April 1993.
[398] Taylor, James, "Up Hill 471 with the Green Berets" c. 1980, in letter from Taylor postmarked 19 July 1993.
[399] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 11. Letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 16 September 1994, Subj: Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion."

The assault force, led by Captain Van Winkle, lifted off from the FOB-3 camp at 1135 for the short ride to the southeastern most point of the Hill 471 area[400] in four helicopters, three flown by Vietnamese and one by an American crew. "The first chopper load was broken down with Captain Van Winkle and PFC Taylor, U.S.M.C., accompanied by four indigenous personnel. the second chopper load consisted of 1st Lieutenant Sutcliff and SFC Scully, along with four indigenous personnel. The third chopper contained SFC Tredennick and SP5 Frescura, accompanied by four indigenous. The fourth and final chopper load consisted of Sgt Rumph and Sgt Lansing, accompanied by four indigenous personnel. The numbered strength of our element was sixteen indigenous soldiers and eight Americans, a total strength of 24 men. We were told that we were going up against a reinforced squad, possibly two squads."[401]

The insertion met no resistance. Cover and concealment was non-existent with elephant grass that averaged less than three feet and a few scraggly bushes. The FOB area was easily seen; they could see soldiers moving about in the FOB. "There was certainly nothing to indicate imminent trouble. We set up a hasty defensive perimeter with SFC Tredinnick, SP5 Frescura and four Bru focusing basically east. Sgt Lansing, Sgt Rumph and four Bru were covering to the north. 1LT Sutcliffe, SFC Scully and four Bru covered west, while PFC Taylor and I with the remaining four Bru covered to the south. The saddle where the bodies were supposedly located was directly to the front of Tredinnick and Frescura."[402]

SFC Tredinnick then took three Bru and moved to the location where the bodies were reported to be,[403] advancing down into the saddle and to the top of the small peak on the other side of the saddle, about 150-175 meters, never out of Van Winkle's sight and not making any enemy contact. He noticed a large force of enemy troops moving to encircle the entire friendly force from the east. Not wanting the patrol to become separated,[404] Van Winkle instructed him to return to the ridge line and reestablish his perimeter. No evidence of Crone's body was seen.[405]

Van Winkle recalls: "Upon his return he moved to my position and we were discussing our next move when we both heard and spotted movement in a small bush directly to our front, probably less than six feet away. Tredinnick had just enough time to ask 'What was that?' before we were fired upon by an enemy rifleman from a well-concealed fighting position. I had the distinct impression the rounds passed between us and how they missed hitting at least one of us I'll never know. We both returned fire and I dropped a M-26 fragmentation grenade into the hole. To my recollection that action initiated the fight. I have been told since that our entire perimeter had been receiving sporadic small arms fire for several minutes prior to mine and Tredinnick's up-close and personal encounter."[406]

VIEW FROM HILL 471 TO KSCB LOOKING TOWARDS 950 (just off center) and 1015
Areng (right foreground) and Lang Kat (left foreground). Photo taken by Ray Stubbe 26 Sep 1967

A few minutes later, 1Lt Sutcliffe received a wound in his throat. He recalls:

> There were three little hill tops, and I was setting up my perimeter. They were coming up the hillside after us. We were raking them with our sub-machineguns. We were throwing grenades back and forth, laying on our backs, throwing them up in the air. Then they got a .50 up on one of the other hilltops, and they pinned us down. One of my sergeants came running back–the guy that was listed as KIA on that day [Tredinnick]. 'We gotta get out,' and I looked at him: 'Where would you suggest we go?' After that he just disappeared in a cloud of smoke. It was a

---

[400] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 11.
[401] Letter from Sgt Dennis Lansing, 8 February 1968, contained in documents sent by Mr. Lee Dunlap on 13 September 1988.
[402] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 11.
[403] Van Winkle, Harlan E., email to Dennis Tredinnick, 10 July 2005, in letter from Dennis Tredinnick, 23 Oct 2006.
[404] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 15 July 1993.
[405] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 12.
[406] Ibid. Van Winkle, Harlan E., Conversation of 15 July 1993.

grenade. Everything went in slow motion. I got up on one knee–which was real smart! I wanted to knock out that .51 and was shooting a compass azimuth on the hillock trying to get the gunships to blow it out. All this time I was setting my perimeter. I kept contact with Campbell back there, telling him what was happening. I presented a rather good target, unfortunately, and they hit me with a grenade. I remember a big flash of light to my left, this tremendous impact–it went through my throat and shoulder, and I thought, 'No, Sutcliff, you're not going to do it' As I was falling down, I said, 'Help, Medic!' I stuck my leg up in the air and wiggled it around in the elephant grass so they could see where I'd fallen.

One of the medics came over. I opened my eyes and all I could see was this bloody hand in my face. He rolled me over, whips out his knife and says, 'Can you breathe, sir?' I looked up at him. He and I had just 'trached' a guy two nights before, and I informed him I could breathe quite well, thank you![407]

Tredinnick and Van Winkle rushed to Sutcliffe, and Van Winkle recalls, "He was such a mess that I sensed it was a mortal wound."[408] At that time, the patrol began to receive fire from every point except the north, with the heaviest from the west and southeast, in "what could only be called a thunderstorm of enemy hand grenades being thrown into our position."[409] Taylor, carrying the PRC-25 for Capt Van Winkle, "..happened to glance up and saw what appeared to be a black snowstorm. I then realized I was seeing a great number of ChiCom grenades, and yelled to the Capt, 'Down, Sir!' and pushed him down. I reflected that it wasn't every day one got to knock an officer on his ass. ... They were bursting among us. Rip caught a piece in his leg and cursed softly. I glanced down at my hands, and saw the blood welling up from a few tiny pieces of iron, like splinters, in the knuckles and joints. I pulled a few out with my teeth and checked Rip, who said he'd make it, and then we became too busy to sweat a few pieces of shrapnel."[410] PFC Taylor was surprised by the lack of fire discipline of the enemy force: "they'd always open up too soon, which is probably why I'm still here."[411] The attack was furious. "It would be safe to say the crescendo of enemy fire was such that I felt we were in danger of being overrun at any point," recalls Van Wionkle. "During one of the gunship runs, the door gunner, firing a M-60 MG, missed Taylor and I by less than six inches and shot Lao, the Bru platoon leader, in both legs, shattering both of them. I don't fault the gunner. He was doing his best to provide needed support under very trying circumstances."[412]

About this time, a Marine airborne FAC, AMERICAN BEAUTY DELTA, estimated the enemy force to be at least a reinforced company, moving around to the southeast, and then, on his second pass, changed the estimate to a battalion on the move.[413] "The manner in which he was able to coordinate all of the various air support into that very small area was nothing short of phenomenal."[414] "Not only did he have to worry about our immediate situation, he was also having to deal with two battalion size enemy units that were trying to get between us and the FOB."[415]

Tredennick started back to his position.

Van Winkle recalls that for all the quantity of ChiCom grenades tossed at them, most seemed to be duds and that those that did explode lacked the force of US grenades. One of the weaker ones exploded between his legs giving him with a dozen or so very painful, but not disabling wounds. "It was at that point when I heard the distinctive sound of a bullet strike someone behind me. I turned and saw Tredennick lying still on the ground. Sgt Rumph, PFC Taylor, and I converged on Tredinnick. He had been wounded low down on the left side of his chest. The entrance wound was very small but the exit wound was massive. His last words to me were, 'It hurts real bad sir.' Rumph and Taylor were performing immediate first aid and I put all of my effort to moving us some place reasonably safe to call for a medevac,."[416] The young PFC Taylor saw Tredinnick and thought: "He didn't even have to be out on this mission as he had a rotate to CONUS in about 18 hours. But the team had been together for almost three years and he went out of unit pride and duty. Rip was taking it hard, and I heard him talking to Chuck who was by now mercifully unconscious: 'Don't die, Chuckie, Don't die on me, Chuckie boy,.' It didn't sound as maudlin and sentimental as it appears in print. It was one brave man pleading for the life of another, his comrade-[407] Conversations with Grenville Sutcliffe, 06 April 1990 and 05 February 1994.

---

[408] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 12.
[409] Ibid.
[410] Taylor, James, "Up Hill 471 with the Green Berets" c. 1980, in letter from Taylor postmarked 19 July 1993.
[411] Conversation with James Taylor, 08 April 1993.
[412] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 13.
[413] Van Winkle, Harlan E., Conversation of 15 July 1993.
[414] Van Winkle, letter of 16 September 1994, Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion, p. 4.
[415] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 14.
[416] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, pp. 12-13..

in-arms."[417]

Sgt Donald Rumph recalls: "Lt Sutcliffe yelled 'I'm hit' and fell over on his back. I moved to him, being the closest, to treat his neck wound,. Just after I reached him, SFC Scully came up and I went on to SFC Tredinnick. When I reached him, Capt. Van Winkle and PFC Taylor were applying a dressing to the wound. SFC Tredinnick was unconscious at this time and breathing very irregularly. I cut off his web gear and shirt and finished applying the dressing. His pulse was very weak, and 4 of 5 times [he] stopped breathing. Capt. Van Winkle called for a MedEvac for Lt Sutcliffe and SFC Tredinnick, which arrived about 15 minutes later, and napalm air attacks."[418]

Sutcliffe remembers the medic working on Tredinnick shouted, "We got to get the medevacs in or we're going to lose this one" and then, "my medic yells, 'Yeah, we're going to lose this one too!' Well, I knew he was wrong. There wasn't a chance in the world that I was going to die on that hill! The first slick came in. They threw Tredinnick on it and they tried to get me on it, but it was taking heavy fire. I must have been going in and out of consciousness by that time because Taylor said he carried me down to a hillock [and] I don't remember that. The second ship came in, an old H-34, regular Vietnamese pilot. They threw me into that. They lifted off. As we started, I remember the machinegun bullets popping through the floor of the chopper around me"[419] A Vietnamese Air Force (VNAF) H-34 King Bee assigned to SOG was riddled with fire, killing the co-pilot and one door gunner; the pilot managed to get it airborne with the wounded and crash-landed at FOB-3.[420] The senior medic of A-221, SSG Sweezy, arrived on one of the medevac choppers and later said he couldn't understand why there was difficulty loading the wounded. "When the medevac ship in which he was riding had to crash-land at the FOB it had over two hundred bullet holes in it. Sweezy was oblivious to it all."[421]

Sutcliffe recalls that he was taken to the FOB and then to C Med on Khe Sanh base. "Put me on the operating table and started to cut my clothes off and hand grenades started falling out of my pockets, my pistol out of my top pocket. Well, the Marine doctors weren't quite used to that thing, so they started cutting off my uniform and a grenade falls out of one pocket, a pistol out of another, so they ran out of the tent!."[422]

That higher headquarters had no inkling of what was happening is reflected in a message from Third Marine Division COC to III MAF: "FOB3 is still in contact with enemy in village of Khe Sanh."[423] Van Winkle requested permission to return to the base. Permission was denied: he was to stay there and continue to observe. Taylor notes: "Observe what? All the Indians in the world riding down on you?"[424]

The Marine on the patrol, PFC Taylor, hauled Lt Sutcliffe to one medevac chopper as others put Tredinnick on another. After the two were medevaced, the patrol continued to receive enemy fire and Captain Van Winkle told the patrol to start pulling back. SP5 John L. Frescura moved his men to the right, closer to the rest of the patrol while Sgt Lansing turned his attention and that of his men to the threat from the south and west, focusing on a small gully that led from the south slope directly into the friendly position. While positioning his men, his machine gunner, Pa Lang, was shot dead and the entire element was pinned down.[425] Lau, another Bru, was hit in the right leg at the boot top by a round from a Marine gunship. The bones were shattered.[426] Lansing was having some trouble keeping them in position:

> I had a lot of trouble trying to get my men to this area because we were receiving heavy small arms fire. I ended up exposing myself to the fire because I had to bodily drag most of my men up. After getting settled and setting up my perimeter, I had to go from man to man to get them to fire their weapons in the manner of which I desired. At this time we were receiving support from our gunships. One of our gunships made a gun run and came in so close with automatic 40mm fire that I thought maybe he mistook myself and my men for VC. I immediately pulled back to Cpt. Van Winkle's location leaving my men in position. I wanted to find out what the problem was.. I had just turned around to return to my own position when my men broke from the top of the hill. I reached them in time to keep them from running away completely. One of the men who spoke a little bit of English told me that the V.C. started storming up the draw I was covering. I immediately regrouped my troop, and attempted to get them back into position, but they were determined not to go. I grabbed one of my machine gunners and

---

[417] Taylor, James, "Up Hill 471 with the Green Berets," postmarked 19 July 1993.
[418] Sgt Donald A. Rumph, "Report on Operation, 29 Jan 68 in RVN," in letter from Rumph of 9 Oct 1994.
[419] Conversation with Grenville Sutcliffe, 05 Feb 1994.
[420] Van Winkle, Harlan E., email to Dennis Tredinnick, 10 July 2005, in letter from Dennis Tredinnick, 23 Oct 2006.
[421] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 15.
[422] Ibid.
[423] 3dMarDiv 291127Z/Jan68, 26th SITREP for 291600H in IIIMAF COC Journal and File, 29/30 Jan 1968 #216. Underscoring provided.
[424] Conversation with Freeman James Taylor, 08 April 1993.
[425] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Van Winkle, 31 December 1996.
[426] Sgt Donald A. Rumph, "Re[port on Operation 29 Jan 68 in RVN," in letter from Rumph, 9 Oct 1994.

proceeded to march him up the hill. We were receiving terrific small arms and sparse rocket fire at this time. I had just about got my gunner in position when a muzzle flash appeared about ten feet to my front. My gunner was hit in the abdomen. I immediately returned fire. At this time the main body was in the process of pulling back down the hill to the east. I picked up the man who was shot and began to gather my men to pull back also. I gathered several men on my way down who had evidently pulled back before and proceeded to make it down a narrow draw to the bottom of the hill. . I waited about 30 to 46 minutes at the bottom.. I couldn't hear very well because there were jets flying over making strikes on the area we were in. I then proceeded with my men to walk back to camp.[427]

Frescura had started to move to help Lansing when Van Winkle said they were pulling back. During this time a Marine gunship made a pass and hit one of Frescura's men in the calf, shattering both bones. Frescura ran to apply first aid along with Sgt Rumph and placed a splint on the leg.[428]

While moving down the hill, Sgt. Lansing lost sight of Sgt Rumph's group while in the brush. Sgt Rumph pulled down the knoll 3/4ths of the way to the bottom of the hill and called a Medevac for the two wounded Bru. Following an airstrike, the first medevac was shot off the LZ by heavy automatic fire. The second bird arrived ten minutes later and the two wounded Bru and, as Sgt Rumph departed, he spotted Sgt Lansing's group about 300 meters away moving toward the camp.[429] went back up the hill and carried the little Montagnard radioman down, piggy-back, as I was too beat to do anything else. I had recently been hospitalized with malaria, and was down to 150 lbs. Returning once more to the top, I brought down the gunner, aided by the medic. By this time the enemy had intensified their fire and we were forced to drag him along. he died on the way down. Finally, we received permission to withdraw and started out on foot. The enemy fire made it impossible to bring us out by air. I volunteered for the tail-end. We withdrew, fighting a bitter rear-guard action all the way down the slopes. Before we were off the hill, the jets (the fog having burned off) came in fast and bombed, strafed, and CBUed the top of that hill. We walked back home, though I, being on the ragged side of exhaustion, was trucked in part way. Captain Van Winkle had mentioned putting me in for a Silver Star, but the citation got lost in the shuffle. In fact, I wasn't even eligible for a Purple Heart, as my wounds were considered minor (the regs at that time had been changed to require 48 hours under care and a MD's exam). I did receive a promotion to Lance Corporal.[430]

Taylor

As Van Winkle was about two-thirds down the hill, moving to FOB-3, when he remembered he had left the radio on the hill. Unknown to him, PFC Taylor had already destroyed it. "I was so disgusted with myself for leaving the radio, never realizing that it had been destroyed."[431] 25 years later, when they reconnected, Taylor "..laughed when I explained I had never mentioned that radio to anyone and said I shouldn't have worried about it all these years. He said that before he came off of the hill the last time he placed a thermite grenade on the radio as well as a M-60 MG that had taken a round through the receiver group when its operator was KIA. I was remiss hat I didn't follow through on putting him in for an award for valor. He deserved it. I know he made at least two and maybe three trips up and down that hill assisting with wounded while under fire."[432]

The unit was met about 600 meters from the FOB-3 gate by a rescue unit led by SFC Robert Cavanaugh who informed Van Winkle that Tredennick had died. The MIA, Crone, had not been recovered due to the intense enemy contact and SP5 Robert T. Mahoney and several Montagnards of the patrol were all listed as MIA.[433] After reaching FOB-3, the patrol was informed to pack up their gear and get ready to move to DaNang[434]. DENVER left on 30 January to DaNang o debrief and return to Okinawa.[435] Fusco and Tredinnick had become very good friends with some of the Bru, and Lua, the platoon leader that was hit on the Co Roc insertion, had given Fusco and Tredinnick two or three parrots.[436] The two soldiers had become [427] Statement of Sgt Dennis Lansing, 8 February 1968, in documents sent by Lee Dunlap, 13 September 1988.

---

[428] Statement of SP5 John L. Frescura, 8 February 1968, in documents sent by Lee Dunlap, 13 September 1988.
[429] Sgt. Donald A. Rumph, "Report on Operation 29 Jan 68 in RVN," in letter from Rumph, 9 Oct 1994.
[430] Taylor, F. James, "Up Hill 471 With the Green Berets," mailed postmarked 19 July 1993.
[431] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 15 July 1993. In 1993, when the two reconnected, Van Winkle learned that Taylor had destroyed the radio.
[432] Van Winkle, letter of 16 September 1994, Subj: Last Minute Thoughts on Our Reunion.
[433] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 15.
[434] Statement of SP5 John L. Frescura, 8 February 1968, in documents sent by Lee Dunlap, 13 September 1988.
[435] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 23 October 1994.
[436] Conversation with Harlan E. Van Winkle, 23 October 1994.

inseparable and when Tredinnick was killed "it just sort of ruined Fusco for the rest of his life."[437]

In retrospect, Van Winkle felt his unit had been the victim of a classic NVA ambush "designed to take advantage of our desire to recover the bodies of Americans killed in action."[438] However, he wondered why they waited until the unit was on the ground before springing the ambush. "The most logical time would have been as we were getting off the helicopters. With the firepower that they had they could have easily destroyed at least two of the insert ships and mopped up the survivors without much problem."[439]

In early April, 1968, after battalion 1/9 had taken Hill 471, FOB-3 was notified of several bodies believed to be FOB-3 members found on the hill. LtCol Roy Bahr, the CO of FOB-3, sent Hammond M. Salley [440] and one of the Medics, Denis Chericone, to retrieve them. Chericone, who had arrived Christmas Eve, 1967, had been Crone's bunk-mate in the medical tent before it got blown up at the beginning of the siege and everyone moved underground.[441] Five or six Marines met then and escorted them to two bodies, one American and one Bru Montagnard but wouldn't come near the bodies. The stench was terrible.[442] "We walked over and we turned one guy over. And I remember turning him over, and he was a friend of mine. And the flies all flew in my face, and the smell got on me, and I puked really quick."[443] The bodies had been virtually untouched by the NVA; personal effects and most of their military gear was still in place. A radio with several bullet holes in it was still on the American's back. There was a sheath knife that Denis recognized as belonging to Sgt Crone; the knife had Crone's name on it. There was no evidence of molestation.[444] As Salley and Chericone picked up Crone's body, his body was so deteriorated that his head fell off and rolled down the slope. Salley retrieved it and placed it back in the body bag.[445]

Upon return to FOB-3, Salley recalls, "We stank so much that Chericone burned his clothes. I had to take a shower and change clothes before I was allowed back into our TOC."[446] After burning his clothes in the trash burner, Chericone "went down in the medical bunker and drank. I drank a half a bottle of whisky straight down–Bourbon. It didn't even touch me. Stone sober. I remember one of the Sergeants standing there and going, 'Wow, kid, what happened to you?' He was amazed a 21 year-old kid poured this bottle of liquor straight down."[447] Chericone was the youngest soldier in FO B-3, sometimes called "the kid," and "they all kinda took me under their wing."[448]

Capt. Lee Dunlap departed Khe Sanh and returned to Okinawa where he was part of a staff that developed special projects developing capabilities to deliver nuclear demolitions by free fall. He returned to the States and took a career course at Fort Benning, went to a Baptist liberal arts college in Hattysburg, Mississippi, and then went to Hawaii with the 25th Infantry Division and, upon being promoted to Major, worked in the staff of US Army, Pacific. He retired in 1977. He was later hired by the Army as a civilian to modernize firing ranges in 1980. In late 1987, he received a call from Special Operations Command where he was hired as a GS-13 in the Current Operations Division working on training exercises in the Pacific.[449]

MISSION IMPOSSIBLE

---

[437] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[438] Van Winkle, Harlan E., "Ambush on Hill 471, January 29, 1968," in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 31 Dec 1996, p. 15.
[439] Ibid
[440] Hammond Salley arrived at FOB-3 6 March 1968 from USARV to work for Major Quamo in Special Projects, but as the siege continued, the CO at the time, Major David C. ("Bulldog") Smith assigned him to be the FOB-3 S-2. LtCol Bahr was the CO when Salley was sent to Hill 471 to retrieve the remains of Crone. [Hammond Salley, "Ambush Epilogue #2," 6 Nov 1996, in letter from Salley to H.E. Van Winkle, 6 Nov 1996, both documents in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 2 Jan 1997.]
[441] Conversation with Denis Chericone, 25 July 1993.
[442] Hammond Salley, letter of 6 September 1993; Hammond Salley, "Ambush Epilogue #2," 6 November 1996.
[443] Conversation with Denis Chericone, 21 August 1993.
[444] Hammond Salley, "Ambush Epilogue #2," 6 Nov 1996, in letter from Salley to H.E. Van Winkle, 6 Nov 1996, both documents in letter from Harlan E. Van Winkle, 2 Jan 1997.
[445] Chericone had been haunted many decades, blocking out the fact that Crone's head had been retrieved. It was only in the 1990s, in conversation with Salley, that he was informed that the head had been retrieved. "For years I never knew it. I picked up one body and the head rolled off down the hill. I can see myself standing there, staring, watching it bounce down the hill. I couldn't remember if I'd gone down and got it. Then he told me that he was there and said, 'Yeah, we went and got it.'" [Conversation with Denis Chericone, 25 July 1993].
[446] Hammond Salley, letter of 6 September 1993.
[447] Conversation with Denis Chericone, 25 July 1993.
[448] Ibid.
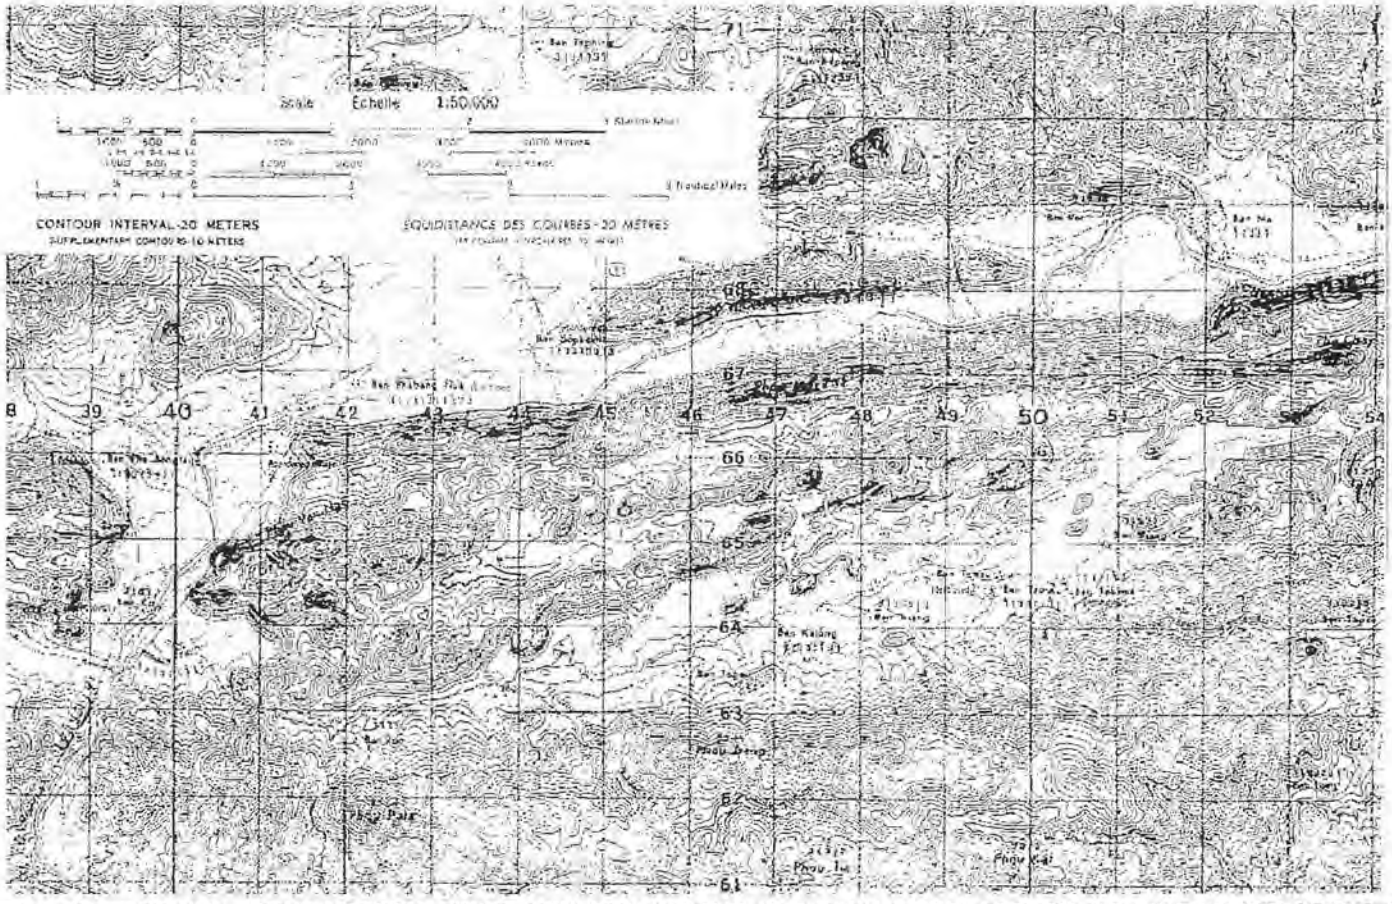
[449] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 07 November 1997.

Capt James H. Knox, one of the pilots involved in the Co Roc operation who subsequently found himself inside the FOB-3 command bunker on numerous occasions, recalls a briefing for a mission in the spires of a karst[450] cave area just west of the DMZ where the NVA Headquarters[451] controlling the Khe Sanh Siege battle was located:



SITE OF B5-T8 NVA FRONT HEADQUARTERS CONTROLLING THE KHE SANH SIEGE, APPROX. 10 MILES WEST OF THE DMZ [Near XD405605, left side, and showing Route 92] [U.S. Army Topographic Command, Series L7015, Laos, Sheet 6241 I, BAN NATHON. Note: each contour line indicates 20 more meters elevation (approx. 60 ft.)] [450] Karst refers to an irregular drainage pattern, where streams abruptly disappear into the ground, reappearing elsewhere as large springs, similar to the Karst region of Yugoslavia. It is defined as "an assemblage of topographic forms, consisting primarily of closely spaced sinks," and may be seen in areas of Kentucky, Tennessee, southern Indiana and northern Florida. [Longwell, Chester R., and Flint, Richard F., Introduction to Physical Geology, 2nd ed., New York: John Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1962, pp. 210-211.

---

[451] The Headquarters, with the secret designation, "B5-T8," had been established 6 December 1967, commanded by Major General Tran Quy Hai, Assistant Chief of Staff, PAVN General Staff, and Political Commissar Comrade Le Quang Dao, Deputy Director of the General Political Directorate for the PAVN. [Vien Lich Su Quan Su Vietnam [Vietnamese Institute for Military History], Chien dich Tien cong Duong so 9—Khe Sanh, Xuan He 1968 [Highway 9—Khe Sanh Offensive, Spring and Summer 1968], Hanoi, 1987, p. 16. Cong Tac Hau Can: Chien Dich Duong 9 Khe Sanh Xuan He 1968. [Rear Service Operations: 1968 Spring-Summer Khe Sanh Rute 9 Campaign] Published by the Tong Cuc Hau Can [General Directorate for Rear services] under direction of Major General Tran Chi Cuong. Hanoi, June, 1988, p. 07, footnote.] The presence of NVA in this area had been reported by JTAD in October, 1967, placing a 800-man NVA battalion at XD 687547, armed with two 122mm rocket launchers, 1 82mm mortars, 3 60mm mortars, and other armament. [26MAR 041110Z/Oct67, Operation ARDMORE INTSUM #79]. The NVA Front Headquarters is indicated on a map in CIA, Directorate of Intelligence, Memorandum, "The Continuing Communist Military Threat in Northern South Vietnam," 13 March 1968, indicating the HQ 7 miles west of the DMZ. U.S. tactical maps indicate numerous fortified hill positions in karst formation in the general area from N/S grid line 37 to 58 and E/W grid line 63 to 67 [U.S. Army Topographic Command, Series L7015, Sheet 6241 I, Ban Nathon, 1970. The official North Vietnamese military history of Khe Sanh indicates the Front Headquarters at Sap Lit (XD6266). [Chien Dich Tiehn Cong Duong 9--Khe Sanh Xuan He 1968 [The Spring-Summer 1968 Khe Sanh--Route 9 Offensive Campaign], Hanoi: Vietnam Institute for Military History, Ministry of Defense, 1987, p. 24].

> We were engaged in an absolutely insane mission that was fortunately finally aborted. We were going to try to kidnap General Giap! It led to a really ugly scene during the briefing. The guys from the CIA or wherever were there in their short-sleeved white shirts looking like IBM execs, and they had the briefing. An Army Special Forces LtCol was there. We were going to put a team up in that very severe geological karst formation. There was a discussion on how big the team would be—I can't remember all the details, but I think it was a fairly good-sized team. A decision was made—not by us, but basically by the Army—that we would not try to extract them at night: due to the terrain there would be no possible way but to make a bad situation worse if we tried to go in there with a bunch of helicopters at night and get this team out. The team wasn't hot about going anyway. At that point, an Army Lieutenant, who was going on the team, said, 'You mean, if I'm in there at night, nobody's going to come and get me?' And we said, 'Look, we'll do whatever we're told to do; we'll try to get you'—and the Colonel is saying, 'Don't do it.' And I said, 'We'll come up there if you want and try and get an airstrike' and that kind of thing. And around and around we went. Finally, this Lieutenant told the Colonel he wasn't going, whereupon the Colonel arrested him on the spot, put him on a helicopter, and said that he was going to be court-martialed! Right on the spot! Right in front of me![452]

It was a mission to go to the middle of the ocean and not getting wet.

Deep in the bowels of the specially reinforced command bunker of FOB-3 (the TOC), in the communications area, four North Vietnamese Chieu Hois were monitoring radios and provided direct translations of enemy messages that they intercepted. "They had one that there was going to be a very, very top secret high-level meeting. It gave the coordinates, and then we figured out it was to be General Giap.[453] "We set up five or six Arc Lights to come in across from Thailand. We really bombarded that area where this was supposed to take place. We had reason to believe that the 'biggy' had come down from Hanoi, but we just didn't get him. I'm sure we left some turmoil in there. But we couldn't get into that area for a Bomb Damage Assessment afterwards."[454]

This particular B-52 strike did not escape White House scrutiny. In a memo by Walt W. Rostow to the President of 7:50am, 30 Jan 1968, he reports: "Herewith Westy reports an extremely successful use of intelligence to identify and attack with B-52s the new, recently established senior headquarters west of the DMZ. (Some of our best analysts suspect Gen. Giap may have taken personal command at this installation). Westy believes the attack may 'at least delay' the major offensive in Northern I Corps."[455]

The strike, however, went unknown to the American public. Gen. Westmoreland sent the following to General Wheeler (CJCS) on 01 Feb:

> Any public statement about successful B-52 attack on the major enemy headquarters would certainly compromise the source of the information, enemy corrective action could diminish our intelligence effort country-wide. No valid cover story can be developed. We have no ground reconnaissance resources which could be admitted to be in that area. While photographic interpretation could confirm a possible logistic complex, it could not support identification of a major headquarters.. It should also be pointed out that any such statement would be an admission of our [here two lines are not declassified]. Additionally, approval for the strike was granted by American Ambassador, Vientiane upon condition that no publicity would be given to the strike.[456]

During an interview with BGen George J. Keegan, Jr., Director of Intelligence, 7th Air Force, on 14 Jul 68, the General noted: "On 21 Jan 1968, MACV had become so overextended in the ground war, that General Westmoreland assigned General Momyer [Commander, 7th Air Force] a principal role in the defense of Khe Sanh... The Air Force thoroughly reconnoitered I Corps using special sensors plus ARDF [Aerial Radio Direction Finders, in EC-47 aircraft].. The reconnaissance effort produced 2000 targets around Khe Sanh."[457]

A USAF report later noted: "On 30 January, the largest B-52 strike of the war to that date was flown against a command

---

[452] Conversation with James Hargrove Knox, 04 October 1994.

[453] Conversations with James W. Moore, 26 Feb 1996. Moore, who arrived at FOB-3 in September, 1967 and had been twice wounded in Korea, was the Operations Sergeant of FOB-3. [Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 Dec 1995].

[454] Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995.

[455] W.W. Rostow, Memorandum to the President, Tue., 30 Jan 1968, 7:50 a.m., MAC 01430, LBJ Library, National Security File, Vietnam Country File, 2A(1) I Corps and DMZ 1/66 - 1/69, Document #40.

[456] Westmoreland, message to Gen. Wheeler, 010010Z/Feb68, in LJB Library, National Security File, Vietnam Country File, Container #42, 5EE(1) LAOS 10/67 - 12?68, Document #52.

[457] Hurley, Alfred F., "Interview with Brigadier General George J. Keegan, Director of Intelligence, 7AF, on 14 July 1968," Exhibit #7 of Supporting Documents to CHECO Report #74, The EC-47 in Southeast Asia, 20 Sep 1968.

and control center in Eastern Laos, 36 sorties in the morning and 9 at night. There were 85 secondary explosions and numerous cave-ins. These attacks greatly disrupted the enemy's plans."[458] Bruce E. Jones of the MACV Intelligence Section known as CICV (Combined Intelligence Center Vietnam) notes this strike was based on signals intelligence, SPARS (Special Aerial and Radio Surces), striking a honeycombed cave area of a major NVA headquarters.[459]

However, General Giap was not killed and, Gen Westmoreland reported "..some elements of the headquarters is back in communication with Hanoi after 38 hours of silence."[460]

Charles Berg of FOB-3 was scheduled to launch into this area following the B-52 strike (probably for a BDA—Bomb Damage Assessment), and had done a VR, got back with SgtMaj Pegram, and exclaimed, "Whew! That's a bummer!" He had been scheduled to launch the day before, but had insisted on his VR 24 hours before an insert, and the VR was approved. He recalls:[461]

> We were just north of ELEPHANT, and I'm in an O-2 with an Air Force guy. I turned over and looked, and right in front of me, 300 yards away, was a 4-prop wing transport aircraft, brown color. I looked at him [the pilot] and I punched him and said, 'Look!' He banked and looked at it. It was a Russian plane! And I said, 'Go in on him!' I had a CAR-15. I had a bunch of rounds. I said, 'Go on top of him; I can shoot him down.' The guy went, 'No!' He flipped the bird on the other side and he started talking. He forgot he had his intercom on. He's talking to one of the C&C[462] ships up there.[463] He started making a SITREP, and he said, 'Yes, again in the same area,' and I said, 'What?' He said, 'O shit!' and got me off the comm.
>
> When we got back, I said, 'Why didn't you come up on top of him? I could of shot him down! I could of dropped that airplane.' And he said, 'Well, it really wasn't what you thought it was.' I said, 'Yes it was! It was a Russian transport plane. I think I even know the kind if I see the images again.' And he said, 'Well, we see them quite a few times up here. We just report them.' So when I came back and I was supposed to insert the next day, they gave a delay on it, and that day is when they put the B-52 strike in. I went back down and got the folder—the area studies folder, and that was the Headquarters area. And I asked, 'You're going to put me in there—in the Headquarters area!' And they said, 'Well, we'll get you in and get you out.' I said, 'Yeah!' You gotta realize: those people up there are not the home guard or the 'fourth line;' they're the real crack troops, like the same people that are running around with Westmoreland.

On 28 March, SOG team ASP was inserted just south of this Front Headquarters on a CIRCUS ACT (wire-tap) mission, came under fire, requested extraction from XD434574. A H-3 helicopter attempted a ladder extraction,but it broke, and the three Americans of the team are still listed as MIA (SFC Alan L. Boyer, SGM George R. Brown, and SFC Charles G. Huston).[464]

LANG VEI
BACKGROUND

Lang Vei (XD 795361), a Vietnamese military outpost with American Advisors of Team A-101, had been overrun during the Battle of the Hills on 04 May 1967. NVA posing as PF recruits had killed several sentries in the camp and then guided in the outside force which subsequently killed both the CO and XO.[465] From that time, a new camp site was developed (at XD 78443573) in which no indigenous troops would be in the inner perimeter of the American advisors (other than Vietnamese Special Forces, LLDB), to preclude that from being repeated.

---

[458] Maj. James B. Pralle, Arc Light June 1967 - December 1968, HQ, PACAF, Tactical Evaluation, CHECO Division, p. 28.
[459] Jones, Bruce E., War Without Windows, New York: The Vanguard Press, 1988, pp. 136, 168.
[460] Westmoreland 010010Z/Feb68 to Gen Wheeler, CJCS, in LBJ Library, National Security File, Vietnam Country File, Container #92, #52.
[461] Conversation with Charles Berg, 13 Nov 1994.
[462] Command and Control.
[463] USAF C-130 Airborne Command and Control Center (ABCCC), callsign: HILLSBORO.
[464] This action is described in Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, p. 266.
[465] For complete discussion of details, see Stubbe: Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed (2008), pp. 54-55.

LANG VEI TAOR LATE 1967

CHAPLAIN RAY WILLIAM STUBBE LEADS WORSHIP FOR SEABEES OF MCB-11 ON TOP OF FUTURE TOC 23 AUGUST 1967

A detail from Naval Mobile Construction Battalion (NMCB) ELEVEN arrived in early July to begin the work on the new site. Work progressed rapidly. By 25 July 1967, ground clearing for the new site was 75% compolete and two of three unmarked old French mine fields wre cleared. By 25 August 1967, foundations for nine primary and secondary bunkers had been poured and the foundations and walls for the TOC[466]. The new camp was occupied 21 Sep 1967 with minor construction work still in progress. On 31 October 1967, Captain Frank Willoughby, the CO (and former Marine Sergeant)[467], menioned the new camp site had received 142,000 tons of air dropped materials to build the new camp in 2.5 days on the smallest ZD in Vietnam, setting a US Air Force record.[468]

The precarious position of the Lang Vei Special Forces camp, so close to the Laotian border, prompted the 26th Marines to issue Operatinos Plan 5-67 on 18 September 1967 stating: "Lang Vei Special Forces Camp is located in a position that renders it very accessible to attack .. with little warning. Experience indicates that attacks are normally conducted during periods of darkness and low visibility, and it should be assumed that HLZ's and land routes into the area will be ambushed." The mission was stated: "To conduct spoiling attacks within capabilities in coordination with Lang Vei defense forces when the threat of enemy attack is detected or significant troop movements are detected."[469] To execute the mission, a ground force of a reinforced rifle company would be committed with additional rifle companies and a battalion command group committed as necessary. Enemy forces during July and August, 1967, were estimated to be at least one enemy battalion operating southwest of Lang Vei in the vicinity of Co Roc (XD 742318).

With the fall of BV-33 in Laos on 25 January, Lang Vei was isolated. William Craig, Team Sergeant of A-101, concluded that the abandonment of Khe Sanh village "..killed us. We were cut off. We were finished."[470] On 14 January, MACV requested a review of the contingency plan to reinforce Lang Vei in view of the rapidly developing NVA threat,[471] 3rd Marine Division responded that the plan written in September, 1967, providing for the initial support by one reinforced rifle company and command group to be deployed on a 2-hour alert remained valid with no additional assistance or support required (as of 20 Jan).[472] Of course, what military unit will acknowledge to its superiors it cannot execute its assigned mission?

---

[466] TOC, Tactical Operations Center, corresponds to the USMC designation of COC, Combat Operations Center

[467] Conversation with Miles Wilkins, 22 March 1994. Wilkins was XO of A-101.

[468] Stubbe: Khe Sanh Chaplain (unpublished manuscript), 01 April 1970, entry for 31 Oct 1967, p. 348

[469] Tab F to CO, 26th Marines 3/WMW/clr, Ser 0050-67, 8 Oct 1967, Subj: Command Chronology for Period 1 September to 30 September 1967.

[470] Conversation with William Craig, 04 October 1988.

[471] COMUSMACV 140801Z/Jan68, Lang Vei Special Forces Camp, in 3rd MrDiv Msgs, Etc., file, Jan 1968, Encl (34). The message stated: "Maximum effort will be made to insure the defense posture of the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei leaves nothing to be desired ... Any assistance required to accomplish contingency reinforcement of Lang Vei which is beyond your tactical support capability should be reported to this headquarters without delay."

[472] 3rd MarDiv 200808Z/Jan68, in 3rd MarDiv Msgs, Etc., file, Jan 1968, Encl (53). The message stated: "Fire support procedures are adequate. No additional assistance/support required at this time from contingency reinforcement of Lang Vei other than additional helo support for Khe Sanh area which will be addressed separately."

Everything dramatically and suddenly changed. The threat involved far more than one battalion as 40,000 NVA suddenly saturated the area immediately around KSCB. On 20 Jan 68, the SOG teams that had been on Co Roc reported their findings to Lang Vei, and on the same day, Colonel Lownds sent GySgt Max Friedlander (of the 17th Interrogator Translator Team (ITT)) from KSCB to Lang Vei to brief them on what Lt Tonc, the NVA rallier, had disclosed. He returned to KSCB about a half-hour before darkness. "They thanked me for the information [but] I honestly don't remember them being totally, overly interested."[473] When the District Headquarters in Khe Sanh village was abandoned, it had become the CP HQ for a NVA regiment, if not a division. The BV-33 position, nearby in Laos, had fallen to NVA tanks on 25 Jan, and refugees from that position flocked to occupy the former Lang Vei campsite,[474] assuredly disclosing the attack by tanks they had experienced Photo intelligence of 25 January and 06 February disclosed numerous foxholes and positions in the immediate area,[475] On 05 February, aerial recon detected an ambush point at XD 81603872 where Route 9 was piano-cut at several places.[476].

In addition, not all the NVA tanks attacked Lang Vei; some apparently took positions to ambush any relieving forces that might arrive by helicopter. In his FMFPAC Debrief, Colonel Lownds commented:

> ..if the intelligence reprots were indeed correct, it would appear that the enemy had well anticipated that we might possibly reinforce the garrison at Lang Vei. He had troops positiioned along the edges of Route 9, and it's interesting to note that after the tanks had finished their mission ast Lang Vei, and as a matter of fact in one case a couple of tanks actually never did get into Lang Vei, but they went north and northeast of Lang Vei's position, and were actually as near as we can determine in a position that we had planned as our helicopter landing zones, so that he had in fact anticipated a relief force and had positioned himself where he could intercept not only ground relief force, but also a helicopter relief force.[477]

The refugees from BV-33 that had migrated to Lang Vei after they had been overrun by tanks on 25 January, were placed at the old Lang Vei camp. George Quamo and William Craig were close friends, and when Quamo visited Lang Vei, "he always took me in a helicopter ride. We'd talk and talk and talk."[478] When George Quamo and William Craig overflew their area at Ban Houei Sane, Craig stated: "I know where they're not going to stay, and that's with us! I'll just put them over in the other camp." Quamo agreed, "That's a good idea." Craig notes they "..were orphans of the Laotian Army. That's why I us3ed to feel sorry for them. They were always stuck up there, always getting hit. We used to airdrop them stuff when I was over there in civilian clothes, flying with Air America. I was in Savannakhet in 1961 and 1962 [as part of Operation WHITE STAR]."[479]

Despite the raging battle of incoming on KSCB, conditions at the USSF camp at Lang Vei were rather tranquil. The XO, Miles Wilkins, comments: "We actually had very little contact, even when Khe Sanh was having a hard time leaving their perimeter. I was still driving up and down Highway 9, taking out mamasans back. We had vry little enemy contact. They basically just let us alone. We could go out on patrols and never see anybody."[480] Col Jonalthan Ladd (Commander, 5th Special Forces Group) had visited the Lang Vei camp on 6 Feb (along with Col Dan Baldwin and Sergeant-Major Hodge of

---

[473] Conversation with Max Friedlander, 15 February 1990.

[474] CINCPAC 270202Z/JAN68, original message from American Embassy, Saigon, to Secretary of State, Washington DC, 260811Z/Jan68, notes that the refugees from BV-33 included 510 military and 2270 civilians, all joining the local Bru civilian refugees at the village of Lang Vei and supported with essential items from Lang Vei USSF. The return of Lao military and civilians of BV-33 to Savannakhet was completed on 150750Z/Feb 68 and included 2 females, 1 child, 111 officers and men, including the Battalion Commander (Soulang Phetsomphou), total: 114. 3 qualified officers remained at KSCB to screen future arrivals. [III MAF 181350Z/Feb68 to COMUSMACV, Subj: Lao refugees in Khe Sanh area.

[475] 25 foxholes and 2 antiaircraft positions (XD 809378), 25 foxholes (XD 844361), 94 foxholes (XD 847376), and 24 foxholes (XD 845377), and on 06 Feb 1968: a fortified area with bunkers and heavy trail activity (XD 793393), bunkers above ground (XD 800395), a hut with heavy trail activity (XD 805395), an underground bunker and heavy trail activity (XD 804394), an above-ground bunker with heavy trail activity (XD 803395), an open bunker with well-used trails (XD 803394), a supply area with heavy trail activity (XD 810398), a hut with heavy rail activity, bunkers and 3 underground entrances (XD 809393), 2 foxholes near a well-used trail (XD 84395), 2 bunkers above ground and open,, and well-used trails (XD 819389), and bunkers and possible storage in village (XD 830386). [MACV J2 CICV 090045Z/Feb68, SUPIR #0416-68 (Supplementary Photographic Intelligence Report) on Mission #4673].

[476] III MAF COC 080621Z/Feb68, Project NIAGARA Photo IPIR, (Initial Photographic Intelligence Report), in III MAF COC Journal and File 08/09Feb68 #340].

[477] Comments of COL David E. Lownds, HQMC Oral History Tape #2621.

[478] Conversation with William Craig, 16 July 1990.

[479] Conversation with William Craig, 17 July 1991. Craig states: "Khe Sanh [i.e., Col Lownds] wouldn't let them in. Well, I wouldn't let them in either, quite frankly."

[480] Conversation with Miles Wilkens, 08 April 1995.

CCN[481] and LTC Schungel) in connection with attempts to obtain anti-tank mines for them. Sounds from moving tanks could even be heard while he was visiting them! He then departed, leaving LTC Schungel ("CROSSBOW") to remain there. His efforts had been most frustrating: "I went to DaNang to see the Marine General, General Cushmen. He was all for helping me but the people down in Saigon wouldn't believe that there were tanks up there; they said we didn't need them [the mines]. Besides, they couldn't give them to the Special Forces. They went through all kinds of reasons why we couldn't have them... I was furious that they wouldn't give us any damn antitank mines. The Marines were perfectly willing to give them to us."[482]

While Col Jonathan Ladd may not have experienced the heat of battle while at Lang Vei, his observations in the eye of the hurricane might be unaware of the swirling malestorm wreaking annihilation surrounding it, with destructive consequences for those who would penetrate that intervening terrain to arrive at Lang Vei. Not only were there plentiful enemy forces and positions, but other factors (as are noted in the following Chronology of Events, infra) of the situation precluded implementation of the relief protocol. These included the deteriorsted weather[483] as well as an abnormally vicious incoming at KSCB commencing at 070045H.[484] probably to discourage artillery support for Lang Vei. By 0140H, the Combat Base was receiving six rounds per minute,[485] the heaviest NVA bombardment of the Vietnam War up to that point.[486] At 070121H, the CO of 26th Marines set RED ALERT,[487] and between 070045H and 070800H, KSCB received 100 rounds of rocket fire and approximately 450 rounds of mortar fire.[488] The majority of the incoming impactted in the area of 1/26 (at XD 849417) and 3/26 (at XD 837417) perhaps to preclude an assembly for reinforcement. A check at first light disclosed that the KSCB runway had been so damaged that only light aircraft could land on it.[489]

CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS[490]

05 Feb- Co E/2/26 on Hill 861-Alfa received a very heavy NVA ground attack which temporarily penetrates part of the defensive position before the Marines regain control. Results: 7 USMC KIA; 109 NVA KIA.

06 Feb 68:

2255 - Light ground attack on E/2/26 on 861-A, evaluated as a diversion (which it turned out to be). KSCB receives incoming 82mm mortars and 122mm rockets and a light ground probe against ARVN lines. Lang Vei receives incoming (type and number of rounds unknown). ARVN at Lang Vei report "many, many VC in the area, NVA also."

2325 - Attack on E/2/26 ceases; KSCB still receiving ground probe.

2355 - FSCC of 3dMarDiv reports 175mm batteries at Camp Carroll and Rock Pile are firing one gun, 4 rounds, every 4

---

[481] Conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 25 Sep 1989.

[482] Ladd, COL Jonathan, Interview by Col James P. Bergen and LtCol Willard M.Burleson, 26 Feb 1971, Dept. of the Army, U.S. Army Military History Institute,, Carlisle Barracks, PA, for "The Creighton Abrams Story." [Khe Sanh archives 67961-67970].

[483] From 1200-2000H on 06 Feb, the weather presented generally good flying conditions with ceilings of 2500-4000 ft. and good visibility. From 2000H, 06 Feb, to 0400H, 07 Feb, weather was marginal with clouds at 1000 ft. Flying conditions became poor at 0400H and continued through 1200H with visibility one and one-half miles or less. The forecast was for marginal to poor conditions in the afternoon of 07 Feb with ceilings at 1500 ft. (the height of KSCB!) and visibility for one to five miles in light rain and fog. Flying conditions were predicted to become poor to 1800H, 08 Feb. [Gen Westmoreland back channel 071026Z/Feb68 to Gen Wheeler, CJCS].

[484] III MAF COC 070743Z/Feb68.

[485] "Log of Events Lang Vei Attack, 7 Feb 68," in III MAF COC Journal and File, 08/09 Feb 1968 #7.

[486] Time magazine, 16 Feb 1968.

[487] 26 MAR 062309Z/Feb68, Operation SCOTLAND SITREP #393.

[488] CG III MAF 080423Z/Feb68, Special Report to FMFPAC, in III MAF COC Journal and File, #174.

[489] 26MAR Operation SCOTLAND SITREPs #393 and 396.

[490] Based on: HQ, 21st Military History Detachment, 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, report, Subj: Combat Action Interview Report, Battle of Lang Vei Special Forces Camp, 7 February 1968, dated 22 March 1968, Incl (7), Company C, 5th SFGA Journal Entries (7 February 1968) and Incl (8) Monitored Radio Transmissions 6-7 February 1968. Interviews of MajGen Rathvon McClure Tompkins, LtCol Harvey M. Harper, Jr., BrigGen Carl W. Hoffman, 1/Lt John T. Williamson, and Capt William J. O'Connor, "Role of 3d MarDiv units in defense of Special Forces Camp Lang Vei," HQMC Oral History Tape #2535 (interviews conducted 10-24 Feb 1968 at Dong Ha Combat Base). "Log of Events Lang Vei Attack 7 Feb 1968," in III MAF COC Journal and File 08/09Feb68 #7. 3d MarDiv 071209Z/Feb68, Spot Report #78, in III MAF COC Journal and File, 07/08Feb68 #258.

minutes in support of Khe Sanh.[491]

07 Feb 68:

0045 - Weather report for Khe Sanh: From 1200-2000 on 06Feb, the weather presented generally good flying conditions with ceilings of 2500-4000 ft. and good visibility. From 2000, 06 Feb to 0100, 07 Feb, it was marginal with clouds at 1000 ft. Flying conditions became poor at 0100 and continued through 1200 with visibility one and one-half miles or less. The forecast was for marginal to poor conditions in the afternoon of 07 Feb with ceilings at 1500 ft. and visibility for one to five miles in light rain and fog. Flying conditions were predicted to become poor to 1800, 08 Feb.

0045 - Lang Vei received heavy ground attack, some enemy are inside wire, and enemy supported by tanks. KSCB at this point is firing all available supporting fires in support of Lang Vei, all batteries of 1st Battalion, 13th Marines.

KSCB is receiving heavy incoming.

0054 - S-2, 26th Marines, reports interception of NVA radio transmission that indicated NVA artillery would increase shelling of KSCB. (Throughout the attack, this proved to be true).

0105 - III MAF reports 7 tanks in wire at Lang Vei. 26th Marines receiving SPOOKY to support Lang Vei. Heavy incoming at KSCB.

G-2, 3dMarDiv, reports that a Command and Control element, presumably controlling the attack on Lang Vei was located fairly precisely and passed this information to 26th Marines who immediately targetted the installation.

0121 - CO, 26Mar sets RED ALERT

0130 - SPUNKY HANSON [Lang Vei] requests VICTOR TANGO [VT fuse arty] at XD785359.

0135 - KSCB is averaging 6 rounds incoming per minute. Capt Edwards of 5th Special Forces Group reported to III MAF COC a call from Col. Schungel: "We need air right away of there will be nothing left."[492]

SPUNKY HANSON reports the VICTOR TANGO arty fire is impacting in his position.

0140 - III MAF reports 9 tanks in wire at Lang Vei (1 tank knocked out; 7 inside position on hill, 2 in wire).

0148 - SPUNKY HANSON requests VICTOR TANGO fire and flares all over his area.

0150 - MGen Tompkins directs CO, 26Mar, to use COFRAM against enemy tanks at Lang Vei.[493]

---

[491] The 175s at Camp Carroll, with a range of 32,800 meters, reached just short of Lang Vei, and those at Camp Rock Pile just short of the Laotian border. 90mm ranks could fire eleven miles, and therefore all the way to Co Roc. Range probable error for 175mm guns average range of 20,000 meters to 65 meters and deflection probable error is 10 meters. Assuming four probable errors in relation to point of impact, the projectile could land 260 meters over or 260 meters short of computed point of impact and 40 meters right or left of the gun target line.

[492] "Log of Events," cited. While those at Lang Vei requested air, Marines at Khe Sanh were anxious to fire artillery according to Col Kent O.W. Steen, the Fire Support Coordinator in the Khe Sanh FSCC. Due to SAV-A-PLANE doctrine, no artillery could be fired from the time of launch of aircraft. This left Lang Vei without any supporting fire.

[493] COFRAM was a TOP SECRET class of munitions—Col Lownds had to receive a special clearance for this—which had been kept in reserve as a way of stopping large masses of troops, "the great hordes." Also referred to as M444, or "Improved Conventional Munitions," or "Firecracker," this munition (if delivered in aerial bombs or artillery) exploded by sending out numerous ping-pong ball sized mini-grenades whose inner surface was pressed in such a way to cause the surface to break into many thousands of tiny bits of metal. Clearance for bringing COFRAM into Vietnam was requested by Gen Westmoreland on 12 Jan to the JCS for use in unpopulated areas of I Corps, and was controlled on the highest levels—CINCPAC. Once used it lost its security classification, and there was some discussion whether or not Tompkins had the authority to direct its use; he undoubtedly wanted to give the best he could to support Lang Vei in this unusual and desperate situation, whether he had the authority to do so or not. Col Lownds, in the flurry of leading the situation, inquired concerning what little he knew about COFRAM at the time, that in order for it to work, the little mini-grenades inside the round need to bounce into the air. He wrote HQMC, "They came to me and said, What's your clearance? And I said, I worked for the atomic weapons business, so I probably have the highest clearance you probably have. And they said, Well, we're going to have to give you another clearance so we can talk to you about COFRAM. I said, What the hell do you mean you're going to have to give me another clearance? Here I am, the goddam Commander and you're telling me you can't talk to me about it unless—I told them to take the damn stuff and go home! They said, OK, fill out this form. I said, I'm not going to fill out a damn form; I just finished a tour in the armed forces special weapons project working in the atomic weapons with a clearance that would include anything, and if you don't want to believe it—I couldn't fill it out because my mind wouldn't let me concentrate enough to know where I was ten years ago. The war was going on." [Conversation with Col David E. Lownds, 13 July 1997]. In his FMFPAC Debrief, Col Lownds stated: "The time came that they said 'You're going to use this, now make good use of it; it's something special." I had never been privy to what COFRAM was, and I'm a full Colonel in the Marine Corps. ... I finally got a Brigadier General from Fort Sill; he's the guy that came in and briefed me and my staff on how to use it ... There was nobody at Khe Sanh who knew how it should be used, how it should be fired, what the limitations are, the advantages, what was a good target, what wasn't a good target." [Col. Lownds, HQMC Oral History Tape #3139, Debrief of 29 July 1968 at FMFPAC,

MGen Tompkins asks 3dMarDiv DASC if any air is over Lang Vei. It is determined a flareship, SPOOKYI, and fixed wing are now working targets in and near Lang Vei.[494]

0154 - SPUNKY HANSON requests a Check Fire on VICTOR TANGO.

0200 - III MAF Air Officer asks how much air is on station. 26MAR reports 2 flights there now running TPQ-10 attacks every 15 minutes.

0210 - The amount of air increases to 4 flights, directed by COVEY.

0215 - 5thSF reports 5 tanks knocked.

0220 - SPUNKY HANSON reports troops hitting both ends of his compound.

0225 - AO over Lang Vei requests flights armed with ZUNI rockets (which are more effective on tanks); present flights are out of rocket ordnance. Flights will be scrambled in DaNang.

0240 - 26MAR reports troops inside wire at Lang Vei. At the request of CO, Lang Vei, firecrackers are not used because "he wants to use air on them" and if Firecrackers are used, air will be called off.[495]

0243 - 26MAR expects KSCB will be attacked at any minute with these circumstances occuring so close. MGEN Tompkins is concerned Firecrackers are not being used, and speaks with Capt Mirza Baig, 26MAR Target Officer, asking him to pass the message: "suggest CO Lang Vei check air bring in Firecracker then air be brought in again." Shortly after this, and before any decision on what was to be done about Firecrackers, at 0245, Tompkins receives word from III MAF that everything above ground at Lang Vei is enemy. So, with this news, Gen Tompkins says, "Let's use Firecrackers, then HE, then air."

0250 - 5 tanks reported destroyed.

0255 - Two large secondary explosions at XD770418 [6 clicks due north of Lang Vei, 7.5 clicks due west of KSCB] and 2 additional large secondary explosions at XD753412 [approx. 6 clicks NW of Lang Vei].

0257 - 13th Marines fired 28 rounds of Firecracker ordnance at XD786357. [THIS IS THE FIRST USE OF FIRECRACKER IN BATTLE]. The cycle of fire in support of Lang Vei is: 5 minutes of Firecracker, 5 minutes of mixed HE and VT, followed by 10 minutes air strikes on the perimeter.

0300 - KSCB still received heavy incoming mortars and rockets, mostly rockets.

0315 - 26MAR reports loss of comm with Lang Vei. 26 rounds of 105mm firecracker are fired followed by VT HE and airstrikes.

0320 - Gen Tompkins asks Lang Vei via III MAF relay "if they at Lang Vei have gas masks, do they want CS on position?" Response: "Do not want CS on position." No explanation is given.

0325 - III MAF reports tank on top of comm bunker. Special Forces have deliberately destroyed primary means of communication and are using secondary freq. Air strikes resume.

0335 III MAF confirmed a C-130 to arrive at Khe Sanh with passengers, about 100 paratroopers of Special Forces personnel. At 0400H, a conference was called consisting of Col Smith of III MAF, Capt Edwards of USSF, and Maj Saimon. The Special Forces requested a relief force be dispatched to Lang Vei at first light. Gen. Tompkins, after due consideration of the situation , replied, "Negative." The condition of the runway at KSCB made landing of relief troops who might be dispatched to Lang Vei ill-advised. Furthermore, there were tanks running betsween KSCB and Lang Vei as well as large amounts of infantry (as detected by electronic sensors), and KSCB was receiving considerable incoming. At 0350H, Gen Thompkins and Col Smith, the G-3 Watch officer at III MAF, registered a complaint about the proposed employment of troops moving into the area since it would inhibit our supporting arms, and further, Gen Tompkins inquired, "How would the forces make their way to Lang Vei?" Gen Tompkins also registered a complaint with LtGen Cushman, CG of III MAF, who said he knew nothing of the C-130 plane load of USSF but would check. Tompkins felt the enemy was planning precisely for an attempted rescue and would ambush the route from Khe Sanh to Lang Vei. "General Tompkins had long planned a 'set piece defense,' not venturing out too far and falling into traps that the enemy may have set in the area, but force the enemy to come to us. His opinion was that it would be extremely un wise to mount any sort of move toward Lang Vei. General Cushman concurred that such a move would be exceedingly unwise, in fact, stupid."[496]

Hawaii].

[494] SPOOKY "wasn't satisfied with the weather, targets or conditions (he had all sorts of reasons why he couldn't) and so he did not fire—however, he did drop flares for the camp." The OinC of the Khe Sanh DASC relates, "I got the impression that SPUNKY HANSON did not or was not able to really adjust the air strikes very effectively. The COVEY spent much of his time trying to determine location of friendlies."

[495] Due to the SAV-A-PLANE doctrine.

[496] Comments of BGen Carl W. Hoffman, HQMC Oral History Tape #2535, 3dMarDiv COC 071209Z/Feb68, Spot Rpt #78 in III MAF COC Journal and File, 07/08Feb68 #258. Gen Tompkins later defended his decision: "Why wasn't any column sent? (A) There were no troops and the base was under attack at the same time, and I(B) had the base not been under attack, I still 0343 - S-3, 26MAR, reports incoming C-130 with approx. 100 men aboard.

0350 - AO spots flame throwers. USSF has no flame throwers.

0400 - KSCB taking heavy rockets and mortars.

0405 - CG, III MAF, radios that C-130 will not proceed to KSCB. Tompkins tells Cushman that his G-3 is requesting a ground relief column to go to Lang Vei at first light. "I told CG that we had no troops to send to Lang Vei and he agreed that no troops should go, and said to tell G-3 that he said no. I said I had no intention of sending troops unless he (Gen. Cushman) so ordered me." Gen Tompkins felt that this was precisely what the enemy was expecting us to do and that they would ambush the route from KSCB to Lang Vei, convinced that we would dispatch a relief column down there.[497]

Col Jonathan Ladd, meanwhile, asked Col Lownds to execute the contingency plan to get his people out, and reported that Col Lownds responded, "No, it would be a suicide mission." Ladd, however, who had just visited Lang Vei the day before, felt that because he had been there, it would not be a suicide mission. Ladd: "apparently nobody in any strength was around there." Col Ladd flew from KSCB to DaNang and contacted GEN Westmoreland who was there in connection with a Marine Civic Action matter. Col Ladd's frustration is reflected in his memoir of that meeting (which occurred shortly after noon and was attended by Gen Chaisson [Chief COC, MACV], Gen Cushman, Gen Tompkins, Gen Anderson [CG, I MAW], and several other officers, including LGTC Hassinger [DCO, Special Ops], and Col Baldwin. "When I finally got his attention long enough, I told him, `We have to do one of three things. We either stay there and just hold Lang Vei; we "DD" out and abandon the place; or the Marines execute their contingency plan. We can hold for probably another 3 or 4 days."[498] Col Ladd recounts: "Well, he couldn't make up his mind. Meanwhile I kept getting these radio calls from out there, telling me 'the Goddamn people are dropping charges down our air holes.' So I called Gen. Abrams on the phone and told him what was happening and I said, 'I just can't get Westmoreland's attention long enough to do anything. He is putting it off.' So, he called a General Anderson.. and told him that he was telling me to go ahead and evacuate the camp at the earliest opportunity and for the Marines to help us, which they did. Now in Westmoreland's book, he said that he did all that, but he didn't. Abrams did it, because he, Westmoreland, kept going back to those civic action meetings. Anderson was a great help; they dropped these CBUs all over the top of the camp and the people got out."[499]

Although the Contingency Plan, "Relief of Lang Vei Special Forces Camp," OpOrder 5-67 of 18 Sep 67, called for a reinforced rifle company from 1/26 against an estimated enemy attack by a NVA force of a battalion of troops, the situation had rapidly become significantly worse: there were tanks, the entire area contained two divisions of NVA, and it was an all-out attack. A patrol from A-101 moving east toward Khe Sanh village was ambushed on 31 Jan and Sgt John A. Young was captured.[500] wouldn't have sent a battalion to Lang Vei. Route 9 was completely held by the enemy--complete from Khe Sanh Village to the Laotian border. That was enemy territory. The hills to the north of Route 9 were completely held by the enemy." [Interview of MajGen Rathvon McC Tompkins, HQMC HistDiv, 13 April 1973, transcript p. 30. COL John J. Padley, the previous CO of 26th Marines at Khe Sanh [relieved by COL Davie E. Lownds at 0900, 12 August 1967] in his Debrief, noted: "..if we were to reinforce Lang Vei, naturally we'd reinforce it with troops/. But we have to be very leery because the enemy knows we're going to defend that place and if they attack, their attack may be for us to come down the road so they can ambush us. We know that and are very aware of it. In fact, when they attacked that one night [04 May 1967], we did shoot artillery and there was no problem stopping it with artillery. The next day the word came through the grapevine: where were the Marines? Why didn't they reinforce? Most likely they wanted us to come down that route to ambush us. Maybe that's why they attacked Lang Vei, to try to have us come down that road. We'll think three times before we go and we got a lot of other alternate plans on how we'll go." [Comments of Col. J.J. Padley, HQMC Oral History Tape #1504].

---

[497] This was a typical NVA tactic used on small and large scale: wound a man and kill off all those that come to rescue him; disable a recon team and ambush all infantry coming to rescue them; fix an outpost and lay in ambush to engage all who would rescue. In the attack on Khe Sanh village, one battalion attacked the District Headquarters, but two regiments were in ambush positions to destroy those who would come to rescue or reinforce them.

[498] The official AAR for the Battle of Lang Vei notes: "There was considerable argument against implementing the plan because of the possibility of losing more men as well as the helicopters."

[499] Ladd, COL Jonathan, Interview by Col James P. Bergen and LtCol Willard M.Burleson, 26 Feb 1971, Dept. of the Army, U.S. Army Military History Institute,, Carlisle Barracks, PA, for "The Creighton Abrams Story." [Khe Sanh archives 67961-67970].

[500] The man was Sgt John A. Young. At 1100H, a 17-man Lao recon element was ambushed by an estimated enemy force of two NVA companies at XD 815370 resulting in one friendly WIA and 1 USSF and 1 Lao MIA. [CO COC 5th SFGA 311530Z/Jan68, SITREP #30-68, in III MAF COC Journal and File 31Jan/01Feb68 #315]. The area was on Route 9, half-way between Khe Sanh village and Lang Vei. Later, the Special Forces attacked the enemy unit, resulting in 54 NVA KIA, 40 NVA WIA, and eight weapons captured [CO CO C 5th SFGA 011050Z/Feb68, Subj: 21 Message, in III MAF COC Journal File, Operation SCOTLAND, Pt. 3]. The Team Leader at Lang Vei, Bill Craig, notes: "He [Young] should be in jail. I didn't want

No company size USMC infantry units were available for deployment due to what had unfolded since mid-January. (LtCol Mitchell, CO, 1/9, upon arrival at KSCB, was assigned the mission of reinforcing Lang Vei with a company if it were attacked.[501] One might speculate on the consequences of his weakened defensive posture were that to have been implemented in view of the attack on his Hill 64 outpost the next day!

Overland movement to reinforce Lang Vei was impossible. In November, 1967, Col Lownds directed 1/26 to determine an overland route between KSCB and Lang Vei with the time/space factor for moving a rifle company on a tactical mission. Capt John W. Raymond (A/1/26—an experienced officer who later formed E Co, 3d Recon) "determined that a rifle company, avoiding well-used trails to preclude ambush, could move by foot from KSCB to Lang Vei in approximately 19 hours."[502]

Maj Matthew P. Caulfield, S-3, 3/26, (and later Commandant of the Marine Corps), noted that MIKE Company, 3/26, was regimental reserve when it arrived in mid-Dec '67, and that he, together with the Battalion Commander, conducted a reconnaissance down the road (Route 9) to determine an approach route to the camp, and determined that the only way it could be reinforced was by air since the road presented numerous ambush sites. He concluded: "It would have been, in my opinion, and I say this without the slightest equivocation, suicidal to send any force, particularly at night time down that highway into Lang Vei. It would no doubt have been ambushed, and in fact, I feel it would have been completely decimated. The terrain on Highway 9 from the Khe Sanh Combat Base to lang Vei is a North Vietnamese dream of an ambush. It is just e very step of the way very high elephant grass. To the right the terrain is precipitous and high; to the left it's the same way. It would have been hacking with machetes all along the way, and if we went the fastest way on the ground which would have been down the highway, they would have been the saga of the lost company or the lost battalion."[503]

Helicopter Landing Zones had tanks in them, according to Col Lownds 0410 - KSCB has gone for 45 minutes without incoming.

0412 - Gen Tompkins orders Firecrackers to be fired ASAP on Lang Vei and kept up.

0415 - Gen Tompkins instructs S3, 26Mar, to fire two more 28-round Firecracker packages as fast as possible. One package of 36 rounds was shot out at 0421. Tompkins orders a schedule of: 5 min. Firecrackers, 5 min. HE/VT mixed, then direct air support from 2 aircraft, then repeat the cycle.

0421 - Shot out second package.

0423 - Lang Vei is apparently impressed with the effect of Firecrackers and radios: "Firecrackers right on target. Keep it coming."

0428 - COC, 3dMarDiv, obtains secondary freqs of Lang Vei and passes them to 26Mar so they can communicate directly with Lang Vei and not depend on relaying through III MAF to 3dMarDiv to 26Mar.

0432 - Air on station: 2 F8, 2 F4, 2 A4

0440 - Incoming rockets at Khe Sanh CP. 26Mar told to keep continous packages on Lang Vei. When low on Firecrackers switch to VT. Save some Firecrackers for our own hill positions. Report received of intense activity north of Hill 881-South, 861, and 950 (probably by electronic sensors).

0443 - KSCB begins taking rockets again.

0449 - S3, 26Mar reports that extra air strikes are being run on Lang Vei. Tanks are off Lang Vei and have moved to a position east of Lang Vei moving towards Khe Sanh. AO to determine enemy tank strength and disposition.

0500 - 1/26: KSCB reports receiving 38 rounds of rocket.

---

that kid. I told the Sergeant-Major I don't need no SPEC-4s up here. He said, 'I don't have anybody else as a weapons man.' I said, 'Well, I'll do without.' He'd already sent him up there. Ashley called me and said that Young wanted to go out on patrol. I said, 'I don't want that kid going anywhere ... And you know what he did? He talked those stupid Laotians into going into Khe Sanh city! That's why I say, if I had my way, I'd of put him in jail because of that." [Conversation with Bill Craig, 04 Oct 1988]. For Young's story, see Ch. 11 of Zalin Grant, Survivors, American POWs in Vietnam, New York: Berkeley Books, 1985, pp. 189-199. According to Young, Capt Frank Willoughby, having just returned from a 30-day leave in the States, ordered him to patrol out to Lang Bu ville, some 2000 meters northeast of Lang Vei, where Route 9 bends. Young departed just after sunrise on the 31st, proceeded along Route 9, and after some 45 minutes, cut north toward the jungle towards Lang Bu when enemy fire suddenly erupted, killing the point man with a shot to the head. The Laotians suddenly evaporated, leaving Young alone. He was then shot in his lower leg, fell, and shot twice more. His trouser leg was soaked in blood; pieces of bone protruded. After rapidly firing two magazines, he felt two bayonets stick in his back. He had been captured, not released until 1973. [Stubbe: Khe Sanh, 06 June 1989 (unpublished manuscript), p. 453.

[501] Conversation with John F. Mitchell, 08 Jan 1998. Mitchell had planned to dispatch Co D/1/9 led by Capt Shafer.

[502] Letter of LtCol James B. Wilkinson to Capt. Moyers S. Shore, USMC, 19 December 1968, in Khe Sanh Comments File (comments of Capt Shore's original Khe Sanh manuscript), HQMC, Historical Division.

[503] Comments of Matthew P. Caulfield, HQMC Oral History Tape No. 2535. "Role of 3d MarDiv units in defense of Special Forces Camp Lang Vei," HQMC Oral History Tape #2535 (interviews conducted 10-24 Feb 1968 at Dong Ha Combat Base).

0520 - Aircraft attacking tanks remaining in Lang Vei camp.

0533 - 26Mar reports 1 tank burning on road, 1 vehicle burning in Lang Vei compound, tanks no longer in sight of road.

0540 - S3, 26Mar, reports aircraft are striking tanks. Marine aircraft have hard ordnance—500-pound and larger bombs. One flight every 20 minutes. USAF B-57s (YELLOWBIRD), armed with napalm and snake-eyes, are striking camp. 26Mar have been asking for half and half: half napalm and snakes, half delay and quick fuse 500-lb bombs and larger. AO feels that BV-33 (at XD794357, near old Lang Vei camp) are apparently the target of approaching enemy infantry.

0600 - Gen Cushman asks if the artillery is still working on Lang Vei. 26Mar reports that they are presently running air on Lang Vei, to be followed by artillery. KSCB is still taking heavy incoming.

0615 - KSCB still taking incoming. SPUNKY HANSON ONE FIVE ALFA (SFC Ashley at the old Lang Vei site) reports a great deal of movement to his front. Air is still working Lang Vei.

0630 - 15A reports that all above ground at Lang Vei is totally destroyed.

0700 - KSCB continues to support Lang Vei with air and arty.

0740 - 15A is in contact with Lang Vei TOC and reports about 15 Americans still in compound alive. He intends to move to rescue them using SPOOKY for cover.

0835 - 15A still has comm with Lang Vei.

0900 - 15A trying to get closer. SITREP at KSCB: runway is expectecd to be closed to fixed wing until 1030. AO on station reports 2 stationary tanks 500 meters south of Lang Vei.

0930 - KSCB still receiving incoming. Incoming was the heaviest NVA bombardment of the Vietnam War up to this time. Between 0045 and 0800, KSCB received 100 rounds of rocket fire and approximately 450 rounds mortar fire. The majority of the incoming impacted in the 1/26 area (at XD849417) and 3/26 (at XD837417), perhaps to preclude assembly for possible reinforcement.

1000 - (about). 15A radios PIEDMONT (FOB-3) that he was with some 200-300 Lao soldiers 2-3 miles east of the overrun camp and was attempting to come to the aid of the Americans trapped there.

Maj Goddard (DASC) recalls that during the morning, PIEDMONT had requested an emergency medevac from ELEPHANT. 2 gunships and 2 46s attempted to insert in ELEPHANT's position "but the ground fire was too intense and the helos couldn't get in."

Maj George Quamo went to 26Mar COC and, in a conversation that lasted about four minutes, is told by a Major there, "We won't lose an American for those people." Quamo had been up all night, listening to the radio traffic, talking with Skip Minnicks, and had talked to Maj Campbell, the CO of FOB-3, who told him "Don't me get involved." Maj Quamo told the Marine Major, "I need to talk to Col Lownds," and the Major said, "He's not available; what can I do for you?" Quamo said: It's your responsibility to go in there and get these guys and we want to know what you're going to do." The response from the Major was, "We're not going to do it."[504]

Quamo became livid. Returning to FOB-3, he was yelling, "We're going to do something. We're going to get something done! Whether this guy likes it or not, we're going to do something!" He said that he was going to tell the pilots to get ready to fly "on the order of Col Lownds." Soon thereafter, the helicopters appeared at FOB-3, and Quamo's driver, Harve Saal, believes "George had just simply 'scalliwaged' those guys and told them: You have to do it because your boss said so."[505]

[Note: While a large force of a company of Marines might not be available or optimal, perhaps a small, highly-trained force accustomed to this kind of operation, would be better able to accomplish the mission]

Skip Minnicks recalls: "Maj Quamo came back, asked me if I'd go in. I said 'Sure.' He said, 'You know we probably won't come out of there.' I said, 'Yeah, I'm aware of that.' He said, 'Ask for volunteers.' I asked for volunteers. The Sergeant-Major [Pegram] volunteered. At the time I was a Master Sergeant. I said, 'Look, Sergeant-Major, by your very presence, you would be in charge. 'Hey, Skip, I'll go as a rifleman. I'm going with you. You're running this operation. All I am is one of your grunts.' And we went in and got those people out. Honest to God, I thought that Quamo should of got a Medal of Honor for what he did at Lang Vei. He coordinated all of it."[506] "We really didn't think we were coming out of there; when we went in, we didn't think we was coming back."[507]

1100 - (about) Maj C.D. Goddard (DASC) is informed by a Col Palmer "that a Mission 87 was being prepared which

---

[504] Conversation with Harve Saal, 13 September 1994. Saal was present during this interchange.

[505] Ibid.

[506] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 April 1990.

[507] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 December 1991. Harve Saal, another FOB-3 soldier in the rescue team recalls, "We didn't think we were coming back. We really didn't, but we didn't care, because we were mad, and we didn't caqre how many people died to get our point across, to get back one American that was alive." [Conversation with Harve Saal, 16 June 1990].

would involve 4 Hueys and 4 46s along with a 'HATCHETT' force of 50 to rescue the people remaining in the Lang Vei TOC bunker." Maj Goddard passed this to the FSCC, but they were unaware of it. Maj Goddard then went to INTRIGUE-14 (26Mar Air Officer) who was in the process of briefing the pilots of the resupply to the hill outposts and asked him if he were aware of "Mission 87." He replied that until he received further word, he would proceed with the resupply mission. Further discussion with the FSCC indicated that Gen Tompkins had said that no force could depart the Khe Sanh perimeter for any reason. Col Palmer gave Maj Goddard the final details of Mission 87. Col. Daniel L. Baldwin was arriving in a U-21 to lead the rescue operation and give the rescue brief. In addition to the 8 choppers already committed, there was to be a flight of A-4s armed with DELTA-9s[508] to hit the old Lang Vei camp immediately prior to the assault. Maj Goddard found INTRIGUE-14 and convinced him Mission 87 was a "go" and he agreed to suspend resupply at 1530 and assemble the pilots for a mission brief by Col Baldwin.

1200 - SITREP at KSCB of friendly casualties from the shelling: 2 KIA, 11 WIA (evac) and 6 WIA (minor). Evaluation by 3dMarDiv (to III MAF): possibility exists that enemy may now be ready to follow through with significant attack on the Khe Sanh complex Present poor weather conditions favor enemy operations and hamper friendly air support. Information from various sources [namely, signal intercepts] indicate hill outposts west and northeast of Khe Sanh may be initial objectives in attack, followed by main attack on KSCB proper. If enemy recon is complete and his forces have had opportunity to prepare and occupy satisfactory attack positions, he may launch attack at any time."

2476 rounds of arty fire had been fired in support of Lang Vei. USMC aircraft fixed wing flew 67 sorties in support of Lang Vei.

1300 - An over-flight by Lt Davis: There are 4 other Americans with 15A (Ashley) along with 100 unknown friendly; there are people inside the TOC; 1 tank is on top of TOC and 2 on road south of camp are disabled; there is still fighting inside the camp.

1430 - KSCB receiving sporadic incoming mortars. KSCB has 1000 refugees outside west end of perimeter. (This increased throughout the day to approx. 6,000. They moved to XD825422 for the night. Refugees included BV33, CIDG, PF and their dependents. CG, 3dMarDiv requests instructions from CG, III MAF, on handling of refugees. CO, 26Mar decided not to integrate refugees into perimeter defense.

1505 - KSCB receives 122mm rockets.

1530 - 15A reports that survivors from the TOC had broken out and linked up with 15A. The COVEY laid a couple of napes right on them before someone in the group identified themselves as friendlies.

1600 - KSCB still receiving rockiets. TPQs are being run in Lang Vei area with numerous secondary explosions.

1600 - The following are located at Lang Vei: 3 companies of CIDG (324); 1 company MIKE Force (130); Regional Forces (17); Vietnamese Special Forces (12); US Special Forces (20).

1600 - A monitored NVA radio message stated that a field grade Special Forces officer was CIA[509] and LTC Schungel was the only field grade officer known to be in the area. He was in Lang Vei since there was a Lao field grade officer, LTC Soulang, present. This created quite a turmoil back at the C Co in DaNang since LTC Schungel had a SI clearance and was not supposed to be in a situation where he could be captured. Max Cottrell, Assistant S3 of Co C, recalls "we got a message from III MAF early in the morning and I had to take our S2, which was Capt Stevenson (if I remember right) over to III MAF because he was the only other person in the unit that had a SI clearance."[510] LTC Schungel had abandoned Lt Miles Wilkins, the XO of the Camp (who had a piece of shrapnel in his hip when he was shot by a tank): "..he twice left me for dead, and he was awarded a bunch of medals, but he just walked off and left me behind. I got out of there on my own—on two occasions actually. I was with him when we got shot by the tank, and he was about to leave me. Then the two of us spent the night on the floor of our medical building while the NVA were walking around above us. In the morning we headed for the old camp, and he just walked off and left me. Then we got strafed by our own aircraft. Then somebody came out and got me. He got back to the camp and—one of the guys later told me—said that I was dead."[511]

1625 - An A-6 made 5 or 6 passes, using his rockets since the ceiling was too low to use his DELTA-2s.[512] As soon as the A-6 completed delivery of its ordnance, the transport choppers arrived.

1630 - A 50-man C&C Det (14 Americans, rest Bru) launched rescue operation on Lang Vei. The intent was to join with and rally BV-33 into attack.[513] WIA were to be medevaced by the C&C Det; remaining personnel to move to old Lang Vei

---

[508] DELTA 9 is a MARK 77, 500-lb. napalm bomb.
[509] Captured In Action.
[510] Actually, Col. Schungel had not been captured.
[511] Conversation with Miles Wilkins, 27 March 1994.
[512] DELTA 2 is a MK 82 500-lb. general purpose bomb.
[513] CO CO C 5th SFGADaNang 070830Z/Feb68, in III MAF COC Journal and File 07/08Feb68 #157.

(XD794361). First Marine Air Wing fired suppressive fire on the TOC of the camp in preparation of the raid. Under cover of this fire, the friendly soldiers on site took escape and evasion action. The relief force put down near the old Lang Vei, at XD 794357, and moved to the new Lang Vei site, XD 786356. Enroute, the relief force encountered 13 of the 20 US personnel who were in the camp at the time of the initial attack. One additional man was subsequently recovered, making a total of 14. 6 remained unaccounted. Also, 80 CIDG and MIKE force were evacuated out of 500 indigenous personnel. A Vietnamese Special Forces officer captured who later escaped stated most of the indigenous troops who made it out of the camp were captured.

The C&C Det determined that SFC Ashley led 4 assaults on enemy dug in and around the Lang Vei TOC and was KIA on his 5th attempt. (He was subsequently posthumously decorated with the Medal of Honor, the only erson to receive this award during the Siege battle).

One UH-1E and 2 CH-46s received fire in extraction resulting in one co-pilot and 2 crewmembers WIA. (The Co-pilot, 1/Lt G. E. Rosental is presently 100% disabled from wounds received during this rescue operation; other pilots participating include the following Marines: Tyler Alexander, Ed Kufeldt, J.J. Hanley).

1645 - A4s arrived on station.

1730 - A station came up on the FOX MIKE which identified himself as 'ELEPHANT' and requested extraction helicopters. He said he had 15 men with him. COVEY, overhead, spotted about 50 people gathering at the old campsite. Maj Goddard expressed reservations, feeling that there were Lao who had abandoned their own wounded but, having seen the successful extraction, were now trying to get out themselves. However, 2 46s and the sole remaining Huey launched and extracted about a hundred in 2 loads apiece. As the 46s returned, it was apparent that one American was still at the helo strip. The Huey made several passes in an attempt to retrieve him while COVEY ran some ADs [slow movers] with napalm on either side of the airstrip. However, the ground fire was so intense that the Huey took several hits and was barely able to return to Khe Sanh.

The helo pilots told Maj Goddard "that the last extraction was a mob scene in which the Laotians tried to mob the choppers in an effort to get aboard. He also said the majority of their hits were from the Laotians who realized that they were being left behind. He also said that the only reason the choppers had launched was that they were given the word that fifteen Americans were left at the strip."

Ed Kufeldt, piloting the Huey gunship, notes the pandemonium: "The 46s landed at the far end of the landing strip because they knew they were going to be rushed with the people, and they, in fact, were: people were trying to get on the airplane, falling off of the airplane as it was taking off because the airplane was obviously overloaded and couldn't take any more—people hanging on wheels, falling off."[514]

Skip Minnicks recalls that the Lao officers were evacuated, as were the Lao NCOs. The others had thrown down their weapons. "They had quit. They had surrendered, but the North Vietnamese had not come into the camp. So we got everyone out except the Laotian enlisted. The chopper came in and asked, 'Is the LZ cleared?' And I said, 'Yeah," and he told me later that his idea of a cleared LZ and my idea were different when the first round went through his windshield! ... When we got to Khe Sanh, the Colonel from the 33d ran up—actually, he was crying, hugging, and kissing us, telling us we saved his life. Then later, a message came down [from the Ambassador]. The message said [long pause]: 'No American officer would be embarassed over this action.' We didn't know what the hell they were talking about. It wasn't long after that that Major Quamo got killed."[515]

1850 - KSCB continues to receive sporadic incoming; BV33 survivors made it to KSCB by foot.

1900 2 USSSF from Lang Vei arrived in DaNang by helicopter and reported several USSF made successful E&E to the BV-33 area in the old Lang Vei camp and participated in counter attack. One USSF was left in bunker with severe head wound which caused screams when moved. "Others may be in bunkers or in process of E&E. One VNSF LT turned himself in and was promptly executed. VNSF S-3 was CIA but escaped and linked up with BV-33 and USASF. Successful E&E was executed to north and then east. The C&C Det reaction force did not reach camp site to check bunkers but were able to effect medevac."[516]

2020 5th Special Forces reports to III MAF that 50-70 MSF evacuated, 12 USA Special Forces evacuated, all WIA.[517]

2130 - Gen Tompkins, following much discussion regarding NVA use of the 6,000 refugees as a possible human shield, pushed in front of their human wave attack on KSCB, sent his direction in the event this happened, to be executed in three steps: (1) Fire CS; (2) Fire over their heads if they kept advancing after the CS; (3) fire on the crowd.

---

[514] Conversation with Ed Kufeldt, 20 Jan 1992.
[515] Conversation with Charles Minnicks, 26 April 1990.
[516] CO CO C 5th SFGA DaNang 071240Z/Feb68 in III MAF COC Journal and File, 07/08Feb68 #231.
[517] 5th Special Forces, Resume of Telephone Call, 072020H/Feb68, in III MAF COC Journal and File, 07/08Feb68 #199.

COL Baldwin was given the order to evacuate the Lao to DaNang, and "to move them out without anybody seeing them." This was at Khe Sanh at a time when there were literally many dozen reporters and photojournalists present!] "I laughed and said, 'General, what do you think I am? a magician? In the first place, the Marines won't even let them in! How do you evacuate 500 soldiers and their families without anybody knowing about it?" But it was accomplished and the Lao of BV-33, after flying to DaNang, then were flown to Savannakhet.[518]

[Note: Det A-101 relocated and officially opened a new camp at Mai Loc (YD 089512) on 24 Jun 68].

08 Feb:

0520 - A/1/9, at XD 831419, started to receive RPG and 60mm mortar fire followed by a ground attack (which continued to 0645). Enemy troops penetrated wire but were repulsed by the defenders of the platoon from A/1/9 manning the hill. Enemy broke contact by 0730, and at 0900, a USMC element moved into position of the outpost.

0845 Update on extraction from Lang Vei: 14 US S;pecial Forces, 6 Vietnamese Special Forces, 80 CIDG and Mike force, and 400 CIDG and Mike Force still MIA, 6 Vietnamese Special Forces still MIA.[519]

LIFE AND DEATH AT FOB 3

The same date Lang Vei was attacked and KSCB received the large amount of incoming, 07 February 1968, an artillery round exploded near the entrance to the medical bunker at FOB-3. The medics were hauling stretchers of wounded and Charlie Berg was at the entrance when the round exploded on the arch of the stairway leading down into the bunker. Half an hour earlier, the young medic, Denis Chericone, and Charlie Berg had been talking about the possibilities of getting wounded, as those at Khe Sanh frequently did: we all knew the possibilities, and most feared THE WOUND, the injury to their male parts, and some would say things such as "If I ever get wounded there, I'll just rush out and kill as many of them as I can. I know I'll die, but why live after that?" Chericone asked Berg about losing an arm or a leg, and Beg replied, "Ah, kid, I couldn't live with it. I'd probably commit suicide. I wouldn't want to live without a leg."[520] Berg, who had only a few days before rotating back to the States, recalls:

> I was coming out of the bunker with a young Medic to go get some people that were wounded. A bird came in with some C&C people on it. There were some wounded, so I was working down in the bunker helping BOBBY at the time. He said, Give me a hand. I grabbed the back end of a stretcher and we stepped out of the bunker, the Command bunker there, FOB-3. I took about ten steps forward, I heard that magic round. I pushed that stretcher and the young Medic up in front of me, a young E5, DENIS CHERICONE–pushed him down with the stretcher. And I turned. And it went off about 25, 30 feet away from me, a 152. ... Everybody thought I was going to die. My left leg came off at the hip. I had a Medic named BOB SCULLY–the first consultant to the Army Surgeon General for the Physicians' Assistant program–just a great guy–BOBBY's the one that kept me alive..[521]

Berg had just made E-7,[522] was tired of the war and had been outspoken to his CO. "I used to voice my opinion to Lucius Campbell whenever he'd tell something to me. 'I don't know, Sir. I think it sucks! I think it's a stupid idea!' He'd say, 'What do you think' I'd say, 'I think it's a stupid idea. I think we're going to die if we do that.' But I always said 'Sir'; I was totally respectful. Lee Dunlap was a very stiff, ramrod young Lieutenant. He took me aside and said, 'You're the most disrespectful NCO I've ever–' And I said, 'Well, Captain, I may be, but I'm here for my third one-year tour and I really don't care much about this..'"[523]

Denis Chericone, one of the medics at FOB-3, was wounded in his shoulder while one of the other medics, Bud Ellis, was hit in the arm. Both remained at Khe Sanh for three or four days, unable to get a flight out.[524] Chericone had arrived Christmas Eve, 1967, and was occasionally given candy by the new CO, Major Smith "because I was the 'kid.' I was the youngest guy in the FOB, so they all kinda took me under their wing."[525] The young medic took care of the soldiers. Three of four days after the siege battle began and the mess tent was destroyed, he rummaged through the rubble, hooked up one of the stoves and cooked a spaghetti dinner for the troops. He recalled a pallet of Coke being delivered in a cargo sling under a

---

[518] Conversation with Daniel Lord Baldwin, III, 25 Sep 1989.
[519] Resume of Telephone Call, 080845H/Feb68, III MAF COC Journal and File, 08/09Feb68 #18.
[520] Conversation with Denis Chericone, 25 July 1993.
[521] Conversation with Charles Berg, 18 April 1994.
[522] Conversations with Charles Berg, 18 April 1994, 13 Nov 1994.
[523] Conversation with Charles Berg, 13 November 1994.
[524] Conversation with Denis Chericone, 25 July 1993.
[525] Ibid.

helicopter. The line broke and everyone watched the pallet crash into the earth with an explosion of Coke fizz. Chericone rummaged through the pallet and out of 144 cases, found one can undamaged. "I looked at it, and there was like a crowd of guys standing around me. As I looked at it these guys said, 'You drink that and you're a dead man!' I got a pistol, and I shot it." It was taboo, something that if touched involved death. On a more humorous note, he recalls six or seven men playing poker on a stretcher in the bunker. There was about $500.00 in the pot when a round came in, hitting the bunker. But the medical bunker was sturdy, and without anyone taking their eye off the pot, all reached down for their helmet. One day, he won about $300.00 and took it over to the Postal Clerk on KSCB. "He says, 'How much do you want?' I said, 'Three hundred bucks.' He says, 'O, how would you like nine hundred?' I said, 'I only got three hundred.' He says, 'Nah, nah, I'll make you out one for nine hundred.' I said, 'But I only have $300.00.' He said, 'Give me the money.' So he took the three hundred bucks, put it in his pocket and wrote me out three $300.00 money orders. He said, 'O, a couple of days, we'll put a grenade into this machine and say a round came in and blew it up!' I put my mom through college while I was in Vietnam!"[526]

While he was in DaNang for his wounds, Chericone traded some of the captured weapons from the patrol into Khe Sanh village for "whisky, steaks, and anything else I could get my hands on,"[527] while wearing a borrowed Sergeant's shirt. Major Quamo, driving by in a jeep, spotted him in the shirt with Sergeant's stripes. "I thought, boy, you're finished! So when I got back up to the FOB, he saw me and came up and said, 'Chericone, do you have a brother?' And I said, 'No, Sir.' And he goes, 'Well, I saw a guy down in DaNang, SF, and he looked exactly like you, but of course he was a Sergeant and you're not. You're a PFC."[528]

Medics are responsible for field sanitation, and one of Chericone's duties involved picking up the deposits from the "Phantom shitter" who put his feces in a C-ration box outside the bunker.[529] Have Saal recalls a conversation with Charles Berg who said, "Harve, is that you?" Harve replied, "Charlie, is that you?" It was actually a radio operator from Texas who was scared to death and worked in the main bunker. He had placed a Texas state flag on the main bunker, but the NVA forward observers used it as an aiming target, and when Sergeant-Major Pegram caught it one day and went wild, the flag came down! He was the "Phantom Shitter!"[530]

Lawrence T. Cooper arrived in Vietnam in March, 1967, and was assigned to A-101 at Lang Vei when it was overrun on 4 May 1967 and both the XO and XO were killed. He contracted malaria in November, 1967, and after hospitalization was assigned to the C Company Headquarters in DaNang. His roommate was SP5 William C. McMurray, who had also been at Lang Vei on 4 May 1967 and survived with minor wounds by hiding beneath a pile of rubble. When the new Lang Vei camp needed a radio operator, he volunteered and had been at the new camp as a radio operator a week or ten days when it was overrun. Cooper and McMurray kept in contact with each other, both being radio operators.

> Their call sign was SPUNKY HANSON or 5NNP. We were INDIA CHARLIE ZERO CHARLIE, BOLO BOB CAT. We were taking a helicopter up there the next day because Colonel [LtCol Daniel F.] Schungel, our Company Commander, had gone up there a couple, three days before that. I'd gone to bed 11:30, a quarter to twelve, and about two o'clock in the morning hey got me up because the shit had hit the fan. That afternoon, Sergeant-Major Harvin D. Hodge, our Company Sergeant-Major at DaNang flew us from DaNang to Khe Sanh. I still had the one-time pads in my rucksack, loaded for bear. Within minutes we came under rocket or mortar attack. The first bunker that we fan to was the med bunker, and there was Colonel Schungel and these guys that had been wounded at Lang Vei and gotten out. Colonel Schungel was on a stretcher still wearing his starched jungle fatigues that I'd seen him wear three days before, and they were all bloodied.[531]

Cooper remained at FOB-3 to augment the lines, but had no flak jacket. About 12 February, he received multiple shrapnel wounds in his back, but was protected by the PRC-25 radio. The shrapnel totally destroyed his radio but "the flash of it blew my pants off–the back of my legs, the backs of my arms, blew the helmet down over my fact, and burned all the hair

---

[526] Conversation with Denis Chericone, 21 August 1993.
[527] Ibid.
[528] Ibid.
[529] I bid.
[530] Conversation with Harve Saal, 26 April 1995.
[531] Conversation with Lawrence T. Cooper, 02 April 1993. LtCol Schungel had been enlisted in the Philippines and was highly decorated and died of cancer about 1990. SgtMaj Hodge received a Silver Star for service in Korea while with the 187th Airborne and made a night jump in the Pusan Peninsula to relieve the 1st Cavalry division that had been surrounded by the Chinese. the Division was overrun, they were bayoneted, and left for dead and Hodge had crawled to an aid station, got in an ambulance, and was taking them to the rear area as the Chinese again overran their position. They were shooting Chinese and North Koreans out of the back door of the ambulance with IVs in their arms. SP5 William C. McMurray, captured at Lang Vei, was a POW until March, 1973, and then worked for the Defense Intelligence Agency at Fort Huachua, Arizona.

off the back of my neck and all the hair off my butt too. All that was left was the shreds of material to my pants in the front of my pants. I was a helluva-looking mess!"[532] Fortunately, he was facing as he was!

Upon evacuation, he soon discovered his wounds were to be the least of his problems! "The Lieutenant Communications officer there at DaNang came over to see me after I got off the USS REPOSE (AH-16) and there was some big damn investigation on what happened to those one-time pads. I said I was at Khe Sanh. They cared less about the fact that I was wounded; it was those one-time pads! I thought they were going to court-martial me. I had stitches in my back and everything and they're worried about those damn one-time pads!"[533] Cooper had an earlier encounter with one-time pads; while at Lang Vei in early 1967, the camp came under mortar attack, but he slept through the noisy violence as he dreamed the "Calypso-Crypto System" of the combinations of letters for the one-time pad.[534]

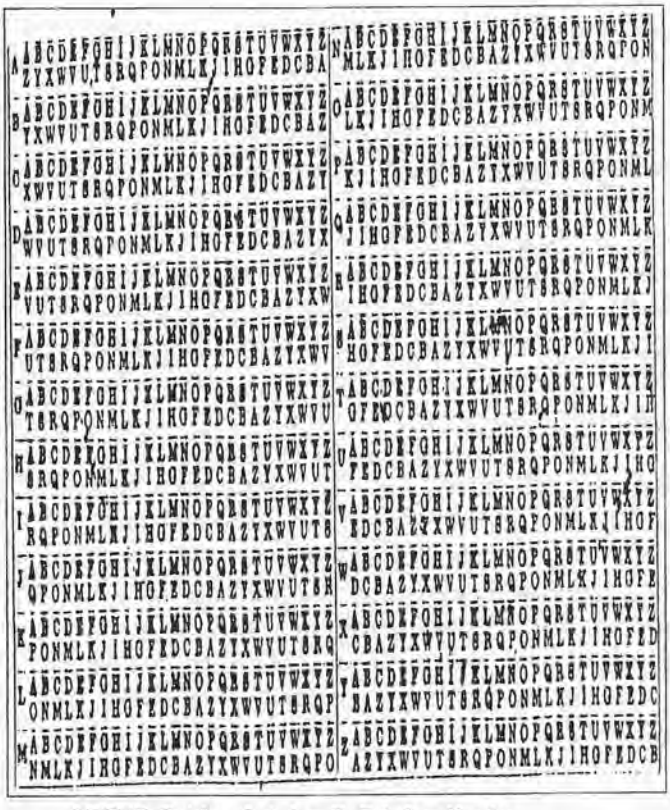
The one-time pad, first developed and used by the German diplomatic service in the early 1920s,[535] is the only code that is unbreakable. there are two–and only two–identical pads of pages of letters on easily-destroyed paper. Each page contains random letters, for example: Q D T E G T J C M J A X U V B D O Z C.

Above these letters, the plain text of the message to be encrpted is written::

T H E E N E M Y I S A T T A C K I N G
Q D T E G T J C M J A X U V B D O Z C

Then, using the TRIGRAPH, the third letter is determined. T + Q = Q, H + D =P, E + T = C. etc.

To decrypt, Q + Q = T, and so on. The trigraph is based on the table devised by Blaise de Vigenère in 1586[536]



ABOVE: Table. A + A = Z, F + A = U, etc.

MEMORIZE THESE

Five minutes daily spent studying these combinations will pay dividends in the time saved in encoding and decoding.

AIB	POG	SOT
BAT	HAS	SUN
GUD	HOE	TAG
ELK	MAN	WAD
EBE	OUR	YON
EVA	PEG
AFU	JOC	QUP
AZA	JUW	SZD
CAX	KAP	SIZ
ENI	XOB	TUM
GIL	KUV	UBZ
OUZ	MIF	ULU
HIK	MOZ	WEZ
IDO	OLA	WIV
IJI	OXO	YEX
JEM	PIC	YIT
		YUH
BHX	KKY	QRS
BVD	LLD	RFD
CCV	MMB	RPT
DDT	NNZ	RRR
ETC	PHD	TNT
FPF	POW	VVJ
GGN	PPV	WWH
HHL	PBS	XXF
JJH	QQT	ZZB
BCW	FHN	KWT
BFT	FJL	LCM
BGS	FVZ	LYQ
BHR	GHM	MQX
BIQ	GJK	MRW
BJP	GWX	MSV
BLN	OYV	NQW
CFS	HTZ	NRV
CGR	HVX	PLZ
CHQ	IUX	PXN
CKN	JAQ	PYM
CYZ	JBZ	QKF
DGQ	JTX	SLW
DJN	JYS	VLT
DKM	KQZ	VOQ
DXZ	KBY	WYF
DYY	KSX	XLR

RIGHT: All radio operators memorized these three-letter combinations which include all possible combinations from the above table

Major David C. Smith, called "Bulldog," who arrived at Khe Sanh shortly after the fall of Lang Vei[537] from FOB-2 at Kontum where he was the XO, had joined the Army in 1949. "I was just going to serve my tour and get out, and I got caught up in the Korean War and Truman gave me a year. So I showed him! I turned around and reenlisted. ... I was 'Trooper of the Year' for

---

[532] Ibid.
[533] Ibid.
[534] Ibid.
[535] Developed by three cryptographers: Rudolf Schauffler, Adolf Paschke, and Erich Langlotz. [Kahn, David, The Code-Breakers: The Story of Secret Writing, abridged ed. New York: New American library, 1973, p. 216]
[536] Cf. Kahn, op. cit., pp. 97-98.
[537] Conversation with David C. Smith, 15 September 1990.

the 82nd Airborne and I made Master Sergeant when you couldn't make it. We didn't have E-8s and E-9s [then]. The General asked me ,'Why aren't you in OCS?' 30 days later I was down in Fort Benning, Georgia"[538] While in Korea he had served in a Ranger Company. His father was General Wayne C. Smith, CG of the 11th Airborne Division at Fort Campbell in 1953, "the most feared General of any General I've ever known in my life," according to Robert Cavanaugh.[539] Like Patton? "O, he was worse! This man was terrible–the 'old Army!'"[540]

Several weeks before he reported as CO of FOB-3, Major Smith had been in Saigon with Major Quamo and Col Dan Baldwin, planning landing zones, drop zones, and other logistics for a mission when Col Baldwin came by with a fifth of Johnny Walker Red. It was ten o'clock in the morning before they were finished, Baldwin said, "Have you wished General Westmoreland Merry Christmas yet? No? Come on!" We got the staff car and drove through the General's secret entrance, the MPs watching us because we're in field gear. We walked right up to the General's secretary and old Dan said, 'We want to see General Westmoreland! We're from SOG!' just like that. We went in and we started to sing, 'We Wish you a Merry Christmas.' Well the General listened to us and we saluted and moved on out. We got back in the car and went back to where we were supposed to be, and by the time we got there, the word had gotten back: 'Get those three hoodlums out of Saigon before another sunset!'"[541] Baldwin and Quamo were able to catch a flight to DaNang, but Bulldog was stranded since he was flying to Kontum. He called Colonel Johnson and said, "I can't get a flight out of here, so I'm going back to the hotel." The Colonel responded, "Wait a minute. Don't you move! I'll call you right back!" "He called back in about five minutes and said a C-130 was on the way. "He had diverted a C-130 from Hue, down to Saigon to pick me up, drop me off at Kontum, and then let them land in Hue! They wanted us out by sundown!"[542]

FOB-3, as part of the KSCB, took its share of casualties from the large amount of incoming, including heavy artillery. One day, Major Smith had summoned his S-4, 1Lt Terry Garrett, and said, "You're out of uniform! Why are you wearing First Lieutenant bars? You're a Captain!" He promptly and proudly pinned on his new rank. Then, just as Capt Garrett left the bunker, an incoming round struck him,[543] "It just peeled back the steel helmet, head and all. It scalped him. A young kid."[544] The soldiers of FOB-3 put the helmet on a pole as an example of how a steel pot doesn't always work, especially one with over 30 holes in it from the large, 152mm artillery![545] While the medics were working on Lt Garrett, a wounded Bru stood behind Bob Scully, the medic, "that I think literally bled to death just standing there–never said a word–never uttered anything–while he's working on this Lieutenant."[546]

Robert Cavanaugh recalls a time when the soft sound of artillery being fired drove everyone to seek shelter. One Bru soldier didn't make it before the round exploded, and it took off a side of his head. "We're putting him in a body bag, and he moaned. So we took him out of the body bag and put him on a stretcher. I actually picked up his brains with a shovel and threw them into the wire, but he was still alive. I'm sure he must of died."[547]

Staff Sergeant Melvin M. Douglas stood up one day and took off his flak vest off while washing off and a round came in and killed him. He'd been in the Army previously and, after spending some time in Mississippi, came back into the Army, went to demo school and got orders to Vietnam. He was one of those non-SF-trained soldiers sent to FOB-3 to augment the lines, and while sitting in the trench one night told Charlie Berg. "'You know why I'm in the Army?' I said, 'No, why, Paul?' He said, 'I belong to the Ku Klux Klan.'" I said, 'What!' He said, 'Yeah, I was told to come back in the Army to get demolition training. I didn't think I was going to be sent to Vietnam.' I looked at him, and said, 'Paul, you can't tell me that! This is a Top Secret organization. How did you get a clearance?' He said, 'Everybody where I live belongs to the Ku Klux Klan and when some guy comes by to validate your clearance,–wonderful person!' ... There was a lull. he came up out of the trench and was just washing off, under his flak vest. I was just so surprised."[548]

It was pitch dark outside one night as Major Smith and his Operations Sergeant, James W. Moore, checked the lines, so dark they didn't even know to whom they were talking. Not wanting indigenous personnel to man the lines since Special Forces had had tragic experience with "so many turncoats and spies among them that they turned on us in the middle of a

---

[538] Ibid.
[539] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[540] Ibid.
[541] Ibid.
[542] Conversation with David C. Smith, 06 July 1990.
[543] Conversation with David C. Smith, 27 July 1995.
[544] Conversation with David C. Smith, 26 August 1990.
[545] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[546] Ibid.
[547] Conversation with Robert Cavanaugh, 13 September 1993.
[548] Conversation with Charles Berg, 05 June 1994.

battle,"[549] Numerous soldiers had suddenly reinforced their lines, in addition to the Marines from CAC OSCAR who manned the northwest corner facing battalion 1/9. Nha Trang had sent up 22 extra personnel, all Special Forces, but lacking Special Forces training. These wore a "candy stripe," a yellow cloth bar on their beret. These included soldiers in supply or those in personnel, where soldiers with Special Forces training were insufficient to meet manning levels. Specialist-5 Daniel F. Sandoval, one of those now at FOB-3, asked MSGT James Moore if he could go to see his buddies SP5 Charles M. Corry and Sgt Dennis R. Thorpe. Moore, who was 45 and had three tours in Korea told him: "Son, I'm going to tell you right now, you'd better stay here in this bunker where you got twelve-by-twelve's between you and the rounds coming in. "O, I want to go and see my buddies." Moore said, "OK, but if you get out of the trench line, if you don't have on your helmet, or if you take off your flak jacket, I'm going to fine you a hundred dollars if I catch you." Sandoval took off and the three of them jumped on the side of the trench line, sitting side by side: Sandoval in the middle, and an incoming round hit Sandoval, blowing out a 20-foot chunk of the trench line. "We had smoking legs and boots, pieces of torso, and hamburger meat, and all three of them were just annihilated. they're listed as being from FOB-3, and they weren't really; they were highly misplaced people stuck in a position that they shouldn't of been allowed to be in. I look back on it now and I wish that we'd never asked for them. We could have handled it with our combat troops."[550] Harve Saal recalls that Sandoval was killed within three days of his arrival and the sad story about him was that he had been in a serious parachuting accident at Fort Bragg where he went through some high tension lines that caught him across his shoulder. He was electrocuted and they thought he had died, so they sent him to Vietnam, and he got killed."[551]

Lacking a direct entrance into the main KSCB and having to leave by their main gate and go around a long distance in order to get on the main base made for some harrowing trips. One was the daily water run. Sgt Russ Mann had arrived the day before Lang Vei fell[552] and recalls the daily water run:

> This duty was shared on a rotating basis by the junior NCOs and was equally dreaded by all. The water truck was a 5-ton tanker that .. had been wounded many times in the course of its duties and was a patchwork of welded sheet-metal and odd parts. Only the steadfast devotion and ingenuity of our mechanic kept it running and moderately watertight. The seats had blood stains and the windows were long gone. The truck growled and rattled so loudly while underway that it was impossible for the driver to hear the muted thump that announced incoming rounds. The best strategy was to closely observe anyone above ground along the route. if they suddenly broke into a run or dove for cover you slammed on the brakes ... People that lived and worked along the route gradually became aware that the water truck had a tendency to attract unfriendly fire and began seeking cover as it approached. This caused some confusion on the part of the drives and resulted in a somewhat jerky drive as the truck stopped and started in multiple repetitions over the course of its appointed rounds.[553]

Transporting wounded to CHARLIE MED on KSCB was also harrowing, especially for the young medic, Denis Chericone:

> A couple of times Major Quamo and I loaded the wounded up on the jeep. Then we'd put two guys on the hood and two guys in the back on stretchers and we'd drive that mile or so to CHARLIE MED. One time we were driving, and I was scared. I was petrified. It was quiet. Then all of a sudden the rounds started coming in. But we had critically wounded, so Major Quamo reached over and said, 'Take it easy! and in a soft-spoken, slow voice, said, 'We'll do OK.' We're driving like three miles an hour and all of a sudden a bomb landed and I saw this big tire bouncing across the road in front of us, the only clue that the rounds are coming in. Then I looked and saw the marines running for cover. But we got there. We went through a barrage a couple of times..[554]

On one occasion,[555] General Rossen arrived in a jeep also carrying Major General Tompkins and Colonel David Lownds hanging onto the spare tire as Major Smith drove from the command bunker on KSCB to the FOB-3 camp. Smith made the 3-star put on a helmet and flak jacket since he arrived without them. Major Smith recalls: "We went into our area and one of my indig stood up, saluted, and yelled, 'Airborne!' as we came through the gate. The General turns to Tompkins and said, 'Ah, we're in Army territory now!'" As they entered the FOB-3 command bunker, the General's Aide asked if he could give

---

[549] Conversation with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995.
[550] Ibid.
[551] Conversation with Harve Saal, 14 August 1989.
[552] Lang Vei fell 07 Feb 1968.
[553] Conversation with Russ Mann, 26 Feb 1990.
[554] Conversation with Denis Chericone, 25 July 1993.
[555] This incident was related in a conversation with David C. Smith, 15 September 1990.

something for the General to eat since he hadn't eaten that morning. Smith nodded to the Sergeant-Major, and after Smith's briefing, two Sergeants dressed in whites appeared with some freshly-baked bread and turkey with mayonnaise. The General took one, and then gave sandwiches to General Tompkins and Colonel Lownds. Then they came in with some milk, and it was cold. They asked the General if he'd like some milk. 'Yes!' And he asked Tompkins, and Tompkins said, 'Damn milk's for babies!' Just like that. The General turned around, grabbed his milk and said, 'Well, I'm the biggest baby in this outfit!' We went up, going to look at the troops on the line. I heard Tompkins say, 'I'm going to court-martial that Smith!'"

On another occasion,[556] General Irby, the ADC[557] of the First Air Cavalry Division, landed in the FOB-3 compound and told Major Smith, wearing his steel pot, "OK, you can put your little 'Girl Scout hat on.' Major Smith promptly put on his Green Beret and just as General Irby lifted off in his helicopter, a round landed, sending a piece of shrapnel right into the top of his scalp.

LtCol Roy Bahr arrived as the new CO of FOB-3 in mid-March, effective 25 March.[558] At the time, FOB-3 consisted of one 102 Marines (Note: the first figure is officer, the second figure enlisted), 0-3 USN, 20-105 USA, and 2-455 ARVN and CAC O (inside the FROB-3 perimeter), 0-31 Marines.[559]He remained at FOB-3 until it was evacuated.[560] Although a Lieutenant Colonel, it was his first combat experience. Bahr's Adjutant was Charles Almy who had previously arrived at Khe Sanh with a briefcase containing some $10,000.00 payroll for the troops. The C-123 on which he arrived was hit by incoming. Major George Quamo picked him up at C Med, his uniform bloodied from a head wound that required some 35 stitches, and later realized he'd left all the money on the aircraft. He returned, retrieved the payroll, and then returned to DaNang, walking into the rear offices as a great hush quieted twenty-some typewriters upon seeing the specter of a war survivor. He then returned to FOB-3 about 20 March to be the S-1.[561]

Bahr and Almy continuously engaged in humorous banter. Bahr would say, "Hey, Almy, look over here. I think I want the 9-hole golf course here." Almy would say, "No, sir, we can't do that," "Why not?" "Well, Sir, that's where the tennis courts and swimming pool are going!"

At 1500, 5 April, General Westmoreland arrived at FOB-3 and Bahr had Almy drive the General from FOB-3 to meet with Colonel Lownds on the main base. "And so I said to Almy, 'You tell Westmoreland I want to talk to him when he gets back'–as a joke.[562] Almy took Westmoreland to the main base and pointed out where his plane had crashed. "He seemed unimpressed. His boots were polished and he had a very clean uniform. He was wearing white stars on his uniform, a symbol of garrison life. A very white T-shirt appeared at the V in his uniform near his neck. It began to annoy me that he would never know what it was like to be under constant discomfort of shelling and dirt. He just did not seem interested in what was going on at Khe Sanh, but rather it seemed as if he was amazed that he was at Khe Sanh. ... I was beginning to understand why the troops at Khe Sanh disliked outsiders. ... We averaged to stars (rank) every day for the next week and they all were outsiders, asking stupid questions and going back to those hot showers and nice officers clubs."[563]

When the jeep containing General Westmoreland returned, "Westmoreland steps out of the jeep and says, 'What did you want to see me about, Bahr?' I almost died! A Lieutenant Colonel doesn't tell a four-star General 'I want to see you.' So I started, 'Sir, I just wanted to let you know we have these Montagnards over here.' I'm trying to save my fanny. The helicopter returns, picks him up and gets him out. I get back to Almy, 'What are you doing?' He said, 'Well, Sir, you said you wanted to talk to Westmoreland.'"[564]

Major George Quamo was standing next to LtCol Bahr when the jeep carrying General Westmoreland returned to FOB-3. It was very obvious to LtCol Bahr that Quamo and Westmoreland knew each other; there was an intense, palpable animosity

---

[556] This incident was related in conversation with David C. Smith, 26 August 1990.

[557] Assistant Division Commander.

[558] HQ, 5th Special Forces (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, Special Orders Number 07 dated 27 March 1968, sent in letter from Roy Bahr, 22 April 1993.

[559] 3d MarDiv 161420Z/Mar68, in 3d MarDiv Msgs Etc Mar 68, Pt. 1, Encl (165. The three Navy Corpsmen had evidently been transferred to FOB-3.

[560] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 28 February 1993. After leaving FOB-3 at Khe Sanh, he took over FOB-2 at Kontum, and then became the first commander of Command and Control Central (CCC) at Ban Me Thuout. [Ibid.]

[561] Almy, Charles, Recollections of the Defense of Khe Sanh, Vietnam, a Paper submitted to Professor Coffman, Military History of the U.S., University of Wisconsin, Madison, 14 June 1971, pp. 23-14. Conversation with Charles Almy, 20 December 2002.

[562] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 28 February 1993.

[563] Almy, Charles, Recollections, op. cit., pp. 37-39, passim.

[564] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 28 February 1993.

from General Westmoreland towards Major Quamo[565] which puzzled Bahr who had, in just a matter of a few weeks, come to admire George Quamo. Major Quamo was only 26 or 27; Lieutenant Colonel Bahr was 37. Bahr later wrote: "I consider Major Quamo to be one of the most outstanding officers with whom I have served in my military career. ... Major Quamo was highly respected by seniors and subordinates alike and devoted his utmost attention to the welfare of the US and indigenous troops alike. His interest in learning the language and customs of the Bru, his concern for the care and evacuation of the Bru refugees, and the patience, kindness and understanding displayed by him at all times are worthy of emulation by all."[566]

Days before the siege battle erupted, Major George Quamo personally had soldiers from FOB-3 drag a landline to the Marine COC bunker on KSCB to the S-2, Major Jerry Hudson. When his intelligence sources learned something, he passed on the information directly to Hudson instead of the usual route of sending the information to Saigon, having it analyzed, and then having Saigon report it through the chain of command to the Marines–several days later, in which case, it was "history, not intelligence." "George took good care of us."[567] During the siege, whenever the landline was severed by incoming (or by E-tools of those digging deeper trenches and bunkers!), it was spliced by soldiers from FOB-3.[568] Charles Berg notes: "He probably broke regulations on it, but he probably saved a lot of people's lives. It was the appropriate thing to do. That's the kind of person he was. He overcame the natural bureaucracies and inter-service rivalries, and the petty jealousies, personal petty jealousies that happen between organizations."[569]

Another example is his dealing with Gunnery Sergeant George Bailey, NCOIC of the 32 Marines of the III MAF Radio Company Detachment at Khe Sanh.[570] When NVA communications from Khe Sanh village abruptly ceased, George Bailey went to George Quamo "and we flew into Khe Sanh ville. This was right after Lang Vei fell, early February."[571] Radio silence on the part of the NVA was particularly ominous: it usually was followed by a massive attack. "We felt that when something like that went down, when you have a communications stand-down, the hair on the back of your head just stood right up because you said, 'O, oh! Soemthing's going to take place!'"[572] Quamo said, "Well, we'll go in and we'll take a look and see what we can find." Bailey said, "Well, I want to go." Quamo said, "No!" But Bailey insisted. "I wanted to know, first-hand, why I lost radio communications. We discovered all those damn landlines. I had a Bru sitting on my side because Major Quamo said,. 'He will not be captured; you will kill him' if there's any chance of him getting captured. We were in the ville about 15 minutes, examining the school house just on the outskirts of the Khe Sanh village.[573] GySgt Bailey had visited Major Quamo and said, "I don't know whether I should be telling you these things," and Quamo replied: "George, we're in this together; we're in here to save lives, to win a war, and get this thing over with." "Major Quamo seemed to be on my level. He seemed the likely man to give my stuff to because I knew he'd take action on it. We figured, if we can't share information up here, we're [565] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 05 March 1993.

---

[566] LTC Roy W. Bahr, "Eye-Witness Statement," 4 May 1968, in letter from Roy Bahr, 22 April 1993.

[567] Conversation with Jerry Hudson, 04 May 1996.

[568] Conversation with Jerry Hudson, 28 June 1996.

[569] Conversation with Charles Berg, 09 July 1994.

[570] The Radio Company Det was led by Lt Gornic and Lt Nikell, a Mormon "who wore the special shirt with holes and never took that sucker off." [Conversation with George Bailey, 05 Sep 1999]. "Here are. We're hot. We're sweaty, cold and wet and damp, and he wouldn't take them things off. I don't think he even washed them. He wore them the whole time." [Conversation with George Bailey, 28 Feb 1990]. Bailey arrived the day after Christmas, 1967 [Conversation with George Bailey, 08 Sep 1999] and relieved GySgt Vincenters and had charge of the platoon until Lt Nickel arrived. He had four teams in various locations, each with their PRD (Portable Radio Direction Finder], so that NVA radio signals could be triangulated and plotted. "If one of them picked up a signal, we'd have to tell the others to go to such and such a frequency and get that signal and then they would have to take their line bearings." [Conversation with George Bailey, 28 Feb 1990]. Originally, one was on Hill 881-South, one on the main base and one the other side of the ammo dump. GySgt Bailey had to check periodically to ensure they had working batteries and hear any problems. The detachment listened to radio traffic, either voice or CW [Morse code, Continuous Wave], attempted to identify it, and built a network (who reports to whom, how frequently, etc.) and develop a "pattern analysis" to determine chain of command and location of divisions, regiments, etc. George Bailey died on 22 December 2004. LT Nickell and Lt Gornic are pictured on p. 62 of Lukacs, Theodore, Focus on Khe Sanh (Cryptologic History Series Southeast Asia), Washington, D.C.: National Security Agency, 1969, originally classified TOP SECRET; GySgt Bailey is pictured on p.; 63.

[571] Conversations with George Bailey, 04 Dec 1991 and 05 September 1999.

[572] Conversation with George Bailey, 04 November 1989.

[573] XD 84453876, the former home of John and Carolyn Miller, the Wycliffe Bible Translators where aerial recon had disclosed 13 grass-covered shelters, 2 possible communications antennas and approx. 10 underground bunkers. [7647 Recon Tech Sq Tan Son Nhut AB 310925Z/Jan68, IPIR MSN AM 4436, in III MAF COC Journal and File 01/02 Feb 68 #3]. ("IPIR": Initial Photographic Intelligence Report)

the ones that's going to be dying."[574] He had originally visited the FOB-3 area to seek a location for one of his PRD detachments: "I wanted to put a PRD site in his Special Forces area. I had to have my Direction Finders so many meters apart, and I wanted one in his area. That's when I met Quamo, and from that point on, he and I developed a rapport."[575] As the battle unfolded, Bailey attempted to verify his own signals intelligence conclusions with those at the FOB-3.[576] Eventually, Bailey slept directly below Quamo at the FOB. Bailey recalls, "He would lie down and say, 'I will wake up at three o'clock in the morning,' and I would lie there, and no one would wake him up. Suddenly, at three o'clock in the morning, he was wide awake and on his feet. He was a cat!"[577]

As Operation PEGASUS commenced on 01 April, the "word" at KSCB was that it was to be abandoned, but LtCol Bahr had not received any indication to relocate.[578] Uneasy with the consequences of remaining at Khe Sanh if all Marines were to depart, LtCol Bahr summoned his S-2, Hammond Salley, to type a Top Secret report.

Hammond Salley reported to FOB-3 around 01 March 1968.[579] He previously served as S-3 of 4th Psychological Operations Group in Saigon before the Tet Offensive. One of his buddies from the 7th PSYOP Group on Okinawa had served with MACSOG, helping George Quamo and accompanied him in the Co Roc operation. The CO of the 4th PSYOP Group, Col. Beck, was seeking volunteers to work on a classified mission and Salley volunteered, reported to Col. Johnson (Chief of OP-35 at MACSOG in Saigon) and then went to CCN (at the time located at Monkey Mountain but later moved to Marble Mt., DaNang), and then by Huey to Khe Sanh. When he arrived, LtCol David Smith appointed him as S-2 with Lt Gerald Crews and MSG Frazier working in the 2 shop. His duties included custodian of all Top Secret documents, debrief of patrols, preparation of electronic reports to CCN and Saigon, preparation and forwarding of captured intelligence materials, custodian and insertion of ELDEST SON (AK-47 and mortar rounds filled with petin rigged to explode and destroy reliance on NVA cached ammunition supplies for troops traveling the Ho Chi Minh Trail), custodian of CIRCUS ACT devices (for wire-tap of NVA land lines), determine locations for FRANTIC GOAT (leaflet drops on the Ho Chi Minh Trail network), and, when FOB-3 was later dismantled and moved to Cam Lo, he was placed in charge of dismantling the FOB-3 compound.[580]

LtCol Bahr knew the information, so highly-classified and so urgent, required the unusual step of having an officer type it: "You don't ask Captains to type, normally. ... This was not 'Mickey Mouse' It was serious. I am absolutely in a period of real hurt, and I'm trying to take care of my guys. I said, 'You type it, make a carbon and give me the carbon.' that was it."[581] This historic letter dated 13 April and an accompanying letter to LtCol John S. Warren dated 14 April, are quoted:

> 1. Lack of significant enemy contact; discovery of cache sites with abundant weapons and ammunition; failure of enemy to employ AA against friendly forces; non-identification of 'hard-core' troops; continued enemy rocket and artillery capability; and continued high utilization of FM radio communications; all tend to indicate that the enemy has been merely 'pushed-out' of the AO or has faded into unoccupied areas in small groups which can be reformed into fighting forces within a short period of time.
>
> 2. It is believed that once the enemy becomes aware of the evacuation of the Khe-Sanh area by the 1st Air Cav Div, the enemy will, once again, close on the Khe-Sanh Combat Base with the intentions and capability of denying the use of the airfield and attempting to defeat friendly forces found here. This belief is based upon the indications stated in paragraph 1 above.
>
> 3. There are numerous advantages which could accrue to the enemy if he were to once again concentrate and attack Khe-Sanh. These are as follows:
>
> a. The enemy could 'prove' that Operation Pegasus did not really hurt him.
>
> b. The enemy would have an opportunity to destroy the force which prevented earlier victory (i.e., the 26th Marines and FOB #3). This would 'save face.'
>
> c. The enemy realizes that the name of Khe-Sanh still holds considerable world attention which gives it a psychological and political value, even though its military value is negligible.
>
> d. An attack on Khe-Sanh could relieve military pressure on other forces presently engaged in other AO's or planned for in future offensive operations.

---

[574] Conversation with George Bailey, 14 Jan 1990.
[575] Conversation with George Bailey, 28 Feb 1990.
[576] Conversation with George Bailey, 04 November 1989.
[577] Conversation with George Bailey, 05 September 1999.
[578] Conversation with Hammond Salley, 20 June 2002.
[579] Conversation with Hammond Salley, 03 September 1997.
[580] Letter from Hammond Salley, 20 June 2002.
[581] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 09 December 1993.

e. The provincial area in which Khe-Sanh is located can serve as a future guerrilla base area south of the 17th parallel.

f. Khe-Sanh Combat Base will provide him with equipment, spare parts, demolitions (explosives) material and other 'raw' materials which can be effectively utilized in future operations.

g. The realization that maintaining sizeable forces at Khe Sanh are extremely costly for allied forces due to dependence on air resupply.

4. These advantages could prove to be of significant value to be worth an inexpensive gamble which would be of high overall value if successful.

5. The area occupied by FOB 3 is considered untenable unless: (a) Friendly forces occupy flank positions and (b) sufficient artillery fire support is readily available and responsive. Minimum forces required are judged as: (a) One reinforced regiment and (b) one artillery battalion consisting of two (2) 105MM batteries and one (1) 155 battery. In addition, engineer, quartermaster and medical units would be required to support the troops in Khe-Sanh Combat Base."

[Letter to LTC John S. Warren, 14 April 1968, from LTC Roy W. Bahr]

Dear Colonel Warren:

I am sending Maj. Quamo as my personal representative in this matter. The subject is important enough to warrant my personal appearance, but I feel my place is here, no matter what decision is reached.

Major Quamo can brief you on both the friendly and enemy situation on a first hand basis that may be more descriptive than my messages or the 'Study of Khe Sanh situation,' which he has hand-carried to you.

Believe me Col. Warren, no one is pushing the panic button here. However, I do not feel that you, Col. Johnson, Col. Singlaub nor any others within our channels has fully grasped the situation here. I write this statement with the knowledge of the facts presented and available to me and I do admit that there may be other facts or plans of which I am not aware. If the latter is the case, I respectfully request that you give me the benefit of your knowledge.

As you know, I have no assigned mission at this time in support of other forces (1st Air Cav Div of 26th Marines) nor do I have the assets to carry out missions assigned by our higher headquarters. It is extremely doubtful that this area will be capable of launching air supported missions within one week.

If my mission is to defend in the khe Sanh area with the forces available to me and in conjunction with any small, air transportable 'stay-behind' unit, I will be forced to change the physical location of FOB 3 to more defensible terrain, i.e.: the area previously occupied by 1/9 Marines. I have asked Co, 26 Marines not to destroy those positions, as I will use them.

There are many questions that must be answered if we stay: (a) What are my orders in reference to destruction of material? (b) For how long do I defend the terrain I shall occupy? (c) When will be authorized to make a decision to begin an overland withdrawal? (d) What support can I expect from air and artillery? (e) When do the RF/PF forces leave? the CAC Marines? (f) How can a force of 80 US and possibly 200 Bru defend in an area that previously required a reinforced Marine regiment? (h) What is my mission?

This paper may appear to be overly dramatic and pessimistic, but I assure you that this is a most serious matter and events may overtake us which preclude slow and deliberate planning and decisions by higher headquarters. I am merely attempting to make you completely aware of the situation on the ground, so that you may see the possibilities (and, in my judgment, probabilities) that could occur. It is quite possible that the decision for FOB 3 to remain at KHE SANH may become a 'decision by indecision' if delayed much longer.

If the decision is reached that FOB 3 wills stay, then the withdrawal presently planned by the 1st Air Cav Div and the 26th Marine Brigade may place this organization in the position of another 'Lang Vei.'

In any event, we will do our best."

THE MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE

Roy Bahr gave George Quamo these documents and accompanied him to the airstrip on KSCB[582] with Thomas Simcox[583] driving. Major Quamo boarded a U-17 at 1535, 14 April 1968 enroute to the DaNang airfield.[584] Although the aircraft had a flat tire, the two Vietnamese-pilots[585] were able to take off "and then we didn't hear anymore from him."[586] Charles Almy had asked to go along as part of the briefing team, and George Quamo said OK, but at the last minute he was cut since the plane's capacity was filled. "I was that close to dying.".[587] Quamo not only was carrying the TOP SECRET documents, he also carried LtCol Bahr's dirty laundry![588] Also, he was carrying with him a mysterious piece of NVA ordnance. Lee Dunlap recalls a "strange-looking cylinder" fell into the FOB perimeter with Chinese markings Some of the soldiers put a rope on it, jerked it, but it didn't explode and Quamo said, "I'm going to have this assessed," and took it with him on his flight to DaNang.[589] Herb Marshall recalls the round landing about ten feet in front of him, sticking out of the ground. "It looked like Roman Candles going off. The damn thing turned cherry-red and because it was already dark, I first ducked down in the hole and thought, well, hell, if it went off, I'm dead anyhow because they make about a 20-foot crater, and I couldn't jump out and move. So I sat there and watched that thing burn out. It turned bright cherry red. It didn't go off."[590] One might speculate that the round exploded as the aircraft approached its landing.

---

[582] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 09 December 1993.

[583] Thomas Simcox was the FOB-3 S-3, arrived about 18 January 1968, and was a classmate of George Quamo in OCS. [Conversations with Thomas Simcox, 06 August 1991 and 02 November 1994

Soon after take-off, the U-17 pilot made contact with PANAMA air control (on Monkey Mountain, DaNang), but contact with the aircraft was lost at 1645H when it was in the vicinity of AT 9887.[591] The area was extensively searched by air.[592] Since DaNang is on the ocean coast, it was presumed that the aircraft may have plunged into the sea without trace.[593]

When contact was lost, speculations began to erupt. Some thought that George Quamo was going to DaNang to answer the accusations of Col Soulang Phetsomphou, CO of BV-33, who apparently complained to the American Ambassadors in Saigon and Vientiane, Laos, claiming that Quamo was personally responsible for not ensuring the safety of those of BV-33 who had taken refuge at Lang Vei.[594] Some zealous CIA analysts actually considered George a spy who had flown to North Vietnam and sent investigators to interview Skip Minnicks and others who had worked with him. "We were just so mad! It was just such nonsense!"[595] Harve Saal recalls: "I can remember Skip [Charles Minnicks] being so mad, irate and frothing. I'd never seen Skip lose his temper until then. He lost his temper. He was so mad about what they were saying about George. There was a kid named Bill Harris who also worked with him. Bill came over to me and said, 'Harve, I got to get away from Skip. Skip is really having a tantrum!' I went over there and Skip was really m ad! He was ranting and raving and just carrying on a blue streak. He just couldn't believe what they had said. It was done by one of their [CIA's] analysts who was a 'genius'. The accusation came over the radio. It said they wanted all of his belongings searched."[596]

Major Bulldog Smith was chagrined, claiming that both he and Quamo had plans to go into Laos and remain under deep cover while organizing an insurgent force. "When I heard that he went down and when they couldn't find him, I said, 'That son-of-a-gun left without me!" He expected to hear of Quamo suddenly reappearing.[597] Major Jerry Hudson, S-2 of 26th Marines during the Siege, "thought he may have just established a deep cover and was somewhere doing something. That guy could [584] MCJ2 Form 34, US Personnel Missing/Captured in Southeast Asia, Biographical Data, in MIA file, George Quamo, Statement of LTC Roy W. Bahr, 18 April 1968, in MIA Board Proceedings, 22 April 1968, C&C Det, 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, LTC Ira Snell, Jr., President, in MIA file, George Quamo, MSGT Billy Waugh notes that the U-17 was a fixed-wing aircraft with immense wings enabling it to fly very slowly--even at about 5 miles per hour!--from which one could almost rappel down, and belonged to "the Agency" (i.e., CIA). [Conversation with Billy Waugh, 3 September 1989].

---

[585] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 28 February 1993.

[586] Conversation with Thomas Simcox, 08 August 1991.

[587] Conversation with Charles Almy, 20 December 2002.

[588] Conversation with Roy Bahr, 28 February 1993.

[589] Conversation with Lee Dunlap, 27 August 1988.

[590] Conversation with Herbert Marshall, 03 January 1996.

[591] Refugee Report and Evaluation, 19 Apr 1982, in Library of Congress MIA microfilm Reel #123, Folder #283, Case #01201.

[592] The route of the aircraft was searched in the area roughly bounded by YD700100, YD700400, BU000000, and BT000800 by a total of 25 VNAF fixed wing sorties and 16 helicopter sorties on 19 April. Each aircraft had 2 observers, and the air search effort totalled some 80 hours. |Statement of Capt. Donald T. Ward, 21 April 1968, in MIA Board Proceedings, cited].

[593] Mather, Paul D., M.I.A. Accounting for the Missing in Southeast Asia, Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1994, p. 32, note 12.

[594] Conversations with James W. Moore, 12 December 1995, and Charles Minnicks, 26 December 1991. In a conversation with Soulang Phetsomphou, 04 Feb 1996, the Colonel remembered George Quamo and recalled he had been very helpful: "Yeah, he helped me. He brought me the supply. He helped me. You know, he intended to organize the special team with me."

[595] Conversations with Harve Saal, 08 and 14 August 1989.

[596] Conversation with Harve Saal, 14 July 1991.

[597] Conversations with David C. Smith, 06 July 1990 and 27 July 1995.

speak about five different languages. He could live out of his pack. He was just so multifaceted. I believed he was on one of those long-term missions where he'd surface later."[598] Gunnery Sergeant George Bailey said, "I wonder if that man is actually dead. There was just such a mysterious atmosphere about that whole individual."[599]

Quamo's remains were discovered commingled with two Asians on 28 June 1974[600] by a Vietnamese woodcutter clearing an area in the mountains.[601] The Quamo family was notified on 15 August 1974 and the remains of George Quamo were released the next day for transport to the United States.[602] He was buried in Arlington National Cemetery on 21 October 1974 "as his family and several Army officers and soldiers looked on. There were no bands, no Generals, and no parades. He died at the age of 27."[603]

His brother, James Quamo, was puzzled over a box of some tapes and a little book with some handwriting that the family received. "This information we got wasn't George's. I listened to one of the tapes and said, 'This isn't George." It is possible, of course, that George Quamo was carrying cassettes to be mailed and the small book of handwriting for someone else since mailing things out of Khe Sanh, with all the incoming, was so uncertain. When the skeletal remains were returned, Quamo's older sister, Yilka, viewed them: "She said they showed-he had a football injury and a calcium deposit on one of his legs, and they could see it on the skeletal remains. But there was also some doubt in my mind."[604]

The FOB-3 S-2, Thomas Simcox, when told the remains of George Quamo had been discovered by two Vietnamese woodcutters, responded: ""Yeah, that's what they say. I've always been skeptical of that. It seems odd that the Vietnamese found him and we didn't. I didn't understand it."[605]

The Averill Park Post Office, Averill Park, New York, dedicated its post office in honor of Major George Quamo on Saturday, 14 April 2007.[606]

Saal notes: "FOB-4 closed out FOB-3. These guys were a bunch of thieves! They were awful! They were just terrible! We had a fund in FOB-3, a slush fund, for buying presents for guys who were leaving. Well, these guys who came in from FOB-4 found out we had it and they grabbed it, snatched the fund for themselves, and they had plaques made for themselves. They're not telling anybody this! One day in August [1968], I was down at the mail room in CCN and saw this stack of plaques and said, 'What are those?' The guy showed it to me and said it was 'FOB3.' I said, 'Wow! Can I see one of those?' and he handed it to me. It had somebody's name who I had never heard of. I said, 'Hey, these are my friends.' It was, like, ten plaques. I said, 'Let me sign for these and I'll deliver them.' I took those plaques and I tore the name plates off of them and I got a hold of the guys who were at FOB-3 and I either mailed them to them–it took me like five years, but I got guys plaques, guys who were there. There was only ten of us left alive of the original 35 when the Siege hit." [Conversation with Harve Saal, 14 July 1991].

: FOB 3 PLAQUE FOR SSG HARVEY W. SAAL

---

[598] Conversations with Jerry Hudson, 04 July 1991 and 23 June 1994.
[599] Conversation with George Bailey, 04 November 1989.
[600] Hand-written note on"Report of Casualty," 2 March 1971, in MIA file, George Quamo.
[601] Sally Buckley, "Medal to family of a hero," Rochester, N.Y. Democrat and Chronicle, Mon., 11 Aug 1975, p. 3B.
[602] Conversation with LtCol James G. Cole, 20 September 1991. LtCol Cole was Chief of POW/MIA Affairs in the Pentagon.
[603] Tom Haggerty, "The Perfumed Prince." Printed 11 November 2001. In letter from Haggerty, 13 November 2001.
[604] Conversation with James Quamo, 04 June 1995.
[605] Conversation with Thomas Simcox, 02 November 1994.
[606] Dedication brochure issued by the Averill Park Post Office, Averill Park, New York.

"The 1967 Hill Battles," printed in Khe Sanh Veteran, Issue #39 (May, 1997) 7-44 (the printed article was without footnotes).[607]

Marines of Company G, 2/3, move through bomb crater on Hill 861 on 30 April 1967. USMC photo A188633 by Sgt. D.E. Walmer. "We peer from the pits and scars of violence. What has been may temporarily shield us but we must move on, ever watchful for what caused the pit crater we know so well."

The following account of the Hill Battles is only an abbreviated summary of a greater story. The emphasis is on individuals rather than units or tactics

BACKGROUND

The importance of Khe Sanh relates to an opening in the rugged mountain chain that forms a natural boundary between Laos and South Vietnam known as the D'Ai Lao. Two other passes to the north, Mu Gia (WE 8153) and Ban Karai (XE 262117) provided access to NVA units moving south relatively unimpeded along what came to be known as the Ho Chi Minh Trail. The D'Ai Lao (the pass through which Route 9 passes to and from Laos) had been an ancient invasion route, used in 1282 when the Mongol General Sogatu moved westward.[608] The Annam kings, Vo Vuong (1738-65) and Gia Long (1802-20) extended Vietnamese influence into Savannakhet Province by moving through the D'Ai Lao Pass,[609] while in 1827, the Thai (Siamese) moved through the pass and forced the Vietnamese to retreat to Cam Lo.[610]. The French stopped the advance of the Siamese and in November, 1890, Captain de Malglaive reoccupied the D'Ai Lao Pass.[611] Road construction beginning in 1904 under Messrs. Rourard, Assistant Public Works Engineer, and Capt Odend'Hall, Civil Services Administrator. made it into Route 9[612].

---

[607] The original article, as printed in the Khe Sanh Veteran did not have footnotes. For this publication, footnotes have been added after consulting what records I still retained after donating almost all my records to the Veterans Museum of the State of Wisconsin in Madison, Wisconsin. Sources of information have been located and are cited in the present article. Since the article was written, additional information was obtained, some of which is included in the discussion of the Battle of the Hills on pages 36-63 of Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008. A few photographs and diagrams, not in the original article, have been added.

[608] Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Sons of the Mountains, New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1982, p. 85. Reference is made to Henri Maspero, "Histoire d'Annam," pp. 35-36.

[609] Ibid., pp. 159-60.

[610] Ibid., p. 179.

[611] Bourotte, Bernard, "Essai d'historie des populations Montagnards du Sud Indochinoise Jusqu' a 19456," Bulletin de la Societie des Studes Indochinoies, n.s., Vol. 30, No. 1 (1`955), p. 83.

[612] "Les provinces d'Annam: Quang Tri," Revue Indo-Chinoise, n.s. 2, Vol. 1, Issue #69 (15 Nov 1907) pp. 1588-1589;

As development of the Ho Chi Minh trail progressed, the Laotian town of Tchepone on Route 9 was overrun 01 May 1961,[613] and, being concerned over a "porous border,"[614] the Americans paced a Special Force "A" team in Khe Sanh ville on 8 July 1962,[615] lest penetrating NVA troops and supplies have free access into Vietnam. The Bru tribe, covering both sides of the border,[616] became a natural source of information for Americans[617] on what was happening on the Ho Chi Minh Trail, as did the local French coffee plantation owners who travelled westward on Route 9 to Savannakhet in Laos. An airstrip (later KSCB) was developed by ARVN engineers in Nov-Dec of 1962.[618]

Then came 1964. On 26 Mar, Capt Floyd Thompson (CO of the Khe Sanh "A" team) was captured and became the longest-held POW of the war.[619] On 20 Apr, Eugene Poilane, who had established a coffee plantation at Khe Sanh in 1918 and fathered 10 children, 5 of whom were born after he was 60, was assassinated on Route 9.[620] In late 1964, the USSF relocated to the airstrip and began construction of several bunkers (what Marines later assumed were "old French bunkers").

On 22 Dec 1965, the Special Forces at Khe Sanh made a chance contact in a dense fog with a large NVA patrol and annihilated them.[621] The NVA retaliated on 03 Jan 1966 by shelling the new camp with 120 mm mortars, the first use of these large caliber weapons in the war.[622]

By now, Khe Sanh was important not as a plug in a hole to stop NVA from moving into South Vietnam, but rather as a launch site for American intelligence-gathering operations into Laos.[623] The pass made it possible to move in and out clandestinely by foot. A whole host of such activities soon flourished in 1964. Signal Engineer Survey Unit (SESU) commanded by Maj. Alfred M. Gray, Jr., conducted operations from Tiger Tooth Mt. (Hill 1739, XD 832453).[624] Special Forces

---

Odendhal, "Les routes de L'Annam au Mekong," Revue Indochinoise, 1st Series, Vol. 4, No. 12 (Jul., 1894) pp. 131-161 and Vol. 5, No. 13 (Aug., 1894), pp. 1-50. Capt Odend'Hal was assassinated 07 Apr 1904 by Jarai warriors of the "King of Fire." [Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Sons of the Mountains, Ethnohistory of the Vietnamese Central Highlands to 1954, New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1982, p. 284]. Khe Sanh village began with a single houuse, that of the engineer who built National Route 9. [Fisher, Charles A., South-East Asia, A Social, Economic and Political Geography, London: Methuen & Co., Ltd., 1964, p. 552.]. When Eugene Poilane settled in the area in the 1920s and developed a coffee plantation, he imported Vietnamese workers (The Bru being too savage at the time), and thus Khe Sanh Village was born. {Letters from Madeleine Poilane, 02 Jan 1971, 07 Jan 1976, and obit of Eugene Poilane and conversation with Felix Poilane, 19 July 1967].

[613] U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1988, pp. 126, 232, 311; CIA: Current Intelligence Weekly Summary, 4 May 1961, p. 1 [MORI 207619]. South Vietnam took emergency measures, moving a battalion to the border and a 150-man special forces unit in civilian clothes penetrated 6 mi. into Laos [CIA, Current Intelligence Weekly Summary, 11 May 1961, p. 1, MORI 207620]. A 120-man South Vietnamese Army special forces unit penetrated into Laos and assumed effective control of Laotian Army garrison which abandoned Tchepone 01 May and was guarding 9 bridges west of the Lao/S. Viet. border. [CIA: current Intelligence Weekly Summary, Weekly Review: Laos, 18 May 1961, p. 1, MORI 207661] The Lao Army unit, BV-33 subsequently located at the Ban Houei Sane airfield.

[614] "Porous border:" Telegram from the Ambassador in Vietnam to Dept. of State, 08 Dec 1960 in U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1958-1960, Vol. 1, Vietnam, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1986, p. 719.

[615] Stanton, Shelby L., Green Berets at War, Novato, Ca.: Presidio, 1985, p. 46. Comments of Jacques Standing, 20 Mar 1989 and 27 Mar 1989; Comments of Gerald J. Howland, 20 Mar 1989; Comments of Frank Fowler, 21 May 1989.

[616] Schrock, Joann L., Stockton, William, Jr., Murphy, Elaine M., and Fromme, Marilou: Ethnographic Study Series: Minority Groups in the Republic of Vietnam, U.S. Dept. of the Army Pamphlet No. 550-105, HQ, Dept. of the Army, Feb., 1966, pp. 54-55. Mole, CDR Robert H., CHC, USN, Peoples of the Tribes of South Vietnam, Vol. 1, The Tribes of I Corps, South Vietnam, Saigon, COMNAVSUPPACT, Summer, 1968, pp. 39-42.

[617] The USSF team at Khe Sanh organized a special scout platoon of Bru tribesmen and two scouts, particularly trusted and extremely good soldiers, helped establish an intelligence network of agents with contacts in the Bru villages and ventured into Laos. [Conversation with Mr. James Whitenack, 06 Oct 1988, and Allan B. Imes, 14 Oct 1988]. Another source of information was COL Soulang Phetsomphou, Commander of BV-33 at Ban Houei Sane.

[618] Conversation with Frank Fowler, 21 Mar 1989. Fowler was a member of the second USSF team at Khe Sanh, A-131, commanded by CAPT Chuck Korchek.

[619] Hubbell, John G., P.O.W., New York: Reader's Digest Press, 1976, pp. 303-304.

[620] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, p. 13.

[621] Waghelstein, CPT John D., "A Vital Link," in Infantry Magazine: Ft. Benning, Ga., p. 286. 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, Quarterly Command Report for Period Ending 31 Dec 1965, 15 Jan 1966, Incl (1), Khe Sanh Operations, 29 Nov 1965, dated 1 Jan 1966. Comments of COL John Waghelstein, 9 May 1986.

[622] ADM Sharp and GEN Westmoreland, Report on the War in Vietnam, p. 123. 120 mm M38 Soviet mortars can fire 12-15 rounds per minute, each sound weighs 15.4 KG.

[623] CIA, "The Enemy Threat to Khe Sanh," 10 Jan 1968, SC No,. 0137/68

[624] Asst C of S Memo AO1A (JCSO-kh-001A32564, 13 Nov 1964 to CMC, Subj: USMC participation in Vietnam, Encl (1), p. 2. Whitlow, Capt. Robert H., U.S. Marines in Vietnam, The Advisory and Combat Assistance Era, 1954-1`964, Washington, D.C.:

established agent nets, as did the National Police in Khe Sanh ville. The Air Force started TIGERHOUND–small prop aircraft to do VR [Visual Reconnaissance].[625] JTAD (Joint Technical Advisory Detachment) station #14 was established at Khe Sanh,[626] for deep, unsupervised patrols. The SOG's FOB-1 at Phu Bai used Khe Sanh as a lunch Site by 1966.

Results of these activities prompted Gen Westmoreland to coax III MAF to upgrade the Khe Sanh airstrip and emplace BN 1/3 there in Oct '66.[627] Project DELTA, operating just under the DMZ and east of the border, sustained 3 MIA in Dec. '66.[628] The USSF relocated to Lang Vei 19-25 Dec 1966.[629]

NVA presence in the Khe Sanh area increased; Khe Sanh was the nest from which the hornets stung them in Laos. (Gen. Giap was always interested in the area. He had been imprisoned at the prison at the D'Ai Lao, known as Lao Bao, 1930-1932, along with his brother, Vo Thuan Nho and several other influential Viet Minh,[630] a period of his life he always passes over in silence. Even Ho Chi Minh himself was imprisoned at Lao Bao in the 1930s.[631] The prison had been constructed in 1896 to hold 250 convicts.[632])

Contacts became more frequent. On 18 Jan '67, Cpl Michael John Scanlon of the Third Force Recon Co. Det. became the first USMC KIA at khe Sanh.[633] As a result of a contact 26-27 Jan, 4 USMC helicopters were lost. BN 1/9 arrived at Khe Sanh on 6 Feb 1967[634] and made contact 25 Feb just 1500 meters west of the airstrip.[635] Force Recon patrols reported significant NVA presence.[636] On 16 Mar. the newly-arrived E/2/9 made contact in which 18 Marines were KIA.[637] USAF pilots of TIGERHOUND reported: "an alarming buildup of fortifications and NVA activity on the hills overlooking the base."[638]

Yet, the base commander[639] was convinced there was little or no NVA presence or activity.[640] Of interest, the base commander, Colonel John Reeder, had just completed a tour of several years with the CIA (and had a platoon in WW II on Okinawa, a company in Korea, and before coming to Khe Sanh, was XO of 4th Marine Regiment.[641]

Herbert Marshall, one of the SOG team leaders training indigenous for patrols into Laos conducted training patrols for his indigenous at Khe Sanh, including Hills 881-North and South and 861. The SOG Captain asked Herbert Marshall to do the

---

HQMC, 1977, p. 139.

[625] Westmoreland, A Soldier Reports, pp. 196, 198. CPL Nick Taylor, "Tigerhound O1E's 'Hunt' for Marines," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:28 (14 Jul 1967). History of 20th Tactical Air Support Squadron, Jan-Mar 1968, Tab T, 20th TASS, in Vol. II of Quarterly History, 504th Tactical Air Support Group, Jan-Mar 68, App. 6, Subordinate Unit Histories.

[626] III MAF COC 20-1311Z/Oct66 in III MAF COC Journal and File 20-21 Oct 1966 #123.

[627] HQMC, Oral History Transcript of LtGen John A. Chaisson, 1975, pp. 370-374. Westmoreland comments on draft MSS dtd 27 May 1978, in HQMC, Hist Div., Vietnam Comments File. Westmoreland, A Soldier Reports, pp. 258-259. III MAF 291012Z/Sep 66 in III MAF misc. msgs. Jan-Dec 1966.

[628] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, pp. 20-22.

[629] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, p. 22. CO CoC 5th SFGA, DaNang, 180900Z/Dec66, Movement of Khe Sanh CIDG Camp to Lang Vei and III MAF COC 250251Z/Dec66 in III MAF COC Journal and File, #J35 and J39.

[630] Currey, Cecil B., Victory at Any Cost, the Genius of Viet Nam's Gen Vo Nguyen Giap, Washington: Brassey's Inc., 1997, p. 25.

[631] Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Shattered World, Adaptation and Survival Among vietnam's Highland Peoples during the vietnam War, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1993, p. 142.

[632] Zinoman, Peter, The Colonial Bastille, A History of Imprisonment in Vietnam, 1862-1940, Berkeley: Uniersity of California Press, 2001, p. 62.

[633] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd Ed, 2008, pp. 23-24. 1/3 Command Chronology, Jan 1967, p. 3. Silver Star Medal (post.) file on CPL Michael John Scanlon.

[634] SOP Khe Sanh 021415Z/Feb67, SITREP #2. SOP Khe Sanh 061414Z/Feb67, SITREP #6.

[635] Led by SGT Donald E. Harper, 1st squad of 2nd platoon of B/1/9: 3d MarDiv COC 260205Z/Feb 67, SITREP #25; Comments by 2/Lt John M. Kramer and SGT Donald E. Harper, HQMC HistDiv Oral History Tape #567; Comments by Capt Michael W. Sayers on HQMC Oral History Tape #566.

[636] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 06 June 1989, pp. 60-61.

[637] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, pp. 32-34.

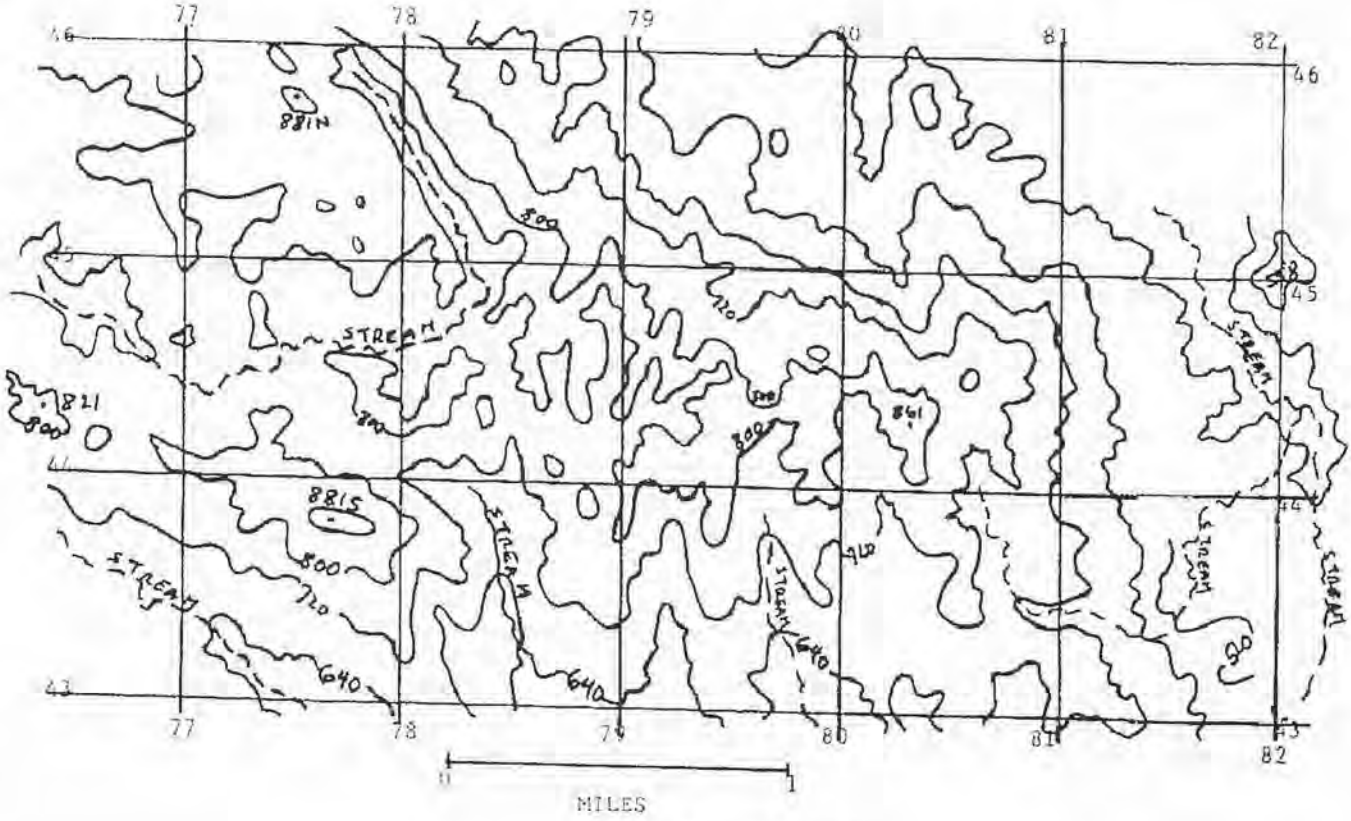
[638] "Historical Report (Khe Sanh)," in History, 504th Tactical Air Support Group, 1 Apr 67 -30 Jun 67, Ch. 3., Attachment #6.

[639] LtCol James M. Reeder, designated "SOP 3d MarDiv/III MAF Rep Khe Sanh," relieved his predecessor, LtCol McGee in Feb, 1967. He had previously served several years with the CIA and earlier, as XO of 4th Marines. [Conversation with James M. Reeder, 07 May 1`989] The first "SOP 3d MarDiv/III MAF Rep Khe Sanh,," Col Thomas M. Horne, arrived in September, 1966, having served as G-2, 3d MarDiv and departed Feb 1967 [Conversation with COL Horne, 11 Jan 1987]. Col Reeder was relieved by COL Gary Wilder, CO, 3d Marine Regiment, on 20 April 1967.

[640] Conversation with GySgt Lawrence Keen, 04 Dec 1975. Conversation with Mr. James Capers, 24 May 1986. Comments of CAPT Michael W. Sayers to HQMC Hist Div, 28 May 1981 in Comments File on 1967 Vietnam volume.

[641] Conversations with James Reeder, 30 April 1989 and 07 May 1989. After Khe Sanh, Col Reeder taught at the Staff College in Norfolk, Va., and retired in 1977 on 30 years' service.

briefing, and during a brief of Colonel Reeder, the Khe Sanh commander, Marshall reported numerous bunkers, lots of enemy, and recommended the hills be subject to "..many, many hours of prepping with airstrikes. Then I would form my artillery and I would lay a barrage and walk my troops up with a barrage of artillery in front of us. This Marine officer looked around and said, 'Bullshit!' And the Captain looked at me and said, 'Well, Sergeant, our briefing is completed.' We turned around and walked out of there. And it was about a week, the Marines sent a Company up on that hill."[642]



1967 HILL BATTLE AREA

24 April 1967: THE BATTLE OF KHE SANH BEGINS[643]

[642] Conversation with Herbert Marshall, 03 Jan 1996. Marshall was a Staff Sergeant at the time, the Intelligence Chief. Marshall was also an ex-Marine. "I joined the Marines in 1957, turned 16 at MCRD, San Diego, assigned to 11th FMF at Camp Pendleton, transferred to 2nd 105 Howitzer Battery at 29 Palms as a cannon-cocker, honorably discharged under minority conditions after they found out how old I was when doing a security clearance check. I was 17 when discharged but had no guardian as I was raised an orphan and there was no one to sign my papers and my grandmother refused. I enlisted in the Army when I turned 18 and selected the Army because I could enlist directly into the paratroops ... I volunteered for the 5th Group in RVN and was assigned to Det A-312 near Phouc Vinh VN (northwest of Saigon) ... After returning to Ft. Bragg in 1966, I was assigned as assistant instructor of Operational intelligence at Special Warfare Center for two months when I got word of a special Project being put together... [He then retired] After 14 years in law enforcement, I enlisted into the Navy as an E-6 Investigator. I served on USS KITTY HAWK, Naval Air Station Adak, Alaska, Naval Submarine Base Bangor, Wash. and USS PRINCETON in the Persian Gulf War... I retired from the Navy in July 1993 and returned to Alaska." [Letter from Herbert Marshall 9 January 1996].

[643] Material on the events of 24 April 1967 is based on the following: Comments of LCPLDonald A. Clark, Tape #959; Comments of Cpl Michael A. Brown, Tape #960; Comments of Sgt Milton G. Norwood, Tape #992; Ltr of Maj Michael W. Sayers, 18 May 1981 to Marine Corps HistCen with enclosures; Tefler, Rogers, and Fleming, 1967, pp. 35-37; Comments of SSGT Leon R. Burns, Tape #993; Comments of 2/Lt Thomas E. King, Tape #994; Comments of SSGT Dennis W. Ritchie, Tape #995; Navy Cross file on LCPL Dana Cornell Darnell; 3MAR AAR, THE BATTLE OF KHE SANH, SEARCH AND DESTROY, 09 Jun 1967; BSM file on LCPL John Wayne Skelton, Jr.; BSM file on LCPL Eric G. Wilk; SSM file on LCPL Daniel Douglas Dulude; Sgt Robert Ynostroza, "Hill 861 Cave Complex Shields NVA Battalion," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:19 (12 May 1967) 12; Sgt Roger Ynostroza, "New Lieutenant Plays Major Role in the Battle for Hill 861," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:20 (19 May 1967) 11; Comments of Cpl Frank D. Thompson, Tape #1677.

First and Third Platoons of B/1/9 were operating from PPBs [Platoon Patrol Bases] at XD 798443 and XD 790455, one just west of hill 861, the other a click northwest. The Second Platoon provided defense of the KSCB.

Like a descent into monsters within a nightmare, the mission was to check out some caves that had been spotted by B-1 about 1630H on 23 Apr. Tom Ryan, Point man of B-3, later reflected, "The Colonel on the base had said, 'We'll just send up two platoons, one on each side, and we're going to clean them up once and for all.' It was crazy!"[644] The two platoons joined together about 1800H and set in for the night at XD 810460. It was not restful; Cpl Michael A. Brown, a MG team leader of B-3 recalls: "We set in our perimeter. We weren't too sure. We were kinda nervous then. We knew we were moving into a VC area. Anyway, we set up our PPB there, out there in the open with First Platoon."

On the morning of the 24th, the two platoons moved out at 0530H in two columns about 300 meters apart following a path they had used on previous patrols in this area, moving towards Hill 516 (XD 799459). It was raining, and some Marines in the patrol were able to eat some Cs as they moved.

The area was pretty open. We moved out. There was no contact. The trail was kinda rough but we made it. We kept on humping. Then we moved up the hill. I'm not sure which hill it was. I guess it was around 861 and finally we were moving into this area with the grass pretty thick, and we weren't sure we were going to make any contact or not. A couple of guys were saying, 'Well, there probably won't be anything there when we get there.' I knew myself that if there was anything there, it wouldn't be anything they wanted.

As B-1 moved towards the caves, one of the men in 3d Squad of B-1 spotted 4 or 5 NVA in khaki uniforms moving towards the Marines. The platoon commander, 2/Lt James D. Carter, Jr., passed the word they were advancing towards them. The enemy force moved up to within 50 meters, spotted one of the Marines, and began to fire. The Marines opened fire. After the exchange of bullets, Lt Carter took 8 men with him to investigate. He found an enemy soldier on a stretcher, killed him and one other enemy trooper down the hill. The First Squad leader, Cpl James Gerald Pomerleau, was perhaps too anxious to get to the enemy, and was hit by a WP grenade and killed.

B-1 brought the body of Cpl Pomerleau back up the hill and proceeded some 300 meters towards Hill 861 when they began receiving heavy fire, pinning them down.

In order to cover their movement out of the enemy's direct fire, LCPL Eric G. Wilk of B-3 moved his 60mm mortar directly into a position exposed to enemy MG fire and began firing. His mortar effectively silenced the murderous fire on B-1 and they were able to pull across the ridge to a position of defilade from enemy fire.

Immediately, the numerically superior enemy force shifted its vicious fire toward the advancing B-3 and specifically at LCPL Wilk's mortar position which was causing them so much damage with repeated accurate fire.

Without a moment of hesitation, LCPL Wilk boldly moved his weapon to a more effective position and again directed accurate counter-fire, enabling his platoon to regroup into defensive positions. LCPL John Wayne Skelton, Jr., began running through the intense fire to obtain vital mortars after the ammunition carriers were unable to deliver ammunition due to the heavy volume of small arms fire and mortar fire. Repeatedly exposing himself to the enemy fire, he moved one man to another, collecting ammunition and delivering it to LCPL Wilk. Despite the heavy MG fire directed on him, LCPL Wilk continued to fire and only stopped with a MG round shattered his right forearm making him unable to continue. LCPL Skelton then continued to fire the mortar until he was seriously wounded by the heavy volume of enemy fire.

Meanwhile, in B-1, LCPL Dana Cornell Darnell, a mortar ammunition carrier, saw his mortar gunner fall unconscious when the ambush was sprung. With extraordinary calmness in the face of the intense enemy fire , LCPL Darnell retrieved the mortar.

LCPL Darnell had yelled for the ammunition which had been distributed among the platoon's members to be delivered to his position. Due to the intense enemy fire the other members of the platoon were unable to reach his position with the necessary ammunition. LCPL Darnell immediately stood up and raced through the enemy fire to retrieve the ammunition, with complete disregard for his own safety,.

Due to the urgency of the situation he was unable to set up the mortar properly. Holding the mortar between his legs and steadying it with his hands and using his helmet as a base plate, LCPL Darnell began firing the mortar from a position exposed to the enemy fire and delivered accurate fire into the enemy positions. His A-gunner urinated on Darnell's hands and the tube to keep it cool.

When he had exhausted all of the mortar rounds of the mortar squad, LCPL Darnell informed the rest of the platoon to standby; he was coming around to collect more ammunition. He stood up and again raced up and down the lines collecting mortar ammunition and then returned to his mortar, all the while being subject to hostile fire. This was repeated several times until the enemy fire was silenced.

---

[644] Conversation with Mr. Tom Ryan, 24 Aug 1985. Ryan was Point Man in 3d Platoon.

At this time, the First Platoon was ordered to withdraw from the clearing. While withdrawing, two Marines in close proximity to LCPL Darnell were hit by MG fire. He quickly moved through the fire to render first aid and was dragging wounded Marines from the clearing when he was temporarily blinded by dirt and rock fragments which embedded in his eyes. He refused to be evacuated and within an hour was again caring for the wounded. When the radioman for the Third Squad was killed, LCPL Darnell took over the radio as the platoon withdrew.[645]

The chaos of the battle momentarily settled, but not the disorienting confusion. Corporal Brown, a MG team leader of B-3 recalls, "We didn't know which place we were supposed to be in, where we were going to set down at. We just moved in as clumsy as we could. We tried to figure out where the fire was coming from."

B-1 was then ordered to leave the KIA with B-3 and join up with BRAVO-6, Capt Sayers. Two men at the time started moving to where they could find some cover; no one had any real cover at this time. The mission was to assist B-2, which had lost four men.

Early on the morning of the 24th, 2Lt Thomas G. King had led 30 men from B-2 plus a 81 mm mortar section with approximately 120 founds of mortar ammo and 1/Lt Philip H. Sauer, commander of the ONTOS section at Khe Sanh, to Hill 700, about a click south of 861, to provide security for the sweeping B-1 and B-3.

Upon reaching XD 805435, Lt King set up his 81 and at about 0930H, began to fire into the cave area. About an hour later, he dispatched a 5-man OP to proceed up the trail to the top of Hill 861 for a better advantage so they could call fire missions and possibly air support for the two platoons. The OP advanced until it reached a bamboo thicket about 300 meters from the top of the hill, at 1100H, and was ambushed by dug-in 20-30 NVA. The point man went down yelling, "I'm hit!" and just lay on the trail.

Lt Sauer and PFC William Marks made it to a foxhole; the radioman and security took cover about 15 feet behind them. The NVA soldiers began plastering them with fire. Lt Sauer was armed with only a pistol. A NVA round had burst the muzzle of the security man's rifle; it was worthless.

Marks and the Lt decided to make a run for it. Sauer said he'd cover Marks and follow him back to the others.

> I made off and it was the last I ever saw of him. When I got to the other two I said, 'Come on, let's get out of here,' and we ran down as far as we could and went down again, the fire was so heavy. But we got up and began running again. We saw the gooks shadowing us downhill on our right side and I thought they had us surrounded. I thought we were all going to die right there. We were running scarred.[646]

The radioman was hit in the chest and went down. The security man disappeared. Marks found himself alone, running blindly, stumbling and falling along the narrow and slick mud path as bullets hit all around him.

The squad security for the 81 moved forward to investigate, and Marks stumbled into them. Breathless, exhausted, and caked with mud, he blurted, "They're all dead. The other four. All dead."

When he made it to his unit, he was given some aspirins and told to lie down and rest. He couldn't. "I kept seeing those poor guy's faces."

Lt King immediately dispatched one of his squads to retrieve the 4 bodies. They arrived at the ambush site and had their hands on two of the bodies; they did not see the other two. Due to the very heavy fire, the squad was forced to withdraw, and Lt King proceeded to call an artillery mission on Hill 861 where it was assumed the NVA were dug-in.

At this point, Capt Sayers radioed Lt King and said he was on his way by helicopter. The approach of his helicopter was met with .50 caliber MG fire, but managed to land with Capt Sayers and his radioman and take-off.

Lt King immediately turned the 81 tube around and fired on the .50. One enemy body flew into the air. A squad dispatched to investigate could locate nothing. When the squad returned, Lt King and nine Marines went to the ambush site on 861, took no fire, and managed to get to the two bodies and drag them back. One body had been stripped of everything but boots, utility trousers, and utility jacket. The other body was stripped and had nothing but a cartridge belt, a couple of canteens, and flak jacket.

For about 20 minutes, the squad combed through the immediate area searching for the two others, without success. Perhaps they had crawled away, they thought. Lt King then requested permission from Capt Sayers to pull back.

> I did not like this area. It was too very quiet. There was no bugs making any kind of noise, no noises whatsoever, and I figured the enemy was still up in that area.

Upon reaching a suitable area, he called in a helicopter to evacuate the two bodies.

> I came up on the helicopter's frequency, and he instructed me to pop a smoke. I popped one smoke. The helicopter circled high overhead. He instructed me to pop another smoke, which I did. The helicopter, which [645] On 26 April 1967, LCPL Darnell was killed trying to drag a wounded Marine from a heavily mortared position.

---

[646] UPI release, "When Your Buddies Are Dead, Run Like Hell," Pacific Stars & Stripes, 1 May 1967.

was a 34, proceeded to land. His wheels had no more than touched the ground when the whole tree line on top of 861 opened up on us with heavy automatic weapons fire. The helicopter took 35 hits. None of my people were hit; we all got down.

The firing slowed down somewhat as Lt King returned to Capt Sayers and the 81 tubes which continued to support the sweeping B-1 and B-3. The FO of B-1 radioed that the rounds were landing directly on top of a NVA company, and to keep firing.

B-1 had been moving towards 861, as ordered, but was ambushed with heavy automatic MG fire; there was another man killed, another wounded. The platoon disengaged, moved to a LZ, and was able to medevac two or three of their wounded by helicopter. Receiving additional heavy fire, the platoon moved to another LZ. Another chopper arrived, but so did heavy enemy fire; another man was killed, three more wounded. The chopper could not land. So B-1 set in for the night, dug in with their wounded and dead. GySgt Al Koppel, the Weapons Platoon Commander, reported:

> It was raining. It was miserable. It was cold. I was in Korea too, and I wonder to this day which one was worse.

B-3, the other sweeping platoon, fared no better. After B-1 left them with the body of Cpl Pomerleau, Cpl Brown recalled, "We stood around there. We couldn't figure out whether we were supposed to set in or not." Three or four minutes passed. All at once they started receiving fire–small arms, mortars, .30 and .50–from the ridge line opposite them, and everyone jumped down. The Marines of B-3 moved to the tree line at the crest of their hill and tried to return fire.

> Nobody knew exactly how we were doing it. We must moved up into the brush, sat down, and started firing. We were firing, and I could see a couple of muzzle flashes from the bushes up ahead, but it was hard to pinpoint the fire. It seemed maybe they were dug in. We were firing back and forth for awhile and the rounds were coming close. We didn't have any trouble. We had concealment, but once we fired, our concealment was literally no good because they could see where [the bullets] were coming from. I didn't know what was going on We heard a couple of guys got hit, and they were screaming and it kinda shook us up. We didn't know what the hell happened. We kept on firing. Finally they told us to pull back and just leve half our gear up there. We tried to bring it with us but it was almost impossible to keep moving and pick up everything you had and keep our packs on our backs. We found out who the casualties wee and the corpsman was working with them, and we were trying to figure out what we were going to do with the gear, and it was the mortar section that got hit. A couple of the guys–. One of them seemed to be all right at first. he was on his feet. He was running. Then the next thing I knew he was laying down. He was unconscious. The other guy got hit. He was hit twice in the leg and in the arm. It tore up his arm pretty bad, but he never let down his spirits. He kept his morale up. He was still conscious and he felt every bit of the pain it seemed.[647]

They started to move off the hill but were having trouble transporting the wounded in makeshift stretchers. One of the machine-gunners give up his MG and started to carry a wounded man on his back, a man from the rockets squad who had been hit in his legs. They continued down the path trying to locate a LZ.

The NVA attempted to mortar the Marines, but their aim was fortunately inaccurate. Nevertheless, as Cpl Brown recalls, Most of us were scarred. We were just glad to get away from there. But we weren't running to anything. We weren't actually getting away from anything. We were still in it." The Marines moved down a trail, but paused since the corpsman was having trouble with casualties to the rear. Friendly aircraft began dropping bombs on the hill–very close to B-3.

> We got bombed by our jets up there. My squad got 6 people killed. They were blowing up the whole top of the hill with mortars. They were just telling me to move quick–running down there, more or less falling, and the jets bombed us, blew my whole fire team away. I think they thought we were the enemy the way we were coming off that hill.[648]

Two more bombs came too late.

> We lost radio contact with the platoon commander, and the word was passed back to me–I was about in the middle of the formation–that some people had been injured by the bombs and they needed a corpsman up there badly. So we passed the word back for a corpsman. The corpsman came up, and we moved back to this area that had been bombed, and around this area we saw various gear scattered all over the area, and parts of bodies all over the area, and we were told to move past that area so that the platoon sergeant could move up and stay with this man who was dying. And the man wouldn't die right off, so we got the word to pick him up with all–most–of the gear we could carry and the wounded, and move down to this LZ area.[649]

---

[647] Comments of Michael A. Brown, Tape #960.
[648] Conversation with Mr. Tom Ryan, 24 Aug 1986.

It was about 1700H when Capt J. A. House of HMM-265, who had been piloting a routine resupply for some 4 hours, was alerted for an emergency medical evacuation. Capt House and his co-pilot, Capt J. J. Dalton, proceeded along with his wingman, Capt Nick, to B-1 and B-3 for the medevac.

Capt Nick approached the LZ occupied by B-1 on the very top of Hill 861. As soon as the helicopter landed in the zone, the enemy opened fire.

> We got three of them aboard. We got every window in the cockpit shot-out right there. We also had an armor-piercing round in our forward transmission. As we landed [at KSCB] the transmission froze. Neither one of us were hit. My Gunner got hit in the knee–took a 12.7 in the knee. I think we got one wounded and two bodies out before we got out of there. My job as the co-pilot was to watch the fire and get the ramp down. I started to call in the fire. We were facing the horseshoe ridge on 861, and the fire started on the left and went all the way around.

Capt House then proceeded to B-3's position (XD 804453) which was supposed to be in defilade from the enemy. However, as they landed in the zone, they began receiving intense enemy fire from the ridge line to their right. The zone was also obstructed by trees and stumps.

Immediately upon setting down, the aircraft came under fire from an automatic weapon at the three o'clock position and the Crew Chief, LCPL Daniel Douglas Dulude, returned fire with the .50. Upon observing that there was no fire from the 9 o'clock position and that the side of the hill made it improbable that fire would come from that side, the Gunner, SSgt G. L. Logan, began loading for the Crew Chief and the first medevac crawled into the aircraft on his hands and knees.

LCPL Dulude motioned for SSgt Logan to take over the gun while he assisted the wounded man aboard the chopper.[650] He then learned that there was no one to help the wounded to the aircraft except other wounded, and that the casualties were on a small hill about 25 meters from the chopper.

With automatic weapons fire striking around the aircraft and without regard for his own personal safety, LCPL Duluder departed the aircraft and dashed into 12 - 14 foot high elephant grass to aid the wounded. The height of the grass made it impossible for him to see the aircraft after moving about 15 meters.

He returned with one of the wounded men and courageously set out to help the next man. Returning again he turned around and once again left the aircraft to return to the wounded. At this point, during his second trip to help the wounded, the enemy began to mortar the zone. At least 6 mortars fell in close to the aircraft and the area in which LCPL Dulude was working. Although the enemy small arms fire and AW fire was intense, LCPL Dulude continued his efforts, disregarding his own personal safety.

He returned to the aircraft a third time and once more ran back into the zone. Finding the last man, LCPL Dulude again returned to the aircraft. Then he made certain there were no other casualties remaining in the zone. Only when he ws certain all the wounded were aboard did he reenter the aircraft and inform the pilot that they were clear to lift-out.

Although exhausted, he refused rest and immediately began administering first aid to the wounded enroute to the medical facility.

That night, B-1 and B-3 dug in as best they could. They had no E-tools and dug their foxholes using canteen cups and bayonets. They had been traveling light–no packs, only cartridge belts. One Sergeant in B-3, shot in his legs, kept telling everyone, "We are all going to die!" Surprisingly they were not assaulted that night. Airstrikes and artillery pounded the areas around them and 861 for most of the night.

At B-2's position, having exhausted the 81 ammo, Capt Sayers pulled back to Khe Sanh with the mortar team and squad security just prior to darkness.

Casualties for 24 Apr were: 14 USMC KIA, 18 WIA, and 2 MIA. 5 NVA KIA (confirmed) and 100 KIA (probable).[651] Support for 24 Apr: 660 rounds of 105 mm and 8 fixed wing SORTIEs dropping 6500 pounds of ordnance.

25 APRIL 1967: DECIMATION IN THE FOG[652]

---

[649] Comments of LCPL Donald A. Clark, Tape #959.

[650] Materials on LCPL Dulude are based on his Silver Star Medal file for actions on 24 April 1967.

[651] SOP 261900Z/Apr67, SITREP #84.

[652] Sources for this section: 3MAR AAR BATTLE OF KHE SANH; Comments of LCPL Clark, Tape #959; Comments of Cpl Brown, Tape #960; comments of Sgt Norwood, Tape #992; Comments of SSGT Ritchie, Tape #995; Maj Sayers ltr and comments of 18 May 1981; Telfer, Rogers, and Fleming, 1967, pp. 37-39; SOP 251600Z/Apr67, SITREP #83; SOP 261900Z/Apr67, SITREP #84; SSM file on LCPL Daniel Douglas Dulude; Comments of Capt C.L. Spivey, Tape #950; SSM

Raymond Madonna of H/2/3 recalls that 2/3, commanded by LtCol Earl R. DeLong ("Pappy") was finishing a sweeping operation code-named BO DIDDLEY on the coast (but later renamed BEACON STAR) when he was notified to cease operations immediately and prepare for helicopter extraction. The destination was Phu Bai Airfield. "After arranging cold soft drinks and sandwiches for us, he told me we were going to a place called Khe Sanh. 2/3, a part of the Special Landing Force of the 9th Marine Amphibious Brigade was to be assigned to the Third Marines under command of Colonel John P. Lanigan. Lt Bruce Griesmer, the Second Platoon Commander relates the story of Colonel Hammerbeck giving one of his Marines a pair of his twill utility trousers to replace the torn pair he saw the man wearing. Shortly thereafter we were loaded aboard C-130 aircraft bound for Khe Sanh airfield."[653]

Battalion 2/3 arrived at Khe Sanh in the early afternoon and received the welcome order to heave their flak jackets before moving out towards the battle zone. "It was a tradeoff of protection against shell fragments, but the added mobility would prove a blessing. We set in for the night after a long, hot and uneventful march."[654]

The plan for 25 Apr was to move K/3/3 and the 3/3 Command Group to Khe Sanh to conduct a battalion-minus operation with B/1/9. K/3/3 had been scheduled to relieve B/1/9 on 29 Apr, and liaison personnel of 3/3 were already at Khe Sanh on the 24th. Intentions were for B/1/9 to evacuate their casualties during the morning and sweep toward Hill 861 from the northwest.

Fog was to determine much of the day's activity rather than plans.

At 0815H, B-3 was preparing their ammunition and gear when suddenly someone shouted, "Look back! Look back! Hey, come here!" A NVA soldier had walked right up to Tom Ryan, the Point Man of the platoon, to surrender, saying he wanted to quit; he was going home.

> I couldn't believe it; they were actually talking to a Gook! So I wanted to run for my life because I thought we were surrounded. We tied him up good, put a blindfold on him, stuck stuff into his mouth. We just sat there and waited and wondered. Maybe we were spotted; we didn't know. We just sat there.[655]

The captured NVA soldier, Vu Van Tich, later stated that he was a member of 4th Battalion, 32nd Regiment, and that he had left his unit 4 days prior to his surrender.[656]

A medevac of the casualties was attempted. As the first chopper landed in the zone, it encountered a hail of small arms fire. The chopper lifted off immediately, but not before Capt Sayers had debarked and several evacuees embarked, including the POW. This was the only helicopter able to reach B/1/9 on 25 Apr due to the fog. Thereafter B/1/9 commenced movement along the trail south and east to Hill 861 (XD 803443).

B-3 was moving to link up with their "6." Sgt Rios began leading the men down a gully and up to the ridge line to Capt Sayers, avoiding the path where they had been hit the previous day. But the vegetation was so thick that after half an hour, they had only moved less than ten meters. The Sgt then decided the only possible route was the trail, to take the chance of getting ambushed, but to be very alert.

As they moved, they discovered a lot of gear plus about 3 bodies. The progress was halted as the bodies and the gear was retrieved. The humping, the anxiety of battle and always-possible death, and the lack of water they themselves had, made all of the Marines dangerously desiccated and weaker by the moment. The dead bodies, however, still had some canteens of precious water which they could swallow. Even in death, the Marines at Khe Sanh shared what they had with each other. It was now about 1730 or 1800 and the fog was so thick that visibility was restricted to about 5 meters.

> We got up on top of the hill. We set up stretchers for these dead people, and we started to move off. We got down the trail approximately 50 meters. There was a dead man laying there. So they passed the word back to the formation that the last three men were to pick up this dead man and carry him along. They were supposed to pass the word up when it was time to move out, but we were trying to get the man arranged, to get a litter for him and word was passed to move out. We passed the word up that he wasn't ready. Word file on HM3 Michael G. Gibbs; BSM file on LCPL Harold Allan Croft; SSM file on LCPL Raymond Lee Huckins; BSM file on CPL Stoney Jackson; BSM file on Floyd Allen Gregory; BSM file on PFC Brenton Wilford Allaire; BSM file on LCPL Barry Lee Duncan; BSM file on 2/Lt Curtis L. Frisbie; BSM file on LCPL Lester Larry Menke; BSM file on LtCol Gary Wilder; BSM file on PFC Floyd Allen Gregory.

---

[653] Raymond Madonna, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh," 1 October 1997, in letter from Madonna, 02 March 1998.

[654] Ibid.

[655] Comments of Cpl Michael Brown, Tape #960.

[656] FMFPAC280301Z/Apr67, SITREP #759. The 32nd Regt. is subordinate to the 341 Div, which had been reported with its three regiments on 22 April to be in the A Shau Valley with the mission of attacking Quang Tri and Thua Thien Provinces.

was passed, 'We're moving out anyway,' so we moved out. We got about 75 meters on the other side of this dead person and the word was passed that we were supposed to go back and get this man.[657]

The fog was, by now, very, very thick, and it was also dark. "We told them the fog was so thick we couldn't even find the path to get back there, and so we decided that we would move on. We had about 3 KIAs with us already."[658]

B-3 moved about 30 more meters, dropped their KIAs, and set up a perimeter for the evening.

B-1, still separated from B-3 during the 25th, had been able to evacuate their wounded on the medevac helicopter, but not their dead, and also moved all day until about 2100H with their dead–through the extremely torturous and muddy terrain, although completely exhausted, with no food and little water.

Fog delayed movement of the 3/3 Command Group under command of LtCol Gary Wilder and Co K/3/3, commanded by Capt Bayliss L. Spivey, from Thon Son Lam to Khe Sanh until noon on the 25th, at which time 3/3 assumed OPCON of B/1/9. Capt Sayers has managed to depart KSCB just minutes earlier.

LtCol Wilder later noted: "So I got another company up that was attached to me, and by the time the Company got up there, late in the evening, I was able to brief the Company Commander. I had the unpleasant task of telling him that he had to march in, using stealth, and join-up with the remnants of those two platoons in the middle of those three hills, probably heavily-occupied."[659]

LtCol Gary Wilder had commanded 3d Recon Bn (reinforced with 1st and 3rd Force Recon Cos) whose patrols had detected the influx of the NVA 324B Division north and west of Dong Ha. Operation HASTINGS was launched as a result and 1995 NVA were confirmed KIA. Now, LtCol Wilder was CO of 3/3. Col John Lanigan, CO of Third Marines, had decided to replace B/1/9 with 3/3 since Khe Sanh was very active as a base for launching intelligence-gathering units into Laos to monitor the Ho Chi Minh Trail, and especially the portion of it that stemmed north from Route 9, just east of BV33, parallel to the border, and then crossed into the DMZ, known as the "Santa Fe Trail."

Numerous patrols of Marine Force Recon and B/1/9 infantry had disclosed the presence of major NVA units in the Khe Sanh area, but the base commander at the time refused to believe these reports. Wilder noted: "When the base commander briefed me when I went up initially for the coordination on the change, he said, 'There are only 30'–and I remember these things even though it's a long time ago. He said, 'There are 30 VCs operating in our area. They have 2 82mm mortars, but they only have one base plate.' When he finished, I said, 'Do you really believe yourself what you just told me?' He said, 'what do you mean? Of course! We have good intelligence.' I said, 'You're talking to the former Division Reconnaissance Officer, Stop that!' But he honestly believed it. During the operation I got ahold of one of my recon Sergeants who had been up there for some time, and I said, 'Sergeant, what the hell's going on up there?' And his words were, 'Sir, I've been trying to tell that  for two months that we got North Vietnamese crawling all over these hills, and he wouldn't believe me.'"[660]

Capt Bayliss Larkin Spivey, CO of K/3/3 since 02 Apr 67, received the mission from LtCol Wilder to take Hill 861 and be prepared to continue to the northwest to aid B/1/9 and exploit their contact.

K/3/3 jumped off in the attack from KSCB by foot at noon and commenced artillery prep of Hill 861. At 1410H the hill at XD 813430 was reached and the company, now about 3/4^{ths} of the 5,000 meters from KSCB to 861, deployed for the final attack: two platoons separated to go up the two ridge lines approaching the hill from the south. K-3 was to continue north to XD 806445 (a hill later called '861-A' during the Siege) and be prepared to assist K-1 and the Co Hq which moved northwest directly on to 861. K-2, along with the 60 mm mortar section, remained as security for the Bn CP to cover the company's approach to the objective. K-2 was at XD 811431.

By 1445H, K-1 and the Co Hq had reached a position at XD 804438. The advance was checked at this point to permit K-3 to progress to a supporting distance along the ridge to the east. Also, a final artillery prep was requested. At 1525H, K-3 was at the desired position at XD 808439. Artillery check fire was in effect throughout this time. Up to this time, K/3/3 had received no contact, and at 1615H, Capt Spivey requested to continue the attack without further prep fires. Permission was granted. By 1630H, K-3 had reached its objective at XD 806445 and was ordered to establish a blocking position to the southwest.

K-1 and K-3 were not physically tied-in due to the very small width of the hill approaches and extremely steep sides.

K-1 moved up the ridgeline directly south of the summit of 861 while K-3 moved on a ridge line moving into the objective from the east to support K-1's advance.

At precisely 1705H–Capt Spivey recalls the exact time–lead elements of K-1, then some 300 meters from the summit, began to receive fire from enemy bunkers on top of the hill as well as mortars from a reverse slope defense. Due to the [657] Comments of LCPL Clark, Tape #959.

---

[658] Comments of CPL Brown, Tape #960.
[659] Conversation with COL Gary Wilder, 28 Sep 1994.
[660] Ibid.

nature of the concave slope and the brush, the Marines never had good observation of the enemy position, but poured a large volume of M-79, LAW, and small arms into the general area.

Although they advanced to about 100 meters of the crest by 1730H, they had run out of troops. Only en " effecives" remained in K-1; there were fifteen Marines killed and another fifteen WIA. The number of dead and wounded made disengagement impossible.

When the First Squad leader was mortally wounded, LCPL Raymond Lee Huckins immediately assumed command, reorganized the squad and aggressively continued the assault. When the enemy fire increased and temporarily halted the unit's advance, LCPL Huckins, discovering a critical shortage of ammo, fearlessly exposed himself to the enemy fire to distribute ammo and assist in rendering first aid to the casualties.

As he moved among his men, encouraging them, an enemy grenade landed within a few feet of him and two other Marines. Disregarding his own safety and with outstanding presence of mind, he picked up the grenade and hurled it away a few seconds before it exploded.[661]

Cpl Stoney Jackson received painful leg wounds but refused medical evacuation and continued to lead his men.[662]

The corpsman of K-1, HM3 Michael G. Gibbs, immediately moved to the forefront, into the heat of the battle, and began to treat a Marine with a sucking chest wound and then moved him 15 meters to a safer location. He then exposed himself again to the intense fire to assist a second Marine. While administering first aid, he was wounded in his back, but continued to help the wounded Marine. Having completed treatment for the second Marine, he moved to a third, but received a wound that broke his leg. He was then pinned down under fire where he quietly remained until darkness, when he and the others were moved to a more secure area.[663]

Capt Spivey requested that LtCol Wilder release the reserve platoon, K-2, which was then in the vicinity of the Bn CP group. As K-2 advanced towards the decimated K-1, K-3 was ordered forward on the crest from the east but reported slow progress in the saddle northeast of Hill 861; they reached XD 804444 and were held up for the night. B/1/9 was moving towards K-1 from the west slope of 861.

The sun was setting along with their hopes. Darkness was setting in, along with the darkness of the unknown, the fear and the terror. The Marines were just under the enemy positions, and Capt Spivey was unable to extract K-1 from the immediate contact with the enemy. All of the wounded of K-1, however, were recovered into its lines along with all but 4 of those killed.

By 1830H, K-2 had arrived at K-1's position and began to recover the 4 KIA, but two additional casualties were taken in the process, and the attempt was discontinued. During this time there were numerous acts of heroism as the very young Marines were about, in the face of heavy enemy fire, dragging the wounded and dead to safer positions.

LCPL Harold Allan Croft, for example, without hesitation, moved through the exploding mortars and automatic weapons fire to assist HM3 Gibbs. he then began crawling around the hillside giving medical aid to the wounded. At times he appeared to be everywhere, administering aid, giving encouragement, and serving as an inspiration to all present. In one instance, during a pause in the enemy mortar attack, PFC Croft exposed himself to heavy MG fire to administer first aid to LCPL Oliver, a victim of mortar shrapnel. PFC Croft applied battle dressings to the head and leg of LCPL Oliver and then dragged him to safety. Every time someone yelled "Corpsman!" PFC Croft ran out of his hole, knowing the corpsman was already busy, to apply battle dressings and drag the wounded to safety.

Since the first contact at 1705, incoming mortars were received in volleys of 3 to 5, falling at first to the south, but were walked up the ridge. Most of the rounds continued to fall a little behind the position, but several were on target, producing additional casualties. Counter-mortar and artillery seemed to have little effect. Apparently the enemy mortars were dug in on the reverse slope making artillery fire ineffective.

The command group withdrew a short distance, but PFC Floyd Allen Gregory, the Tactical Air Control Party (TACP) rep, remained forward to assist communications personnel maintain vital contact with subordinate and higher echelons.

During the night, K/3/3 maintained its positions under sporadic fire as all dug in, in place. About 0200H, they spotted rockets and mortars being fired from GS 7943, a position to their west, being fired on KSCB. Artillery was fired accurately on target, and C-47 SPOOKY later arrived on station to spew its venom of fire.

LtCol Gary Wilder notes:

---

[661] SSM file on LCPL Raymond Lee Huckins.

[662] BSM file on CPL Stoney Jackson.

[663] SSM file (post.) on HM3 Michael G. Gibbs. HM3 Gibbs was KIA the following morning during a mortar attack. On 07 Jul 1967, a Marine of W/1/13 on Hill 861 was digging a position near the LZ and uncovered a wallet containing personal effects and ID of HM3 Michael G. Gibbs, 795-99-92. [S-2/S-3 Journal, 070001H July to 072400H July 1967, Ser. No. 27, entry for 1605, in 1/26 ComdC, July, 1967.

..this is the most interesting aspect of all: during that night, they rocketed Khe Sanh–or tried to. Now we saw the rockets going up and going over. I remember talking on the phone like I'm talking to you–I'm talking to the Khe Sanh base as the rockets are going over my head, saying, 'Pull your head in; they're coming in!' Now fortunately I programmed a flare plane to be on station that night, which was one of the old C-47s equipped with mini-guns. The minute the rockets started going up, I vectored him and he started hosing down with the mini-guns. The thing was quieted-down very quickly. but the interesting thing was–I found out the next day–there had been a coordinated attack that took place on every northern base in the I Corps area at the same time, right to the minute. So we subsequently pieced-together–the intelligencer people–that we believe that they had planned that night to take Khe Sanh. And it makes a lot of sense, because there was but an infantry platoon and some reinforcements. And it was only by the accident of those Marines walking up Hill 861 that triggered all of this action prematurely.[664]

COL Wilder continues:

They moved in a whole Division into Laos, and subsequently moved a Regiment of that Division in to occupy those three hills. I think the plan was that that Regiment was going to hold the three hills and they were going to pass another one or two Regiments through them and take Khe Sanh. The intelligence that came back said that the first regiment that had occupied those hills had been virtually annihilated. The second regiment was involved in the counter-attack, and they were written-off. So it's two of the three regiments were wiped-out for all intensive purposes. (But this is getting at the end of the story!)

During the afternoon of the 25th, recon team 3A1, HAWK, made contact with 10-15 NVA west of their position (XD 762505), a ridgeline beside a dead tree about 30 meters from a tree line which ran across the ridge.

Around one o'clock, we started hearing the noise coming up this hill. We were in a well-camouflaged little jungle area on a knoll. It as a flank movement coming up that hill. They were all helmeted, geared and combat ready. They had elephant grass over them for camouflage. Closer and closer the enemy came. They got within 50 ft. We were well concealed on higher ground. Cpl Robert Wacker, the Squad Leader, squeezed the trigger. It was a misfire! It sounded almost like a firecracker. Our adrenalin was really going. The next guy, Rudy, opened up and we got those guys, no problem.

The problem was what was behind those guys. It must have been a company, and they started to open up–small arms, MG fire. They had us pinned down real bad. Then something happened.

I don't know if was a 82mm mortar or hand grenade. It hit right above us; it got every one of us. Terry Burton, who was right next to me, was completely unconscious–looked like someone took an ice-pick to him.

Another guy came crawling up to me and said, 'Baker, we got to get out.' This was after about 15, 20 minutes of fire-fighting. We were getting low on ammo. We had placed our K-bars in front of us, and were fixin' to hand-to-hand. He said, 'The Assistant Squad leader, Rudy, told me to tell you to get out.'

Well, I didn't want to go! I knew there'd be a MG because we were getting fire from three sides. in my haste in going out I tripped the M-21, and I started a fire. I mean it was burning, and I tried to put it out with my hands. So I knew I was going to die, and being a religious man I told God, 'God, if you give me one more chance, I will stop my evil ways.' I knew I was going to die. Well, fortunately for me, there was nothing out that way at the time.[665]

Two choppers of HMM-265 landed to extract the team. The first, piloted by Capt Petteys, made his pass too fast and his guns jammed; he waved off. His wingman, Capt J. A. House, II, rolled in behind him and slid in along the ridgeline. His helicopter, EP-173, immediately drew automatic weapons fire, but he was about 75 meters from the recon team. LCPL Daniel D. Dulude, the Crew Chief, knelt on the open rear ramp of the aircraft where he was exposed to the direct enemy fire only 75 meters away and calmly directed Capt House through a difficult back-taxi maneuver towards the team.

Fred Baker, a member of HAWK, along with another man, Pete, dashed back and forth carrying everyone. Six men of HAWK were badly wounded or unconscious; 2 were still able to move.

Also assisting the wounded recon team members to the chopper under the heavy enemy fire, was the Crew Chief, Daniel D. Dulude,.

The enemy were in the tree-line and were firing AKs and throwing hand grenades at the team. It seemed as if we had misjudged our chances of retrieving them. The point is rather vivid in my mind because the transmission on the helicopter had been leaking transmission fluid on the ramp and made it extremely difficult for one person to crawl up. I remember the two of us [Dulude and Baker] pushing the medevac up on the ramp in what seemed like an eternity. We then left to help two others. Our paths led us to different wounded and we made our way back to the helo on our own. At this point a count of Marines on board indicated that there were three missing. Two were wounded and the third was Baker, who had already started back for one of them. I again left the plane to gather the last wounded man. We took another count, raised the rear ramp, and left the zone.[666]

---

[664] Conversation with COL Gary Wilder, 28 September 1994.

[665] Cpl Fred Baker, "Eyewitness report of recon patrol in action in Vietnam," Piedmont, Alabama Journal 60:26 (29 Jun 19670; Conversation with Mr. Fred Baker, 24 Sep 1988.

The entire team was medevaced to DaNang. After HAWK was extracted, Huey gunships strafed the suspected enemy positions in the tree-line causing one secondary explosion.

Due to the action at Khe Sanh, Co K/3/9, commanded by Capt Jerald E. Giles, was flown into Khe Sanh from Camp Carroll.

Like so many troopers who came to Khe Sanh, LCPL Henry Rose, Jr., a squad leader in Weapons Platoon, K/3/9, recalls: "..at first nobody knew where we were going. We knew we were going somewhere because my company was the reactionary company for anything that came up."[667] Marines were jostled from one place to another during their tours in Viet Nam until all the places and events and days merged into a very confused and tangled web of experience as impenetrable as a bamboo thicket, out of which it was impossible to make any sense, only nightmares from images seared on the soul.

Third Marines at Khe Sanh assumed OPCON of K/3/9 at 250830H. The Marines were now sending companies to Khe Sanh piecemeal into the meat grinder of battle. K/2/9, B/1/9, K/3/3, and now K/3/9. The opinion held by the higher echelons of the Marine command that there really was no enemy at Khe Sanh, had become the perception that precipitated death. Capt Spivey on the Combat Base the 24th as B/1/9 was experiencing its contact, remarked: "No one suspected more than probably a NVA company in the area at that time."[668] Of course, the extremely rugged terrain precluded any large mass movement of troop formations. The hills of Khe Sanh dictated how we would maneuver.

Reconstruction of the NVA plan by FMFPAC[669] reflected isolation of the battlefield by mortar attacks on Dong Ha, Gio Linh, Con Thien, and Camp Carroll, all designed to upset Marine fire support and logistic arrangements. A mortar attack on Phu Bai would endanger helicopter support, while blowing away bridges and key stretches of Route 9 would sever overland logistic supply. In addition, a diversionary attack on the Lang Vei Special Forces camp, four miles west of Khe Sanh near the Laotian border, would make the enemy threat appear to be focused there. As LtGen Krulak's summary put it: "All this was to be ancillary to the main effort, a strong ground attack on Khe Sanh, coming southward from the mountainous region near the Laos-RVN-DMZ corner."

Later analysis through contacts, prisoner interrogation, and captured documents, reflected that the 18th Regiment of the 325C Division, had moved into the operational area from Laos early in April under cover of fog and heavy cloud conditions. The mission was to attack Khe Sanh. The regiment occupied the triangle-shaped key terrain in the area bounded by hill 861 (XD 803443), Hill 881-South (XD 777437), and hill 881-North (XD 774457). A prisoner reported that the regiment was supported by the 2d Artillery Battalion armed with ten 120 mm mortars and ten 75 mm recoilless rifles.

26 APRIL 1967: AGONY

26 April began with the 3/3 CP (at XD 805434) receiving approx. 200 rounds of 82 at 0500H,. Simultaneously, KSCB received 55 rounds of 82 and 55 rounds of 75RR fire, most of which landed outside the perimeter. A flareship with miniguns was called on station, delivering a massive volume of fire on suspected enemy positions and movements. There were no casualties as a result of this action.[670] B/1/9 was close enough to the NVA RRs to see and hear their back blast in the fog. Located on the eastern slope of 881-S, Capt Sayers silenced them by directing artillery on them by sound. By 105 mm artillery illumination and holes in the fog, destruction of the recoilless rifles was confirmed. The fog was in layers at the time; the hill masses were covered and the valleys were clear.[671] The sun arose on the Marines of K/3/3 still in place on 861, pinned down by the NVA. Capt Spivey noticed, however, that by 0615H, K-3's presence in close proximity to the enemy's northeast was apparently still undetected. Shortly before first light, K-3 was ordered forward in an attempt to take the enemy position from that direction. K-1 and K-2 were alerted to move out on order, pending developments on K-3's advance.

---

[666] Notarized letter from Daniel D. Dulude, 5 Jan 1989, to Mr. Fred J. Baker. [Khe Sanh microfilms 4040-4042].
[667] Comments on Tape #1131.
[668] Comments on Tape #950.
[669] FMFPAC, Operations of U.S. Marine Forces, Vietnam, April, 1967, pp. 27-30.
[670] 3MAR AAR BATTLE OF KHE SANH, p. 15
[671] Ltr of Maj Michael W. Sayers, 18 May 1981 to Marine Corps HistCen with enclosures; Tefler, Rogers, and Fleming, 1967, pp. 35-37

NVA POSITIONS DURING 1967 KHE SANH BATTLE OF THE HILLS[672]

2/Lt Curtis L. Frisbie led his K-3 Marines forward, exercising stealth, until the enemy positions could be observed and voices heard. By 0815H, preparations for the assault were being made when the platoon came under an intense volume of automatic weapons fire and grenades. The platoon immediately sustained casualties; Lt Frisbie was seriously wounded and subsequently medevaced.[673]

By this time it had also become apparent that B/1/9's platoons were a considerable distance to the west and could not influence the action. It was also apparent to Capt Spivey that he just did not have the horsepower to overcome the extensive and well-organized defense on Hill 861. Due to the close-in fighting, no supporting arms could effectively contribute to the action.

Capt Spivey asked LtCol Wilder for permission to disengage K-3 who was not hit too bad at that time. Wilder agreed, and K-3 pulled back to a secure LZ to extract their wounded.

The only access to the area secured for helicopter evacuation was across an open, grassy finger ridgeline exposed to enemy sniper fire from Hill 861 for over 100 meters. The fire was well-placed and frequently heavy.

LCPL Miller was one of those wounded in the initial attack, and he had been left behind. PFC Brenton Wilford Allaire, without being told to do so, along with Cpl Contreras, returned to Hill 861 and helped him to safety. As the MGs and snipers opened up on the 100 meters of exposed area, PFC Allaire along with LCPL Barry Lee Duncan continued five more trips across the fire-swept area, dragging wounded comrades to safety as well as gather up all the rockets deposited along the trail while pulling the wounded to safety. Each time they drew fire, but kept returning. On one occasion, LCPL Duncan aided a Marine to safety who was unable to walk.[674]

PFC Thomas M. Barrow, Jr. and LCPL Lester Larry Menke also assisted the wounded to safety. On two separate occasions, LCPL Menke successfully braved the concentrated fire to move his fellow Marines to safety. As he maneuvered through the fire-swept area a third time, he was painfully wounded in his leg. Despite his wound, LCPL Menke continued trying to get the man across to safety. After about 10 meters he was again wounded. Another Marine relieved him of his burden, and LCPL Menke began crawling with all his gear and without assistance to the LZ where he was evacuated.[675]

Meanwhile, Capt Spivey requested Huey gunship support to assist him in disengaging K-1 and K-2 and evacuate their dead and wounded. Gunships arrived about 1030H and provided outstanding support in close proximity to the front lines, and the platoons were able to disengage, moving about 25 meters at a time down the hill. Moving down all the dead, wounded, and all the gear was difficult, but by leap-frogging short distances and displacing the security, he was able to gather all the wounded and all the dead except 4 which had been ahead of their lines.

---

[672] Intelligence Section AAR, appended to letter of B. L. Spivey to BGen E.H. Simmons, 18 June 1981.
[673] BSM file on 2/Lt Curtis L. Frisbie.
[674] BSM files on LCPL Barry Lee Duncan and Brenton Wilford Allaire.
[675] BSM file on LCPL Lester Larry Menke.

At 0800H, K/3/9 moved out from KSCB and at 261315H, a platoon of K/3/9 linked up with K-3-3(-) at XD 805437, down from the crest of the hill.

LCPL Larry W. Umstead, grenadier with 1st Squad, Third Platoon of K/3/9, noted: "Just as we reached to base of Hill 861 we noticed that there was a lot of gear laying around–there were signs there was plenty heavy fight8ing all up and down the side of the hill. As we approached, we could see them bringing down some of the wounded and dead. And a lot of the men, as they were coming down, were telling us not to go up, how bad it was up there–there's no water, no nothing, and how well the VC were dug in."[676]

From there it was fairly easy going back on into the command group position, south of Hill 861. By 1600H, all elements of First and Second Platoons were within the 3/3 Command Group's positions and medevacs completed. At about 1900H, Third Platoon linked up with the remainder of the company at XD 806444.

The company, with elements of K/3/9, established a perimeter defense on the night of 26/27 April and returned to Khe Sanh the morning of 27 April, arriving by 1100H. After collecting all their gear and equipment, what remained of K/3/3 boarded aircraft and returned to Dong Ha. there had been 19 men killed from K/3/3, including two corpsmen and one who later died of wounds, two who were MIA, 36 wounded (evacuated) and 6 wounded (not evacuated). One of those medevaced, Daniel A. Wisley, a squad leader, was greeted with the news: "Your wife just gave birth to twins and she's doing fine."[677]

The remaining Marines of B/1/9 did not fare well during the 26th.

B-3 dispatched a fire team of five Marines to retrieve the body they had passed the previous afternoon. They were only gone about 5 minutes when they became involved in a fire-fight. The rest of the platoon gathered their fighting gear and quickly moved to where they were, a path on top of a slope. As the platoon moved, they located one dead man and another wounded in his foot. They attempted to fire a few LAWs, but they misfired. Sgt Rios passed the word to return to where they left their gear. While moving, another man was hit in the leg, breaking it.

In about thirty seconds they had on all their gear and began to move up, carrying and dragging whatever they could, fired at by an enemy machine-gunner. They moved from about 0800H until they met up with their "6" and parts of B-1 and B-2 at about 2030H.

The rest of B/1/9 had begun the day at 0700H attempting to move east along the trail leading to 861 and immediately encountered enemy resistance (at XD 795449); B-1 and B-3 linked up at 0840H at XD 802443. Enemy small arms fire coupled with sporadic mortar fire succeeded in limiting B/1/9's advance to a bitterly contested struggle for each foot of terrain.[678]

Capt Glen Golden's F/2/12 artillery battery found Capt Sayers in the fog by walking artillery rounds to him, and then put a "ring of steel" around the company that was so right he was taking dirt from the impact. "It was the most professional and accurate piece of artillery work that I have ever seen. No doubt it saved our lives," noted Capt Sayers.[679]

SSGT Leon R. Burns, Platoon Sgt of B-2, described the progress of the day in an interview conducted 8 May 1967, while all was fresh in his mind:

> ..at dawn we moved out. We were still heading for Hill 861. We got to a small hill approximately 500 meters to the west of it. We got to the top of it. We took a few sniper rounds. We started down the far side, and then the stuff really hit the fan. The Third Platoon had managed to link up with the First, and my people were in the middle with the CP group. As they started down off this hill, getting right up to the very base of 861, they came under heavy automatic fire. At this time the First Platoon leader was wounded and about four or five other men. I lost one of my squad leaders and the M79 man. Also, one of my machine-gunners, LCPL Puleo, he spotted an enemy machinegun. He fired on it with his rifle, and I'm told that he knocked out at least three NVA. In doing so, he exposed himself to quite a bit of fire. He lost his left thumb and was wounded in the left side in two or three places. One of the machine-gunners, PFC DeKaney–we got some incoming mortars, and he was hit in the face. Sergeant Olson, my squad leader, he was up front. He was cut in half by a burst from a machinegun, and his M79 man, PFC Hare, was hit by an automatic weapon and a mortar. About that time, one of my men, PFC Blitz, was down there. He was anywhere and everywhere, doing anything that had to be done. Weighs about 150 pounds; he's a big man. He got down there, started putting dressings on people. My corpsman come up, and about this time my corpsman was shot pretty hard in the leg and in the cheek of his ass. This made him a casualty. We got some people down there to get him out. The CP group was right in the middle. And at one time the company commander was down there with a [676] Comments of LCPL Larry W. Umstead, Oral History Tape #1126.

---

[677] "Twins Pose Name Problem for Marine," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:20 (9 May 1967) 5.
[678] 3MAR AAR KHE SANH, p. 15.
[679] Letter of Capt Michael W. Sayers, 18 May 1981, to Marine Corps Historical Center, with enclosures..

couple of his radiomen getting these people up almost a sheer cliff. They were wounded or were dead. At about the time they got two men up, we had an Air Force OE come over, who were doing an outstanding job for us, and he fired one of his snake rockets, just missing the company commander, Capt Sayers, and just by a couple of feet. We managed to tell him that we were friendly, and he started looking for other targets.[680]

The Marines of B/1/9 began receiving close air support as napalm (DELTA-9s) and 250-pound bombs (DELTA-1s) blasted the back side of 861.

It was becoming apparent that some of the wounded would have to be medevaced or die. Cpl Payne and Cpl Brown were sent back off the hill to a little ridgeline to set up a perimeter for a LZ to evacuate the 5 dead and 15 wounded (at XD 803444).

A helicopter came in. SSgt Burns tossed a smoke grenade, walked off, and started waving the chopper into the zone. He had already arranged 3 men to each wounded and warned them to move quickly because incoming was certain; ther LZ was in full view from 861. Each of the groups picked up a wounded man and raced to the chopper. The chopper just sat down. One wounded man got aboard, and an incoming mortar round exploded. SSgt Burns had to wave the chopper off.

> This was the only time we had a chopper around us that could possibly handle us. We had many wounded, but we just couldn't get a chopper in to get them out. The chopper left. Things started getting worse. We started catching mortar rounds coming in again near our LZ.[681]

The Company now moved like a mob, everyone just grabbing a wounded man, and headed for the edge of the hill. After the first 10 men moved over the ridgeline, the Marines were b lasted by enemy mortars. "Everyone just hit the deck where they were and hoped they didn't get hit. And in this thing some wounded men got killed."

One of those was Cpl Troy David Payne, Jr. Cpl Payne had not been with B/1/9 when it left KSCB. He had a cold and was on light duty. A Marine Corps General landed at Khe Sanh to receive instructions on how to get to the scene of the battle once B/1/9 made contact. in a characteristic Marine move, Cpl Payne boldly climbed aboard he General's helicopter and accompanied him to the scene, where he joined his unit.

Upon reaching the battlefield, Cpl Payne carried wounded to the LZ and fought off repeated enemy attacks with the weapons he picked up from his injured comrades. Now, at this point, Cpl Payne moved right to the center of the impact areas to aid the stricken men to safe positions. He even used his own body to shield other wounded Marines from mortar fragments. He was hit. He died that others might live. He was awarded a Bronze Star Medal.[682]

Some of the wounded, such as LCPL Puerlo and PFC DeKaney, were again wounded,.

The situation seemed impossible. Capt Sayers reported at 1445H to LtCol Wilder's S-3 that he had so many casualties that he couldn't move. The S-3 said Capt Sayers should abandon the dead and just bring out his wounded. Capt Sayers replied that he couldn't even move with his wounded and that he would assume a defensive posture, move into the fog, and fight until it was all over.

Carrying the casualties, now for three days, had been an onerous agony. Capt Sayers later wrote:

> We were carrying KIAs and WIAs in ponchos four men to a litter. The heat deteriorated the bodies rapidly and they bloated fast. Almost impossible to carry in the dark, the mud and the rain. Many times we stopped our march to retrieve a body that had fallen out of a poncho and rolled down a hill. Identification was difficult. KIA tags were lost. It was not until we arrived back at Khe Sanh and matched our company roster with the evacuation list was I convinced that we had not left a fellow Marine in the hills.[683]

Cpl Frank D. Thompson of B-1 reflected the emotion in his silence during an interview conducted 10 October 1967 by by official USMC Oral History personnel:

Thompson:	All this time–three days, carrying KIAs and WIAs with us.
Interviewer:	What did you think about that?
Thompson:	It was bad, but we had to do it.
Interviewer:	It was a bad situation, then. What did you feel about it and what did the other people feel about it? What did they think?
Thompson:	[Very long silence. No response!]
Interviewer:	Did they think it was a hopeless situation?
Thompson:	I was–
Interviewer:	Were the people scarred? Were the Marines scarred?

---

[680] Comments of SSGT Leon R. Burns, Marine Corps Oral History Tape #993.
[681] Ibid.
[682] BSM file on Cpl Troy D. Payne, Jr.
[683] Letter of Michael W. Sayers, 18 May 1981, cited.

Thompson: You're always scarred when you're getting shot at.[684]

Night was fast approaching, and SSgt Burns suggested making some stretchers. Some of the men cut poles for stretchers, and about this time, 1800H, reached B/1/9. "About this time we had some visitors, some very nice people from K/3/9. The Company Commander was with one of his platoons. We were all overjoyed to see them. They had water; we had none. We gave the water to our wounded, and we prepared to leave the area."[685]

26 April 1967, Marines of B/1/9 carrying KIA/WIA in stretchers. Photo from Michael E. Sayers

The 7-man recon unit of K/3/9 gave all the water they had, and their corpsmen began attending their wounded. After all the wounded and dead were staged in one area, litters were made, and the Marines moved out.[686]

26 April 1967, Marines of B/1/9 carrying KIA/MIA. Above: Capt Michael E.Sayers. Photos from Michael E. Sayers

[684] Comments on HQMC Oral History Tape #1677.
[685] Comments of SSgt Burns, HMC Oral History Tape #993.
[686] Comments of LCPL Umstead, HQMC Oral History Tape #1126.

We had so many wounded and dead and extra gear to carry that everyone was carrying something except for the point and rear guard. As we moved out it started to rain and a very large amount of fog. The fog locked us in. Maybe it was a God-send because the NVA couldn't see us. They fired a few spasmodic mortar rounds, but they really didn't do anything. We moved out. I was bringing u the rear,. I had one machine-gunner with his gun, the assistant machine-gunners, and my company commander, bringing up the rear. the Company Commander of K/3/9 was there also a good portion of the time. Everybody carried his load; we carried as much gear as we possibly could. The radiomen, even though they were carrying a PRC-25, still carried people on stretchers. The going was very slow. It was muddy. At one time it rained extremely hard. Maybe this was good in one sense because we did manage to get some water for both us and the wounded. We left a very well-beaten trail. Why the NVA didn't follow us I don't know.[687]

The Marines humped all through the night, in all the hard-falling rain, through all the slippery and cling-to-boots mud, slipping and sliding with their makeshift stretchers, carrying our sorrows, into all the enemy-infested area, carrying all their dead–weary, in chock, and finally about 0500H, arrived at the 3/3 CP (at XD 805428). They were told they could have one hour to sleep and get water for the wounded and the other men that didn't have any.

Choppers arrived at dawn to evacuate wounded, dead, and gear.

SSgt Burns had bone out with 22 men; he returned with 8. On the other hand, the newly-arrived Marines were in such great quantity, like a mass of ants, that Tom Ryan, point man with B-3, looked out and "I remember coming down off that hill; as far as I could see there was Marines, I mean they were coming in and landing all over the sides of the hills and stuff. As far as I could see! Looked like everybody in the world! Looked like thousands of them!"[688]

Those remaining in B/1/9 walked back into Khe Sanh. Trucks were available for the move, but the remnants of B/1/9 chose to walk. It was a matter of pride after four days of constant enemy contact.

2Lt James D. Carter, Jr., wounded with shrapnel in his upper arm and cheek on the hospital ship, USS SANCTUARY later wrote Capt Sayers: "..those young men, their tremendous will to live,, and their ability and courage under fire would be hard to match. I's surprising any of us got out of there alive considering the odds–that's hard-charging Marines for you, though."[689]

As a result of the Khe Sanh battle, Gen Bruno A. Hochmuth CHOPed the SLF, BLT 2/3, commanded by LtCol E. R. DeLong, then conducting Operation BEACON STAR, back to its parent regiment. Picked up in the middle of ope4rations the morning of 26 Apr, 2/3 was transported by helicopter and fixed wing to Khe Sanh. The lead elements (E/2/3) arrived at noon, the same time that CO, 3rd Marines, was designated "SOP 3rd MarDiv/III MAF Rep Khe Sanh". G/2/3 and the CP group arrived at 1320H.[690]

The Command Group and two companies commenced movement by foot march to the objective area at 1445H. H/2/3, the third and last company to be moved to Khe Sanh on 26 Apr, arrived at 1600H and commenced movement in trace of 2/3 at 1620H. All 2/3 units arrived in the objective area and set in for the night at 2020H to the east of 3/3 (near XD 812431). F/2/3 was scheduled to arrive at Khe Sanh on 27 Apr.[691]

Supporting arms for 26 Apr consisted of 1076 rounds of artillery and 20 air SORTIEs delivering 58,000 pounds ordnance.

Casualties for 26 Apr: from B/1/9: 6 KIA and 14 WIA, and from 3/3: 5 KIA and 24 WIA.

27 April 1967: POSTURING

An AO flying overhead early in the morning of 27 Apr sighted 15-20 NVA manning an OP outside a bunker at XD 782448 at 0815H; two hours later he spotted a large gun approx. 6-ft. long on wheels approximately 3-ft. in diameter, at XD 785450.[692]

All units of 3/3 moved into close proximity shortly after first light on the 27th and medevac of casualties was completed by 270727H. Thereafter, 3/3 commenced overland movement to the KSCB perimeter, arriving at 1130H.

At 1400H, 3d Mar CHOPed M/3/3 and M/3/9 to SOP KHE SANH. M/3/3 arrived at 1610H to replace K/3/3 which departed at 1500H to Thon Son Lam (the "Rock Pile"); M/3/9 arrived at 1730H to replace B/1/9 which departed at 1630H.

---

[687] Comments of SSgt Burns, HMC Oral History Tape #993.
[688] Conversation with Thomas Ryan, 24 August 1986 [Khe Sanh microfilm archives pp. 111296-111298].
[689] Letter from 2/Lt James D. Carter to Capt Sayers, appended to letter of Michael E. Sayers to USMC Historical Center, 18 May 1981.
[690] SOP261900Z/Apr67, SITREP #84; 3dMAR AAR KHE SANH, p. 16.
[691] 3MAR AAR KHE SANH, p. 16.
[692] SOP270615Z/Apr67, INTSUM #86.

What remained of B/1/9 flew out of KSCB on one C-130 to Dong Ha and then trucked out to Camp Carroll that night. Several days later, they were listening on their radios to the action at Khe Sanh, how all the thousands they'd seen were running into trouble: "We couldn't believe it. We were all looking at each other and saying, 'What the hell did we run in to!?"[693]

In addition, the remaining company of the SLF, F/2/3, arrived at Khe Sanh and assumed the mission of reserve. B/1/12, the SLF battery, arrived at 1900H and was laid and ready to fire by 2150H.

2/3 realigned itself during 27 Apr while assisting in the neutralization of Hill 861 by supporting arms. 2/3 remained to the south of the hill (at XD 812432) with the companies oriented to the4 west of the command group.

Two recon inserts were attempted on 27 Apr to provide surveillance to the west and north of the battle area

At 1245H, Capt Don McPheron, pilot of a section of aircraft (EP-171) and his wingman, 1Lt Thomas P. Berry, took off from Khe Sanh to insert a recon team. After completing this, they again took off from Khe Sanh at 1315H for a second recon team insertion. They were to insert team BREAKER at XD 723443. Two KLONDIKE gunships from VMO-6 located the zone, reported it appeared to be satisfactory, and made some low passes. Capt McPheron entered the zone while Lt Thomas Barry remained in a 2000-ft. orbit overhead. On touchdown, Capt McPheron's aircraft received heavy automatic weapons fire from a tree-line only 10 yards from his aircraft. Although Capt McPheron attempted to depart, his aircraft became uncontrollable and crashed into the 2800-ft. high zone.

Since Lt Berry was carrying 4 recon troops he was unable to make an immediate pick-up of the 9 survivors of the crash. he proceeded directly to KSCB, offloaded the passengers, and returned to the zone.

Meanwhile, the 9 survivors were taking fire from two tree-lines while the gunships made low passes attempting to suppress the enemy fire. The 9–5 were wounded–began to move down the slope, off the ridge, as their aircraft began to burn, attempting to escape the enemy's automatic weapons fire.

Lt Berry returned and commenced his approach, orienting his helicopter sideways to allow the gunner to fire the .50. He still did not know where the survivors were as he proceeded below the ridgeline and moved his helicopter up the slope, hugging the terrain. This made it possible for him to bring his aircraft as close as possible while avoiding some of the automatic weapons fire from one of the tree-lines. Even late in the approach, he still was unable to locate the survivors until Capt McPheron's co-pilot, 1Lt T. R. Llewellyn, stood up in a bomb crater where they were located and waved by crossing his arms.

The mountainside was extremely steep. Lt Berry was unable to land, and hovered with the right main wheels on the mountainside as the downed crew and the recon team, under the direction of the recon company's First Sergeant, J. L. Medvecky, crawled down the hill and were pulled into the aircraft by the gunner, LCPL Sanders. Cpl Wilson, the Crew Chief, fired from the door window because the .50 would not elevate sufficiently up the hill. Lt Berry's co-pilot, 1Lt Andrew Parker, was concerned that the rotor blades would strike the ground at any time due to the steep gradient of the mountain. Bullets impacted into the ground around the helicopter, particularly the area around the cockpit, but Lt Berry remained calm and held his position.

After a very uncomfortable length of time in the zone, it appeared that all were aboard. Lt Parker raised the ramp, and Lt Berry took off, dropping down the mountainside to gain airspeed.

20 minutes after EP-171 had been shot down, the wounded were receiving medical treatment.[694]

The second recon team was successfully inserted at 1420H at XD 745541, but extracted two hours later due to contact and numerous sightings in the area.

By the end of the day, artillery support, which fired 632 rounds on the 27th, was reorganized into an artillery group with two batteries: one in support of each battalion, and a detachment of two 155 mm howitzers and three 4.2" mortars in general support.

Air support for 27 April consisted of 136,000 pounds of ordnance, delivered primarily on Hill 861. The bombs consisted of 250 and 500-pound mixtures along with 18,000 pounds of napalm.

28 April 1967: HILL 861 TAKEN

"They bombed the hill all night and continued the air strikes this morning."[695]

Plans for 28 April were to attack the area commanded by three key terrain features. Objective #1 was hill 861 (XD 803443), Objective #2 was Hill 881-South (XD 778438), and Objective #3 was Hill 881-North (XD 775458). Battalion 2/3 south of Hill 861 was to seize Objective #1 after supporting arms had blasted it on 28 Apr. Battalion 3/3 was to follow in the [693] Conversation with Thomas Ryan, 24 August 1986 [Khe Sanh microfilm archives pp. 111296-111298].

---

[694] DFC file on 1/Lt Thomas Paige Berry.
[695] SSGT Ed Crawford, Diary entry for Friday (28 April 1967). Crawford was an acting platoon commander in G/2/3.

trace of 2/3 and then wheel to the west in an arcing movement, securing the key terrain between objectives #1 and #2 and attack and seize Objective #2 from a northeasterly direction. After objective #1 was secured by 2/3 and thoroughly searched for enemy documents, weapons, and equipment, and after Objective #2 had been secured, 2/3 was to attack and seize Objective #3 from the east. Duration of the operation was contingent on enemy resistance encountered.

On 28 Apr, 2/3 assaulted Objective #1, Hill 861 (XD 803443) with two companies abreast (Co E and G) and secured it at 281630H encountering no enemy.

Between 1930H and 1840H, E/2/3 received sporadic mortar fire for a total of 19 incoming 60 mm mortars, but suffered no casualties. 2/3 set in for the night with the two assaulting companies remaining in the vicinity of the objective and the command group and the remaining company to the south.

3/3, composed of a command group and three companies (M/3/3, K/3/9, and M/3/9), moved overland from KSCB to occupy night positions on the southwestern flank of 2/3, with the command group and a company at XD 803427 and the remaining two companies deployed to the west.

During the 28th, air dropped 382,700 pounds of ordnance, including 74,250 pounds of ordnance and twelve 2,000-pound bombs (DELTA-4, M-84), while artillery fired 968 rounds in observed missions and 107 rounds as H&Is. in addition, two Arc light strikes were conducted, centered at XD 955455 and XD 780530.

The Battle of the Hills had little to do with the local situation at Khe Sanh; it was as though two enemy forces entered a virgin area and fought it out, without regard to the local inhabitants.

Col Corson related that some distance from all the action, several local populace[696] were standing beside a Marine radio jeep watching the fire-power rained upon 861. The day was finally clear; the action was clearly visible. One of the locals asked a Marine Major in the jeep why the assault forces continued to attack up a hill in the fact of enemy fire, and the Major, annoyed and yet jolted by a primitive person speaking English, sarcastically responded that that is where the enemy was! Then the local citizen asked why the Marines did not use the tunnel running through the mountain, attacking the enemy from the rear. The Major now became interested! But Hill 861 was already taken, and the Major angrily looked at the local man and asked why he didn't mention the tunnel earlier. the man responded that he had not been asked. He walked away. The real reason was that the local leader, Mr. Anya, a local Bru who had been educated at Hue University with Felix Poilane the coffee plantation owner, had attempted to speak with the Marines for 5 days, but the marines, preoccupied with the tactical situation, did not wish to speak with him.[697]

Hill 861 contained, in fact, five natural caves.

29 APRIL 1967: CARING FOR EACH OTHER

SSGT Ed Crawford wrote his diary entry for the 29th: "Rained again. Was awake all night. Moved out again at 8 o'clock to take another hill.... We are sweeping the whole area. We will get resupplied with water at the next hill. 2/3 ran into hard core. We are watching the battle. They are taking heavy casualties. 1400 battle is still going on. Our water won't get here till this evening. Everyone out of water. No streams available. 2/3 pulled back and is calling in air strikes to clear the NVA out."[698]

The attack began on 29 Apr as 3/3 moved toward Battalion Intermediate Objective "A" (XD 782445). The lead element, M/3/9, became engaged in a draw at XD 792448 with an estimated enemy platoon[699] 1120H to 1300H resulting in 2 Marines killed, 10 wounded, 2 NVA killed (confirmed) and 19 killed (probable).

Cpl Robert L. Allen, a squad leader with First Platoon, M/3/9, had just set his squad in a defensive position when they began to receive heavy enemy small arms and automatic weapons fire from entrenched enemy fortifications.

Two men were caught in the open and seriously wounded during the initial exchange of fire. When he observed that they were unable to move, Cpl Allen, with complete disregard for his own safety, dashed through the heavy enemy fire to the wounded men and immediately carried one of them to safety.

Undaunted by the continuing hostile fire, he quickly returned to the remaining Marines. Although he received a painful wound as he re-crossed the open area, he ignored his own injury to carry his companion to safety.

---

[696] He calls "Vietnamese" but were probably Bru tribesmen.

[697] Corson, William R, The Betrayal, New York: W.W. Norton, Inc., 1968, pp. 72-74.

[698] Edward Crawford, Diary entry for Saturday |29 April 1967|.

[699] Sizes of North Vietnamese Army units differed greatly from the USMC: A NVA Division contained approximately 5,000 or more men (USMC is about 20,000); a NVA regiment numbered approximately 1,500 men (USMC is about 3,500); a NVA battalion had approximately 400 men (USMC is approx. 1,200); a NVA company contained approx. 100 men (USMC is approx. 250); a NVA platoon is approx. 30 men |HQ, USMCV, MACV J-2 PERINTREP 20 April 1967|.

Refusing medical attention for himself, he skillfully directed accurate fire into the North Vietnamese position while administering first aid to his wounded companions.

During this same action, Cpl Vincent M. Kowalewski and Cpl Wayne Kretler both observed a wounded Marine in an open area, and unhesitatingly exposed themselves to the heavy enemy fire to lift a wounded comrade to their shoulders and each move one of their wounded comrades to a position of safety.[700]

LCPL Jerry M. Vanderhoff, observing his wounded companions lying exposed to hostile fire immediately moved through the heavy volume of enemy fire to a position from which he could deliver effective 3.5" rocket fire at the enemy positions. With complete disregard for his own safety, he repeatedly exposed himself to the hostile fire as he fired white phosphorus rocket rounds into the North Vietnamese positions, providing a smoke screen that enabled the Marine casualties to be evacuated. Although painfully wounded, he refused medical attention or evacuation until he had expended all his ammunition.[701]

Directing the efforts of LCPL Vanderhoof was 2Lt Edward J. Kresty, a platoon commander in M/3/9 who saw that the lead elements of M-2, the point platoon, had become detached from the rest of M-2. Several Marines had been seriously wounded during the initial burst of fire

> It was then that I saw 2nd Lt Kresty furiously move through this heavy fire to an exposed position forward of his platoon. On the way up he moved from position to position. He must have immediately realized what the situation was, because just as he reached the exposed high ground, he began to give instructions to the cut off squad by radio and because he could see from his exposed position, he calmly directed the cut-off squad back to the platoon's position by another route and consolidated their position. After this was accomplished, and although he could have then returned to a safe position, he remained to draw fire while he directed the successful evacuation of the wounded. After this was completed, he still remained under this heavy automatic fire to mark the enemy position with WP from a 3.5 rocket launcher for supporting arms. During this time the artillery FO was seriously wounded and unable to render any assistance, so Lieutenant Kresty called in the artillery fire mission on the enemy positions which was as close as 75 meters to his own position. Lieutenant Kresty showed no concern at all for his own safety. I am sure that if he did not react the way he did his platoon and the company would have suffered heavy losses. 2d Lieutenant Kresty's knowledge and devotion to duty saved the lives of many Marines that day, without any regard for his own safety.[702]

During this contact, the second element, M/3/3, passed to the south of the fire fight and continued the attack toward the battalion objective, and secured Objective "A" at 1915H, remaining in this position, about 600 - 700 meters northeast of Hill 881-South, for the evening.

At 1900H, M/3/3 sighted 20 NVA soldiers on Objective 2 moving in a western direction across the top of the hill. In addition, two enemy mortar teams we sighted setting on Objective #2 and just to the west of M/3/3's position at XD 780444.

Capt David G. Rogers of C Battery, 1/12, recalls the Commanding Officer of Co M, Capt Bennett "..called me over. I was standing about 15 meters from him–and he told me what he was doing and he said, 'Look, Dave, there's a North Vietnamese up on top of that hill up there. Get some arty up there real fast.' So I think that was about the fastest fire mission I eve fired in my life. I think we got rounds up there within a matter of two minutes or less. And I can still remember real vividly the sound of these rounds coming over our heads. You could really hear them whistling.. The Company Commander was constantly calling for more and more artillery on top of the hill."[703]

Counter-mortar fire was brought to bear immediately, permitting the enemy to fire only four rounds of 82mm before being dispersed.

At 2015H, M/3/3 sighted an estimated NVA company advancing towards its position. Artillery with VT fuse was called in on noise and lights resulting in screams of pain among the enemy.

M/3/3 remained on the intermediate objective during the night with no further contact. The remainder of 3/3 was to the east, near XD 792442, within support and reinforcement range of the lead company.

2/3 encountered no contact and only one sighting during the day. The search of objective #1, Hill 861, yielded two enemy bodies with ID cards, numerous items of enemy equipment, and two AK-47 assault rifles, along with the bodies of 4 previously unrecovered Marine KIAs. 2/3's nighttime positions ranged from the top of Objective #1 to the west.[704]

---

[700] BSM files on Cpl Vincent M. Kowalewski and Cpl Wayne Kretler
[701] BSM file on LCPL Jerry M. Vanderhoof.
[702] Statement of SSgt Harold E. Huddleston in BSM file of 1/Lt Edward J. Kresty.
[703] Comments of Capt David G. Rogers, HQMC Oral History Tape #3533.
[704] 3MAR AAR p. 19.

Ed Crawford's diary entry: "1400. Our water won't get here till this evening. Everyone out of water. No streams available. 2/3 pulled back and is calling in air strikes to clear the NVA out. 1600: battle with 2/3 over. They are taking out their wounded and dead. Our water should arrive soon. Sun boiling hot, out in open no shade. We still have to move on to next objective. 1600: moved down the hill on our left about 100 meters past where 2/3 had their battle. We found weapons and gear and also dead Marines. This battle took place 5 days ago. We then turned around and went back up on the hill we were on and dug in for the night. Tomorrow we have an objective about 300 meters past where 2/3 got hit."[705]

Hill 861 was found to be well-fortified with bunkers constructed from bamboo, dirt and grass. Some of the bunkers were as much as six feet thick and were capable of receiving direct artillery fire without suffering internal damage. Approximately 25 bunkers and 65 fighting holes were found on top of Hill 861, all mutually supporting and very well camouflaged. A total of 400 fighting holes were counted on Hill 861 and the ridges to the north and west. Defenses were primarily oriented toward the finger running up the hill from the south. Mortar positions were found on the reverse slope (northwest) laid in the direction of KSCB. If all the positions had been occupied at one time, Hill 861 could have held two NVA companies plus supporting arms. The battle area was extremely well policed by the enemy; virtually no equipment or information of intelligence value remained. Due to the large amount of ordnance expended on Hill 861, many of the positions were destroyed or buried. The odor of dead and decaying bodies was strong.[706]

As a result of the massive supporting arms brought to bear on Hill 861, the 18th NVA Regiment was severely mauled and was relieved by the 95th Regiment of the 325C Division, which defended Hills 881-South and 881-North during the remainder of the battle. The remaining regiment of the 325C Division, the 101st, remained in reserve near Highway 9 in Laos.[707]

The 18th NVA Regiment had been a well-disciplined force, well entrenched in bunkers and caves. Their camouflage was such that attacking Marines were within their position before realizing it. They survived artillery and air strikes and were not routed until 1000 and 2000 pound bombs with delayed fuses were used against them. Enemy fire discipline and marksmanship were excellent. Many Marine casualties were shot through the head and upper body. The enemy force on 861 had been supported by snipers, .50 and .30 caliber MGs, 60 mm and 82 mm mortars on 861 and from XD 798446, XD 806446, and XD 778444. When 2/3 secured the hill, the Marine KIAs which had been left during the fighting were found stripped of all equipment.

Supporting arms for 29 Apr included 195,000 pounds of air-delivered ordnance including 40,000 pounds of napalm and a mixture of 250 to 2000 pound bombs. Artillery fired 2040 rounds during the day, primarily in support of M/3/9's morning contact and M/3/3's evening contact. Air recon of the area to the west of Hill 881-South and 881-North disclosed a large number of previously undiscovered enemy positions, including 12 .50 cal. positions.

30 APRIL 1967: CONFLICT, CARNAGE, CONQUEST

Capt David Rogers of M/3/3, recalls the day:

> The weather on the morning of April 30, 1967, was beautiful, not a cloud in the sky and one could see for miles. There was no fog, smog, or air pollution that far away from civilization. Only North Vietnamese soldiers, Bru Montagnards, US Marines, and wild animals roamed those picturesque mountains, even tigers. The only things visible were Marines as the NVA had expertly camouflaged themselves on Hill 881-South under the protection of intermittent fog. ... I should have figured that everything was going to go to hell after calling in a fire mission just prior to starting up the hill. I called for white phosphorus marking rounds before calling for high explosive. I was lucky I did as the first round whistled by real close and nearly hit a couple of Marines in front of us. I told the command group that I felt the battery at KSCB had made an error in azimuth computations. The battery was alerted and told to recheck their data. They admitted a human error had been made and said the error would be corrected by battery personnel. For the remainder of the day, subsequent rounds would land where called for."[708]

At 0600, Sgt Ed Crawford, got up and accompanied Third Platoon, G/2/3, as acting Platoon Commander. A war correspondent named "Andy" joined the unit and by 0800 they reached their objective and proceeded up the slopes.

> All of a sudden we got hit by machinegun and rifle fire. Our men started returning fire almost instantly and all of a sudden we gained fire superiority. The machineguns and snipers were in dense jungle. We fired M79 and [705] Edward Crawford, Diary entry for Saturday [29 April 1967].

---

[706] Ibid., p. 9.

[707] Intelligence AAR, attached to ltr of LtCol B.L. Spivey, Jr., to BGen E.H. Simmons, 18 June 1981.

[708] Ltr from David Rogers to Dr. Albert Castle, 23 Aug 1987. [Khe Sanh microfilm archives, pp. 51170-51185. Quotation is on p. 51197].

rocket towards this position. They were going off before they could really penetrate the jungle. The battle raged for nearly 20 minutes and I don't think we had a man wounded yet. We were steadily going forward when much to my amazement I heard the order to withdraw. As we withdrew back down the hill, we lost our fire superiority and then the snipers became deadly. By the time the men had reached the safety of the next hill, the arty and mortar rounds started landing on the enemy positions. Handy[709] and myself were stuck in the draw and couldn't get out. We jumped in a gook hole and sat out the first round of the barrage. At times we thought we would be killed from our own fire. When the fire lifted the snipers started firing again. Two of them came up about 40 ft. from where we were out of spider holes. He took one and I got the other. The bombardment started again, and again we got farther down in the hole. After it lifted this time we made a break for the top of the hill during this run I had my pack shot off my back. Upon reaching the top I found many wounded. I called for a stop of the barrage for some of the rounds were starting to fall short. It was now around 1130. We organized the men and got the wounded carried to a safer place so the choppers could pick them up. It was during this time that I got shot in the leg. 24 of us were evaced along with 9 KIA and 10 other men had minor wounds so they stayed.[710]

On the morning of 30 Apr, shortly after first light, H/2/3 moved into an area of M/3/9's contact of 29 Apr (XD 791449). The enemy allowed Co H to move to within 100 meters of their bunkers and then opened up with .50s as well as sniper rifles with high powered scopes.

The Second Platoon, under Lt Griesmer was on the left and the Third Platoon, led by Lt Tom Givven, on the right. We ran into an ambush crossfire that pinned down both platoons and my command group following in trace of the third platoon. Lt Griesmer was hit early in the assault but stayed in command until he passed out later. The company command group, consisting of First Sergeant Kenneth R. Jones, two radio operators and myself [Raymond Madonna], were pinned down, shoulder to shoulder, in a bomb crater. With us, but in another hole, wee the artillery Forward Observer and his radio operator. At that point my battalion tactical net radio operator was killed and his radio destroyed. in addition to the loss of a fine young man, my contact with higher headquarters was broken. With one radio left, I had to switch between the battalion and company nets. First Lieutenant Dave Hackett and Gunnery Sergeant W. Catalon were behind us with the base of fire consisting of the First and Weapons Platoons. We called for artillery and mortars but, because we were so close to the NVA, these weapons were denied. The intense enemy fire was highly accurate on both the platoons and the command group. We later recovered many sniper scope-equipped rifles.[711]

There were an estimated 50 NVA soldiers dug in bunkers to their front and 15 on their left flank at XD 791447. The company immediately began taking heavy casualties from the intense crossfire or an estimated two enemy platoons at XD 793446. Second and Third Platoons of H/2/3 were immediately pinned down and took heavy casualties. H-2 had set up a base of fire on a small ridge less than 100 meters from the enemy emplacements while H-3 had moved over the forward slope of the ridge into a draw where the North Vietnamese opened up from well concealed and highly fortified positions.[712]

1Lt David Spencer Hackett, the Co XO, in a depression from where he could observe the source of the enemy fire, sent his radioman to the Company Commander, Capt Raymond C. Madonna, since his radioman had been killed. Without means to communicate with the base of fire established by H-2, he rose from his position of safety despite the heavy enemy fire hitting around him, to direct fire from the base of fire and move closer to the wounded Lt Griesmer, charging through 30 meters of murderous fire to direct the fire of a M-60 MG team near him against the enemy bunker firing on them.. While moving, he was killed by an enemy rifleman.[713]

Although 2Lt Bruce Edwin Griesmer, the Platoon Commander of Second Platoon, was seriously wounded in the initial burst of fire, he continued to command the situation by skillfully maneuvering his men to more advantageous positions and directing the delivery of a heavy volume of fire on the hostile force,. Continuously refusing medical evacuation, he continued commanding the situation, providing covering fire for the evacuation of the wounded and dead until, overcome with pain and loss of blood, he lost consciousness.[714]

---

[709] Bob Handy, a CIA civilian, was present at this time and was also one of two Americans (the other being CPL Daniel Kelley, at the Bru Refugee village at Cam Lo following the Khe Sanh siege battle. Handy was later assassinated).
[710] Edward Crawford, Diary entry for Saturday [30 April 1967].

[711] Raymond Madonna, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh," 1 October 1997, in letter from Madonna, 02 March 1998.
[712] SOP 301245Z/Apr67, SPECIAL SITREP #3.
[713] SSM file on 1/Lt David Spencer Hackett. Raymond Madonna, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh," 1 October 1997, in letter from Madonna, 02 March 1998.
[714] BSM file on 2/Lt Bruce Edwin Griesmer

SSGT Ridenour took command of the platoon when Griesmer passed out.

> I will always remember the long look at First Sergeant Jones, a rock of a man, as we prepared to leave the safety of the hole. He nodded his readiness to me and suggested I retrieve the radio operator's rifle lying useless next to me. Someone had told me early in my tour that if the company commander, normally armed with a .45 caliber pistol, needed a rifle there would be plenty around. that person was right that day. The three of us fired and maneuvered our way back to safer ground as Givvin's platoon came in behind us. First Sergeant Jones, a legend among our troops for his courage, toughness and tenacity in taking care of his men, seemed to be everywhere checking on casualties. Once we were out of the engagement area,I Colonel DeLong called in air and blasted the enemy positions.[715]

LCPL Gary Eugene Mettler, a machine-gunner attached to H-2, ignored the heavy volume of enemy fire and moved his MG to a vantage point to provide optimal fire support for his platoon. While moving across the fire-swept terrain, he was painfully wounded. He refused medical evacuation and succeeded in emplacing his weapon and delivering accurate suppressive fire against the hostile positions. Despite his painful injury, he continued to fire his weapon until he was out of ammunition. Still under fire, he ran to a wounded Marine, retrieved the ammunition he was carrying, and continued to bring fire on the enemy. Only after friendly artillery had silenced the enemy position did LCPL Mettler consent to have his wound treated.[716]

One of the Navy Corpsmen, HN Richard L. Kinney, rushed forward through the intense enemy crossfire, moving from one injured Marine to another to attend their wounds. While thus serving his fellowmen, he was killed by the enemy.[717]

With the other corpsmen also wounded, Cpl Mark Leroy Black moved to the side of one of the corpsmen, retrieved his Unit One, and began rendering medical aid to the casualties. Disregarding his own safety, he fearlessly exposed himself to the hostile fire as he moved from one casualty to another, administering aid and comforting the wounded. Subsequently, he organized several stretcher teams and helped carry the wounded to safety. Several Marines lived because of Cpl Black's actions.[718]

Cpl Thomas Lance Brewer, a squad leader of H/2/3, noticed that one of his men had a serious wound and moved through the heavy hostile fire to assist him. While attempting to move the casualty, Cpl Brewer was himself wounded in his arm, but ignoring his painful injury, remained with the Marine to provide protective fire until further assistance arrived and the man was moved to a position of relative safety.[719]

PFC Eugene Wall noticed a Marine trapped at the point, seriously wounded, and unhesitatingly moved through the heavy volume of fire to render aid to his comrade and carry him to a place of relative safety. Throughout the fire-fight, PFC Wall repeatedly moved across the fire-swept terrain to assist his wounded companions and move them to covered positions.[720]

PVT Michael Makovec of 3.5" rockets, disregarded his own safety and moved through a heavy volume of fire to a vantage point to deliver accurate rocket fire against an enemy MG which was inflicting numerous casualties. Repeatedly exposing himself to hostile fire, he continued to fire his weapon until the MG was destroyed.[721]

H/2/3 pulled back with its casualties and cleared the area for close air support strikes. Results of the fire-fight were: 9 Marines KIA, 43 WIA (29 evacuated), 14 NVA KIA (confirmed) and another 25 KIA (probable).

E/2/3, meanwhile, moved on the left flank of H/2/3, receiving several rounds of sniper fire during Company H's contact. E/2/3 continued its advance unhindered to the southern approaches of Objective #3, Hill 881-North. The company spotted enemy troop movement (at XD 780451) at 1140H and at 1610H took the enemy under fire while calling in gunships and air. At 1700H, E/2/3 (at XD 778452) received small arms fire from XD 782449 wounding five Marines.[722]

The Third Platoon of E/2/3 had the mission of seizing the high ground on the right flank of the company objective when it suddenly came under intense small arms and automatic weapons fire and was pinned down.

When he observed the wounded separated from the rest of the platoon and exposed to continuing hostile fire, Hospitalman John Charles Burke, Jr., completely disregarded his own safety as he dashed through the heavy volume of fire to aid the fallen Marines. Despite the concentrated enemy fire, he moved from one man to another, skillfully administering first aid and evacuating them to the safety of covered positions during the three-hour battle.

---

[715] Raymond Madonna, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh," 1 October 1997, in letter from Madonna, 02 March 1998.
[716] BSM file on LCPL Gary Eugene Mettler.
[717] BSM file on HN Richard L. Kinney.
[718] BSM file on Cpl Mark Leroy Black.
[719] BSM file on Cpl Thomas Lance Brewer.
[720] BSM file on PFC David Eugene Wall.
[721] BSM file on PVT Michael Makovec.
[722] SP 301245Z/Apr67, SPECIAL SITREP #3.

On one occasion, he was unable to move a Marine who had lost a considerable amount of blood. He fearlessly lay in a prone position, shielding the Marine while he gave him medical aid, undoubtedly saving the man's life.[723]

Simultaneously, Third Platoon's Right Guide, Cpl Robert Paul Foreit, began to maneuver to the wounded, using his own body as a shield to protect the wounded and a corpsman, HN Ronald E. McIntyre. When rounds from the enemy fire landed only inches away, Cpl Foreit remained very calm and joked and talked to the wounded Marines to bolster their morale. When he located other casualties time and time again he gave cover to HN McIntyre so he could reach and treat the wounded. He then carried some of the casualties to a safer location.[724]

Gunships were called to neutralize the enemy, and the casualties were successfully extracted. At 1927H, E/2/3 reported receiving sporadic small arms fire from XD 774453, to their northwest and reported its troops heard a warning device making a "beep" sound every time an aircraft passed over the area bounded by Hill 861, 881-South, and 881-North.[725] As a result of their contacts, E/2/3 drew in tight within their perimeter at XD 778452 for the night as H&Is were fired into the area.

At mid-afternoon, after traveling one and half hours through extremely dense foliage, G/2/3 arrived at the area where H/2/3 had had contact in the morning and withdrew in order to blast the area with supporting arms. The attack position was a small ridge line about 300 meters from the top of a very steep but nearly barren hill which lay in front of them, about one click northwest of hill 861.

At this point, the First Platoon, G/2/3, moved two squads down to the base of the incline and got on line to assault the hill. One squad, Second, remained on the ridge line to be used as a base of fire in order to provide close support as the remainder moved into an extremely precarious situation, half crawling, half walking up the bomb-riddled slope.

The move was without incident until they came to the crest, at which time the assaulting elements came under intense fire from automatic weapons and extremely accurate sniper fire from the top of the hill, about 75 meters to their front. Despite heavy supporting arms, the enemy was still in the area.

It was frighteningly eerie: "The ammo had no noise to them. We couldn't hear the rounds go off–we–just bodies falling down, making it hard to distinguish where these rounds were being fired from. The best way we thought to assault the position was throwing a lot of hand grenades."[726]

Immediately, there were casualties. LCPL Rodin spotted an enemy bunker, but had trouble with his weapon and crouched in a kneeling position too long while attempting to clear it. An enemy sniper shot him in the left lung and left shoulder.[727]

Another casualty, PFC Yizzerea, was shot through the neck and bled profusely. SSgt Ruben Santos came to his aid, placing his finger inside the bullet hole and greatly reduced the flow of blood. The platoon corpsman, HN David L. Boucher, later declared that this immediate action undoubtedly saved PC Yizzerea's life. When the corpsmen arrived, SSgt Santos resumed his duties as platoon sergeant as the attacking squads sought what little protection the crest of the hill afforded.

HN Vernon Ralph Wike, assigned to G/2/3, had spotted a Marine infantryman caught in a crossfire and rushed to his side. Wike knew the man, but did not know he was mortally wounded. A Lt pulled the wounded man down the hill a bit, and Wike cradled the Marine's head in his arms, looking up in anguish after he saw him die.[728]

Wike's friend, "Doc" Jerry March, later noted: "That was Vern's first casualty, and he saw two weeks of combat. He was so 'characteristic.' He's about 5-foot-8, looked like a Marine, Red. He was like a fire-plug. Vern and I–we had a lot of fun. There were about four of us that hung out together. He came out of a typical, middle-class, grew up in Phoenix, never had any insult in his life–typical corpsman. Corpsmen got picked in Boot Camp–they give you the big, long battery of tests to decide what kind of thing–where is he intellectually? They take the top intellectual guys and people with a philosophical bent, and make these guys the healers. Well, given that, it was totally dichotomous that he should end up with the Marines."[729] Wike's nickname was "Killer Gorilla,"[730] and everyone in G/2/3 called him a "Marine."[731]

---

[723] BSM file on HN John Charles Burke, Jr.

[724] A few days later, on 3 May, while rushing to the aid of a wounded Marine, Foreit was painfully wounded and evacuated. {BSM file on Sgt Robert Paul Foreit].

[725] SOP 301845Z/Apr67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #4.

[726] Comments of SSGT Ruben Santos, HQMC Oral History Tape #949.

[727] Comments of Cpl John P. Hays, HQMC Oral History Tape #949.

[728] The scene was captured on film by Catherine LeRoy in photos printed in the 19 May 1967 issue of Life, and is also on the cover and pp. 76-77 of the book, Images of War in the Vietnam Experience series, and p. 88 of Catherine LeRoy, ed., Under Fire. Foreword Senator john McCain, New York: Random House, 2005.

[729] Conversation with Gerry "Doc" March, 08 July 1994.

[730] Conversation with Robert J. Maras, 22 January 2000.

[731] AP news release, "Sailor's a Real Marine, Buddies Say," Pacific Stars & Stripes, 15 May 1967.

Wike was Peter Hesser's corpsman, First Platoon, GOLF, 2/3, and Hesser was with him at the time of the photo: "I was standing right next to him when all this happened. A Marine named Roldan[732] was killed instantly, shot right in front of me. When we were moving up that hill, maybe 6 or 8 dug-in NVA spotted us as we came up over the military crest. Andy McFarlane (Weapons Plt) was the base of fire with the MGs, and when they ceased fire, these guys popped up out of their holes and started dinging us, and hilled him right there. The photographer, Kathy LeRoy had the only photos that came out of Khe Sanh at that time. She'd been with us throughout that operation off and on, but she was right with the platoon when we went up there."[733]

It was noted at this time that approximately a squad of the enemy was dug-in on top of the hill in bunkers and spider holes which had withstood a continuous barrage of heavy bombs and artillery that early morning. They were armed with automatic weapons, including a MG and sniper rifle. It was evident that these enemy remained behind to delay the advance, a suicidal attempt to kill as many Marines as possible, thereby covering their retreating main force.

It was about 1830H and darkness was fast approaching as the two assault squads lay pinned down just beneath the crest of the hill.

At this time, 2Lt Peter M. Hesser decided to use the squad on his right as a base of fire and move the left squad further left and higher on the hill so they could assault across the front of the enemy. The squad on the right threw grenades and on command the squad on the left assaulted across the front, killing several of the enemy in their holes and bunkers.

The enemy were entrenched, having a wide field of fire. SSgt Santos, unconcerned for his own life, went from bunker to bunker, spraying the area with rounds and throwing grenades. At one time he caught a live grenade and dropped it into an enemy bunker, one which was facing the Marines advancing up the hill, saving many Marines' lives.[734]

PFC Michael T. Mills, also maneuvering through the enemy fire, threw a hand grenade inside an enemy bunker, killing the enemy soldier and enabling his unit to continue to the top of the hill. When he spotted an enemy MG, he and LCPL Robert G. Cameron aggressively attacked the bunker and destroyed it with a hand grenade. Cpl David M. Coleman also was attacking the enemy bunkers and spider holes, exposing himself to enemy fire while throwing hand grenades into the occupied holes.[735]

Due to twilight, several of the spider traps were passed unnoticed as the hilltop was seized and the platoon established a 360° perimeter

At this point, Cpl Coleman saw Cpl Richard Travis Schmitz being pulled into an enemy bunker. Cpl Coleman, without delay, jumped in front of the bunker, grabbed a hold of Cpl Schmitz and attempted to pull his body free. The NVA inside, shooting through Cpl Schmitz's body, wounded Cpl Coleman in 5 different places, knocking him to the ground,. Although shot in his legs, Cpl Coleman again crawled back trying to aid Cpl Schmitz, whom he thought was still alive. At this time, SSgt Santos arrived and Coleman was brought back to be treated by the platoon corpsman.[736]

SSgt Santos, disregarding his own safety, fearlessly advanced and tied a line to the man's legs. As he attempted to pull the Marine from the hole, the enemy soldiers fired through the casualty's body, inflicting flash burns on SSgt Santos' face and hands. Realizing that Schmitz had succumbed to his wounds and that further attempts to clear the bunker in the darkness would cause additional casualties, he ordered his men to cover the bunker with logs and block all exits.[737]

On the following morning, investigation of the bunker revealed two dead enemy soldiers, one still alive–alive because he sat on a grenade; it blew off his ass, but he was still alive.[738]

G/2/3 had sustained two killed and nine wounded in this action, and set in for the night at XD 789449.

On the morning of 30 April, M/3/3, prior to its assault on Objective #2, Hill 881-South, commenced a search of the adjacent draw in which the enemy troops had been massing on the preceding night prior to the artillery saturation with VT fuse (at XD 778446). While in the area, elements of the company located 5 NVA bodies and 2 NVA wounded. One of the wounded NVA attempted to escape and was killed; the second was captured but later died from previously inflicted wounds.[739]

Prior to M/3/3's search of the draw, K/3/9 at 0615H had commenced movement from its nighttime position to link up with M/3/3. The company linked up with the rear elements of M/3/3 at 0815H, while the lead elements of M/3/3 attacked Objective #2 at 0800H.

---

[732] LCPL William Junior Roldan, G/2/3, KIA 30 Apr 1967.
[733] Conversation with Peter Hesser, 05 June 1997.
[734] SSM file on SSgt Ruben Santos.
[735] SSM file on PC Michael T. Mills.
[736] SSM file on Cpl David M. Coleman.
[737] SSM file on SSGT Ruben Santos.
[738] Comments by SSGT Santos, HQMC Oral History Tape #949.
[739] SOP 300630Z/Apr67, KHE SANH SPECDIAL SITREP #2; 3MAR AAR KHE SANH CONTACT, p. 20.

The assault by M/3/3 was led by Capt Raymond H. Bennett of Columbus, Ohio, Commanding Officer of a Marine detachment on USS ENTERPRISE who had requested TAD[740] assignment in order to participate in the Khe Sanh operation.[741] The CO of M/3/3, Capt Griggs, was on R&R.

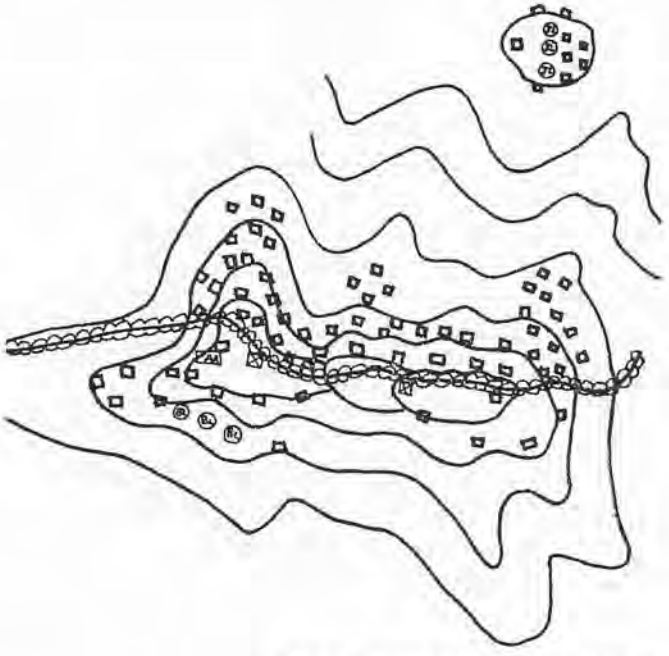
The attack plan called for First Platoon, led by Lt Billy D. Crews, to move to the top of the hill, turn right along the ridgeline, while Third Platoon, led by Lt Joseph Robert Mitchell, Jr., would follow in trace and turn left. Lt Douglas Houser's trailing Second Platoon would provide the base of fire and reserve reinforcement to the lead platoons.

Hill 881-South consists of two high knolls with a saddle between, and several fingers sloping downward from the hill. The NVA occupied the hill with a battalion minus. Both peaks were defensive strong points employing perimeter defenses, while a lineal defense was employed between the knolls. Defensive positions also extended down the fingers to the northeast, north, and west. Both strong points had a CP but the main CP was on the western peak. Communications wire ran from the CP to three mortar pits on the hill at XD 778444 and to three mortar pits on the western side of the hill. An estimated platoon occupied each of the knolls at XD 778444, XD 764443, and XD 778423.[742]

For the Marines of M/3/3, the threat was anything but obvious. Artillery had fired on it all night. But what was up there?

Capt David G. Rogers, an artillery officer of C Battery, 1/12, was with Capt. Raymond H. Bennett, the Company Commander, 1Lt Joseph A. Cialone, the XO, and assigned radio operators.

> ..we didn't know exactly what was up on Hill 881 [south]. It was a real deceiving place to be in. If somebody were to have told me that there was an entire battalion of North Vietnamese up on top of that hill, I think I would have looked at him and told him he was crazy. First of all, you couldn't really see any signs of North Vietnamese up there. We know there was people up there because we had seen them the night before. However, like I say, a larger unit, a battalion-sized unit, up on top of that hill–I just couldn't imagine it. We could see some bunkers, I'd say at the very most I saw probably five bunkers. The rest were so well camouflaged, expertly camouflaged, that the average Marine couldn't see them unless we actually walked up on the position itself.[743]



ENEMY BUNKERS ON HILL 881-South[744]

At 0830, M/3/3 sighted 4 NVA soldiers on Objective #2 and called in artillery with unknown results. By 1025H, the leading platoon of M/3/3, led by Lt Billy D. Crews, had reached the top of Objective #2, Hill 881-South, on the western end (XD 778438) and began moving east on top of the hill, receiving sporadic small arms fire. Lt Crews reported it was nothing he couldn't handle, and Capt Bennett ordered him to keep pressing eastward. At this time, Lt Crews ran into heavy opposition, and another platoon, led by Lt Houser, was dispatched to reinforce. With the second platoon joining them, the company closed on the enemy and was hit by heavy fire from a well dug-in enemy in heavily camouflaged positions and by sniper fire from individual riflemen located in trees. The two platoons also received 30 rounds of 82. The platoons were trapped, unable to advance or withdraw. The North Vietnamese had permitted the Marines to advance past their bunkers while going up the hill. They had excellent fire discipline. When the Marines attempted to come down the hill the same way they advanced, the North Vietnamese opened up on them. They could not move.[745] The battle was to last some six hours.

---

[740] Temporary Additional Duty.
[741] BSM file on Capt Raymond H. Bennett.
[742] Intelligence AAR appended to ltr of LtCol B.L. Spivey, Jr., to BGen E.H. Simmons, 18 June 1981.
[743] Comments of Capt Rogers, HQMC Oral History Tape #3533.
[744] Enclosure to Ltr of LtCol B.L. Spivey, Jr., to BGen Simmons, HQMC Historical Division, 18 Jun 1981.
[745] Ibid.

A special problem with Hill 881-South was the use of artillery. The only friendly artillery that could support Marines on 881-South were 155 howitzers. These, at KSCB, were the old towed-type howitzers requiring a considerable amount of time to shift action, especially in the very muddy conditions then prevailing, usually about half an hour.[746]

Capt David Rogers "..was with the command group which consisted of the company commander, executive officer, their radio operators, and my radio operator. The CO maintained radio contact with the platoon leaders as their platoons began the ascent. The firing of weapons was sporadic at first as the Marines of Mike Company advanced forward. A few explosions would be heard (grenades) and first reports via radio indicated only light resistance was being encountered and that the situation could be handled. I don't know how far up the hill the Marines had advanced before everything just seemed to explode on the north side of the hill. They got pinned down and couldn't be seen by the command group. The noise level increased sharply and reports started coming in via radio that resistance was extremely heavy. It was soon apparent that MIKE Company had walked into a death trap. A perfect ambush had been executed and for those on the hill there was no way back down safely as they had become surrounded and victims of murderous crossfire. The hunters had suddenly become the hunted. Reports of Marine casualties came in including the death of a platoon leader, a friend of mine.[747] Finally, only one radio was transmitting from the top of the hill to the command group. It appeared nearly impossible to coordinate the assault with the number of casualties being suffered.[748]

At the same time the command group had clustered together in a bomb crater located at the edge of a ring of death which had began to fill with dead and wounded Marines and NVA soldiers. The crater provided some protection except for the mortar rounds which had begun to drop around the Marines. One landed in front and about a minute or so later, one landed behind. To an artilleryman, that's called "bracketing"–the next round lands in the middle of where the first two landed, which was where the Marines were. Fortunately, it never came, but the Marines expected it, like the next shoe to drop. If it landed in the bomb crater, all would be killed.

> I remember seeing from the command position one black Marine came to us charging up the slope of the hill when suddenly a mortar round went off behind him. He buckled at the knees, remained stationary with both knees planted on the ground for about 10 seconds, and then suddenly got up and kept moving forward. I thought for sure he had been seriously injured, but apparently the shrapnel had blown away from him and only the concussion from the explosion had momentarily stunned him.

Disregarding his own personal safety, 2Lt Billy Derrell Crews, Platoon Commander of First Platoon, M/3/3, the point element, led his men up the hill, becoming wounded from a mortar in the assault. Despite his wounds and the continuous mortar attack, Lt Crews repeatedly moved up and down the hill to assist in carrying his wounded Marines to safety, exposing himself to enemy fire each time.[749]

During this time, Cpl Bernard G. Elkins, Right Guide of First Platoon, M/3/3, repeatedly went from position to position to provide battle dressings to his men. When the supply of battle dressings was exhausted, Cpl Elkins ran from position to position under heavy fire, gathering all extra battle dressings and then returned to use them on the wounded. In the process he himself was wounded in the chest and arm. He was moved to the LZ for evacuation, but insisted on gathering extra ammunition as he moved along and then carrying it back to his platoon and distributing it among the troops. He was instrumental in calming the wounded by talking with each man. He refused to be medically evacuated until all the other casualties had been loaded aboard.[750]

The thick vegetation and intense enemy fire had resulted in the various squads of Lt Crews' First Platoon to become separated. One squad was forced to seek cover several meters in advance of the remainder of the platoon where it remained some 5 hours. The increasing intensity of the bitterly contested engagement saw several enemy assaults quickly deplete the remaining ammunition supply of this advance squad. The squad, like the platoon, could neither move forward nor withdraw without producing many casualties. In addition, they had taken several casualties which made it even more difficult to move.

Realizing the necessity of rendering assistance and supplying the advance squad with critically needed ammunition, PFC Dorsey Burwin Williams unhesitatingly exposed himself to the enemy fire by crawling forward with ammunition. Advancing only a few meters, PFC Williams sustained a painful shoulder wound, but refused to return to safety despite being urged to do so, and continued forward. Approximately ten meters from the advance squad, PFC Williams threw several magazines of ammunition to them, while at the same time, enemy soldiers rushed from the thick foliage. Reacting quickly, PC Williams

---

[746] Comments by Maj G. Golden, HQMC Oral History Tape #2584.
[747] Lt "Buzzy" Mitchell.
[748] Ltr from David Rogers to Dr. Albert Castle, 23 Aug 1987. [Khe Sanh microfilm archives, pp. 51170-51185. Quotation is on p. 51178].
[749] BSM file on 2/Lt Billey Darrell Crews.
[750] BSM file on Cpl Bernard G. Elkins.

wounded the enemy soldiers, but before he could again fire, the enemy soldier fired a burst of automatic weapons fire into his head, killing him.[751]

The Second Platoon, M/3/3, was assigned the mission of moving up Hill 881-South and securing the left flank. Fire from one particular enemy bunker was inflicting heavy casualties and halted the advance of M-2.

PFC Randy McPhee (2nd Fire Team, 2nd Plt, M/3/3) was on the point and got off the first shot, which triggered an ambush, killing him and the next three Marines within seconds. "Randy McPhee, our point man–that was his second tour of duty there. Just before we went into this particular battle–he was considered a 'Marine's Marine' kind of thing–but he fell down before the Sergeant there and cried and begged him not to go to this particular fight because, he said, 'If I go, I'm going to die.' And it kinda shook us all up because we knew he was no coward. But he went, took two rounds in the chest."[752] Due to intense hostile fire, his unit was forced to withdraw, leaving his body behind (at XD 776438).[753]

Realizing the necessity to eliminate the position, LCPL James H. Whisenhunt, a rocket squad leader with M/3/3, on his own initiative, advanced into an exposed area, a clear field of fire, and commenced to deliver accurate and effective M-79 rounds on the enemy.

Scoring a direct hit, he then advanced across an open, exposed area to secure and destroy the bunker completely. In the process, enemy MG fire inflicted fatal wounds on LCPL Whisenhunt.[754]

Hill 861 as occupied by Marines on 28 July 1967.
Photo by Stubbe. Official USMC photo A800186

Hill 881-South as occupied by Marines on 09 November 1967
Photo by Stubbe. Official USMC photo A800221
Hills 950 and 1015 are visible in upper right

SSGT Karol R. Bauer was approaching the crest of the hill when he began warning his comrades to remain back and take cover as he heard mortars pop from their tubes. His warning was responsible for saving many lives as moments later an enemy mortar barrage saturated the Marine advance. After the barrage, SSgt Bauer rushed to assist the casualties to points of safety. While assisting one Marine, an enemy sniper mortally wounded him.[755]

The numerous casualties kept the attached Navy Corpsmen frenetically moving from one to another in the area of bullets and mortars. Petty officer Henry Cornell Steward's actions were typical. Fearlessly and repeatedly exposing himself to the hostile fire, he rushed through an open area on three different occasions to assist movement of wounded Marines to places of relative safety, administering first aid and speaking words of encouragement. His professional ability and quick thinking helped to save the lives of ten Marines that were seriously wounded and who would otherwise have died.[756]

Although pinned down, the Marines were not by any means cowering. Typical of all was PFC Thomas Burrlan Knapp who moved his mortar to a dangerously exposed vantage point and, holding the weapon in position with his bare hands, began delivering accurate fire against the NVA. When his assistant gunner was killed, PFC Knapp continued to deliver effective fire

---

[751] BSM file on PFC Dorsey Burwin Williams.
[752] Conversation with John P. Colvis, 5 May 1992.
[753] During the next two days, after the hill had been subjected to intense artillery fire and aerial bombing, when the Marines returned to recover remains of those killed on 30 Apr., none of the remains recovered were identified as those of PFC McPhee. He is listed as MIA. {See statements of SSgt T. L. Meier and LCPL Lester R. Calhoun, Jr,., in Library of Congress MIA file on McPhee, Reel #428, Folder #119].
[754] SSM file on Cpl James Henry Whisenhunt.
[755] BSM file on SSGT Karol R. Bauer.
[756] BSM file on HM3 Henry Cornell Steward.

unassisted until he sustained a painful head wound. Despite his wound, he refused medical evacuation and administered first aid to the other casualties.[757]

Cpl Robert J. Schley, a MG team leader attached to First Platoon, moved his team to an advantageous firing position on his own initiative by moving across an open clearing and was able to inflict heavy casualties on the enemy.

After several hours of fighting, the gun was low on ammunition and Cpl Schley dashed from hole to hole, again under heavy fire, trying to locate additional ammunition. Although successful, he was painfully wounded in his shoulder. Refusing medical evacuation, he returned to his gun position as the only remaining member of his team able to fire. he continued to fire effectively on the enemy and then received a serious neck wound. Although profusely bleeding, he continued to fire, halting numerous enemy assaults until he died from loss of blood and his wounds.[758]

Third Platoon was sent to assist Second Platoon and secure the eastern half of the hill. They, too, came under heavy fire and took numerous casualties, including the platoon commander. Don Hossack, radioman for the fallen Platoon Commander, 2Lt Joseph Robert Mitchell, laid the Lt across his legs, holding him up and listening for the gunships. the scene became the basis for a sculpture for a Vietnam Memorial in San Antonio, Texas, by Austin Deuel. The Lt had only a tiny piece of shrapnel in his left cheek bone which evidently deflected right up into his brain.

Reacting instantly, 2Lt Douglas Hauser organized the remainder of both platoons into an effective fighting force and, rallying his men, directed and encouraged them to continue the assault.

During the ensuing 6-hour battle, he repeatedly exposed himself to the intense hostile fire to coordinate the advance of his men, while he simultaneously supervised the medical evacuation of all casualties and assisted in their evacuation.[759]

While Lt Houser organized both platoons, SSgt Terrance Leo Meier immediately assumed command of the platoon upon the death of the platoon commander. Subsequently, becoming separated from his platoon, he remained with six seriously wounded companions and provided protective fire for them until he was able to move the men to a captured enemy bunker. From here, despite continuous incoming enemy fire, he called in artillery fire on the enemy force. Then he called in 81mm WP rounds to cover their movement.[760]

During this time, Cpl Larry M. Smith led his squad from the Third Platoon, M/3/3, to assist the point elements. Dangerously exposing himself to the intense enemy fire, he led his squad and maneuvered them into positions whereby the lead elements could be effectively supported by fire, until he was fatally wounded by incoming mortar fire.[761]

HM3 Charles Allen Halstead, a Navy Corpsman of the Third Platoon, quickly moved to the position where most of the casualties were located and, under heavy fire, moved from man to man o treat their wounds. Evacuation of the wounded was undertaken under heavy enemy fire, but despite the mortar and enemy sniper fire, HM3 Halstead refused to leave until all of his patients had been evacuated first.[762]

The battle was, after all, a matter of the people. Capt Raymond H. Bennett, commanding M/3/3, observed:

> The most important thing I saw in the actions of the American youngster. The same long haired kid that loves rock and roll music and sometimes appears to the public to be a weak generation, comes through with flying colors when the chips are down.
>
> At one point I came across a couple of men badly shot up. It was obvious to me–and to them–that they were dying. Yet there was no screaming or crying or moaning. They only gave good information to newly arriving troops on the locations of enemy targets such as machine guns.[763]

The overwhelming volume of enemy fire made it apparent that M/3/3 must disengage in order to permit supporting arms, particularly air, to reduce the objective. Although the hill had been heavily bombarded, many of the bunkers remained intact or only lightly damaged. Additional heavy bombardment was essential prior to continuation of the attack.

Cat David Rogers with the M/3/3 CP in the bomb crater saw the survivors: "The Marines started trickling back off the hill slowly. Some were visible to the command group as they approached us carrying the wounded. I recall seeing one Marine whose breasts appeared to have been almost shot off, apparently shot at and hit from a 90° angle. Another half of an inch and surely he, too, would have been among the dead. I remember seeing one Staff Sergeant,[764] an outstanding NCO and [757] BSM file on PFC Thomas Burrlan Knapp.

---

[758] Navy Cross file on Cpl Robert J. Schley.
[759] BSM file on 2/Lt Norman Douglas Hauser.
[760] SSM file on SSGT Terrance Leo Meier.
[761] BSM file on Cpl Larry Michael Smith.
[762] BSM file on HM3 Charles Allen Halstead.
[763] JOSN Nick Dunten, "The Initiation of an Officer on Hill 881," Pacific Stars & Stripes, Sunday Magazine 10:30 (23 July 1967) A-8, A-9.
[764] SSGT Terrance Leo Meier.

leader, carrying one of his wounded men piggyback along with two rifles. He was cursing as he stomped back off the hill. His bitterness about what had happened was very apparent. he was later nominated for the Medal of Honor. He never did freceive it, and died a few months later of meningitis in a Naval hospital in DaNang."

First Platoon, M/3/9, was sent to assist in the evacuation of casualties and came under heavy fire; the enemy attempted to prevent the link-up by pouring heavy blocking fire between the two Marine units.

Cpl Milton P. Vasquez, knowing it was too dangerous to lead his squad across without covering fire, dashed across the open, fire-swept area, and singlehandedly laid a base of fire which enabled his men to cover the distance with relative safety.[765]

The reinforcing unit nevertheless took many casualties. Numerous acets of heroism were involved in cafring for and rescuing them.

Hospitalman Michael A. House continuously maneuvered across the fire-swept area to the side of his wounded comfrades. Realizing that the casualties urgently required medical treatment prior to being moved, he couragenously remained exposed to the enemy fire and skillfully administered first aid. Repeatedly, he placed himself in the most dangerous positions to care for the wounded.[766]

PFC Vernon W. Metcalf fearlessly moved through the heavy volume of enemy fire to carry a casualty to a place of relative safety, himself becoming wounded as he did so. Ignoring his painful injury, he refused to be medevaced, and throughout the attack repeatedly exposed himself to the intense hostile fire to assist evacuation of other wounded Marines and their gear.[767]

LCPL Karl G. Gimple repeatedly crawled through an open field which was under heavy MG and mortar fire to retrieve several dead and wounded Marines as well as their gear. While carrying an injured Marine in the medical collection point, Cpl Gimple was wounded in the neck and shoulder. Ignoring his painful injuries, he resolutely completed carrying the wounded Marine to safety. Upon reaching the collection point, he refused medical aid and continued to assist in the evacuation of casualties.[768]

Spotting a wounded Marine lying in an exposed position, LCPL David Robert Barnard, withy complete disregard for his own safety, moved through the heavy volume of enemy fire to carry the casualty to a place of relative safety. Throughout the attack, he repeatedly moved across the fire-swept terrain to carry the wounded or assist in their evacuation, saving the lives of numerous Marines.[769]

PFC Leslie C. Wyeth, knowing fully the consequences, ran through an enemy barrage to a fallen Marine, picked him up, and ran back hrough the enemy's killing zone, sustaining a painful leg wound as he went. Ignoring his wound, PC Syeth refused medical aid and remained with his unit assisting in administering first aid and evacuating casualties.[770]

Observing several wounded Marines lying in an open area exposed to enemy fire, LCPL Joseph F. O'Neill unhesitatingly ran across the fire-swept terrain to assist his wounded comrades. As he carried one of the casualties through the hazardous area, LCPL O'Neill sustained a serious neck wound. Ignoring his painful injury, he steadfastly continued to assist the wounded to a place of relative safety.

KIIO Company, 3/9, moved towards the base of Hill 881-South and formed a defensive 360. The squad leaders were summoned; K/3/9 was to stand-by to assist of there were any trouble. And trouble there was!

> About an hour later was when all hell broke loose up on the top of the hill. You couldn't hardly hear yourself think where we were–so much small arms fire and mortar fire going on.[771]

K/3/9 advanced to assist M/3/3 and M/3/9 to disengage. About noon, K/3/9 proceeded up 881-South, company on line, platoon column. Second and Third Platoons went up the left side; First Platoon went up the right.

Reaching a small knoll about half-way up the hill, First Platoon became pinned down by a sniper who seriously wounded the rockets man. The corpsman immediately began attending to his wounds when the Lt got hit in the leg and someone called "Corpsman Up!" The corpsman jumped up and started to run across the hill the hill, but was shot through his head. One enemy dashed across an opening, attempting to climb a tree for a better shot at the Marines. He was shot and knocked out of the tree. Anther N VA soldier ran across the opening; he was tore apart by Marine fire.

Still pinned down, another Marine began to carry out the corpsman, but was shot in the shoulder and fell. The marines began to fire 3.5" rockets, and the platoon began to withdraw. The Marine who had been shot in the shoulder was again shot,

---

[765] BSM file on Cpl Milton P. Vasquez.
[766] SSM file on HN Michael A. House.
[767] BSM file on PFC Vernon William Metcalf.
[768] BSM file on LCPL Karl G. Gimpel.
[769] BSM file on LCPL David Robert Barnard.
[770] BSM file on PFC Leslie C. Wyeth.
[771] Comments of LCPL Larry W. Umstead, HQMC Oral History Tape #1127.

this time in his leg. The enemy began pouring mortars. The Marines took cover in some North Vietnamese bunkers as the mortars exploded around them. Then the Lt gave the order to withdraw. Everyone ran off the hill–fast!

> We went bacdk and sat in, and they waited that night for whoever was going to come back to come back. They brought the wounded and the dead back in, and it wasn't very pretty. They–quite a few of my friends were dead or wounded pretty badly.[772]

Leading the point squad of Second Platoon, K/3/9, Sgt Dale E. Partee observed an enemy MG bunker and immediately directed his unit in a vicious assault which resulted in the destruction of the emplacement[773]

LCPL Orie O. Linn quickly located the enemy MG emplacement and, completely disregarding his own safety, moved forward through the hostile fire and without assistance, courageously assaulted the enemy fortification. Armed only with a .45 caliber pistol, he killed the occupants and seized their crew-served weapon.[774]

Second Platoon encountered devastating sniper rounds both on their way up, once up the hill, running across a little open space.

> We lost quite a few men. I know I lost quite a few buddies. And those of us that made it got in the tree-line up there which we knocked out a gook bunker and stayed up there. It was a hillside, which we couldn't see too far over it. We kept getting fire.[775]

Quickly and alertly assessing the situation and, realizing that prompt action was required to rescue those already wounded and without regard for his own safety, Cpl Edward J. Bohannon ran to a bomb crater forward of the wounded Marines. He deliberately exposed himself to the enemy to draw the enemy snipers' fire to himself. He continued to draw their fire while simultaneously returning fire on the enemy. He remained in this dangerous position until all the wounded were safely evacuated.[776]

The Second Platoon now began to receive heavy small arms and automatic rifle fire from 3 enemy bunkers located across a 50-meter-wide clearing in a tree-line.

Quickly assessing the situation and disregarding his own safety, Sgt Stanley Charles Butterworth formed up his squad and charged across the clearing through intense enemy fire and successfully silenced all 3 enemy bunkers.

When the enemy attempted to organize a counterattack using a reverse slope defense, Sgts Partee and Butterworth organized their squads to deliver a high volume of accurate and suppressive fire, inflicting heavy enemy casualties and forcing them to flee. Their actions saved the lives of many Marines.[777]

The platoon began recovering their wounded and dashed off the hill amid a shower of exploding mortars. During this, Sgt Partee and another Marine were wounded by an exploding mortar round. Ignoring his own painful wounds, Sgt Partee carried his wounded comrade to a place of relative safety.[778]

Third Platoon, K/3/9, moved up Hill 881-South through a ravine. The vegetation was thick, but moveable, and began thinning out towards the top of the hill. The Marines of Third Platoon could see that the other platoons were pinned down by enemy fire, "..but we weren't receiving any fire of any kind from our movement up the hill. So we continued moving up on the hill, thinking that the VC hadn't spotted us yet and we might be able to get in behind them. That's when we underestimated them."[779]

The NVA force was prepared and lulled the unsuspecting Third Platoon into a trap.

First Squad veered off to the left with the Platoon Commander, 1Lt John Braxton Woodall, and immediately found itself in the midst of an interlocking enemy bunker system.

The initial burst of enemy fire felled the two point men who were closest to one of the hidden bunkers. Several attempts to reach the two critically wounded Marines were thwarted by a hail of deadly fire from the enemy positions.

Immediate medical attention was necessary to save their lives. With a total disregard for his own personal safety, 1Lt Woodall grabbed a rifle and placed accurate fire into the bunker. He then charged the bunker and killed both of its enemy occupants. From this position, he laid down covering fire enabling the two Marines to be carried to safety. As he covered their withdrawal, Lt Woodall was fatally wounded by an enemy sniper.[780]

---

[772] Comments of LCPL Terrence Walsh, HQMC Oral History Tape #1125.
[773] BSM file on Sgt Dale E. Partee.
[774] SSM file on LCPL Orie O. Linn.
[775] Comments of PFC Ronald E. Hines, HQMC Oral History Tape #1128.
[776] BSM file on Cpl Edward J. Bohannon. Cpl Bohannon was killed 21 May 1967 on a subsequent operation.
[777] BSM files on Sgt Stanley Charles Butterworth and Sgt Dale E. Partee.
[778] BSM file on Sgt Dale E. Partee.
[779] Comments of LCPL Larry W. Umstead, HQMC Oral History Tape #1127.
[780] SSM file on 1/Lt John Braxton Woodall. Note: Lt Woodall's platoon is not indicated on the award citation, but his action

There was a yell, "Corpsman Up!" A corpsman ran up to treat a wounded machine-gunner. He said the machine-gunner would be alright. But the wound was greater than at first apparent; the machine-gunner died. Then the corpsman was killed, and the whole squad wiped out.[781]

Then came the yell, "Get the other squad up there!" First Squad proceeded up the hill, but could not locate the point squad. Six Marines of First Squad made it to the top, but were pinned down as soon as they arrived.

> The VC had U-shaped bunkers in this one corner that we moved up on. And as soon as we reached it, they started throwing grenades and heavy volume of small arms fire in to us. They would come up out of the bunkers and just throw a grenade, duck back down, and as you were concentrating on the one bunker that the grenade came through, there would be another one come up from behind you, and throw another grenade. At the same time–we don't know what kind of machineguns it was, but it had to be pretty heavy caliber–it was coming in, just tearing up trees and anything that was in front of us.[782]

The Marines of First Squad attempted to retrieve the casualties of the point squad after they were finally located. "..when we finally found them, we noticed they were all dead–over in the left-hand corner. They walked right into the enemy bunkers that were almost in a 360, right on top of the hill."[783]

The remnants of Third Platoon managed to reach the bottom of Hill 881-South, regrouped, and about an hour later, charged back up the hill to recover their dead and wounded.[784]

LCPL Henry Rose, Jr., was checking the dog tags of the wounded and dead when a machine-gunner, McQuillan, said, "Rose, Rose, the VC got a mortar over there. I can see it. I can see it! Can you hit it with a LAW?"

Due to the large amount of canopy, Rose knew he could not. McQuillan fired at the enemy position with his machinegun, left-handed, from the off-hand. Then more mortars came and McQuillan was wounded in his back. "The mortar hit about ten feet in front of me and I did not get a wound, not a scratch on my body, but people behind me, all around me, got hit by this mortar. I didn't hear it when it came in. It was 60 mortars. They were–I never heard it at all."[785]

Third Platoon finally reached the bomb craters and a heavy tree-line where most of the dead and wounded were, and managed to move most of the wounded.

> But the dead we couldn't hardly even move to get at em–snipers and machineguns set up.[786]

Cpl Kenneth W. Shields, a Squad leader of First Squad, Third Platoon, K/3/9, repeatedly expos3ed himself to fire from enemy bunkers to determine their exact location. After alertly pinpointing the exact location of sev3eral fortified bunkers. Cpl Shields effectively directed his squad's fire and assisted in the destruction of the enemy emplacements. Observing several wounded Marines lying in an area exposed to hostile fire, he disregarded his own safety and maneuvered through concentrated enemy fire barely escaping death from accurate snipers to carry them to safety.[787]

Simultaneously, Cpl Walter Junior Washut spotted several dead and wounded Marines in an open area covered by heavy MG and rifle fire. With complete disregard for his own life, Cpl Washut maneuvered through the intense fire, making repeated trips until all the casualties were moved to safety.[788]

Cpl Washut was not alone in rescuing casualties. He observed LCPL Roland F. Wing leave his position of relative safety and carry a wounded Marine through the hostile enemy fire to a covered position. Then he returned and brought another wounded Marine to safety. While attempting a third rescue, he was felled, wounded by mortar fragments. But two Marines owe their lives to LCPL Wing.[789]

The rocket men fired their 3.5" and the machine-gunners fired for about 5 minutes without let-up. WP was called for a smoke screen. Third Platoon was able to withdraw.

37 dead Marine bodies had been abandoned on top of the hill; trying to retrieve them would have meant the loss of much additional life. "..from what I saw I didn't think it was really feasible to go up there and sacrifice other Marines to get appears to belong with the 3d Platoon.

---

[781] Comments of LCPL Henry Rose, Jr., HQMC Oral History Tape #1131.

[782] Comments of LCPL Larry W. Umstead, HQMC Oral History Tape #1127.

[783] Ibid.

[784] Comments of Cpl Kenneth W. Shields, HQMC Oral History Tape #1130.

[785] Comments of LCPL Henry Rose, Jr., HQMC Oral History Tape #1131.

[786] Comments of LCPL Larry W. Umstead, HQMC Oral History Tape #1127.

[787] BSM file on Cpl Kenneth W. Shields.

[788] SSM file on Cpl Walter Junior Washut. Cpl Washut was later killed by a burst of enemy fire on 20 May 1967 near Cam Lo while giving first aid.

[789] BSM file on LCPL Roland F. Wing.

dead Marines down off the hill, even though you are taught in basic training to never leave a dead Marine out in the field if at all possible."[790]

The battalion (M/3/3, M/3/9, and K/3/9) now disengaged from the area of heavy enemy contact, moved to XD 782445, and set up for the night. Evacuation of casualties was completed by 302155H. Final casualty figures for the 881-South battle of 30 Apr were 43 Marines killed–the highest number killed in a single day in all the years Americans were at Khe Sanh, 109 wounded (90 of which were medevaced). 125 NVA killed (confirmed) and another 85 (probable). Most of the casualties were suffered by M/3/3, the initially engaged unit. 33 Marine bodies, along with body parts, were left on Hill 881-South, recovered 022100H by 3/3 who evacuated the body parts in one bag.[791]

Capt David Rogers, an artillery officer accompanying Capt Bennett, CO of the M/3/3 CP, clustered together for a staff meeting "Some comments were made by those who had been on the hill during the battle. Staff Sergeant Meier described how Second Lieutenant Mitchell had been killed. "'He got his face shot off.' It was very upsetting. My feelings were so intense, I could barely sleep that night. Instead, I composed a poem in my mind. The next day, I wrote down the poem, either in a small green diary I had or on a sheet of paper–I cannot remember for sure. I dedicated it to the men who had died during the battle for Hill 881-South"[792]:

DEATH AT MY DOOR

Day is over as danger hastens
Young Marines at their battle stations
Instruments of war outline the sky
Means of death are standing by.

Can it be true on this high hill
Forces will clash only to kill?
Silence fills the near moonless night
Restless thoughts of a bloody fight.

Endless memories for those awake
Meaningful discussions experiences would make Though silent world in which we live
Permits only God's comfort to give.

Somewhere through the darkness creeping
A date with death is in the keeping Alone I sit and question why
Life itself, to be born to merely die?

01 MAY 1967: PREPARATION

Enemy forces retreated from Hill 881-South during the evening of 30 Apr/1 May, and Hill 881-South was blasted all day. "The planes just started from one end; they just went clear to the other end. And after they got done there, I just couldn't imagine that anything was alive up on top of that hill/"[793] There were over 130 2,000-pound bombs dropped as well as other assorted ordnance.[794]

---

[790] Comments of Capt David G. Rogers, HQMC Oral History Tape #3533. Leaving dead Marine bodies on the battlefield at Khe Sanh was something that was to occur in several subsequent battles there.
[791] SOP 021610Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #12.
[792] Castle, Albert and Rogers, David, " 'Death at My Door': A Story of Hill 881-South and the Poem it Inspired, in letter from David Rogers, 31 March 1997. [Khe Sanh microfilm archives pp. 97059-97063]. The article is also printed in US Dept. of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Public Affairs Office, Southwest Intercom, Nov. 1, 1989, pp. 1, 8-9 [Khe Sanh microfilm archives, pp. 51122-51125]. This poem is inscribed in the base of the Vietnam Memorial statue by Austin Deuel in San Antonio, Texas, dedicated 9 November 1986, a 15-foot bronze sculpture depicting Don Hossack, a radioman, treating a wounded Marine on the battlefield of Hill 881-South during the Battle of the Hills, Khe Sanh.
[793] Comments of Capt David G. Rogers, HQMC Oral History Tape #3533.
[794] FMFPAC 030336Z/May67, SITREP #764.

M/3/3 was relieved by F/2/3 which was lifted-in by helicopter to replace the casualty-depleted M/3/3. CG, 3dMarDiv CHOPd E/2/9 to 3/3 with advance elements beginning to arrive at 011400H and completing its movement by 1900H. One platoon had been taken from the company and heli-lifted to Hill 861 to preclude enemy reoccupation of or infiltration through that objective. M/3/3 departed at 1715H for Dong Ha by fixed wing.[795]

Early in the morning of 01 May, at 0745H, E/2/3 on the southern slope of Hill 881-North (at XD 782452) received 18-20 incoming mortar rounds from XD 799453 and XD 767454 resulting in 3 Marines killed, 16 wounded.

1stSgt Charles Patrinos, although wounded three times during the initial attack–in the leg, chest, and arm–refused evacuation. Disregarding his painful injuries, he organized evacuation of the wounded, moving around the area to locate them and direct medical assistance and evacuation. Refusing medical assistance himself, he continuously exposed himself to the intensive mortar barrage until all others were treated and evacuated.[796]

PFC John R. Meuse, a radio operator of the First Squad, Second Platoon, E/2/3, exposed himself to the enemy fire as he chased down, gave aid, and evacuated a wounded comrade who had been hit in the back and gone into shock, saving him from further injury and probably saving his life.[797]

HM3 Danny P. Williams, serving in Second Platoon, E/2/3, continuously exposed himself to the danger of incoming mortars with complete disregard for his own safety by moving about the company perimeter, giving aid to wounded Marines. Together with the senior corpsman, HM2 Kenneth F. Kleinschmidt, he attended the Forward Air Control Officer who was near death with chest wounds. They undoubtedly saved the officer's life since his lungs were full of blood.[798]

Because of this contact, plans to move E/2/3 to Objective #3, Hill 881-North, on 01 May were postponed, and further neutralization of the objective was planned.

H/2/3 was the battalion reserve as E/2/3 and G/2/3 continued movement towards Hill 881-North in very dense terrain with progress further slowed by pockets of enemy resistance. During this time, LtCol DeLong, frustrated that higher headquarters denied artillery and close air support as needed, "..adopted a direct fire solution. Captain Joe O'Brien, the assistant S-3, had been a 106 mm Recoilless Rifle Platoon Commander and was put in charge of two 106 RRs brought up from the base camp. In Joe's words:

> The high muzzle velocity, short time of flight, good accuracy, especially with the 50 cal spotting rifle, and mostly, the flat trajectory, was pleasing to the aviation community. There was no longer any argument about shooting and running air, not necessarily exactly together, but immediately before and after a run. ... This way we could mark a target for air and before the smoke dissipated the run was made. Further, after the air pulled out of a run, the NVA came out of their holes and went right back in or kept their heads down because of the HEP-T's (high explosive armor penetrating) we kept throwing at them."[799]

Meanwhile, G/2/3 fought the terrain between 881-South and 881-North, discovering an extensive bunker complex,[800] and then consolidated for the night. During the day, both battalions requested and received their "Mule" mounted 106 mm RR to be used against enemy bunkers and fortifications by direct fire. During 01 May, 1445 rounds of 105 mm and 155 mm were expended in support of the two battalions and 166 SORTIES were flown delivering 650,000 pounds of ordnance, including 130 2,000-pound bombs to ensure destruction of enemy bunkers.[801] This air support was the highest number of SORTIEs flown in support of one battalion in a single day since Operation STARLIGHT in August, 1965.[802]

02 MAY 1967: 881-SOUTH SEIZED

During the morning, F/2/3 moved up to 3/3's position at XD 782445 and, at 1120H, after a final heavy prep, MIKE and KILO Companies, 3/9, launched the assault of Hill 881S. Everything had changed. "It just didn't look the same anymore. There were no NVA, no trees, no nothing." [803]

---

[795] 3MAR AAR OPERATION KHE SANHi, p. 22.
[796] SSM file on 1/Sgt Charles Patrinos
[797] Navy Cross file on PC John R. Meuse.
[798] BSM file on HM3 Danny Paul Williams.
[799] Quoted in Madonna, Raymond, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh" (Draft 01 Oct 1997) in his letter of 02 March 1998.
[800] SOP 011145Z/Apr67, SITREP #5.
[801] 3MAR AAR KHE SANH, p. 23.
[802] FMFPAC, Operations of U.S. Marine Forces, Vietnam, April, 1967, p. 31.
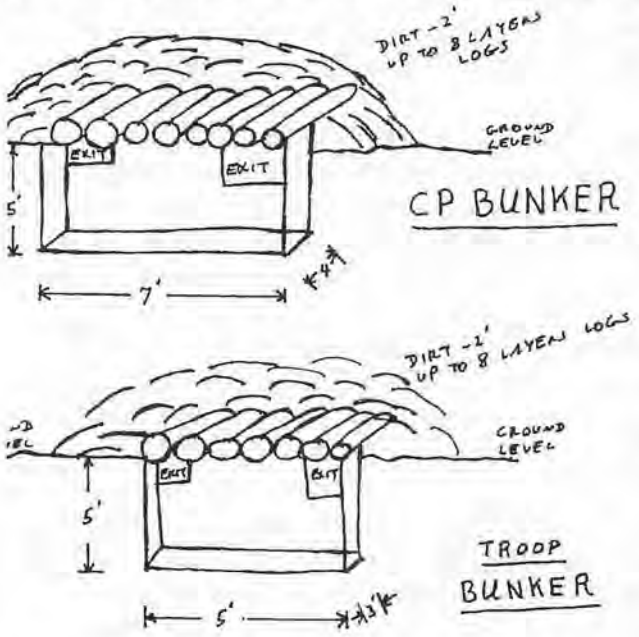
[803] Comments of LCPL William A. Culbreath, in Sgt Wisniewski, Dan, "Marines Find Hill 881 South Well Fortified," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:21 (26 May 1967) 8.

There was just bare ground up there. It took us about ten minutes to reach the summit of the hill, and as soon as we reached the top there was nothing but the smell of dead. We commenced to blow the bunkers and cache in the gear that was laying around and started getting our dead out.

At this time we noticed how well the NVA had set up the hill. there was no way that I would say that was humanly possible to get on that hill. They had every avenue of approach that was thinkable, covered. And their bunkers were constructed so well that even after that three days of air strikes and artillery, the bunkers were still standing.[804]

The bunkers utilized a roof made of at least five layers of logs and at least two feet of dirt. Most had two exits from which to fight, although the fighting was accomplished from spider holes near each bunker. There were over 200 bunkers on Hill 881S and, although 1000 and 2000-pound bombs with delayed fuses had good effect, bunkers ten meters from a 1000-pound crater were still intact. After two days of air strikes, 75 bunkers still remained.[805]



NVA BUNKERS ON HILL 881-SOUTH[809]

The battalion commander stepped in one bunker, and there was a big bomb crater right beside it, and inside the bunker you could tell it hadn't been dented.[806]

The enemy positions were well camouflaged, most of them located in the wood line. Most bunker logs were sawed and the scarcity of tree stumps in the area suggests that logs were transported in.

Hill 881-S was secured at 1420H and by 1500H, 27 Marine bodies killed there had been recovered.[807] One of the Marine KIAs brought aboard USS PRINCETON was booby-trapped with a grenade inserted into an open head wound and a string leading out of the wound. The device was discovered and disarmed before it could explode.[808]

After MIKE Company called over and said the entire objective had been secured, the battalion CP moved on over [at 1800] and this is one thing I know I'll never forget in my life seeing only one North Vietnamese body lying on the hill. One North Vietnamese body! And the rest of them were Marines. It was fairly obvious that the North Vietnamese had done a real good job just policing up the area–policing up their dead bodies and taking them on back towards Laos. No weapons, no ammunition, no bodies, just Marines.[810]

K/3/9 and M/3/9 established a defensive position on 881S and remained there a few more days, running local patrols with no contact. After Hill 881S was secured, FOXTROT Battery, 2/12, displaced three of their 105 mm howitzers to the top to provide added range should the battle move to the Laotian border, which at the time seemed likely. The only problem with this was that all the ammunition supply had to arrive by helicopter and if a major battle had developed o the west of Hill 881S, F Battery would have been hard-pressed to render required support.[811]

---

[804] Comments of LCPLO Larry W. Umstead, HQMC Oral History Tape #1127.
[805] Intelligence Section, AAR, appended to ltr of LtCol B.L. Spivey, Jr., to BGen E.H. Simmons, 18 June 1981.
[806] Comments of Capt David G. Rogers, HMC Oral History Tape #3533.
[807] SOP 021200Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #11.
[808] SOP 041751Z/May67. Booby trap was reported 031800H.
[809] Intelligence Section AAR, appended to ltr of LtCol B.L. Spivey, Jr., to BGen E.H. Simmons, 18 June 1981.
[810] Comments of Capt David G. Rogers, HQMC Oral History Tape #3533.
[811] Comments of MAJ Glenn Golden, HQMC Oral History Tape #2584.

03 MAY 1967: 881-NORTH

At 021015H, G/2/3 and E/2/3, from separate positions, commenced their movement toward Hill 881-North after heavy preparation–over 1400 rounds of artillery prep for G/2/3 alone. The enemy force in the Khe Sanh area was now estimated to be a regiment.[812]

At 1455H, 2Lt Andrew B. McFarlane's First Platoon, G/2/3, advanced up the narrow ridgeline which approached Hill 881-North from the northeast. The First Squad, led by Cpl Robert E. Torter, was assigned as assault squad, and moved on line to sweep through a wooded portion directly on top of this knoll.

(2Lt McFarlane enlisted in Nov, 1948 and was a PFC on 15 Sep 1950 with F/2/1 in the Inchon Harbor, Korea, landing. He went through Seoul, Pusan, and the Chosin Reservoir. By 1966, he was a First Sergeant. "I got commissioned–or demoted'–as I used to kid about, in May, 1966." He was now 37.[813] Lt Peter Hesser, along with Sam Marrone (2nd Plt Cdr) and Bruce Grismer (in Madonna's Company) were all Naval Academy graduates. McFarlane was the Weapons Plt Cdr. Hesser noted: "We worshipped the ground that guy walked on!"[814])

Cpl Torter organized his squad and maneuvered his squad toward a tree line (at XD 778460) and took no enemy fire, but spotted 2 NVA getting up and running. Cpl Torter led his squad in an aggressive attack on the fleeing enemy, pinpointing hidden weapons and destroying them. As they continued, they were suddenly taken under fire by heavy automatic weapons from their left front. The assault was temporarily halted and Cpl Torter told his men to reload their magazines. At this time, 2 more Marines were wounded, the First Team Leader and Torter's radioman,.

After reloading, they stood up to assault the position a second time, but the newly-issued M-16s malfunctioned. The squad took 5 KIA and 5 WIA and only had three functioning rifles.

Unable to communicate, Lt McFarlane moved his Second Squad forward to aid Cpl Torter pull back.

As the Second Squad advanced, Cpl Torter fearlessly left his covered position and with complete disregard for his own safety, moved to retrieve his wounded. Driven back time and again by the intense fire, Cpl Torter nevertheless managed to retrieve some of the wounded, but not all. Cpl Torter returned to the tree line where the other casualties were located, called out their names, but received no answer. He ceased his valiant efforts only after being directed to do so by the Company Commander.[815]

Following artillery and air strikes on the high ground where the MIAs were located, and augmented by Marines led by Sgt Harry W. Steere, Jr., he again advanced towards the knoll. Two Huey gunships arrived and placed fire around the knoll and adjoining high ground, taking sniper fire.[816]

Additional air support was not possible, however. Between 1600H and 1645H, extremely heavy rain squalls with 40 MPH winds, and three NBC[817] medevacs from 3/3 due to lightning, precluded further air support.

A Marine in a foxhole with Austin Deuel said, "Even God's against us!" which became the title of Deuel's art-work illustrated book on the Hill Battles.[818]

Due to the inclement weather and the late hour with darkness approaching, the Marines advanced with 13 men (including the Lt, the Platoon Sergeant, two squad leaders, and a radioman) to assault the knoll and attempt to retrieve the MIAs. The rain was very heavy, and there was a fog rolling off 881-North–forever a most mysterious and ominous place, shrouding the Marines as they advanced. Nor was there any artillery support: "There was a problem bringing in arty because of a discrepancy between the battery and the FO. The battery did not believe the FO could see what he saw, so arty wasn't called in on it either."[819]

Two of the MIAs were spotted in a small grassy clearing just out of the heavy grass going towards the tree line. As the Marines attempted to recover them, they took heavy automatic fire from the tree line from foxholes, ground-level, resulting in another Marine killed, the squad leader, and one wounded.

---

[812] FMFPAC, Operations of U.S. Marine Forces, Vietnam, April, 1967, p. 31.
[813] Conversation with Andrew McFarlane, 05 Feb 1994.
[814] Conversation with Peter Hesser, 05 June 1994.
[815] BSM file on Cpl Robert Edward Torter; Comments by Cpl Torter on HQMC Oral History Tape #949; SOP 021200Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #11.
[816] Comments of Sgt Harry W. Steere, Jr., HQMC Oral History Tape #949.
[817] Non Battle Casualties.
[818] Deuel;, Austin. Vietnam: Even God is Against Us, Escondido, Ca.: Impressions West, 1988, pp. 32-64.
[819] Comments by Sgt Harry W. Steere, Jr., HQMC Oral History Tape #949; SOP 021200Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #11.

We found that any movement at all towards these MIA was a hazardous risk because they had the ground so well covered in that area. We began to try to take our wounded back and in doing this we took two more WIAs from fragmentation ChiCom grenades which were being thrown at us.[820]

One of the favorite tactics of the NVA was to wound and then kill all those who came to rescue. At this time, the sky cleared some and the captain advised that we should withdraw and try to hit the area with arty and dislodge the enemy before we moved in. We withdrew, leaving the four MIAs.[821]

Due to the contacts and the violent story weather, it was deemed advisable to pull the 2/3 forward units back to more defensive terrain for the night. Artillery support for 02 May reached its peak for the operation at 2193 rounds fired in support of the two battalions. Air support was again heavy with 106 SORTIEs delivering 415,000 pounds of ordnance. In addition, three Arc Light strikes were dropped to the west of the battle area in support of the operation.[822]

After Hill 881-North was seized by E/2/3 under Captain Al Lyons and G/2/3 under Captain Jim Sheehan, "it was determined that the place was not good defensive terrain."[823]

03 MAY 1967: ATTACK ON ECHO

E/2/3 returned to its position. 2Lt James R. Cannon, Plt Cdr of E-2, recalls the unfolding terror:

> It became increasingly dark during our movement back to our previous position, and by the time we arrived, it was night. It was still raining. Everyone was tired and miserable and bone-chilling rain didn't help. We searched out the inner perimeter and, after doing so, each platoon took up their old positions. It was still raining hard. We put out our trip flares and claymore mines, put out our security, and established 50% security for the night: in each 2-man fighting hole, one man would be awake while one man slept.
>
> In my bunker were: Me, my platoon sergeant (SSgt Morningstar), and my radioman (LCPL Hovietz). It was 0400 in the morning. The rain had stopped and there was an eerie mist hovering over the hill. I had taken my boots off, wrung the water from my socks, and turned my boots upside down to allow them to drain. Everything was quiet.[824]

Sgt Billy Joe Like, a squad leader in E-2, walking the lines of the perimeter on the hill checking his squad positions, heard a noise to his front and yelled, "Who's out there?"

The answer was a burst of automatic fire that seriously wounded Sgt Like in his stomach. Though seriously and painfully wounded, Sgt Like remained standing and shouted, "We're being attacked!" By his action, he undoubtedly alerted his company ahead of time of a heavy enemy assault which if not triggered prematurely would without question have cost many more[825] Marines dead and wounded during the ensuing seven-hour battle.

Cannon continues:

> With that challenge, the entire northern half of the hill exploded. We were hit. I shouted to Morningstar, 'Let's go!' and sprang for the bunker entrance. As I did so, one of my Marines was blown in on top of me. He was badly wounded. I told Morningstar to take care of him, and told my radioman to come on. From my right front at about 2 o'clock, enemy machineguns were raking my section of the perimeter. At the same time, enemy mortars were falling over the entire hill. I could hear the machinegun near the first squad chattering in long bursts, and I knew this was not a probe.[826]

HM2 Clarence Walter Young, immediately left the safety of his position and raced about the lines giving aid to wounded Marines. His first patient was Sgt Like. The enemy had already penetrated his position. Disregarding the intense small arms fire and grenades, HM2 Young went to the aid of Sgt Like and treated him even though the enemy was within yards. While so

---

[820] Comments by Sgt Harry W. Steere, Jr., HQMC Oral History Tape #949.

[821] Ibid. The 4 MIA were recovered on 05 May at 1450H. "One Marine had his weapon between his legs with a rifle cleaning rod down his weapon. Also he had a pen knife in his hand. As we looked over he weapon, a M-16, we found that there was a cartridge in the chamber. After speaking to his squad leaders, this man had definitely been cleaning his weapon earlier and was always cleaning his weapon. It was due to a malfunction. All the Marines found there were shot through the head." [Comments by Cpl John P. Hays, HQMC Oral History Tape #949].

[822] 3MAR AAR OPERATION KHE SANH, p. 24.

[823] Madonna, Raymond, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh" (Draft 01 Oct 1997) in his letter of 02 March 1998.

[824] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," p. 6, sent with his letter of 14 Dec 1990.

[825] BSM file on Sgt Billy Joe Like.

[826] Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill Fights," p. 6.

doing, HM2 Young was wounded in both arms, but continued to treat the man and subsequently moved him to a place of relative safety. He then ran back into the darkness to help others until the pain of his wounds caused him to be evacuated.[827]

HM3 Danny P. Williams, who had helped save the FAC in the attack on 01 May, repeatedly exposed himself to the hostile fire to render medical aid to the seriously wounded Marines despite wounds in both of his arms.[828]

PFC John R. Meuse, radio operator of the First Squad, E-2, who had chased down a wounded man on May 1st, was seriously wounded during the initial burst of fire. When asked by Lt Cannon of his situation, he informed him he had been hit and gave the impression he was dying. He also said that his squad had been penetrated and their positions heavily overrun. Though mortally wounded, he refused to abandon his position and seek the medical help that could have saved his life. He instead remained on the radio for over an hour to inform his Company Commander, Capt Al Lyons, and his Platoon Commander, Lt Cannon, of the situation. This accurate information on the disposition and nature of the enemy force enabled them to make essential decisions on the employment of maneuvering elements and coordination of supporting arms necessary to repulse the enemy assault.[829]

Although painfully wounded in the initial moments of the assault, Sgt Ronald Edward Kolodziej, a squad leader of a MG team, quickly deployed his MG section into effective firing positions in front of the perimeter areas where he could do the most good. When his MG became inoperable, Sgt Kolodziej fearlessly exposed himself to heavy enemy fire to reach an adjacent infantry squad's position where he remained throughout the ensuing battle. Only after the enemy was repulsed and the company position consolidated, 6 hours later, did he accept to be medevaced.

LCPL James G. Hawley, a machine-gunner, was in a foxhole when he noticed SSgt Noakes wounded in a nearby foxhole. Cpl Hawley left his position to bring SSgt Noakes into his own foxhole and then began to move throughout the fire-swept area to retrieve other wounded and carry them to the CP.

When Sgt Powell was hit, LCPL Hawley went to get him, knowing that the enemy was waiting on him. Obtaining an operable MG, he courageously moved forward and began to deliver a heavy volume of fire on the NVA, successfully repelling the enemy assault.[830]

An engineer attached to E/2/3, LCPL William Thomas Womble, unhesitatingly rushed from his position, retrieved ammunition from the overrun positions, and proceeded to redistribute badly needed MG and 60 mm mortar ammo. With complete disregard for his own life, he continued to move through extreme automatic weapons fire until positions in critical need of ammo were resupplied.

Then, observing several Marines pinned down in the Second Platoon command bunker, he opened fire with his M-14 and single-handedly engaged the enemy, drawing fire upon himself so that the Marines in the bunker could gain fire superiority. As he daringly delivered a large volume of well-aimed, accurate fire into the enemy, he was instantly killed by heavy automatic weapons fire,.[831]

All during the battle, the Second Platoon commander, 2Lt James Cannon, repeatedly exposed himself to enemy fire as he moved from position to position, and skillfully directed the defense of his critical position. As he moved, he occasionally engaged in hand-to-hand combat killing enemy who had penetrated the perimeter. At one point, he was cut off from his CP. Cannon relates:

> Casualties were mounting. The situation was extremely bad. I called the command post and told the company commander[832] that I needed help, that we were under assault by a large force, and that all of my crew-served weapons had been knocked out. I also asked for my preplanned artillery concentrations to be fired and called for a flare ship. I was informed that I couldn't have both. I was somewhat pissed. I knew that the flare ships could fly above the maximum ordinance of artillery and I needed both. I asked for arty and waited. No arty. I screamed into my radio, 'Damn the arty, give me some light.' Another casualty. I told Hovietz to get him in the bunker with Morningstar.
>
> Capt Lyons told me he was sending a squad from the 1st Platoon up to help me. They never arrived. Another squad was dispatched to me. They too failed to arrive. I learned later that both squads were badly hit as they tried to reach my platoon.

---

[827] BSM file on HM2 Clarence Walter Young.
[828] BSM file on HM3 Danny Paul Williams.
[829] Navy Cross file on PFC John R. Meuse. PC Meuse was found about noon, still in his position, his radio hit but still working, his hand-set still in his hand, and 5 dead NVA in front of his position.
[830] BSM file on LCPL James Gordon Hawley.
[831] SSM file on LCPL William Thomas Womble.
[832] Capt. Al Lyons.

I made my way toward the company CP. I stopped at the XO's bunker.[833] He was gone. I thought, 'God, I hope he hasn't been captured.' I again radioed the Skipper. I asked him to send me a 3.5 rocket launcher team to knock out the enemy machinegun to my right front. I met the team near the XO's position and took them up just behind my second squad. From there, I had a good field of fire and a safe back-blast area. I was in the process of directing their fire when an explosion went off just in front of us. My rocket team was knocked out. I was still standing. For some ungodly reason, I thought nothing could touch me. I had put my radioman in the bunker with Morningstar to help with the wounded. As far as I knew, I was the only one alive up there except those that were in my bunker.

The enemy machinegun was still spitting out deadly fire. Trip flares were going off to my right front. I found no one alive in my first or second squads, yet there was movement all around me. My platoon was in trouble. I needed help.

I was able to reach the command post and inform my company commander of the situation. There I found my XO. I was glad he was alive. He would soon take over the company.

I informed my company commander that my entire first and second squads were wiped out, that there was only one friendly position up there, that of my bunker where Morningstar, Hovietz, and two wounded were. My third squad, although lightly engaged, was still intact and had suffered no casualties. They were my extreme right defensive squad.

Capt Lyons informed me that a platoon of FOXTROT Company was moving up from the rear to help block the penetration. I passed the word to keep my bunker protected, that it was occupied by friendly troops. Sometime, from somewhere, I grabbed a M-16 rifle, firing it until it jammed. I threw it down and picked up a M-14. I overheard reports that the NVA were wearing flak gear and Marine helmets and some were in trees shouting, 'Marine, you die.' They were hard to stop. Even point blank firing into their chests would not ensure they would be stopped. Some had to be beaten with entrenching tools or anything one could get his hands on. Consequently, there was much hand-to-hand combat that morning. We found later that several Marines had died trying to clear jams from their M-16s.

The Company Commander of E/2/3, Captain Lyons, was medevaced in bad shape, and Capt Raymond Madonna(H/2/3) was on the radio with the battalion commander (callsign PYGMALION SIX) and the new Echo Company Commander who was using his old call sign 'ECHO-5.' Madonna picked up the handset and said, 'Jack, you are now ECHO 6.' As I recall, Colonel DeLong told us that we had been counter-attacked by a NVA regiment."[834]

Cannon continues:

It wasn't long before 2nd Lt Carroll's platoon from FOXTROT Company arrived. I briefed him on the situation and cautioned him that my platoon sergeant and radioman, along with two wounded, were still in my bunker. I then moved forward with Carroll's platoon and, taking up a position beside a machine-gunner, began to direct his fire into the position of the enemy machinegun. He started firing but soon stopped. 'Damn jam,' I thought as I turned toward him. I then saw why he had stopped firing. Blood was running down the side of his face. I rolled him over toward me so the assistant gunner could take over.[835]

During the dark early morning hours of 0430 - 0630H when Second Platoon's positions were overrun, LCPL Frederick Gregory Monahan, a Bn S-2 Scout, constantly exposed himself as he fired and threw hand grenades. 1Lt Adinolfi later wrote: "His output of fire was that of ten men; his energy and downright stubbornness that of fifty of the enemy." This despite being wounded. With complete disregard for his own safety, he skillfully drew the enemy in towards him and then fearlessly locked with and destroyed them in hand-to-hand combat. His fire stopped the NVA advance, holding them at bay for the two hours before daybreak, when reinforcements of Co F arrived.[836]

Another Marine instrumental in helping to contain the enemy was Cpl William K. Downing, a member of a composite squad organized by the Company Commander and headed by 2Lt John L. Eller (3d Plt Cdr) to repel the advancing enemy force. Cpl Downing, second in command of this squad, moved his fire team in the direction of the enemy penetration and was wounded in the leg. The squad was able to halt the advance of the enemy. Someone yelled. Someone asked if he needed medical attention, and Cpl Downing shouted, "Don't come down here and help me; take care of the rest of the men first." He remained, courageously delivering continuous and effective fire on the enemy forces as the casualties were removed under [833] 1Lt Jack Adinolfi.

---

[834] Madonna, Raymond, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh" (Draft 01 Oct 1997) in his letter of 02 March 1998.
[835] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," pp. 7-8.
[836] Navy Cross file on LCPL Frederick Gregory Monahan.

his covering fire. Having ensured that the last wounded Marine was evacuated, he remained firing from his position. His body was found later with six dead N VA around his position.[837]

After a period of bitter fighting, the penetration was contained and means were sought to eliminate it.

Cannon: "It was now light. I heard the Hueys behind us. Relief was just a few rockets away. Smoke was thrown to mark our positions and to direct the Hueys' rockets north of us. One of the first rockets fired hit our Command Post, wounding our company commander and killing or wounding several other key personnel including our Forward Air Controller, Arty FO, and senior corpsman, Doc Kleinschmidt. Doc, knowing that I always carried a plastic tube with me, asked me to perform a tracheotomy should he stop breathing. I promised I would. He had been hit in the side of his left jaw."[838]

First Platoon of F/2/3 under the command of Lt John R. Schworm, was lifted in to counterattack the penetration. Arriving on the scene at 0745H, F-1 counterattacked the penetration at the point where it had penetrated the perimeter.

First Squad of Lt Schworm's F-1, led by Cpl Jerry K. Fite, was given the mission of holding the right flank and, if possible, to push the enemy back. Although suffering casualties, he continued to direct his men forward as they regained many bunkers then held by NVA soldiers. The fight continued well into the morning; progress was slow.

About 1100H, Cpl Fite had moved his men into a position where they were now drawing fire from a series of bunkers that covered both the front and the right flank. Every means possible was attempted to reduce these bunkers–rockets and LAWs were ineffective due to the thickness of vegetation. During repeated attempts, the squad sustained 2 casualties.

Automatic weapons fire spewed out of two mutually supporting bunkers. Realizing the seriousness of the situation and disregarding his own safety, LCPL Larry Hayden Weaver crawled forward and hurled several grenades into the nearest bunker. He was driven off by heavy fire from the MG in the other bunker, wounded in his shoulder and head, and returned to a nearby fighting hole. While he was in the fighting hole, the NVA threw several grenades into his position, but he advanced and assaulted the enemy bunker with his M-16, killing the 4 NVA inside.[839]

Cpl Fite also crawled forward and threw WP grenades into the lead bunker which was halting the advance. Although he killed 5 NVA in these daring attacks, they had little effect.

At this time, they learned that First Platoon of H/2/3 was approaching on the extreme right, moving northwest along the ridgeline XD 785450 - XD 778460, placing them at the rear of the troublesome bunkers. They requested that the bunkers be marked. Again Cpl Fite volunteered to crawl forward and successfully marked the target with smoke grenades. They were eventually destroyed.[840]

H/2/3 moved northwest to cut off the penetration from the rear between the positions held and Hill 881-North, flanking Hill 881-North to the right, hook around, and come in on the NVA from the north. Capt Madonna relates:

> Our cover fire was indirect fire from supporting artillery and direct 106 RR fire from the battalion CP directed by Capt O'Brien. The direct fire was over the heads of E Company but to the west of where H Co. was to come in on the NVA. We made this long, hot march in column of platoons with Elliott's First Platoon in the lead and the company command group behind them. As we were leaving the perimeter, the supporting 105 battery fired short and we took some casualties in the lead platoon. We stooped to medevac the wounded and continued the attack after a long delay. At this point we were well behind schedule and facing formidable jungle. I told Lt Elliott, point platoon commander, to move Indian-style as fast as they could but maintaining silence.
>
> With the command group in trace of Elliot's platoon, the march route took us through very dense jungle. Many times I had to resort to my bowie knife (not an issue item) to cut my way through the thick jungle. For long periods we lost sight of the sky in the stifling hot steam bath, grateful for the decision to abandon the heavy flak jackets. Though we were hot and thirsty, these seasoned Marines did not have to be told to conserve their water. There were no landing zones for resupply in this part of the jungle.
>
> As we moved around to the right under cover of the 106 RRs, other unit commanders asked that the fire be lifted as it was getting very close to friendly lines. Knowing that I needed that cover fire to move in unobserved on the NVA, I asked the Battalion S-3, Major Wayne Lemon, for operational control of Echo Company. He knew that I didn't know their full situation so it was denied. I wanted them to duck until Od Elliott's platoon took out the NVA but that would have made Echo vulnerable to an attack. The problem was that I couldn't see the NVA position clearly enough to warn Echo if they moved while Elliott's men were sneaking in.
>
> At this point, both Echo and Hotel were taking light shrapnel. I saw a knoll to the west from where I thought I could see both the NVA and the Echo lines. I moved my CP group to the high ground at the west of my company.

---

[837] SSM file on Cpl William K. Downing.
[838] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," pp. 8-9..
[839] SSM file on LCPL Larry Hayden Weaver.
[840] BSM file on Cpl Jerry Keith Fite; SOP 030605Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #14.

From here I could see E Co's northern liens–where my men were headed–in addition to the NVA positions. My CP group and I were exposed not far from the impact of the 106 rounds but it was the only place from which I could see to control the attack. I asked Jack Adinolfi (Echo 6) to button up in their holes as I could see both them and the NVA. I answered several calls to lift our 106 RR cover fire (from both my men and E Company) by pointing and that the CP group was the closest to the impact zone.

I recall Elliott's men going in with fixed bayonets, maybe a sign of the lack of trust we placed in the rifles but also a psychological move. The fighting was mean and dirty when the NVA discovered us at their back doors. Our attack was successful with Sgt Ransbottom of Lt Elliott's platoon taking out an NVA bunker line that had E Co pinned down. Sgt Ransbottom was subsequently awarded the Bronze Star for this effort. My troops took about six prisoners for which the Battalion Commander offered ten days in Bangkok to the lads. As I recall there were also about 25 enemy KIA. The key to the attack was stealth we were able to maintain helped by the 106 RR fire keeping everyone's head down. At 1500 we declared the bunker line secure and began to sweep the area. We reestablished E Company's perimeter but Hill 881-North was again unoccupied by our forces.[841]

Observing the assault of F/2/3 momentarily stopped, LCpl Daniel L. Critten, Jr., quickly and aggressively moved forward delivering effective fire on the enemy. His quick maneuver inspired the platoon to move onward while providing cover for evacuation of the casualties. In the ensuing action, he continued to deliver effective fire on the enemy until he fell seriously wounded in his chest and spine. His quick action saved the lives of many of his comrades and inspired his platoon to continue the assault.[842]

With complete disregard for his own safety, PFC Roy William Demille advanced through the hostile fire, crawled into one of the enemy bunkers and, armed only with a .45 pistol, killed 2 NVA. Observing that his unit's advance was still halted by the intense fire from another bunker twenty meters away, PFC Demille again exposed himself to enemy fire, jumped into the enemy-held bunker, and killed the NVA with his pistol..[843]

As a result of the F/2/3 counterattack, the enemy penetration was sealed. The enemy, however, had reoccupied some old bunkers in the area which had not yet been destroyed and fought tenaciously to the end, employing automatic weapons and hand grenades with deadly effect. So well emplaced was the enemy that initial attempts to destroy his positions were unsuccessful though heavy supporting arms fire had been brought to bear.[844]

Cannon:

> Until now, there had been no prisoners taken. It didn't surprise anyone. With the anger built up in our Marines and the tenacity with which the NVA fought, I didn't expect any. From somewhere–word came that "Pappy" Delong would give 20 days' R&R to the man that got him a prisoner. Within minutes, we had three. From these three, it was learned that another NVA division was on their way south to retake the hill complex.[845]

Two of the NVA POWs, Pvt Le Van Lan and Pvt La Huu Chau, reported they were members of the 325C Division and had entered South Vietnam on 13 March and arrived at Khe Sanh on 20 March. Pvt Lan stated that half the members of his regiment were only 16 years old. The third POW, Pvt Mai Thanh Tan, was unable to answer questions coherently because of his wounds.[846]

> I was on pins and needles. I wanted to reach my two squads that were still up there. I prayed that some were still alive but everyone knew there was no hope. Still, I wanted to pull them out. Firing was still going on. We continued to wait.
>
> Finally, I pulled my third squad leader back and inf0ormed him on what I was about to do. I told him to get the third squad on their bellies, that we were going to crawl back over the crest of the hill and take up the first and second squad's positions. I told him that upon reaching those positions we would watch ou for HOTEL and, should they approach, mark their positions with air panels. We would kill everything that wasn't Marine. We did just that.
>
> The fighting continued and at about 1130 that morning, 3 May 1967, we reached our forward-most positions. The look on Morningstar's face as he crawled out of his bunker was one of disbelief. After all, he

---

[841] Madonna, Raymond, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh" (Draft 01 Oct 1997) in his letter of 02 March 1998.
[842] BSM file on LCPL Daniel Lutallus Critten, Jr.
[843] SSM file on PFC Roy William Demille.
[844] 3MAR AAR KHE SANH, p. 25.
[845] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," p. 9.
[846] FMFPAC050245Z/May67, SITREP #766; FMFPAC 060345Z/May67, SITREP #767.

had been in the midst of hell for well over 7 hours and survived. He would die 2 months later by a single shot from a sniper's rifle.

I surveyed the first and second squad's positions. Only then did I realize the strength with which the enemy had attacked. There were bodies everywhere, mostly NVA. In front of my first and second squads lay about 80 NVA bodies. The remainder of the hill was literally strewn with bodies. There was no telling how many had been dragged off or died later from this fight. I could not tell black Marines from white Marines, they were all black.

I should have cried but I didn't. I didn't have time. I would cry later, and when I did, the tears would never completely stop. The memory of these Marines–so young, so brave–would stay with me forever.

The official body count of the dead NVA was 137, but we stacked 236 weapons. On top of the hill, just behind my bunker, I found a dead NVA. Strapped around his neck was a rectangular metal box. Half of the box contained a radio and radio equipment. The other half contained cooked rice. They had come to stay.

After we heli-lifted our dead and wounded out, I sat down with our First Sergeant, 'Top' Patrinos, who was sitting on a log near the XO's old position. It was then that I learned several of the men I thought were dead had been medevaced with wounds. In my platoon alone, I had 11 KIA and 17 WIA.[847]

04 MAY 1967: ATTACKED FROM WITHIN

At 040330H, Lang Vei Special Forces Camp (XD 795360) came under mortar attack that lasted 10 - 15 minutes followed by a ground attack through the village by an estimated enemy battalion[848] in a coordinated ground and mortar attack "characterized by swiftness, coordination, firepower, and a knowledge of the camp."[849] The attack was aided by several VC infiltrators who had posed as recruits. After killing the guards, the enemy force which had broken through the wire by bangalore torpedoes under the leadership of the VC infiltrators inside the camp[850] proceeded systematically to destroy the comm center, the command bunker and to eliminate the key personnel, including the CO and XO. Within minutes after breaching the wire, the command bunker in which Captain Crenshaw was sleeping was hit with an estimated anti-tank rocket. Inside the bunker at the time it was hit were the commander, Captain Crenshaw (the XO), the team Sgt (MSG Steptoe), and Captain Ledee. On trying to exit the bunker, Captain Crenshaw was killed by small arms fire, Captain Ledee was wounded with a concussion grenade, and MSG Steptoe was wounded in the left arm by two rounds small arms fire."[851] While the command bunker was being attacked or just before, 1/Lt Stallings (the XO) was on guard duty approximately twenty meters from the command bunker and killed by small arms fire at his guard post.[852]

The insider enemy agent, Dinh Nhon, a CIDG recruit, joined the force at Lang Vei and recruited Sam Boi. A third insider, A Loi, made a sketch of the camp, and a fourth, Sang Dinh, reported on supplies brought into the camp.

On the night of the attack, Nhon and Sam Boi killed the CIDG guards on the northwest positions of the camp, and then Nhon led the NVA force through the wire and remaining mine fields into the camp perimeter.[853]

The team leader of the Special Forces "A" Camp, Bill Steptoe, had just returned from a 30-man patrol north of the DMZ.

> We had been cut off a couple of times. We had a terrific fire-fight and almost got trapped. I made contact with the enemy outside of 881 and when I reported it to the Marine Colonel at Khe Sanh–we called him 'CYNTHIA'–I had already been in a running fight a week or better with the leading forces of the enemy. When I told him that there were division-size units there, he said, 'No,' that was full of it.[854]

Upon his return, there was a new CO, Capt William Anderson Crenshaw, an Afro-American, who had been in country 2 weeks. "I told him we were being followed. I'd been in contact all the way back."[855]

> I heard the first rounds come in. They came in at three o'clock. I was in the team house asleep on the lower bunk with Stallings in the team house. I ran down the team house steps, and mortars were coming in and rockets.

---

[847] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," pp. 9-10.
[848] COC 3dMarDiv 041751Z/May67, SITREP #18. The US Army After Action Report (appended to the Monthly Operational Summary (MOPSUM) for May, 1967, dated 26 May 1967, indicates the attack at 0315H
[849] A-101 MOPSUM, May, 1967, After Action Report.
[850] Shelby L. Stanton, Green Berets at War, Novato, Ca.: Presideo, 1985, p. 148.
[851] A-101 MOPSUM, May, 1967, After Action Report.
[852] Ibid.
[853] FMFPAC 300255Z/May67, SITREP #791. Nhon was subsequently captured 23 May 1967 and provided the information.
[854] Conversation with William Steptoe, 06 October 1988. The CO was Col James Reeder.
[855] Ibid.

As I went down the steps in my underwear, a man jumped up and fired at me and I dodged, and the bullets hit Stallings. He fell, hit in the chest. I shot at this man. I don't know whether I hit him. I kept going. Stallings was sprawled upside down. By that time there were skirmishes going on the fence line. Our own CIDG were responding. I went directly to the main bunker to make sure that the CO had notified our 'C' Detachment and Khe Sanh as to what was going on.

As I hit the main bunker, a mortar hit me, blew off a finger, and got me as I dove through the door. And once I was in there, I talked to Crenshaw who was standing up against the wall. I had my back to the bunker, and I told him that people were in the camp. At this time, a burst from a AK-47 got me in the left arm and shoulder. The same bullets that got me killed Crenshaw. He was a black man; so was Stallings [the XO].[856]

Initial requests for fire support by Khe Sanh were made about 0330H. However, the Comm Chief Sgt had no map available to him and no knowledge of pre-planned artillery concentrations. In addition, he had the only radio that was operational and frequently changed channels to talk with the two patrols still in the field. There was one patrol 2000 meters west of the camp. The concentration list had been destroyed in the command bunker and the Comm Chief could not observe or adjust any of the fires. The comm difficulties were resolved by employing a nearby SOG unit to relay, but there was never a clear picture of what was happening nor the locations or status of friendly troops in the area.

Up until first light, when Capt James Whitenack, the MACV District Advisor, raced down to Lang Vei from Khe Sanh Village in a jeep with his relief force of four men followed by Lt Nhe (the District Chief) and the remainder of the relief force. Bill Steptoe assumed he was the only American alive in the camp. When Capt Whitenack arrived, the enemy–"..were running around the perimeter throwing satchel charges in the bunkers. One of the sentries that was on the west machinegun position had been killed, so he couldn't give any warning. We found him; he had a knife in him."

The communications building had a straw roof and was set on fire. There were two guys in there. The operations Sergeant [Steptoe], when he said he was the only one left alive, what he saw was: all of a sudden the roof of the communications bunker collapse into the building, and he knew two guys were in there. That was it. But just before this happened, these two guys who were in there had crawled out of a ventilation air hole and laid in the trench. At that point the NVA/VC had overrun the camp and they were withdrawing and taking their dead with them.[857]

Bill Steptoe's wounds were such that he spent the next year hospitalized in Valley Forge, and was medically retired.[858]

Results of the attack were 2 USA KIA (the CO and XO), 2 WIA, 20 CIDG KIA, 34 CIDG WIA, 2 NVA KIA (conf).[859]

During the Lang Vei attack, the absence of unified command was painfully apparent. When Maj Golden arrived at Khe Sanh: "..there were several different groups within the KSCB. There were some super-secret personnel whose exact mission I never found out who kept wandering in and out of the base and in the hills. This Marine LtCol had no command authority over anyone except the Marines. This presented quite a problem to the Marrine LtCol. He couldn't control the movements of these people; they moved pretty much as they pleased. We never knew what they were doing. The answer to this problem is very simple, is a unified command when you have various services working together."[860]

During 4 May, 3/3 searched Hill 881-S and 2/3 oriented its companies for the final assault of Hill 881-N

Cpl Thomas Murl Jaggers was a "short-timer" in G/2/3, a southern-accept speaking Marine from Mississippi, and given the option of remaining aboard ship (2/3 was the SLF)[861] or to go on the operation. He chose to be in the field with his friends. "We had just gotten a resupply of food and Jaggers had been transferred out of a line company to Supply and took charge of all of the food from the helicopter. He filled his hole with cases of C-rations. I remember we were all sitting around his hole, and while we were talking and he was giving us our individual food some artillery rounds started falling in. They were our own rounds, and some of them landed short. Jaggers was killed and another guy lost his leg. Jaggers tried to get into his hole, but his hole was all filled-up with all these cases he'd put inside. So he laid on top of them as best he could, and he was decapitated.[862]

---

[856] Ibid.

[857] Conversation with James Whitenack, 06 Oct 1988.

[858] He died 7 Feb 1993 of a heart attack.

[859] 3MAR AAR KHE SANH, pp. 26-27. The Army After Action report appended to the May, 1967, MOPSUM, indicates 2 USSF KIA and 5 WIA, 22 CIDG KIA and 345 CIDG WIA with 39 CIDG MIA. The Lang Vei village chief, Houng Loc was also KIA. The manning of A-101 included 2 US Army officers and 11 enlisted, one VN SF officer (Ca|t Hai Van Tu) and ten enlisted VNSF, and 357 CIDG (30 of whom were recruits). The new CO of Det A-101 at Lang Vei was Capt Frank Willoughby, a former USMC non-commissioned officer. [Comments of Col. J.J. Padley, HMC Oral History Tape #1504].

[860] Comments of Maj G. Golden, HQMC Oral History Tape #2584.

[861] Special Landing Force.

[862] Interview of Robert Maras (G/2/3) by Dr. Peter C,. Rollins, undated.

At 1530H, F/2/3 and E/2/3 commenced an assault of Hill 881-North. Movement, however, was slow and methodical and only the southern edge of the objective was secured by nightfall.[863]

During the day, Co C/1/26 began arriving at 2350H by fixed wing from Phu Bai, completing its movement by 1610H,[864] as the first element of the 26th Marine Regiment arrived at Khe Sanh.

05 MAY 1967: HILL 881-NORTH CAPTURED

1Lt Adinolfi, acting CO of E/2/3, gathered his platoon commanders to issue the order to attack Hill 881N. The plan was for two companies, Echo and the relatively unscathed F Co (over 250 strong) to attack two companies abreast, F on the left, E on the right, following arty and air prep. F would pass through E's position and move to the designated assault position. E would follow in trace, tie in with the right side of F at the assault position and on order, seize, secure, and defend the right half of the objective. E-2, Lt Jim Cannon's platoon of 17 Marines, would be the point.

All went as planned, with arty dropped within 50 meters and moved as the assault continued. Jim Cannon recalls the assault:

> My platoon moved out as rapidly as possible, keeping generally abreast of the platoon on my right. Echo company was guide company and Foxtrot was to guide on us. Foxtrot company fell behind on my left and was slow maneuvering even though we met minimal resistance. To prevent any decrease in our momentum, Echo Company pushed forward up the ridgeline and over the crest and into a hasty defense when Foxtrot company arrived. My platoon set in from 11 to about 2 where we tied-in with the 1st or 3rd platoon. As Foxtrot arrived I showed the company commander where to tie in with the most leftward position, 881N was ours.[865]

2Lt Charles Paul Chritton led the Second Platoon, E/2/3, taking small arms fire as they assaulted. Lt Chritton immediately rushed to where his men were taking fire. The NVA were firing from a series of ten strongly constructed and mutually supported bunkers. Upon taking several casualties out of Third Squad, Lt Chritton maneuvered the platoon back down the slope and called and directed artillery and air strikes.

He then led his men back up the hill in a determined assault, exposing himself numerous times to enemy who were sometimes only 10 meters from him. While riflemen were crawling forward, Lt Chritton ran upright back and forth laterally, giving commands and words of encouragement. He took time to give the wounded some encouraging words. At one point, it seemed that he was pinned down, and then a grenade landed at his side. Somehow he managed to spring out of the casualty radius of the grenade, avoid being struck by automatic fire, and move on to where he was needed. The bunkers were cleared; the position occupied.[866] Results of the contact were five Marines wounded and three NVA probably killed.

At 1445H, Hill 881-North was secured. Lt Jack Adinolfi observed the results of the heavy bombardment: "It stunk. The smell of death was everywhere. There is no doubt those 1,000 and 2,000-pound bombs took a terrible toll of them. We found shreds of clothing, bits and pieces, but nothing you could put together."[867]

At 052050H, E/2/3 at XD 777546 and F/2/3 at XD 773459 received 92 rounds incoming 82mm mortars equally divided between the two companies and also sighted 5 lights approx. 800 meters northwest. Counter-mortar fire was fired on the target with 4.2" mortars and artillery; the lights were extinguished and the mortars ceased. One Marine was killed and six wounded.[868]

Both battalions used 6-9 May to conduct platoon-sized patrols with particular emphasis on covering the area to the west of Hills 881S and 881N. Numerous enemy positions were located.

The determination of the individual Marine is reflected in the actions of 1st Sergeant Charles Patrinos of E/2/3. Wounded in his leg, chest, and arm on 1 May, the Top refused medical evacuation, was active during the contact on 03 May, and still refused evacuation even though his wounds were now becoming infected. He remained with the company until May 5 when he was finally ordered to be evacuated.[869]

Capt Raymond Madonna recalls sweeping the area west of the Echo position:

---

[863] 3MAR AAR KHE SANH, p. 27

[864] SOP 041045Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #19; 3dMarDiv 041702Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #19.

[865] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," pp. 12, 13.

[866] BSM file on 2/Lt Charles Paul Chritton.

[867] Reuters News Release, 6 MaY 1967.

[868] SOP 051715Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #24.

[869] SSM file on 1/Sgt Charles Patrinos.

The stench was terrible and we found many dead NVA. Our progress was very slow due to the need to gather intelligence and look for booby traps. One of the Marines brought me a NVA 'star' belt buckle signifying an officer of NCO. He had collected several of them but this one had writing on the back. I told him I would get it back to him but he told me keep it as a souvenir. Marines are great. Seeing the buckle was stamped with the words '309-1965' in English, I notified the Battalion Intelligence Officer, Captain Vince Smith. He was more interested in the homemade inscriptions 'MANH,; 'G3,' and 'K4.' He asked me to send it back to him on the next helicopter. Knowing we would never see the buckle again, I offered to draw a picture of it instead. He said to hold it. Later in the day, I was startled to hear of someone moving in the no-man's land between our position and the battalion perimeter. We went to full alert. To my surprise, it was Captain Vince Smith and his radio operator, all alone, strolling out to see this wondrous piece of intelligence. After he examined it, I insisted he ride a helo back."[870]

THE BATTLE WON

LTGEN Victor H. Krulak, CG, FMFPAC, saw Khe Sanh as another Dien Bien Phu: "Because of its critical nature, the destruction of the base and forces at Khe Sanh probably has been an enemy objective of long standing. Enemy determination to destroy Khe Sanh or to attack it as a means of attracting US/ARVN forces into a Dien Bien Phu type situation has been whetted by the fact that Khe Sanh is isolated in an area that favors the enemy in terms of terrain and weather."[871]

The key terrain occupied and the enemy routed, the battle had been won, won by the determination and heroism of the individual Marine trooper. Capt Rogers noted:

> As far as the individual Marine goes, I think I learned to respect the individual Marine–the 18, 19 year old, 20 year old, more in this one particular battle than any other time that I've been in the Marine Corps. He was given a job; he went up in the face of danger, in the face of just being blown away, more or less, and he went up and did his job. To see the faces of the marines dragging back their dead buddies, their wounded buddies, you could see how close the Marines really were with each other. It was true brotherhood, and I was really proud at the conduct of the Marines.[872]

09 MAY 1967: LURKING DEATH

Major battles may be won and decisive victories achieved, but there nevertheless remain the "mopping-up" operations that are just as deadly as the encounter with death in the decisive battles. The Angel of Death continued to lurk at Khe Sanh

On 09 May 1967, E/2/3 patrolled to the west of Hill 881-N (near XD 747473). Two platoons were moving along a trail hat was fairly well-used along a stream and then pulled off the trail to proceed up the slope of Hill 778.

F-3, running point, ran into what was at first assumed to be the point of a squad. Then F/2/3 began to receive automatic weapons fire from three or four directions. Since it was fairly light, they continued to maneuver, one squad on line. The fire rapidly grew in intensity and the Marines pulled off onto higher ground, taking heavy casualties. Cpl James H. Ward had a tail fin of one of his 3.5" rockets hit that he was holding in his hand. He threw the 3.5 launcher to the ground, grabbed a rifle, and shot at some NVA he spotted coming up over a ridgeline. He shot one who "spun in the air," and then picked off enemy one by one.[873]

Six feet from Cpl Ward lay the wounded FAC, Lt Harris, with a badly shattered leg. Four feet away, behind a rock, LCPL Simpson received a ricocheted round in his arm and leg. A couple of enemy bullets landed between Cpl Ward's legs, three inches from him. Cpl Ward began to drag Lt Harris to a safe place behind a rock where he applied a battle dressing.[874]

The Platoon Commander, Lt Carroll, had been hit in both legs and an arm. SSgt Watts was hit in his shoulder and mouth. Cpl McKeen was hit in his chest and both lungs. There was only one Corpsman remaining to provide medical help.[875]

Cannon: "They first started off with messages such as 'PIGMALLION 6 this is FOXTROT 6, we have encountered snipers. We have 1 Kangaroo (KIA) and 3 Wolves (WIA).' In no time, it became: 'We have 3 Kangaroos and 9 Wolves.' Their problems were becoming larger with every passing moment."[876]

---

[870] Madonna, Raymond, "Hotel 2/3 in the Hill Battles of Khe Sanh" (Draft 01 Oct 1997) in his letter of 02 March 1998.
[871] FMFPAC 070105Z/May67, SITREP #768.
[872] Comments of Capt Rogers, HQMC Oral History Tape #3533.
[873] Comments of Cpl James H. Ward, HQMC Oral History Tape #997.
[874] Ibid.
[875] Ibid.
[876] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," p. 14.

LtCol Earl R. DeLong, CO of 2/3, immediately ordered E/2/3 to reinforce Co F. 1Lt John F. Adinolfi, acting XO of E/2/3, called in arty behind the enemy and then personally led his company with a platoon attached from Co H down into the ravine to evacuate the dead and wounded of Co F.

Cannon:

As we came to the base of the hill to our front, I deployed my platoon for the assault and up the hill we went. Upon reaching the top, the platoon went into a hasty defense. I dropped to my belly and took out my field glasses to see if I could determine what was going on with Foxtrot Company.

What I saw horrified me. The North Vietnamese were crawling over men of Foxtrot Company and stabbing what appeared to me as being wounded Marines. Foxtrot Company had been drawn into a saddle along a small ridgeline and couldn't move. I saw the NVA attempt to drag off what looked like a wounded Marine.

I grabbed a M-60 machinegun and determined that a clump of bushes, which appeared to me to be the closest the NVA had got to Foxtrot Company, would be my reference point. I determined that all left of those bushes were dead Marines and NVA. I opened up with a long burst of fire, raking the ridgeline from the bushes to the tree line at the left end of the finger. The range was about 1100 meters. I turned and told the weapons platoon sergeant to take the other gun, watch my tracers, and rake the finger from the bushes to the left. Our fire was right on target.

Meanwhile, my company commander had come up behind me. He shouted, 'Get off the gun, Cannon!' 'Go to hell,' I replied and kept firing. I meant no disrespect. He had not seen what I had. I knew what I was doing.

After driving the NVA off, I turned the gun over to the gunner with instructions to keep the NVA off that finger. 1Lt Adinolfi was on the radio with battalion. As soon as the radio conversation was over, Adinolfi turned to me and said, 'Jim, you're a leader, go pull them out.' I answered, 'You're a commander, give me some support.'

1Lt Adinolfi informed me that Foxtrot 6 was hit and that the entire company was pinned down and couldn't move. He said that LtCol Delong had told him, 'Send Cannon down there.'

I turned to Frank Izenour, the 1st Platoon Commander, and asked him to guide me to the base of the finger where the bushes I used as a reference point were. I always carried a pen flare in my helmet cover band. I would pop one of these every few minutes and Frank could adjust me.

We moved out. We knew it would be rough going and that time was of the essence. Somewhere along the line we had inherited a combat photographer, a Corporal, and before we had moved out, he asked if he could go with us. I could use all the help I could get. He grabbed a rifle from somewhere and left his camera behind.

Suddenly, shots rang out to my front. My point had made enemy contact. I saw my point man as I moved forward. He had two additional rifles slung over his shoulder. They were enemy rifles. We didn't have time to chat about what had taken place but apparently he had run into two un-alert NVA and had killed them both. He pointed to his right. There, as far as I could see, were freshly dug graves [and] bloody web gear lay all about.[877]

I informed Frank [Izenour] that I would be securing the high ground to Foxtrot's rear. At the top, I found 2Lt Carroll and three other Marines. Of the four, two had been wounded and two had not. It was payback time. I was glad that I could help him and Foxtrot Company. He had helped me so much just six days earlier.

Meanwhile, back on Hill 803, where I had just been, the battalion commander had flown in by chopper with a skeleton staff, a 106 RR section, and another 81 mm mortar section. They, too, were under fire from a hill to the north of them. I again asked for support but was denied at the time because they were under fire.

It was time to act. One fire team and one machine-gun, along with the combat photographer, would lay down a base of fire over the heads of us and Foxtrot. Two fire teams would assault through Foxtrot. As the assaulting fire teams passed through Foxtrot, the base of fire would shift their fire from the finger to the edge of the tree-line. They would cease fire on a red smoke and join us by hand and arm signal. I would be with the assaulting fire teams.

We moved out and the base of fire opened up over our heads. As we passed through Foxtrot, I overheard a big black Marine ask, 'Who was that — on the machine-gun?' I asked as I passed him, 'Why?' He replied, 'He saved our asses.' I felt relieved. I believe he was a gunnery sergeant.

---

[877] 203 enemy graves were discovered at XD 750463.

We passed through Foxtrot Company and opened up with our assault fire. My Marines began to run, firing and screaming across the northern finger... [The position was secured]. We were all to be heli-lifted back to Hill 881N.[878]

Co F had 24 KIA and 19 WIA.[879]

A MYSTERY

The official Joint Casualty Resolution Center report[880] states that on 09 May 1967, PVT Robert J. Todd of F/2/3 was "..struck in the head and back by small arms fire while near Huong Hoa Village in the vicinity of coordinates XD 8602375. The tactical situation prevented other members of his unit from reaching him." An attached map correctly identifies these coordinates as approx. 1000 meters ESE of KS ville. Was he at this location–in Khe Sanh Village? Obviously, he was more probably involved with the action of F/2/3 as reflected in the message to his parents: "He sustained missile wounds to the head and back from rifle fire while on an operation ... On 9 May 1967, Robert's unit became engaged in heavy contact with hostile forces. His unit broke contact and due to the tactical situation was forced to leave the area." Subsequent attempts by MIA investigators to determine graves near Khe Sanh Village in an attempt to locate Todd's remains might possibly be "misdirected!"

MESSAGE FROM COLONEL LANIGAN[881]

P 120310Z MAY 67
FM CO THIRD MARINES
TO SOP THIRD MARDIV/III MAF REP
ZEN;SECOND BN THIRD MARINES
ZEN/THIRD BN THIRD MARINES
ZEN/B CO FIRST BN NINTH MARINES
ZEN/E CO SECOND BN NINTH MARINES
ZEN/M CO THIRD BN NINTH MARINES
ZEN/K CO TIRD BN NINTH MARINES
ZEN/C CO FIRST BN TWENTY SIXTH MARINES
ZEN/KHE SANH TIGERHOUND SITE 23RD TASS APO 96337
ZEN/DET 13 15TH AERIAL PORT SQDN
BT
UNCLAS
BATTLE OF KHE SANH

1. THE BATTLE OF THE KHE SANH WILL CERTAINLY GO DOWN IN ANNALS AS ONE OF THER MOST FIERCE IN MARINE HISTORY. OVER THE PAST SIXTEEN DAYS I HAVE MARVELLED AT AND ADMIRED THE COURAGE OF OUR INDIVIDUAL MARINES AND THE TEAM WORK AND DETERMINATION OF OUR UNITS FROM FIRE TEAMS TO BATTALIONS.

2. A VERY DETERMINED AND WELL DISCIPLINED ENEMY FORCE HAS BEEN DEFEATED BY THE ACTIONS OF EVERY MARINE AND TOHER MEMBERS OF OUR ARMED FORCES WHO PARTICIPATED IN THIS ACTION. THIS VICTORY WAS GAINED BY THE TEAM WORK OF ALL THE SERVICES AND THE MOST COMPLETELY INTEGRATED INTER-SERVICE AIR-GROUND CLOSE SUPPORT TEAM I HAVE EVER WITNESSED. WE CAN ALL BE THANKFUL WE ARE MEMBERS OF SUCH A FINE TEAM.

---

[878] James Cannon, "The Khe Sanh Hill fights," pp. 14-16, passim.
[879] SOP 0911235Z/May67, KHE SANH SPECIAL SITREP #39; SOP 091420Z/May67, Plans Summary.
[880] Case No. 0675-0-01. Library of Congress MIA microfilm roll #142, Folder #29, DD Form 1300, 12 Jun 67, on TOTT, Robert Jacy, and misc. documents in the file, including a map showing the location of the loss at Huong Hoa Village. Undoubtedly, the report (prepared at HQMC in Washington, D.C.) was prepared looking at the map sheet titled "Huong Hoa," and subseuent researchers assumed it was the "fictitious" Huong Hoa village rather than the general area. The coordinates refer to the "Old French Fort. (XD 860375, while the action of F/2/3 occurred at XD 747473 and later, at night positions, at XD 750463. [3d MarDiv COC 091853Z/May67, Khe Sanh Special SITREP #39; 3d Mar AAR, The Battle of Khe Sanh, Encl (1), p. 31].
[881] Sent in letter from Michael J. Hughes 29 March 1995.

3. IF THERE IS ONE CONSOLATION IN FIGHTING A BATTLE, IT IS KNOWING THAT THE MARINE IN THE FRONT LINES IS BEING PROPERLY LED. NO COMMANDER COULD ASK FOR FINER LEADERSHIP THAN HAS BEEN EXHIBITED BY THE SECOND BN THIRD MARINES AND THE THIRD BN THIRD MARINES.

4. MAY GOD BLESS ALL OF YOU AND MAY HE WATCH OVER OUR COMRADES WHO DIED OR WERE WOUNDED IN GAINING THIS VICTORY. GOD SPEED.

COL. J. F. LANIGAN, COMMANDING OFFICER, THIRD MARINE REGIMENT
BT

THE NUMBERS[882]

Casualties: USMC: 168 KIA, 443 WIA, 2 MIA. NVA: 807 KIA (confirmed), 611 KIA (probable), 6 POW, 1 returnee.

Support: 23,472 artillery rounds, 1915 tons of air-delivered ordnance in 1170 SORTIEs, and 23 Arc Lights in support of the battle. (The aerial ordnance broke down into: 611,500 pounds napalm, 3,218,500 pounds explosives, 1230 250-pound bombs, 3318 500-pound bombs, 380 750-pound bombs, 247 1000-pound bombs, 387 2000-pound bombs).

During the battle, there were 35 planes per day using the airstrip. Approx. 200,000 pounds of supplies were delivered per day, moved by Sgt James T. Yuspa and his two forklift drivers–actually the figure of 200,000 is misleading since the same cargo was handled 4 or 5 times before it was passed to someone else.

"Old Rugged Cross" erected on Hill 861 by the 1/26 Chaplain, David Meschke (departed Khe Sanh in July, 1967), erected in memory of Marines who lost their lives during the Battle of the Hills. Just above the cross is Hill 950, and to its right, Hill 1015. Photo taken by Ray W. Stubbe on 28 July 1967. Official USMC photo A193254.

Marines on Hill 881-South, digging bunkers or deeper trenches during the following months, occasionally unearthed a M-16, AK-47, a human skull, or simply and suddenly were engulfed in a belch from the earth of odor of decayed human bodies. SFC James Perry, the Medic of MACV Advisory Team #4 in Khe Sanh village, noted, "They found later that they [the NVA] had a hospital and mess-hall and some other things under both those mountains, and the blasting just caved-in the roof. Most have buried hundreds inside. They estimated that as high as three or four thousand might have been in that complex network of tunnels inside those mountains."[883]

[882] 3d Mar, AAR, BATTLE OF KHE SANH, SEARCH AND DESTROY, 09 June 1967., pp. 3, 5, 6, 35, 36; "Khe Sanh Sergeant Has Many Talents," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:23 (9 June 1967)10.

On Wednesday, 02 August 1967, Captain John Raymond, the CO of A/1/26 on Hill 881-South at the time, mentioned a visit by Major General Louis Metzger, CG of Third Marine Division a few days earlier in which he discovered several human skulls the Marines had put on stakes which they had dug-up while digging bunkers and trenches. "The General looked at Colonel Padley; Padley looked at Wilkinson, Wilkinson looked at me. there was no place for me to look but up in the air. I think I lost some points there."[884]

"HOME FROM THE WOODS"

By Bill Stross

Dedicated to the Staff and Men of the Stress Disorder Treatment Unit, North Chicago V.A. Medical Center

[Although a poem, the following is printed as originally handed out during an open house at the SDTU, 29 March 1989. Bill was a Marine with G/2/3 during the Hill Fights of 1967]]

As I stood in the hangar deck with its empty spaces that could of held 5,000 strong men – only a wooden crate stood, full of broken equipment, broken dreams, and blood-stained we b gear, staring out at me.

All that was left of untold numbers of brown haired, sandy haired, bright eyes innocent young – Oh so young warriors.

I felt compelled to touch, and turn over, and hold every piece of metal, every piece of material, trying to feel, trying to bring back, trying to remember the faces, the smiles, the names of the men – the boys, that only a few days before had been my friends, my comrades, my buddies. My point man, my radio man, my tail-end Charlie.

I tried to remember what had brought me to this hollow wooden graveyard so cold, with the sweet smell of death still surrounding it. I was numb, I was going back, almost running into the hills – the hills called Khe Sanh. Somewhere else called the foothills of Ohio, or Kentucky, or Pennsylvania, but remember, come back, you are not home. Remember you are in the mountains, the mountains of Khe Sanh, of the country of Vietnam, of the Province of Quang Tri.

This is the season for walking through the woods, dog at my side, rifle at the ready. Keen eyes, alert senses, await the rabbit or squirrel soon to cross my path.

Remember – remember, this is the season for walking in the woods, but these are not the familiar warm woods of Ohio, Kentucky, and Pennsylvania. These are the woods and trails of the mountains, the mountains called Khe Sanh.

My rifle is at the ready, my senses are keener and sharper than they have ever been. For no squirrel nor rabbit will this day grace my game bag.

For today we are after bigger game, game that is wiser and knows the ways of these woods, the hills called Khe Sanh. they live here, they have lived here for untold thousands of years. these are the men of the woods, the woods called Khe Sanh.

We are the intruder, we are the trespasser, we don't belong, not in these hills, these hills called Khe Sanh.

I stopped by the local grain and feed store to buy my hunting license for a mere fee, for a mere fee – I could be master of the woods I walked.

But remember – remember, these are the woods, the woods of Khe Sanh, and no license has been issued. You are here, but not invited. You are here, but not wanted. You are here and they know, they know, these men, these men of Khe Sanh.

They watch, and they wait, these men – Oh so patiently they wait. They have waited for decades, before I was born, before my father was born. They wait, these men, these men of Khe Sanh.

As I run and hide behind a tree, I lose my breath, in the woods, the woods of Ohio. I can hear my heart pounding, pounding so loud that my friends can hear it, and I will be found, and it will be my turn to find them. But remember – remember, these are not the woods of Ohio, these are the woods, the woods of Khe Sanh.

My heart is still beating, harder, faster. These woods with the silent eyes of the owners – watching, waiting, silently, patiently.

We move, we stop, we look, every head in a different direction, every sense smelling, breathing, a different smell, a different feeling.

---

[883] Conversation with James Perry, 28 May 1986.

[884] Stubbe, Ray W., Diary entry for Wednesday, 02 August 1967, Khe Sanh Chaplain [unpublished manuscript], 01 April 1970, p. 95.

We are getting close. The woods are quiet now, the only sound is the perspiration as it runs off the tips of the noses, on the forest floor, and splashes like a giant waterfall.

These young men – the prides of their families.

Fresh from the Prom, and remember the smell of her hair and the softness of her cheek, the warmth of her face, the smell that arose from her ivory neck.

Come back, come back, remember – remember, you are in the woods, the woods of Khe Sanh. We are through the field and valley, and into a tree-line. We stop, almost in unison

I feel the tension – should we move on line, should we recon by fire, should we throw grenades?

Oh God! What should I do?

I look to my left and then to my right. Joe and Ray nod, and John and Bill smile. Yes it is my decision –they trust me and why not, I have led them through many valleys, and many tree-lines, through untold streams and hills.

They trust me, they believe in me.

We move closer, the signal is given, the decision has been made, in the time it would take to drop a cigarette to the ground. They were all down, all these fine young men, bloodied and twisted, life being pulled and jerked from their still not grown bodies.

I hear the dog barking and he is excited, a clean shot, he should be running back, through the woods, these warm, pleasant woods of Ohio.

But remember – try to remember, these are the woods, the woods of Khe Sanh.

Their patience and silence had paid off, for the men of the woods, the woods of Khe Sanh.

Twelve young, shiny-faced, unassuming men – boys from the land, the lands of Ohio, Kentucky, and Pennsylvania, and everywhere the Stars and Stripes fly.

I pulled myself up on my elbow, can it be, these men of Khe Sanh, with their shoes made of old tires and hats of straw, have beaten and won over our shiny new rifles, our helmets of steel, and our flak jackets of the bullet-proof type.

I am getting tired now, I feel the life running from my body, nourishing the floor of this forest, these woods, these woods of Khe Sanh.

I call out names, but no one answers.

Ollie, Ollie in free, can't you guys find me? I call out the names but these are not the names of my childhood days.

These are the names of my comrades, lost – never to speak my name again, nor I theirs.

I am drifting now, all is quiet and peaceful. I have done my best. I am due for a rest.

My men and I have come home, home to the woods, the woods of Ohio.

KHE SANH GLOSSARY

A-1	Douglas Skyraider, a propeller-driven, single engine attack plane. Span 50'9", length 38'10", weight empty 10,550 lb. , gross 25,000 lb. Performance: max. speed 318 MPH, cruising speed 188 MPH, range up to 3,000 miles with external tanks. capable of carrying up to 8,000 pounds of external ordnance;
A-1	Strong point at YD 267755
A-2	Strong Point at YD 215742
A-3`	Strong Point at YD 169716
A-4	Strong Point at YD 116701; Douglas Sky Hawk, a single-seat, jet aircraft specially designed to deliver weapons on targets completely obscured by weather or darkness.
A4	Douglas Skyhawk single engine turbo-jet with a single crew member. Max speed 675 MPH. Armament: two 20mm MK 12 cannon each with 200 rounds, two 30mm DEFA 553 each with 150 rounds, pylons under fuselage and wings for a total ordnance load of 5,000 lb.
A6A	Gruman Intruder, a twin-jet, twin-seat, attack aircraft specially designed to deliver weapons on targets completely obscured by weather or darkness. Max speed 625 MPH at height, 599 MPH at sea level. Service ceiling 41,660 ft., ferry range 3,225 miles. Armament: 5 stores locations each rated at 3,600 lb. with max. load of 15,000 lb. Typical load 30 500-lb. bombs
AA	Anti-Aircraft
AAA	Anti-Aircraft Artillery
AAR	After Action Report
AB	Air Base

ABCCC	Air Force Airborne Battlefield Command and Control Center
ABLE MABLE	Limited reconnaissance by Air Force RF-101 aircraft. Flew numerous photo missions over Khe Sanh siege
ABN	Airborne
ABORTED	Cessation of a mission (also "scrubbed")
AC-47	Douglas C-47 Skytrain, fixed-wing transport modified with General Electric SUU-11A 7.62mm miniguns and used as a gunship. Also called "Puff the Magic Dragon"
ACD	I Air Cavalry Division
ACTIVATOR	Radio call-sign for CAC OSCAR
ACTUAL	The person, not just his clerk or representative of the office, usually refers to the Commanding Officer ("the 6-Actual") or the operations officer ("the 3 Actual")
ACW	Air Commando Wing (USAF)
AD	Air Division (USAF)
ADC	Assistant Division Commander
ADF	Automatic Direction Finder; automatically and continuously measures the direction of the received signal
ADSID	Air-Delivered Seismic Intrusion Device
AF	Air Force
AFB	Air Force Base
AFRTS	Armed Forces Radio/Television Station (Saigon)
AGL	Above Ground Level
A GUNNER	Assistant gunner
AK-47	Russian-made Kalashnikov gas-operated 7.62mm automatic rifle with an effective range of 400 meters; standard weapon of the NVA; 9.5 lb. 34.25" long, fires 600 rounds per minute, muzzle velocity of 2350 feet per second
AIR AMERICA	Contract airline that flew for the Central Intelligence Agency in Southeast Asia; flew supplies into Khe Sanh to support BV-33 in Laos
AIR MINDED BRAVO	Radio callsign for Co B, 3d Reconnaissance Battalion in 1967
AKA	Also Known As
ALCC	Airlift Control Center (USAF)
ALFA RATS	Perishable food supplies normally requiring refrigeration (milk, steaks, etc.)
ALO	Air Liaison Officer
AM	Air Medal
AM-2	Air Matting, solid metal, 12 ft. long, 2 ft. wide, 144 pounds
ANGLICO	Air/Navy Gunfire Liaison Company
ANNAM	The central part of indo-China (Tonkin to the north, Cochin China to the south)
ANNAMITIC CORDILLERA	The north-south mountain range separating Laos and Vietnam
AN/PRC-25	Radio, FM, line-of-sight, usually limited to 25-30 miles
AO	Aerial Observer; Area of Operations
AP	Anti-Personnel (mine)
APC	Armored Personnel Carrier
APD	Airborne Personnel Detector, also known as "People Sniffer", XM-2, modified E-63 (Description and photo in LtGen John H. Hay, Jr., Tactical and Materiel Innovations, Washington, D.C.: Dept. of the Army, 1974, pp. 80-81).
APL	Assistant Patrol Leader
ARA	Aerial Rocket Artillery (USA)
ARC LIGHT	B-52 bomb strike. Began 12 December 1965 in Laos
ARDMORE	Operation in Khe Sanh area conducted 170001H/Jul67 - 312359H/Oct 67 by 26th Mar
ARENG	Bru ville at XD 846402
ARLINGTON CANYON	Operation conducted in the Khe Sanh area 3 Jul - 21 Sep 1969 by 4th Marines
ARPA	Advanced Research Project Agency (developed electronic sensors)
ARVN	Army of the Republic of Vietnam

ARTY	Artillery
ASAP	As Soon as Possible
ASP	Ammunition Supply Point (dump)
ASRAT	Air Support Radar Team (also referred to as ASRT), a subordinate operational component of a tactical air control system which provides ground controlled precision flight path guidance and weapons release for attack aircraft
AT	Anti-Tank
"A" TEAM	12 USSF soldiers capable to development of an indigenous regimental-size unit
AW	Automatic Weapons
AWF	Automatic Weapons Fire
AWOL	Absent Without Leave
B-41	5-lb. rocket fired from a Soviet RPG-7 rocket launcher
B-5 FRONT	Communist military designation of the two northernmost provinces of South Vietnam
B5-T8	The Secret designation of the North Vietnamese Army Front command controlling the Khe Sanh siege battle. Headquarters located just west of the western edge of the DMZ in Laos
B-52	Boeing Stratofortress, USAF 8-engine, swept-wing, high-speed, high-altitude, heavy jet bomber. Moved by 8 13,750 Pratt & Whitney, J-57-P-19W. Dimensions: span 185 ft., length 156 ft. 6 in.. Weight empty 177,816 lb., combat 293,100 lb. , takeoff 450,000 lb. Performance: max speed at 20,200 ft. 551 kts., combat radius 3,012 nm. Crew of 6. Armament: 4 .50 cal. M3 guns, bomb load of approx. 60,000 lbs. Normal load of 108 bombs but capable of holding 128 500 & 750-lb. bombs dropped in a rectangular pattern, usually 1,000 yds long and 100 yds wide. Most flights consist of 6 aircraft together, covering an area one-half mile wide and three miles long, all within a period of several seconds.
B-57	Strike aircraft developed by Martin Company for night intruder missions nicknamed YELLOWBIRD when loaded with "funny bombs" and operating in Laos
BA	Basic Allowance
BA-30	Radio battery
BALD EAGLE	A company-size reaction force
BANGALORE TORPEDO	Explosive-filled bamboo placed under defensive wire to blast a path through it
BAN HOUEI SANE	CP of BV-33 at XD 625379
BAN KARAI PASS	XE 262117 (17-22 N/106-09E)
BAR	Browning Automatic Rifle
BARKEEP	Radio callsign of 1/1 (SCOTLAND II)
BAS	Battalion Aid Station
BASE AREA	Communist base camp area, usually containing fortifications, supply depots, hospitals and training facilities
BASKETBALL	A flare ship, aircraft that drops illumination flares
BATTLE OF KHE SANH SEARCH AND DESTROY	Operation conducted at Khe Sanh, also known as "Battle of the Hills" conducted 240001H/Apr67 - 131500H/May67 by 3d Marines
BDA	Bomb Damage Assessment
Beaucoup	French word used by Marines in Vietnam for "much" or "many"
BEEHIVE	An ordnance round containing thousands of small darts called "fleshettes"
BERM	A scooped-out section beneath the surface of the ground to store munitions
BIRD DOG	A FAC (Forward Air Controller) usually in a small single-prop airplane
BLACKBIRD	The flat black-painted C-130 supply aircraft for SOG loaded with highly sophisticated secret communications gear, radar-deflection equipment, and terrain-avoidance radar (TAR)
BLACKBUD	Radio callsign of 1/26
BLOOPER	M-79 grenade launcher
BLT	Battalion Landing Team
BLU	Bomb, Live, Unit
BLUE LINE	A river (called because rivers are indicated by a blue line on maps)

BLUE MAX	1st Air CAV helicopters operating in Khe Sanh during Operation PEGASUS that rescued alive Marines from Hill 689, 16 April 1968
BN	Battalion
BNR	Body Not Recovered
BOUNCING BETTY	Anti-personnel mine on ground triggered by stepping on it, shooting up a projectile several feet into the air (usually chest-high) which then explodes
BRACKETT	Box-in with artillery
BROWN LINE	Route 922 (Operation MAINE CRAG, 12969)
BOX	Area of an operation or recon insert (usually refers to grid squares)
BOXED IN	Bracketed with artillery
BRASS BALLS	Refers to a man with unusual daring: "He sure has brass balls"
BRAVO RATS	Canned food supplies used to serve more than an individual
BREH	Bru ville at base of hill 471, at XD 8463889
BRIDGE SITE	Position occupied by C/1/26 where Rt. 9 crosses Rao Quan River, at XD 910400
BRONCO	OV-10 aircraft
BROWN BAR	Marine slang for Second Lieutenant
BRU	The mountain tribe occupying the Khe Sanh area
BSM	Bronze Star Medal
BU	Builder (USN Seabee rating)
BU	Bru ville at XD 820381, about half-way between Khe Sanh an d Lang Vei villages
BUGLE NOTE	A tactic for providing increased B-52 support during the siege of Khe Sanh that used cyclic launches (first 3 bombers every 90 minutes, later 6 bombers every 180 minutes with variations to prevent prediction of arrival time. The bombers flew to pre-designated pre-initial point and were guided to the targets by Combat Skyspot radar. The concept proved to be so efficient at Khe Sanh that it was expanded to cover all areas hit by B52s).
BV-33	Royal Laotian Volunteer Battalion (Bataillion Volontaire) operating just west of khe Sanh inside Laos
(C)	Confirmed kill
C-1	Base Area at YD 221681
C-2	Base Area at YD 127666
C-3	Base Area at YD 108603
C-4	Plastic explosive, M5A1, a white-colored putty-like explosive configured in a 2.5-lb. 2" x 2" block called a stick, that can be molded
C-7	de Haviland Caribou, fixed-wing, small carrier with wing span 95'8", length 72'7", height 31'9", operating weight 18,260 lb., max payload 8,740 lb., normal max. takeoff weight 28,500 lb. Performance: max. speed 216 MPH at 6,500 ft. , economical cruising speed 182 MPH at 7,500 ft., max range 1,307 miles' Crew of 3-4, can carry 32 passengers
C-123	Fairchild Provider, medium cargo plane. Dimensions: span 110 ft., length 75'3", height 34'1", weight empty 31,058 lb., max. gross weight 60,000 lb.. Performance: max. speed 245 MPH, cruising speed 190 MPH
C-130	Douglas Hercules, a 4-engine turboprop transport aircraft. Dimensions: span 132'7", length 97'9". Weight empty 63,000 lb. (C130E - 72,892 lb.), max payload (A model 36,600 lb (45,000 lb for E model). Performance: A model max. cruising speed 356 MPH (368 MPH for E model)
CAC	Combined Action Company (CAC OSCAR operated in the Khe Sanh area)
CACKLE BERRIES	Old USMC slang word for "eggs"
CADAVER	Radio callsign for VMO-6 until 01 Feb 68
CAG	Combined Action Group
CALLSIGNS	The following are some of those used at Khe Sanh:

ACTIVATOR	CAC OSCAR	JACKSONFILLE	1/13
BARKEEP	1/1 (SCOTLAND II)	KLONDIKE	VMO-6 ('67)
BLACK BUD	1/26	LANDSHARK BRAVO	DASC
BONNIE SUE	HMM-163	MOLLY PITCHER	1/26
BUFFALO CITY	HMM-165	MOONBEAM	ABCCC night

CADAVER	VMO-6 (/67)	MUTTER	CAC OSCAR
CANDLESTICK	C-123 flareship	NAIL	OV-2, OV-10 FACs
CARSTAIRS BRAVO	ASRAT	NORTHBROOK	HMM-164
CHATTERBOX	HMM-262	OAK GATE	VMO-3
CLIPCLOP	HMM-362	PEST KILLER	HMM-362
COLORADO-19	175s at Carroll	PIEDMONT	FOB-3
DEADLOCK	VMO-2	POWER GLIDE	HMM-364
DUNBAR COUNTY	3/26	PRESS	HMM-164
ELEPHANT	BV-33 in Laos	SANTA ANA BRAVO	Recon Co.
GARDEN VALLEY	1/9	SCARFACE	VMO-3
HASTY FOOT	2/26	SEAWORTHY	VMO-6 ('67-'68)
HIGH BOY	HMM-163	SPACE	HMM-165
HILLSBORO	ABCCC daytime	SPUNKY HANSON	USSF at Lang Vei
HOSTAGE	VMO-2	SWIFT	HMM-164
INTRIGUE	26th Mar Regt	TAIL PIPE MIKE	USAF CCT

CA LU	Base located approx. YD009455, named for the nearby Khe Ca Lu river, tributary of the Quang Tri River
CAMERON FALLS	Operation conducted at Khe Sanh 291000H/May69 - 230600H/Jun69 by 9th Marines
CAM LO	District Headquarters and town at YD 1259; site of Bru resettlement after siege
CAMP J.J. CARROLL	Site of 175mm artillery, YD 063548
CAMP EAGLE	101st Airborne Division CP in 1971, YD 808612
CAMP EVANS	YD 545321
CANDLESTICK	Callsign for C-123 FAC/flare aircraft in Laos
CANISTER	M336 90mm tank r4ound filled with approximately 1,281 stacked steel cylindrical pellets
CANNON COCKER	Marine slang for an artilleryman
CAP	Combined Action Platoon; also a series indicator for outgoing White House telegrams
CAP O-3	CAP compound just outside the KSCB at XD 842409
CAR	Combat Action Ribbon
CARIBOU	C-7 twin-propeller driven, 32-passenger aircraft
CARP	Computed Air Release Point (USAF)
CARSTAIRS BRAVO	Radio callsign for ASRAT team at KSCB during the siege
CAS	Close Air Support; Controlled American Source (covert action branch of the Saigon office of the CIA)
CAV	Cavalry (USA)
CBMU	Construction Battalion Maintenance Unit (CBMO Det B operated at KSCB)
CBU	Cluster Bomb Unit. Basically, the CBU consists of a dispenser filled with small spherical bombs containing small steel spheres. When the dispenser was ejected from the aircraft, a timer opened it and the bombs were released. The bombs were fused to detonate and expel the steel spheres against personnel and materiel.
CC	Command Center (Headquarters of FMFPAC in Hawaii)
C & C	Command and Control
CCN	Command and Control North
CCT	Combat Control Team (USAF)
CDEC	Combined Document Exploitation Center, a section of J-2, MACV, responsible for translating and disseminating captured enemy documents
CDR	Commander (USN officer rank, O-5)
CDS	Container Delivery System (for airdrops)
CE	Construction Electrician (USN Seabee rating); Combat Essential (supplies indicated by a red ball with "666" lettering)
CG	Commanding General

CH-46	Boeing Vertol Sea Knight, a twin-engine, tandem-rotor transport helicopter, designed to carry a 4-man crew and 17 combat-loaded troops. Weight empty 12,400 lb. , max. takeoff and landing 23,000 lb. Max speed 166 MPH. Range at max. weight with 6,750 lb. payload with ten per cent reserve 236 miles. Accommodations: 3 crew, 17-25 troops, or 15 litters and two attendants, or 4,000 lbs. cargo
CH-47	Army helicopter (distinguished from CH-46 in that it has 4 wheels). Dimensions: Tandem main 3-blade rotor diameter 60 ft., fuselage length 51 ft., height 18'7". Performance: max speed 180 MPH at 10,200 ft., ave. cruising speed 160 MPH. Mission radius 115 miles. Accommodates 2 pilots, one crew chief, 33-44 troops of 24 litters with two attendants, or vehicles and freight up to 28,000 lbs., can be carried on external cargo hook.
CH-53	Sikorsky Sea Stallion, a single-rotor, heavy transport helicopter powered by two shaft-turbine engines with an average payload of 12,800 pounds. Carries a crew of 3 and 38 combat-loaded troops. Dimensions: main (6-blade) rotor diameter 72'3", fuselage length 67'2". Weight empty 22,444 lb. , max. takeoff 42,000 lb. Armament: Three 7.62mm miniguns. Accommodation: 3 crew, 37 troops or 24 litters and 4 attendants.
CH-54	Tarhe Sky Crane helicopter used to move heavy outsized loads and to recover downed aircraft, originally designed to carry a field hospital. 88'5" length, weighs 20.700 pounds and can carry an external load of 20,760 pounds. Crew of 3, no passengers.
CHARLIE	Marine slang for NVA soldiers, from the phonetic alphabet for "C" in "VC"
CHARLIE	Operation to destroy and dismantle KSCB conducted 17 June - 08 July 1968 by 3/4
CHARLIE PAPA	CP, Command Post
CHARLIE RATS	C-rations, field combat rations (also called MCI: Meal, Combat, Individual)
CHATTERBOX	Radio callsign for HMM-262 (SCOTLAND II)
CHECK POINT	Pre-designated location where unit is to proceed
CHECO	Contemporary Historical Evaluation of Combat Operations (USAF)
CHERRY	A man newly-arrived in country
CHI COM	Chinese Communist grenade
CHIEU HOI	Program to welcome military and civilian VC or NVA soldiers to rally to the side of the rightful government in South Vietnam. Words literally mean "open arms"
CHINOOK	CH-47 twin-engine transport helicopter with rotor blades fore and aft
CHLOROQUIN PRIMAQUIN	Anti-malaria medication (medium-sized orange pill) taken weekly by Marines (on Sundays)
CHOKE POINT	A narrow pass through which movement might be controlled
CHOP	Changed Operational Control to
CIA	Captured in Action; Central Intelligence Agency
CIC	Combined Intelligence Center
CICV	Combined intelligence Center Vietnam (on staff of MACV)
CIDG	Civilian Irregular Defense Group (South Vietnamese Army)
CIIB	Current indicators intelligence Branch (MACV)
CINCPAC	Commander in Chief Pacific, The Unified Commander who controlled actions in Vietnam on the ground via MACV and directly controlled air
CJCS	Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff
CLASS I	Rations
CLASS II	General supply (e.g., 782 gear, clothing)
CLASS III	POL (Petroleum Oil Lubricants)
CLASS IV	Fortification materials
CLASS V	Munitions
CLASS 25 ROAD	25-ton capacity road
CLAYMORE	M18A1 Anti-personnel mine shaped in a curved oblong and shooting thousands of small bee-bee balls by command electric detonator. Stands about 3-in. off ground and is about 5-in. wide, sitting on 2-in. legs. Explodes by sending off some 700 small bee-bee steel balls 60 meters in a 60-degree area from one to six feet at 60 meters, each pellet being less than 2-in. apart at this distance. It has a 90% casualty rate.
CLICK	1,000 meters

CLIPS	Slang for "magazine"
CLONG SAREH	Bru ville at XD 848405
CM	Construction Mechanic (USN Seabee rating)
CMC	Commandant, U.S. Marine Corps
CMH	Congressional Medal of Honor
CN	Constructionman (USN Seabee rating)
CAN	Coordinates Not Available
Co	Company
CO	Commanding Officer
COB	Combat Operating Base
COC	Command Operations Center (USMC)
CODE "H"	Junk; equipment that has removed from the lists as no longer repairable
COFRAM	Controlled Fragmentation munitions (also known as "Firecracker")
COL	Colonel (O-6)
COLLECTIVE	The control linkages on a helicopter that adjust the pitch on all blades equally ("collectively") enabling the helicopter to go up or down
COMBAT SKYSPOT	MSQ-77 and SST-181 radar-controlled bombing.
COMDC	Command Chronology
COMNAVFORV	Commander Naval Forces Vietnam, the senior USN officer in Vietnam
COMUSMACV	Commander, United States Military Assistance Command, Vietnam
CONCERTINA	Rolls of barbed wire that are spread to create an obstacle along defensive lines
CONDITION GREEN	Normal readiness posture
CONDITION RED	Full alert readiness posture
CONEX BOX	Container-Express, a large metal container (6' x 6' or 8' x 8') with corrugated metal sides
CONGRINT	Congressional Interest inquiry
CON THIEN OUTPOST	YD 116701
CONUS	Continental United States
CO PUT	Hilltop and outpost near Lang Vei at XD 789382
COPY	Communications lingo meaning "I understand," as in "I copy that"
CO ROC	Cliff just inside Laos, XD 742318
"CORRECTION"	When speaking (especially on radio), if one makes an error, one says "Correction: and then gives the correct information. Example: "The attack started at 0400 CORRECTION 0415." or "We spotted fifteen CORRECTION sixteen enemy."
COVEY	Callsign for O-2 and OV-10 FACs of 20th Tactical Air Squadron
CP	Command Post
CPL	Corporal (E-4)
CP TENT	A small tent with two sections to house, e.g., a Company Commander and his clerk, in the field, staff offices, house a squad of men, etc.
CRACKERBOX	Ambulance
CRF	Contingency Relief Force
CROCKETT	Operation in Khe Sanh area 131500H/May67 - 162400H/Jul67 conducted by 26th Marines
CROTCH	Marine slang for Marine Corps
CRP	Combat Reconnaissance Platoon; specially-trained CIDG units capable of operating independently
CPT	Captain (USA abbreviation) (O-3 rank)
CRACHIN	Dense fog and moisture condition (literally means "spit" in French)
CS	Tear gas
CSF	Camp Strike Force, a company-size CIDG unit
CSM	Command Sergeant Major (USA)
CSW	Crew-Served Weapon

CY	Calendar Year
CYCLIC	The control linkages on a helicopter that cause the pitch on a blade to change as the blade cycles through its arc of rotation, causing the aircraft to move forward, backward, or laterally.
D-5 OUTPOST	YD 097517, Cua Valley
DELTA-1	MK 81, 250-lb. General Purpose Bomb
DELTA-1A	MK 81, 250-lb. General Purpose Bomb, Snake-eye, low-drag
DELTA-2	MK 82, 500-lb. General Purpose Bomb
DELTA-2B	MK 117, 750-lb. bomb with high speed conical fins
DELTA-3	MK 83, 1000-lb. General Purpose Bomb
DELTA-4	MK 84 2000-lb. General Purpose Bomb
DELTA-5	2.75" rockets (19 rockets to a pod)
DELTA-7	5" ZUNI rocket (10A pod, 4 rockets)
DELTA-9	MK 77, 500-lb. napalm bomb
DELTA-11	CBU-1AA Bomb (anti-personnel)
DELTA-14	CBU-24 bomb
DELTA-15	CBU-21 bomb
DEELTA-20	MK 4, 750-round 20mm gunpod
DELTA-21	Smoke-screen bomb (MK 12 Smoke Tank filled with smoke)
DELTA-24	Gunpod
DELTA-26	M-117 (750-lb. bomb) with a 1-second delay enabling 126-ft. penetration before detonation
DELTA-29	1,000-lb. armor piercing bomb
DELTA-32	CS gas (MK-77) delivered in napalm tank filled with CS powder)
DELTA-70	Rockets
DAGMAR	Radio callsign for 3rd Shore Party Bn
DAI UY	Vietnamese for officer rank of Captain (O-3)
D'AI LAO PASS	XD 699 381, where Route 9 crosses the Lao/Vietnam border
DAISY CUTTER	A 15,000-lb. bomb with length of pipe secured into the fuse well and filled with explosives to act as a fuse extension, used to create a landing zone in thick jungle
DAPSONE	An anti-malaria pill (small, white) used by USSF, taken daily.
DAS	Direct Air Support
DASC	Direct Air Support Center
DAWSON RIVER WEST	Operation conducted at Khe Sanh 020600H/Jan69 - 191600H/Jan69 by 9th Marines
DCPG	Defense Communications Planning Group (developed electronic sensors)
DEAR JOHN LETTER	A letter from a wife or girl-friend breaking off relationship
DEFILADE	Protection from hostile observation or fire using a natural obstacle such as a hill or land depression
DET	Detachment
DFC	Distinguished Flying Cross
DHCB	Dong Ha Combat Base
DIA	Defense Intelligence Agency
DISUM	Daily Intelligence Summary
DIV	Division
DIVISION	2 aircraft: 20,000 infantry troops (approx.)
DMZ	Demilitarized Zone
DNG	DaNang
DOD	Department of Defense
DONG HA COMBAT BASE	YD 242598
"DOPE"	Settings on a weapon
DRUMFIRE II	Artillery raid operation directed against Co Roc 30 May - 01 June 1968
DONG	Vietnamese unit of money, more commonly called a Piaster
DONG TRI	hill 1015, XD 854455

DONG LA RU'ONG	Hill 1123, XD 855512
DONG PA THIEN	Hill 1371, XD 814520
DONG SA MUI	Hill 1550, XD 700590
DONG TA BANG	Hill 1476, XD 743573
DONG VOI MEP	Hill 1587, XD 836539
DOW	Died of Wounds
DRV	Democratic Republic of Vietnam (North Vietnam)
dtd	Dated
DTG	Date Time Group, a message identification combining date and time.
DUEL BLADE TWO	McNamara Wall
DUNBAR COUNTY	Radio callsign of 3/26 during the siege
DUSTER	U.S. Army tracked vehicle, M-42, with 40mm automatic weapons. Weight 48.000 lbs.. Max range 5 KM, max rate of fire 240 rounds per minute
DZ	Drop Zone
E & E	Escape and Evasion
EA	Engineering Aide (USN Seabee rating)
EC-47	A C-47 with radio direction finding equipment.
EEI	Essential Elements of information, specific items of required information
EFFECTIVES	Personnel capable of doing work or engaging in combat
ELEPHANT	Radio callsign of the BV-33 unit in Laos
ELLIOTT COMBAT BASE	XD 8954 (SCOTLAND II)
ENEMY UNITS	Div — Approx 6,000 or more men Regt — Approx 1,500 men Bn — Approx 400 men Co — Approx 100 men Plt — Approx 30 men [HQ, USMACV, MACV J-2 PERINTREP, 20 April 1967]
ENS	Ensign (USN officer rank, O-1)
EO	Equipment Operator (USN Seabee rating)
EOD	Explosive Ordnance Disposal
E-Tool	Entrenching tool, a small collapsible shovel carried as individual combat equipment used to dig, e.g., individual foxholes
"EVIL EYES"	HMM-163. H-34 helicopters had "evil eyes" painted on the front
EXTRACT	Removing troops from a patrol
F-4B	McDonnell Phantom II, a twin-engine, 2-seat, long-range, all-weather jet interceptor and attack bomber, speed 1,400 MPH, range 1000 miles, payload 16,000 lbs.
FAC	Forward Air Controller
FADAC	Field Artillery Digital Analysis Computer (computes artillery settings and powder charge when fed coordinates, etc.)
FAL	Forces d'Armee de Laos (Lao Armed Forces)
FAR	Forces Armees Royales (Laos)
FAST MOVERS	Jet aircraft
FBIS	Foreign Broadcasting Information Service
FDC	Fire Direction Center
FEBA	Forward Edge of the Battle Area
FIELD GRADE	An officer O-4 to O-6. (Those O-1 to O-3 are Company Grade and those -7 and above are "flag officers" (Generals–have their own personal flags with a star)
FIGMO	Fk It, God My Orders
FIRE BASES FOR LAMSON-719	All are XD:

HOTEL	726347	BROWN	500350
HOTEL-2	696216	RANGER N	595515
DELTA-1	553344	RANGER S	581503
DELTA	648301	GRASS	691173
30	588463	GREEN	626195
A LUOI	526399	ALPHA	597378
DON	629268	BRAVO	640382
WHITE	581297	SOPHIA-2	346408
LIZ	383378	SOPHIA E	498348
HOPE	344479	OSCAR	858384
LOLO	431372	KILO	858387

FLAME THROWER M2A1, weight (when full): 68-72 pounds, firing time 8-9 seconds. Range 20 yds. liquid fuel and 45 yds thickened fuel

FLARESHIP Aircraft which drops illumination flares

FLASH Highest priority of message (followed by OP IMMEDIATE, PRIORITY, then ROUTINE)

FLC Force Logistics Command

FLESHETTE Ordnance round containing thousands of small darts. The 90mm tank round is M337, filled with 5,600 fleshettes. The 106mm round contains approx. 9,000 fleshettes.

FLIR Forward-Looking Infrared

FLSG Force Logistics Support Group (a unit of 3d Service Bn, FLC)

FM Radio (FOX MIKE), Frequency Modulation, referring to radios used. Field Manual

FMAW First Marine Aircraft Wing

FMFPAC Fleet Marine Force, Pacific

FO Forward Observer

FOB Forward Operating Base

FORT DIX Old French Fort position on eastern edge of Khe Sanh Village, at XD 859387

FOUGASSE Diesel gasoline mixed in a 55-gallon drum with thickener to make it into napalm

FOUO For Official Use Only (not a security classification, but designates limited use of information)

FOXTROT RIDGE XD 874383 (SCOTLAND II)

FPL Final Protective Line (all arms–small arms, machineguns, artillery, etc., firing "to fire the FPL")

FRAG Fragmentation grenade

FragO Fragmentary Order

FROG Free Rocket Over Ground

FRONT COMMAND A North Vietnamese military command exercising control over main force operations for a specified area, but with the control of political matters and guerrilla and local forces reserved to the region

FSB Fire Support Base

FSB ALPINE	XD 756532	FSB QUANTICO	XD 873426
FSB ARGONNE	XD 678572	FSB RUSSELL	XD 912592
FSB BIG FOOT BROWN	XD 830233	FSB SAIGON	XD 818275
FSB CATAPULT	XD 826616	FSB SARGE	YD 028479
FSB CATES	XD 927437	FSB SHEPHERD	XD 933408
FSB FULLER	YD 0159	FSB SMITH	XD 789383
FSB GEIGER	XD 745441	FSB SPARK	XD 870238
FSB GREENE	XD 758610	FSB TENARU	XD 8250
FSB MACK	XD 9661	FSB TORCH	XD 906279
FSB NEVILLE	XD 824577	FSB WHISMAN	XD 973333
FSB PETE	XD 977585

FSCC Fire Support Coordination Center

FSN	Federal Stock Number
Ft	Feet
FUBAR	Fked Up Beyond All Recognition
FUO	Fever Undetermined Origin
(FWD)	Forward
FY	Fiscal Year (01 October - 30 September for the military)
FYI	For Your Information
G	Refers to positions on the staff of a General. (G-1 - personnel, G-2 - intelligence, G-3 -Operations and training, G-4 - logistics, HG-5 - Civil Affairs)
GARDEN VALLEY	Radio callsign of 1/9 during siege
GCA	Ground Controlled Approach
GERMAN TAPE	Concertina containing flat razor-like pieces of metal
GL	Grid Line
GIANT DRAGON	U-2 aircraft flying at 85,000 feet, photographing an area 100,000 square miles. Flew air recon missions at Khe Sanh during the siege
GIO LINH	Artillery outpost at YD 214742
"GOOKS"	Slang for Vietnamese enemy, a term supposedly originating with the British Army in India who placed a sign above the mess for indigenous troops: Gentlemen Of Other Color.
GPES	Ground Proximity Extraction System
GP TENT	General Purpose tent, larger than a CP tent, could house company offices, staff offices, a squad of men, etc.
GRAVEL	Small anti-personnel mines, XM-41 or XM-41E1, consisting of lead azide crystals, RDX, ground glass, stiffener which becomes armed upon defrosting and becomes disarmed by absorption of humidity. Originally used to create a "pop" sound to activate electronic sensors)
"GREEN"	Slang for a new, inexperienced man reporting for duty
GRENADES	MK3A2 concussion grenade, filled with TNT, explodes sending shock waves instead of fragments. M-7 Tear gas grenades, used to clear bomb shelters and tunnels M26 Fragmentation Grenade, smooth lemon-shaped body filled with Composition B and a serrated wire which breaks up into hundreds of fragments in all directions, as far as 185 meters. Effective casualty radius, 15 meters M33 Fragmentation Grenade, hardball shaped, interior scored to break into thousands of fragments. M-18 Smoke Grenade, four colors: red, green, violet, yellow, used for signaling. M-15 Willy Peter (WP) Grenade filled with white phosphorus, sends particles of burning WP over an area of 25 yards in diameter, causing severe burns and dense smoke
GRENADIER	The man who carries and fires the M-79 grenade launcher
GRUNT	Infantryman
GS	Grid Square
GUNSHIP	A helicopter armed with air-to-ground armament
GVN	Government of Vietnam (South Vietnam)
GySgt	Gunnery Sergeant (USMC E-7)
H	Local time in Vietnam (from HOTEL time zone)
H-34	Sikorsky Sea Horse UH-34D single-engine medium transport helicopter, with a crew of 3 and can carry 8-12 combat-equipped soldiers depending on weather conditions and elevation.
H&MS	Headquarters and Maintenance Squadron
H-HOUR	The specific hour an operation commences
H&I	Harassment and Interdiction (artillery fire directed at probable enemy-used sites such as river crossings, trails, assembly-areas, etc.)
H&S	Headquarters and Service Company (of a battalion or regiment) or Battalion (of a Division)
HAC	Helicopter Aircraft Commander
HALO	High Altitude Low Opening (free-fall parachuting)
HALIZONE	Water purification tablets containing tetraclycine hyudroperiodine
HARBORSITE	Semi-defensive night position
HASTY FOOT	Radio callsign of 2/26 during the siege

HATCHETT	A SOG reaction force, usually about 60 men
HAVERSACK	A light pack for personal items carried on patrol, from the German haber sack referring to a bag for oats, originally a canvas container in which cavalrymen carried food for their horses
HDC	Helicopter Direction Center
HE	High Explosive
HEAT	high Explosive Anti-Tank
HEAT TABS	Trioxane tablets, purple in color, used to heat water or food
HERCULES	C-130 aircraft
HERKIMER MOUNTAIN	Operation conducted at Khe Sanh 09 May- 16 Jul 1969 by 4th Marines
HF	HATCHETT force (reaction force from SOG)
HIGH DRAG BOMB	A weapon fitted with extra fins to slow its speed and increase the time of fall
HILLSBORO	Radio callsign for C-130 ABCCC in southern Laos, daytime hours

HILLS

412	XD 922377	861A	XD 805445
471	XD 846393	881N	XD 774457
552	XD 822402	881S	XD 777438
558	XD 820451	918	XD 726444
606	XD 883496	950	XD 844456
689	XD 803409	1015	XD 854455
691	XD 927433	1566	XD 724605
861	XD 803443	1587	XD 838538
		1739	XD 830545

HistDiv	Historical Division, HQMC
HLZ	Helicopter Landing Zone
HMH	Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron (CH-53s)
HMM	Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron (CH-46, H-34)
HN	Hospitalman (Navy corpsman, E-3)
HOBO	Radio callsign for A-1E aircraft
Ho Chi Minh	Born 19 May 1890
HOI CHAN	An individual returnee
HOOTCH	Personnel shelter
HOSPITAL SHIPS`	Operating in DaNang harbor, USS REPOSE (AH-16) and USS SANCTUARY (AH-17)
"HOURS"	A term used by the Army (not by the USN or USMC) after a time designation, e.g., "1300 hours," (Navy and Marine Corps usage is simply to designate "1300" without "hours")
HOUSE MOUSE	(1) a recruit who assists Drill Instructors (DIs); a Vietnamese woman who washes laundry, sweeps out hootch, etc.
HOW	Howitzer
HOWITZERS	M108 105mm How (SP), weight 48,200 lbs., max range 11.5 KM, max rate of fire 10 rounds per minute M101A 105mm How, weight 4,980 lbs., max range 11 KM, max rate of fire 10 rounds per minute M102 105mm How, weight 3,100 lbs., max range 11.5 KM, max rate of fire 10 rounds per minute M109 155mm How (SP), weight 48,000 lbs., max range 14.6 KM, max rate of fire 3 rounds per minute M114A1 155mm How, weight 12,900 lbs., max range 14.6 KM, max rate of fire 4 rounds per minute M110, 8" How (SP), weight 58,500 lbs., max range 16.8 KM, max rate of fire 0.5 rounds per minute M115 8" How, weight 29,700 lbs, max range 16.8 KM, max rate of fire 0.5 rounds per minute
HQ	Headquarters
HQMC	Headquarters, Marine Corps
HST	Helicopter Support Team (Marine Corps Shore Party detachment on LZs to handle supplies)
HUEY GUNSHIP	UH-1E medium helicopter with forward firing guns
"HUMP"	To walk, especially while expending great effort, as wearily patrolling steep hills in extremely dense vegetation for 8 hours in 100=degree weather and 90% humidity while carrying a 81mm mortar base plate! or a M-60 machinegun. The word is an Australian word for a digger: "to hump one's swag" referred to carrying one's load.

HUONG HOA — District of Quang Tri Province containing Khe Sanh; District HQ at XD 865375

"HUSS" — Slang for a relief, e.g., "Hey, cut me a huss!" ("give me a break"). Originates from the HUS helicopter in Korea used to medevac casualties

IA — Immediate Action (usually initiated by a silent hand signal while on patrol)

ICC — International Control Commission (or ISCC=International Control and Surveillance Commission) consisting of Canada, India, and Poland, created by Great Britain and the Soviet Union to supervise the implementing of the 1954 Geneva Accords. (On 07 Apr 1973, 2 helicopters of the ICCS were shot down by missiles from the NVA base of Khe Sanh killing all eleven aboard, including 2 PRG liaison officers. Those killed included representatives from Canada, Indonesia, Hungary, Poland, as well as Viet Cong and American crewmembers in a helicopter flown under contract with Air America).

ICS — interior Communications System (in an aircraft); Infiltration Surveillance Center (to receive and interpret signals from electronic sensors)]

ICTZ — I Corps Tactical Zone, the northernmost portion of South Vietnam

IDH-10 — Mine

IFR — Instrument Flying Regulations

IGLOO WHITE — Electronic sensor program in Laos and the DMZ

ILLUM — Illumination

IMAW — First Marine Aircraft Wing

IMC — Instrument Meteorological Conditions (USAF)

"IN COUNTRY" — In Vietnam

INDIAN COUNTRY — Slang for enemy territory

INSERT — Placing troops into a patrol area

INTELLIGENCE RATING SYSTEM — A method of indicating usefulness of information by designating Reliability of Source (A-Completely Reliable, B–Usually Reliable, C–Fairly Reliable, D–Not Usually Reliable-Unreliable, F–Reliability Cannot be Judged) and according to Accuracy of Information (1 Confirmed by other sources; 2–Probably true, 3–Possibly true, 4–Doubtfully true, 5–Improbable report, and 6–Truth Cannot be Judged). Intelligence reports at Khe Sanh from JTAD agents operating 20 or so clicks away were always reported as "F-6."

INTRIGUE — Radio callsign for 26th Marine Regiment during siege

INTSUM — Intelligence Summary

Intv — Interview

IP — Insertion Point

IPIR — Initial Photo Interpretation Report

IR — Infra-red

ISC — Infiltration Surveillance Center

ISO — Information Service officer

ITR — Infantry Training Regiment (an advanced infantry training upon graduation from Boot Camp to learn different fire-and-maneuver, types of weapons, immediate action tactics, etc.)

ITT — interrogation Translator Team (17th ITT was at Khe Sanh during the siege)

IWC — Individual Weapons Captured

J2 — Intelligence staff section of MACV (or any other joint-service staff)

J&F — Journal and File (maintained by III MAF COC, containing message traffic such as intelligence reports, operational SITREPs, Spot Reports, etc.)

JACK OFF FLARES — Flares held in the right hand while the palm of the left hand violently pushes the igniter. Approx 1.5" diameter and 10" long. The M125A1 was "Signal, Illumination, Ground Green Star Cluster"

JACKSONVILLE — Radio callsign for 1/13 artillery during siege

JCS — Joint Chiefs of Staff

JGS — Joint General Staff, MACV

JOHN WAYNE — Crackers in C-rations; someone who's acting very "gungy" or heroic–wears bandoleers of ammo across the chest or assaults a hill charging with "let's go, men!" etc.

JOLLY GREEN GIANT	Nickname for Sikorsky HH-3E helicopter modified for rescue operations, flown by the Air Rescue Service of the USAF
JOSN	Journalist at E-3 rank (Navy rating)
JP-4	Aviation fuel
JTAD	Joint Technical Advisory Detachment, a control for civilian agents established in Khe Sanh village in 1967
JUNGLE ROT	A bacterial skin infection, usually of the foot or lower leg
KARST	A limestone region marked by sinks and interspersed with abrupt ridges, irregular rocks, caverns, and underground streams
KBA	Killed by Air; Killed by Artillery
K-BAR	Combat knife with a 6.5" blade
KIA	Killed in Action
KEYHOLE	Deep reconnaissance using 4-man teams well beyond friendly artillery support
KHE SANH VILLAGE	XD 845380
KIA(C)	Killed in Action (Confirmed)
KIA(P)	Killed in Action (Probable)
KLICK	A kilometer
KM	Kilometer
KSCB	Khe Sanh Combat Base (16-57N/106-44E)
KW	Kilowatt
LAAW	M72 Light Anti-Tank Assault Weapon
LAMSON 719	Operation conducted from Khe Sanh, push into Laos, 30 Jan 71 - 21 Sep 71 by XXIV Corps, 101st Airborne Division
LANDSHARK BRAVO	Radio callsign for the Khe Sanh DASC during siege
LANG HO	XD 773566
LANG HOLE	XD 878297 (SCOTLAND II)
LANG VEI SPECIAL FORCES CAMP	Old camp at XD 798371; new camp (Nov67-Feb68) at XD 786357
LANG VEI VILLAGE	XD 794362
LAO BAO	Old French penitentiary and airstrip on Laos border at XD 697368 (16-37N/106-36E)
LAPES	Low Altitude Parachute Extraction System
LAW	M72 Light Anti-tank Assault Weapon
LAW OF SEVEN Ps	Proper Prior Planning Prevents Piss-Poor Performance
LBE	Load Bearing Equipment (web belt, harness, pack, etc., the 782 gear carried by an individual)
LBJL	LBJ Presidential Library
LCPL	Lance Corporal (USMC E-3)
LEAPING LENA	Operation conducted from Khe Sanh into Laos, 24 June - 2 July 1964
LIMA CHARLIE	Loud and Clear (radioman lingo)
LIMA LIMA	Land Line (e.g., "Contact him on the LIMA LIMA")
LIMDIS	limited Distribution, restriction of recipients of message
LLDB	Luc Dong Dac Viet (Vietnamese Special Forces); group to handle unconventional and covert operations, wore red berets
LnO	Liaison Officer
LOC	Line of Communication (route of logistic resupply)
LOD	Line of Departure (for an assault, the position from where the assault commences)
LOI	Letter of instruction (usually a TOP SECRET directive)
LOM	Legion of Merit
LP	Listening Post
LPH-8	USS VALLEY FORGE, an amphibious ship of the U.S. Navy

LR	Lower Right (corner of a patrol area box
LSA	Logistic Support Activity/Area
LSU	Logistic Support Unit
LT	Lieutenant
LtCol	Lieutenant Colonel (O-5)
LtGen	Lieutenant General (3-star, O-9)
LTJG	Lieutenant (Junior Grade) (USN O-2)
Ltr	Letter
LURPS	Long Range Reconnaissance Patrol (also refers to special rations)
LZ	Landing Zone. The following LZs were in use in the Khe San h area:

LZ BECKY	XD 858615	LZ PEDRO	YD 002845 (Pegasus)
LZ BELL	XD 685613	LZ PELICAN	XD 919379 (Scotland II)
LZ BETTY	YD 335504 (Pegasus)	LZ PINTAIL	XD 847456 (Scotland II)
LZ BLUE JAY	XD 998478, 825455	LZ ROBIN	XD 960445 (Pegasus) 913334 (Robin North), 915331, 925335
LZ CATALINA	XD 849648	LZ SAIGON	XD 816276, 819275
LZ CATES	XD 927437 (Pegasus)	LZ SCOTCH	XD 9156
LZ COUGAR	XD 853594	LZ SHARON	YD 336492 (Pegasus)
LZ CROW	XD 898348 (Pegasus)	LZ SHOUP	XD 8859
LZ GUNNER	XD 891261, 895260	LZ SIERRA	XD 946623
LZ HAWK	XD 895407 (Scotland II XD 897404 (Pegasus)	LZ SMITTY	XD 902270
		LZ SNAKE	XD 815374 (Scotland II) XD 805376 (Pegasus)
LZ HOUND	XD 818265	LZ SNAPPER	XD 845344 (Scotland II XD 842346 (Pegasus)
LZ JANE	YD 377432 (Pegasus)	LZ SNOOPY	XD 808390
LZ JOHN	XD 986432
LZ KIWI	XD 966465	LZ STUD	XD 996460
LZ LOON	XD 876334 (Scotland II XD 881335 (Pegasus)	LZ TEMPLE LAKE	XD 872259
LZ MACK	XD 969617	LZ THOR	XD 897404 (Pegasus)
LZ MARILYN	XD 9761	LZ TIMOTHY	XD 880360
LZ MERCURY	XD 8753	LZ TOM	XD 900345
LZ MIKE	XD 937409 (*Pegasus)	KZ TORCH	XD 911278 (Scotland II)
LZ MINK	XD 985356	LZ TURKEY	XD 832419
LZ PARIS	XD 807236	LZ URANUS	XD 8853
LZ PASSPORT	XD 796227	LZ WHARTON	XD 880360 (Pegasus)
LZ PEANUTS	XD 810393, 808395

M-16	Rifle, gas-operated, magazine-fed, air-cooled, automatic, 5.56mm cal., shoulder weapon which weighs 3.1 lbs. and with a 20-round magazine. Effective rate of fire, 12-15 rounds per minute. Effective range 460 meters.
M-26	Fragmentation hand grenade with a casualty radius of 10 meters
M-33	COFRAM-type fragmentation hand grenade introduced at Khe Sanh during siege
M-60	Machinegun, U.S.-built, belt-fed, gas-operated, air-cooled, 7.62mm automatic weapon, weighs approx. 20 pounds without mount or ammunition. It has a sustained rate of fire of 100 rounds per minute and an effective range of 1,000 meters.
M-72	Light Assault Antitank Weapon (LAAW), fires a 66mm rocket. Weight 4.68 lbs., 24.78" closed and 34.78" opened
M-79	U.S. built, single-shot, breech-loaded shoulder weapon which fires 40mm projectiles and weighs approx. 6.5 lbs. when loaded; it has a sustained rate of aimed fire of 5 to 7 rounds per minute and an effective range of 375 meters.
MAB	Marine Amphibious Brigade
MACTU	Marine Air Traffic Control Unit
MACV	Military Assistance Command Vietnam
MAD MOMENT	All weapons in a defensive position simultaneously firing (machineguns, rifles, pistols, mortars, M-79s, etc.)

MAG	Marine Air Group
MAGAZINE	Holder for ammunition rounds
MAINE CRAG	Operation conducted at Khe Sanh 101601H/Mar69 - 021300H/May 69 by 3rd Marines
MAJ	Major (O-4)
MAKE ONE'S BIRD	Leave or move away rapidly
MAR	Marine
MARK-4	Gun pod, aerial ordnance, shoots approx. 4,000 rounds per minute
MARS	Military Affiliate Radio Station. Used by Marines, soldiers, and sailors to call home by military radio sending to HAM operators in the States who connect the transmissions into the telephone system.
MASS	Marine Air Support Squadron
MAYDAY	Distress signal
MB-5	Large fire-fighting vehicle used to extinguish aircraft fires
MCB	Mobile Construction Battalion (USN Seabees)
MCEO	Marine Corps Eyes Only (message caveat)
MCNAMARA LINE	Electronic barrier consisting of strong points to detect movement south from North Vietnam, also referred to as PRACTICE NINE or SPOS (Strong Point Obstacle System) or the TRACE [According to III MAF 100246Z/JUL67, a 600 M wide trace extending from Con Thien (YD 196733) to YD 153717 to YD 158723 to YD 165721 to Gio Linh (215742) to edge of flood plain (YD 227742), projection is that trace will be extended during next dry season from YD 221742) to sea at YD 286765 and from YD 195733 to YD 067654,
MEDCAP	Medical Civic Action Program
MEDEVAC	Medical Evacuation of casualties (usually refers to a helicopter pickup)
MG	Machinegun
MGEN	Major General (2-star, O-8)
MGySgt	Master Gunnery Sergeant (USMC)
MHE	Material Handling Equipment
MI	Military Intelligence
MIA	Missing in Action
MIKE FORCE	Special Forces Mobile Strike Unit
MIKE MIKE	Millimeter
MILITARY CREST	The edge of the area on top of a hill that has been occupied or cleared, the perimeter atop a hill of an outpost
MILKY	USAF term for SKY SPOT or TPQ-10 equipment
"MILLION DOLLAR WOUND"	The third wound or getting a third Purple Heart, meaning rotation out of Vietnam. (a second Purple Heart meant rotation from battle area to the rear) (From WW II)
MITE	M422A1 jeep vehicle
Mk	Mark. Refers to a specific type of equipment or gear
MM	Millimeter
MOLY PITCHER	Radio callsign for 1/26
MONTAGNARD	French word for "mountain people", pronounced "mountain yard" There were 31 tribes of Montagnards in South Vietnam. The Bru tribe occupied the Khe Sanh area
MOONBEAM	Radio callsign for the C-130 ABCCC in southern Laos operating at night.
MORTARS	60mm Mortar, M19, U.S. built, smooth-bore, muzzle-loaded weapon, which weighs 45.2 lbs. when assembled. It has a max rate of fire of 30 rounds per minute and a sustained rate of fire of 10 rounds per min. Effective range of 2,000 M. Bursting area: 11 yds (HE and WP). 60mm Mortar, North Vietnamese, is a direct copy of the U.S. 60mm mortar making all the parts interchangeable. The difference being two nails under the ChiCom mortar mount, made of brass while those of U.S. mortar mount are made of steel.. Max range: 1500 M/1,566 yds. Overall length: 686mm/27 in., Weight 20.4 KG/44.5 lbs. Rate of fire 15-20 rpm.

	81mm Mortar, M29, U.S. built, smooth bore, muzzle-loaded, weight approx 115 lbs. when assembled, sustained rate of fire of 2 rounds per minute and an effective range of 2,300 - 3,650 M depending on ammo. Bursting area: 30 x 20 yds.
	82mm Mortar, Soviet-built, smooth bore, single-shot, high angle of fire weapon weighs approx 123 lbs.; max rate of fire of 25 rounds per minute, max range of 3,040 M.
	120mm M38 Soviet mortar, can fire 12 - 15 rounds per minute, each round weighs 15.4 KG. Max range: 5,700 M, min range 460 M. Weight of weapon in travelling position 500 KG (1100 lb.). Crew: 6 men.
	4.2" Mortar, M30, U.S. built, rifled, muzzle-loaded, drop-fired weapon, consisting of tube, base plate and standard. Weighs 330 lbs. and has a range max of 4,020 M. Rate of fire: 20 rounds per minute.
MOS	Military Occupational Specialty (in USMC, a 4-digit number. An infantryman was a 0311)
MP	Military Policeman
MPC	Military Payment Certificate or script. Money issued to US troops in Vietnam to minimize black market activity. Called "funny money" by the troops.
MR	Military Region (NVA)
MR-1	South Vietnam's five northernmost provinces
MR V	Military Region V
MSF	Mobile Strike Force, a company-size CIDG force used as a mobile reaction or reserve force and for other special operations. The forces were previously designated as MIKE force companies or Mobile Guerrilla Companies
msg	Message
MSGT	Master Sergeant (USA & USMC E-8)
MSN	Mission
MSR	Military Supply Road
MSS	Manuscript
MT	Motor Transport
MTI	Mobile Target indicator. A radar presentation which shows only targets in motion; signals from stationary targets are subtracted out at the return signal
MUC	Meritorious Unit Commendation
MU GIA PASS	WE 8153 (17-40 N / 105-47 E)
MULE	M274A1 small 4-wheeled platform vehicle
MUONG PHINE	XD 095275
MUSCLE SHOALS	Electronic sensor program
MUSTANG	An officer who was formerly enlisted
MUTTER	Radio callsign for CAC OSCAR
MWHG	Marine Wing Headquarters Group
MWSG	Marine Wing Support Group
NAM	Navy Achievement Medal; Slang for Vietnam
NAM BO	Originally referred to Cochin China (the southern part of Indochina); during the US war in Vietnam, was used by both North and South Vietnam to refer to the entire South Vietnam
NAIL	Callsign for OV-2 and OV-10 FACs of 23rd Tactical Air Squadron
NAVFORV	Naval Forces, Vietnam
NBC	Non Battle Casualty (e.g., a victim of falling, drowning, self-inflicted wound, malaria, traffic accident, etc.)
NCO	Non Commissioned officer
NCR	Naval Construction Regiment
NET	A group of individual radios on the same frequency
NFI	No Further information
NCM	Navy Commendation Medal
N-DAY	NVA term for the commencement of operations (like our D-Day)
NIAGARA	USAF operation over Khe Sanh initiated 05 Jan 1968 by COMUSMACV for a SLAM operation (Seek, Locate, Annihilate, Monitor). Phase I: gathering of intelligence. Phase II: commenced on 22 January 1968 using tactical air and B-52 strikes.
NICKEL STEEL	SOG operation of FOB3 in the DMZ west of the "00" grid line to the western edge

NIMROD	Call sign for A-26s of the 56th Air Commando Wing, Nakhon Phanom Royal Thai Air Force Base operating in Laos
NJP	Non-Judicial Punishment under Article 15 of the uniform Code of Military Conduct (UCMJ), in the Marine Corps it is referred to as "Office hours," in the navy as "Captain's Mast"
NKP	Nakhon Phanom AB, Thailand, site of sensor program headquarters(Task Force ALFA) and readouts during siege of Khe Sanh
NMCB	Naval Mobile Construction Battalion
NMCC	National Military Control Center
N&MCM	Navy & Marine Corps Medal (issued for life-saving actions)
NOD	Night Observation Device; an image intensifier using reflected light from stars or moon to identify targets
NOFORM	Message designation for "Not Releasable to Foreign Nationals"
NOMADS	Nickname for 2/26
NPIC	National Photographic Interpretation Center, an office, part of the CIA's Directorate of intelligence, which analyzes aerial photography by satellites and spy planes. NPIC reports were frequently received by III MAF G-2 during the siege at Khe Sanh
NSA	Naval Support Activity; National Security Agency
NSAM	National Security Action Memorandum
NUC	Naval Unit Commendation
NUMBA ONE	Slang for "very good" or "best"
NUMBA TEN	Slang for "very bad" or "worst"
NUNG	A Vietnamese tribesman of a separate ethnic group and probably of Chinese origin
NVA	North Vietnamese Army (used as slang for an individual soldier of the N VA). The correct term is PAVN, Provisional Army of Vietnam.
NVN	North Vietnam
O-1	Cessna BIRD DOG Propeller-driven plane used for observation, 36' wing span, 25' long, height 7'1", weight empty 1,614 lbs., loaded 2,400-2,430 lbs., max speed 115 MPH, cruising speed at 5,000 ft. 104 MPH, cruising range 530 miles, armed with two marking rockets. Carried one pilot and one passenger
O-2	Cessna "Super Spy Master", FAC aircraft, span 38', length 29'9", height 9'4", weight empty 2,848 lbs., loaded 5,400 lbs.. Max speed 199 MPH at sea level, cruising speed 144 MPH at 1,000 ft., range 1,060 miles,. Armed with marking rockets only, could accommodate a 7.62mm minigun rack.
O&I	Operations and intelligence (USAF team member)
OIC	Officer in Charge
ONTOS	M-50 multiple 106mm recoilless rifle (six 106s), self-propelled, full track
OOB	Order of Battle
OP	Observation Post
OPCON	Under the Operational Control of/to
OPERATIONS	The following were the major infantry operations conducted in the Khe Sanh area, in chronological order:

VIRGINIA	170800H/Apr66 - 011200H/May66	1st Marines
BATTLE OF KHE SANH, SEARCH AND DESTROY
	240001H/Apr67 - 131500H/May67	3d Marines
CROCKETT	131500H/May67 - 162400H/Jul67	26th Marines
ARDMORE	170001H/Jul67 - 312359H/Oct67	26th Marines
SCOTLAND	010001H/Nov67 - 310800H/Mar68	26th Marines
PEGASUS	310800H/Mar68 - 150800H/Apr68	PVC, 1ACD, 26th Mar
SCOTLAND II	150801H/Apr68 - 28 Feb 69	TF GLICK, TF HOTEL
CHARLIE	- 061800H/Jul68	3/4
ROBIN NORTH	2-14 Jun 68	Ist Marines
ROBIN SOUTH	6-18 Jun 68	4th Marines
DAWSON RIVER WEST	020600H/Jan69 - 191600H/Jan69	9th Marines
PURPLE MARTIN	27 Feb - 08 May 69	4th Marines
MAINE CRAG	101610H/Mar69 - 021300H/May69	3rd Marines
TROJAN HORSE	04-27Aug69, 08Sep-01 Oct69	Proj DELTA
HERKIMER MT	09 May - 16 Jul 69	4th Marines

	CAMERON FALLS 291000H/May69 - 230600H/Jun69	9th Marines
	UTAH MESA	1/9, 3/9, 1-5 Mech
	ARLINGTON CANYON 3Jul - 21Sep69	4th Marines
	LAM SON 719 30Jan71-21Sep71	XXIV Corps, 101 Abn Div, 1-5 Mech Div

OPN	Operation
OpO	Operation Order
OpPlan	Operation Plan
OPTOMS	105mm powder charge
OR	Operating Room
OTTER	M-76 tracked vehicle designed to traverse swampy areas. used at khe Sanh to transport personnel from KSCB to 1/9 and 2/26 and evacuate medical casualties on 30 March1968.
"P"	Piastres (Vietnamese money)
(P)	Probable kill
P-38	C-ration can opener
PADRE	Spanish for "father," referring to the Chaplain
PAL	Parcel Air Lift (mail weighing less than 5 pounds sent as 1st Class and Airmail at reduced postage rate to troops)
PASSES	See BAN KARAI, D'AI LAO, MU GIA
PAVN	Peoples Army of Vietnam, the North Vietnamese army
PC	Personnel Carrier, a small truck
PCS	Permanent Change of Station; reassignment to another command
PCV	Provisional Corps (Vietnam)
PEGASUS	Operation conducted in the Khe Sanh area 310800H/Mar68 - 150800H/Apr68 by I ACD, 1st and 26th Marine Regiments, and Provisional Corps Vietnam
PEOPLE SNIFFER	Airborne personnel detector, XM-2, modified E-63 (description and photo in LtGen John H. Hay, Jr., Tactical and Materiel Innovations, Wash D.C.: Dept. of the Army, 1974, pp. 80-81: "This air-transportable electrochemical instrument sensed microscopic particles suspended in the air. Mounted in the utility or light observation helicopters, the detector continuously sampled the atmosphere at the flight altitude of the aircraft for evidence of the enemy. It could also detect the ammonia excretions of men." However, a detection might also disclose a pack of monkeys!)
PERINTREP	Periodic Intelligence Report
PF	Popular Forces. Vietnamese infantry-type platoon-size units with the mission of serving a District, employed primarily as security forces for villages and hamlets to defend against local enemy guerrillas
PFC	Private First Class (E-2)
PHANTOM	F-4 aircraft
PHU BAI COMBAT BASE	YD 880140
PHUGAS	A device in a defensive perimeter to slow down or preclude enemy assault consisting of jellied gasoline (napalm powder added to gasoline) in a metal container (usually a 55-gallon drum), with an explosive command-detonating device (usually made from C-4 plastic explosive)
PI	Point of Impact, Parris Island
PICKLE	Drop from an aircraft (ordnance, pods, fuel, etc.)
PIECE	Weapon
PIEDMONT	Radio callsign of FOB-3 during siege
PIGS	Marine slang for the ONTOS vehicle
PIIU	Photographic Imagery Interpretation Unit (part of G-2)
PINEFOLD	Radio callsign of 1/26
PISS TUBE	Usually a tube container for an 81mm mortar round stuck in the ground at an angle into which a man urinates
PL	Patrol Leader

PLC	Platoon Leaders Course (basic officer training for USMC)
PLT	Platoon
PMDL	Provisional Military Demarcation Line (official term for the DMZ)
PMU	Preventive Medicine Unit
"POGUE"	Marine slang for someone with an easy job
POILANE	Original non-Vietnamese settler at Khe Sanh (Eugene Poilane); coffee plantation managed by his son, Felix; home at XD 858400.
POINT	Forward-most element or person in a moving unit
POL	Petroleum, Oil, and Lubricants
POLICE	Clean-up an area, as "police the area," or "police in some areas was not very good"
POS	Position, e.g., "Come to my POS" (said as one word, not "P" "O" "S")
(post)	Posthumous (award)
POW	Prisoner of War
PPB	Platoon Patrol Base. A campsite from which platoons dispatch patrols
PRACTICE NINE	Code name for the barrier project (see McNamara Wall)
PRAIRIE FIRE	SOG operations in Laos, replacing SHINING BRASS on 01 Mar 1967
PRC-25	Portable radio, frequency range 32 - 75, FM, can be mounted on vehicle with external power supply
PRD	Portable Radio Direction finder
PROJECT DELTA	A joint American/Vietnamese (USSF) special force composed of a reconnaissance element and a reaction force, total strength of 600 men.
PROVIDER	C-123 aircraft
PROJO	Artilleryman's slang for projectile
psi	Points per Square inch
PSYOPS	Psychological Operations (dropping propaganda leaflets from aircraft, broadcasting messages directed at enemy troops, booby-trapping enemy ordnance, etc.)
PSP	Pierced Steel Plating used as an expedient runway
PT	Physical Training
PT-76	Russian-manufactured light amphibious tank, armed with a D55T 76.2mm gun with 40 rounds and a 7,.62mm coaxial machinegun. Cruising range 150 miles without refueling; travels at about 25 MPH over good roads and 6.4 MPH in water. Max range of 76mm guns is 12,000 to 13,290 meters.
PUC	Presidential Unit Citation
"PUFF"	Slang for SPOOKY, AC-47 gunship. Full referral: "Puff the Magic Dragon"
PUNJI STAKE	Short stalks of cut bamboo cut on an angle to a sharp point and placed in the ground with spikes sticking up to impale anyone falling on them, frequently covered with feces.
PURPLE FOXES	HMM-364
PURPLE MARTIN	Operation conducted at Khe Sanh 27 Feb - 08 May 1969 by 4th Marines
PUSH	Slang for radio frequency (e.g., "Tell them to come up on my push.")
"PUT THE HURT ON"	Marine slang for causing someone pain or grief (e.g., "We really put the hurt on Charlie that time.")
PVT	Private (E=-1)
PW	Prisoner of War
PX	Post Exchange, place to purchase toilet articles, candy, etc.
PYGMALLION	Radio callsign of 2/3 during Hill Battles, 1967)
QL	Quoc Lo (National Route) National highway (QL-9 ran through Khe Sanh village)
QUAD 50	M55, 4-barreled .50 caliber air defense machinegun mounted on a vehicle. 800 lbs. Max range 1.8 KM, Max rate of fire 430-555 rounds per minute
QUANG TRI	Northernmost province of South Vietnam. In Vietnamese the words mean "Great Value"
QUANG TRI COMBAT BASE	YD 310553
R&R	Rest and Relaxation, a 5-day period either out of Vietnam or in Vietnam (in a "secure area such as China Beach, DaNang) away from combat. R&R sites included Bangkok, Australia, Hawaii, Kuala Lampur, Singapore.

RACK	Slang for bed or cot
RALLIER	An enemy soldier who surrenders voluntarily
RAP	Rocket Assisted Projectile
RAS	Regimental Aid Station
RC-292	Long radio antenna
Rcn	Reconnaissance
RCT	Regimental Combat Team
RECON	Reconnaissance
RED HAZE	Infra Red
REGT	Regiment
REMINGTON RAIDERS	Marine slang for office clerks
REQUEST MAST	An individual's request to be heard by the Commanding Officer
REVETMENT	Walled-in protective stalls for aircraft
RF	Regional Forces (Vietnamese infantry-type company-size units with the mission of serving a Province, employed primarily to support the PF and conduct operations against enemy local forces under control of the sector commander)
RIDGE RUNNERS	HMM-163
RIGHT GUIDE	A Marine position within a platoon who carries the guidon at the right of the formation. In boot camp this is usually one of the most "squared away" recruits. In Vietnam, the Right Guide assisted the Platoon Sergeant and Platoon Commander by distributing supplies (food, ammunition) and mail.
RING OF STEEL	Close-in artillery fired around a perimeter of an outpost or recon team
RIO	Radar intercept officer
RLT	Regimental Landing Team
ROBIN NORTH AND SOUTH	Operation to ferret out NVA forces south of Route 9, Khe Sanh area, NORTH 2-14 Jun 68 by st Marines, SOUTH 6-18 Jun 68 by 4th Marines
ROCKETS - NVA	122mm - range 12,000 meters	75" long	101 lbs.	5" in diameter
	140mm range 9,000 meters	42" long	63.4 lbs.	5.5" in diameter
ROCKPILE	Artillery position at YD 979558
ROCK QUARRY	Site of quarry for basalt to provide sub-base under air matting of airstrip at Khe Sanh in late CY67; site of Bn 1/9 during the siege, XD 831419.
RON	Remain Over Night
ROUGH PUFF	Army slang for the Regional Forces personnel
ROUGH RIDER	Armed military convoy
RN	Remain Over Night
ROUND	One projectile of ordnance
ROUND EYES	a Westerner, usually referring to American females
RPG	Rocket Propelled Grenade
RPG-7	Soviet 85mm, 18.7-lb. rocket launcher with max. effective range of 500 M, fires a 5-lb. B-41 rocket
RR	Recoilless Rifle (57mm, 75mm, 106mm)
Rt	Route
RT	Recon Team (SOG term)
RTO	Radio Telegraph Operator
RUBBER LADY	Inflatable mattress
RULES OF ENGAGEMENT	Directives issued by competent military authority delineating the circumstances under which U.S. forces will begin and/or continue combat engagement with other forces encountered
RVN	Republic of Vietnam
RZ	Reconnaissance Zone
S	Refers to staff positions in a unit commanded by O-6 or below. S-1:Personnel; S-3 - Intelligence; S-3-Operations and training; S-4-Logistics; S-5-Civic Action

SACSA	Special Assistant for Counterinsurgency and Special Activities (JCS office, at one time headed by General Krulak)
"SADDLE UP"	Slang for "put on your gear and get moving"
SALUTE REPORT	An acronym used by reconnaissance teams to report enemy sightings: S=Size of unit sighted; A=Activity (what they are doing); L=Location (grid coordinates); U=Uniforms they are wearing, patches, etc.; T=Time of sighting; E=Equipment they are carrying.
SANITIZED	Deletion of all sensitive,. classified information
SANTA ANA BRAVO	Radio callsign for recon unit at KSCB in fall of 1967.
SANTA FE TRAIL	A series of intertwining trails running southward through the planes and gentle rolling hills of Laos, intersecting Highway 9 near the village of DAN DONG at the intersection of Route 92. From the BEN HAI River south, branch trails off the Santa Fe Train turned eastward leading to the general operating area of Operations HASTINGS and PRAIRIE.Nickname by USAF Khe Sanh FACs. (XD690507 SE to XD 7214893)
SAPPER	Enemy soldiers that penetrated through barbed wire to emplace explosives, assassinate, etc.
SAR	Search and Rescue
SATCHEL CHARGE	A canvas bag filled with explosives used by sappers attacking a defensive perimeter. Its handles facilitate tossing the bag into targets as the team runs through the area.
SAVA	Special Assistant, Vietnamese Affairs (CIA office)
SAV-A-PLANE	Doctrine that prohibited firing of artillery if aircraft were flying overhead or even had been requested, to prevent rounds from hitting the aircraft
SCAMP	Sensor Control and monitoring Platoon
SCHWERPUNKT	German military term used to denote "vital point" for attack or defense
"SCOCHE"	Japanese word used to refer to "few, small, short"
"SCOPE DOPE"	Marine slang for GCA radar controller
SCOTLAND	Operation in Khe Sanh area 010001H/Nov67 - 310800H/Mar68, conducted by 26th Marines (rein), operation before and during the siege.
SCOTLAND II	Operation in Khe Sanh area 150801H/Apr68 - 28 Feb69 conducted by Task Force GLICK, Task Force HOTEL
SCRUBBED	Ceasing an operation (also "aborted")
SCROUNGE	To appropriate, borrow or acquire by doubtful means, derived from "scringe" meaning "to search about, rummage, pilfer"
SCUBA	Self-Contained Underwater Breathing Apparatus
SCUTTLEBUTT	Rumor or "the word." Derives from the drinking fountain aboard Navy ships, called the "Scuttlebutt" around which small talk occurred.
SEA	South-East Asia
SEABEES	Navy Construction Battalion personnel
SEA HORSE	H-34 helicopter
SEA KNIGHT	CH-46 helicopter
SEALS	Sea/Air/Land US Navy reconnaissance personnel conducting reconnaissance inland from the littoral; conducting guerrilla-type operations.
SEA STALLION	CH-53 helicopter
SEA TIGER	Newspaper distributed by III MAF.
SEATO	Southeast Asia Treaty Organization
SEAWORTHY	Radio callsign for VMO-6 after 01 Feb 1968
SECTION	2 aircraft (USMC)
SESU	Signal Engineer Survey Unit
SF	Special Forces (USA)
SFC	Sergeant First Class (USA E-7)
SGM	Sergeant Major (Army E-9)
SFGA	Special Forces Group (Airborne)
SgtMaj	Sergeant Major (the senior enlistedman ina unit of battalion sixe or larger)

SHACKLE CODE A series of letters used to encrypt numbers one through zero using a 10-letter word with non-repeating letters, e.g., FRENCHLADY in which F=1, R=2, E=3, etc. Other words include: TURKEY LOAF, WALT DISNEY, STOMPED BUG, BASILONE RD, TIGERHOUND

SHINING BRASS SOG operations in Laos beginning 15 Sep 1965; replaced by PRAIRIE FIRE (01 Mar 1967)

SHORT ROUND An artillery round that falls short of its target; a person of short stature

SHORT TIMERS STICK When a man has about two weeks left in country, he might take a stick and make a notch for each remaining day. As that day passes, he cuts off the stick at a notch until on his rotation day he has only a short stick remaining. Some Marines at Khe Sanh took the fuse from a 105 canister, put a .50 cal. shell on one side and the .50 cal bullet on the other, and carried that as a "short-timer's stick" much like the old Field Marshall baton.

SHOTGUN Remington Model 870, pump-action, carried by points on patrol, fires cartridges loaded with buckshot, giving wide spray pattern

SHOVE Radio callsign for 3rd Marine Division

SHRAPNEL Metal fragments from an exploding grenade, mortar round, artillery shell

SI Special intelligence (radio signal intercepts)

SIAF Small Independent Action Force (A study conducted by ARPA of DOD–Advanced Research Projects Agency, Department of Defense) to study tactics and casualty rates of small specialized military units in Vietnam

SICR Special intelligence Collection Requirement: an identified gap in intelligence holdings that may be satisfied only by collection action and which has been validated by the appropriate requirements control authority.

SID Seismic Intrusion Device

SIS Special Intelligence Study

SITREP Situation Report

SIX BY A large flat-bed truck usually with wooden slats on the sides and sometimes a canvas top covering it used for carrying men or supplies

SKIPPER Slang for the "Captain" (O-3 pay grade), derived from the Scandinavian word schiffe meaning captain.

SKY SIX Colloquial designation for God (or the chaplain)

SKYHOOK The "Fulton Skyhook" is a system originated by the Navy and developed by the CIA to retrieve people where landing aircraft, even helicopters, is impossible or impractical, whereby a person on the ground sends up a balloon with an attached rope. A C-130 aircraft equipped with a fork-like device in its nose snatches the rope and reels up the person. Due to the air current, the person is retrieved in the aft ramp of the aircraft.

SKYSPOT MSQ-77 and SST-181 radar-controlled bombing.

SLAM Seek, Locate, Annihilate, Monitor (USAF)

SLAR Side Looking Airborne Radar (detects moving vehicles (MTI)

SLF Special Landing Force (USMC)

SMITTY Radio callsign of 1/4 (SCOTLAND II)

SNUFFY A low-ranking enlistedman (PVT, PFC), one of the troops

SOG Studies and observations Group

SMOKE Usually (not always) the colors are: Red=enemy, Green=friendly, Yello=medevac

SNCO Staff Non-Commissioned Officer

SOP Senior Officer Present; Standard operating Procedure

SORTIE One flight by one aircraft

SP Shore Party (Navy police); Self-Propelled (artillery)

SP4 Specialist 4th class (USA rank)

SP BOX Sundry pack–materials to support a company in the field with items that troops normally could purchase in a PX. Contents:

CONFECTION AND STATIONERY ACCESSORIES BOX

- 20 candy bars
- 24 candy starch bars
- 72 chocolate bars (tropical Hershey)
- 72 candy coated chocolate (like M&Ms)

100 packets chewing gum
2 ball point pens
3 packs of envelopes
3 tablets writing paper

TOILET ARTICLES BOX

2 pressurized cans of shaving cream
1 safety razor
40 razor blades
4 toothpaste
2 tooth brushes
30 soap bars

CIGARETTE BOX

1 carton Camel
1 carton Lucky
1 carton Pall Mall
1 carton Winston
1 carton Salem
1 carton Marlboro
1 carton Kent
2 chewing tobacco
2 pack cigars (5 in each pack)
4 boxes pipe tobacco
100 book matches

SPARROWHAWK	A platoon-size reaction force
SPARS	Special Aerial and Radio Sources
SPECTRE	Radio callsign for AC-130 gunship
SPIDER TRAP	Small hole in ground, usually covered with a trap door of brush and camouflage, holding one enemy soldier. When Americans entered area, the NVA would spring away the camouflage and fire
SPIKE	Small SOG teams of SHINING BRASS assigned 3 Oct 1966
SPIR	Special Photo Interpretation Report
SPOOKY	Modified AC-47 aircraft equipped with three 7.62mm Gatling-type guns that fire 6,000 rounds per minute
SPOS	Strong Point Obstacle System
SPOTLIGHT	Reports from electronic sensors
SPUNKY HANSON	Radio callsign for USSF at Lang Vei, 1967-1968
SQUARED AWAY	In proper form, e.g., "He was a squared away dude," or "get this bunker squared away!"
SQUID	Marine slang for anyone in the Navy, especially corpsmen
SRB	Service Record Book (USMC)
SSG	Staff Sergeant (USA E-6)
SSGT	Staff Sergeant (USMC)
SSM	Silver Star Medal
SSO	Special Signals (intelligence) Officer
STEEL POT	Helmet
SUNRISE	26th Marines regimental air radio callsign
SUU-11A	Mini-gun used on the AC-47 gunship
STARLIGHT SCOPE	AN/PVS-2 image intensifier using light of stars and moon to illumine targets (capable of intensifying 60,000 times)
STRATEGIC HAMLET	Diem government's program to develop system of defended villages. After Diem, became known as New Life Hamlet, and later, the Revolutionary Development program. Bru in the Khe Sanh area were moved to new villages close to the Khe Sanh base. Some Bru, however, opted to remain in the hills and only after the siege of Khe Sanh joined Bru from the strategic hamlets in the refugee resettlement at Cua.

STINGRAY	Recon patrols used as FO to locate enemy and call in supporting arms to destroy
SUPERGAGGLE	Resupply tactic to hill outposts commencing 24 Feb 1968 at Khe Sanh involving a coordinated fixed-wing/helicopter package
SUPIR	Supplemental Photo Interpretation Report
SW	Steel Worker (Navy Seabee rating)
TACA	Tactical Air Controller (Airborne)
TAC AIR	Tactical Air
TACAN	Tactical Air Navigation, a system consisting of short-range UHF radio stations; in the form of a readout on the instrument panel the pilot continuously receives accurate distance and bearing information from the station tuned.
TACC	Tactical Air Control Center (USAF)
TAC NET	Tactical Net (radio frequency)
TA CONG	Bru ville at XD 840409; NVA designation of KSCB
TAD	Temporary Additional Duty (temporarily assigned to another command or activity)
TADOK	Bru ville at XD 839409
TAFDS	Tactical Air-Field Dispensing System, the expeditionary storage and dispensing system of aviation fuel at tactical airfields, using 10,000 gal. fabric tanks
TANKS	M-40 U.S. built, 50.7 ton tank with a crew of 4. Primary armament is a turret-mounted 90mm gun with one .30 caliber and one .50 caliber machinegun. Max road speed of 32 MPH and average range of 195 miles
	PT76 Soviet amphibious tank: fully amphibious, propelled by two water jets mounted at the rear of the hull. Armed with D-56T 76.2mm gun with 40 rounds of ammunition and a 7.62mm coaxial machinegun for light backup. Cruising range of 150 miles without refueling, travels about 25 MPH over good roads and 6.4 MPH in water. Max range of 76mm guns is between 12,000 - 13,290 M. Weakness of the PT-76 is its thin armor plating which may easily be penetrated by a .50 cal, 106mm RR, and 3.5" rocket and mortars. When used on the attack on Lang Vei (the first use of tanks by the NVA in Vietnam), the .50 cal was ineffective, LAWs generally misfired, and 106s were effective (as long as they lasted–not too long), and artillery was too late to prevent their crashing into the camp' perimeter).
TAOR	Tactical Area of Responsibility
Tape	Refers to Oral History Tape Collection in HQMC Historical Division
TASK FORCE ALFA (TFA)	A filter point for sensor information received while under the IGLOO WHITE/COMMANDO HUNT concept; organized in 1967 under command of the 7th Air Force and deployed to Nakhon Phanom AB, Thailand
TASS	Tactical Air Support Squadron (USAF)
TAT-101-E	Emerson Electric Tactic al Armament Turret mounted two M-60 machineguns beneath the chin of a Huey, tracked with an optical aiming device held by the copilot
TBS	The Basic School (Marine officer basic training)
TC	Tank Commander
TCHEPONE	XD 325445 in Laos on Route 9
TCK-TKN	Tong Kong Kich, Tong Khoi Ngha, "General Attack, General Uprising" - the NVA Battle Plan for Tet 1968
TD-6, TD-15	Tractors, "Caterpillar" type
TE	Task Element
T/E	Table of Equipment (authorized equipment for a unit)
TEE TEE	Slang for "little"
TET	Vietnamese New Year
TEMPLE LAKE	Radio callsign for 3/4 (SCOTLAND II)
TF1AE	Task Force One Advisory Element (the SOG unit operating in Khe Sanh atop Hill 950, June, 1971)
THON SON LAM	Outpost at YD 989550, also known as the Rock Pile (for 175s)
THRUST POINT	An imaginary location on the map designated by some code (e.g., cars, planets, cities, etc.) from which locations are designated (e.g., "One click up, two right from Chicago")

TIGERHOUND	USAF project of aerial observation, flying up to 12 miles inside southeastern Laos, south of the 17th parallel (began 5 Dec 1965, terminated 1968)
TIGER TOOTH MOUNTAIN	XD 832543
TIGER TOOTH HILL LZ	XD 830545
TIGER TOOTH MT LZ	XD 832543
TIME	Add 7 hours to "Z" time to get local Khe Sanh ("H") time
TIGHT	Marine slang for closeness to another person
TIO	Target intelligence Officer
T/O	Table of Organization or Task organization (T/O weapons refers to weapons carried for the unit)
TOC	Tactical Operations Center (USA)
"TOP"	The first Sergeant
TOT	Timed On Target (artillery fired simultaneously on the same target to maximize impact)
TOW	Tube-launched, Optically-tracked, Wife-guided missile
TOWER FLOWER	Marine slang for the air tower controller
TPQ	AN/TPQ-10 radar-controlled airstrike
TRACE	(see McNamara Line)
TRACERS	A round of ammunition containing a chemical leaving a trail of color, usually every fifth or tenth round, enabling the shooter to see where the bullets are directed. US ammunition used red tracers; NVA tracers were either green or red
TRIAGE	Medical sorting area where casualties are sorted according to severity of wounds. Those who cannot be saved are neglected in order to concentrate on those who might be.
TS	Top Secret; Tough Shit
TRI-THIEN	The Provinces of Quang Tri and Thua Thien
TRI-THIEN-HUE	The Communist Front consisting of the provinces of Quang Tri, Thua Thien and Hue City
TROJAN HORSE	Operation conducted in Khe Sanh area 04-27Aug69, 08Sep-01Oct69 by Project DELTA
TRW	Tactical Reconnaissance Wing
TSGT	Technical Sergeant (USAF)
TT	Teletype
TTH	Tri-Thien-Hue Front (NVA term)
TULUNGUN	SEATO amphibious operation conducted 02 Mar - 12 Apr 1962 in the Philippines. Word means :mutual assistance." During this operation Marine helicopters were introduced into South Vietnam. The operation focused on the fall of Tchepone (in Laos, just west of Khe Sanh, and how to counter enemy aggression; it was the prelude to US entry into Vietnam)
TUM PLANG	Bru ville at XD 834394
TURN TO	Commence work
UA	Unauthorized Absence
UCMJ	Uniform Code of Military Justice (Title 10 of United States Code)
UH-1E	Bell Iroquois ("Huey"), a single-engine, light attack/observation helicopter noted for its maneuverability and firepower. Main rotor (2-blade) diameter 48 ft., fuselage length 48'1". Weight empty 4,667 lb., basic operating (troop carrier mission) 2,557 lb. maximum takeoff and landing 9,500 lb.. Max speed 127 MPH, range 318 miles,. Armament: 4 M-60 machineguns, 7.62mm grenade launcher 40mm, 48 2.75" rockets, M22 guided missile. Carries 2 pilots and 11-14 troops or 6 litters and a medical assistant, or 3,880 lb. freight.
UH-34D	(See H-34)
UHF	Ultra High Frequency
UL	Upper Left (corner of a patrol area box)
UNIT ONE	A corpsman's bag of medical supplies carried on patrol
UNODIR	Unless Otherwise Directed (added to a message to a superior indicating action one anticipates taking)
URS	Usually Reliable Source (information from signals intelligence)

USA	United States Army
USARPAC	U.S. Army, Pacific
USARV	U.S. Army, Vietnam
USMC	United States Marine Corps
USN	United States Navy
USAF	United States Air Force
USS REPOSE	U.S. Navy Hospital ship (AH-16) operating in DaNang harbor
USS SANCTUARY	U.S. Navy Hospital ship (AH-17) operating in DaNang harbor
USSF	United States Special Forces
UT	Utilityman (Navy Seabee rating)
UTAH MESA	Operation conducted in Khe Sanh area by 1/9, 3/9, and 1st of 5th Mechanized Division
UTILITIES	USMC term for field uniform (US Army refers to them as "fatigues")
VC	Viet Cong
VCB	Vandegrift Combat Base
VESPER BELLS	Radio callsign of 1/1 (SCOTLAND II)
VFR	Visual Flying regulations
VIET CONG	Condensed from the term Viet Nam Cong San, meaning Vietnamese Communists, a term generally applied to the supporters and participants in the Communist-controlled subversive insurgency in South Vietnam.
VIRGINIA	First battalion-sized USMC operation in the Khe Sanh area conducted 170800H/Apr66 to 011200H/May66 by 1st Marine regiment
VMA	Marine Attack Squadron. (In Naval aviation, the "V" designates "Heavier than air" as opposed to craft that are "lighter than air")
VMA(AW)	Marine Attack Squadron (All Weather)
VMC	Visual Meteorological Conditions (USAF)
VMCR	Marine Composite Reconnaissance Squadron
VMF	Marine fighter Squadron
VMFA	Marine Fighter/Attack Squadron
VMGR	Marine Aerial Refueler Transport Squadron (C-130s)
VMO	Marine observation Squadron
VNAF	Vietnam Air Force
VCS	Viet Cong Suspect
VT	Variable Timed (fuse set to explode in the air over a target for area coverage, anti-personnel)
VR	Visual Reconnaissance
WAAPM	Wide Area Anti-Personnel Mine. (Sends out numerous hair-like wires that trigger the mine)
WALKING DEAD	Nickname for Battalion 1/9
WATER BUFFALO	Large pack animal used by Vietnamese; large water container that could be towed
WERS	Wing Equipment and Repair Squadron (at KSCB, ran the TAFDS)
WHISKY	The mortar battery was designated WHISKY battery (81s and 4.2")
WIA	Wounded In Action
WIAE	Wounded in Action and Evacuated
WIANE	Wounded in Action, Not-Evacuated (minor wounds, like a compound fracture during the siege)
WILLY PETER	White phosphorus ordnance; Water-proof bag
WO	Warrant Officer'
The "WORLD"	Everyplace other than Vietnam
WP	White Phosphorus; Water-Proof
WUNDER BEACH	YD 565495
YARD	Term for Montagnard
Z	ZULU Time (Greenwich Mean Time), the time zone in England
XEPONE	River separating Vietnam and Laos; also alternate spelling of Tchepone (XD 3244)
XO	Executive Officer
YELLOWBIRD	Callsign for B-57 aircraft. Used when Lang Vei was overrun

ZORO	Callsign for T-28 aircraft
"1"	Adjutant, personnel staff section
"2"	Intelligence Officer and staff section
"3"	Operations Officer and staff section
0311	USMC MOS for an infantryman
3.5"	Rocket launcher M20A181, weighs 13 lbs., max range 900 yds., weight of rocket 9 lbs. Max effective range: moving–200 yds, stationary–300 yds.
"4"	Logistics Officer and staff section
4.2"	Mortar, M30, U.S. built, rifled, muzzle-loaded, drop-fired weapon, consisting of tube, base plate and standard. Weighs 330 lbs. and has a range max of 4,020 M. Rate of fire: 20 rounds per minute.
"5"	The Executive officer of a unit. Civil Affairs Officer and section
"6"	The Commanding Officer of a unit
"06"	An artilleryman (USMC MOS)
7AF	Seventh Air Force
"8"	The Sergeant Major
8-inch	Howitzer, M55, U.S. built, self-propelled, heavy artillery piece with a max range of 16,900 M and a rate of fire of one round every 2 minutes.
"ONE ZERO"	The Communications Officer and section
12.7	12.7mm heavy machinegun, Soviet Model 38/460ShK
"ONE FOUR"	Air officer and staff section
"ONE NINE"	The Chaplain
"TWO FOUR"	Artillery section
"5 by"	Communicator's parlance for "loud and clear" ("I read you '5 by 5")
37mm	37mm AA gun
.50	Machinegun, U.S. built, belt-fed, recoil-operated, air-cooled, automatic weapon, weighs approx 80 lbs. without mount or ammunition. Sustained rate of fire of 100 rounds per minute and an effective range of 1,450 M.
57mm	Recoilless rifle, M18, weight with sight: 44.4 lbs,.; weight of tripod: 53.2 lbs.; length of rifle: 61.6 in. Max range: 4,340 yds. Weapon of WW II vintage, used by indigenous forces and special small recon units.
60mm	Mortar, M19, U.S. built, smooth-bore, muzzle-loaded weapon, which weighs 45.2 lbs. when assembled. It has a max rate of fire of 30 rounds per minute and a sustained rate of fire of 10 rounds per min. Effective range of 2,000 M. Bursting area: 11 yds (HE and WP).
81mm	Mortar, M29, U.S. built, smooth bore, muzzle-loaded, weight approx 115 lbs. when assembled, sustained rate of fire of 2 rounds per minute and an effective range of 2,300 - 3,650 M depending on ammo. Bursting area: 30 x 20 yds.
82mm	Mortar, Soviet-built, smooth bore, single-shot, high angle of fire weapon which weighs approx 123 lbs.; max rate of fire of 25 rounds per minute and a max range of 3,040 M.
105mm	Howitzer, M101A1, U.S. built, towed, general purpose light artillery piece with a max range of 11,000 M and a max rate of fire of 4 rounds per minute
106mm	Recoilless Rifle M401A1, U.S. built, single shot, recoilless breach-loaded weapon, weighs 438 lbs. when assembled and mounted for firing. It has a sustained rate of fire of 6 rounds per min. and an effective range of 1,365 M.
120mm	M38 Soviet mortar, can fire 12 - 15 rounds per minute, each round weighs 15.4 KG. Max range: 5,700 M, min range 460 M. Weight of weapon in travelling position 500 KG (1100 lb.). Crew: 6 men.
122mm	NVA rocket with range of 12,000 M
130mm	NVA field gun, fires a 74-lb. shell. Range 31,000 M. (Perhaps first introduced during the siege battle at Khe Sanh, although first confirmed during LAM SON-719 at Khe Sanh)
140mm	NVA rocket, range 9,000 M
152mm	Soviet artillery gun. Weighs 17,000 lbs. Capable of firing 4 rounds per minute, range 17,260 M (about 10.5 mi,)
155mm	Howitzer M-114A, towed; and M-109 Self-Propelled, U.S. medium artillery with a max range of 15,000 M and a max rate of fire of 3 rounds per minute

155mm	M53, U.S. built, medium Self-Propelled gun with a 23,000 M range and a sustained rate of fire of one round every 2 minutes.
175mm	M107, U.S. built, self-propelled gun which weighs 62,100 lbs. and fires a 147-lb. projectile to a max range of 32.8 KM. Max rate of fire is one round every 2 minutes.
200mm	Rocket (NVN), max range 22,200 yds. (anticipated, but apparently never used at Khe Sanh)
250mm	Rocket (NVN) with a max range of 61,000 yds (anticipated, but apparently never used at Khe Sanh)
292	RC-292 type of radio antenna
360	A circular defense in which men are placed to cover all approaches to a position
5 PARAGRAPH ORDER	A system for issuing an expedient operation to a team, platoon, company: Paragraph 1 - situation (A. Enemy, B. Friendly, C. Attachments) Paragraph 2 - Mission Paragraph 3 - Execution Paragraph 4 - Admin and Logistics Paragraph 5 - Command and Communications
782 gear	individual combat gear belonging to the unit to outfit a combat Marine (canteens, web gear, poncho, mess kit, etc.)
834 AD	834th Air Division (USAF)
999	Designation of Combat Essential Supplies (designated by a red circle with white "999" numbers)
III MAF	Third Marine Amphibious Force, the senior Marine command in Vietnam, headquartered at Camp Horn, DaNang

MARINE UNIT DESIGNATIONS:

A/1/9	Alfa Company, 1st Battalion, 9th Marine Regiment
A-1	First Platoon of company A
1/26	First Battalion, Twenty-Sixth Marine Regiment
26 MAR	Twenty-Sixth Marine Regiment

SELECTION OF MISCELLANEOUS LETTERS, MEMORANDUMS, AND REPORTS WRITTEN WHILE IN VIETNAM PERTAINING TO KHE SANH

Memo to Battalion "3", Subj: Chronology for July, 1967; submission of, dated 02 August 1967

The assigned Protestant chaplain[885] departed Khe Sanh the early part of July, 1967; no record of his activities of July is available. The Protestant chaplain assigned to THIRD Shore Party arrived in a TAD status to 1/26 on 18 July 1967. This report reflects the period 18-31 July.

The chaplain remained in the Khe Sanh area 18-31 July, spending about half the days and nights in the CP area; the remainder days and nights were spent (with at least one night in each instance) on Hills 861, 881, "C" Co. at 913404, and the Army Special Forces Detachment A-101 at Lang Vei. Sunday morning and afternoon services were provided in the CP area. Adverse weather precluded more extensive visitation with rifle companies and pastoral calling in the CP area.

A total of 15 Protestant services were conducted with a total attendance of 436. Roman Catholic masses were celebrated for 1/26 personnel by the 3/26 chaplain. Services were also conducted for personnel at the RLT 26 Radio Relay station (Hill 950), and the CAC "O" HQ in the hamlet of Khe Sanh for personnel attached to the three CAC units (CAP O-1, CAP PO-2, and CAP O-3).

Two memorial services were conducted jointly with the 3/26 Roman Catholic chaplain for the LSU unit and MIKE Company (3/26); total attendance was approximately 100 men.

Three orientation lectures were presented to approximately 70 men. Daily visitations to the patients in "C" Med. were made while in the CP area. Approximately 80 Bibles were distributed (the American Bible Society translation), in addition to tracts and other literature. Counseling cases numbered 12.

Visitation involved 12 helicopter flights, 6 rough rider and convoy-type rides, and one 8-hour patrol.

---

[885] David Meschke.

Letter to parents, Sunday, 13 August 1967

Dear folks...

...The head officer, a bird Colonel [COL John J. Padley], went quite high (I guess to some General staff) and got me transferred here. I have heard from many different sources that he liked me and wanted me to stay. So my new address is as indicated above....

What's happening in Milwaukee!! Is Frank Zeidler's house OK? I was very shocked to see in our newspaper, the Stars and Stripes, about Milwaukee![886]

We are surrounded by mountains–very, very beautiful. We are also surrounded by huge numbers–several thousand–trained North Vietnamese troops, and probably can expect a major attack on our base. Laos and the DMZ are hostile. We're right in the Supply route to the VC in the south, so they'll try to get us out, everyone thinks.

I've never been more busy in my life! Since July 20th (to now, 13 Aug, less than a month), I've conducted 27 services, gone on 2 patrols, made about 20 helicopter flights, and gone all over the country on convoys and special services,.

The men are deeply religious on the whole, not because they're scared, but, I feel, genuinely so. Many read their Bibles daily. Many wear or want to wear crosses (openly, since many don't wear shirts). Some have a cross on their battle helmet. Many come up to me with religious questions - many others with deep problems.

The terrain is extremely rough. I've gone on a patrol up and down streams, sliding, falling, getting caught in vines, being out by the elephant grass (grass as high as the head), been completely exhausted. We have an out-door "head." One time it rained 3 straight days. In order to excrete, one just sat in the rain. I cook many of my own meals. I do my own washing. It's like a continual camping out, and I love it.

There is only one really bad problem here, the rats. They are on all the hills and on the base. They creep out during the night and go through all our hooches. The catholic father spent one night in an underground bunker which had a dirt ledge. A rat lost its footing and landed right on his belly! He excitedly sat up in bed and exclaimed "shit!" If a rat bites, one gets all the 12 rabies shots in the stomach plus plague, typhus, typhoid, tetanus shots. I had one on my feet one night. I fear them more than the base being rocketed and mortared.

The Marines are certainly a very wonderful group. I am very proud to be associated with them. They aren't the rough, toughened gangster-type (except in battle), yet they really work very hard–very, very hard, but don't complain or gripe. Rather, they know what they're doing is what's necessary, and they do it. They are very pleasant, sometimes humorous. They live under horrible conditions, yet express a high morale. (On the hills there isn't enough water, so they only shave every other day. There are no facilities, so they go for maybe 3 months without being able to take a shower! They get all exhausted on long, arduous patrols, get leeches and elephant grass sores. They live underground. They get wet and can't get dry.) Despite all this they have a high morale, attend religious services in great numbers, continually crack jokes, are friendly and manage somehow to keep as clean as possible.

I wish all young men could be Marines!

... Love, Ray

Letter to LCDR David L. Meschke,[887] CHC, USN, 16 August 1967

Dear Chaplain Meschke:

As you probably knew prior to your departure, I would be serving on a temporary basis here in Khe Sanh. Well, after being here two weeks and liking it so well, I requested the Colonel of 1/26 to see if there were any way possible for me to remain here. As things turned out, COL Padley went pretty high up, put in a good word for me, and so here I am, permanently attached.

I have found this to be one of the most meaningful periods in my life, as undoubtedly you did also. The work has taken up much time and more energy, hoping from hill to hill. I have even gone out on patrols–and really discovered the feelings and exertions demanded by our Marines here. I have been very deeply impressed with their high morale despite many very unfavorable circumstances of living.

Things have been quiet around here–nothing new really happening since the last mortar attack on the base in June, except a small ambush incident about three weeks. ago. Although there are many NVA battalions and even regiments in our immediate area, there are no incidents. Perhaps, however, we will need your prayers as the monsoon season begins in [886] Racial riots in Milwaukee involved numerous houses being burned and the city cordoned-off by police.

[887] My immediate predecessor as Chaplain of 1/26.

October! The Millers[888] have been gone thus far. I believe Mrs. Miller had a baby boy. I will certainly look them up in the immediate future. Clarence Perry[889] left a week ago last Monday, and our new X.O. promises to give me a clerk before this week ends. I have requested Waller.

You may be interested to note that I have heard from dozens of people all over how much they appreciated your ministry here. You have left a very high standard; I only hope that through God's grace I may be equipped to continue reaping where others sowed! May our Lord continue to bless you in your work.

...Letter to Rev. Charles E. Witt, 16 August 1967[890]

Dear Pastor Witt (and others in the upper room):

Please excuse not having written earlier, but I have been in a somewhat unsettled situation, and have finally been given a permanent "roost" here in Khe Sanh, in the extreme upper north and west area of Vietnam. At least here it is perhaps the coolest area in Vietnam, although it is very rainy, and the monsoons will be upon us very soon. We are surrounded by mountains and everything is very beautiful. Many of the men here remark how this area could be one of the most beautiful areas in the world for the vacation–but the war situation. We, of course, live in bunkers, mainly underground, all of which involves living with the infected rats. One rat recently was on my feet! I woke up at about 4, stretched my legs out, and heard a barrage of squeaks–all I could think of were the 12 rabies shots in my stomach! The catholic chaplain had one fall right on his bare chest!

The people here are tops. They are courteous, kind, considerate, one to another. They work very hard, often in the most unfavorable of circumstances, yet do it willingly. The Christians that are here are so openly and provide a tremendous witness to others. Many read their Bibles daily, lead a meaningful prayer life. I have huge attendances at my worship services–often perhaps ALL the Protestants attached. I have had offerings also–and I don't receive 5 cent pieces of military currency, but often receive $1.00 bills, sometimes a $5.00 bill! I conduct about one worship service each day, and four on Sundays–so you can see I am very busy. I hop from one hill to another (each hill is occupied by a company), stay overnight in their war situation, conduct a service, talk with the men, and leave for the next hill. This has involved dozens of helicopter flights over hostile areas. We have the most trying counseling cases–men paralyzed with fear, anxiety; problems concerning those back home. The need is indeed very great!

Things are fairly quiet here right now. The base hasn't been attacked since late June. We are surrounded by thousands of enemy–North Vietnamese troops, and can perhaps expect a massive attack in the next month or so–so please remember us in your prayers!–we certainly need them!

Letter to Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Ervin Tallent, 22 August 1967

...

A memorial service for Garry was held Monday, August 21st, attended by his whole company as well as many others on the base.

You may be comforted in knowing that only a couple of hours prior to the tragedy, your son Garry was attending our worship service. He came in a few minutes after we had started with two of his buddies. One of these buddies told me that it was Garry that had suggested to them that they go to church services. His act of Christian witness has left a lasting and indelible mark on his fellow Marines.....

Letter to Vietnam Service Women, 1628 E. 37th, Odessa, Texas, 05 September 1967

Dear Ladies:

Your recent packages of cookies and candies have been distributed among the men here. I have dropped one off at our Battalion Aid Station (where men who are recovering and being treated from various illnesses are), to some of our reconnaissance teams (who go out on long 5-day patrols, enduring hardships that were I to fully describe, you might be tempted to shed a tear), and I will take a couple to some of our men on the hills–(these men occupy strategic hills, and due to [888] John and Carolyn Miller were Wycliffe Bible Translators, living in Khe Sanh since 1963, engaged in translating the Bible into the language of the mountain tribe of the area, the Brou, and also developing a written language and teaching the children to be literate for the first time in their cultural history.

---

[889] The Chaplains Clerk, 1/26.

[890] This letter was printed in: Carroll, Andrew, Ed., Grace Under Fire, Letters of Faith in Times of War, Colorado Springs, Co: Water Brook Press, 2007, pp. 96-97.

supply conditions, live there for about two months without being able to take showers, wear the same jungle uniform getting it wet on patrols during the day, and having to sleep in it at night, with rats crawling in their living spaces dug into the earth, etc.

Needless to say, these men deserve everything they can get! They endure physical hardships and pains, anxieties of battle, and many feel alone.

It is due to thoughtful and kind gestures such as yours, that keep us going.

Should you ever desire to send more such packages, they will find very appreciative recipients in this advanced combat base.

Letter to parents, Tuesday, 12 Sep 1967

Dear folks....

First of all, I guess we must all be very thankful. Our base hasn't been hit during all the recent attacks on our bases. Everyone, in fact–every activity–has been hit in connection with the recently passed elections, except ours. We have been graciously sparred. The other bases have been hit horribly, not that there have been so many killed, but the bases have been simply leveled down, and their fuel and ammunition dumps blown up. One of the battalions that had been on our base (a battalion has about 1100 men) was on an operation, and hit very badly.[891] In one battle of an hour or so, 18 of our men were killed and 200 wounded. I was down yesterday at the central hospital area at Phu Bai when they brought some casualties in–horrible! In one 16 hour period, they performed 9 amputations of legs and arms. I watched a man in surgery–one doctor was removing pieces of shrapnel from his leg, another was lifting with a forceps a large jagged piece of shrapnel out of his butt.

Last week I built my bunker. Local Brou were used to fill sand bags, but most of the 7,000 or so sand bags were put in place by me. I got 55 gallon oil drums, chiseled off the tops with a cold chisel and hammer, filled them with dirt. Then we took sand bags around these and on top, building up the walls. The inside is just under 6-foot tall. We used air matting strips (pieces of aluminum 12' long, 2-1/2' wide, and about 1-1/4" thick, each weighing about 150 pounds) for the walls and ceiling. 3 for each wall, held in place by steel stakes, and about 9 strips across the top. The floor is pallets, with pieces of wood from boxes used to transport ammunition, nailed to the pallets. This helps to make it rat-proof and, if it floods, I won't get wet. I also made a screened door! So I've become a carpenter and builder!

Of course, while all that was happening, all my gear was in utter chaos! Also, there were many problems getting supplies and sand bag working parties. Then, sometimes it would rain, and operations ceased! So it was, in a way, a lot of fun and physically exhausting. But at times it was extremely frustrating. Each sandbag weighs about 40 pounds. To be placed, it must be pounded flat by a small shovel. Boy, did I have sore muscles! But at least I'm protected in case the base should be attacked by mortars or rockets. So I can sleep securely.

All your most welcomed packages arrived in good condition–the monsoon gear, the athletic gear, the 2 small boxes of candy and sausage, and books. The letters take about 5 - 7 days to come here. As far as some things to send, cookies can be sent in small coffee cans and packed so they don't jar–the coffee can will help keep it from being crushed. Hard candy, especially things like peppermint sticks or those circular red and white peppermints would be appreciated. Any canned goods–spaghetti and meat balls, etc. are always good to warm up during monsoons. The water is pretty good and it's not too hot here, so cool-aid isn't in much demand, although an occasional cool-aid is good for a diversion now and then, so if you could send a package now and then.

I'll be needing some books to read during monsoons when I can't get out. If you could send the 5 or so books on the Gospel of John that are on the book shelf near the desk in the middle bedroom, one or two at a time, that would be good.

If you could take the trouble to do so, I'd like to get some clippings of newspapers, like the religious pages of the Sentinel every Saturday, and the sentinel comics (Mandrake, Buz Sawyer, Flash Gordon), and local news events–things that are happening–to be included with letters and packages.

In your letters, tell also what's happening around the city and the country (we don't always hear everything), what's happening down at church (I don't always get the Tidings–some, but few, come through).

I've been very busy with my religious services also. In one 3-day period, I conducted 9 different worship services! Practically every day, I take about 2 helicopter rides to get to the men of different units. So there's never a dull moment. In fact, I'm busy from 6 in the morning until about midnight every day, 7 days a week. This afternoon, I took a nap!–the first I've taken since coming here. But had I not, I think I'd of collapsed. So if I don't write more often, it's not that I'm not thinking of all of you every day, but either I'm busy on the base, running all over, or I'm out with the troops in the field, where I sleep over night with them.

Thanks for all the packages. Please greet everyone. Love, Ray

---

[891] Battalion 3/26, Operation KINGFISHER.

Letter to parents, Tuesday, 19 September 1967

Dear folks:

Today was a very happy day. I received your two packages and your letter of the 12th. The cookies were so good, I was almost tempted to eat them all - all at one sitting! Thank you.

the weather the past few days has been completely horrible - rain! From noon Saturday to noon Sunday - 7 inches; from noon Sunday to noon Monday - 8-1/2 inches. but the monsoon is yet coming, and when it comes, they say we get about 8 inches every hour, for 3 or 4 months! The basic problem is keeping dry and clean. Rain gear helps a lot, but there's always some wetness. The mud gets about a foot or two deep, a thin, soupy mud. It gets too cold to take a shower, and one just feels miserable.

By now you should have received my letter that we haven't been hit. We still haven't. But there's always some young man dying here–malaria, snipers, drowning. Sunday morning, I was walking to chow when the ambulance came to the medical area in which I live. I helped carry in the stretcher. The man had blood all over his mouth and nose. I helped cut away his shirt. The doctor put a tube in his chest cavity to drain off the internal bleeding, and then operated on his neck and chest to restore breathing. The man was unconscious all the time. They sent him away on a helicopter to our nearest hospital at Phu Bai. He died on the way. Another man was brought in, fully conscious. Since we have no way of putting people "under" here, he remained fully conscious as the doctor cut into his side to insert the tube to drain the blood. He screamed; I cried. I guess he's all right now. Ten others were brought in with broken legs and backs. A bunker they were in collapsed. After looking at it, it's a wonder more didn't die. The men were all " short-timers" - only a week or two yet to do. The man who died was 20 years old and married.

I've been going out on large-sized patrols, "humping" the very steep and muddy mountains here. It's quite exhausting, but I like it, and the men really appreciate seeing the chaplain with them. So if I can't go to the hills because of the rain by chopper, I hike out to them!

... our mail here has been very bad due to the weather. They can't fly it in. There's a lot of mail "in the rear" waiting for us.

Thanks again for the good goodies - they're real good - send more! Love, Ray.

Letter to parents, Sunday, 24 September 1967

Dear folks...We've been experiencing a lot of rain lately as the steady rains of the monsoons approach us. You have no idea how miserable things get–everything's continually wet. It gets too cold to take a shower, but you still have to. The clothing gets dirtier and dirtier because, although you can wash it, it will never dry. So you just let it keep on letting muddy and smelly, and endure it. Like they say here, it makes you "hard corps."

Today is Sunday. We had a larger attendance than usual at our morning worship, despite the rain and the mud. I also used for the first time, a pulpit. The pulpit was made by the men of one of the units here [892] who presented it to me one evening out of appreciation for visiting them and taking a personal interest in them. They said I was the first chaplain who took the time to do that.

... I bought a crossbow. They use it here in this part of the country for hunting. It's more powerful than a lot of rifles. Also purchased a flute made of about 10 small bamboo stalks, arranged like an organ. These items are very hard to come by here. ...

Not too much is happening around here, and that's good, as far as we're all concerned! Everyone else around us is getting bombed, rocketed, and mortared. We're pretty safe here, although the enemy is all around us, all "crack" troops from the north who have infiltrated across the DMZ into the south in violation of the treaty.

I think tomorrow I might be able to go out on a 5-day patrol. Our battalion C.O. is thinking it over, and will let me know today.... Love, Ray [892] B Co., 3rd Recon Bn.

Letter to District Chaplain, 9ND,[893] 30 September 1967

Dear Chaplain:

I am not quite sure to whom to address this as the office personnel change so frequently. However, the two ladies will probably recall me, and if Chaplain Wetzel is still there he will certainly recall me also. Right now, I am serving in the extreme northwest corner of S. Vietnam at Khe Sanh. Although there is presently only one battalion here, the attachments and everyone else brings the total personnel strength to around 3,000, and I'm the only chaplain for those men. The area is unlike other parts of VN, for it is quite cool here. We are surrounded by beautiful mountains, and the cloud formations at night are the most beautiful I've ever seen. we have two companies out in the hills–Hill 861 and Hill 881–which perhaps you heard about last May. Since 27 June, however, we have been blessed with no attacks, while practically every other base here, including those nearest us–Con Thien, Camp J.J. Carroll, Dong Ha, the Rock Pile, etc., are continually blasted, day and night.

As I suppose all chaplains here report, the men are most receptive to the chaplain, and evidence private prayer life and devotional attention which is certainly gratifying. The work is very heavy; the rewards are felt as one feels he is doing something for personnel in need.

The main reason for which I am writing this letter, however, is a request for some materials I believe you can supply. So far I have conducted six memorial services–malaria, drowning, killed by sniper, etc. I have no appropriate bulletins for this, and neither does our Division office at Phu Bai. All they sent me was a bulletin with the praying hands. I recall that in the basement there were several large boxes of blank bulletins for use by reserve chaplains, as I myself used them. If at all possible, it would be deeply appreciated could you send me two or three boxes of 500 bulletins, which a patriotic theme, especially ones like the enclosed.

The monsoons should strike us in a week or so, and I'll probably be confined in my bunker hooch, at which time I'll write more extensively concerning my experiences and activities here. Please greet the ladies in the office for me. Thank you. Very respectively...

Memo to Battalion "3", Subj: Monthly chronology; report of, dated 30 Sep 1967

1. A total of 26 Protestant worship services were conducted with a total attendance of 485, as follows:

Place	Services	Total attendance
1/26 CP Mess	5	144
1/26 Field Mess	4	48
3/26 CP mess	1	12
1/13 Mess	4	52
CAC units	2	9
Hill 861	2	64
Hill 881	4	110
Hill 950	2	18
Army Det A-101	1	3
B Co, 3d Recon	1	25
TOTAL	26	485

A total offering for the above collected was $168.85 and 200 P's. In addition to the above, three Memorial services were held. Weekly visits to the B.A.S., frequent visits on the hills while remaining overnight at the various positions, and the usual amount of counseling sessions were held.

2. During this month 3/26 departed, cutting the usual number of services. The Roman Catholic Chaplain was transferred out, leaving the base without Roman Catholic Masses, the last half of the month. Rains during the first part of the month precluded more extensive coverage of outlying areas.

[893] Chaplain Craven, District Chaplain, NINTH Naval District, Great Lakes, Illinois.

3. Contact was made with Mr. and Mrs. John Miller and Rev. Loc, resident in Khe Sanh village. The chaplain was present to help arrange possible Med Cap visits to Lang Bu; prepared and distributed an extensive study on the Brou, and visited Ta Cong, Lang Vei, A Rang, Chuua, Lang Kat, and Tum Plang. The chaplain maintained close contact with the troops, participated in 5 patrols, company-size.

Letter to parents, Monday, 2 October 1967

Dear folks:

We're now having rain off and on, and the monsoon approaches. Yesterday, however, we had fairly clear skies for church services. Being the first Sunday in the month, we had communion. I was very surprised because the attendances were so high. At one service we usually have 30; we had 44. And at the second service I usually have 7; we had 29! Last week I had a service practically every day, a total of 5 weekday services, and 2 patrols. On one patrol we went through all the local Brou villages. It was most interesting. The people are very primitive and although they used to wear hardly no clothes, they now wear almost anything. The children wear old T-shirts discarded by the Marines here. on the other patrol we walked up and down steep hills and waded up a river stream waist high. It's been a very interesting week. Not too much has been happening in our immediate area – let's hope it stays that way!

There are a couple of items I can use–some clothespins (not the solid wood ones, but the wooden ones with the spring), about a dozen. Also some Techmatic razor blades: they don't sell that kind in our meagerly stocked PX. I have 2 left - that should last me until some more come. All your packages come through real well. I just sent two packages in the form of tubes[894]. Please unpack very carefully. one contains a large and very sharp knife, the other contains a very fragile bamboo flute....

O yes, on the same shelf as the books on John is a blue colored Greek New Testament. Please send that also. Love, Ray.

Letter to parents, Sunday, 15 October 1967

Dear folks: ... The day I wrote you, Monday the 2nd, I went out to a group near the base known as "CAC" (Combined Action Company). These groups consist of Marines plus local Vietnamese (or Brou) forces. They are very small and live in pretty "indefensible" positions outside the base.

I had a most interesting time. They are located near the local Brou villages. One of the local natives invited me into his house for a meal. The houses are built on stilts (to protect from the rains)[895] and have thatched roofs. They are very small inside. The occasion was a worship ceremony and sacrificial meal. He threw little pieces of bamboo, and talked with his ancestors or sacrificed some rice, depending on how they landed. He rotated a platter of rice 6 times one way and 8 times the other way. He said the 6 times stood for 6 bad dreams he had that the gods would take away from him, and the 8 times stood for 8 good dreams the gods would fulfill for him. The meal consisted of rice prepared several different ways, and the sacrificial pig. The latter, fortunately was cooked. But, all over the pieces of meat was poured some fresh blood. You're expected to eat everything placed in front of you or you deeply insult the people. Fortunately two CAC Marines were with us, and they ate the bloodied pig! He kept referring to me as "HONCHO," and from what the Marines say, was deeply honored that I came. of course the honor goes both ways, for the Brou rarely invite foreigners to eat with them. The pig he sacrified cost him $15.00; he earns $30.00 a month. What a tithe of offering–50%! Yet he said at the end, "gods don't help; doctor's medicine does." (They only sacrifice when there's illness). One of the marines remarked how easy it would be to lead these people from paganism.

I had some very close relations with the CAC personnel. They are in 2 locations. In both I hold services and practically everyone turns out, including Roman Catholics and atheists! Although they are very small units to start with,. I was playing baseball and going on patrol with them. On one patrol, .. I joined in a swim in a rushing river for about an hour or so.

I continue to go to the hills here also.

Thank you for all the letters and packages!... There are some books on the Gospel of John. Hoskyns: The Fourth Gospel, Alf Correl: Consummatum est, C.H. Dodd, Interpreting the 4th Gospel, C.H. Dodd, History and tradition in the 4th Gospel. Please send these also. ... The newspaper clippings are very greatly appreciated. It's amazing how a little bit of home can mean so much.

---

[894] Black, cardboard tubes in which 106mm recoilless rifle rounds are packed.
[895] And tigers!

Things are all quite quiet and routine around here. Everyone's getting hit but us. Our Lord is gracious and kind.. Love, Ray.

Memo to Battalion "3", Subj: Command Chronology for period 01-31 Oct 1967; Submission of, dated 01 Nov 1967

1. A total of 35 Protestant worship services with a total attendance of 675 were conducted as follows:

Place	No. of Services	Total Attendance
1/26 CP mess	5	170
Hill 881	5	181
Hill 861	4	92
Hill 950	1	15
1/26 field mess (+ A Bty, 1/13)	5	79
H Bty, 1/13	5	67
CAC units (CAP 0 =1, 2, 3)	8	51
B Co., 3d Recon	1	10
MCB-11 at Lang Vei	1	10

2. One memorial service was conducted for CPL Sink, D Co., 1/26. Four troop indoctrination lectures were held for a total of 158 new Marines and corpsmen.

3. In the area of civic action, the chaplain attended one Brou sacrificial worship ceremony and feast and one funeral feast, both at Ta Cong. The chaplain continued to maintain very close contact with Mr. and Mrs. John Miller of Wycliffe Bible Translators in Khe Sanh, and donated some supplies to Father Poncet, the local French priest.

4. Tract racks, constructed by the SeaBees, were placed in the 1/26 CP mess, Sub Unit 5 officer mess, Sub Unit 5 EM mess, 1/26 field mess, and the 1/26 BAS. Twenty cartons of religious literature from the Lutheran Council in the U.S.A., together with Bibles have been placed in these racks or distributed, totaling several thousand pieces.

5. Roman Catholic coverage was provided the first two weeks by Fr. Jon McElroy of 3/26. Fr. Driscoll arrived the fourth week, attached to Sub Unit 5. L.D.S. services were inaugurated 29 Oct, led by Chief Rees of the CB unit.

Letter to LT David Kirsh, Chaplain, 3rd Marine Amphibious Force, DaNang, RVN, dated 2 Nov 1967

Dear Chaplain Kirsch:

Please send me a few Mezuzahs. I am not sure I spelled that correctly; the person asking for one says it is a small cylinder suspended from a neck chain.. I would like a few extra for future requests. Thank you.

Letter to parents, Sunday, 24 September 1967

Dear folks....

You'll never guess what you son is doing now! Going on patrols was not enough'; eating local Brou dishes wasn't enough. Now he's going through exercises with the reconnaissance unit here. These are small groups of 7 men who blacken & camouflage their faces and go out for a week, living and sleeping in the jungle. Well, today I got all wet, going through river-crossing drills. Tomorrow I will be rappelling from a helicopter. This is going down a rope, like going down a cliff on a mountain, by jumping off the cliff, having a rope tied about your torso through which another rope runs that you go down on. Only, in this case, there is no cliff. The chopper just goes up 100 feet or so, and we fall down on the rope, catching ourselves periodically, to break the rate of descent. When this happens, you bounce up and down 10 feet or so. You're in a laying-down position on the descent. Sounds like a lot of fun, doesn't it! That's tomorrow.

The rains haven't come down as yet; we've been enjoying beautifully sunny and cool days. But, I guess it will soon be upon us.

The rains did come, however, for a couple of days. I was staying overnight on one of the outpost hills. All day Saturday, it was rainy and misty, so the choppers couldn't pick me up. I was getting very worried I wouldn't be able to return to the base for Sunday church services. But Sunday morning it cleared up briefly, just long enough for the choppers to pick me up.

I have had some good times with the Millers, missionaries living here, who had me over for lunch one day.

There was a TV team here from Walter Cronkite's program, taking tapes. If that "Special on Khe Sanh" hasn't been shown yet, you may see me on several of the scenes, as I was with the TV team most of the day.

... I keep very, very busy. Last week we had 8 worship services, and I went on a very long and difficult patrol...

The whole 3rd Marine Division here was just awarded the Presidential Unit Citation, one more ribbon for the uniform–a very highly prized one at that!

Say hello to everyone. Love, Ray.

Letter to La Camus Navy Mother's Club, 11 November 1967

Dear Mrs. Winter:

The box containing the individually wrapped Christmas packages were today distributed to the men of the second platoon of " B" Co., 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion. Some of the men were already out on patrol, and those who were still here were just preparing to leave on an insert. Although their faces were painted with dark camouflage make-up, many expressions of gladness and happiness were quite evident. One Marine remarked how good it was knowing others back home were praying and concerned for them over here.

Your kind and thoughtful gesture I am sure will give the men added confidence and heightened morale as they go out on their long, arduous, and exhausting and perilous patrols...

Letter to parents, Sunday, 21 November 1967

Dear folks:...

...we were socked in by fog for over a week, and then we got something like 15,000 pounds of mail in one day...

Last Thursday, one of my close friends in the recon. group here was drowned. He was one of those people that was always smiling and telling jokes when everyone else was depressed, or mad. He is the first one that has died here that I knew personally. He used to attend my worship services. He only had about 30 days left to do here. he was a non-swimmer. His name was "Meggs," and everyone called him "Muggs."...

Love, Ray

Letter to Rev. and Mrs. Robert Wurtz, 25 November 1967

Dear Bob and Kay:

... Bob, war is hell. Of course, we are very fortunate here at Khe Sanh. The battles for hills 861 and 881 are gone, and things have been quiet, although we have several thousand enemy troops (trained North Vietnamese at that) all around us, and can expect to be hit at any time. The surrounding countryside is very beautiful–mountains and beautiful sunsets. The local people are friendly and quaint. I have been invited to and participated in (as an observer) some spirit worship and feasts (of eating sacrificed pig with fresh blood poured over it–ugh!). But there is the black side to things also, and we could definitely not survive were it not that we pray every night and day Luther's prayer, "We thank Thee, O Lord, that Thou hast so graciously protected us through the night from all danger and harm ... into Thy hands we commend our bodies and souls and all that is ours..."

I have seen about 10 to 12 men in body bags since I've been here–simply ghastly. (I'll omit any description). The last one was a young boy, with less than 30 days to do here, who attended by church services (he was Baptist), who was always smiling, telling a joke, or making people laugh when they were low, depressed, or angry. Then there was another man who attended my Sunday worship services, with his face all painted with camouflage paint (he was just getting ready to go out into the field on a reconnaissance patrol). They brought him in two hours later, shot in the head. It's gotten now that I have no more tears to shed!

...

The meaning of the incarnation has become ever newly impressed upon my mind, for I share the same discomforts and fears and anxieties with the men, not because I have to, not even because I want to, not because of some religious imperative I feel I must obey, but simply because I just feel myself doing it, and loving these men in the sense of being willing to give totally (John 15, and John 13.1, and 1 John 2.6 and 3.14).

I do and go wherever my men are. I live with them day and night in sorrow and joy in work and recreation. I go out on patrols because that's where they are, and I feel I must be "present" to them, and this gives them courage and confidence.

Bob, I've come to look upon further education as just so much adiaphora, a sort of selfishness or self-fulfillment, when the Christian must be concerned about self-giving. My marks were straight A's–and that at the university of Chicago, which is supposedly the roughest theological graduate school in the nation! But my heart wasn't there. I had a course in the Gospel of John, taught by Dr. Robert M. Grant, a leading authority, perhaps the leading authority on John alive today. Well, we all had to turn in papers. Practically all the papers dealt with some minute detail of the Gospel that was of intellectual curiosity interest only. At the conclusion of all this trivia, the great Doctor remarked, "Why did you choose that? What good does all that do?" Is that the emphasis of the Gospel? and like questions[896]. I hadn't turned in a paper for that course since I audited it, but what he said only convinced me further.

In all, however, that was a deeply enriching experience at Chicago, but it was enriching only in the direction of realizing once again the command, "Go ye therefore into all the world!" I did research on Luther's doctrine of the Two Kingdoms (loyalty to the gospel and loyalty to the "powers that are ordained of God"–the state; being a Christian soldier, etc.); a large paper on the social ethical implications of Kierkegaard's work, with emphasis on his book, Works of Love (which has become increasingly influential upon my ideas–you ought to read it someday); and a paper on the Holy Spirit as active in community (love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, meekness, etc., being communal activities; the Lord's supper, the participating in the ;holiness of God as the "communion of saints," etc.). I was all set to go, and I went.

Likewise my experiences at Oak Creek were a great expense of personal effort and much reward. That was a horribly anxious experience, not knowing from Sunday to Sunday what would result, always praying before each Service (since I never saw who was there until the beginning of the Service, due to architectural arrangements)–"O Lord, let only Your glory shine, let people faithfully gather to Praise your Name, and let not my sinful tarnish cause the diminishing of your glory!") But here again, there was congregational competition, unkind words from other Lutheran pastors whenever one or two of their families wanted to become the nucleus of our new work–downright harsh words that would make me sick within and almost make my tears to come. Then there was the Board which kept pestering (showing their only concern) to be located in money–give more, give more, give more! I couldn't become a party to such sin, so I left.

Of course, I had always wanted to be a chaplain, but the Lord was gracious enough to answer my prayers by giving me some fundamental experiences first.

... Please greet the Sandeens for me when you see them. Faithfully,

Letter to Jim and Ellen Kuehl, 25 November 1967[897]

Dear Ellen and Kim:

Thank you so much for the thoughtful letter and the first season card which I have received. I am not able to reciprocate with a card since we have none of those luxuries here where I am, so a letter will have to suffice.

It was good to hear that Bob Louis was ordained–but Texas?! Should you happen to have his address, I'd like to drop a letter to him, but, of course, from past experiences, I probably cannot expect to receive a reply. It was also good to hear you were able to be back in Waukesha and renew old acquaintances. But most of all, it was good to hear that your thesis is completed and that you would probably be defending it this month. I am anxiously awaiting to hear the results.

It must be very gratifying to work with young minds which are still in the process of forming world views, or, should I say, giving intellectual formulations to some views of life, especially in the area of ethics. Perhaps THE basic questions today lie within that province, both in the social and personal dimensions. ... although one set of actions seems to be "right," there is always the "wrong" side to every "right" side–the fact of original sin, of selfishness, the demonic, always makes an appearance ...

It is imperative not to impose a value system on other people, because we all live together in a society. My value of living in a filthy manner, of free love, of non support of activities beyond my purview, all have social implications–spreading of disease, increase in social disease, the remaining growth of evil. Not to decide to help the brother in need is itself a decision.

I am convinced as I have never been convinced before that the Gospel is the only solution–that is, when people are more concerned with giving than getting, with self-giving than self-fulfillment, with loving than being loved, of understanding rather than being understood, of genuinely being interested in doing good without expecting any returned reward, recognition, and benefit; when people realize that complete forgiveness and selfless service are the only way–only then will everyone be really living!

---

[896] For example, "How will what you have written help the faith of some old woman in Iowa?"

[897] Printed in Carroll, Andrew, Ed., Grace Under Fire, Letters of Faith in Times of War, Colorado Springs, CO, Water Brook Press, 2007, pp. 98-100.

Things around here are good and bad, mainly the latter. This week I had a memorial service for a young man, with under 30 days left to do here, who attended my worship services, who was kind, with a smile and made people laugh and lift them from depression, anger, and anxiety. He drowned. Another man attended one of my Sunday worship services, with his face all painted with camouflage make-up for going out on a recon. patrol. I saw him again three hours later, dead, having been shot in the head.

The men live in the most despicable of situations. They carve out holes in the hills in which to live, so that they are always damp and cold. I frankly don't know how they do it. From water shortages, they must go from 6 weeks to two months without a shower. Since they only have one set of utilities (the green uniforms we wear) they go out in patrols, get all wet from rain or river crossings, caked with mud, and must sleep in the same clothes. There are rats all over, and men are continually getting bit, and then have to get the 15 or so shots for rabies in the stomach. There are mail delays when we don't get mail for two weeks at a time, and when it does come in, there are always many "dear Johns"–from married women! (One man came to me, almost in a state of shock. He was married 18 years, 3 children, had less than a month to do here, and no previous marriage problems, and he got a "dear John"). There is always the fear of enemy attack. There is continual awakening at night from artillery suddenly going off at all hours of the night. There is the monotonous diet of C rations. And so on.

Yet, you would be amazed at the faith expressed here. There are evidences of genuine and deep prayer life, of reading and knowing the Bible backwards and forwards, of sacrificial concern for others. The men usually come out in large crowds for religious services. Some, of course, are merely there from fear, and their religious conviction is indeed shallow. Many have come to a religious service of worship for the first time in their life; some have communed for the first time in two years. I usually take an offering–some men put in $10.00 or a $5.00 bill, and many put in a $1.00 bill–amazing isn't it?

I truly believe that it is when people face death, when they face the loss of all the trivia of modern day society and are face to face with the "bare essentials" of what is human, that they are the happiest, with less to gripe over and less to worry about. I think people are people only when they suffer!

Well, we are fairly well blessed where we are. The monsoons that we are supposed to be suffering under haven't materialized, although we do get a week or two of solid rain now and then. The area is very beautiful–mountains, and sunsets, etc. The local tribes are hospitable and interesting. The base hasn't been attacked since 27 June. There are some local Bible translators here from Pennsylvania, and I have established good relations with them, borrowing some of their Greek translation helps, so that by the time I'm finished over here I will have gone through the whole NT in Greek–I hope so, anyway.

Please write whenever you get a chance, about some of your experiences in the classroom, about your dissertation and its ideas, etc.

Faithfully yours, Ray.

Letter to Bernard and Ruth McKevitt,[898] 25 November 1967

Dear Aunt Ruth and Uncle Bernard:

...

I have seen some great people here and I have seen some great expressions of faith that triumphs over all adversities, evidences of deep prayer life, men who know their scriptures backward and forward, men who are kind and just plain good. The area in which we are located is quite cool (unlike the rest of Vietnam), and is very beautiful–the flowers, the mountains, and the sunsets are all wonderful and awesome indeed. Were it not for the war, this would be a perfect vacation spot. I have also had my share of exciting and meaningful experiences; I shall have to talk for hours and hours to unwind once I'm home!...

Memo to Battalion "3", Subj: Command Chronology Report for 19 for November 1967; Submission of, dated 30 Nov 1967

1. A total of 22 Protestant worship Services were conducted with a total attendance of 356. This figure is greatly reduced from the normal since the chaplain was unable to conduct services on Hills 881, 861, and 950, due to weather conditions, from 9 November to 30 November.

---

[898] Godparents.

2. The chaplain conducted two adult baptisms, 2 memorial services, gave invocations at 4 Marine Corps birthday celebrations, gave 6 troop indoctrination lectures attended by 246, distributed about 1,000 pieces of religious literature, made extensive visitations about the base, and continued receiving offerings for the express purpose of the use of Mr. Miller in connection with his translation activities.

3. Roman Catholic coverage was provided by Chaplain (LT) Walter DRISCOLL of Sub Unit 5. Latter Day Saints coverage was provided through 4 services attended by 16.

Letter to parents, 3 December 1967

Dear folks...

The weather here has finally entered the monsoon season. I've not been able to get out on the hills with the troops there since the 9th of November because there is always a heavy fog or rain, and the choppers don't take off then. Of course, it occasionally clears up, but this usually takes place on Sundays, or at times when I can't leave, and then it only clears up for a short time, so that I could get stuck on the hills for two or three weeks. Up there, they run out of water and food so easily–live in dug-in holes, so that wouldn't be too good a prospect! Or they have chopper flights when most of the hill people are out on patrol who then don't return until after dark, when the choppers don't fly. So I've been "confined" to the base. Consequently, my spirits are somewhat down, because there isn't that much to do here. I visit with the units on the base, and just outside the base, visit the local missionary, and do some reading. But it's a slow-moving life. I don't go out on patrols anymore, and don't feel in the best of physical health because I don't get enough exercise. But I guess I'll have to adjust to this new set of circumstances, since it is what faces everyone here! The nights get extremely cold (as do also the days), and I have managed to get a Marine Corps sleeping bag–something hard to find around here, and it is very warm! I just wrap up inside the thing, pull shut the zipper, and sleep in comfort! Of course, there are only cold showers available, and occasionally I get up enough courage and take one! - it takes a couple of hours to recuperate. The clothes get very muddy and dirty; we sort of wallow in the mud, but there's no way of washing and getting things dried, so we just put up with it.

Fortunately, there is no enemy contact to speak of.

The people about the base–the men from reconnaissance teams, the CAC people outside the base, and the Army super-secret forces just outside the base, and the local missionaries–are all people that I enjoy very much being with, people that are very warm, friendly, want to see you again type. I sleep overnight occasionally at the CAC unit just outside the base, and will go there again tonight. It's near enough to the base that I can walk off the base and back again to get to it....

Love, Ray

Letter to Chaplain Robert Fenning, Division Chaplain, 3rd Marine Division, 14 December 1967

Dear Chaplain Fenning:

I still have memories of the "wonderful land of Bai" run through my mind! Your kindnesses and those of Chaplain Filmyer are certainly appreciated.

...

The 60 of so RSV whole, bound, Bibles which I picked up, were distributed to all those who desired to have one at our Sunday worship services. Practically everyone took one, with the result that they were all gone in less than a day! I believe I sort of depleted your stock, or at least put a large dent in it. Next time I'm down, in January or February, I'd like to pick up perhaps 10 boxes (240 Bibles), for I know they will go in a couple of days. The men don't want them just to have them. in my visitations in their hooches on the hills and about the base and the outposts of the base, I have discovered them to read them, sometimes cover to cover!

...

As you know, 3/26 arrived here yesterday. I haven't as yet met their chaplain, and I am not aware iof the situation as to whether they or we will remain or depart. I do not know whether I will be transferred (since he is Prot.), or the Father will be transferred to them, or what. But in any event, if at all possible, I'd like to remain where I am. If it is necessary to transfer me, I'd appreciate it if I could be transferred to the "front," e.g., Con Thien, Rock Pile–since I've been ;now almost five months here "in the rear" (activity-wise, the rear, that is)...

Letter to parents, Thursday, 28 December 1967

Dear folks–

... I also received a package from Sandeens in St. Paul, Wurtz' in-laws, containing a musical Swiss music revolving Christmas tree! It was certainly very nice of them to have sent that. It played Silent Night, and brought me to tears from being homesick!...

Our Christmas services found me in full swing. I had 4 services Sunday and 4 more Christmas Day. The 4 on Christmas Day totaled over 270 present! I got out to 2 hills and a CAC unit and also another battalion visiting here which didn't have its chaplain. The latter service had about 168, all in one large tent!

The weather the past few days has been outstanding–warm and pleasant.

Your tree was sent to one of the hills; I saw it up on Hill 950 myself.

I know the church has its own clothing drive, but if they could send a few boxers of clothes here, the local Brou which are for the most part unclothed, would be greatly appreciated. When it gets very cold, all they wear–many of them, is loin cloths and discarded T-shirts! Ask the Council what they want to do.

Tomorrow morning early I'm going out on a 3 to 5 day operation. Our whole battalion, 1/26, is going into an area known to be infested with enemy. It's a little scary, but actually, it's the idea of sleeping out in poncho liners and poncho thast revolts me! Well, I feel the chaplain must be with his men, so I volunteered to go out. .. I'll write when I return from the operation. Love, Ray.

Memo to Battalion "3", Subj: Command Chronology for December, 1967; Submission of, dated 01 Jan 1968

1. A total of 27 services of worship were conducted with a total attendance of 734. Occasional services included 1 baptism, 1 memorial service, and 1 confirmation. Three orientation lectures were given to 138 new troopers.

2. A request for a Brou-style chapel was submitted to RLT 26 by this command. New hymnals were obtained from the Division chaplain. Approximately 70 Bibles, and 500 pieces of religious literature were distributed. Christmas packages received by this command were distributed by the Sergeant-Major; other packages were received directly by the Sub Unit 5 chaplain for distribution for the whole base. The chaplain requested athletic literature and supplies from various professional football teams; materials received were given to appropriate offices.

3. Roman Catholic services were provided by the Sub Unit 5 chaplain, LT Walter DRISCOLL; latter Day Saints services were provided under lay leadership.

4. The weather during the first part of the month precluded visitation to Hills 950, 881, and 861. Battalion 3/26 arrived 13 December, and this chaplain provided services for that BN (including Christmas) until their chaplain arrived 26 December.

Very respectfully..

Typical Thank You letter. This one to Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., 742 S. Hills St., Room 800, Los Angeles, California 90014, dated 5 January 1968

Dear Sirs:

Your thoughtfulness in sending Christmas gifts to our young men fighting in Viet Nam is a most commendable and worthy gesture of kindness in keeping with the season spirit. You may be interested to know that these were distributed among the men who are indeed most worthy to have been the fortunate recipients. We are in the most remote, northwestern U.S. base in Vietnam, surrounded on three sides by the DMZ and Laos, and faced by the continued tensions that brings. The men go out on daily patrols in the mud and water, getting chilled and cold, full of leach bites, jungle rot, and elephant grass sores that become very large festers. They return to living places called "hooches" dug into the ground, cold, and infested with rats, and many must sleep in the same wet clothes they went out on patrol with. There are no showers for six week periods; the mail sometimes does not come for two or three week periods. The morale could be no higher; the men could be no more spirited; the effort and work expended could be no greater.

You may be assured that your Christmas gift falls into that category of "I was hungry and you fed me," (Matthew 25:34-40).

Thanking you again for your action, I remain..Faithfully yours..

Letter to Rev. Dr. Raymond Wargelin, 5 January 1968

Dear Pastor Wargelin:

...

You may be very interested to know that the Christian church is very active even over here. The men evidence a deep and devout prayer life and thorough knowledge of the scriptures, indicating a good background in some of their home parishes that the seed indeed "fell on good ground." Of course, many are apathetic. But, in general, I must say, I am deeply impressed. We also have missionaries. one is supported by the Christian & Missionary Alliance. he is an Episcopalian missionary to the local tribes here. Today he received a large shipment of goods, among them clothing from LWF.[899] It was good to see the end results of those drives back home. We also have a family from the Wycliffe Bible Translators who are translating the Bible into the local language. The people here are illiterate, so they have actually developed a language, written, and are making the people literate along with their efforts.

The weather is very, very cold. Not as cold as Minneapolis, but I am perhaps colder here than I was back there. on operations, I spend sleepless nights shivering instead of sleeping, along with everyone else. On the other hand, the enemy is increasing activity. We have many contacts with North Vietnamese now–several attempted to penetrate our base perimeter a few nights ago, and we expect the base to be attacked again with mortars any night now. So your prayers are certainly appreciated.

May our Lord's richest blessings be yours during the new year. Faithfully yours...

Letter to Mr. and Mrs. Sandeen, St. Paul, Minnesota, dated 6 January 1968

Dear friends:

You will never quite know how much I appreciated the package containing the Christmas ornaments - especially musical tree. It gets quite lonely here at times, especially at Christmas time. That tree with the music seemed to make life a little more livable here. I gave a lot of the Christmas items I personally received away - but I kept that tree for myself. I am sending it home and will use it in future Christmases, and will always remember your kindness. God bless you.

Faithfully, ..

Letter home, Thursday, 18 January 1968[900]

Dear folks:

Hi. I'm writing this letter on my new typewriter–yes, my own typewriter. There is a church group in California that is giving a free typewriter, small tape recorder, and an AM-FM radio to all the Navy chaplains here .. I just came back from Phu Bai yesterday where I picked it all up at the division chaplain's office. I had a real nice time down there. I sort of celebrated the fact that on the 14th of this month, I celebrated my 6th month in country; less than 6 more to go. It's always good to go down to Phu Bai and rest up a bit. The food is outstanding, and one can sleep at night without hearing artillery blast away or hearing the squeaks of the small pets (rats). In another month or so I will be rotated "to the rear" like in a hospital or something like that. They like to have chaplains spend 6 months forward and six months in the rear, but since there is a shortage of chaplains temporarily over in this area of Vietnam, I won't be rotated until March or so. Also, the 3rd Division is moving from Phu Bai to Dong Ha, so, as the division chaplain says, we'll all be forward in some respect or other. The First Marine Division is moving into Phu Bai right now. I saw Chaplain Auel, a full Commander, Lutheran, who I had met in Washington. he was the one who called up long distance from Washington when they wanted me to fly out there. I had a very nice visit with him. While I was down there I took along the offerings we have collected since the middle of September–about $815.00 and had it changed into the local currency, Piasters, about 96,000 Piasters. We are going to give that to the local missionary who is translating the Bible into Brou. He receives no wages, but depends on private donations. We had quite a time getting back to Khe Sanh. Some of the people down there had been waiting 9 days in the terminal, from 7 in the morning to 5 in the afternoon, on hard benches, day after day. The weather gets so foggy here, that even with instruments the planes do not come in for fear of crashing into the nearby hills. Then, on Tuesday, they brought up another whole battalion up here, another 1200 men! So now we have three battalions here–1/26, 2/26, and 3/26. I think we are the only regiment in the Marines in Vietnam that has all the three battalions together. (We are the 26th Marines regiment). It is the first time the regiment has been together since World War II. The reason they brought up 2/26 was that they think this place is going to be attacked by the 4,000 North Vietnamese or so that are always surrounding us. Well, they've said that for the 6 months I've been here now. One month it was the national elections; they always attack then, and in fact did attack most of the Marine installations, but not us. Then it was the monsoons. Now it is something else. They really get all excited. We now have to wear helmets and body armor (flak vests), and the Marines have to carry rifles–this is on the base itself, during the day. They expect human wave attacks. We also have to keep our gas mask with us all the time. I think it is utterly ridiculous to see the whole base become paranoid. Everyone is digging holes and building bunkers with sandbags. I rest secure in my hooch-bunker that I built back last September. I have my office in it and I sleep in it at night, and they tell me it would take a 122mm rocket. So I'm safe.

---

[899] Lutheran World Federation.

[900] Printed in Stevens, Michael E., Ed., Voices from Vietnam, Madison, Wisconsin, Center for Documentary History, State Historical Society of Wisconsin, 1996, pp. 142-144.

I'm not able to do too much during the week. Our battalion no longer has companies on Hills 881 or 861. So I'm pretty much restricted to Sunday services only.

...

I found out that you can send packages air mail to or from here by paying the regular postage and then adding $1.00, sending it "PAL."[901]...

...

My Sunday church attendances have been soaring up in attendance. Whereas I usually only have about 30 at my morning service, I have had 53 and 52 for the past two Sundays, the most I have ever had at those services...

I guess I have to close now. Please greet everyone. O yes, concerning the clothing for the people here–anything of a discarded nature will be able to be used. They are so poor that they can use anything.

Love, Ray

Letter home, Saturday, 20 January 1968[902]

Dear folks:

Last night I received the two packages postmarked 5 Jan., and your letters of 11 and 14 Jan. We hadn't received any mail for about a week due to the weather and troop movements holding up the ;normal mail transportation. But it all eventually gets through, to everybody's delight. Those chocolate pan-type cookies are delicious! You can send those anytime.

...

I know this might sound like madness, but the possibility of extending for six months has been entering my mind for several reasons. One gets 30 days leave to any place in the world, transportation paid. I could therefore go to South America or Europe for about three weeks or so, spend about a week at home, come back here for 6 months, and then get for sure a base job. They tell me that hardly no one wants to go to Great lakes, so I could probably go there if I wanted. Also, I get $65.00 a month combat pay extra and $500.00 of my monthly pay tax free. But I have to think of this for awhile. Six months isn't a long time, but then, maybe 18 months is!

The last two days have been quite terrible as far as casualties to our own men in this area. Yesterday they brought in one killed and about a dozen or so wounded; they also brought in two children about 3 or 4 years old that had gotten some shrapnel. These are all from the outposts, not the base. Today by noon, they had brought in 22 men with various shrapnel wounds in their arms and legs, ankle, hip, etc., and one killed. They were going to Hill 881 North, the site of the bad battle last April and May. Last night, and at about 2 in the afternoon, just as I am writing this letter, there were B52 strikes against two suspected North Vietnamese regiments (about 3,000 or so men) to our south, about 5 miles or so. These strikes are called "arc lights" and consist of 5,000 and 10,000 pound bombs. They drop so many of them that it sounds like a real bad thunder even at this distance. So things are getting a little warmer around here.

...

---

[901] Parcel Air Life.

[902] Summarized and portions quoted in: Carroll, Andrew, ed., Grace Under Fire, Letters of Faith in Times of War, Colorado Springs, CO, Water Brook Press, 2007, pp. 100-101, and Stevens, Michael E., Ed, Voices from Vietnam, Madison, Wisconsin, Center for Documentary History, State Historical Society of Wisconsin, 1996, pp. 144-145.

Maybe sometime this will all end. If the people back there could see all the suffering that the men go through, the "hawks" would be less "hawkish" and the doves would be more realistic (and focus their attention on the predicament of the fighting man, not on the immorality of war). War is obviously immoral. What so many fail to see is that man is not naturally good, and will not naturally do the right thing, and that the choices before men today are not black and white but of differing shades of gray.

I saw my first childbirth last night. Although miraculous, seeing life suddenly appear; it was simply awful–seeing all that come out, all the torn tissue and blood and horrible suffering of the woman. Then they asked for the placenta or after-birth; they eat it. I think if every young man and young woman saw that they'd never have any children! But, of course, that isn't true. For the only way there is life is through suffering, and the only things that are held of great value in life are the things one struggles for, how much more one's life, if one struggles to keep that.

Well, perhaps that's the way this war is. It's ugly; it's painful, excruciatingly so; but maybe that's the only way new life can come to these people who have lived under terror for 40 years.

I have to go now. Love, Ray.

Letter home, Sunday, 21 January 1968[903]

Dear folks:

First, I'm OK, not even a scratch. The casualties have been comparatively small. So don't worry.

I wrote my last entry in my log beginning Dec. 1st. Since our post office was hit this morning, I gave it to one of the pilots of one of the planes to mail via registered mail. I don't know if it will ever get home, but there's a lot in it; it's very important to me. So I hope it gets home. Please write me if it does. It's a green record book diary, covering the period 1 Dec. to today, plus a lot of personal papers.

We are, as you probably hear on the news, under attack. It's the scariest thing I've ever had to face. I awoke at 5 o'clock to the sound of incoming rockets and mortars exploding just outside my hooch! They hit our ammunition dump, and rounds of ammunition were flying all day long. Practically half the base is in ruins, but the casualties were very few because everyone got in bunkers. The only casualties were from the lines on the perimeter of the base and from Hill 861. I am writing this as the sun is setting today. I don't know if you will ever receive this, but I must write it anyway.

The base is quite safe. The airstrip wasn't harmed, and planes keep coming and going. We still have our artillery for counter-mortar attack. My hootch is well-built, sturdy. We have a lot supporting us. So don't worry.

I feel I'm needed here. I give up every waking moment for these men. They are basically good men, but not particularly religious as such, although I'm quite sure many prayed today! Yet I love them all, and give my daily life for them, and I do it not for personal satisfaction or companionship or a sense of personal accomplishment, but because I feel this is God's will.

You of course know my love for you both and grandma and all–Ray & Jeanne, Jackie, Henry, Perry & Marie–everyone, but especially you and grandma. I have not always been a good son and I know I've caused you grief at times, un-sureness and anxiety at other times. But I've always loved all of you very deeply.

Well, there's really not too much more to say in this situation. I've recorded all the details of everything in my log.

Love, Ray.

Memorandum to "B" Company Top, Subj: SPICER, 23 January 1968

1. If possible we would desire SPICER to help out at "C" Med. for such duties as stretcher bearer, holding IV bottles, and other general work. We can use all this kind of help we can get.

2. I understand and appreciate the peculiar problems and circumstances with the men with whom he now is, and make the above request as a positive solution to alleviate the situation.

Respectfully, R. W. Stubbe

---

[903] Printed in Stevens, Michael E., ed., Voices from Vietnam, Madison, Wisconsin, Center for Documentary History, State historical Society of Wisconsin, 1996, p. 145. Printed in Carroll, Andrew, ed., War Letters, Extraordinary Correspondence from American Wars, Foreword: Douglas Brinkley, New York: Scribner, 2001, pp. 407-408. Printed in Carroll, Andrew, ed., Grace Under Fire, Letters of Faith in Times of War, Colorado Springs, Co., Water Brook Press, 2007, pp. 102-103.

Letter home, February 1st, 1968

Dear folks:

Well, the enemy is really creating a lot of turmoil around here for awhile, but soon things will undoubtedly return to normal. A lot has happened to me lately. A week ago, Saturday, I got sick to the stomach and head. The next day I started conducting worship services and fainted. So I spent Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday morning in our battalion sickbay, known as a "battalion aid station." I was discharged with a 100 degree temperature and went back to my bunker. There, a full commander, medical type, up from Phu Bai, said "Chaplain, you're going to Phu Bai!" I objected, but his word was final, and I left. The fever was already broken, and all the trouble was merely just being a little weak. So I got all the treatment–hot vegetables and steaks–instead of all the C rations I've been on. Yesterday, Phu Bai kept getting hit itself and was taking casualties, so they moved 3 large plane loads of patients, about 400-500 all totaled, to DaNang Naval Hospital. This is where I now am. My temperature is now 97.2, but they're running lab tests which will take several days to determine the results. But I'm quite safe and should return to Khe Sanh in a day or so, and that area has considerably quieted down–so, no worry![904]

My experiences there–well, I'll write about those later. I just wanted to write that although I'm in a hospital, it's because of a fever that never got above 101 and is now gone. I got the chocolate rice-crispy cookies–very, very good, and 3 letters in brown envelopes. Yes, still write to me at my regular address.... Love, Ray.

Letter to the Division Chaplain, Third Marine Division, 01 February 1968

Dear Chaplain Fenning:

The reason I am writing this note is to make record of the horrible manner in which the medical personnel have treated me recently in removing me from my men and duties, especially at this time of perhaps their greatest need. The fact that my fever was low and subsiding, that my health was improving, that my battalion doctor (LT FELDMAN), under whose care I had been for three days, discharged me (admittedly weak and with a slight temperature) but with prescriptive medication and rest, and my own feelings of improved health–all that made no difference at all. I was "man-handled" onto a stretcher; I was not even permitted to walk the twenty or so feet back to my hooch to get some of my personal items in order. Involved with this was a great sense of personal guilt and shame. one man on the plane asked, "Chaplain, where'd they get you!" And I had to explain that I really was OK, just had a slight fever. The questioner was receiving an IV, almost in shock, with multiple shrapnel wounds.

But the medical department reigns "let all the earth tremble!" But this only follows in line with what went on at Khe Sanh during the last week. one day, upon returning from the lines, a doctor was attempting to put a cot into my hooch. When he saw me, his exact words were, "I'm moving into your hooch." Well, of course, that was OK with me, but he didn't have the courtesy to ask me. CDR Brown did the same thing in almost taking over my bunker (which I spent over a week of sweat in building personally) instead of having his lazy corpsmen build appropriate bunkers. Again, I would more than gladly have allowed them to use it and I would sleep on the lines, but there was no courtesy of requesting.

Now I am in DaNang. My fever has completely subsided, and I feel like doing a hundred pushups, but I still cannot go, because the results of tests take time–isn't that incommensurate with the situation! I feel so indignant I almost today wrote my congressman, but felt writing you was sufficient. The medical department is determined to keep me from my work of functioning as a chaplain; it's as simple as that. They just probably have to fulfill a psychological need of "lording it over" other people.

My temperature was never over 101.4; yesterday it was 99; today it is 97. Please excuse my taking of your time, but I feel I have been pushed about just a little too much.

Very respectfully, Ray W. Stubbe

Letter home, Monday, 5 February 1968

Dear folks:

Well, your son keeps moving around! This letter is being written from Quang Tri at an air station. I left DaNang yesterday via the large CH-53 chopper. We stopped briefly at Phu Bai, and now I'm here, living with a bunch of pilots, waiting to leave for Khe Sanh via a "HU1E" (the real small chopper)–they send these to Khe Sanh every day, except it is already a quarter past one in the afternoon. We haven't left due to the fog and drizzle.

---

[904] Statement on "Narrative Summary", Standard Form 502, Health Record of Stubbe, LT P. S. Vokonas, MC, USNR, wrote: "At his request, the patient was released to duty, to return to the Khe Sanh area. A follow up UA in approximately 1 week should be performed."

...

Quang Tri consists mainly of an air base–lots of choppers of all types. Eventually, all the offices of the 3rd Marine division at Phu Bai will be moving up here.

The conflict seems to have lessened greatly. The enemy will soon, if he hasn't already, come to the realization that his cause is indeed hopeless. With our air superiority, there's nothing he can do. He might make a massive attack somewhere, but although he'd undoubtedly inflict some degree of harm, would never be able to hold anything for more than a day or so.

Of course, everything is "Khe Sanh." .. but all we hear on the radio here is Saigon! Actually, it's about time those in the rear earned their combat pay and realized they are actually in Vietnam!

Will write again soon. Love, Ray.

Letter home, Monday, 5 February 1968, Khe Sanh Combat Base

Dear folks:

Well, I finally made it back here again. I rode back from Quang Tri by the small "HU1E" gunship, real small chopper, bristling with machine guns and rocket launchers. It is rare to be able to ride these things. I was actually quite fortunate in not having to wait long periods for transportation. There are presently 1800 men in the DaNang Marine terminal waiting for flights to the north–and it's very miserable having to live like that.

I forgot to mention that before I left I had received a package from Les and Bea Roberts containing some canned fruit and life savers. Canned fruit, I have discovered, is about the best thing going here.

Also, I checked with our H&S Company office, and the mail that had been received during my stay at Phu Bai and DaNang was all forwarded to Phu Bai, which means I probably won't see it for a couple of months. But it was only 1 shipment of mail; some more came in tonight. I really don't know what was forwarded–perhaps no letter from you.

Things up here are back to normal. There is occasional activity, but usually affecting the outposts on Hills 861 and 881. The base itself only takes a few incoming rocket and mortar rounds, but that involves little or no damage or injury.

I feel completely recovered, full of "vim, vigor, and vitality." I have to return for some more tests. They're injecting my blood into mice! I know you'll be shocked, but remember I feel good and the Doctor described me on his report as "well developed and nourished thin white male" I now weigh 142. But I feel fine....

Love, Ray

Letter to Chairman, Local Board No. 6, c/o Mr. Jon Geissmann, Tower School, 61 West Shore Drive, Marblehead, Mass., 01947, dated Monday, 05 February 1968 - Khe Sanh Combat Base[905]

Dear Sir:

1. Please excuse this not being typewritten; we are under continuous mortar and rocket attack, and it's quite hazardous moving around to the office, whose typewriters are all busy typing casualty letters or forms anyway.

2. I am an ordained Lutheran minister of the Lutheran Church in America, and am a Navy chaplain on active duty with a Marine battalion here in Khe Sanh.

3. I am acquainted with Mr. Geissman, having been his roommate at the University of Chicago last year, for a period of one year.

4. I am familiar with Mr. Geissman's views, and, although I myself, obviously, do not subscribe to them personally, he is most sincere in them himself. I would feel very sick indeed if all the men I see killed or injured here and in great pain–were it all for naught–because we are denied our right of dissent. We are Americans. We bleed for that right. Therefore, although I do not agree with Mr.I Geissman, I will uphold his right and recognize the sincerity of his beliefs as something for which we are dying.

---

[905] Printed in Carroll, Andrew, ed., Behind the lines, Powerful and Revealing American and Fporeign War Letters--and one Man's Search to Find them, New York: Scribner, 2005, pp. 193-194.

Very respectfully, Ray W. Stubbe.

Letter to Chief of Naval Personnel (Pers-B1211), 1300, dated 21 February 1968, Subj: Extension of tour of overseas service; request for[906]

1. In accordance with reference (a), it is requested that my tour of overseas service in Vietnam be extended for etwelve (12) months, exclusive of special leave and travel time....

Letter to parents, 5 March 1968

Dear folks:

... Most important, I'm now transferred "to the rear." I'm with third Shore Party–the unit to which I was originally assigned when I first got here back last July. My new address is up above. I also have a coverage of 3d Recon. in this area. We're located at Dong Ha and Quang Tri, in the northeast section of South Vietnam.

Shore Party is the group of men that handles all the incoming and outgoing supplies. It doesn't store them, but is the distribution group. Usually, they are on the beach during amphibious landings. Now we have Shore Party people on every base and outpost, but most are here at Dong Ha. We are the only group in the Marine Corps having special markings on our clothing–red patches on trousers near the knee and a small red patch on the helmet or cap.

Things at Cong Ha are quite different than Khe Sanh–we have hot showers, hot meals, decent places to sleep, PXs, etc.

So many things happened at Khe Sanh - it's good I didn't write earlier - practically anything I might write would either sicken or scare you. But that's all past now. I must say the good Lord was very merciful and gracious. I didn't receive even a cut or bruise. But there for awhile I was having very close calls every day. One noon, while eating lunch in my hooch, an incoming round went into my wall–through four feet of dirt, 3 feet of sandbags and bent my steel walls held up by U-shaped engineering stakes; it was a dud![907]

One evening at midnight, a rocket round–100 pounds–exploded just 2 feet from my hooch entrance.

One day I was walking through an excavated trench about 10 feet deep, a mortar round exploded on the top edge, just above.

I've been pinned down on the perimeter by automatic sniper fire–and so on–

...

Mail was sporadic–incoming and outgoing. I received your care packages and cookies... I gave away all the goodies to the men at Khe Sanh–they deserved it...

Things were very ghastly. I stayed overnight at a hooch on the perimeter. It was a bunker for the men manning a 106 gun. One afternoon they took two incoming rounds. Only one lived; all the rest were killed. one man's head was never found–pieces of finer, hand, flesh, blood, all over. one man came into our medical area. He'll lose both legs, his right arm, and be blind. Our medical area took quite a few hits, but fortunately no one there was hurt.

The slogans the men have on their helmets and flak jackets changed from "KILL, KILL, KILL," and "In many a strife we've lost our life and never lost our nerve," etc., to "Mom and dad forever," and "You and me, God," and "Please, Mr. Cong, I don't want to die," and crosses.

Many times our water supply would get shot up and we'd go several days without water.

There was always the fear of incoming–it might come in anywhere; it might land anywhere. No place, no bunker, was absolutely safe. The screeching rounds of rockets, the blasts–

One man I baptized, only 18, last December was killed.

---

[906] First Endorsement, from CO, 1/26, J. B. Wilkinson, 22 Feb 1968, notes: "1. Forwarded recommending approval. Chaplain Stubbe's service to this battalion since July 1967 have been exemplary." In a letter from the Navy Chief of Chaplains, Rear Admiral James W. Kelly [EN4/1300, Pers J12-ddd (141), 29 March 1968]: "Dear Chaplain Stubbe: thank you for your recent letter volunteering for a year's extension in Vietnam. It is such willingness to serve that has made the ministry of our Chaplains in this troubled area of the world most effective. I have approved your extension for six months only. It is my feeling that after eighteen months of duty, a Chaplain should be rotated home. You have been nominated for orders to the Naval Support Activity, Danang as a relief for Chaplain Beasley...."

[907] This paragraph was printed in Carroll, Andrew, Ed., grace Under Fire, Letters of Faith in Times of War, Colorado Springs, Co., Water Brook Press, 2007, p. 103.

Several thousand Montagnards–the Brou tribe, wanted to be evacuated. When the Vietnamese were being evacuated the day after the attack (mostly Vietnamese), the Brou were also outside our base gate. 1,200 Vietnamese left. Then the General of 1st ARVN Army, General Lam, the one in control of our I Corps area, a Vietnamese, arrived, and, according to our civic relations officer, our S-5, said "The Vietnamese can leave, but the Brou have to stay!" So the Brou, by thousands, walked by foot, all the way to Cam Lo. 3,000 Brou arrived there, probably many more were killed along the way. The rest of the Brou flocked to a village, Areng, just outside our base, and to the village of Lang Vei. But Lang Vei was overrun and many of our own bombs killed them during air strikes. Same with those at Areng. So the survivors flocked to another village, Lang Con, and were made into slaves for the NVA, to carry their equipment and do their menial tasks.

Then, when it got into the press back home, the Pentagon and General Westmoreland got on AP and UPI. So a new news story came out stating that we would fly out thousands, but they returned to their villages! But the truth is that by the time of the offer, the Brou had (1) migrated, (2) been killed, or (3) are under Communist control!

What's so utterly revolting is that these Brou are the most loyal to us. When Lang Vei, the CAC units and Army District advisors in the village of Khe Sanh were being overrun , the Brou stayed right in there, fighting to the end, whereas the Vietnamese cowardly evaporated from the scene.

The Vietnamese regard these people as savage and dirt. They are primitive, but are kind, loyal, friendly, not offended if you don't obey their local customs, invite you into their homes, and are honest. (The Vietnamese will always appear and express the emotion they think you want them to, not how they really feel–so you never know just how they really do feel. They do this even among their own people. The Brou say that a man's thinking and feeling are localized in the gall bladder, not the brain. Consequently, they say the Vietnamese have two gall bladders!)

This is another tragedy of the war. There are so many.

Men suddenly turn to God in their moment of desperation - but frequently it's too late; there's no background or foundation to give the depth or meaningful religious relationship with God. Like physical abilities or personal acquaintances, our religious faculty and our relationship to God takes time to develop to the rich heights possible.

...

Please send fruit, M&Ms, kisses, etc. Please greet everyone.

Love, Ray

Letter to Mr. Royston L. Jones, dated 8 April 1968

Dear Mr. Jones:

Chaplain Kelly, our Chief of Navy Chaplains, has requested that I write you concerning your son, David R. Jones. According to our battalion records here in Quang Tri, your son was wounded at Khe Sanh on February 29th, but his wounds were classified as "non-serious" and he was immediately returned to duty the same date. He is presently at Khe Sanh. He submitted a request to extend here on April 4th, requesting to take his extension leave at Sidney. He submitted another request yesterday, April 7th, changing the place of his leave from Sidney to Kuala Lumpur. His request was not as yet, or course, been approved by the office of the Fleet Marine Force, Pacific, but our Adjutant sees no reason why it will not be. His old rotation tour date is 10 July 1968. Our Adjutant also stated that your son desires to re-enlist for six years after his extension, and request State Department duty.

The battalion Adjutant states that your son is a "very good Marine" and that he was promoted to Sergeant on April 1st.

I fully realize your deep concern for the welfare of your son, especially at a place like Khe Sanh. I myself served eight months there, departing February 28th. But since 3d Shore Party has a company up there, I have returned to Khe Sanh seve3ral times, the most recent of which was 2 through 5 April. I must state that it appears like Khe Sanh has quieted down completely.

The morale of Alfa Company [3d Shore Party] is so high that men who are twice wounded and must therefore be transferred out of Khe Sanh and remain in the rear here in Quang Tri, are always most disappointed not to be able to return to Khe Sanh. I know how they feel, for I have the same feelings. The men at Khe Sanh have a feeling of doing something significant; it is a feeling of response to the call of duty. This is especially true of the Shore Party detachment which has continued to work in the open areas of the drop zone, where cargo is dropped by parachute, and there are therefore no bunkers to which to run, and where they have continued to work out in the areas where gear is brought in by helicopter, even when enemy mortars and rockets are screeching in and exploding all about. Their bravery is something those who have not been to Khe Sanh under fire can perhaps never adequately comprehend or appreciate. But, as I indicated before, lest you have anxieties, it appears that the worst is over.

Khe Sanh is the proof of the bravery of our men, and the result of all our armed services working in concert. The Air Force has crippled the enemy through continual B-52 strikes and jet strikes. The Army now is confronting the enemy with a superior for in both numbers and quality of men. But, perhaps the costliest price has been paid by our courageous and dedicated Marines who held fast despite the fear-inspiring "incoming" rockets, mortars, and artillery, and the attempted ground attacks. Every man there is certainly deserving of some sort of decoration.

The decision of your son to apparently make the Marine Corps a career is an indication that our young people will never fail to heed the call of duty, by catching the vision of duty that extends beyond personal advantage.

I am sure that your son did not desire to worry you, and that that is why he has not written earlier. It may well be that he is trying to think through how he will break the news to you.

If we may be of any further assistance, please feel free to write us. Our only purpose here is to serve those who serve.

Faithfully yours, Ray W. Stubbe. Copy to: Chief of Chaplains

Letter to parents, Friday, 19 April 1968

...

I've been back up at Khe Sanh three times since leaving there, to visit the men from Shore Party and Recon. still up there. The last time I went was Easter Sunday afternoon, and I remained up there through Tuesday. There was a brief relaxation while the Army was up there, but the Army accomplished nothing, because the base is now receiving 300-500 rounds of heavy artillery again every day, and the enemy appears to have moved back in ... They come in, in choppers, and leave in choppers, but don't sweep through the intervening territory. I saw some of them come into the medical area from heat exhaustion from climbing just a few of the hills there. One said, "I'm getting too old for this kind of work." "How old are you," I said. he replied that he was 25! I told him I used to go out 5 days at a time, humping those hills every day, and I'm going to be 30. The Army left because they said the enemy had left. But how did they know? They never searched the area thoroughly. Besides, they left so suddenly, that practically all our Marines were out on battalion sweeps, and Sunday night there was only one company of men guarding the perimeter where usually 4 companies guard it.

...

I received orders (after I had requested them), to attend a Lutheran conference in Japan, Toyko, next week. I haven't as yet taken my R&R, and would still be eligible for that. But I've decided not to go to Japan. My place is with the men here ... Everyone has urged me to go–my commanding officer, the division chaplain–but I said that a chaplain's place is with his men, that I'm here to serve, not to be served, etc.

...

Love, Ray

Memorandum to Major Bohr, 02 May 1968[908] Subj: Excess C-rations; suggested disposition of[909]

---

[908] Maj Harper L. Bohr, Jr., was the Executive Officer of 3d Reconnaissance Battalion at the time and was formerly the S-2 of 26th Marine Regiment at Khe Sanh. He and I both arrived in DaNang the same date and became good friends.

[909] Maj Bohr mentioned that the request to give food to the Brou couldn't be granted since there were two messages on the boards specifically prohibiting this, but suggested that an exception might be made. [Diary entry, Tue, 07 May 1968]. On Wed, 08 May, I saw Capt Collins, the former S-5 of 26th Marines at Khe Sanh. My diary: "Were it not for him, nothing would have been accomplished. There was another Captain there who was only negative. 'No food can be given out to indigenous personnel." That was his succinct statement I proceeded to explain the situation. He replied that they took out so many bags of corn meal, went out the next day, received many thanks, but were told that the VC had taken 3/4ths of it. "There just isn't any security," he said. I stated that we would then take out just enough that they could eat then and there. He said that there were two messages prohibiting the distribution of food. Capt. Collins remarked that they shouldn't have taken out all those bags of corn meal at once, that the fault was with the S-5 section. Finally I asked to see the G-5 actual. When I asked if I could take out the food, he said, "Of course not, never, under any circumstances." When I stated the situation, he said if they only give out a small quantity and if it's regulated, if it doesn't become publicized so that others use it as an excuse to open whole cases of C-rations, etc., and since it is food that would be destroyed, OK! Capt Collins stated I should contact Mr. Bob Handy who is working with the Brou at the Refugee Center and that I should beware of the S-4 of 4th Marines who might report it on his reports to get credit for it, that if so, others might misunderstand and the program would cease. [Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 April 1970, pp. 889-890]. Met with Mr. Bob Handy at the Refugee Village on Thursday, 09 May 1968, who had been at Khe Sanh and stated there were about 9,000 Brou at Khe Sanh, that there are approximately 1,500 still missing, about 150 who died soon after arrival at the resettlement village from pneumonia and other diseases, malnutrition and having walked the 40 miles. [Ibid., p. 891]. "There was no fanfare, no photographs, no expressions of gratitude. The food was merely quietly deposited, and I thought that perhaps the uneventful manner might dampen the zeal

1. Some of the men from the S-4 asked me last week if they could give me some of the C-rations left-over from those going on patrols, for some worthy cause–orphanages, etc. I stated I would look into the problem.

2. This date I happened to see CPL KELLEY, from Khe Sanh, who is presently working with the 6,000 Brou refugees currently located in Cam Lo at the intersection of Highway 9 and [route] 558. he stated that there is a tremendous need for food and clothing, that the people are literally starving, not being able to grow food, and the government providing them with only about 1/4th of what they are supposed to receive.

3. I contacted the S-4 Sgt this afternoon, who stated they had just disposed of the C-rations left over, but stated he would save them in the future.

4. It is suggested that the S-4, together with the five letter companies be informed that their left-over C-rations would be used to help food these Montagnard refugees, and that these excess rations be saved rather than thrown away.

5. They would then be collected and taken out to Cam <Lo. The CAC offices adjacent C Co., 3rd Shore Party, at Dong Ha, makes a daily PC run to this area, leaving about 1000.

Very respectfully, Ray W. Stubbe

Letter to Mr. John Miller, dated Monday, 20 May 1968

...

..recon has men that go out "in the bush" on patrols, and they are issued canned C-rations. But they don't eat all of them. Some of the items they leave behind are quite good tasting, but just take up too much space for taking in the field–like crackers and candy, or cookies, etc. So they just pile up. Well, we accumulate about 100 pounds of these unwanted C rations and take them out to the Bru refugees at Cam Lo each Wednesday morning. There is a policy order out against giving out C rations to indigenous personnel since although it is usually given to the children along the road by Marines for the children's use, it usually ends up in the black market or in the enemy's stomach. However, in this particular case, I made an appeal to the G-5 himself, and got permission to take them out, since they were going to be destroyed anyway, and since they would be somewhat regulated. Mr. Handy and Corporal Kelley are also working out there and they sort of take charge. I was so happy that we were able to do this, and the recon. men were also happy to help out. We can't have any publicity, however, since it might be used as an excuse for indiscriminate distribution of C rations by others. I'm just as happy there is no publicity.

My new job is quite different than at Khe Sanh. I do not go out too much, although we do have units at Cua Viet at the mouth of the river from Dong Ha, and we have a unit at Ca Lu. I visit these occasionally. The men here have a "in the rear" attitude, which I find at times somewhat repulsive. They expect everything, and are very dissatisfied over things that are the result of ingratitude. It's like after being in Khe Sanh without ice cream for eight months and then traveling to Da Nang, at one of the military centers down there and hearing someone complain–even to the point of writing his congressman!–because he's been subject to the same flavor of ice cream for five consecutive days! That's an actual happening.

The recon. men are a different story. These men suffer all sorts of hardships. I find myself now conducting a memorial service practically every week for those killed during the week. Last Saturday we had five more killed between Khe Sanh and Ca Lu. Last Thursday and Friday, there were 150 more medically evacuated from one of the hills near Khe Sanh village. The battle there seems to be picking up again.

...

Khe Sanh still holds a fascination for me. I guess there was so much there that I spent so much attention on while I was up there–the hills, the Marines and Army personnel, the beauty, the Poilanes, the CAC personnel, the ville, all the Brou villes, all the Bru people themselves, and, of course, yourselves. When they were doing that TV interview, someone opined that they were going to save it and compare it with another tape made later, when Khe Sanh was under siege. I simply couldn't accept that, at the time. Khe Sanh was too beautiful; there were too many good people there; it was too remote from the war. But it came. Someday I might perhaps write a book in a novel-type style, about Khe Sanh. Even the history was so interesting. I of the recon. Marines. I don't know, but this is an expression of Christian love--just giving, at the person's real point of need, with no desire for returned gratitude, dependence, thanks, etc." [Ibid., p. 892].

---

remember Mr. Poilane telling me about the plantation Con Rome–originally the plantation of a retired French government official, then of another man who had a Japanese wife and gardener who turned out to be agents for the Japanese who later occupied the area. Then it was occupied by Mr. Llinares. And he seemed to fit into the same pattern. He wanted to get out the first part of December, if only he could get out with his money. But like Felix's coffee, space available was prohibited to him. Then they did a full-scale investigation on him, and from what I have been able to gather, it is suspected he collaborated with the NVA!

Everything in that area fascinates me. Even the geology and the volcanic origins: the area born in tremendous heat and violence.

I would be especially interested in the Bru legends...

...

May our Lord continue to look with favor upon your work. Faithfully, Ray

Memorandum for Executive Officer [recon], dated 23 May 1968, Subj: Food for Brou Montagnard Refugees at Cam Lo

1. Excess C-rations, together with clothing, has been taken out to the Khe Sanh Brou refugees at Cam Lo for the past three weeks. Permission was granted by the G-5 actual, and the program seems to be working out well. There are approximately 19 Brou at the dispensary at Cam Lo who are fed, having suffered from malnutrition and others who suffer from diseases due to malnutrition are also given the food,. The security of the food, to insure that it does not filter to the black market or the enemy appears to be quite adequate, the dispensary being located within a military-type contonement area, much like a CAP unit. The giving of the food is a most positive factor that the recon. men can feel they are contributing to persons who are actually in need.

...

Memorandum to Chaplain, 3rd Marine division, 15 June 1968, Subj: John Miller

Mr. and Mrs. John Miller and their three children have been residents of the Viet Nam area since they first moved to Khe Sanh village in December of 1962. It is interesting that they settled there before the Army Special Forces moved in during 1963. Since their arrival, they have been active in formulating a written language for the Brou tribe of the Montagnard tribes people, who, until very recently, were approximately 9,000 people living in villes within the khe Sanh area.

In this connection, they have developed a written language, compiled primers for teaching the children, have taught teachers to go into the villages, and have enabled the people to become literate for the first time. Mrs. Miller (Carolyn) has been mainly active in this phase of their work.

Mr. Miller is associated with the Wycliffe Bible Translators, an organization devoted to translating the Bible into the various native tongues of the various tribes in Viet Nam, Africa, and South America. He has already prepared and mimeographed the books of Mark, Acts, and Galatians, and just a few weeks ago had the 15th chapter of Luke issued in a printed version, bilingual (Brou and Vietnamese).

He is not salaried, and like all the members of the [Wycliffe] Bible Society, is dependent upon personal donations for his work. Until recently, he lived in an old French home in Khe Sanh ville that was remodeled and furnished through the efforts of the Major who was C.O. of FOB-3, and through the marines at Khe Sanh Combat Base, who were his frequent visitors. When he first arrived at Khe Sanh, however, he lived in a rented "hooch" right in one of the Brou villages (Lang Bu).

When it became evident that the situation at Khe Sanh would deteriorate, COL LOWNDS advised the Millers to temporarily vacate the area. They moved to Kontum and were caught in the siege there in which their headquarters was completely demolished. From there they moved to the Army area of Nha Trang, and are currently living the guests of CORDS, Quang Tri City. The Millers lost everything–their books and mimeographed materials, as well as all their personal effects during the recent Battle of Khe Sanh, except for their Roadmaster, which, although it suffered many holes from rocket, mortar, and artillery shrapnel, and the loss of all windows, was nevertheless driven down from Khe Sanh to Quang Tri Combat Base by the motor pool of RLT 26 where Mr. Miller picked it up about a month ago.

The Millers were frequently visited by the officers and men of Khe Sanh Combat Base, the CAC units, and the various Army units of the area. They were frequently on the FOB base when even many Marines couldn't visit the base due to the security sensitivity of the area.

They plan to continue their work, and probably again relocate to live with the Brou people after they relocate.

Very respectfully, Ray W. Stubbe

"WHY VIETNAM POETRY?' Appended to letter to Ms. Karen L. Bye, 11 August 1997, as a foreword to her book collection of Vietnam poetry

The word "symbol" (from the Greek, "to throw together") refers to a joining of two realities. Symbols emerge from deep within the soul to become a window or door that opens to a reality that cannot be explained simply or with analytical precision. Symbols evoke deep passionate and emotional response of revulsion or adulation, loving or loathing. The symbol "tree" can "mean" that which joins the earth and the sky, that which provides shade—or perhaps nourishment, that which endures wintry season. It can "mean" a twisted network that reflects the branches and directions of our life. It may "mean" a refuge of safety to a child who is lifted above and beyond the pains, chores, or concerns of life, perhaps even a place to build a house. Maybe a tree is a nest for birds and squirrels, or maybe it is simply wood and a source of paper. The symbol "child" may "mean" a new beginning, possibility, playfulness, boundless energy, freshness, innocence, and much more. In many ways, symbols are our deepest realities—or the connections to them. Symbols determine how we live and for what we are willing to die.

What of the symbols "war," "Vietnam," "flag," "Memorial Day," "Christmas," or "family?" Or "tree," "water," "fire," earth?"

This collection of poems is an assemblage of symbols. Here are doors and windows through which we may peer or pass into realities which are always present but rarely regarded, always seen but never noticed, studied but never known. For other veterans, these doors and windows permit confronting what has long been hid from view, but which controls actions and emotions. For relatives and friends of veterans, here are doors and windows to a greater appreciation of forming and determining experiences. For our society as a whole, here are doors and windows into our identity, for the one who digs deep within his own soul emerges with the insight that is, paradoxically, most universally human. These poems are mirrors: what we say we see is an indication of who we are; what we say about what they say discloses more about us who are speaking than the mirror itself.

In our science-dominated world, where everything and everyone is "studied," "categorized," "quantified" (as in "body count"), "dissected," or "analyzed," and thereby controlled (for those in power), exploited (for those seeking wealth), and regarded from a distance as an object, a thing, poetry is a foreign domain. In the world of poetry, where everything and everyone is unique, where everything and everyone is known only by passionate involvement in, by union with, by commitment to, all of modern day life is an experience of alienation (of "alien-nation"). The Swiss physician, Paul Tournier, once observed that we tend to use people and value things in our culture instead of using things and valuing persons. An emerging "post-modern" consciousness is the redirection away from a "scientific" context of life to one more human.

The great philosopher, Immanuel Kant, taught that book knowledge (concepts) without experienced life (perceptions) are empty, like unfilled files and folders. On the other hand, lived life without the conceptual tools we learn, is blind—as in walking through a forest and not seeing anything but a blur of trees because we haven't learned to distinguish elms and maples and hickory and ash. How many patrolling through the jungles of Vietnam , while perhaps being aware of bamboo or elephant grass or banana trees, never experienced mahogany or durion, but only "jungle." Concepts (knowledge) help us "make sense," to "notice particulars," to be aware of what is happening in our experience.

The poems in this collection provide some of the "files and folders," the "concepts" to make sense of what is elusive, always irrational, and slipping from our grasp or which engulfs us, like water running through our fingers or being submerged in it and drowning.

Since these are symbols, there is a presence of disparity—a disparity between how most everyone else regards contemporary events or what is encountered in life, and how one who has lived in "another world" experiences the same events or encounters—so differently. Exploding ordnance becomes the music of Christmas carols, the "boy who played his gun" becomes the "little drummer boy," swaddling clothes are a quilt or guilt (note: "swaddling clothes" in the Bible refer to bands of cloth used to wrap a corpse, and the Christian Orthodox icon of Christmas includes a tomb). "Dad," "Memorial Day," "family," "Operation Desert Storm," all become transformed symbols.

Waking up in a closet (as a result of a night terror, not a nightmare) becomes "Oh God, not again." The bed of slumber and love, of peace and security, becomes the extended battlefield of physical violence—a shattering legacy of war, for as someone has aptly put it, "for those who fight in a war, the war never ends." The effect on those surrounding the veteran are like a great whirlpool vortex sucking in others to a destructive web upon which and from which struggles to be free are nugatory: the child longing for a touch—from one emotionally numbed and incapable of intimacy, the succession of wives and families that create an enigma of the symbol "dad" or "father," and generational fracture.

Perhaps more revealing than what is in these poems, is what is not. A Marine LtCol once observed that in WW II everyone sang frequently and there were numerous songs, in Korea, there were few songs or singers, and in Vietnam, there were no singers and no songs to be sung. The inhumanity and dehumanization of the Vietnam War is disclosed when compared with WW I, which was in so many ways, so similar, but the poetry so different.

O, there is still the horror, as Sir Arthur Conan Doyle (of Sherlock Holmes fame) penned:

Never a message of hope!
    Never a word of cheer!
Fronting Hill 70's shell-swept slope
    With the dull dead plain in our rear
Always the whisper of the shell
    Always the roar of its burst
Always the torture of hell..

Or in the words of one of the lesser-known poets of WW I, A. G. Prys-Jones:

The tides of Death go swiftly home
    And the nets of Pain are spread
The blood runs warm on the cold, cold loam
    In desolate fields of dead.

There is the anguished, even bitter, critique from First Lieutenant Siegfried Sassoon (who was later placed by the Brittish in a mental hospital because of his "irrational" negative words about the war). Perhaps in our age we should substitute "politician" for "Bishop" and "Communism" for "Anti-Christ" in order to feel the impact of the poem:

The Bishop tells us: 'When the boys come back
They will not be the same; for they'll have fought
In a just cause: they lead the last attack
On Anti-Christ....

'We're none of us the same!' the boys reply.
'For George lost both his legs; and Bill's stone blind;
Poor Jim's shot through the lungs and like to die...

Or Sassoon's critique of the "rear" echelons:

'Good-morning; good-morning!' the General said
When we met him last week on our way to the line

Now the soldiers he smiled at are most of 'em dead,
And we're cursing his staff for incompetent swine.

The experience is the same. Absent, however, from Vietnam poetry (in general) is awareness of surrounding beauty of nature, which is remarkable since Vietnam is such a picturesque country of colorful shores and jungles and mountains and peoples. The Canadian LtCol John McCrae (KIA in France 28 Jan 1918 after four years of service on the western front) was still able to write the famous lines:

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.

Sgt Joyce Kilmer of the 165th Infantry, American Expeditionary Force (KIA 30 Jul 1918) saw nature:

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree

Even a morbid consciousness is couched in a beautiful nature, as Alan Seeger, who enlisted in the French Foreign Legion when the war was only three weeks old, and was KIA 4 Jul 1916, could write:

I have a rendezvous with Death
At some disputed barricade
When Spring comes round with rustling shade
And apple blossoms fill the air.

While on an infantry patrol, I noticed some beautiful flowers one day. Upon return to the outpost, I asked if the patrol leader noticed them. "Flowers, chaplain? No. I can't say I saw them. I was looking for other things." It is so difficult to be aware of the beauty around us when we are only focused on survival or on detecting the enemy. We don't even see the flowers. We trample them underfoot while on patrol. When eyes are glued by epoxy cement they are immobile, and what is seen is never noticed with "eyes that see not."

Secondly, absent is an awareness of the presence of God. (Perhaps a more accurate statement is: an awareness of the absence of our "learned concept" of God, of the "kind of" God we expect—as much as a suffering and rejected Christ who dies in ignominy differed from the conquering hero god those at the time of Jesus expected). The "god" underlying all the heroes of the 40s and 50s, the Lone Ranger, all the radio detective stories, John Wayne, all patterned after the 4th Century St. George slaying the dragon who threatened the populace and was about to devour the maiden sacrifice—this god never rescued, even though it was this god who motivated the action of going to Vietnam after JFK's stirring address: "Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country," and "We will bear any burden, pay any price." Plato had long ago noted that the god we have determines who we become and how we live.

On the other hand, the God who is present in caring and loving actions—of dashing out in the midst of a hail of rifle fire, exploding ordnance, to rescue one who is wounded, of sharing the last drops of water or food with one who is without, of pushing a man away from an air-dropped pallet to save his life but being killed oneself by the crashing pallet, these and countless others is the presence of God. But it is difficult to know God is in us when we do these things because all we know is our focus on the one who is wounded, in need, or in danger. If the rescued one is dead, tears drown out any realization of the God who was present in our caring action.

In many ways, God is present to those who behold the returning veteran. Behold the Suffering Servant, described by the prophet Isaiah, spat upon and jeered, one from whom others hide their faces (or their concern or their attention) because, as Isaiah describes, there are horrific and ugly "battle wounds." Here is the "wounded healer" whose unhealing wounds (like those of Jeremiah or St. Paul) become the possibility and occasion for healing others. The last line of the poem, "It is a Beauteous Evening," by William Wordsworth is key: "God being with thee when we know it not." Jacob exclaimed: "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I did not know it." [Gen. 28.16]

Thirdly, absent is an awareness of a sense of the future. Then is always now. Of course, being in battle and seeing that no one is really invulnerable as many die so suddenly around us, and having so many close calls, the awareness that one is certainly going to die eventually settles in, and thereafter, there is no need for long range plans or goals or commitments. The philosopher Ludwig Wittgenstein observed, "The limits of my language are the limits of my world." While this may refer to vocabulary, it perhaps also refers to grammar. Vietnam poets give us "here" and give us "there;" they give us "now," and they give us "then." Absent is anything that compels or draws us into the future, or any sense of future consequences resulting from what was accomplished. There is an absence of many tenses: future, imperfect, perfect; there is an absence of the subjunctive mood. Absent is a vision of what might be or will be. We are left in Ezekiel's "valley of dry bones" (Ezekiel, chapter 37), a corpse-strewn battlefield of disjointed bones, disjointed wholeness, shattering, and specter of the "great death", and the pressing question: Can these bones—these broken individuals, these broken human relationships, these shattered dreams, live again, be joined together, form again a "great host?"

As the 19th Century Danish Søren Kierkegaard would suggest, one can only "un-know" the searing—even "branded upon the soul"—knowledge of the past by commitment to an ideal, a goal, a purpose (which is perhaps only a seed in the past, something we become aware of because of experiences in the past, something of importance we now realize because of that past), and live a life of commitment to that purpose through daily and hourly decisions by which we gain a history, a self. Here one is pulled into the future instead of being pushed by the past, or stuck in present pains of an enslaving web.

The image of Dante's Inferno is perhaps useful. The entrance to paradise lies in the small trap-door at the very bottom of the pit of hell. Like Dante, perhaps hell is not to be avoided or denied (lest it smolder within, creating great pressures that erupt and spew destructive emotion or action). Perhaps hell is not something to be conquered or even engaged (lest we underestimate the foe, overestimate our own abilities, or are unaware of allies who will ensure the victory). Perhaps hell is to be penetrated with a guide. Perhaps that guide is the poet who allows us to regard the reality and even let it be a mirror of our own inner reality, but not permitting us to become stuck, ensnared, or like one holding on to an electric wire—paralyzed and dying from it, but leads us on to the goal.

We can't know the release until we're aware of our bondage. We can't be healed if we have no dis-ease. We can't receive the grace until we accept the offense. These poems "educate" (i.e., "draw out") the pain and the dis-ease so we can then "let-go," so we no longer need identify ourselves with our disease or pain, so we may be liberated.

In a world and society strewn with "broken symbols," emptied of force, no longer "speaking to us," these poems—and others by Vietnam veterans—provide healing and liberation. The Suffering Servant may be rejected or despised or regarded of no account, but by his gashes and wounds are we healed.

"Where Two or Three are Gathered,"[910] (An essay on a picture taken on Khe Sanh Combat Base during the Siege battle). 19 May 2011. Originally printed as "The Picture."[911]

By Sunday, 28 January 1968, the Khe Sanh siege battle had raged exactly one week. Once a lush area, full of life, Khe Sanh no longer appeared "a thing of beauty, a joy forever."[912] Friends died. Friends were wounded.[913] Suddenly, all was transformed into a moonscape, a wasteland, as all above-ground structures, now piles of rubble, reminded some of World War I trench warfare, [914] Ezekiel's vision of the battlefield valley of dry bones,[915] or one of those ghost towns of the wild West, except that this place teemed with life. Khe Sanh was alive with death, with the force of death which, with a spiritual power of

---

[910] Mt. 18.20

[911] Originally printed as "The Picture," in Khe Sanh Veterans, Inc.: Red Clay, Issue #71 (Fall-Winter, 2008) 37-47 and back cover.

[912] John Keats, Endymion, Book 1, line 1.

[913] 45 Americans died and 330 casualties were treated at "C" Med during the week of 21=28 January 1968.

[914] SSGT Phil Hartranft, "Khe Sanh Reminiscent of WWI Trench Warfare," III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:16 (19 Apr 1968) p. 10.

[915] Ezekiel 37.1-14.

super-human force devouring all life to feed its ravenous, ravaging raptor appetite. "The earth is broken, broken down. The earth crumbled to pieces. The earth trembled and tottered. The earth reeled to and fro like a drunken man."[916]

Everyone, now emotionally numb, faced the jaws of the dragon of death, went through it (like Jonah devoured by the monster),[917] and emerged to live–to live on a different dimension of existence: dashing out to drag a wounded man to safety while mortars and screeching rockets still exploded, oblivious to danger, giving a last drop of precious water, a last morsel of C-ration food to another, thirsty, hungry soul–giving to Jesus Himself,[918] maintaining a sense of humor bravely living free of fear, giving and sharing, affirming humanity in a "courage to be"[919] in the face of the abyss of death and negation, as spectacular plums of yellow napalm's billowing fire balls, as sudden spikes of white phosphorus fireworks exploding right in front of us on the ground, and clumps of earth flung skyward then plunging to the earth to break the arm of a Marine[920] endlessly played symphonic battle music resonating within our soul. An army of rats increased proportionally with an army of reporters and the army of enemy troops surrounding us. Everyone dug, deeper, deeper.

We learned that life is short, precious, and fragile. We learned that life lives as it is connected to other life.[921] We learned we could never again depend on the probability of another day, another moment, as life moves through a minefield. We learned who we were.

Many learned that God is always present, even in hell.[922] Some two dozen who lived through the horrors and terrors and the darkness of the abyss that was Khe Sanh during the siege later became priests and ministers.[923] attributing their calling to experiences of God's presence within this devastation, on the cross, or as James Russell Lowell put it: "truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne / yet that scaffold sways the future / and beyond the dim unknown / standeth God within the shadows, keeping watch above His own."[924]

A wounded man on a stretcher asks for the words of the 91st Psalm,[925] words which resonated our life experience at that time, in that place: "He will deliver you from the snare of the fowler (the one who catches birds in a cage, like the NVA encircling, caging us) and from the deadly pestilence (of ever-present death, illness, rats, wounding) ... You shall not fear the terror of the night (in the form of 40,000 NVA creeping closer, closer, attacking) nor the arrow that flies by day (rockets, artillery, mortars, sniper bullets), nor the pestilence that stalks in darkness, nor the destruction that wastes at noonday. A thousand may fall at your side (friendly casualties),[926] ten thousand at your right hand ("right hand" referring to our power: the NVA casualties)[927] ... He will command his angels concerning you to guard you ion all your ways ... I will be with him in trouble, I will rescue him.."[928]

---

[916] Isaiah 24.19-20.
[917] Jonah 1.17.
[918] Matthew 25.35.
[919] Cf., Tillich, Paul, The Curage to Be, (Terry Lectures, Yale University), New Haven: Yale University Press, 1952.
[920] Identified as Peter J. Mudinich by CPL Gilbert Wall [Conversation of 13 May 19809] who described him as a German national who had attended Northwestern University and regarded his Marine Corps experience as preparatory to his return to Germany to become a German military officer. The explosion, on 21 February 1968, was from a TPQ-10 radar-directed close-in air-strike. He was older, about 22.
[921] Tillich, Paul, Systematic Theology, Vol. III, Life and the Spirit, History and the Kingdom of God., Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 1963, p. 53: "Life grows by suppressing or removing or consuming other life. Life feeds on life." Only, in this case, one lives only as one is connected to other life, as in John 15.1-6, the metaphor of life as a vine.
[922] Psalm 139.8.
[923] James Carmichael (E/2/26), Timothy Sims (M/3/26, who later became a Navy Chaplain), John T. Wielebski (A/1/26), Paul Longgrear (A-101 Special Forces), Tom Stott (G/2/26), Michael Stuart (2/3), Woodrow T. Schellenberg (1/9 Cav), Alan R. McLean (1/26), James D. Bailey (I/3/26), Gary Trowbridge (B/3d Recon), Charles E. Goodman (H&S/1/9), Keith Kapple (F/2/26), Ernie Elmore (CAC "O"), Donald Denton (1st Radio), Jim Everidge (G/2/26), Harris D. Himes (B/3d Tanks), and Michael C. Loehrer (B/1/13).
[924] Lowell, James Russell, the Present Crisis, lines 38-40.
[925] Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain (Unpublished manuscript), 01 April 1970, entry for Tue., 16 Apr 1968, p. 862.
[926] Friendly casualties, 20 Jan - 11 Jul were 990 KIA (402 for 20 Jan - 31 Mar, 165 for 01-16 Apr, 43 for 16 Apr, and 380 for 17 Apr - 11 Jul, when the base was abandoned).
[927] NVA casualties were estimated to 10,000 - 20,000 KIA. "Bru villagers south and west of Khe Sanh reported at least 2,000 and possibly 10,000 were killed by bombing. Casualties due to secondary explosions and fires from destruction and damage to guns, bunkers, supply dumps, headquarters, and structures, although not capable of being accurately counted, must have been high. Assuming 2 NVA soldiers per secondary explosion, with over 6,000 secondary explosions and fires, 12,000 may be conservatively estimated. Some of these explosions continued several hours. Approximately 900 bunkers were destroyed, some of which must have been occupied. 300 gun positions were destroyed. Forward Air Controllers (flying O1 and O2

Lt Col Wilkinson, our battalion CO, announced at the morning briefing that NVA forward observers on the ridge line overlooking our base to the north could call in mortars on any such grouping.[929] Worship now became a matter of going from trench to trench, bunker to bunker throughout the combat base, with numerous small congregations and a worship service not more than ten minutes long–a prayer, a Bible reading, a two or three-sentence sermon, distributing Communion, the Lord's Prayer, and blessing, followed by listening, conversation, and perhaps, if the shelling were just too intense, simply a few hugs.

Everything about Saturday, 27 January 1968, and Sunday, 28 January 1968, was to have lasting impact on my life.[930] My diary entries:

> SATURDAY, 27 January 1968: I woke up extremely sick–nausea, headache, diarrhea, etc., and walked over to the COC, providentially in time for the morning briefing. I didn't know whether I could take it, feeling I might vomit at any minute, but managed to remain. LtCol Wilkinson mentioned we have dropped 500-pound bombs with a 3, 6, and 9-hour delay and many "bomblets" to prevent the enemy from coming into our position. The Air Force can give us 1,000 sorties a day. Last night, Co Roc, the mountain range in Laos, was Arc Lighted at midnight, and the fires kept burning until 0300 .. Returned to my bunker about 1000 and slept, exhausted, until 1500! At that time I decided to visit our BAS. Dr. Feldman examined me and said I had some swollen lymph glands in back of my neck and gave me some pills for the nausea and some Orangeade. Hit the pad early.
>
> SUNDAY, 28 January 1968. I got up and walked past the regimental S-4 where two reporters, cameras dangling, asked if I could help them with "some good pictures of the troops." I told them to walk with me as I planned to move about the base. I carried a brass cross from the chaplain's altar kit and a wad of "A Message for the Day." My plan was to have a short opening prayer, read the appointed scripture lesson, distribute Communion, lead the Lord's Prayer, and conclude with a blessing. We started out, walking across the airstrip to arrive at the C Company, 1/26, lines in the Blue Sector on the north side of the base. It's always an emotional challenge to cross this wide-open space of aluminum metal with no place for cover should a barrage of incoming suddenly erupt. The first worship service was attended by five from 2nd squad, 3rd platoon, which was clearing new lines east of the other positions where two ARVN Ranger battalions would set in today. I walked west to the first regular bunker. We had a fairly large gathering that got larger until some mortars came and we all scattered, one landing only about 25 feet away. So we waited and then I held a service for the 81mm mortar people (2nd squad, weapons platoon, C Co.), attended by 3. Half-way through the Lord's Prayer I felt the blood drain out of my head. I was about to faint, but struggled until after the benediction, and then collapsed. After a short rest, I conducted another worship service a few feet away for others (consisting of C and B Co., 1/26 Marines and aircraft) counted 1,400 bodies, and approximately 1,000 bodies were killed on the wires of KSCB from three attempted assaults on the combat base in March, 1968. [MACV, "Khe Sanh Analysis," 8 July 1968, p. 13; Gen. Wm. C. Westmoreland, speech of 13 June 1968, to 3d Air Division in History, 3d Air Division, Jan - Jul 1968, Vol. 1, Exhibit #180, MACV, Command History,1968, Vol. 2, pp. 423-424]. Reference: Stubbe, battalion of Kings, 2005, p. 266.

---

[928] Psalm 91.3, 5-7, 11, 15.

[929] When I spoke with him the day the base was attacked, Sunday, 21 January 1968, and mentioned I had been all over the base and asked him what he wanted me to do--continue moving about the base or remain in my bunker in the medical treatment and evacuation area, C Med, he responded I should probably remain in "C" Med. {Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 April 1970, p. 529]. The next day, at the battalion morning briefing, incoming mortars made all present scatter throughout the bunker,. The CO continued his briefing and said he wanted groupings of no more than ten. He said we had intercepted their radio transmissions in which their FOs were told to call in fire whenever they spotted groups. The ban includes large working parties. It will just draw-in more incoming. [Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript, 01 April 1970, p. 536].

[930] Lasting effects included: physical symptoms (blood in urine, fever, etc.) eventually became diagnosed as membranous glomerulonephritis by biopsy. A Navy doctor, Dr. Stan Jurgenson, Naval Hospital, Beaufort, SC, asked me, "Do you want to stay in the Navy? We can give you a medical board. This disease will return within twenty years and kill you." On this basis, knowing that I might die at any time, I made a decision to remain in the Navy Chaplain Corps and avoid a civilian parish as well as avoid marriage and children, for I thought it would be selfish and not loving to enter marriage and fatherhood when, at any time, I might die. Of course, as I write this, I'm still very much alive and give the Lord the glory "who heals all your diseases" [Psalm 103.3b] Another lasting result was Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) which caused, among other effects, decreased short-term memory loss due to shrinkage of the hippocampus in the brain, a malady suffered by exposure to intense and sustained combat, and also such debilitating effects as inability to develop intimacy, chronic depression, avoiding large groupings of people, etc., all devastating to being a pastor.

"flashlight" section) attended by 5. We came under sniper automatic fire. After that, the two reporters and I walked to our 1/26 COC. I went in and told LtCol Wilkinson I couldn't continue today. I had hoped to be able to get everyone, holding over a hundred worship services today. I must have looked sick and pale because he rushed me to the 1/26 BAS; he wouldn't let me walk there. My temperature was 101.6. (My "normal" temperature is 97). I was completely exhausted. Reporters of all agencies–UPI, Time, NY Times, Washington Post, Chicago, and even a lady from Germany, were living in the 1/26 BAS and mentioned to me that refugees from the 33rd Laotian Battalion, located just inside Laos, came for refuge to Lang Vei village. They were butchered by NVA units.

REID PHOTOGRAPH

SWANSON PHOTOGRAPH

Left: UNPUBLISHED SWANSON PHOTOGRAPH

The two news photographers, SSGT John A. Reid, USMC, from III MAF of Sea Tiger and Richard Swanson of Black Star, took photographs of the worship service on the Blue Sector which eventually appeared in hundreds of publications,[931] perhaps one of the hundred most-printed photographs of the Vietnam War. The official USMC photo by SSGT Reid[932] is black and white, depicting only two Marines,[933] and clearly shows Hill 950 (off my right shoulder, a radio-relay position occupied by Marines during the siege battle) and Hill 1015 (off my left shoulder, a position occupied by NVA forces during the siege battle), the latter an identifying landmark which verifies photos taken at Khe Sanh! The usual morning ground fog forms a background for the cross. The colored photograph by Richard Swanson shows a background of fog and five Marines.

The photo appeared in various publications in subsequent years, jolting me back to those days and those experiences and feelings not then consciously felt but felt now with jarring intensity. It was only about three decades after the photographs were first published that I first "saw" it! The famous author, G. K. Chesterton, once wrote (something like): "Stare at something long enough until it becomes strange; you are seeing it for the first time." Suddenly, a horror bristled hairs at the back of my neck as I noticed I wasn't wearing a helmet, despite orders from Colonel Lownds three weeks earlier to wear one.[934] and despite the obvious danger of which I was oblivious! Even more shocking to me, neither were any of the Marines wearing theirs! They obviously followed my example of remaining uncovered during prayer and worship! Perhaps the words of the apply: "Thou hast covered my head in the day of battle."[935] I had done this unconsciously and by habit, and now, as I saw the photo, with great gratitude, thanked the Lord none of us were wounded! Gunny George Bailey, NCOIC of the small [931] Swanson's photograph first appeared in Life magazine 69:6 (Feb 7, 1968) p. 27. Reid's photograph first appeared in Sea Tiger 4:7 (Feb. 16, 1968) p. 10.

---

[932] #A190294, promulgated in III MAF Press Release 3M-09-0150-68.

[933] PFC Daniel L. Hobart on the left and PFC Kenneth Pae (with "Chicago Ill The Best Place is Home" on his flak jacket) on the right.

[934] Col Lownds, comments at regimental briefing, Saturday, 13 January 1968. Other orders at the same time: All personnel will have fighting holes where they work and where they live; these holes will be so built one can fight from them and they will be covered with air matting to be brought up from the south; the holes will be supplied with rations and all water cans will be filled at all times since the water point probably will be hit; beginning Monday [15 Jan], all personnel will wear flak jackets and carry a weapon, and wire will be laid for internal security throughout the base.

[935] Psalm 140.7b.

Detachment, 1st Radio Company, III MAF, later remarked to me: "I saw you leading a small group of Marines near C Med. None of you were wearing helmets! I thought to myself, the audacity! I came to see what was going on. {Perhaps ready to chew some  as a good Marine Gunny!] I joined the group and felt a peace in the midst of the chaos and battle, like being in the eye of a hurricane, while all around destruction raged."[936] The true meaning of peace involves not the absence of conflict, war, noise, or disturbance, but the presence of strength in these conditions.

The worship itself was very brief. Aware of the need to keep gatherings small, it was the first time I actually told people not to attend–that I would immediately hold another worship service. The appointed prayers and scripture text seemed so very appropriate to our situation. The opening prayer (the "Collect") was one of those traditional ones that spoke directly to our situation: "Almighty God, You know us to be set in the midst of so many and great dangers, hat by reason of the frailty of our nature we cannot always stand upright [!]: Grant to us such strength and protection as may support us in dangers and carry us through all temptations, through Your Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, who lives and reigns with You and the Holy Spirit, one God forever. Amen." The appointed scripture lesson also spoke, with an uncanny application, to our situation. It was Jesus calming the troubled sea: "And when he got into the boat, his disciples followed him. And behold, there arose a great storm on the sea, so that the boat was being swamped by the waves, but he was asleep. And they went and woke him, saying, 'Save, Lord: we are perishing.' And he said to them, 'Why are you afraid, O men of little faith?' Then he rose and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm. And the men marveled, saying, 'What sort of man is this, that even winds and sea obey him?'"[937] My "sermon" was very, very brief–just a few sentences. I mentioned how God seems "asleep," not actively present in our chaos, in all this horror and terror. The stormy sea is our battle with incoming and running for cover. Yet, God truly IS present, and God truly IS in control. We can have peace IN the battle, in the storm because God is with us. "Wherever two or three are gathered in His Name, He is with us."[938] "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble, therefore we will not fear."[939] Even if we make our bed in the hell of a battlefield, God is here!"[940] With the Lord, we have calm in the storm, peace in the battle. Then I had a short prayer asking for protection from harm, for awareness that God is with us, for comforting our troubled brothers and healing those wounded, and for strength to serve. We had communion: the Body of Christ given for you, the Blood of Christ shed for you. We had a blessing. I remained to talk, to listen, to hug, and then left for another worship service.

Those appearing in the photograph are:[941] LCPL Huey Lee ("Ray") Ishman[942] (KIA 19 November 1969), PFC Daniel L. Hobart,[943] PFC Kenneth Pae[944] (who has "Chicago III The Best Place is Home" on his flak jacket, WIA 02 Feb and 18 March 1968), and LCPL Charles H. Fox.[945] (Next to Ken Pae is a man Dan Hobart identified as PFC James AQ. Loesch[946] but whom Charlie Fox felt to be too small, and identified him as PFC James D. Heath[947] (WIA 02 Apr 1968) but Heath denies being in this picture.[948] According to Charles Fox, Ishman was medevaced shortly after the photo was taken with a "sleeping sickness," and Ken Pae was "a tough street kid from Chicago.'[949]

---

[936] According to Biblical witness, peace is not the opposite of war. In fact, one may have peace in the midst of war, for peace is not a negative (absence of war, conflict, noise, etc.) but is the presence of God and blessing in the war.[Pedersen, Johs, Israel, Its Life and Culture, London: Geoffrey Cumberlege, 1926, I-II, p. 311. In Judges 8.7-9, Gideon states that when he comes in peace, he will break the tower, indicating that to have peace means conquering the two chiefs. David returns in peace when Absolom is defeated (2 Sam 19.25, 31) Peace is not the release that comes following victory, for that would infer peace to the vanquished as well; peace is the victory itself. "The great warrior is he who always has 'peace' in his battles." [Pedersen, op. cit., p. 312]. The Israelite may even say he has peace (2 Sam 11.7) if he succeeds and is victorious.

[937] Mt 8.23-27.

[938] Mt. 18.20.

[939] Ps. 46.1-2.

[940] Ps. 8b.

[941] Identification of those photographed was provided by Charlie Fox in his letter of 10 Nov 1996.

[942] Ishman, 2268708.

[943] Hobart, 2309193, of Moravia, NY.

[944] Pae, 2347503, of Chicago, IL.

[945] Fox, 2237662, of Lewisberry, Pa.

[946] Loesch, 23448934, of Brenham, Tx.

[947] Heath, 2358231, of Homer, NY.

[948] Conversation with Richard Heath, 05 July 2008.

[949] Conversation with Charles Fox 01 Nov 1996.

SSGT Reid's photograph first appeared in print in the III MAF newspaper, Sea Tiger, 16 February 1968;[950] the Swanson photo first appeared in print in Life magazine, 9 Feb 1968.[951] The Reid photo appeared in numerous military newspapers noting the 193rd anniversary of the U.S. Navy Chaplain Corps in 1968, and many others.[952]

The Reid photograph, in the form of a line drawing by Sgt Henry Casselli[953] depicting a Marine with a M60 machinegun superimposed on top appeared on the front cover of the December, 1969, issue of Leatherneck (with a green background) and the December, 1976, issue of the Marine Corps Gazette[954] (in dark blue). The original, titled Christmas Vietnam, is an orange-toned tissue paper overlay highlighted with cream acrylic. "He painted it on the scene while serving a regular Vietnam tour as a Marine sergeant and combat artist where he won the Bronze Star with Combat "V".[955]

LEFT: CASSELLI DRAWING

---

[950] III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:7 (16 Feb 1968), p. 10.

[951] Life magazine 69:6 (Feb 7, 1968) p. 27

[952] National Register 44:46 (10 Nov 1968), "Chaplains Observe Birthday," Pacific Stars & Stripes, 27 Nov 1968, p. 9, "Navy Chaplains Right in There," Naval Construction Battalion Center, Port Hueneme, Ca.: Seabee Coverall 26:23 (22 Nov 1968), p. 6; "Chaplain Corps Celebrates Birthday," Marine Corps Air Facility, El Toro, Ca.,: Flight Jacket 25:45 (22 Nov 1968), p. 5; "Navy Chaplain Corps to Celebrate 193rd Year," The Military Chaplain 41:6 (Nov/Dec 1968), p. 4; Naval Supply Center, Oakland, Ca.: Oak Leaf, 18 Nov 1968; Naval Training Center, Great lakes, Il.:" Bulletin 44:47 (23 Nov 1979), p. 3. Miller Brewing Company, Milwaukee, Wi: Miller Highlights 15:2 (1969), p. 1. Mothers of Servicemen, South Pasadena, Ca.:" We Care, A Newspaper for Servicemen (Jan., 1969), p. 4. American Baptist Board of Education and Publication: Impact 4:9 (Sep., 1970) p. 5. Boettcher, Thomas D., Vietnam, The Valor and the Sorrow, From the Home Front to the Front Lines in Words and Pictures, Boston, Toronto: Little, Brown, and Co., 1985, p. 272. U.S. Navy, pamphlet, The Chaplain, Extending Your Reach, RAD 70291, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing office 880-195. Lutheran Church in America, Our Life and mission Together, 1977, p. 11. New Times 9:10 (Nov. 11, 1977), p. 66 (in book review (Herr, Dispatches) by Geoffrey Wolff, "Oh, What a lovely War book!") Bergsma, Commander Herbert L., Chaplains with Marines in Vietnam, 1962-1971, Washington, D.C.: History and Museums Division, Headquarters, U.S. Marine Corps, 1985, p. 106. Ewing, Michael, Khe Sanh (The Illustrated History of the Vietnam War), Toronto, New York: Bantam Books, 1987, pp. 106-107. Prados & Stubbe, Valley of Decision, Boston, New York: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1991, following pp. 360. (In the edition by New York: Dell Publishing, 1993, following p. 302). 3rd Marine Division Association; Two Score and Ten, 1992, p. 231. Dabney, William H., review article on Valley of Decision, in U.S. Naval Institute: Proceedings 118/9/1,075 (Sep., 1992) p. 112. Richardson, Herb, "With Faith and Devotion," Leatherneck 80:4 (April, 1977) p. 16. "What Qualities Father Mulcahy and Chaplain Ray Stubbe Have in Common," Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Il: Bulletin 47:45 (19 Nov. 1982) p. 8. Ewalt, Susan, "Vietnam: The Pain Lingers On," Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Il.: Bulletin 59:19 (11 May 1984) p. 1. Michael E. Stevens, ed., Voices from Vietnam, Madison, Wi.: State Historical Society of Wisconsin, 1996, p. 143. 3rd Recon Association; Harborsite 18:3 (Dec., 2010) p. 1. Larsen, Sarah A. and Miller, Jennife4r M., Wisconsin Vietnam War Stories, Our Veterans Remember, Madison, Wi.": Historical Society Press, 2010, p. 1125.

The Swanson photo likewise has appeared in numerous publications, e.g., Leroy, Catherine, ed.: Under Fire, Great Photographers and Writers in Vietnam, New York: Random House, 2005, p. 55. Carroll, Andrew, Grace Under Fire, New York: Doubleday, 2007, on front book jacket cover. Carroll, Andrew, "Why They Pray," The Wall Street Journal 249:56 (9 Mar 2007) p. W11. Bruch, Peter, "Re-counting the Casualties at Khe Sanh," Vietnam 20:1 (June, 2007) p. 37. Cover of CD/DVD package, Dr. Sam and the Managed Care Blues Banda; Before You Go, A Tribute to the Veterans of the Vietnam War, 2005.

[953] Sgt Casselli was a Staff Artist with the Marine Corps Association, Quantico, Va.

[954] 60:12.

[955] Marine Corps Association: Marine Corps Gazette 60:12 (Dec., 1976) p. 17.

Maria Raffaele, an artist living in Oregon, painted a large version of the Swanson photo she noticed in Life magazine for the National Cemetery in Willamette, Oregon.[956] She looked with deep sadness as flatbed truck after flatbed truck carried lone caskets up the road to the cemetery with no cars following them, and wanted to do something "for the boys." The large painting, in the small reception room of the cemetery, was painted in 90 days and donated to the cemetery. She altered the sky: "It's all kinds of warm browns and then you can see the sun beams breaking through. I wanted to give a vision of hope."[957] A newspaper article noted: "The Vietnam War trudged past her doorstep, and she felt helpless, until she fought back with her tools: a brush, a canvas and tubes of oil paint. She painted soldiers [sic, should be Marines] bowing on their knees with a chaplain leading them in prayer. A shaft of light hovered overhead, illuminating her vision of hope. She gave the 4-by-8 foot painting to the cemetery

RAFFAELE PAINTING

It's a metaphor for what matters to this artist: the needs of others. Making a difference."[958] Vergori had studied in Florence, Italy, and for more than half a century has painted character studies and landscapes.

Among the numerous paintings of "the photo," pone cropped off my head at the nose[959] prompting me to tell close friends, "See, I really did lose my head at Khe Sanh!"

Mr. Ken Burnett, a Marine who served with the reinforcing platoon from Delta Company, 3rd Reconnaissance Co., augmenting the lines of Bravo Company, 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion at Khe Sanh during the siege battle, returned to Vietnam in 2002 and spotted an enlarged version of "the photo" in a Vietnamese War Museum[960] with a caption that read: "Marines pray for their lives at Khe Sanh, but all were eventually killed.[961]

One evening, while leisurely watching a DVD of the last episode, "The Root of all Evil," of the TV series, Profiler, second season series, I suddenly was jolted back to the siege at Khe Sanh by the sudden (and totally unexpected) flash of the Swanson photo! It appeared five times in the program which focused on "pictures of pain!"[962]

Then, during an evening drive down one of our local Milwaukee streets one dark December, thoroughly drained of all energy after an intense boxing workout, I suddenly saw an enlarged cut-out reproduction of the Reid photo like a billboard! The property, occupied by Mr. Joel Paplham, although not a veteran himself, devotes much of his time and energy to assist veterans. Mr. Paplham had also erected a "larger-than-life" cut-out depicting the photo on the Veterans Park at the lakeside of Lake Michigan in downtown Milwaukee, but was later forced to remove it. He was also forced to remove it from his front yard display by his alderman, Marty Weigel.[963]

---

[956] The Willamette National Cemetery serves as the northwest's largest national cemetery and commands spectacular views of Mount St. Helens, Mount Rainier, Mount Adams and Mount Hood. The cemetery was established in 1950 and dedicated in 1951.

[957] Conversation with Marie Raffaele, 15 Feb 1997.

[958] The Oregonian, Wed., 12 Feb 1997.

[959] Ewing, Michael, Khe Sanh (The Illustrated History of the Vietnam War), Toronto, New York: Bantam Books, 1987, pp. 106-107.

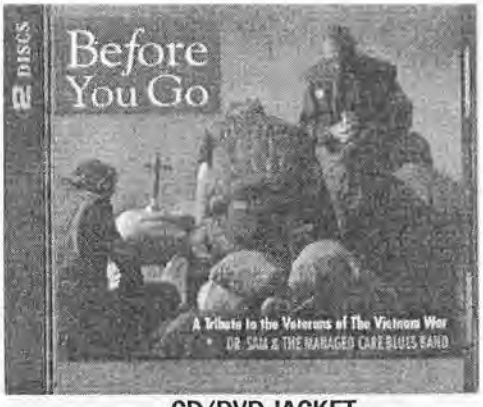
[960] Mr. Burnette couldn't recall which (of the several he visited) museum contained the picture.

[961] Conversation with Ken Burnett, 09 Apr 2002, and photo of the exhibit.

[962] At 0:46:35, 36, 39, and 0:49:12 and 25; date of original airing, July, 1997.

WISCONSIN STATE VETERANS MUSEUM DISPLAY

NATIONAL MARINE CORPS MUSEUM DISPLAY



CD/DVD JACKET

Another enlargement based on the Swanson photo of multi-layered cut-outs formed a large portion of a special exhibit in the Wisconsin State Veterans Museum, Madison, Wisconsin, "in the Belly of the Dragon," on display 23 Sep 2006 - 18 Apr 2008. A similar enlargement forms part of the Chaplain Corps display in the National Marine Corps Museum, Quantico, Virginia.

The photo continues to appear unexpectedly. A recent CD and DVD package of music and pictures in tribute to Vietnam Veterans by "Dr. Sam" called Before You Go has the photo on the cover of the CD/DVD package and is the initial photo.

"The varied appearances and uses of this particular photograph and its continued use .. continue to remind many veterans and myself of a very special time, of the possibility of peace (in its true, positive sense of the presence of blessing and life) in the midst of the horrors of combat, of compassion in the midst of aggression, of life in the valley of the shadow of death, the Presence of our Lord in all times and places, even hell (Psalm 139.8) and so much more. in a sense, it has become an icon (in the Orthodox understanding of a window through which one enters another reality rather than in the modern sense of a computer sign!)."[964]

Picture in Vietnam magazine[965]

[963] Letter from Mr. Joel Paplham, 11 May 2007.
[964] Letter to ADM Alan Baker, CHC, USN, senior Navy Chaplain assigned to the Marine Corps, 04 Dec 2008.
[965] Peter Brush, "Recounting the Casualties," Vietnam 20:1 (June, 2007) p. 37.

When the battle began, over 3,000 enemy targets were plotted.[966] Four large crates containing 4,000 body bags used to transport corpses arrived.[967] One brave pilot, in a very daring effort, delivered 8500 pounds of whole blood, morphine, and other essential medical supplies at approximately 11 PM with no lights, all the runway lights having been knocked out by shrapnel.[968] What would become perhaps the bloodiest battle of the entire Vietnam War, in which tens of thousands of people perished[969] in a little over two months had begun at a place called Khe Sanh in Vietnam.

The President had the Joint Chiefs pledge that Khe Sanh would be held.[970] Nuclear weapons were considered for our defense.[971] Khe Sanh occupied 25% of the evening TV news–50% on CBS.[972] When President Obama was inaugurated,[973] he mentioned only four battles in our American history when he said, "For us they fought and died in places like Concord and Gettysburg, Normandy and Khe Sanh."

When the battle began, we were some 6,000[974] on a base a little under a mile long and a little under a mile wide, plus three outposts manned by Marine companies (about 250 men to a company).[975] We were suddenly surrounded by some 40,000 enemy. Khe Sanh is located near the border with Laos and just under the DMZ,[976] in a mountainous, jungle-covered area.

We were isolated[977] Most of the 31 bridges over the single road that connected us to rear supply bases some 30 miles to the east were destroyed. Fog blanketed our base in the mornings, restricting landing of planes[978] and aerial observation of enemy troop positions and movements. Most of the troops continually said, "Where are our reinforcements?" Slogans on helmets and flak jackets dramatically changed from the obscene and bravado to "Mom and Dad Forever," "Please Mr. Cong I Don't Want to Die," and "God Walks With Me."[979] A nearby Special Forces camp was overrun by tanks, the first time these were used in the war.[980] . Nearby outposts were assaulted and nearly overrun.[981] Attacks on nearby outposts resulted in [966] Letter of Maj Mirza M. Baig, 23 Dec 1968, to HQMC Historical Division, in Khe Sanh Monograph Comments File.

---

[967] "Waiting at Khe Sanh," National Monitor, 26 Feb 1968, p. 4 (includes this in its chronological listing of events at Khe Sanh).

[968] DFC file on Capt Frank James Kennedy; "Copter's Blood Run Draws Rocket Fire," III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:6 (09 Feb 1968) p. 7.

[969] Although the official KIA for Americans was 205 [AAR SCOTLAND, p. 15; Testimony by MGen Tompkins before the U.S. Senate Electronic Battlefield Subcommittee, p. 95], official counts of subordinate units plus official lists of KIA make the total KIA for Americans at 563. Concerning the local Bru tribe (which was prohibited from leaving the area by the Vietnamese Commander, LtGen Xuan Lam), official census indicated 21,000 in the local area and the population at the Cam Lo Refugee Center following the siege was 6,000. Concerning the NVA, some 20,000 - 25,000 were in the immediate area with another 24,000 immediately available. Based on statistical models, there was an estimated 15,760 NVA KIA.

[970] Earle G. Wheeler ,CJCS Memorandum for the President, CJCS-63-68, 29 Jan 1968.

[971] Code-named FRACTURE JAW, Gen. Westmoreland thought it unlikely they would be needed unless the situation dramatically changed. Admiral Sharp (CINCPAC) reported contingency plans to include nuclear weapons, but did not anticipate their need. President Johnson, upon learning of these plans, ordered further planning be discontinued. CJCS, The History of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: The Joint Chiefs of Staff and the War in Vietnam, 1960-1968, pp. 45-25 and 45-26.

[972] Braestrup, Peter, Big Story, How the American Press and Television Reported and Interpreted the Crisis of Tet 1968 in Vietnam and Washington, Boulder, Co.: Westview Press, 1977, Vol. 1, p. 338.

[973] 20 Jan 2009.

[974] On 25 January there were 228 USMC officers and 5,387 USMC enlisted, 10 Navy officers and 251 Navy enlisted. [FMFPAC 250308Z/Jan68, SITREP #1031]. On 16 Feb 1968, the manning levels were USMC: 153/3039, USN 10/188, USA 1/29, USAF 5/24 (first number is officers, second number enlisted). [26Mar 162126H/Feb68 in 26Mar Command Chronology, Feb 1968. This did not include FOB-3 whose figures were classified. The 16 Apr levels included FOB-3 at 20/105 USA and 2/455 ARVN, and 37th ARVN Bn had 2/3 USA and 14/436 ARVN.

[975] Co I/3/26 and two platoons of M/3/26 on Hill 881-S; Co. K/3/26 on Hill 861 later reinforced by a platoon of A/1/26; a platoon of A/1/26 on Hill 950; Bn 2/26 on Hill 558 (3500 M NW of KSCB); Bn 1/9 on the adjacent Rock Quarry area (800 M SW of KSCB).

[976] 6.5 mi. from border with Laos, 14 mi. south of the DMZ.

[977] Dona Ha at 50 MK to the east ("as the crow flies").

[978] The airstrip was closed by the USAF on 12 Feb as being too dangerous. Alternate delivery was by low-flying planes discharging a sled pulled out of the plane by a drog parachute while only a few feet off the airstrip called LAPSE (Low Altitude Parachute Extraction System) and GPES (Ground Proximity Extraction System). Most supplies were dropped on the exceedingly small Drop Zone 530 meters long and 300 meters wide. [26Mar 010430Z/Mar68, in 3d MarDiv Msgs Etc file, Mar68, Pt. 1, Encl (10).]

[979] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, (unpublished manuscript), 06 June 1989, p. 640 (entry for 27 Feb 1968)

[980] In the assault on the Army Special Forces camp at Lang Vei, 07 Feb 1968.

[981] Hill 861 on 21 Jan 1968, Hill 861-A on 05 Feb 1968, and Hill 64 on 08 Feb 1968. Khe Sanh village and the District Headquarters was abandoned the day after the siege began, and the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei was overrun on 07 Feb were used in the war.[980] . Nearby outposts were assaulted and nearly overrun.[981] Attacks on nearby outposts resulted in hand-to-hand combat in the dark. One Marine recounts:[982]

> At that time, Ray, I had been wounded four times and had caught a grenade between my legs, which caused a hole in my penis the size of a dime and a hole in my left jaw the size silver dollar. I was standing there shaking, crying and scared to death. I had my M16 on auto selector and on my hip position, as I began to want to dream I was seeing a NVA soldier crawling toward me from my left side only about 20 feet away. During this time as the capping sounds were going off, the enemy screaming in foreign tongue, flares going off occasionally, and the feeling of cold tears running down my cheeks, I felt the presence of Jesus Christ so strongly as if he had entered my body. I knew then and there Jesus LIVES! As I watched this NVA soldier slowly reach the position he felt comfortable with which, seemed like it took him forever, he slowly brought his weapon into position with the barrel pointing almost directly at me, I automatically turned my whole body around still with the M16 on my hip. I squeezed the trigger and watched in horror as each round struck the NVA soldier in the chest. The force when each round hit his chest forced him up in mid-air until I had emptied my whole magazine in him.. It was like a dream Ray! It was like something or somebody was making sure I was going through the motions but I felt nothing. After that I seemed to lose the fear of it all and just started trying to defend for our wounded and our position.

For over two months, we received several hundred shells a day on our base a little under half a mile wide and a little under a mile long. On one day, we received over 1300, mainly artillery and rockets. What had been a lush paradise was transformed into a moonscape by more tons of bombs dropped in our immediate vicinity than were dropped in all of the Pacific in all of World War II.[983] One target struck by B52s resulted in over 1,000 secondary explosions and fires.[984] During one close-in air strike a large clump of earth fell on a Marine in the trench resulting in a compound fracture. Although the bone was protruding, this was not sufficiently serious a wound to warrant his evacuation, and he was returned to man the lines.[985] Bombing runs by B52s, called "Arc Lights," had been restricted to no closer than 3 kilometers from friendly lines. Flying at over 500 knots and over 20,000 feet, their payload of up to 128 500 and 750-pound bombs,[986] a cell of three bombers totally destroyed an area 100 by 1,000 yards. So destructive were their bombs, it was deemed too dangerous for them to be brought closer. At Khe Sanh, with the enemy's trenches approaching our wires, they were brought to within 1 kilometer (less than half a mile)[987] The ground continually shook. Men in the trenches, while flat on their stomachs in the trenches, hands over ears and screaming, bounced. Marines witnessed enemy soldiers tossed into the air. The specter of destructive force brought to mind the words of Isaiah: "The earth is broken, broken down / The earth is crumbled in places. The earth trembles and totters. The earth reels to and fro like a drunken man."[988] And the words of Jeremiah: "The earth.. was waste and void.. the mountains .. were quaking. The hills moved to and fro .. All the birds of the air had fled .. the fruitful land was a desert."[989]

Death's forceful nearness was felt each day, sometimes several times in a day. On one particular day, 23 February, we received 1307 incoming rounds[990] and eating a "Ham With Water Added and Eggs Chopped Canned" C-ration (I'm sure a

---

[980] In the assault on the Army Special Forces camp at Lang Vei, 07 Feb 1968.

[981] Hill 861 on 21 Jan 1968, Hill 861-A on 05 Feb 1968, and Hill 64 on 08 Feb 1968. Khe Sanh village and the District Headquarters was abandoned the day after the siege began, and the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei was overrun on 07 Feb 1968.

[982] Letter of 17 March 1987.

[983] Gen. William W. Momyer, USAF, "Operation NIAGARA," in Trest, Warren A., Khe Sanh (Operation NIAGARA) 22 January - 31 March 1968, CHECO Report, 13 Sep 1968, Supporting Documents, No. 12. Total for Pacific Operating Area, WW II: 32,735 tons; total at Khe Sanh (22 Jan - 29 Feb 68): 53, 380 tons.

[984] MACV, "Khe Sanh Analysis," 08 Jul 1968, p. 14.

[985] Incident on 21 Feb 1968 involving PFC Peter J. Mudinich, a German citizen who served with the U.S. Marines which he regarded as training in order to become an officer in the German army. Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 06 June 1989, p. 585.

[986] Directorate, Tactical Evaluation, CHECO Div., Khe Sanh (Operation NIAGARA), 22 January - 31 March 1968, pp. 112-114. Peter Braestrup, "B-52 Biog Weapon in Defense," Washington Post, 11 Aug 1968. Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, p. 308.

[987] Maj James B. Pralle, Arc Light June 1967 - Dec 1968, 15 August 1969, p. 29. Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, p. 634.

[988] Isa 24.19-20.

[989] Jer 4.23-26.

[990] 3d MarDiv COC 232155Z/Feb68, Opn SCOTLAND SITREP #458; 3d MarDiv COC 231641Z/Feb68, Opn SCOTLAND SITREP #459.

civilian restaurant couldn't possible beat the DOD in creative food descriptions!) while sitting on my rack in my bunker, a large nearby explosion violently shook my bunker. "It sounded like it was stuck in the wall; things were falling, dirt and pieces of wood. I immediately thought of a delayed fuse that would explode the entire bunker."[991] One round struck a nearby bunker housing the crew of a 106mm recoilless rifle. I had slept in that bunker with those Marines a few weeks earlier (07 Feb) and saw one reading from a small prayer book I had earlier distributed. (He didn't see me approaching; his back was to me.) I felt their nervousness as they played a 45 RPM Credence Clearwater version of "I Heard it on the Grapevine," and repeatedly entered and exited the bunker for a cup of coffee during the night. I listened to their dreams and their thoughts.[992] Now I carried out one of my friends over my shoulder, a corpse with no head, only strings of flesh dangling out of a cavity where his neck had been. We searched for the missing head, but were unable to locate it.[993] When I returned to my bunker that evening to sleep, I noticed that the wall of sheets of air matting next to my rack was bent–which must have been the explosion while I was eating my one C-ration for the day (we were all limited to one C-ration a day). When I called EOD, I was told it was safe to sleep; they'd check it out the next day[994] (I'm sure they just didn't want to venture out during at night following a day of record incoming! or, as one Marine observed: "Nothing's too good for the chaplain, and nothing's what he's gonna get!")

A few days after leaving Khe Sanh, on one of my many returns there, I noticed that my bunker was a shambles. I assumed it was being torn apart to retrieve sheets of air matting. Not so. The chaplain who relieved me, Charles ("Chick") Kelly, said that a couple of days after I left, one night, there was a huge explosion. He was sleeping in a bunker only eight feet away, suddenly awakened by the explosion. "That was your bunker," he said[995]

After the horrors and terrors of Khe Sanh, I was assigned to a rear unit but returned to Khe Sanh at least once a week to visit units of troops assigned to my new command–and to visit old friends still there. The Division Chaplain was pissed, saying "We got you out of Khe Sanh to get you out, and you keep returning!" On one of my several returns–it was Easter Sunday, 14 April 1968[996] I remained overnight in the medical area and a wounded man on a stretcher asked me to read to him the 91st Psalm[997] Suddenly, here were words that held together our war experience and gave them meaning within a larger context. "He will deliver you from the snare of the fowler"–traps to catch birds, like ambushes trapping men or nets entangling us. "You shall not be afraid of the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flies by day"–assault waves of charging enemy, rockets and artillery! "A thousand may fall at your side"–our friendly casualties–"and ten thousand at your right hand"–"right hand" referring to our strength and the ten thousand being the enemy killed by our supporting arms!

ECLIPSE

About a year after returning from Vietnam, I was stationed at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot, Parris Island, SC, and witnessed a total solar eclipse. It started just past noon and was total about 1:30 in the afternoon. Street lights suddenly came on automatically in the night-like sky. One Marine, caught up in the experience, started running around playfully shouting, "It's the end of the world! It's the end of the world!"[998] Just as our moon, over 250,000 miles away blocked the light and warmth of the sun, so did Vietnam, exactly half-way around the world block life and love and peace. "For those who fight in a war, it never ends." To paraphrase a common expression, "You can take a man out of the battle, but you can't take the battle out of the man." Khe Sanh became the experience of a spectacular solar eclipse.

Life became like the experience of a scotoma. Little things block what's greater. I believe it was Abraham Lincoln who said how we can block out our sight by a little quarter held closely to our eyes. We are literally blinded by the darkness, unable to see the light that discloses a clear path or dangers, unable to feel the warmth of fellowship and love that makes life full and rich. I remember accompanying an infantry patrol at Khe Sanh.[999] After some eight hours of thoroughly-exhausting humping of the terrain, the hill outpost–our home–loomed before us. I wasn't sure I could move ten more feet; spasms shot

---

[991] Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 April 1970, unpublished manuscript, p. 698.
[992] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, 06 June 1989, unpublished manuscript, p. 535.
[993] Ibid., p. 593.
[994] Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 April 1970, unpublished manuscript, pp. 700-701.
[995] Comments of Rev. Charles Kelly, 20 January 1989.
[996] A day at Khe Sanh in which battalion 3/26 assaulted Hill 881-North, sustaining many casualties.
[997] Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain (unpublished manuscript), p. 862, entry for Tue., 16 Apr 1968.
[998] Eclipse was on Saturday, 7 March 1970. Noted in PFC S. D. Grubbs, "Solar Eclipse Due," Parris Island Boot, Fri., 6 Mar 1970, p. 1.
[999] Thursday, 20 July 1967 in Stubbe: Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 April 1970, p. 56.

through my legs. The verse of the Psalm came to mind, "I look to the hills. From where is my help to come?"[1000] Somehow, we managed to scale the monstrous hill. Once we reached the summit, I saw the specter of an even greater hill that we still needed to climb. It had been invisible, blocked from sight by the hill we had just climbed. Things get in the way. Troubles, experiences on which we get fixed, issues in which we get stuck, and all we can see is the trouble, the pain, the issue, the experience. Some hold on to a pain or trouble in order to avoid and block out an even greater pain or issue.

Life was narrowing for me in the 1980s. My journey home reminded me of the journey of Odysseus who passed between Scylla and Charybdis (actually the Straits of Messina separating Italy and Sicily). My dear grandmother passed away on 04 July 1982. I was passed-over for promotion and was preparing to retire on 20 years, feeling rejected by the Chaplain Corps. The Vietnam Memorial wall in Washington, D.C., was being dedicated and TV news programs were filled with scenes from Vietnam, activating latent memories of war. Life seemed like moving through a gorge with increasingly narrowing sides, which is precisely the image Plato used to describe the Greek word Ἀνάγκη (anagkay')[1001] from which the German word "angst" is derived.[1002] Thucydides also used the word to describe narrowing options that forced Athens and Sparta to resort to war; it is usually translated "necessity," in his works.[1003] Interestingly, the Hebrew word for trouble, צרר (tsar), literally means "narrowness," hemmed-in by dangers and trials[1004] Life and its future became squeezed, crushed, smothered, suffocated, pressed down, pressured.

As the years progressed, Khe Sanh became an eclipsing, interposing intrusion; everything reminded me of Khe Sanh, something far away and long ago, yet ever-present, ever now. When I visited Joe Lola, a Khe Sanh vet friend who was a patient at the Stress unit at the VA hospital in North Chicago, we went to a snack area to talk. Several dozen Navy corpsmen from the adjacent Corps School at Great Lakes suddenly filled the place, some sitting with Joe and I. Those at our table spoke with excitement about going to Field Medical Service School; they were going to serve with Marines. I looked at their young faces and wondered how many would die. Apparently my face expressed my fears. I had returned to the Khe Sanh battlefield. My friend looked at me and said, "Ray, you gotta get out of this place–now!" And he was the patient!

All I could see was Khe Sanh–in everything. The 20th Century philosopher, Martin Buber, writes of meeting a scholar who lived through the horrors of World War II: "Reality had been brought so close to him that he saw everything with new eyes and had to think in a new way."[1005] The contemporary writer, Paul Auster writes: "Whatever you see has the potential to wound you, to make you less than you are, as if merely by seeing a thing some part of yourself were taken from you."[1006] Like pebbles in boots, an eye lash in the eye, a sliver in the finger, a tooth ache–little things become an astronomically large black hole drawing-in all one's energies and focus of attention. In a very real sense, I felt stuck in the past, like a scratch on a LP record causing the same song snippet to be repeatedly replayed until someone lifts the needle enabling the song of life to resume. MIT professor Alan Lightman's brilliant little book of little vignettes of differing concepts of time comments about those haunted by memories of unresolved guilt, relationships to loved ones no longer alive, musings about what might have [1001] The Greek-English Lexicon, compiled by Henry George Liddell and Robert Scott, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 9th Ed. with supplement, 1996, p. 101, lists the meanings: force, constraint, necessity, compulsion, bodily pain and anguish.

---

[1000] Ps 121.1.

[1002] Plato, Cratylus 421E.: "..the idea is taken from walking through a ravine which is impassable and rugged, and overgrown, and impedes motion.." Coe, David K., Angst and the Abyss, The Hermeneutics of Nothingness (American Academy of Religion, Academy Series No. 49), Chico, California: Scholars Press, 1985, p. 22. Coe notes that Plato's dialogue refers to Orphic and Pythagorean mythology where Anake was mated with the great serpent, Chronos with Anake (necessity) and Chronos (time) forming a binding ring encircling the entire Cosmos, limiting the possibilities of our intellect, will, and desires. One cannot exist without the other.

[1003] Ostwald, Martin, ΑΝΑΓΚΗ in Thucydides, (American Classical Studies No. 18), Atlanta, Ga.: Scholars Press, 1988, p. 19. The term is "..compulsion only because those affected by them perceive no viable alternative course of action is open to them, because any alternatives theoretically or objectively available involve unacceptable consequences, such as death, defeat, surrender, or the like... Neither for Athens nor for Sparta would these alternatives have been acceptable or even possible; the war was inevitable, because both Athenians and Spartans realized that it was."

[1004] Brown, Francis, Driver, S.R., and Briggs, Charles A., A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1907, pp. 864-866, gives the following meanings of the verb: (1) bind up, tie up, be restricted, narrow, scant, cramped; (2) (in Hiph.) suffer distress; (3) show hostility towards, vex; (4) make a rival–wife; (5) be sharp, sharp-edged stone, flint. H.-J. Fabry, "צר," Botterweck, G. Johannes, Ringgren, Helmer, and Fabry, Heinz-Josef, Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament, Trans. Douglas W. Stott, Grand Rapids, Mich.: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 2003, Vol. XII, pp. 455-464, notes two Hebrew meanings: (1) wrap up, envelop," and (2) be cramped for space, restricted." The Hiph. form of the verb refers almost exclusively to distress prompted by an enemy. Used in Psalm 138.7, 107.6, 13, 19, 28.

[1005] Buber, Martin, Eclipse of God, Studies in the Relation Between Religion and Philosophy (Harper Torchbooks), New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1957, p. 6.

[1006] Auster, Paul, Country of Last Things, New York: Viking, 1987, p. 19.

been: "The tragedy of this world is that no one is happy, whether stuck in a time of pain or joy. The tragedy of this world is that everyone is alone. For a life in the past cannot be shared with the present. Each person who gets stuck in time gets stuck alone"[1007]

SHAME AND DEFILEMENT

During the battle,[1008] a corpsman asked me to remove the boots from an injured man on a stretcher, moaning, covered with blood,. His boots were caked with mud and blood. As the mixture coating my hands dried, I had the odd sensation of shrinking. It was as though death were an active, living force. I later wrote a poem about that: "The blood on his hands / so alive / with death / gripped / drying, dying, contracting, squeezing / suffocating, suffusing / penetrating, transforming / So alive, so real, so near/ so always / The brother's cry from his clay in violent shouts / in words what is not said / in feelings what is not felt / in actions what is never accomplished / in passing time what always is / No washing to hands removes / the pain stain interpenetrated / soul / within always / present, always / shedding, always / staining."[1009]

When I left Khe Sanh, I brought with me a large aluminum ("Mount-Out") box and used it as a bath since there were no available showers. I recall how the red mud of Khe Sanh never seemed to wash away; when I wiped myself dry, the towel was always smudged with the red mud like I wiped my ass. I recall feeling at the time that the violence and terrors and horrors of Khe Sanh, its "genius loci," had somehow penetrated my skin and lodged inside of me in my soul[1010] just like this reddish clay; no scrubbings seemed to wash it away. I was defiled, or like lepers had to cry out, "Unclean! Unclean!"[1011]

I extended to serve an additional six months in Vietnam and received a special 30-day leave. We could go anywhere in the world for that special leave, and I chose to go home. Within a few weeks of having been in the thick of battle at Khe Sanh, I visited my bishop.[1012] His opening words to me were not "How relieved I am to see you," or "Our prayers have been answered and you're home," not even "good morning." His words were, "I don't know how you can put up with such immoral people." Still shocked by my battle experiences and feeling shunned and stunned by his remarks, I remained silent.

At the time, Vietnam veterans–even chaplains!–became the visible objects on which angry critics of the Vietnam War spewed their venom and hung their projected hatred. No cleansing rituals like parades a society usually grants to returning warriors welcomed home those who served in Vietnam.[1013] One of my Khe Sanh veteran friends recalls returning to the States from Vietnam. He sat next to the window in a row of three seats. The middle seat was vacant. The man in the aisle seat, a businessman with suit, vest, and tie, after shuffling through some papers in his brief case, asked Dennis where he had been, and Dennis replied, "Vietnam." He asked if he'd seen any action, and nodded when Dennis talked about Khe Sanh. Then, as soon as the plane reached altitude and seat belts could be unfastened, he summoned the stewardess and said, "I want another seat as far away from this guy as you can give me." Dennis rode from Los Angeles to Connecticut alone, painfully aware of rejection.[1014]

In the summer of 1983, while on active duty in the Navy, I entered the Stress Disorder Treatment Unit of the VA hospital at North Chicago, Illinois, adjacent to the Naval Training Center, Great lakes. After retirement from the Navy[1015] my Bishop

---

[1007] Lightman, Alan, Einstein's Dreams, New York: Pantheon Books, 1993, p. 65.
[1008] 22 Feb 1968.
[1009] The Soul Mate, written 29 April 1996, printed in the Khe Sanh Veteran, Issue #37 (Fall, 1990), p. 5.
[1010] Khe Sanh is a caldera sitting atop an ancient volcano. The place was formed in dramatic violence and heat. On the tactical maps, the airstrip is indicated as "Xom Cham," or "village of Chams." The Chams were pirates and warriors active in the 7th Century in Quang Tri Province until they were defeated by the Vietnamese. Perhaps a remnant of the Chams settled on what became Khe Sanh airstrip. In any event, a palpable presence of violence despite an overwhelming abundance of beauty and life, was readily sensed by anyone at Khe Sanh! Even the earlier "Battle of the Hills" in April-May, 1967, caused Marines digging trenches and bunkers on Hill 881-South to unearth an occasional human skull, rifle, or other indication of past violence.
[1011] Lev. 13.45.
[1012] Actually, the title was "President" of the Wisconsin-Upper Michigan Synod, Lutheran Church in America. Rev. Dr. Theodore E. Matson.
[1013] There was a New York City "Ticker Tape" Parade, 07 May 1985, (organized by a Khe Sanh veteran, James Hebron), a Chicago parade on 13 June 1986, and a gathering of some 30,000 Vietnam veterans with family and friends at Lambeau Field, Green Bay, Wisconsin, on 22 May 2010.
[1014] Conversation with Dennis Mannion, 16 May 2011. Dennis notes that he later attended the University of Connecticut, and students identified veterans by those who went to the veteran's office in connection with their GI Bill benefits, and that no other students would sit next to him in classes or at labs.
[1015] 01 Jan 1985.

strongly suggested I retire from the active ministry. He said there were no churches vacant which I could pastor. I was 47. Nor was I physically sound. During the siege, I was evacuated due to a fever and blood in my urine. A few days later, against the doctor's advice and at my insistence, I returned to Khe Sanh.[1016] A subsequent biopsy at the Naval Hospital, Beaufort, South Carolina, disclosed an auto-immune disease and the doctor[1017] asked if I wanted a medical discharge since I would die within twenty years within which the disease would flare-up. I opted to remain on active duty and decided to avoid marriage since it certainly would not be loving to know I would die at any time and leave a wife and possibly children.

Although guilt, especially "survivor's guilt" has been noted concerning combat veterans, the more fundamental issue is shame. Whereas guilt refers to specific actions and violations of specific prohibitions, shame refers to personal identity, who a person is. Whereas punishment for guilt keeps the offender within a society, abandonment in shame excludes; the shamed person is humiliated, regarded as worthless, of no human value.[1018] As shame is more powerful and painful than guilt, adoption of guilt to distract from and cover over a more fundamental issue of shame seems to be the operating factor. Shame can arise from feelings of helplessness, something all in battle know, and certainly those of us at Khe Sanh knew, and this gives rise to rage.[1019] Shame is much more than acute embarrassment; it is a response to a public rejection of one's claim to honor.[1020] Shame is reflected in Job's lament: "Wherefore I consider myself vile and melt."[1021] Both the "curious fact that many Vietnam veterans describe themselves as unclean" and the reluctance of both Vietnam veterans and American society in general to discuss Vietnam for so many years following the conflict, give a "clear indication of defilement."[1022]

Writing in 1981, Peter Marin was surprised at the unaddressed world of moral pain of returning Vietnam veterans.[1023] He notes absence of adequate clinical models to address this pain and the propensity to "empty the vet's experience of moral content" by such terms as "impacted grief." He writes: "Nowhere in the literature is one allowed to glimpse what is actually occurring: the real horror of the war and its effect on those who fought it."[1024]

During the Middle Ages, Christians imposed penances on returning warriors,[1025] not simply due to any guilt associated with killing in battle. Other factors prompted penance rituals, including the dread of blood (horror sanguinis). Any contact with blood was taboo ("taboo" referring to contact with anything possessing power which might "infect" the person with powers that would overwhelm the violator). For the ancient Hebrews, anyone who had killed another human being in battle was required to stay outside the Israelite camp for seven days.[1026] Thus, the 4th Century Christian teacher, Basil the Great (c. 330-79) (following a suggestion by Cyprian, d. 258) had written that those responsible for killing in war should abstain from communion for three years.[1027] Even observing an execution, as in gladiator games, made a person unclean according to the teaching of Athenagoras,[1028] Christian teaching generally internalized the horror sanguinis, the dreaded taboo associated with physical contact with blood; the sole consideration being the interior disposition of the individual which made a person clean or unclean.[1029] Christians were required to examine their conscience for sins of cowardice, anger, pride, avarice, sloth, whether the action was taken for personal glory or gain.[1030]

[1016] Narrative Summary, Standard Form 502, 3 Feb 1968, signed by LT P. S. Vokonas, MC, USNR: "At his request, the patient was released to duty, to return to the Khe Sanh area." In Health Record of Stubbe. Admitted 31 Jan, departed 3 Feb 1968.

[1017] Stan Jurgenson.

[1018] Hultberg, Peer, "Shame–A Hidden Emotion," Journal of Analytical Psychology 33 (1988) 116.

[1019] Ibid., pp. 122, 123.

[1020] Muenchow, Charles, "Dust and Dirt in Job 42.6, Journal of Biblical Literature 108:4 (Winter, 1989) 601.

[1021] Job 42.6. The full phrase is "I repent of dust and ashes," indicating Job's abandonment of a role as innocent sufferer (being in "dust and ashes") vis-à-vis God after God's vision of greatness. One commentator notes that Job separated himself from the community by sitting among the ashes (2.8) and that Job is ready to abandon his role as isolated innocent sufferer. Repentance is Job's reversal, his "change of mind" about proceeding in a legal case against God, and he is ready to resume normal life. God's vision has vindicated Job's innocence and revealed the futility of pursuing litigation based on a moral law of reward and retribution. Job's integrity is preserved. [Habel, Norman C., The Book of Job, A Commentary (The old Testament Library), Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1985, p. 583].

[1022] Mahedy, William P., "It Don't Mean Nothin': The Vietnam Experience," The Christian Century (Jan 26, 1983) p. 66.

[1023] Marin, Peter, "Living in Moral Pain," Psychology Today 15:11 (Nov., 1981) 68; Marin, Peter, "What the Vietnam Vets Can Teach Us," The Nation (Nov. 27, 1982) 558.

[1024] Marin, "Living in Moral Pain," op. cit., p. 72.

[1025] Verkamp, Bernard J., "Moral Treatment of Returning Warriors in the Early Middle Ages," The Journal of Religious Ethics 18:2 (Fall, 1988) p. 223.

[1026] Num 31.19.

[1027] Verkamp, op. cit., pp. 226, 227.

[1028] Ibid., p. 227.

[1029] Mt. 5.8, 15.18, 12.334, Mk 7.20, Lk 6.45.

[1030] Verkamp, op. cit., p. 231.

Khe Sanh had been an encounter with the "holy."[1031] We had experienced what was taboo; we had experienced, encountered, touched naked power and therefore were cast from the innocence of the paradise of the Garden of Eden,[1032] and exiled like Oedipus who eventually came to learn he had unwittingly killed his father and married his brother and then subsequently blinded himself.

A few years ago, Dr. Philip Chard, who writes a weekly column in the local Milwaukee newspaper,[1033] was giving a talk to a group of senior citizens at a local church[1034] reassuring us that although we were aging (or, as one of my boxing coaches says, "becoming more mature") our brains continued to grow. To the great shock to teenagers, our brains didn't stop developing after we turned 30. He also said that if one part of our brain were injured, other parts of the brain took-over. During the question and answer period that followed, I said: "I think I read somewhere that the part of the brain[1035] that handles memory actually shrinks for those in combat. Is there any evidence that other parts of the brain will eventually take-over?" Dr. Chard never directly answered my question. Instead, he gave me a very great gift. He said, "for combat vets, reality is often dream-like while dreams may be more vivid than life." Now, I intimately knew all about flashbacks and nightmares. (As one Vietnam vet friend says, "When people ask me when I was in Vietnam, I tell them, 'last night'.") But, as communication is what's heard, not what's said, what I heard in his reply was, "It's OK. You're OK. This is normal." I actually found myself with a few tears! Dr. Chard hadn't given me information; he'd given me something far greater–caring, even if my unhealing wound could not be cured.

Later, I asked myself, "What's going on? What provoked such an emotional response? What are the tears saying?" As I thought about that, I realized that I regarded myself as "damaged goods," and Philip Chard was telling me that I still had value. The nightmares, the bouts with depression, social isolation, inability to remember people's names or the vexing annoyance of constantly forgetting what recently happened–none of this made me a pariah to be tossed away from society. The observation of Viktor Frankl, the World War II concentration camp survivor, suddenly became so real: "An abnormal reaction to an abnormal situation is normal behavior."[1036]

A FEW THOUGHTS ON HANDLING PTSD

When traveling to Khe Sanh for the first time, high in a helicopter, the terrain below seems covered in a carpet of velvet green. The rivers appear like silver tinsel on a Christmas tree. The view from above is breath-taking, beautiful, serene. A few days later, while on that patrol climbing the hills, the view from the ground became far different: grass taller than a man, grass with sharp edges full of bacteria, cutting exposed skin and causing sores that never seemed to heal. Large boulders in rushing streams that killed several of our men, who drowned in them. Torturous hills with sharp inclines, covered with slippery mud causing numerous, continuous falls. As the philosopher, Ludwig Wittgenstein once remarked, "The map is not the terrain."[1037]

Sometimes, a different perspective heals. For those on the ground, the larger view from above of the broader landscape, brought beauty. When I began my 6-month in-patient hospitalization at the Stress Disorder Treatment Unit of the North Chicago VA hospital, my good friend from Khe Sanh, Kevin Macaulay, sent me a colored photograph he had taken while on top of a tall hill overlooking Khe Sanh Combat Base. He wrote:

> I enclose a photo taken on Hill 950, the radio relay station outside of the Khe Sanh Combat Base, and offer the following thoughts. Below the hill yet above the base are clouds which indicated another damp dreary day for the Marines on the base. Yet above the clouds the sun shone brightly. Drawing a parallel, you are now below the clouds but soon you will be above them. The troubles you and I presently experience regarding our feelings of Vietnam are like the clouds. The goodness of the Lord will take the clouds away. We soon will [1031] Rudolf Otto describes the "holy" as both a mysterium tremendum–that which causes trembling, fear, awe, shuddering, speechlessness, and a mysterium fascinosum–that which causes attraction, desire, which entrances, captivates, transports. The holy is "..an object of horror and dread, but at the same time it is no less something that allures with a potent charm, and the creature, who trembles before it, utterly cowed and cast down, has a the same time the impulse to turn to it, nay even to make it somehow his own." [Rudolf Otto, The Idea of the Holy, Trans. John W. Harvey, New York: Oxford University Press (Galaxy Books), 1958, p. 31.]

---

[1032] Gen. 3.23.

[1033] "Out of My Mind," appears in the Cue section of the Tuesday Milwaukee Journal Sentinel.

[1034] St. Matthew's Evangelical Lutheran Church, Wauwatosa, Wisconsin, Wed, 22 March 2006, to the SAINTS group.

[1035] The hippocampus.

[1036] Frankl, Viktor E., Man's Search for Meaning, An Introduction to Logotherapy, rev. ed., of From Death-Camp to Existentialism, Trans. Ilse Lasch, Preface Gordon W. Allport (A Touchstone Book), New York: Simon and Schuster, 1962, p. 18.

[1037] I have not been able to locate the source of this quotation.

bask in His smile, the sunshine. It is hard for you now but in the future the good times will be all you will remember. I thank God for the opportunity He gave me in Vietnam. I served with some of the most loving individuals ever created. Their deaths sadden me to this day but the remembrances of their lives is like the sun above the clouds. Trust in God and stay well. Fondly, Kevin.[1038]

Healing comes through grasping a "wider context," a "bigger picture." This might be a more complete understanding (through sharing with others who saw different aspects or perspectives, or through learning what went before and what happened after). The larger context might be gained by just being with others who understood (other veterans of the same battle). The wider context might be eventually realizing that the painful periods of life are but a segment of a much greater span of life. The wider context might be awareness of God's presence in all the darkness and horrors and terrors. The wider context might be a walk in nature, beholding God's great creation, learning of cycles and patterns, perhaps detecting the hidden wholeness of reality.[1039] Awareness of a greater context acknowledges the painful experience (not burying it) while yet discharging its harmful force. The "greater context" differs from person to person. Reality is obviously greater than our experience of it, and our experience is greater than what we say about it. Others can inform of details we missed and give us a different perspective. We may recall aspects of an experience we had forgotten. Everyone in a battle has parts of the story which, when put together, makes us all more whole.

Interestingly, the Hebrew word for "salvation," יָשַׁע (ya shah) has a root meaning of "to be roomy, broad." "As oppression is viewed as a kind of spatial hemming in or imprisoning, so rescue from it is a moving out into the open."[1040] Thus, Psalm 4.1, "In my distress you have set me at large" (NJB), "..thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress.." (KJV), "You gave me room when I was in distress." (NRS).[1041]

Dr. Rachel Naomi Remen, a psychiatrist treating hospice patients, writes of an angry young man revolting against his diagnosis of diabetes. After being in therapy for half a year, he had a vivid dream in which he sat in an empty room with a small statue of the Buddha. He was not a spiritual young man and was surprised he felt an affinity with the statue of a young Buddha, about his age. He fell silent. Suddenly, a dagger was thrown which buried itself deep in the Buddha's heart. The young man was shocked, overwhelmed with despair and anguish. Then, something amazing happened. The statue began to grow, very slowly, and gradually the wound became just a tiny black speck in the breast of an enormous, smiling Buddha. He awoke with tears, realizing "..he might grow in such a way that the wound of his illness might become a smaller and smaller part of the sum total of his life, that he might yet have a good life, even though it would not be an easy life."[1042]

A recent article[1043] describes a contemporary way of obviating combat stress. A point man had been killed by a land mine. When their squad leader gathers them, no one will grab the metal detector used to clear a path through the mine field for the next patrol. It was a moment in which "the men would either keep fighting or succumb to fear and loss." The squad leader hands the metal detector to the dead man's best friend. The writer comments:

> That moment, and those that followed, epitomize the new approach to combat stress. ... After nearly a decade of war, military commanders have concluded they're in danger of losing the battle against emotional trauma. One in five troops returns home from Afghanistan and Iraq saddled with some form of mental health issue. ... The latest research suggests troops handle battlefield stress better, and avoid post-war problems more often, when they heal among their comrades.[1044]

One of the contributing pathogens of PTSD relates to the destruction of one's idea of God. The old conundrum of theodicy–"God cannot be both all-powerful and all-loving, for if God is all powerful, why doesn't God do something? If God is all loving, how can God permit this to be happening?"–became far from an academic discussion for those on the battlefield! God seemed absent because the IDEA of God no longer contained our experiences in a wrapping of meaning. Our conception of God is not God. Our ideas about God are not God. As when one speaks of another person, what is said discloses more

---

[1038] Letter from Kevin Macaulay, 22 July 1983

[1039] Cf. Bohm, David, "Hidden Variables and the Implicate Order" Zygon, Journal of Religion and Science 20:2 (June, 1985) 111-124; Bohm, "Fragmentation and Wholeness in Religion and in Science," Zygon, op. cit., pp. 125-133; Peters, Ted,. David Bohm, Postmodernism, and the Divine," Zygon, op. cit., pp. 193-217; Palmer, Parker J., A Hidden Wholeness, The Journey Toward An Undivided Life, San Francisco, Ca.: Jossey-Bass2004.

[1040] Fohrer, Georg, "The Stem ישע in the Old Testament," Friedrich, Gerhard, ed., Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, Trans. Geoffrey W. Bromiley, Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1971, Vol. VII, pp. 973-974.

[1041] See also, Pss 18.19, 31.8, 118.5, 119.32, 2 Sam 22.20, Deut 12.20 and 33.20, Hos 4.16.

[1042] Remen,Rachel Naomi, M.D.,:My Grandfather's Blessings, Stories of Strength, Refuge, and Belonging., New York: Riverhead Books, 2000, p. 143. Whole story on pp. 141-143.

[1043] Michael M. Phillips, "Rx for Combat Stress: Comradeship," The Wall Street Journal 257:76 (Sat/Sun, April 2-3, 2011, pp. A1, A12.

[1044] Ibid., p. 1. Underscoring provided.

about the speaker than the person spoken about. When our ideas of God were etched away in the acid bath of the battlefield, many assumed that God was not real, not present, uncaring. Actually, our idols were smashed. Our understanding of God proved false or inadequate. Kant's famous dictum, "percepts without concepts are blind; concepts without percepts are empty," applies: an inadequate concept will fail to perceive the reality of God's presence. Because we don't experience God, the conclusion that God doesn't exist is logically invalid. Our assumptions of God failed.[1045] Yet, in the "dark night of the soul," we encounter the living God. Faith is born in the desert where all props disappear. For some, our experience was one of disenchantment in which the allure of what previously had captivated, the external reality on which we projected our soul, crumbled; in disenchantment we experience betrayal to the degree that the excessive adulation once accorded now becomes an excessively emotional dismissal. Disenchantment might involve revenge, denial, cynicism, self-betrayal, paranoia, depression, shame.[1046] Yet, a chiseling-away enables what is valuable to emerge. Leonardo da Vinci wrote of liberating the statue hidden in the block of marble. While in grade school art class, we took a bar of Ivory soap and were told to carve out a bas relief.[1047] I had decided to carve a cowboy, and was horrified when the art teacher took my bar to demonstrate to the class, and gashed out large chunks. When she had finished, she handed me the bar to let me complete the task. I was amazed at how much better the form of the cowboy appeared after removing large pieces of the soap. Cluttered basements–like mine!–frustrate when attempting to locate something lost in the morass of accumulated junk! The 14th Century Meister Eckhart taught that one grows spiritually by a process of subtraction, not addition. Our ideas of God might be clutter which needs to be discarded to enable growth and life in a world of new challenges.

The solutions for living with PTSD involve a social context, not simply the fundamental need to be accepted and reintegrated into society, but also having a good friend or loving family, other combat veterans who understand, accept, and provide new ways of looking at the same painful reality, perhaps even the missing details. I recall a telephone conversation with a Khe Sanh vet who anguished over a guilt of not digging fast enough in an attempt to rescue an officer trapped in a bunker collapsed by an incoming round. He was put in touch with another Marine who had also frantically dug out the debris from the explosion and was told he dug as fast as anyone.[1048] He wondered why he remembered that as digging in slow motion and was told that frequently in battle, we perceive things in slow motion. He said, "That was one of the most important phone calls I've ever made in my life! According to Lee, I dug as fast as anybody. The phone call that I made to you, and then you called back–I can't tell you how much that helped!" Combat comrades healing each other! Veterans groups and veterans reunions in which veterans complete the story are especially healing for Vietnam veterans who returned home individually, not as units as in World War II, and frequently retained only a fragmentary account of an action.

The solution to defilement is acceptance and appreciation of one's value. We value people most when we need them, when we give them a responsibility, when we listen to them intently, when we regard them as persons and not symptoms to be cured. The gifts of the Spirit (love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control)[1049] are not primarily personal possessions, but descriptions of connections between people.[1050]

The eclipse that blocks an experience of the presence of God and that blocks progress in life diminishes as one attains a vision of what is greater. Not "thinking outside the box," but standing, living outside the box, in a "wider context" brings salvation, life. Suffering Job was healed through the vision of God's greatness.[1051] I once was stranded in an air terminal with a missionary in Vietnam. His name was Hank Blood, and although he was killed by the enemy in Vietnam, his words have lived to bless me many times. One of the things he said was, "Never focus on the greatness of your problems; focus on the [1045] Kate DeSmet, "Shallow view of God didn't help Viet vets, priest says," The Detroit News, Sat., Oct 11, 1986, p. 13A, reviewing the thought of Father William Mahedy, a former Roman Cathl.lic priest, later an Episcopalian priest who served in the US Army as a Chaplain in Vietnam.

---

[1046] Andre Papineau, Lecture at C.G. Jung Center, Milwaukee, 19 Oct 1986, "Enchantment and Disenchantment in Human Experience."

[1047] A sculpture on which the figure projects slightly from the background.

[1048] Conversations with Lee Burger and Joseph Murray, both of 06 June 1993.

[1049] Gal. 5.22.

[1050] Joseph Haroutunian, University of Chicago, lecture for course BT122, 14 Feb 1967, commenting on Gal 5.22: "What characterizes the Spirit is a new creation, how people relate themselves to one another. These aren't simply virtues; they are things that characterize transactions of Christians with one another." See also Haroutunian, Joseph, "The Spirit of God and the People of God," Union Seminary Quarterly Review XII:4 (May, 1957)39-45, especially p. 44: "The indwelling of the Spirit among Christians must be understood in the primary sense of his working among them. The Spirit so indwells the Christians that by their human relatedness one to others, they become the means one to another of restoration both to God and to neighbor in faithfulness." Also, his book, God With Us, A Theology of Transpersonal Life, Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1965.

[1051] Job 38.1-41.26: God's greatness, Job 42.1-6: Job's response; Job's healing: Job 42.10-17.

greatness of your God."[1052] I recall an incident in which I was fuming in anger, about to spew my complaints about another person to my commanding officer. When I entered his bunker, he immediately said, "O, how good it is to see you, Chaplain." His genuine warmth and concern just melted my anger, I didn't bury it to let it fester; it just dissolved in the greater caring attitude my CO exuded.

The greatest context we can have is love. "God is love."[1053] Love, of course, is a verb, not a noun, an action, not a feeling or thing. It's what we do, not how we feel. In love we live because we become part of the greatness of our Lord forever.

The heat of battle and the heat of our rage and anger and the heat of our crushing troubles might just be gifts. Just as soft, dark coal transforms into diamonds, the hardest natural object on earth with dazzling facets under tremendous heat and pressure, just as heat transforms ingredients into bread, so also new, probably overlooked, gifts (i.e., ways of being valuable socially) might be mined from the dark caverns and shafts of the battlefield. Those who have been wounded are precisely those who can heal.[1054] My personal experience with veterans discloses people with an abundance of energy, social sensitivity, and caring attitude, humble (i.e., "down to earth"[1055]) and willing to serve. Transformation of anger and rage into socially-valuable service, drawing out strengths and gifts, probably invisible to the veteran, through a circle of good friends, heals not only the veteran but all of society. Veterans, who are the "living memory of war" have much to say, to contribute to society, not only with regard to the reality of war and all its horrors, but what is truly valuable and important, to the greatness of what people are capable, the triumph of loving actions, and the presence of God. From these broken bodies and angry spirits, disillusioned and stunned, the abrading, painful memories and encounters with spiritual forces and powers, might emerge that which enriches many, just as a grain of sand grinding in the tender inner parts of an oyster produces, over many years, a beautiful pearl, a "pearl of great price!"[1056]

Memorial Day Address, Longfellow Middle School, Wauwatosa, WI, 30 May 2011

When asked why they joined the Marine Corps, many of the (mainly) 19 year-olds I knew in Vietnam said they were motivated by the words of John F. Kennedy when he was inaugurated as President: "Let every nation know .. that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and success of liberty .. and so .. ask not what your country can do for you: ask what you can do for your country."[1057]

They heard it as impressionable 12 year-olds in 1961. Now, seven years later,[1058] they found themselves at perhaps the bloodiest, most desperate battle of the entire Vietnam War, at a place called Khe Sanh.

Today, I want to focus on the price, the burden, the hardship. Today we pause. Today, we remember and honor. Today, we rededicate ourselves. Today, I want to introduce you to a few of the many who gave their life at Khe Sanh, Vietnam, 44 years ago. We all have specific persons we remember today. The specter of the vast quantity of names on the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, D.C., stuns us into silence at the sight of 58,000 names engraved on a long, black granite wall. Then we recall there were twice as many killed in World War I, almost seven times as many in WW II, and over ten times as [1052] Meeting with Hank Blood was on Friday, 08 Dec 1967. My diary entry reads: "Sat most of the time inside the air terminal. Talked with a missionary from Wycliffe, Henry Blood. He is also going to Khe Sanh, to purchase Miller's Honda. He kept referring to the phenomena of speaking in tongues, of praying for others and himself and subsequently being rescued from danger. He was later captured by the VC along with other missionaries during the 1968 Tet offensive and murdered. He was tall, with a British accent, dignified, somewhat white hair, and continually read from a small copy of the NEB. He said that the secret of prayer is not the greatness of one's problem, but the greatness of the God to whom one is praying." [Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 Apr 1970, (unpublished manuscript), p. 445; Stubbe, Khe Sanh (unpublished manuscript), entry for 08 Dec 1967, p. 675.

---

[1053] 1 Jn 4.16.

[1054] The motif of the "wounded healer" appears in the Greek myth of Aesclepius, in the ancient cultural shaman, in Isaiah's portrait of the "suffering servant," in Jesus, and in such contemporary experiences of Alcoholics Anonymous and other support groups.

[1055] "Humble" is related to humus.

[1056] Mt 13.46.

[1057] Kennedy, John F., Inaugural Address, 20 January 1961.

[1058] The Khe Sanh siege battle began on 21 January 1968.

many in the Civil War,[1059] Yet, the German poet Goethe wrote: "I am rent to the core by this simple one's suffering; you pass carefree over the fate of thousands.[1060]

Although Khe Sanh seemed like a lush Garden of Eden paradise, it sat on top of an extinct volcano.[1061] It's birth in heat and extreme violence left a lingering spirit. Many were to die at Khe Sanh, the red clay formed from weathered volcanic rock made more red by their blood.

[PFC JOHN HINSON, KIA 16 Aug 67]: One day, some of the very primitive local people, not Vietnamese, but mountain tribesmen of the area, were crossing a river. When the river almost swept a woman away, a young Marine, Robert Hinson, a non-swimmer, jumped in to rescue her. Hinson was a non-swimmer, but like most teenagers, thought he was invincible. He told another Marine, "A bullet is never going to get me." He was also a young man who supported his mother and sent funds to help a student in Greece. Another swell then swept him away, and he drowned. He died saving others.[1062]

[LCPL GARY TALLENT, KIA 20 Aug 67]: A recon team was preparing to be inserted one Sunday at Khe Sanh. As they whiled away their time playing cards waiting for the choppers to insert them, their radioman, Gary Tallent, said, "Let's go to church." And so they stacked their rifles outside and entered, their faces camouflaged with variegated dark and light green face paint.

A couple hours later, I peered through the clear plastic liner of a body bag used to transport corpses. It was Gary Tallent. His team had been shot out while inserting, killing him and the helicopter crew chief.

Over a hundred gathered for a memorial service the next day. A floppy cloth cover, the cap worn by recon Marines on patrol, was placed near the cross on the altar. A Marine Private in the formation wiped away a tear.[1063]

The recon company at Khe Sanh had a slogan, "It's a hell of a deal," but the Commanding General of Division said that was too vulgar; it had to go. So they had a contest for a new slogan. One of the suggestions was "Only the good die young, and we are." There were others: "Pain is good," "We may be few, but we've done-in many," "Where the Division goes, we have been," "The kitchen sink? We'll hump it." They were mostly about 19 years old, ready to slay the dragons, the inspiring words of John F. Kennedy reverberating in their heart alls, resonating in their souls.

On Marine Corps Birthday, 10 Nov 1967, the regimental commander told a group of Marines on one of our hill outposts, "You all soon will be in the American history books."[1064] About a month later,[1065] at 3 in the morning, while I was sleeping in a bunker at a small outpost manned by Marines and local primitive mountain people, the tribesmen on the line suddenly started firing. One of the Marines[1066] in the pitch dark bunker jumped out of his sleep and put his trousers on backwards as he rushed out. The tribesmen explained that they saw their evil spirit prowling outside the wires, a spirit that devours people, and they were firing to scar it away.[1067] Two 1200-man infantry battalions arrived, doubling our defense. The battle was about to erupt.

[PFC JONATHAN NATHANIEL SPICER, DOW 14 Mar of wounds received 8 Mar]: Nine days before we were attacked, a young Marine, Jonathan Nathaniel Spicer, came to me to apply as a Conscientious Objector. He'd never played sports, never hunted, and was told by his recruiter that he could be a dog handler. He said he wasn't afraid to die, and would like to work for the people here. We talked practically all morning. I concluded he was sincere.[1068]

[1059] WW I, 117,000 KIA, WW II, 405,000 KIA; Civil War, 620,000 KIA; Vietnam, 58,000 KIA. Three years of the Korean War, 37,000 KIA.
[1060] Goethe, Faust II, 439f.
[1061] Hoffet, Josue-Heillmann, Étude Géologique sue le Centre de L'Indochine entre Tourane et le Mekong,(Bulletin de Service Geologique de L'Indochine, Vol. XX, Fascicule 2), Hanoi, 1933, p. 131. There are five small candera of extinct volcanoes--Cua Tung, Gio Linh, Cua, Khe Sanh, A Dua Ap, which, along with the hot springs of Huong Hoa, form a curve around Tiger Tooth Mt., created during the Quarternary era.
[1062] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2d ed., 2008, pp. 91-92
[1063] Ibid., p. 93.
[1064] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 1971, pp. 601ff.
[1065] 03 Dec 1967.
[1066] Roberts.
[1067] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, op. cit., entry for 03 Dec 1967, p. 670. The evil spirit was "Panoah."
[1068] Ibid., entry for 12 Jan 1968, p. 736.

Suddenly surrounded by some 40,000, our small base began to receive several hundred incoming rounds of artillery and rockets each day. Our situation became so precarious, nuclear weapons were considered for our defense, the President had the Joint Chiefs of Staff guarantee we would hold, and we occupied half of the TV evening news for several months. More tons of bombs were dropped in our immediate area than in all of World War II in the Pacific. Tens of thousands of people were killed in those two months at Khe Sanh, including at least 563 Americans. Over 2500 of our Americans were severely wounded and evacuated.

Spicer supervised those carrying stretchers of the wounded to helicopters. When incoming rounds exploded and everyone else dashed for cover, Spicer remained by the men in stretchers, reassuring them, sometimes covering them with his own body. One day, he took a piece of shrapnel in his heart, and later died. He laid down his life for others.[1069]

[CPL KENNETH WILLIAMS, KIA 9 Mar]: Because the base took so much incoming, many supplies were delivered by parachute. The air strip was deemed too unsafe to land planes. Horrified, a Marine saw a pallet of supplies headed to crush a Marine. He yelled. But due to the noise of propellers and incoming, the Marine didn't hear his warning. So he ran, tackled him, pushed him out of the way, and was himself crushed to death by the pallet.[1070]

In those days, in battle, we lived and died for each other. It was a daily occurrence to see Marines dash out into the exploding ordnance to pull a wounded buddy to safety. It was common to see Marines give their last drops of water to their buddy, to share their tiny ration of food with each other, to see Marines hug each other during intense explosions, and to see and hear a humor that indicated a refusal to let the acid of fear eat away their soul. Forced to fill sandbags for a bunker for an obnoxious officer, the men removed the sandbags they had filled, covering his bunker, at night and put them on their own; got up early in the morning and replaced them. When I stumbled about in the night to find the urinal, a plastic 81mm mortar casing set into the ground, one Marine, challenging me in the pitch dark night said, "O, chaplain, don't worry, all the Nam's a piss tube."[1071] There was a caring for each other, a courage that refused to cower, an affirmation of life despite the force of death. These young men, we remember today–how could we forget them? God was present to us through them.

[LCPLGREGORY POPOWITZ, KIA 24 Jan]: Four days into the siege battle, one of the bunkers took a direct hit. Several of the survivors sat in my bunker during that night, unable to be evacuated. One took a roll of toilet paper and continuously dabbed blood off his head. The deck of my bunker was filled with the crumpled, blood-soaked pieces. Amazingly, the next day I saw him filling sandbags. I learned that the blood was not his, but that of one of the four men killed in that bunker.[1072] I had just baptized one of those killed a month earlier, Gregory Popowitz.[1073] When Popowitz, whose father had been killed in World War II, decided to enlist in the Marine Corps at the age of 16, his mother vehemently objected. Legal guardianship had been turned over to his grandmother, however, and she signed the papers[1074] allowing him to enlist.

The Marines at Khe Sanh, continued to dig–new bunkers, deeper trenches, recalling images of World War I.[1075] LCPL Kenneth R. Thompas, assisting the regimental S-4, LtCol Fred McEwan, came up with a slogan, posted outside the S-4 bunker, "Home is Where You Dig It."[1076]

[CHAPLAIN ROBERT BRETT, PFC ALEXANDER CHIN, KIA 22 Feb]: Father Brett, one of our chaplains, visited Marines of his unit on a hill outpost that, only a few days earlier,[1077] had received a ferocious assault. Although the position was partly overrun, the Marines fought with fierce determination in hand-to-hand combat, and held the position. Father Brett remained overnight with the Marines, baptizing one and bringing peace and blessing to all. He then returned to the main Khe Sanh combat base by helicopter waiting for another helicopter to take him to his battalion position. While waiting, an artillery round exploded in the trench where he took temporary refuge, killing he and his assistant, PFC Alexander Chin. Chin already had three Purple Hearts, was about to return home, and was engaged to be married. His family had prepared a "welcome

---

[1069] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, op. cit., p. 254.
[1070] Ibid., p. 250.
[1071] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, 07 Oct 1971, p. 208, entry for Friday, 28 July 1967.
[1072] Ibid., p. 137.
[1073] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, op. cit., entry for Sat., 23 Dec 1967, p. 699.
[1074] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, op. cit., p. 138.
[1075] Hartranft, SSGT Phil, "Khe Sanh Reminiscent of WW I Trench Warfare," III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:16 (19 Apr 1968), p. 10.
[1076] Noted in Khe Sanh Veterans, Red Clay, Issue #38 (Spring, 1997), p. 3
[1077] 05 Feb 1968, E/2/26.

home, Alex" banner. Alexander had volunteered to go to Vietnam so his younger brother, already in the Army, would not have to go to Vietnam. [1078]

[CPL ROBERT CALDWELL, KIA 28 Feb 68]: All of the chaplains assistants–five of them–were killed during the battle at Khe Sanh. Cpl Robert Caldwell, had been a good Marine in the bush, and his officers, to reward him, transferred him to work for the chaplain. He planned to become a minister. Since his flight date was within a few days, the chaplain sent him to DaNang, but those processing the men said he had to serve one more day in the forward position, and so sent him back to Khe Sanh. The plane on which he travelled was shot down as it was landing at Khe Sanh, killing him and 43 others.[1079]

[PFC JAMES CHISHOLM, LCPL MICHAEL McKEEVER, CPL GARY THORP, KIA 23 Feb 68]: Our small base, less than half a mile wide and less than a mile long, took some 1307 rounds of incoming tone day, mainly artillery and rockets. One of these struck a bunker housing the crew of a 106mm recoilless rifle. I had spent a night in that bunker a couple of weeks earlier when we were warned that "tonight's going to be the night" for an assault on our base. I got to know the Marines quite well. Now, parts of one man's body hung out as I carried him into the truck–a hand, an arm, a stringy piece of flesh intertwined with cloth and caked with mud. He had no head, only strings of flesh from a cavity where his head would be. We searched for the decapitated head, but were unable to find it.[1080]

[SGTMAJ JAMES GAYNOR, KIA 15 Feb 68]. Sergeant Major James Gaynor had been captured as a Marine Corporal on Corregidor and remained a POW with the Japanese most of World War II. He had served in Air Wing units and wanted his "twilight tour" to be with Marine infantry, the Grunts. Thus he was at Khe Sanh, constantly checking on the welfare of the troops even during incoming–which was almost always. One day, he was wounded by incoming and died of his wounds. He had one son, 13 or 14, and two years after the Sergeant Major's death, the son ran away from home and was never found. Like a tsunami following an earthquake, close family members also become casualties of the war.[1081]

[PVT RANSOM LEE STUCK, KIA 26 Feb 1968]. On 9 February, one of the Marines[1082] attending worship, mentioned that he was serving "bad time" until the end of March, and that he had two athletic scholarships to attend college.[1083] On 26 February, stopping at the hut where the dead were brought, I saw him in a body bag. An incoming rocket had killed him. His platoon commander later said that Randy got along well with the other men in his platoon, was well-liked, a good Marine, not afraid of combat.[1084] Randy's cousin recalls that he and Randy "were both simple country kids raised in a small town of 1,000 in southern Indiana. Randy was not a coward and as a kid would stand up to any bully."[1085]

[CPL KENNETH CLAIRE, KIA 25 Feb 68] Ken was a large, muscular Marine who grew up in the mountains of California. His niece recalls how scarred she was when Ken carried her on his shoulder. He frequently bellowed a Tarzan call,[1086] and played-up being a tough guy. One day when supplies were delivered to the hill outpost where he was, he took a whole loaf of bread and began to chew off hunks like a wild man.[1087] Ken took care of his troops. When Khe Sanh was attacked and the nearby ammo dump exploded, spewing ordnance throughout his area, Cpl Claire ignored the terrifying explosions to move about, checking on the welfare of his Marines and treat casualties. Disregarding his own safety, he tossed out ordnance that might well have exploded in his hands, and carried rounds to positioned where they wouldn't endanger his men. He kept telling his men, "Don't look down; they're probably coming to overrun us!"[1088] Now he was on a platoon-sized patrol just outside our wires. The entire platoon was ambushed, killing almost all, including Cpl Claire who had been standing in the

---

[1078] Ibid., p. 206.
[1079] Ibid., pp. 238, Letter from Rev. William Hampton, 27 Nov 2004.
[1080] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, op. cit., p. 211.
[1081] Ibid., p. 195.
[1082] Stuck was with 3rd Squad, 2nd Platoon, C/1/26.
[1083] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 06 Jun 1989, p. 549.
[1084] Nick Romanetz, email of 16 Jan 2001, printed in Khe Sanh Veterans, Red Clay, Issue #49 (Spring, 2001), p. 34.
[1085] Terry Stuck, email printed in Khe Sanh Veterans, Red Clay, Issue #49 (Spring, 2001), p. 34.
[1086] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, op. cit., entry for Fri., 25 Aug 1967, p. 339.
[1087] Ibid., p. 337.
[1088] Bronze Star Medal Citation and file on Cpl Claire; comments of Jeff Culpepper, 23 January 1984. Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 06 June 1989, p. 356.

middle of the field directing the maneuvers of the rifle teams.[1089] One of the two or three survivors whose jaw was shot off and placed in a trench, watched the entire action. He managed to crawl back to the base,[1090] and later visited Cpl Claire's brother and related what happened. Doctors had managed to fasten his face to his shoulder so he could chew food. He later died. One of Ken's brothers took his brothers so bad that he got into drugs and was institutionalized. Again, the battles continued to kill.

[LCPL "AUTHOR" "C" SMITH, KIA 30 MAR 1968]. A company-size patrol was sent to recover the bodies of the MIA from that platoon ambush. Accompanying this patrol was LCPL "AUTHOR" SMITH. "C," as he was known in his family, the eldest of 7 children, grew up dirt-poor in a family of share-croppers in Alabama. His father, a WWII vet, was in and out of the VA hospital for alcohol-related issues most of the time, and "C" supervised his brothers and sisters laboring in the field. He dropped out of school where kids poked fun at him since he had little or no lunch, holes in his shoes, and worn clothes.. His sister recalls, "There were no birthday parties, school functions, running water, inside bathrooms, toys on Christmas morning, heat in the winter, doctors when you were sick. There were, however, endless chores and taking care of siblings."[1091]

He joined the Marine Corps. On home on leave from boot camp, he told his sister, "Sis, I won't be coming home." He went off to Vietnam, to Khe Sanh. His sister recalls: "We watched the news every day. The worst fighting was at Khe Sanh. That is where he was. I saw pictures of the Marines and I would pray that one of them would be him. He was nearing the end of his tour.. he did not have much longer to stay."[1092]

His close friend at Khe Sanh recalls "C" as having a dry sense of humor. "He was just one of those people that you meet in your life that stand out in your memory. He'd have a little smile. I don't ever remember him complaining once. He never showed any fear. He wasn't crazy. When something happened, he was rock solid. During the siege, the Lieutenant came down and passed the word that if we had a chance, to capture one of the enemy. So we planned to sneak out, faces camouflaged, maybe two or three Marines, and capture one. Smitty was one of those two or three ready to go on what they regarded a suicide mission."[1093] He, like so many of those youngster Marines had a "hot heart for chilling deeds."[1094]

After the platoon patrol had been ambushed, the rest of the company left the perimeter of Khe Sanh to retrieve the bodies of the 27 MIA left on the battlefield. They ran into another ambush, causing more KIA, including "C" who rushed across open terrain to silence an enemy position. He returned to a trench to consolidate his men and then leaped to assault another enemy position and was killed.[1095]

These are only a very few of the many dozens I personally knew killed at Khe Sanh. Ordinary young men displaying extraordinary humanity and care for each other. Many died as heroes, some were just ensnared in the webs of battle. All were concerned for each other. All were heroes–in the true sense of someone who changes the lives of those around in actions that involve great personal sacrifice. Most, we don't even know. Yet, we live because they gave. We remember them today, along with the many thousands that many of your remember, and the many, many tens of thousands we don't even know for whom we pause, we reflect, we rededicate ourselves, as the motto of our Milwaukee War Memorial states, "to honor the dead by serving the living."

[1089] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, op. cit., p. 224.
[1090] Ed Rayburn.
[1091] Letter from Mrs. Jo Ann Harrison, 01 Feb 2004
[1092] Ibid..
[1093] Conversation with Steven Wiese, 19 Jan 2006.
[1094] Sophocles, Antigone, line88.
[1095] Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, op. cit., p. 273, Statement of LCPL Michael H. McCauley and CPL Rickey M. Brunk in Silver Star Medal file of LCPL Author C. Smith.

Flag Day Prayers. Performing Arts Center, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 14 June 2011

Invocation:

O Lord, our God:

As we consider our nation's flag, we are reminded of Your purpose, Your presence, and Your Power. We are reminded of the words in our Declaration of Independence, that our inalienable rights, our life, liberty, and our pursuit of happiness, all have their source in You, our Creator.

We are thankful to You and praise You, for Your gifts to us of this land, our people, and our government. We pause, we take notice, be behold our flag, its, red. white, and blue.

May its vibrant red bars, top, bottom and within, remind us that freedom is not free, that what we enjoy comes to us from blood shed, throbbing, passionate, loving life lived by so many others, serving to protect and promote life, Your purpose.

May its white bars gleam in Your power of a spotless purity of unity, of opportunity for all to develop strengths that enrich and bless all.

May its blue field containing all the stars, none greater, none lesser, remind us that all is contained in Your Presence, greater than the immensity of blue ocean waters and the vast, blue sky.

Red, white, and blue:

our country, Your gift,

our life, Your blessing,, our place, Your purpose.

Looking to You, O Lord,

the source of every good and perfect gift,

We pray, in Your Holy Name. Amen.

Benediction*:

May our Lord bless and keep us now as we return to our daily tasks and lives, our homes, our work place, our community:

May the Lord bless us with a vision of what might be, not adjustment to what is.

May the Lord bless us with strength equal to our tasks, not tasks equal to our strengths.

May the Lord bless us with commitment to serve one another, promote justice and freedom.

Enfold us into Your wholeness that we might be whole.

Inspire us by Your purpose to make all things new that we proactively pursue abundant life for all:

Your healing hands to heal hurts,

Your passionate heart to compassionately act,

Your compelling purposes, our source of our courage.

Keep us always in Your protectively strong arms.

In Your Holy Name, we pray. Amen.

LETTER WRITTEN TO GENERAL RON CHRISTMAS, 04 SEPTEMBER 2011, UPON LEARNING OF THE DEATH OF COLONEL LOWNDS, 31 August 2011

Sunday, 04 September 2011

Dear General Christmas:

As I mentioned on the telephone, Colonel David E. Lownds had a profound effect on my life. Although I was assigned to 1/26 and not the regiment, for a long time, 1/26 was the only battalion at Khe Sanh and I came to know Colonel Lownds through informal conversation and the evening regiment briefings. Soon after his arrival at Khe Sanh on 12 August 1967, I noticed his presence at memorial services for a Marine from recon that had been killed while his team attempted an insertion and for a Marine who drowned in the nearby Rao Quan River. His concern and interest in the welfare of the Marines at Khe Sanh was plainly evident. He cared.

I recall an incident during the monsoon rainfall in which a recon team had completed about eight days of patrolling, had run out of water and food, and due to the weather, the helicopters couldn't extract them. 1/26 had alerted an infantry company to move to them and bring them back. (They were south of us, south of Route 9, as I recall). Knowing all the men in the recon team, I had obtained permission and decided to accompany the patrol. Just as we were about to depart the combat base, the skies cleared and the helicopters were able to extract the team. Colonel Lownds suddenly appeared with our infantry patrol and informed us that the team had been successfully extracted and thanked us for preparing to rescue them. He didn't have to do that, of course. His presence there spoke volumes of his concern for his men.

I recall talking to a recon Marine (Kevin Macaulay) who overheard a conversation in the regimental bunker. It was a conversation between Colonel Lownds and the recon commander who was about to commit another team to replace one that had just been shot out. Obviously, we knew where the enemy was! Colonel Lownds told the recon commander, "Don't you care about your men? Why are you sending them to the place where we already know the enemy is located?"

Colonel Lownds had his humorous moments. At one regimental briefing, he had just returned from a visit to 3d Marine Division at Phu Bai, and he jokingly reported to the staff and officers gathered about his trip "to the wonderful world of 'Bai'." I can still hear him talking about how they "actually had sidewalks of wooden pallets so you don't get your boots muddy!" (laughs). "And then there was hot and cold running water–and flushing toilets!" (more laughs). "They actually had air-conditioning–but I don't think they'll ever get it as cool as we have it here at Khe Sanh!" (by now he was on a roll, and everyone was roaring!)

As I mentioned to you, General, I am firmly convinced that I am here today because of some very difficult, agonizing decisions that Colonel Lownds made during that Khe Sanh siege battle. In fact, had I given a short eulogy for him, I might have been tempted to use the text from John 10.10 ("I am come that they might have life, life in its abundance") and noted that while this may be strange to use for a Marine officer, it certainly reflected what Colonel Lownds accomplished. He made numerous decisions that all turned out right. Probably from his earlier duty as a regimental S-2 (in which he had, by the way, two very junior lieutenants who later served him as Captains during the siege–Jerry Judson, one of his S-2 scouts who was, during the siege b, his S-2, and Capt Earle Breeding, another scout who was the commander of E/2/26. Earle tells me that when 2/26 arrived at Khe Sanh just a few days before the battle erupted, the officers and staff of 2/26 were in the regimental bunker and Colonel Lownds said, "We will hold." And then spotting Earle, continued, "Won't we, Captain Breeding?" to the astonishment of all the officers of 2/26!))

For example, he placed battalion 1/9 at a blocking position to guard the approach to the combat base in an area (we called it the "Rock Quarry" because the Seabees quarried basalt and crushed it for a sub-base for repairing the airstrip in the fall of 1967), rather than on Hill 471 near the junction of the base access road and Route 9 near Khe Sanh village, an area where a recon team had been surrounded the very day the base was attacked. He also placed the 37th ARVN Ranger Battalion on the eastern perimeter of the base after learning (from a North Vietnamese rallier) that the NVA attack plan indicated a major assault would come from that direction. He maintained the base perimeter when the Army's SOG unit, FOB-3, formed a large "bubble" on the perimeter. He even had .50 caliber guns and M60 machineguns pointed into the FOB-3 position, much to the consternation of the soldiers there! But they had hundreds of indigenous troops, and who knew how many NVA were among them? (In fact, one of the FOB-3 troops that worked for Special Projects, SFC Charles Minnicks, once told me that his point man was a NVA soldier they had captured on one of their patrols!). He made the agonized decision to abandon Khe Sanh village and withdraw the Marine CAC OSCAR unit as well as the District Headquarters since it was indefensible. He refused to be lured into the trap of dispatching a Marine contingency company to reinforce the Army Special Forces Camp at Lang Vei when it was overrun with tanks since aerial observers and signals intelligence indicated numerous ambush sites. He refused to admit the refugees from the Laotian BV-33 battalion that had been overrun by tanks and taken refuge at Lang Vei which was subsequently overrun by the same tanks. The Laotians had thrown down their arms at Lang Vei, much to the anger of the Special Forces from FOB-3 that went to rescue that position, and who knew how many North Vietnamese were among them?

For all these actions, he was severely criticized by some–by some who were in Khe Sanh village, by the press (for not permitting the Lao refugees on the combat base), by the soldiers of Lang Vei for not coming to their rescue, and so on. Yet, it was the correct decision and it meant that human life was maximized. That is why I was thinking of John 10.10 as a text for his funeral!

There were many other decisions–a platoon of the Combined Action Company OSCAR (O-2) had been planning to relocate to a position near Lang Vei, but that was stopped by Colonel Lownds. Had they gone ahead with their plans to relocate, they certainly would have been annihilated in the opening days of the battle. When the siege battle began and Khe Sanh village was attacked, an infantry company (D/1/26, led by Walt Chapman, the Commandant's son) had left the combat base and reached Hill 471, just a click away from the village, when Colonel Lownds recalled them. He had received intelligence that only a NVA battalion attacked the district headquarters but a whole NVA regiment was in ambush positions to snare any reinforcements. Again, he was able to save dozens of lives!

He had personally (sometimes, only by himself!) walked through the entire area, becoming totally familiar with all the approaches to the base. SFC Bill Craig, the Team Leader for the Special Forces camp once told me how he was very nervous with Colonel Lownds walking about the area near Lang Vei–by himself! The Colonel also thoroughly scouted the eastern approaches to the base, a flat terrain going north from Route 9, and the location of a regimental assault on the combat base on the night of 29 Feb/01 Mar, and with the expert abilities of Major Mirza Munir Baig, his Target Intelligence Officer and also an expert in artillery, was able to decimate the attaching regiment so none closed on our wires.

On Marine Corps Birthday, 1967, I was on top of Hill 881-South, one of our outposts, a position captured during the 1967 Hill Fights at very great loss of life. It was a very foggy day, rainy, and very cold. Although I grew up in Wisconsin and spent 7 years of college and seminary in Minnesota, I can say that I never felt more cold than I did at Khe Sanh. We were at a high elevation, and it rained, perhaps seven inches a day, for several months. We could never get dry. Trenches and bunkers collapsed. Resupply was tenuous. Many of the 31 bridges over the only land access route to logistic bases to the east (Route 9) had washed-away. Aerial observers were unable to detect enemy encroachment. Patrols were wet, muddy, miserable. Bunkers collapsed. One bunker on the combat base being built for the regimental communications section collapsed, killing two short-timers due to crushed chests, while a dozen or so others received broken ankles, arms, legs. On Hill 881-South, being Marine Corps Birthday, two platoons were gathered in a formation; one platoon was out on patrol. We could hear a helicopter attempting to land, but which had no visible approach. Miraculously, it did land, and out came Colonel Lownds along with our 1/26 commander (LtCol James B. Wilkinson) and the artillery commander. They brought a birthday cake. We were all in a formation, and I recall–I even put in my daily diary–the Colonel mentioned something about how he always got together with a couple other Marines for this special day, "but I doubt they'll be coming to Khe Sanh to be with me today.! (The Colonel always had that humorous element). He then said, "You all soon will be in the American history books!" I don't recall any of the troops or officers there subsequently commenting on that. I guess we had been warned so many times earlier to expect an attack–the Vietnamese elections, the monsoons, etc.,, that it was almost like "crying wolf." But I took it seriously!

I remember a regimental briefing in mid-January, about ten days before the battle), in which the Colonel announced that all Marines would have their rifles with them while on the base, would wear helmets, and he wanted internal concertina. He also said "The forward observers can readily see where the command bunker is with all the antennas. Therefore, I want false bunkers built and false antennas erected. During the 1/26 battalion briefing the next morning, LtCol Wilkinson quipped, "The Colonel wants false antennas because his location is prominent. Therefore, instead of the regiment taking 50 rounds, the whole base will take 500 rounds!" How prophetic that all turned out to be!

General, I believe I already sent you a copy of my 2nd edition of Battalion of Kings. On pages 148-151, there is an extensive piece about Colonel Lownds, and I am attaching those pages in case you don't have that particular book at hand. There are numerous accounts of Colonel Lownds that reflect his personality and leadership.

Many years ago, while still on active duty, I was doing some research at the Marine Corps Historical Division, and Colonel Lownds picked me up one late afternoon, and drove me through all that horrendous DC traffic to his home. I seem to recall it was in Fairfax. His wife, Jean, prepared a wonderful supper and we had a most enjoyable time. He then drove me back to where I was staying. I think it was Ft. Myers, in a temporary officer quarters. His hospitality, warmth, will never be forgotten.

Over the years, we've maintained connection through letters, birthday and Christmas cards, and he even telephoned me a few times in recent years.

I've always thought that he should have become a General, perhaps even Commandant. Khe Sanh was so controversial–as was the entire Vietnam War, of course. The question of "who won," and who provided the crucial element (the resolve of the Marines, the B52s of the Air Force). Certainly, the politicians didn't! Yet, Khe Sanh was perhaps the bloodiest battle of the war (over 40,000 enemy and locals killed, nuclear weapons were considered, the JCS had to sign-off that we wouldn't fall, etc.). History books speak of Westmoreland and Giap, and yet it was Colonel Lownds and his staff that planned most of the Arc Light strikes (according to Mirza Baig). Colonel Lownds is the real hero (i.e., the one who got us through it all).

Fortunately, I was able to tell him, in writing and phone, how I feel, how I admire him, how I remain so grateful to him for bringing us all out of that horrible hell! Perhaps I've written too much, but even these words can't express the fullness of gratitude and admiration I have for this truly great man.

You can see why I was so honored and yet humbled by your gracious invitation.

Please convey to the rest of the family my sincerest condolences with the assurance you all remain in my prayers.

Semper Fidelis,

Ray W. Stubbe

The Wounded Healer

[Originally titled Hurt to Heal, this study was distributed to Chaplains at Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Illinois, 18 December 1984, about two weeks prior to retirement from the U.S. Navy Chaplain Corps (01 Jan 1985) and following about half a year of hospitalization at the adjacent Veterans Administration Hospital at North Chicago, Illinois, for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) while still on active duty in the U.S. Navy]

LETTER

10 December 1984

Dear Colleagues:

Long ago I realized there were kinds of knowledge that could not be communicated verbally so that another person, unaware of what I was attempting to describe, could ever possibly grasp the reality. Only a direct experience of the reality by that person would result in the understanding. Such are the religious experiences of God, of love and forgiveness: unless a person has encountered Love or known forgiveness, any attempt to describe what they are is doomed. So also is the realization of "person" reality. Despite Buber's and Tournier's efforts, unless a person "knows" first-hand, all attempts to give knowledge "of" by giving knowledge "about" are doomed. Existence is, indeed, prior to essence as Pico della Mirandola asserted (i.e., the thing itself is and is much richer than anything we might say about it). As life has progressed, more and more of my experiences seem to have fallen into this category. The result is an inability to speak of those very things that are most significant in terms that others will understand, resulting in fragmentation, isolation, and alienation. These are the knowledge of that which is ultimately "good" (e.g., the gifts of God–love, forgiveness, beauty, justice, personhood) and "evil" e.g., the absence of God, Deus absconditus as in war and what happens in it). Those of us who "know" reality and attempt to relate it, are in the same danger as the man in Book 7 of Plato's Republic who returned to the cave of those who dwell in shadows: unbelief, rejection, and threatened death. Ultimately, one can't speak or write but can only live and act. It is in being and action that these types of knowledge become expressed effectively. "Knowing," but being unable to communicate to "ears that hear not," either because of inexperience or by the busyness and noise commotion of daily life that precludes the possibility of hearing the "still small voice," so that only shepherds in fields and the silent starry skies are able to receive the message of God, is indeed egregiously frustrating!

The attached document is some small, initial attempt to communicate a reality, a lived story, that seems to have been the underlying myth that has guided my life during and after my Vietnam experience, to make sense of life. While somewhat desultory in its structure–(it was written in a matter of a week and during a time in my life of difficulty in concentrating in which I have not been able to function at my usual ability)–it perhaps might be of interest to others for personal study and reflection; for this reason, I am distributing it to you, my colleagues, as I retire from the Navy Chaplain Corps.

It remains now to live and do this knowledge that what I have learned, the really real of life painfully realized in battle experience, is not lost, but communicated.

The structure of the essay begins with the fact of the unhealing wound, which is traced to the account of the Fall in Genesis: the knowledge of good and evil from eating the forbidden fruit. This is developed in terms of the existential meaning of "knowledge," ego inflation as a description of this knowledge, the ἐξουσία (exousai, "powers") that infect being that which inflates in this knowledge, the opposite of this knowledge reflected in the "downward" (as opposed to "more") movement, and finally the problem of the "shadow" as an expression of the unhealing wound.

`Next, the example of the Vietnam veteran is described as an expression of the "unhealing psychic wound" which is described, both in terms of the kinds of knowledge that remove one from re-entering Paradise, and in terms of the Oedipus myth. The position of "wounded healer" is suggested as a possible positive significance of the unhealing psychic wound, both in terms of social utility as well as personal meaning. This position is then developed in terms of six related perspectives: the primitive shaman, the Greek myth of Asclepius and his cult, the "Suffering Servant" of Isaiah, prophetic existence in general, the Jungian theory and practice of "transference," and finally the Theologia Crucis with Bonhoeffer's "conformation ethic."

The conclusion suggests that while we might not be able to return to Paradise on account of our knowledge, we are with God and each other, and are "hurt that we might heal," God transforming what is negative into positive, life itself.

THE UNHEALING WOUND

Paul complained to the Lord of a "thorn in the flesh" that would not go away despite earnest prayer.[1096] Job laments "I am gnawed by wounds that never sleep,"[1097] and a dejected Jeremiah cries: "Why is my pain unceasing, my wound incurable, refusing to be healed?"[1098]

The basic unhealing wound is the knowledge of good and evil on account of which one may never again return to the Garden of Eden.

> Now the LORD God planted a garden in the east, in Eden; and there he put the man he had formed. And the LORD God made all kinds of trees grow out of the ground–trees that were pleasing to the eye and good for food. In the middle of the garden were the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil... And the LORD God commanded the man, 'You are free to eat from any tree in the garden; but you must not eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, for when you eat of it you will surely die.' ... she took some and ate it ... and he ate it. Then the eyes of both of them were opened ... And the LORD God said, 'The man has now become like one of us, knowing good and evil ... So the LORD God banished him from the Garden of Eden .. he placed on the east side of the Garden of Eden cherubim and a flaming sword flashing back and forth.."[1099]

Knowledge of good and evil is not simply a matter of conceptual schema by which the world around us becomes intelligible; as von Rad notes, the term "knowledge of good and evil" means "..much more than merely a process of the intellect."[1100] The biblical understanding of the term "knowledge" (ידע) refers to that which is crucially determinative for one's total existence. It is not an affair of intelligence. It is an activity of the heart–of one's whole life of thought, desire, and moral decision.

> The verb yada does not always mean simply 'to know,' 'to be acquainted with.' In most Semitic languages it signifies sexual union as well as mental and spiritual activity. In Hebrew yada means more than the possession of abstract concepts. Knowledge compasses inner appropriation, feeling, a reception into the soul. It involves both an intellectual and an emotional act. An analysis of the usage of the verb in Biblical Hebrew leads to the conclusion that it often, though not always, denotes an act involving concern, inner engagement, dedication, or attachment to a person. It also means to have sympathy, pity, or affection for someone.[1101]

Hosea, for example, uses the words da'ath Elohim ("knowledge of God," e.g., "my people perish for lack of knowledge of God"),[1102] to mean an attachment of the whole person, his love as well as his knowledge, ".. an act of involvement, attachment or commitment; to God ... What is desired is an inner identification with God rather than a mere dedication to

---

[1096] 2 Cor. 12.7-9.
[1097] Job 30.17b.
[1098] Jer 15.16.
[1099] Gen 2.8-9, 16-17, 3.6, 7a, 22a, 23a, 24.
[1100] Von Rad, Old Testament Theology, Vol. I, p. 155.
[1101] Heschel, The Prophets, p. 57.
[1102] Hos 4.6.

ceremonies."[1103] It does not refer to a knowledge about God, but an awareness of God, a "..sensitivity for what concerns Him, a concern for the divine person, not only for the divine will; a concern that involves inwardness as well as action."[1104] Undoubtedly the people knew many facts, even true statements, about God. They had God's Word; they had testimony of other's religious experiences; what they lacked was their own experience. They had knowledge "about," but not knowledge "of."

The Danish philosopher, Søren Kierkegaard, helpfully distinguishes between "interested" and subjective knowledge on the one hand, and "objective" or scientific, detached, from-a-distance knowledge on the other. All honor to objective knowledge,[1105] he writes, but it has no relationship to my life except in so far as I falsely lose myself in it. One must be the truth, not just know it. "Christainly understood, the truth consists not in knowing the truth but in being the truth;"[1106] ".. no man knows more of the truth than what he is of the truth;"[1107] ".. knowing the truth is something which follows as a matter of course from being the truth.."[1108] It is a matter of finding a way of life which can determine my whole existence,[1109] in a sense, a doctrine or teaching that can become "reduplicated" within me, so that my very life itself expresses the doctrine, not just as something about which to talk and think, but to live. Dupre writes: Christianity is not a higher form of knowledge, but it is a new form of existence.[1110] For example, we have now reconstructed the early history of the people of Israel from archeology so that we know more precisely than did St. Paul all the facts of that history; that does not mean that we are more spiritual because of all our head knowledge than St. Paul!

Christianity is not a doctrine, but a way of life. "Christianity has to do with existence, with the act of existing; but existence and existing constitute precisely the opposite of speculation ... there is a tremendous difference between knowing what Christianity is and being a Christian."[1111] Should one merely speculate or argue the facts of Christianity, they would be completely misunderstood; if one claims to understand them, they are totally misunderstood.[1112] Speculative knowledge involves a certain detachment, distance from, looking upon from afar, examining; this is the necessary stance for scientific, detached, objective knowledge about the object of the knowledge. The kind of knowledge that Kierkegaard and the biblical writers understand, on the other hand, is immersion within, passion, commitment to, existence in, total involvement with, passionate concern. One knows Christ by living "in" Him, not by speculation on His life or nature.

Christ is the truth ("I am the way, the truth.."[1113]), not in the sense of a sum of true statements or propositions, not in the sense of a definition or concept, but in terms of a life: "Truth in its very being is not the duplication I n being in terms of thought, which yields only the thought of being .. No, truth in its very being is the reduplication in me, in thee, in him, so that my, that thy, that his life, approximately, in the striving to attain it, expresses the truth."[1114] I only know the truth when it becomes "a life in me."[1115] "hence one sees what a monstrous error it is, very nearly the greatest possible error, to impart Christianity by lecturing."[1116]

Kierkegaard indicates Job as an example. It is not doctrines that he has bequeathed to us, but a life, a pattern for living. Job's significance is not that he said, "The Lord gave, the Lord takes away; blessed be the name of the Lord,"[1117] "..but in the fact that he acted in accordance with it."[1118] Concerning Job, Kierkegaard writes that only the one who has been tried, who tested the word through himself being tested, only he interprets the word correctly, and only such a disciple, only such an interpretation does Job desire."[1119] A teacher can teach only through example,[1120] not permitting the doctrine to be the important thing. In a sense, Christianity cannot be taught at all since it is not a doctrine at all. It is caught, not taught.

[1103] Heschel, The Prophets, p. 59.
[1104] Ibid.
[1105] Kierkegaard, Concluding Unscientific Postscript, pp. 135-136.
[1106] Kierkegaard, Training in Christianity, p. 201.
[1107] Ibid.
[1108] Ibid.
[1109] Kierkegaard, Purity of Heart.
[1110] Dupre, "The Constitution of the Self..", p. 519.
[1111] Kierkegaard, Concluding Unscientific Postscript, p. 339.
[1112] Ibid.
[1113] Jn 14.6.
[1114] Kierkegaard, Training in Christianity, pp. 200-201.
[1115] Ibid., p. 202.
[1116] Ibid.
[1117] Job 1.20-21.
[1118] Kierkegaard, Edifying Discourses, II, p. 7.
[1119] Ibid., p. 11.

Christianity is falsely regarded when it is merely a sum of propositions upon which one can lecture as one does Hebrew, philosophy, or any scientific discipline; this is paganism.[1121] The personal relationship to doctrine is the important point: "One may be thoroughly informed about Christianity as a whole, may know how to explain it, to present it and to expound it–but if with all this he thinks that his own relationship to Christ is a matter of indifference, he is a pagan.[1122]

There is a vast difference between knowing a doctrine and believing it. Kierkegaard relates how a man with deep powers of intellect wrote a book on the subject of the love of God: ".. he has pondered upon the nature of God, upon the fact that God is love, upon what follows from this as a consequence, that the world also must be the best, and all things must work together for good."[1123] Then along comes a personal problem, the consequences of which he has not anticipated; he must act in a difficult situation, at a crucial moment, and he is plunged into deep misery. So he consults his parson for help. Finally, after some degree of failure to help the man, the parson gives him the book he had written (the parson being ignorant he was the author): "Read it, study it, if that does not help you, no man can help you." The unknown man replies, "I myself am the author of this book."[1124] What the thinker had not understood himself, he had hitherto been living under the delusion that when it proved that God is love, it must follow somehow as a matter of course that we–thou and I–believe it."[1125]

Kierkegaard writes that people today have more than enough information about Christianity. "What is lacking is surely something quite different. it is the inward transformation of the whole mind.."[1126] Truth must "transform the entire existence of the individual;"[1127] everything in the existence of the individual must be altered "..in and through his mode of existence, so as to bring it into conformity with this highest good."[1128]

Thus, "knowledge" (as it is used in this paper) refers to a totality of life, not simply mental constructs. What has been said (in a positive manner, in an imperative mood rather than indicative, regarding "being a Christian") also refers to other types of "knowledge" that are also determinative of one's total existence, but in a negative (i.e., life-robbing) way. For example, the knowledge that comes to the victim of rape, incest, continuous battle conditions, or unusually devastating natural or man-made disasters, all of which give a person a "knowledge" so that they are never again able to "see" the same reality the same way or live life the same way.

Knowledge of good and evil is not simply a matter of moral consideration. It refers to the desire to know "everything."[1129] The temptation to become sicut deus ("like God") cannot refer to an evil since Adam at that time does not know the possibility of evil; it cannot be understood any other way except as a possibility of being more–" "..a new, deeper kind of creaturely being."[1130] It is an overall expression referring to knowledge in a wide sense, the knowledge of that which is useful or harmful to man.[1131]

The snake, symbol of new life since it seems to renew itself in its skin-shedding, as well as a symbol of energy and power generally,[1132] presents the temptation to become "like God," a "psychic inflation," i.e., to be transformed into something greater than one legitimately is. This is the forbidden fruit which everyone, in Adam, eats; the forbidden fruit of power, status, "more." That it is not appropriate is seen in the fact that the "image of God" in which man was created, and which is descriptive of Christ,[1133] is precisely the opposite: "downward" movement through kenosis (self-emptying),[1134] not making a reputation socially or morally, trusting solely in God and not in what one can do to make something of one's self. Spiritual development, as Meister Eckhart continually emphasizes, is by a process of subtraction, not addition; it is a matter of "letting go" (Abegescheidenheit) of control, images, suffering, gifts from God, self, etc.

[1120] Kierkegaard, for Self Examination, p. 3.
[1121] Kierkegaard, Christian Discourses, p. 221.
[1122] Ibid., pp. 221-222.
[1123] Ibid., p. 206.
[1124] ibid., p. 207.
[1125] Ibid.
[1126] Kierkegaard, Christian Discourses, p. 249.
[1127] Kierkegaard, Concluding Unscientific Postscript, p. 347.
[1128] Ibid., pp. 348-349.
[1129] Von Rad, Genesis, p. 86. Von Rad supports this interpretation by referring to: "To speak neither good nor evil" (Gen 31.24, 29, 2 Sam 13.22) means to say nothing; to do neither good nor evil (Zeph 1.2) means to do nothing; to know neither good nor evil (said of children and old people--Dt. 1.39, 2 Sam 19.35f.) means to understand nothing (yet or any longer).
[1130] Bonhoeffer, Creation and Fall, p. 71.
[1131] Westermann, Creation, p. 93.
[1132] See infra in the discussion of Asclepius.
[1133] Col. 1.15.
[1134] Phil. 2.5-11.

Therefore, in Adam we all die; that is, we become somebody; we want more–knowledge, control, money, children to carry on the name. We are unsatisfied with the other trees in God's good garden which nourish us.

This knowledge is similar to one who would want to know what it would be like to live life without an eye or a hand. One may indeed find out, but then cannot resume the original condition, knowing from a distance as an observer. One can indeed find out what it is like to kill another human being, as did Raskolnikov in Crime and Punishment or the young man in Vietnam killing others, but can never "un-know" again what that means for him. One is forever immersed in the knowledge, in the condition itself, always knowing, knowing nothing else.

The result is death. "Every advance in the direction of what is apparently superhuman, whether it be in the field of politics, culture, science, or technology, endangers the truly human, the very fact of being a man."[1135] Thus, when man takes to himself what only belongs to God–becoming independent, angry, judgmental of others, rich and powerful, etc., he dies, or rather, he lives as a dead person, living yet dead:

> Man dies of the knowledge of good and evil ... What does 'to be dead' mean? ... it means no longer being able to live–and yet having to live–in the presence of God. It means to stand before him outlawed, lost and damned, but not non-existing ... 'to be dead' means to have life not as a gift, but as a commandment ... To be dead means to have to live.[1136]

That being alive physically can be a living death is implied in such scriptural passages as Jesus telling a man "Do this and you will live,"[1137] to a man who was obviously quite alive physically and intellectually! and "we know we have passed from death to life because we love our brothers,"[1138] in which the former situation was certainly one of being physically alive.

Their eyes are opened; they can no longer "see" anything in the same way (e.g., they behold nakedness as shameful, nakedness which originally must have been a great grace since man alone is the "naked ape" among all the creatures, created that way by God and proclaimed "very good," is now greatest disgrace).[1139] They now wear clothing; that is, they are now not able to be open; they cannot directly disclose who they are. It is a condition of existence well known by the victim of rape or some Vietnam veterans who cannot disclose their experience, who cover their wounds–literally! They are expelled from the Garden of Eden–the goal of the whole story; the expulsion means that they now experience God as One who is absent or far off.[1140]

> The knowledge of good and evil will not allow Adam to enjoy the simple satisfactions of Paradise. The man is compelled to see all things from a new vantage point, a vantage point which both distinguishes him from the animals and alienates him from himself. Wherever men and women look they must see evil as well as good. They must, accordingly, judge the world, find it wanting, and be perennially discontented,[1141]

He who would be like God has instead, by that desire, become like the devil, expelled.[1142]

The unhealing psychic wound of ego inflation, i.e., a person identifying his self-consciousness with contents of the unconscious, is the source of psychosis; one assumes to oneself powers (in which one experiences himself powerful, a deity) or negatively, as excessive unbounded sense of guilt and suffering.[1143] Ego inflation ("..a state in which something small .. has arrogated to itself the qualities of something larger .. and hence is blown up beyond the limits of its proper size")[1144] is involved when anything is taken that causes a person to transcend proper human limits. "Too much humility as well as too much arrogance, too much love and altruism as well as too much power striving and selfishness, are all symptoms of inflation."[1145] However, one cannot grow as a person without growth in consciousness, awareness, and consequent removal from a condition of original, but unconscious, wholeness. Psychic growth involves a series of inflated, heroic actions which provoke alienation, repentance, restitution, and renewed inflation.[1146] as a movement towards conscious wholeness. In this way, a person becomes more and more powerful. The negative side is that one becomes more and more guilty and less and less of what one should be:

[1135] Westermann, Creation, pp. 105-106.
[1136] Bonhoeffer, Creation and Fall, p. 55.
[1137] Lk 10.28f.
[1138] 1 Jn 3.14.
[1139] Luther, Genesis, pp. 165, 169
[1140] Westermann, Creation, p. 103.
[1141] Williams, Jay G., "Genesis 3," pp. 276-277.
[1142] Cf. Luther, Genesis, p. 222.
[1143] Edinger, Ego and Archetype, pp. 7. 12, 13, and 15.
[1144] Ibid., p. 7.
[1145] Ibid., p. 15.
[1146] ibid., p. 42.

> With man's stepping out of the simplicity of obedience to God, and with the knowledge obtained by disobedience, a movement began in which man pictures himself as growing more and more powerful, more and more titanic.[1147]

The result is the reaction one may feel upon visiting a poor country, walking with an expensive camera perhaps and beholding the hovels of his brothers and sisters with their bloated bellies, begging: guilt at being so wealthy. Alienation from others, from the animals which scatter at the approach of a human being but not from each other, from oneself–rejection and fear, occur:

> On the personal level the act of daring to acquire a new consciousness is experienced as a crime of rebellion against the authorities that exist in one's personal environment, against one's parents, and later, against other outer authorities. Any step in individuation is experienced as a crime against the collective, because it challenges the individual's identification with some representative of the collective, whether it be family, party, church, or nation.[1148]

Paul states that the self-reliant attitude of one who puts trust in one's own strength is really a matter of living "according to the flesh."[1149] All human wisdom, power, and greatness must come to naught in the presence of God.[1150] The Corinthians are warned against delivering themselves into dependence upon human authorities.[1151] It is as though one becomes infected with powers (ἐξουσία) of the principalities and those powers standing behind all earthly authorities,[1152] which results, as with the eating of the forbidden fruit, in sin and death because of inflating earthly greatne4ss and casting out from God's grace. Bultmann summarizes:

> The 'kosmos' although on the one hand, it is God's creation, is, on the other hand, the domain of demonic powers: the 'angels,' 'principalities' and 'powers' (Rom 8:38, I Cor 13:24, 'the rulers of this age' (1 Cor 2:6, 8), 'the elemental spirits of the "kosmos"' (Gal. 4:3, 9..). These are 'the enemies of God,' the last of whom is 'death' (I Cor. 15:26). The head of these anti-divine powers is Satan (Rom. 16:20; I Cor. 5:5; 7:5; II Cor. 2:11; 11:14; I Thess. 2:18), the 'god of this age' (II Cor. 4:4)... Paul does not think in .. dualistic manner ... Instead, he considers the spirit powers also to belong to God's creation (Rom. 8:39) ... The 'powers' come upon the Christian in the vicissitudes of his particular lot–i.e., in his 'tribulations' and 'distresses,' etc. (Rom. 8:35; cf I Thess. 2:18): 'Satan hindered us') .. They also come upon him in his temptations; Satan is the 'tempter' (I Thess. 3:5) against whom one must be on guard (I Cor. 7:5; II Cor 2:11).[1153]

To be under possession of one of the demonic "powers" is to be captive to death.[1154] Persons exist who define their humanity in terms of loyalty and diligence to the interests and appetites of the principalities and powers, dumb and complacent in their captivity in institutions, traditions, consigned to role-playing; these, notes Stringfellow, are "..human beings who are demonically possessed."[1155] The powers are unrelenting in their manifold, versatile, and ingenious aggression into human life, an all-consuming institutional process which–

> ..assaults, dispirits, defeats, and destroys human life even among, and primarily among, those persons in positions of institutional leadership. They are left with titles but without effectual authority ... the most poignant victim of the demonic .. is the so-called leader ... Attended by the trappings of high office, who are enthralled by their own enslavement and consider themselves rewarded for it, and who conceive of their own dehumanization as justification or moral superiority.[1156]

Such assault by the Powers is made upon everyone:

> Men are veritably besieged, on all sides, at every moment simultaneously by these claims and strivings of the various powers, each seeking to dominate, usurp, or take a person's time, attention, abilities, effort; each

---

[1147] Von Rad, Old Testament Theology, Vol. 1, p. 160.
[1148] Edinger, Ego and Archetype, p. 26.
[1149] Phil. 3.3-7; Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, Vol. I, p. 240.
[1150] I Cor 1.26-31.
[1151] Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, Vol. 1, p. 244; cf. 1 Cor 3.2ff.
[1152] Concerning the view that "angels" and spiritual powers lie behind all earthly powers, vide Clinton D. Morrison, The Powers That Be.
[1153] Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, Vol. I, pp. 257-258.
[1154] Stringfellow, Ethic, p. 32.
[1155] Ibid., p. 88.
[1156] ibid., p. 89.

grasping at life itself; each demanding idolatrous service and loyalty. In such tumult it becomes very difficult for a human being even to identify the idols which would possess him.[1157]

Inflation, empowered by the possessing Powers, is reflected in the pervasive drive towards upward mobility, climbing the ladder of success, "making it." One's very vitality becomes associated with the upward pull and the joys provided by the rewards given on the way up. One almost assumes that success means God is with us and failure means we have sinned.

In a sense, this is true, but not in the way assumed! Success is indeed the prison caused by a "power" which has us in its clutches, but certainly this is not the Lord God! Failure may mean abdication by one of the "powers," but may be a grace–full action of victory by the Lord God over the powers! "Success is a prison; failure is a key" Paul notes that the work of Christ includes the destruction of every rule and every authority and every power (I Cor 15.24). The reason is that the divine way is the "downward" way, as Henri Nouwen has so eloquently written:[1158]

> The story of our salvation stands radically over and against the philosophy of upward mobility. The great paradox which Scripture reveals to us is that real and total freedom can only be found through downward mobility. The Word of God came down to us and lived among us as a slave. The divine way is indeed the downward way.
>
> In the center of our faith as Christians stands the mystery that God chose to reveal his divinity to us by submitting himself unreservedly to the downward pull. God not only chose an insignificant people to carry the Word of salvation through the centuries, not only chose a small remnant of those people to fulfill his promises, not only chose a humble girl in an unknown town in Galilee to become the temple of the Word, but God also those to manifest the fullness of divine love in a man whose life led to a humiliating death outside the walls of the city...
>
> He moved from power to powerlessness, from greatness to smallness, from success to failure, from strength to weakness, from glory to ignominy. The whole life of Jesus of Nazareth was a life in which all upward mobility was resisted.
>
> Some people wanted to make him king. They wanted him to show power. They wanted to share in his influence and sit on thrones with him. But he consistently said 'no' to all these desires and pointed to the downward way...

Jesus calls His followers in the same downward way, notes Nouwen, recalling Jesus' statements in Matthew 10.24, 20.26-28, and 10.19.

Unfortunately, the way of Adam is to develop power by a well-developed mask of roles, status, and social function. While such a "persona" is useful, helping others to feel comfortable in knowing whom they are encountering, an insidious danger is that one may become identified with one's persona–a type of ego-inflation by eating the forbidden fruit. While this is true of all–the "man without a shadow" being statistically the commonest human type, the one who imagines he actually is only what he cares to know about himself–,[1159] the temptation is especially one faced by professionals:

> A certain kind of behavior is forced on them by the world, and professional people endeavor to come up to these expectations. Only, the danger is that they become identical with their personas–the professor with his text book, the tenor with his voice. Then the danger is done; henceforth he lives exclusively against the background of his own biography ... One could say, with a little exaggeration, that the persona is that which is reality one is not, but which oneself as well as others think one is.[1160]

Fundamentally, Jung writes, the persona is really nothing real: "..it is a compromise between individual and society as to what a man should appear to be. He takes a name, earns a title, exercises a function, he is this or that."[1161] To become identified with one's office or title is very attractive; it is the social clothing given to one by society to cover one's nakedness after the Fall. So trenchantly do some continue to wear the fig leaves of their persona, that, as Jung writes:

> In vain would one look for a personality behind the husk. Underneath all the padding one would find a very pitiable little creature. That is why the office–or whatever this outer husk may be–is so attractive; it offers easy compensation for personal deficiencies.[1162]

[1157] Ibid., p. 90.
[1158] Nouwen, "Selfless Way," p. 13.
[1159] Jung, On the Nature of the Psyche, Para 409.
[1160] Jung, Archetypes, Para. 221.
[1161] Jung, The Relation Between the Ego and the Unconscious, Para. 246.
[1162] Ibid., Para 230.

Psychic inflation–taking to oneself something that is not oneself in order to become more powerful–become the "making oneself into a god, knowing good and evil" (or, personal and shadow), by puffing-up, extending the personality beyond individual limits–

> ..by appropriating to himself contents and qualities which properly exist for themselves alone and should therefore remain outside our bounds. What lies outside ourselves belongs either to someone else, or to everyone, or to no one ... A very common instance is the humorless way in which many men identify themselves with their business or their titles.[1163]

The greater the persona, the greater the shadow. It is a law of the psyche: "We add to ourselves a bright and a dark, and the more light means more night."[1164] It would be similar to a pneumatic device: the higher the piston rises, the more dark fluid gushes up into the cylinder! The excellence of the mask is usually compensated by a less than desirable "private life" going on behind it.[1165] "These identifications with a social role are a very fruitful source of neuroses. A man cannot get rid of himself in favor of an artificial personality without punishment.[1166]

The shadow becomes an expression of the unhealing psychic wound. It continues to unfold new depths of painful contents consisting of everything a person refuses to acknowledge about himself,[1167] while at the same time offering obstinate resistance to moral control and almost impossible to influence.[1168]

Everyone is assaulted by a personal "shadow." Jung used this term to describe all those contents in our unconscious which have been repressed as being contrary to the self we wish to show the world (the "personal"). Miller describes the shadow as:

> ..the collection of uncivilized desires and feelings that simply have no place in cultural society. The shadow is everything we don't want to be. Or rather it is perhaps everything we would like to be but don't dare. The shadow is everything we don't want others to know about us. It is everything we don't even want to know about ourselves and have thus conveniently 'forgotten' through denial and repression.[1169]

Jung notes that the goal of becoming a whole person involves becoming aware, conscious, of one's shadow:

> Whatever man's wholeness, or the self, may mean per se, empirically it is an image of the goal of life spontaneously produced by the unconscious, irrespective of the wishes and fears of the conscious mind. It stands for the goal of the total man .. with or without the consent of his will.[1170]

In order to be a whole person, one must have a story. In order to have a story, one must come up against something. Sanford wisely notes, "If we are to become whole, we will have led a life in which darkness has been faced, and an encounter with evil has been risked."[1171]

Due to the one-sided development of personality demanded by cultural influences, the one-sided product eventually becomes empty; one is renewed by "realization of the shadow."[1172] since it also includes positive, as well as negative, contents, e.g., ".. normal instincts, appropriate reactions, realistic insights, creative impulses, etc."[1173]

Such a struggle cannot be accomplished by rational means. When the shadow is willfully repressed, it does not disappear; it merely goes into the unconscious (where we are not aware of it and therefore do not control it, where it becomes mingled with other very primitive contents in the unconscious) and erupts volcanically in unconscious behavior, accidents, dreams, slips of the tongue, sometimes in very dangerous and destructive ways,[1174] especially when we are tired, weak, or under stress:

> The naïve reader may imagine that when the dark aspects disappear they are no longer there in reality. But that is not the case at all, as experience shows. What actually happens is that the conscious mind is then able to free itself from the fascination of evil and is no longer obliged to live it compulsively. The darkness and the evil have not gone up in smoke, they have merely withdrawn into the unconscious owing to loss of energy, where they [1163] Jung, The Relation Between.., Para 227.

---

[1164] Jung, Archetypes, Para 563.
[1165] Jung, Relations Between.., Para 306.
[1166] Ibid., Para 307.
[1167] Jung, Archetypes, Para 513.
[1168] Jung, Aion, Para. 16.
[1169] Miller, Make Friends, p. 23.
[1170] Jung, Answer to Job, Para. 743.
[1171] Sanford, Healing, p. 19.
[1172] Jung, On the Nature of the Psyche, Para 409.
[1173] Jung, Aion, Para 423.
[1174] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, Para 514.

> remain unconscious so long as all is well with their conscious. But if the conscious should find itself in a critical or doubtful situation, then it soon becomes apparent that the shadow has not dissolved into nothing but is only waiting for a favorable opportunity to reappear as a projection upon one's neighbor.[1175]

And,

> Nothing is ever lost .. Outwardly it is forgotten, but inwardly not at all.[1176]

And,

> The shadow is a living part of the personality and therefore wants to live with it in some form. It cannot be argued out of existence or rationalized into harmlessness.[1177]

The moral effort required to know one's own shadow, then, means facing the dark aspects of one's personality as really a part of one's total self. The effort, notes Jung, meets with considerable resistance.[1178] Usually one is most revolted by what one finds in their shadow. To appreciate this, Miller suggests:

> Imagine drawing your mouth together and gathering a pool of saliva. Now gently spit that pool of saliva into a drinking glass. Then do it again, and continue to do it until you have accumulated, say, half an inch of your saliva in the glass. Now look at it, study it, contemplate it–and then drink it. Most of us have the same type of reaction to our shadow–the very thought of this is repulsive. It is truly my own; it is a part of me. But drink my saliva! Make friends with my shadow! Yech! Get rid of it![1179]

Yet, this is necessary in order to be whole:

> A dim premonition tells us that we cannot be whole without this negative side, that we have a body which, like all bodies, casts a shadow, and that if we deny this body we cease to be three-dimensional and become flat and without substance.[1180]

There is no psychic wholeness without imperfection. Jung continually emphasizes that the goal of life is wholeness, not one-sided perfection. The Greek word in the Biblical imperative to be "perfect" means to be "completed," to become what one is meant to become. Completeness requires "owning" everything a person is: "..and for this the 'thorn in the flesh' is needed, the suffering of defects without which there is no progress and no ascent."[1181] The Christian Jungian writer, John A. Sanford, writes that the verse "you must be perfect"[1182] does not command "perfectionism:"

> It is not a matter of achieving some impossible and inhuman saint-like condition, but of being fulfilled as the person we were created to be. We are to be complete or whole, our lives and personalities brought to the conclusion which God has intended, and not to become perfect in the narrow and one-sided meaning of the word.. [perfection] can be established only in persons whose very faults and failures have contributed to the development within them of their highest potential and greatest capacity for love.[1183]

The movement towards wholeness of being is achieved not only by continual infusion of goodness, righteousness, and morality, but also through acceptance and conscious incorporation of one's dark side. "I am not a complete person until I incorporate into my conscious self that dark side of my person which is every bit as much a part of me as is that bright self which I parade before the world."[1184]

To avoid acknowledgement of one's shadow makes one dangerously vulnerable to it:[1185] it means that one will "see" the contents of one's shadow in other people–a projection in which the other may, indeed, legitimately possess certain qualities–maybe not, however–, but whenever there is an emotional reaction towards someone else, these same qualities are in one's self as well, only not acknowledged. The law of projection is: "you don't see what isn't in you." Projection makes it impossible to "see" the other person for whom they really are and therefore makes realistic inter-personal relationships impossible. Projections evanesce when one acknowledges one's shadow, the beam in one's own eye and doesn't focus upon the speck in [1175] Jung, Archetypes, Para 477.

---

[1176] Ibid., Para 481.
[1177] Ibid., Para 44.
[1178] Jung, Aion, Para 14; Jung, Archetypes, Para 44.
[1179] Miller, Make Friends, p. 114.
[1180] Jung, On the Psychology of the Unconscious, Para 35.
[1181] Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Para 208.
[1182] Mt. 5.48.
[1183] Sanford, The Kingdom Within, p. 128.
[1184] Miller, Make Friends, p. 12.
[1185] Ibid., p. 26.

the brother's eye.[1186]It is such a safe practice to become preoccupied with helping other people, healing others, when we are sick unto death with our own disease, to "..go around offering to pick nits from others' garments when we are clothed in stinking, filthy, infected rags,[1187]–that way, we do not have to face our own issues, pains, hurts, sickness, if one is so ready to "rescue" someone who is crying or hurting, it is probably not the hurting person's hurt that is troubling the rescuer; it is his own hurt that he sees in the "hurting" person which he cannot tolerate, so he rushes in to "fix" the person.

Not to be aware of one's own shadow keeps us from the realization that behaviors, characteristics, or manners of other people which annoy us are probably projected material from our own unconscious.[1188]

> ..when you feel a sort of burning in your chest, an awareness in yourself that someone ought to 'pay,' or a sensation that you would like to call a person a 'dirty dog,' a 'brazen hussy,' a 'controlled psychopath,' or some similarly caustic title, you can be rather sure that this is your shadow, and no good will come of it unless you stop and turn the ego around and find it in yourself before you start out after it in others.[1189]

Conversely, "Everything that irritates us about others can lead us to an understanding of ourselves," Jung notes.[1190]

It is important to note that acknowledgment of, becoming conscious of, one's own shadow, does not mean identification with or becoming one's shadow! That is always disastrous. It simply means that one acknowledge: "this is also part of me," to be aware it is in one's self, and to stop seeing in others what is really not admitted about oneself.

EXAMPLE: THE VIETNAM VETERAN "REMEMBERS"

The Biblical understanding of "remember" (זכר) is operative in the unhealing wound experienced by numerous, if not all, Vietnam veterans.

"To remember" does not simply mean to recall something interesting and ponder it, relate it to other events, appreciate or analyze it from a non-involved distance. It is rather a matter of being in the event itself. The event remembered controls life.

> When the soul remembers something, it does not mean that it has an objective memory image of some thing or event, but that this image is called forth in the soul and assists in determining its direction, its action .... The Israelite .. cannot at all imagine memory, unless at the same time an effect on the totality and its direction of will is taken for granted.[1191]

When something is remembered, it is "taken to heart," the heart understood to be an expression for the total personality.[1192] "To speak of the past is to make it effectual, authoritative for today."[1193] If God does not remember sins, they are removed; for God to remember the covenant, or His mercy means to put them into practice.[1194]

One of the conditions of many Vietnam veterans is that they continually "remember;" they cannot forget, and their lives and actions are determined thereby. "Try as they do to escape it, the past pursues them."[1195] One Nam vet stated: "I cannot speak of what was without speaking of what is." One replies to "When were you in Vietnam?" by saying, "Last night." To demand that one should be able by willpower to forget the past is as unrealistic as telling a parent to forget a death of their child the day after a loss! With the Vietnam vet, time does not heal all wounds. When so many friends die in such ghastly ways over a prolonged period, at a time in life when one's ways of reacting to the world are being determined, is bound to create certain results. Bruno Bettleheim has written of the long-term effects of the concentration camp experience, how one's life is permanently altered.[1196] It is unlikely that a victim of rape will ever again look at a male the way as before the rape, or that the child of an alcoholic parent will ever not remember the issue of alcohol–if nothing else, as something to be against! This knowledge always remembers.

These are the wounds that never really heal; like diabetes or heart trouble, life is never again the same The "knowledge of good and evil" that came from "becoming like the gods," i.e., controlling the tremendous power over life and death, or

---

[1186] Mt. 7.3-5.
[1187] Miller, Make Friends, p. 82.
[1188] Ibid., p. 86.
[1189] Ibid., p. 91.
[1190] Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, p. 247.
[1191] Pedersen, Israel, I-II, pp. 106, 107.
[1192] Rising, " זכר," p. 65.
[1193] Ibid., p. 68.
[1194] Ibid., pp. 71, 72.
[1195] Marin, "Living in Moral Pain," p. 74.
[1196] The Informed Heart.

having experienced this knowledge passively, is never forgotten. To repress and disregard only forces it to erupt volcanically from the unconscious in episodes of rage or depression, hypersensitivity to noise, inability to become intimate (therefore, divorce, frequent geographical relocations, and job changes), experiencing emotional numbness, all while re-experiencing the event itself in nightmares, flashbacks, or intrusive thoughts.[1197] That much repression occurred was due to the efforts by the government to put Vietnam behind us and by the veteran himself to forget the horrors and terrors he experienced, especially when others would call him a "baby killer," or ask "how does it feel to kill someone?"[1198]

Now that which has been repressed, sown as it were as a seed in the fertile ground of the unconscious, becoming intermingled there with violent and primitive contents, erupts as an unhealing psychic would.

This entire paper has been motivated to examine if there might not be some positive aspect to this tremendous burden of pain and fear, hurt, and rejection, experienced by the Vietnam veteran. Can he be the "suffering servant," a "wounded healer," a "shaman?" Will healing come via transference from within his psyche, a healing for all society? Or, must he forever live expelled from Paradise having experienced what Bill Mahedy calls "..the evils which irrevocably alter consciousness..[1199]

It is difficult to forget the knowledge that one's government does not care about people. Agent Orange has become a symbol that communicates inability to own responsibility (i.e., "able-to-respond") on the part of the government. Not infrequently, a Vietnam veteran will angrily exclaim, "How do you explain the commandment 'thou shalt not kill' and some chaplain saying 'go out there and kill a Commie for Christ?'" Efforts to explain that the Hebrew word does not mean "kill" in a broad, general sense, but the kind of killing that might more appropriately be translated "murder" is to no avail; the guilt remains. A psychiatrist who was at Khe Sanh during the battle there correctly notes ".. subjectively, any killing can be experienced as an atrocity by the killer, even when committed in self-defense."[1200]

It is difficult to forget the fact that one is alive while one's buddies, some of whom were married, or supporting others, or just good people, were killed. "Survival guilt," linked with four predisposing factors, is felt by almost all:

> .. a person who was in a leadership position and strongly felt protective of his men; a soldier who lost a dear friend in battle; an individual who survived unscathed while others were maimed and/or died; and a man who entertained fantasies and expectations of personal heroism.[1201]

It is difficult to forget the realization that actions have consequences–such ghastly consequences, that one is perplexed how now to live. The paradigm is the Final Judgment scene of the separation of sheep and goats wherein judgment of eternal bliss or eternal punishment is based on unknowingly having done or not having done very simple actions of human kindness,[1202] of is a matter of not even having "seen" a hungry and needy Lazarus.[1203] The Vietnam veteran knows how little actions, perhaps unknowingly done, have such terrible consequences as much as he knows the ravages of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder now based on emotional numbness then–or how so many lives were lost by what seemed to be a small error of judgment at the time. He knows how something like Agent orange, which was probably not even noticed or regarded then, has such ravaging consequences now, much like radiation many years previously absorbed causes cancer many years after the exposure. And one becomes almost afraid to live in society lest another small mistake cause untold future grief!

It is difficult to forget what man is capable of, of what each person personally is capable of! Vietnam veterans may not be acquainted with the results of Stanley Migram's experiments concerning "obedience" in which almost anyone would kill anyone else if told to do so by an authority figure,[1204] But, he certainly does know how he and others cheered a napalm strike, or felt a rush at seeing a SPOOKY at work or a B-52 Arc Light strike, not to say those who participated in egregious atrocities themselves!

It is difficult to forget abandonment and rejection–by the government, by society upon return, and even by God while there then and now. Mahedy writes: "The veteran who asked me, 'Where was God, that son-of-a-bitch, when the rounds were coming in at Khe Sanh?' asked the right question. The mystery of iniquity is too profound.."[1205] The experience of God's absence from the world precisely in those situations which seem to demand a providential presence is the experience of evil by the Vietnam veteran as well as of Jesus when He quoted the 22nd Psalm, "My God, my god, why have you forsaken me?"

[1197] American Psychiatric Association, DSM-III, p. 238.
[1198] Even I was told by a gasoline station attendant, upon seeing my various ribbons on my uniform, "You get those for killing people, don't you?" and he didn't mean to be antagonistic--and, I am a Chaplain, a non-combatant!
[1199] Mahedy, "It Don't Mean,.,," p. 68.
[1200] Howard, "The Vietnam Warrior..," p. 133.
[1201] Glover, "Survival Guilt," p. 395.
[1202] Mt. 25.31-46
[1203] Lk 16.19-31.
[1204] Milgam, "Behavioral Study of Obedience."
[1205] Mahedy, "It Don't Mean Nothing..," p. 67.

(the exegesis indicates it should be "not left alone," but "left helpless")[1206] Elie Wiesel wrote of the Nazis hanging a small child. Someone asked, "Where is God? Where is He?" as the child hung for more than an hour and a half, dying in slow agony. Then a voice–"Where is He? Here he is. He is hanging here on this gallows.."[1207] The Christian asks, "Where is God?" and answers, "He is on the cross!" One at Khe Sanh could ask "Where is God?" and answer, "Here He is; He is being carried after his bunker was hit; he is this body with no head, only dangling shreds of flesh hanging out of where his neck was!" carried tenderly by his chaplain who "bears our griefs and carries our sorrows."

But for those whose god is the American one of power and majesty, of large numbers of people and impressive programs and buildings, certainly one who is a grand success, no divine meaning is possible. God is absent.

It is difficult to forget that one is defiled, unclean, having come into contact with the culturally defined unclean object of war–spit upon by his fellow countrymen when he answered the call "We will bear any burden, pay any price to guarantee the existence of freedom throughout the world." Like the leper, he cries to those in his society "unclean! unclean!" and withdraws lest he pollute others. Radkolnikov (Crime and Punishment) might have attempted to justify his killing of the old woman, Aliona Ivanovna, that she didn't deserve to live eating up other people's lives,[1208]that he is an extraordinary case with a right to break the law.[1209] But the guilt gnaws, and he admits, "Did I kill the old hag? No, not the old hag–I killed myself! I went there, and all at once I did away with myself forever!"[1210] The crime could not be put away. It haunted him until he sought his punishment in suffering.

The Vietnam veteran knows all too well the capacity for error that leads to frightening results–the error of taking a hill without supporting arms, the error of fighting a war with no support, the error of being committed to a conflict that one isn't supposed to win, the error of falling for pious words that rang through the country with such force from the charismatic John F. Kennedy: "Ask not what your country can do for you; ask rather what you can do for your country." The Vietnam veteran remains isolated due to a moral sensitivity he has that others do not share. Jung described how knowledge can isolate: "Loneliness does not come from having no people about one, but from being unable to communicate the things that seem important to oneself, or from holding certain views which others find inadmissible ... if a man knows more than others, he becomes lonely."[1211] Plato goes even further: those enslaved in the world of shadows want to kill the one who has come to "know" reality and communicate to them what it really is! Yet, the point is that precisely this one is the only one who can inform those who are imprisoned in their mediocrity.[1212]

The Vietnam veteran's knowledge is similar to that of Oedipus. Certain kinds of knowledge are irreversible; one can't "unknow" what one has come to know. Certain actions and perceptions permanently alter an individual's life.

Oedipus was born to King Laius and his queen, Jocasta, but was then abandoned as an infant in the mountains, his ankles pierced and bound with a thong (hence the name "Oedipus" which is literally "swollen foot"). This was because the oracle of Apollo at Delphi had prophesied that if Laius had a son, the son would kill him. Laius and Jocasta were certain their son must have died of hunger and thirst or been torn to pieces by wild beasts.[1213]

However, a shepherd that had been chosen to expose the infant had pity on the innocent boy and handed him over to a fellow herdsman who pastured the sheep of Polybus, king of Corinth. Polybus took the infant to his wife, Merope, who raised him as if he were her own son.

While an adolescent, he was jeered by a jealous child that he wasn't the son of the king and queen of Corinth. Oedipus went to the oracle at Delphi who told him he would kill his father and marry his mother. Horrified, Oedipus, thinking the king and queen of Corinth were his parents, left home to frustrate the oracle's prophecy.

Enroute he met a chariot in a narrow crossroads and, in a senseless rage, killed the old man in the chariot–who happened to be his real father, though not wearing any of the identifying regalia of his office. he was unaware of having done anything more than revenging a common Phocian or Boeotian. He neared the gates of the City of Thebes and met up with a sphinx who had plagued the city with riddles: if a passerby could not solve the riddle, the sphinx tore him to pieces and devoured him.

[1206] Gould, Mari, (International Critical Commentary), on Mark 15.34, p. 294.
[1207] Wiesel, Night, p. 76.
[1208] Doestovsky, Crime and Punishment, p. 73.
[1209] Ibid., p. 256.
[1210] Ibid., p. 407.
[1211] Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, p. 356.
[1212] Plato, Republic, Bk. 7.
[1213] Cf., Schwab, Gods and heroes, pp. 230-240 for the story of Oedipus.

The King of Thebes, Creon, had decreed that if anyone could free the city of this plague, he could have his sister as a reward. His sister was Jocasta! Odedipus solved the rather famous riddle,[1214] and the sphinx throws himself off the cliff, the city is freed of the threat, and Oedipus marries Jocasta.

Many years pass. Then a plague of economic turmoil hits the city: hills and fields burn with drought; there is bloodshed and destruction. The oracle says the punishment is because the land is harboring an evil one who killed his father and married his mother. Oedipus declared that if anyone knew of the murderer of King Laius, he step forward and report it, and the murderer was cursed.

Sophocles' play Oedipus Rex, dramatically portrays the scenes as Oedipus gradually leans he is the evil one.. Jocasta hangs herself; Oedipus tears the golden clasps off her robe and smacks them into his own eyeballs, blinding himself, and places himself in exile, in social isolation, regarding himself a monster. He returns to the wilderness.

Paul Diehl develops the deeper significance of this myth in terms of titanic rebellion against the spirit.[1215] The "foot" represents the state and destiny of the soul, as when Typhon cuts the tendons of Zeus' feet and in the story of Achilles' vulnerable foot which symbolizes the vulnerability of his soul on account of his anger, the cause of his downfall. Oedipus' cut tendons represent a diminishing of the soul's resources: "Swollen foot" means "swollen soul," i.e., an inflated ego swollen with vanity. He is ambitious to have power over others, and thus tackles the Sphinx (a symbol of the destructive consequences of a rule by a king who is perverse: "Half woman, half lion, the Sphinx symbolizes living and perverse domination."[1216] Oedipus' neurosis is traceable, as are most neuroses, to his parents' actions–in this case, their abandonment of him;. Oedipus' weapon is his trust in his knowledge, by which he conquers the Sphinx.

In the sunken road (symbol of the unconscious) he encounters what he considers "an ordinary person," "just anyone" who orders him to move aside and causes Oedipus to become enraged. Laius represents the mythical father, i.e., spirit. Oedipus killed "spirit" and marries his mother, i.e., an excessive attachment to the earthly, the symbol of desire. He binds himself to exalt his desires. He marries (chooses) banalization. Seduced by power, he releases his desire by reigning as king as he continues to kill his father, the spirit.

The country becomes torn and loses its wholeness and unity, characteristic of neurosis. Oedipus realizes he is the guilty one, not only of the external fate. That is only symbolic of the real issue: ".. his destiny is no longer the result of chance, but instead the result of his own fault ... he killed the spirit so as to be able to marry earthly pleasures. he has betrayed what he believed to be the sense of life, the very aspirations of his youth."[1217]

Jocasta dies which means that the allurement of earthly pleasures has ceased: Oedipus can no longer enjoy life's pleasures; he is horrified at them. Then he plucks out his own eyes; he blinds himself in order to cut himself off from the world and its seduction in order to retire into himself and find reconciliation with the spirit he has betrayed.[1218]

> Thus the symbolism stresses that he who is diseased in soul, the neurotic individual, blinded by repression, tortured by guilt, can only be cured by 'blinding himself' to seductions and by recognizing his guilt.[1219]

It is very easy for a Vietnam veteran to see himself mirrored in this myth: he also is the traveler who in adolescence ventures out into the world with the question of self-identify: "Who am I?" which is really always a question of "whose am I?" to do battle with the monsters of life. He it is who kills "just anybody," not aware of doing anything extraordinary, perhaps also quick to rage in battle, attempting to free the land of sphinx monsters that plague the land–Communism, or heroically to challenge danger. He is the one with the swollen ego, inflated by military power of life and death. Then come the many, many years, characteristic of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder until economic disorder and destruction–unemployment, suicide or killing others, substance and alcohol abuse–;plague him. And he is is who lives as an "outcast," a pariah in exile.

The self-awareness of Oedipus is the self-awareness of the Vietnam veteran. He is exiled not only because of what he has done or seen done but because of the questions it raises for him and the unsettling questions it raises for everyone else in society also. The prevailing Civil Religion (viz., our country only does what is right; we are always on God's side–or rather, He is always on our side!; we are always the winners and always the most powerful!) has been smashed by Vietnam. The prevailing

---

[1214] The riddle is a play on the underlying theme of the entire story: the feet: "In the morning it does on four feet, and at noon on two, and in the evening on three. Of all creatures living, it is the only one that changes the number of its feet, yet just when it walks on the most feet, its speed and strength are at their lowest ebb." The answer: "It is man." (Walks on both feet and hands as an infant--the morning, walks on two when grown up, and walks on three (both feet and a cane) in old age--the evening).

[1215] Diehl, Symbolism, pp. 124-137

[1216] Ibid., p. 129.

[1217] Ibid., p. 134.

[1218] Ibid., p. 136.

[1219] Ibid.

cultural wisdom, models of human nature, and modes of therapy, are all inadequate to explain the moral pain of the Vietnam veteran or provide ways of dealing with it.[1220] Marin writes: "It may be hat certain acts and certain kinds of guilt set men irrevocably apart from their fellows.."[1221]

> He is an angry man; he is a pariah. he is a non-hero soldier, however brave he has been ... He is a wounded, angry, and estranged man who has no place in the society that sent him to war. And we have done this to him.[1222]

A POSITION: THE WOUNDED HEALER

Only the wounded can heal; only the hurt can help. This doesn't mean that those who now have or who have had wounds or hurts will, ipso facto, be helpful to others, that if there is to be any help, it probably will come from them. Even on a global scale, Solzhenitzyn, in his famous Harvard University commencement address of June 8,1978, while sharply critical of Communism, Asked if the West might not be the model for healing:

> But should I be asked, instead, whether I would propose the West, much as it is today, as a model to my country, I would frankly have to answer negatively. No, I could not recommend your society as an ideal for the transformation of ours. Through deep suffering, people in our country have now achieved a spiritual development of such intensity that the Western system in its present state of spiritual exhaustion does not look attractive.[1223]

Sanford truly writes; "..Healing can perhaps only be truly understood by people who have been ill and then have become well."[1224] Only those who are ill seek a physician; those who are self-sufficient will probably remain in their ego-centricity. Sanford truly writes; ".. it is those who have recognized that they have been injured to hurt in some way in life who are most apt to come into the kingdom ... unless a person has recognized h is own need, even his despair, he is not really for the kingdom.."[1225]

Only the empty can be filled with that which may fill another empty person, whether they mourn, are poor in spirit, are dejected, hunger and thirst, etc.[1226] Only those who have shared the same conditions of life can speak the authentic word which is also authoritative. Others may indeed have the truthful message, the correct words, the appropriate ideas and motivation, but they probably will not be heard. Only a recovering alcoholic is perhaps of real assistance to another alcoholic. Those who have been addicted are the most helpful–perhaps the only helpful ones–in confronting an addict who denies he has a problem. The one with car trouble on the highway is more probably assisted by someone driving an old pick-up truck, not by the one driving an expensive car. Victims of rape are best helped by other victims of rape, who, if nothing else, encourage and facilitate externalization through verbalizations of the trauma in a place where it is safe to do so and with those who hear with understanding ears. A military officer who has been enlisted is perhaps the one the enlisted persons will appreciate most: he knows. Henri Nouwen writes: "The great illusion of leadership is to think that man can be led out of the desert by someone who has never been there."[1227] Like the Apostle Thomas, we naturally and legitimately ask, "Where are the wounds,"[1228] i.e., "Where is the identification with my condition?" Playing at an appearance of being someone who cares and is concerned never works in the end, and only creates disdainful repugnance; it is only the one who has been actually hurt and really healed that is of any usefulness. The oldest myths of healing emphasize that it is precisely because the healer is wounded that he has the power to heal.[1229]

It is not the professional "helper" who is usually the most helpful; it is rather the peers who have been found to be most helpful. Bruce Larson emphasizes one-on-one encounters, or small group (e.g., four) sharing, and writes: "I am personally convinced that this one-on -one ministry can best be practiced by amateurs. It does not require professional clergy, doctors, or psychologists, though these people can give us all tremendous insight and help."[1230] Elsewhere, he writes, "What is new in our time is the growing awareness that in some cases the paraprofessional or nonprofessional is better able to do the job

---

[1220] Cf., Marin, "Living in Moral Pain," p. 68.
[1221] Ibid., p. 77.
[1222] Howard, "The Vietnam Warrior..," p. 130.
[1223] Solzhenitsyn, A World Split.., pp. 33-35.
[1224] Sanford, Healing, p. 116.
[1225] Sanford, Kingdom Within, pp. 68-69.
[1226] Cf., Mt. 5.3-12. Sanford, Healing, p. 116.
[1227] Nouwen, Wounded Healer, p. 72. Sanford, Kingdom Within, pp. 68-69.
[1228] Jn. 20.25.
[1229] Groesbeck, "The Psychiatrist..," p. 135.
[1230] Larson, Ask Me to Dance, p. 24.

than the professional,"[1231] The reason is probably hat it is the friend who will not reject or judge and will therefore allow a person to unburden fully, that performs the most positive therapeutic activity. Obviously, one who has had the same problems is in no position to be judgmental! It is not the one who is "holier-than-thou" the sinless one, who is helpful; it is the one who has been assaulted and wounded–and subsequently healed–that is in a position to understand fully and share the appropriate healing. it is the "one who became sin who knew no sin, that we might be the righteousness of God.[1232] and those who participate in that structure of being, that is of any real help.

A veteran of the Vietnam War once claimed that he had adequately adjusted to civilian life, not troubled by recurring nightmares, flashbacks, stress, episodes of rage, anger, depression, feelings of guilt at having survived when his friends died, jumping into a ditch at the sudden retort of a car, etc., that so many other Vietnam veterans experience in PTSD. Now, some sixteen years later, while watching the dedication of the "unknown" Vietnam veteran in Arlington Cemetery, he was suddenly overcome by tears, and while one of his children wiped them away and tried to comfort him, he felt exceedingly alone, like he was the unknown Vietnam soldier, and that night became plagued by nightmares distinguished by their vibrant vividness of smells, , sights, and sounds,. He thought: "Am I going crazy?" He stated he used to wonder what was wrong with other Vietnam veterans because he never had those problems and assumed they were using Vietnam as a crutch on which to blame their problems. Now he knows. He himself has the pain–or rather, is now aware of the pain he always had but did not know he had (much like one can be depressed or angry and not know it since these conditions are not merely "feelings"). There was a man in his office who was seriously wounded and was struggling to keep his life in order and not always doing too good a job at it. There had been difficulties relating to this man and all his problems. "Now I understand him," he said. "Now I can appreciate his situation."

This same Vietnam veteran also noted how his father-in-law who had been gassed in WW I, never spoke of his painful war experiences to anyone until he began to talk of his Vietnam experiences: then the old man's pain gushed forth. It was safe. Unfortunately Nam vets rarely talk of their experiences for the same reason the WW I veteran didn't.

> For we do not have a high priest who is unable to sympathesize with our weaknesses, but we have one who has been tempted in every way, just as we are–yet without sin. Let us then approach the throne of grace with confidence, so that we may receive mercy and find grace to help in our time of need.[1233]

Viktor Frankl, writing out of his concentration camp experiences, wrote: "Suffering ceases to be suffering in some way at the moment it finds a meaning such as the meaning of a sacrifice."[1234] One can suffer almost anything if a purpose to it is realized. The meaning may be the gift one becomes to others thereby. One can only give what one has; only those who have needed the Physician[1235] can share what that Physician has given them: the Physician. It's never a matter of ideas; it's always a matter of life. Only what has been put right in oneself can one put right in another. The great task of healing a broken, fearful society desperate for hope, will come only from those who have been crushed by its burdens. The one who suffers pain, rejection, fragmentation, is indeed more holy and can reflect God to us because the Scriptures repeatedly indicate God is present to such who are the poor, and holiness is a derivative condition since none are holy but God alone, and those who are in His presence participate in His holiness.[1236] much like objects in a warm room become warm or objects near radioactivity become radioactive. Only that which is in He Who is That He Is, is; in Him we live and move and have our being.[1237] The only authoritative voice today is the voice of the poor.

> ...the Father of compassion and the God of all comfort .. comforts us in all our troubles, so that we can comfort those in any trouble with the comfort we ourselves have received from God. For just as the sufferings of Christ flow over into our lives, so also through Christ our comfort overflows.[1238]

Two approaches to healing seem to be current:

There are those who attempt to assist others as they would fix a defective piece of machinery, isolating and focusing on the problem, categorizing the person as an instance of a problem, maintaining a professional stance of scientific, objective, and unemotional distance, becoming analytical, applying a technique or argument or giving advice, referring to something that is written about that kind of problem, preach a word, etc. This stance is adopted to preclude becoming overwhelmed

---

[1231] Larson, Risky Christianity, p. 110.
[1232] 2 Cor. 5.21.
[1233] Heb. 4.15-16.
[1234] Frrankl, Man's Search, p. 113.
[1235] Mt. 9.12.
[1236] Cf. Benko, The Meaning, p. 70.
[1237] Acts 17.28.
[1238] 2 Cor 1.3-5.

and ineffective. If a surgeon were to attend his own feelings, he might slip his scalpel and injure or kill his patient; if one vomits and cries over a mangled body, it is unlikely that effective first aid will be rendered.

On the other hand are those who are concerned with the person, not the problem, knowing that one problem may very well be resolved but others may arise like so many heads of the Hydra, and that real healing involves the whole person. This type of helper becomes intensely present to the person, eyeball-to-eyeball, with empathy and internalizing the other person and providing healing and transformation through active and intense involvement.

Unlike the former, the latter can be silent, need not know all the answers–(in fact, best doesn't, since knowledge of answers may filter seeing the situation so that one doesn't see the situation or the person, but the categories of what one knows), and can avoid creating or nurturing a dependency relationship of sufferer to the "expert." Nouwen writes:

> ..when we honestly ask ourselves which persons in our lives mean the most to us, we often find it is those who, instead of giving much advice, solutions, or cures, have chosen rather to share our pain and touch our wounds with a gentle and tender hand. The friend who can be silent with us in a moment of despair or confusion, who can stay with us in an hour of grief and bereavement, who can tolerate not-knowing, not curing, not-healing and face with us the reality of our powerlessness, that is the friend who cares.[1239]

Noting that cure without care is dehumanizing (because it focuses on the ailment, not the person), he writes that real cure involves participation in the pain, solidarity in the suffering, and sharing in the experience of brokenness: ".. the temptation is that we use our expertise to keep a safe distance from that which really matters and forget that in the long run cure without care is more harmful than helpful."[1240]

C. G. Jung in his autobiographical comments notes:

> I am often asked about my psychotherapeutic or analytic method .. Therapy is different in every case. When a doctor tells me that he adheres strictly to this or that method, I have my doubts about his therapeutic effect ... the cure ought to grow naturally out of the patient himself ... I treat every patient as individually as possible, because the solution of the problem is always an individual one .. a doctor .. must guard against falling into any specific, routine approach ... We need a different language for every patient ... The crucial point is that I confront the patient as one human being to another."[1241]

Inter-personal activity is an I-Thou relationship rather than an I-It, as Buber so insightfully writes. Reality does not dwell in concepts anymore than the living God dwells in houses made by human hands[1242]–or minds, the products of which seek to contain–and therefore control and manipulate or make idolatrous–people and God, "person-reality" by knowing their name. As Jung writes, "The spirit does not dwell in concepts, but in deeds and in facts. Words butter no parsnips.."[1243]

The gift of wounds, the blessing of psychic pain that is, let it be most strongly asserted, not sought–in fact one which must be addressed as Jesus addressed it: "My Father, if it is possible, may this cup be taken from me. Yet not as I will, but as you will,"[1244]–that which fits a person to help others by being a "wounded healer," has a widely divergent, multi-dimensional tradition reflecting something essentially characteristic of being human that only is fulfilled in the Christ, including shamanism, the myth of Aesclepius, the Suffering Servant model in Isaiah, and prophetic existence generally, the psychological phenomena of transference, and finally, the Theology of the Cross (Theologia Crucis). All these seemingly unrelated expressions elucidate a basic expression of a motif of being, the method by which God works to heal and give life.

SIX PERSPECTIVES

THE SHAMAN

The healer in primitive tribal society as well as much of the world's disadvantaged populations is the shaman. Sanford observes that all the major religions of the world, in fact, are shamanistic in their core, teaching the need for a death and rebirth.[1245] The shaman's healing technique mediates and presents power from the forces of reality in order to restore wholeness and harmony in individuals and in the tribe. The shaman is a liminal (i.e., "in-between," in the doorway, the limen)

[1239] Nouwen Out of Solitude, p. 34.
[1240] Ibid., p. 32.
[1241] Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, p. 131.
[1242] Acts 7.48
[1243] Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, p. 144.
[1244] Mt. 26.39.
[1245] Sanford, Healing, p. 63.

person, human, yet more than human.[1246] "Only the shaman is able to behave as both a god and a human. The shaman then is an interspecies being, a channel for the gods."[1247] Eliade defines shamanism as:

> ..all the practices by which supernatural power may be acquired by mortals, the exercise of that power either for good or evil, and all the concepts and beliefs associated with these practices.[1248]

One becomes a shaman by a most excruciatingly painful initiation process which begins by separation from the rest of their community in order to have access to the sacred region,[1249] the realm of chaos and pure energy, the "limen," "..where power exists in a free and untransformed state."[1250] Beginning with the separation from the mundane world, from normal, secular life, the future shaman begins his personal transformation like the formation of the American character by the "frontier experience" (Turner)–struggling alone, as one faces the Unknown, the mysterium. "The approach to this infinite mystery is made alone. For only in the solitudes do the spirits that destroy and teach appear."[1251] The shaman must "..renounce the simple human condition and become a more or less pliant instrument for some manifestation of the sacred."[1252] The sham thus becomes one who experiences and reflects the divine; shamans are "..those who experience the sacred with greater intensity than the rest of the community–those who, as it were, incarnate the sacred, because they live it abundantly, or rather 'are lived' by the religious 'form' that has chosen them."[1253] When the shaman dances or sings, it is a passive phenomena: the shaman doesn't dance or sing; he is danced or sung by the powerful energies he channels.[1254]

Future shamans are usually chosen because they are sickly, especially if they exhibit psychological disorders.

> ..shamans are called and enter the field under an inner compulsion to do so. They are seized, oppressed, and tormented by 'evil' spirits and there is no way out except to become a shaman.[1255]

Sickness is the doorway to death; there is no rebirth apart from death.

> ...the invitation to the shamanic vocation comes through an illness or severe psychological crisis that is likened to death. This is followed by a rebirth, but as a result of the violent struggle to regain health, the personality of the shaman is greatly enlarged. he becomes a more conscious person because of his woundedness.[1256]

Separation from the mundane world is a journey of the experience of death. Symbolic death is represented in all initiation ceremonies.[1257] The future shaman "..experiences death in order to gain control over the elements of the world of the untamed. The withdrawal into solitude through sickness opens the way for the inner initiation to take place.[1258] "Death furnishes all with life."[1259] Some shamans wear a costume decorated like a skeleton: a personification of death. The neophyte shaman dies to finitude in order to attain knowledge of the immortal.[1260] In psychological terms, the requisite death experience means a deep invasion from the unconscious that takes the ego down to its bare bones.[1261] Usually this is in the form of a deep and severe depression of which the shaman cures himself by going into a trance and making artistic productions (like dancing, painting, or poetry) which he then shares with his community.[1262] The depressions are usually a signal that something is struggling to die within him; positive results occur when one participates in the painful process of allowing these negative parts of one's ego and oneself, to die[1263] by letting-go of old patterns, being open and receptive, and risking the emotionally painful process of change.[1264]

[1246] Cf. Frim, Creation Spirituality.., pp. 22-23.
[1247] Halifax, Shaman, p. 14.
[1248] Eliade, Shamanism, p. 298.
[1249] Ibid,., pp. 7, 8.
[1250] Halifax, Shaman, p. 6.
[1251] Ibid., p. 69.
[1252] Eliade, Shamanism, p. 23.
[1253] Ibid., p. 32.
[1254] Cf. Halifax, Shaman, p. 59; this will be seen to be similar in the Asclepius myth: when healing occurs, it is the manifestation of Aesclepius.
[1255] Rosen, "The Pursuit of One's Own healing," pp. 37-38.
[1256] Sanford, Healing, p. 80.
[1257] Eliade, Shamanism, p. 33.
[1258] Halifax, Shaman, p. 20.
[1259] Ibid., p. 41.
[1260] Ibid., p. 76.
[1261] Sanford, Healing, p. 65.
[1262] Rosen, "The Pursuit..," p. 38.
[1263] Ibid., p. 39.
[1264] Ibid., p. 40.

The scheme of the initiation ceremony encompasses suffering, death, and resurrection. Sickness and sufferings are initiatory tortures which may include being cut by knives, being tied in a stretched-out manner on the ground many days, being made delirious by being forced to drink large quantities of tobacco juice, all of which fit the neophyte to become a shaman. One or more of the following form the content of the initiation ceremonies: dismemberment of the body followed by a renewal of the internal organs and viscera; ascent to the sky and dialogue with the gods or spirits; descent to the underworld and conversation with spirits and souls of dead; various revelations, both religious and shamanic (secrets of the profession).[1265] The future shaman must experience death–his own, and then live. Only this will make a shaman.[1266]

The future shaman in the Jivaro tribe is beaten senseless, doesn't eat for many days, and loses consciousness as part of his ritual death.[1267] The candidate of the Aranda of Central Australia submits to an operation performed by two old medicine men: "They rub his body with rock crystals to the point of abrading the skin, press rock crystals into his scalp, pierce a hole under a fingernail of his right hand, and make an incision in his tongue."[1268] The Carib of Dutch Guiana, while resting on benches during their excruciating initiation, have their eyes rubbed with red-pepper juice and are intoxicated with the Takini plant which produces a high fever, making the novice shake every limb; it is believed spirits in him are tearing his body.[1269]

During the initiation ceremonies, the ravenous spirits of the Underworld dismember and consume the neophyte, thus releasing him to a higher order of existence.[1270] to achieve shamanic vision, understanding, and power. The neophyte is crushed, dismembered, fragmented, in order to be reconstituted a new and higher order of being. He feasts on the forces of reality; they feast on him. The shaman becomes one who has known the darkness of dismemberment and yet survived, is healed and cured, and therefore able to help others toward victory.. The principle is: "Only those who have passed through darkness successfully can help others through it," not "those who have successfully repressed or avoided darkness." Not mere suffering, hurt, and pain, but one who has been through suffering and conquered, forms the future shaman.

The shaman communicates with the spirits of the underworld or on the earth which are not regarded as necessarily "evil" or "demonic;" they are simply more practically influential and available, at hand.

> Benevolent as the gods and spirits 'above' may be, they are unfortunately passive and hence of almost no help in the drama of human existence. They inhabit 'the upper spheres of the sky, scarcely mingle in human affairs, and have relatively less influence on the course of life than the spirits of the 'bis below.' who are vindictive, closer to the earth, albeit to men by ties of blood and a much stricter organization into clans.[1271]

It is important to emphasize that the power to heal comes directly from the spirits, not from cognitive knowledge. This, as Sanford writes, is in direct contrast to the contemporary scene in which we assume persons in the healing professions acquire what they need–their credentials–from schools in which they become adept technicians.[1272]

Shamans undergo their frightfully painful initiation process not for their own benefit; their role is social. Failure to shamanize will make the shaman sick: "..the shaman is called to a certain kind of life, and if he does not lead it properly, his power will turn against him and kill him."[1273] Their concern is with the community using sacred action to create order out of chaos. "Knowing intimately and personally the realm of sickness, decrepitude, dying and death readies the shaman for his or her actual mission.[1274] It is because of his knowledge of his own wounds that the shaman is able to heal another person.[1275]

The shaman is the tribal specialist of the soul;[1276] his chief function is healing.[1277] The two are related because illness is regarded as a matter of the soul–either it has strayed away or been stolen and the shaman must find, capture, and oblige it to return to its proper place in the patient's body,[1278] or, in some cases, a foreign substance/spirit has invaded the sick person

---

[1265] Eliade, Shamanism, p. 34.
[1266] Ibid., p. 76.
[1267] Ibid., pp. 84-85.
[1268] Ibid., p. 47. Note: rock crystals in Australia are believed to be solidified light and to be of celestial origin. The Kwakiutl shamans receive their power through rock crystals. (Ibid., p. 138).
[1269] Ibid., pp. 129, 130.
[1270] Halifax, Shaman, p. 78.
[1271] Eliade, Shamanism, p. 186.
[1272] Sanford, Healing, p. 74.
[1273] Ibid., p. 67.
[1274] Halifax, Shaman, p. 92.
[1275] Grossbeck& Taylor, "The Psychiatrist," p. 137.
[1276] Ibid., p. 229.
[1277] Ibid., p. 299.
[1278] Ibid., p. 215.

and "..in order to extract the evil spirits from the patient, the shaman is often obliged to take them into his own body; in doing so, he struggles and suffers more than the patient himself."[1279]

The shaman draws people to the world of the spirits on a one-on-one basis. Most people do not know God; they only hear stories about Him through the experiences of others. Religious structures that claim to lead people to God my keep people from their own experience of God, but not the shaman. The shaman has his power and authority from direct contact with the numinous inner world. He is an individual and can help people only in an individual way.[1280] This is in marked contrast to healing methods today "in which healing is collectivized, and virtually no effort is made to discover its meaning for the individual. As a result, many people remain ill or have to settle for a mediocre mode of functioning in life."[1281]

What impresses an outsider (e.g., Marin) about Vietnam veterans is how they are instantly able to care for each other; many have become shamanic. They have left the normal society or mundane reality, been exposed to painful initiatory rituals in boot camp and battle, been "torn up" by death of buddies fallen apart, in contact with the primeval. Many Vietnam veterans are quite artistic and become healed in seclusion while also producing art–books, poems, music, painting, sculpture, etc. Many must be engaged in helping other Vietnam veterans, i.e., they must act as a shaman, or they become sick again. They do not achieve their competence via schooling but from their experience, a direct experience with the spiritual dimension of their souls via flashbacks, nightmares, intrusive thoughts, and acted-out (unconscious) behavior.

Christian application is likewise obvious. Baptism becomes the symbol of death to new life; the Christian no longer regards one "after the flesh"[1282] and death becomes the occasion for putting on an immortal, incorruptible, glorified body.[1283] In Christianity, all Christians become shamans, those who suffer for the sake of others, by" bearing one another's burdens and so fulfilling the law of Christ."[1284] The Christian is one who makes present the power of God in Christ, who has overcome and conquered all the spirits,[1285] and while Christ has already conquered and performed the Atonement–we need not compulsively repeat the atonement but accept it!–the Christian nevertheless completes the wounds of Christ in his own body.[1286] Like his Master, who became sin who knew no sin,[1287] like both Moses and Paul who were willing to be cursed by God if it would mean their people would be spared,[1288] the Christian is almost always the one who will be misinterpreted, slandered, persecuted, jailed, not promoted; as has been said, "there are two kinds of Christians in the world: those who know they are going to heaven and those who know they are going to jail!" For, like the shaman, the Christian does not live unto himself; he lives to bless his society, and his good actions are not his, but the occasions of the Presence of Christ working in and through him or her, of which he is not even aware or conscious of having done anything special.[1289]

It has been written somewhere that "there's only wounded soldiers in God's army," and "only those people who are hurt and admit it, are alive." Contemporary Christian shamans who have undergone the illness/death/resurrection and new life, rebirth process, under the tutelage of Christ and the Spirit, may be fitted to heal others by having suffered, not by their Biblical or doctrinal knowledge:

> Certain people who fall ill in our time, as well as in times past, are being called to a special life of consciousness and spiritual development, and may even be summoned via their illness to function as healers ... like the shamans, persons who are meant to work in the healing field are Wounded Healers. If a person has gone through a crisis, died to an old personality, and fought his or her way back to health and a more conscious life, that person may gain a certain quality that enables him to put others in touch with healing too.[1290]

The contemporary Christian shaman deals, then, with an illness by taking it upon himself ("bearing one another's burdens.."). While this is dangerous, it is a calling expressing love, as Grossbeck and Taylor write (concerning a wounded-healer psychiatrist type): "In the process he risks his own wounds being reactivated, but, he does it for the ultimate purpose of helping the patient transcend his illness by seeing and experiencing it differently."[1291]

[1279] Ibid., p. 229.
[1280] Sanford, Healing, p. 72.
[1281] Ibid., p. 73.
[1282] 2 Cor 5.16.
[1283] 1 Cor 15.44-49, 53
[1284] Gal 6.2.
[1285] Col 2.15.
[1286] Col 1.24.
[1287] Rom 5.21.
[1288] Rom 9.3, Ex 32.32.
[1289] Mt 25.37-39.
[1290] Sanford, Healing, p. 81.
[1291] Grossbeck & Taylor, "The Psychiatrist," p. 138.

Those who are wounded with a wound that is continually opened in order to receive more grace, an influx of the divine strength,[1292] can become a source of healing to others. Some are fated to attend their unconscious continually, seeking the meaning of their dreams, or engaging ini prayer and meditation as a necessary part of their daily life. These are people who ".. cannot function in life the way people do who have not been wounded by the divine forces within them."[1293] Fallure to be so attentive by one who is so called may cause such a person to become ill again. But, notes Sanford, ".. as long as the wound is ministered to , it proves a source of renewal and life. It becomes an opening through which new life enters into and enlarges consciousness. It is the divine wound."[1294]

Ασκλήπιος

The young maiden, Koronis, who lived on the shores of Lake Beobeis in Thessalay, Greece, became pregnant by Apollo, the Greek god of music, harmony, the movement of the sun, and also a sender of both disease and healing. However, she had a secret passion for Ischys the Arcadian, and while Apollo departed on business to Delphi, the pregnant Koronis went to bed with Ischys. Apollo had suspected that Koronis might not remain faithful in his absence, and had a bird, a crow, to watch over her and report an y wrongdoing. When the crow informed Apollo, Apollo became enraged and turned the crow black (crows to this point had been white). He then took revenge on Koronis, complaining to his sister, Artemis, who shot a quiver of arrows into Koronis. Apollo, looking at her corpse, was moved by grief but couldn't restore her to life, so he had Hermes cut the still living child from Koronis' womb on the funeral pyre. Apollo, exemplifying the principle, "he who sent death gave life," named his child Asclepius, and entrusted him to Chiron, the Centaur.[1295] The story of Asclepius begins as a "birth in death."[1296]

Chiron is one of the most enigmatic figures in Greek mythology. he combines the animal and the Apollonian[1297] being a centaur (i.e., half man, half horse). While the other centaurs were powerful and often savage, getting drunk and attempting rape, Chiron, chief of all the centaurs, remains aloof from all such disgraceful events and leads a supremely civilized and exemplary life,[1298] instructing heroes in medicine and music. Under his tutelage were Jason and Achilles as well as Asclepius.

Chiron lives in a cave, an entrance into the subterranean, the underworld, the chthonic–the entrance to the unconscious. Yet is is from here that new life emerges. Christ arose from a tomb. Kerenyi writes: "To be at home in the darkness of suffering and there to find germs of light and recovery, as though by enchantment, [is] to being forth Asclepius, the sun-like hero.."[1299] The Magnesian centaur, Chiron , teaches Asclepius how to heal mortals of painful maladies. One of Pindar's Odes declares:

> And those whosoever came suffering from the sores of nature, or with their limbs wounded either by gray bronze or by far-hurled stone, or with bodies wasting away with summer's heat or winter's cold, he loosed and delivered divers of them from diverse pains, tending some of them with kindly incantations, giving to others a soothing potion, or, haply, swathing their limbs with simples, or restoring others by the knife.[1300]

Heracles, another hero raised by Chiron, enroute to Erymanthus on his fourth labor–to capture the Erymanthian Boar alive–killed a bandit, Saurus, and was entertained by a centaur, Pholus. During the meal;, the centaur opened a jar of wine. But the jar of wine belonged to all the centaurs, who began to attack, outraged. Heracles pursued them as they took refuge in Chiron's cave. Heracles aimed his bow and launched a shaft which bounced off the arm of Elatus and embedded in Chiron's knee. Then Heracles recognized Chiron as the one who had befriended him in childhood, ran to him, drew out the arrow, and applied medications in which Chiron had once instructed him. But the wound was drenched with the Hydra's venom and could not be healed. So the centaur had them carry him to his cave where he wanted to die in the arms of his friend. But, alas, Chiron had forgotten he was immortal, and his agony would last forever. Heracles left him with many tears.[1301] Chiron becomes a "wounded healer:"

[1292] Cf., Paul's "thorn in the flesh," 2 Cor 12.7-9, or Jacob's pain from wrestling with an angel, Gen. 32.24-32.
[1293] Sanford, Healing, p. 33.
[1294] Ibid., pp. 35-36.
[1295] Pindar, Third Pythian Ode, in Nisetich, Pindar's Victory Songs, p. 167; Graves, The Greek Myths, Para 50; Grossbeck, chetypal Image," p. 125.
[1296] Kerenyi, Asklepius, p. xix.
[1297] Grossbeck, "Archetypal Image," p. 125.
[1298] Kirk, Nature of Greek Myth, p. 85.
[1299] Kerenyi, Asklepius, p. 100.
[1300] Pindar, Third Pythian Ode.
[1301] Schwab, Gods and heroes, pp. 169-170.

The tragic aspect was that Chiron's wound was incurable. His cure was not to be This paradox, hat he who cures over and over, yet remains eternally ill or wounded himself, appears at the heart of the mystery of healing.[1302]

Asclepius became so proficient, he even raised several dead persons to life, among which were Hippocytus, Capaneus, Orion, Glaucus, and Tyndareus. Eventually, Hades, god of the underworld, complained to Zeus who had the Cyclops send a thunderbolt to kill Asclepius. "Asclepius and his mother, Koronis, are both examples of the human tendency to be unsatisfied with necessary limitations, Koronis could not wait for her wedding day, Asclepius tried to overcome the human condition itself."[1303] As with Adam and Eve, Asclepius eats "forbidden fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil."

Asclepius likewise is he "wounded healer," rescued from the burning pyre, killed by Zeus for bringing life, and participating in the wounds of his patients:

> Of Asclepius, the oracle of Apollo said: 'He who wounds also heals.' ... In Asclepian cures there was a paradox that appeared at the heart of the mystery of healing: he who cures and yet remains eternally ill or wounded himself.[1304]

Kerenyi notes the features of the ideal bronze statuary of Asclepius which portray this:

> The eyes seem to look upwards and into the distance without definite aim. This combined with the vivid movement gives us an impression of a great inner emotion, one might almost say of suffering. This god does not stand before us in Olympian calm: he is assailed as it were by the sufferings of men, which it is his vocation to assuage.[1305]

The process of healing did not involve a visit to an expert who simply administered medicine, but with his knife, or applied cautery. The visit was a meeting with divine power, the naked and immediate event of healing itself.[1306] The priests of the temple were certainly not without medical ability, but their role, other than deciding whom to admit, was passive.[1307] They simply determined the fitness of the candidates for healing. The place in the temple where the healing occurred was called the abaton ("a place not to be entered into uninvited")' one was ordinarily invited by a dream.[1308] Sanford notes: "There are dangers in contacting the powers of the unconscious without proper preparations and the proper motives.[1309] Only a direct relationship and intervention by god in the soul of the patient can heal. Therefore, it was necessary for the sick person to "journey inward" into the depths of his soul, where god could be found. The important healer is the inner healer:

> The physician cannot act alone; side by side with his outside intervention something inside the patient must lend a helping hand if a cure is to be accomplished. At the crucial moment something is at work that might best be compared to the flow of a spring.[1310]

And,

> In principle the physician was excluded from the individual mystery of recovery: the patient sought out the deity in a much more personal way than in the great mysteries of the archaic or classical period ... the physician remained intentionally in the background.[1311]

What was offered was an environment which was as far as possible removed from the disturbing and unhealthful elements of the outside world. Healing began with separation from the mundane world. The process of healing began with a pilgrimage to the Asclepion, a temple of Asclepius. Archeologists have unearthed over 400 such temples.[1312] No one becomes whole without such a pilgrimage. Today such a pilgrimage may not be physical relocation, but may involve a spiritual journey in which we move from our attitudes in one place to an entirely new psychological place.[1313] After arrival, the ritual was simple:

[1302] Grossbeck, "Archetypal image, p. 127.
[1303] Nisetich, Pindar's Victory Songs, p. 167.
[1304] Grossbeck and Taylor, The Psychiatrist," p. 135.
[1305] Kerenyi, Asclepius, pp. 22-23.
[1306] Ibid., p. 34.
[1307] Ibid., p. 36.
[1308] Sanford, Healing, p. 45.
[1309] Ibid., p. 58.
[1310] Kerenyi, Asclepius, pp. 24-25.
[1311] Ibid.,p. 30.
[1312] Sanford, Healing, p. 45.
[1313] Ibid., pp. 55-56.

..relax on the holy grounds, take in the beauty of the surroundings, listen to the hymns, and wait for the night. Then each patient would be required to lie down in the sacred hall .. and wait for the god to appear and give advice in a dream.[1314]

The cure was sought in the dream process to make contact with the healer within. "In sleep the patient withdraws from his fellow men and even from his physician and surrenders to a process at work within him."[1315] Healing comes from god. Every organism is self-healing. The psyche as well as the body contains within itself the "divine spark" (Eckhart). Just as the ancient seeking help at the Asklepion paid attention to dreams, a modern, while likewise so doing, might also do such other activities that place one in contact with the inner self such as journaling, dream group processing, attending to fears and fantasies and intuitions, inspired thoughts, and meditations.

The Asklepion had a spring. The requisite site spring and free-flowing fountains were probably regarded by the Greeks as a kind of communication with the depths of the earth.[1316] Those admitted into the Asklepion had to undergo ritual purifications in water. Water has a feminine significance, being a container of life: life begins in the waters of the ocean.

The importance of water in Asclepius' cult suggests that healing is not possible without some kind of contact with the inner waters of the soul, the water that Jesus says becomes a spring welling up to eternal life (John 4:14).[1317]

In addition to the well was the snake, probably a colubar longissimus, a tree snake which in southern climates attains a length of over six feet.[1318] Just as snakes shed their skin in a rejuvenating manner, the patient shed his or her problems, became free from illness, and put on a new man or woman. Serpents were regarded as a symbol of the renewal of life by the ancients. The snake symbol of Asclepius is of a single snake entwined about a staff, symbolizing rebirth and transcendence, not the Caduces which is of two snakes in sexual union on a winged staff, symbolizing Hermes.[1319] In the Caduces, the source of the healing of the wound caused by the serpent is the serpent.[1320]

Priests at the Asklepion excluded women in labor since pregnancy was not regarded as an ailment in need of a cure. Neither were the dying taken into the sanctuary. he healing process was, therefore, concerned neither with birth nor resurrection, but with the transitional phase between above/below, night/day, death/life.[1321] The snake (and also the dog) "..symbolize life at the threshold of death, a hidden force, dark and cold, but at the same time warm and radiant, that stirs beneath the surface of the waking world and accomplishes the miracle of cure."[1322]

The snake used by Asclepius was a symbol for becoming young after sickness, for putting off old age.[1323] Teilard defines the symbol of the snake as An animal endowed with magnetic force. Because it sheds its skin, it symbolizes resurrection. Because of its sinuous movement (and also because its coils are capable of strangling) it signifies strength. Because of its viciousness, it represents the evil side of nature.[1324]

In fact, the snake is neither entirely positive (new life, resurrection, life, strength) nor evil (temptation, cunning, chthonic and connected to the darker aspects of reality); its venom both kills and heals. It probably symbolizes energy itself, force pure and simple, and is therefore, ultimately, ambivalent.[1325]

In Biblical times, the snake (שָׂרָף, "Seraph") has been found in archeological digs at Megiddo, Gezer, in the "holy of holies" of the area of the temple at Hazor, and at Shechem from the late Bronze Age. Its association with other symbols suggests it had the cultic significance of "fertility and return of life."[1326] Numbers, chapter 21, recounts the episode of Moses lifting up a bronze serpent to cure those who were punished by being bit by serpents. The "burning snakes" (נְחָשִׁים שְׂרָפִים , so called because their burning bits caused intense inflammation, was symbolized by a bronze serpent probably "..because the color of

---

[1314] Manjo, the Healing Hand, p. 201.
[1315] Kerenyi, Asclepius, p. 35.
[1316] Ibid., p. 27.
[1317] Sanford, Healing, p. 51.
[1318] Ibid., p. 14.
[1319] Grossbeck, "Archetypal Image," p. 125. Note: the symbol is one of equilibrium of forces, good balanced by evil, health by sickness; it is an image of cure effected by what caused the ailment.
[1320] Cirlot, dictionary, p. 289.
[1321] Kerenyi, Asclepius, pp. 31, 32.
[1322] Ibid., p. 34.
[1323] Rowland, Animals, p. 142.
[1324] Cirlot, Dictionary, p. 287.
[1325] Ibid., p. 285.
[1326] Jones, "The Bronze Serpent," pp. 245-246.

this metal, when the sun was shining upon it, was most like the appearance of the fiery serpents.."[1327] It became a symbol of divine forgiveness.[1328]

The incident is again an instance of the Delphi Oracle: "He who wounds also heals" (ὁ τρώσας καὶ ἰάσεται) as "serpent-as-serpent-of-punishment" is juxtaposed with "serpent-as-agent-of-life." Of course, it is not the serpent which gives life or killing; it is the Lord.[1329] The book of Wisdom explains the bronze serpent as a σύμβολόν σωτηρίας ("symbol of salvation"): "he that turned towards it was not saved because of that which was beheld, but because of thee, the Savior of all."[1330] Probably because of the temptation to venerate Moses' Bronze Serpent itself, King Hezekiah had it destroyed.[1331] This incident is later used by the Evangelist John[1332] to refer to the healing brought by Jesus being "lifted up" (ὑποῦν), exalted, by being raised on a cross. Bernhard comments: "Those who looked in faith upon the brazen serpent uplifted before them were delivered from death by poison; those who look in faith upon the Crucified, lifted up on the Cross, shall be delivered from the death of sin."[1333] Jesus becomes the new serpent who has vanquished the old.[1334] The point is communal restoration: the uplifted Jesus gathers to God those who were His children.[1335]

In addition to the use of the symbol of the snake, other Christian parallels are apparent. Just as every healing event was regarded as an epiphany of Asclepius,[1336] so Jesus' healing miracles are an epiphany of His divinity and a foretaste of His ultimate healing work, that in God's presence, life, not sickness, decay, and death, are operative and normal. Just as the importance of the profession of physicians was a familial relationship to Asclepius who drew them together, rather than on technical skills acquired (personal relationship vice technique)–the physicians bound to consider their teacher as their father and the teacher's sons as brothers,[1337] so also the Christian community! A glaring difference is that with Asclepius only man's wounds are healed, not man himself.[1338] Fulfillment is only in Christ.

Even today there are those who are destined for illness so that through their illness and recovery they might serve to heal others, both individually and society as a whole. It is only through illness that the archetypal "wounded healer" is activated in a human being.[1339] Many today have "Chironian wounds" (wounds which do not heal), e.g., alcoholics, victims of psychic trauma (e.g., rape, incest, concentration camp, combat, emergency room technicians, policemen, etc.), an awareness that one is a "sinner in need of God's constant mercy, forgiveness, and love" and for these, the constant activation of that which heals can become a well from which one draws and which constantly quenches every thirst. Attempts to cover it over and smother it by medication (as in modern psychiatry) kill the soul of man which is seeking transformation and unfolding and advancement. Kierkegaard prophetically wrote over a hundred years ago:

> ..the wound is kept open in order that the Eternal may heal it. If the wound rows together .. the eternity cannot heal, then temporal existence has in truth bungled the illness.[1340]

SUFFERING SERVANT

How would God heal and restore? That was the question facing Israel in exile in Babylon. Isaiah regarded Cyrus as God's anointed, arising to capture Babylon and build a highway in the desert for the glorious return of Israel. Cyrus did capture Babylon and did allow the Jews to return, but Isaiah's hopes were dashed: instead of honoring the God of Israel, Cyrus honored Marduk, and instead of a magnificent pageant on a highway, only a few Jews trickled back, sporadically. They just barely

---

[1327] Keil and Delitzsch, The Pentateuch, p. 139.
[1328] Kjeseth, "Nehushtan," p. 281.
[1329] Cf. Job 5.18: "or he who wounds is he who soothes the sore, and the hand that hurts is the hand that heals." (said of Yahweh). He who hurts and he who heals can certainly refer to one's unconscious which wounds us as we are taken over by a figure or content of the unconscious resulting in a darkening of the conscious, being overwhelmed by an invasion from the unconscious. Yet, the unconscious also is a source of healing (the "inner healer") and of creative new possibilities of life.
[1330] Wis. 16. 6, 7.
[1331] 2 Kg 18.1ff.
[1332] Jn 3.14.
[1333] Bernhard, John (ICC), p. 113.
[1334] Rowland, Animals, p. 145, alluding to the Epistle of Barnabas 12.7 and St. Augustine.
[1335] Barrett, John, p. 178.
[1336] Kerenyi, Asclepius, p. 26.
[1337] Ibid., p. 6.
[1338] Ibid., p. 77.
[1339] Sanford, Healing, p. 47.
[1340] Kierkegaard, Purity of Heart, p. 149.

made it. Isaiah had misconstrued what would happen, but did not abandon the realization that the Lord had a mission, a destiny for Israel

After some years of puzzlement and disillusionment, he began to understand what God was doing–how God was to execute His healing and restoration: the picture of majesty, pomp, glory, and might of Cyrus was not the way back to Jerusalem (i.e., to the destination of life); the way was to be through the role of being a servant. The image of glory was out of concern for themselves; the image of suffering servant was concern for others–a wider healing and restoration.

It is significant to note that the Servant was chosen, elected; the servant did not decide this would be a good action.[1341] Secondly, the work of the Servant is to be a covenant[1342] in which he is sacrificed.[1343] Third, the suffering is not accidental; it doesn't just happen. It is willed by God, part of His plan. Finally, the purpose is universal: what the Servant does is not for himself, but for all people, for their healing. The work of healing is via suffering and death, not glory.[1344]

The suffering of Israel is not over after its own sins have been punished; the punishment continues; they are to pay the penalty for the sins of others.

> The nation will not be done with toil and suffering even when it has atoned for its own grievous sin, but will continue to be afflicted, this time not for its own sake but for the sake of others. Understanding at last of Yahwe's plan for the Gentiles, it will voluntarily take upon itself the punishment which they have merited.[1345]

The woes of Israel are not disciplinary; they are meant to heal the foreign peoples, those who are not the people of God.[1346] The Servant is poignantly portrayed in Isa. 52.13 - 53.12: people were appalled at his appearance. Luther notes: "Many are offended at Him. The Hebrew שָׁמַם means to be startled, disturbed. The word describes the posture of one about to vomit and of one full of revulsion, because His appearance will be so vile that many will be sick and offended."[1347] His disfigurement refers to body as well as the spirit and emotions.[1348] That this is not a momentary situation but rather a condition characterizing most of his life is obvious from 53.2 describing his growth: nothing was attractive, nothing attracted people to him. He was insignificant. Westermann emphasizes that this is descriptive of an entire life span.[1349] In fact, he becomes "despised and rejected" (חָדַל): "one for whom there is no concern whatever, one from whom all turn away,"[1350] or as Delitzsch comments: ".. one in want of men of rank, i.e., finding no sympathy from such men. The chief men of His nation who towered above the multitude, the great men of this world, withdrew their hands from Him, drew back from Him: He had none of the men of any distinction at His side."[1351] He is a man of sorrow (אִשׁ מַכְאֹבוֹת): "..a man of sorrow of heart in all its forms, i.e., a man whose chief distinction was, that His life was one of constant painful endurance."[1352] He is "acquainted with grief." "The servant is pictured as a lonely, broken, helpless creature, so encompassed by misfortunes that he is a horror to his neighbors."[1353]

All of this is on account of sin and for the sake of others: "..he took up our infirmities and carried our sorrows."[1354] "He was pierced for our transgressions."[1355] "Pierced" referring to a person mortally wounded but not yet dead,[1356] a heart wounded to death;[1357]the passives here denote a calamity inflicted by violence from without.[1358] He was assigned a grave with the wicked:[1359] "On account of his sufferings he was deemed to be a sinner, and therefore classed with them."[1360]

[1341] Isa 42.1, 49.1.
[1342] Isa 42.6.
[1343] Isa 53.10.
[1344] Lecture by Dr. Philip Hefner, 17 Aug 1982, Naval Training Center, Great lakes, Illinois.
[1345] Torrey, Second Isaiah, p. 410.
[1346] Ibid., p. 412.
[1347] Luther, Isaiah 40-66, p. 216.
[1348] Pieper, Isaiah, p. 432.
[1349] Westermann, Isaiah 40-66, p. 261.
[1350] Luther, Isaiah 40-66, p. 220.
[1351] Delitzsch, Isaiah, p. 314.
[1352] Ibid.
[1353] Smart, Second Isaiah, p. 208.
[1354] Isa 53.4.
[1355] Isa 53.5.
[1356] Jer 51.52, Ps 69.27.
[1357] Ps 109.22.
[1358] Delitzsch, Isaiah, p. 318.
[1359] Isa 53.9.
[1360] Slotki, Isaiah, p. 263.

Who is this Suffering Servant? The passages have been applied to Christ, to Israel itself, to a person in Israel, any of which can be said to endure suffering, but not just any suffering; it is suffering in faithfulness to God, suffering at the hands of one's fellowman. James Smart provides an interesting application: it may be Christ, Israel, a contemporary of the prophet, or anyone:

> The prophet concentrates into a single portrait the experiences of all who in past, present, and future give themselves to that task. Abraham, Elijah, Jeremiah, and a host of others are included. But there are also servants in the present who remain faithful in the face of scorn and persecution.[1361]

One of the stories to emerge out of WW II was of a young soldier calling home, telling his parents he would soon be with them. However, he said, he also had a friend who was injured, and he wanted to bring him also. His parents, overjoyed to hear his voice said there'd be no problem, to bring his friend along. The young soldier continued, stating his friend was really hurt; he had lost a leg. The parents interrupted and said, "That's OK; we'll be able to adjust to that." Then he said, "But he's also blind and has some very unsightly facial wounds." His parents then said, "Well, don't you think he could be better cared for in places for people like him? He probably wouldn't be happy with us." The parents then heard the phone "click." The "friend" was the son himself.

The Vietnam veteran's return was frequently met with revulsion at his appearance. He was jeered, spat upon, shouted at, beat up, received thrown eggs, even shot at. He is the poor one, the one who bore all the horrors of war, acquainted with grief, and many were aghast at his appearance.

Can all of this be considered in relationship to healing? Perhaps the recognition of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) by the American Psychiatric Association in 1980 has opened the door for appropriate treatment and diagnosis for others with PTSD such as rape victims, victims of natural and man-made disasters, policemen, emergency-room technicians, etc. Perhaps people may look at the Vietnam veteran and realize that there is a price to war, that war is very costly in human terms, that war is not "normal behavior" as so the senior psychiatrist at the Naval Hospital, Great lakes, Il, asserted. Perhaps the Vietnam veteran himself has been the cause of the healing of the division of the American society over the Vietnam War, by now focusing on the persons involved.

A fragment of a prayer:

> We, who have been in continuous, concentrated combat, are indeed those described by your prophet Isaiah.
> He was despised and rejected by men, a man of sorrows, and familiar with suffering.
> Like one from whom men hide their faces
> He was despised, and we esteemed him not...
> We considered him stricken by God
> He was pierced for our transgressions,
> He was crushed for our iniquities. (Isa 53)
> Perhaps, we may therefore be the reminder to the rest of our society– > that war may not be waged with impunity;
> that there is a cost–to those who still live– > and thereby help heal our broken society, that by our wounds all may be healed. They will look at us and think again....

HESCHEL AND THE PROPHET

Abraham Heschel's monumental and life-transforming work, The Prophets, portrays the Old Testament prophet as a mediator-person who takes the part of the people in the presence of God and the part of God in the presence of the people.[1362] The prophet is the one who has been turned into another man by the spirit of God,[1363] a person who is not blessed with a skill, technique, but a gift of being guided and moved. The prophet's mediation is on the feeling-level: his fundamental experience is fellowship with the feelings of God, a sympathy with the divine pathos.[1364] For this reason, the prophet does not speak a reminiscence, a report, an argument, or a proof: he reveals God's feelings to the people: "..in his words, the invisible God becomes audible."[1365] What is conveyed is not an idea of goodness or a theory of God. They do not

---

[1361] Smart, Old Testament in Dialogue, p. 124.
[1362] Heschel, The Prophets, p. 24.
[1363] I Sam 10.6.
[1364] Heschel, The Prophets, p. 26.
[1365] Ibid., p. 22.

speak ideas about God as though God were distant; they proclaim God's intimate relatedness to people.[1366] Knowledge of God is not a matter of logic or analysis, but of living together.[1367] The emphasis is on God's passionate summons of healing inter-personal relationships.[1368] The prophet, resonating and declaring God's feelings, becomes intensely intolerant of wrongs and injustices done to others since he also internalizes the feelings of the people–their sufferings, their pain. For example, Amos condemns the rich who revel in luxuries for not being pained or grieved over the afflictions of the people.[1369] As Heschel writes, "Biblical religion is not what man does with his solitariness, but rather what man does with God's concern for all men."[1370] The essential message of the prophet, then, is not foreknowledge and the future, but insight into the present care and feelings of God for His people. God is alive in His concern for life, for man, for right-relationships (i.e., "righteousness").[1371]

The prophet is attuned to God, not in a momentary manner, but as a whole life. The prophet is guided not "..by what he feels, but rather by what God feels."[1372] "To be a prophet means to identify one's concern with the concern of God."[1373]

> The prophet is stirred by an intimate concern for the divine concern ... it is no mere listening to, and conveying of, a divine message which distinguishes his personal life. The prophet not only hears and apprehends the divine pathos; he is convulsed by it to the depths of his soul.[1374]

This is a matter of action, not mere feelings. The resultant action of the introjected pathos of God is not a matter of delight or ecstasy, but rather a challenge, a commitment, a state of tension, consternation, and dismay.[1375]

While the prophet is thus torn apart by the passionate concern and care of God for His people on the one hand, he is also crushed by the pains of the people of which he is a part since he regards these, not As an affair outside him, but as something also internalized in his soul:

> The prophet is a person who suffers the harm done to others. Wherever a crime is committed, it is as if the prophet were the victim and the prey ... All prophecy is one great exclamation; God is not indifferent to evil! He is always concerned. he is personally affected by what man does to man. He is a God of pathos.[1376]

The prophets today, and they still =proclaim God's message even if they are unaware of being His instrument!–are those who keep reminding people of what is real, that there are hurts, pains, injustices. There is probably no one more concerned that justice simply be than the Vietnam veteran! He may have to have a shoot-out, or do something else very dramatic, as much as a Jeremiah acting out his message. He becomes the instrument whereby people must acknowledge there are problems that require healing. The prophet is the one who can now "see" reality in the midst of so much unreality, the one who is always critical of complacency, anguished when those around him become so captivated by the non-essentials when there are those around him with tears or painful souls. The prophet may be the one who is gloomy and depressed: something must die! What? The veteran is saying, "society's falseness must die!"

TRANSFERENCE

C. G. Jung notes that what heals a person is not advice, books, techniques, since not everyone can be placed similarly as an instance of a category; each person is unique and must be approached that way:

> What sets one man free is another man's prison ... there are no universally valid recipes and rules. There are only individual cases with the most heterogeneous needs and demands–as heterogeneous that we can virtually never know in advance what course a given case will take, for which reason it is better for the doctor to abandon all preconceived opinions.[1377]

How then can healing occur? By the person of the therapist, Jung answers. it is through mutual influence involving the whole personality of the doctor as well as that of the patient, their conscious and non-conscious encounter, that healing

---

[1366] Ibid., pp. 219, 221.
[1367] Ibid., p. 223.
[1368] Ibid., pp. 224, 198.
[1369] Amos 6.6.
[1370] Heschel, The Prophets, p. 230.
[1371] Ibid., p. 277.
[1372] Ibid., p. 314.
[1373] Ibid., p. 309.
[1374] Ibid., p. 308.
[1375] Ibid., p. 309.
[1376] Ibid., p. 284.
[1377] Jung, Problems of Modern Psychotherapy, Para 163.

occurs. What the doctor says and thinks, while an important factor, is infinitely out-weighed in significance by the personalities of both in the healing process. Healing only occurs within interpersonal relationships:

> A general and merely academic 'insight into one's mistakes' is ineffectual, for then the mistakes are not really seen at all, only the idea of them. But they show up acutely when a human relationship brings them o the fore and when they are noticed by the other person as well as by oneself. Then and then only can they really be felt and their true nature recognized. Similarly, confessions made to one's secret self generally have little or no effect, whereas confessions made to another are much more promising.[1378]

The mechanism by which the healing occurs is "transference," the projection of unconscious contents upon the concrete person of the doctor, who somehow mirrors, to the patient, that which has been repressed into the unconscious: the doctor takes the place of the father, the brother, even the mother: ".. the neurotic maladjustment of the patient is now transferred to him."[1379] The doctor becomes infected by the psyche of the patient:

> The doctor, by voluntarily and consciously taking over the psychic sufferings of the patient, exposes himself to the overpowering contents of the unconscious and hence also to their inductive action. The case begins to 'fascinate' him ... in reality these personal feelings, if they exist at all in any decisive degree, are governed by those same unconscious contents which have become activated. An unconscious tie is established .. The patient, by bringing unconscious content to bear upon the doctor, constellates the corresponding unconscious materiel in him, owing to the inductive effect which always emanates from projections in greater or lesser degree. Doctor and patient thus find themselves in a relationship founded on mutual unconsciousness.[1380]

This is unavoidable, Jung notes; even experienced therapists will discover again and again being caught up in a bond. This makes each new case that requires thorough treatment, "pioneer work," so that every trace of routine is ineffective.[1381]

The variety of therapists and patients is such that not every person is suitable as a therapist; not everyone can absorb the pain or the problem:

> Experience shows that the carrier of the projection is not just any object but it always one that proves adequate to the nature of the content projected–that is to say, it must offer the content a 'hook' to hang on.[1382]

If the therapist avoids this painful process, he cannot be said to be a 'wounded healer.'[1383] In order for the healing process to become activated, the therapist must risk psychic infection. Grossbeck mentions a case published by Robert Lindner of an atomic physicist suffering serious delusions:

> Treatment was ineffective until Lindner finally 'entered into' the delusional system of the patient. Lindner himself developed alarming symptoms, which in time freed the patient who was able to stand off from his system and the illness disappeared .. by diverting the effects from the patient to himself.[1384]

The therapist goes all the way–to the cross–bearing the burdens of his brother. V. Weizacker writes:

Only when the doctor has been deeply touched by the illness, infected by it, excited, frightened, shaken, only when it has been transferred to him, continues in him and is referred to himself by his own consciousness–only then and to that extent can he deal with it successfully.[1385]

The encounter by the doctor and patient is like the mixture of two chemical substances, Jung notes; a third substance, a mixtum compositum, is formed of the doctor's own mental health and the patient's maladjustment. Both are transformed. In Freudian technique, the doctor attempts to ward off transference as much as possible. Yet, Jung notes, this may be the very key that unlocks healing. It is inevitable that the doctor should be influenced to a certain extent and even that his own health should suffer as he quite literally takes over the sufferings of his patient and shares them with him.[1386] If the therapist does not feel his way into a situation, if he only approaches I from the outside, it is too easy to dismiss it with a light word or to push it to the wrong direction.[1387]

> In any effective psychological treatment the doctor is bound to influence the patient; but this influence can only take place if the patient has a reciprocal influence on the doctor. You can exert no influence if you are not

---

[1378] Jung, Transference, Para 503.
[1379] Ibid., Para 357.
[1380] Ibid, Para 364.
[1381] Ibid., Para 367.
[1382] Ibid., Para 499.
[1383] Grossbeck, "Archetypal Image," p. 133.
[1384] Ibid., pp. 132=133.
[1385] Quoted in Grossbeck, "Archetypal Image," p. 133.
[1386] Jung, transference, Para 358.
[1387] Ibid., Para 363.

susceptible to influence. It is futile for the doctor to shield himself from the influence of the patient and to surround himself with a smoke-screen of fatherly and professional authority. By so doing he only denies himself the use of a highly important organ of information.[1388]

And,

..the doctor is as much 'in the analysis' as the patient. He is equally a part of the psychic process of treatment and therefore equally exposed to the transforming influences. indeed, to the extent that the doctor shows himself impervious to this influence, he forfeits influence over the patient.[1389]

The result may be changes in the doctor's unconscious, perhaps even psychic injuries such as depressions, anxiety, schizoid withdrawal, invasions of unconscious figures and impulses. Both doctor and patient resonate psychologically to each other, run on parallel lines.[1390] Jung notes that the effect of this on the doctor can be far-reaching:

I know of cases where, in dealing with borderline schizophrenics, short psychotic intervals were actually 'taken over,' and during these periods it happened that the patients were feeling more than ordinarily well ... certain psychic disturbances can be extremely infectious if the doctor himself has a latent predisposition in that direction.[1391]

Thus, the problem is that if the doctor has not himself been analyzed, he may become "hooked" into a situation that can easily destroy him: "..contents are often activated in the doctor which might normally remain latent."[1392] This can result in possession by the unconscious contents, which "..means being torn apart into many people and things, a disiunctio. that is why, according to Origen, the aim of the Christian is to become an inwardly united human being."[1393]

The therapist doctor must have complied with the demands he makes on the patient. It is a matter of who one is, not what one knows or says. Jung writes:

..be the man through whom you wish to influence others. Mere talk has always been counted hollow, and there is no trick, however artificial, by which this simple truth can be evaded in the long run. The fact of being convinced and not the thing we are convinced of–that is what has always, and at all times, worked.[1394]

Or,

..who can educate others if he is himself uneducated? Who can enlighten others if he is still ini the dark about himself? And who can purify others if himself impure.[1395]

Or,

The doctor can no longer evade his own difficulty by treating the difficulties of others: the man who suffers from a running abscess is not fit to perform a surgical operation.[1396]

Once the transference process occurs, the healing process beings as the doctor's own healing process becomes activated, much like the mobilization of the body's immune system or anti-bodies and white blood cells is activated upon invasion by infection. Grossbeck quotes Adler:

To be wounded means also to have the healing power activated in us; or might we possibly say that without being wounded one would never meet just this healing power? Might we even go as far as to say that the very purpose of the wound is to make us aware of the healing power in us?[1397]

As the illness is taken in and suffered by the doctor, a cure is sought: "..analyzing the inner psychological constellations created by this illness; scrutinizing dreams, associations, and other unconscious material relevant to the suffering; looking for symbols that emerge from the unconscious and represent the healing factor at work; active imagination. The unconscious responds to the healer's suffering, and the analyst applies the curative symbols to the wound, thereby healing the illness. Out of a personal need for healing, then, the analyst has been forced to develop further by dealing with the effects created by the analysand's illness."[1398] If some wounds remain incurable enough to be experienced again and again, they may continually be transcended and counterbalanced by new sources of strength and health. This may be the case with the recovering

---

[1388] Jung, Problems of Modern Psychotherapy, Para 163.
[1389] Ibid., Para 166.
[1390] Stein, "Power..," p. 77.
[1391] Jung, Transference, Para 258 footnote 17.
[1392] Ibid., Para 365.
[1393] Ibid., Para 397.
[1394] Jung, Problems of Modern Psychotherapy, Para 167.
[1395] Ibid., Para 169.
[1396] Ibid., Para 169.
[1397] Quoted in Grossbeck, "Archetypal Image," p. 138.
[1398] Stein, "Power," pp. 77-78.

alcoholic who becomes a source of strength to other alcoholics–and all others of similar patterns as well: recovering alcoholics make excellent counselors because of their pain. This may also apply to those who know themselves to be sinners in need of God's grace. Only those in need of God's love and grace experience it; those who have found what they need can then share the riches they have received. Luther is said to have said on his deathbed: "Ultimately, we are all only hungry beggars who feed each other." Newman notes that the creative person is always close to the abyss of sickness where wounds remain open. One's very suffering is the source of a curative process, and for this reason, he writes, "..only a wounded man can be a healer, a physician."[1399] In some instances, the healer actually may inflict pain, so that a higher healing may occur. As mixed ingredients only become bread in the oven's heat transformation, so also the therapist "raises the heat," the pain, for transformative healing to occur.

The next step is to give the medicine to the patient.

For Jung, the process of transformation and change is primarily in the unconscious. For any healing to occur, the patient's own "inner healer" must be activated. The curing process is by "influence," a process of transference. The doctor gives not only good advice, healing rituals, or even acutely empathic interpretations; he influences unconsciously, Jung calls this "participation mystique:" the analyst's self-healing process triggers a parallel healing process in the patient's psyche.

Guggenbühl-Craig writes of the suggestion process via fantasy. In a manner similar to Don Quixote, the relationship involves something creative:

> The human psyche is always full of new possibilities. It is constantly re-creating itself .. and is perpetually being re-created ... when we meet someone, it is .. uncreative to see him as a snapshot, a fixed image. To encounter a person creatively means to weave fantasies around him ... Such creative fantasies are often quite far removed from so-called reality; they are as unreal, and as true, as fairy tales and myths. They use imaginative images to grasp the nature of the other persons ... Even if they are not expressed, fantasies also influence the other person, awakening new living potential in him.[1400]

This is not transference in which we project images, problems, or possibilities related to ourselves on others; this is, rather, his life potential. "Such creative fantasies are of the greatest importance in every human relationship. One of the tragedies of orphans is that no one weaves such fantasies around them."[1401]

One of the great dangers of this entire process is that of power: as the bi-polar archetype of the "wounded healer" is activated, the doctor may retreat into a position of power–assuming himself to be always the one who is well, never ill–and the patient into the position of weakness–always ill, never well. Guggenbühl-Craig writes that those in the helping professions can do the greatest damage to those who are ill by their desire to be helpful! To the best of his knowledge and ability, he wants selflessly to help one who suffers. This conscious desire, however, activates the opposite in his unconscious: the doctor then works not for his patients, but for himself.[1402]

The "healer-patient" archetype is bi-polar; the healer and the patient are two aspects of the same process. When a person becomes sick, the healer-patient process if activated: the sick person seeks an external healer because the "inner healer," apart from whom no real cure is possible, is not consciously realized by the patient, but is "seen" or "projected" unto an external healer, the therapist. "It is the physician within the patient himself and its healing action is as great as that of the doctor who appears on the scene externally. Neither wounds nor diseases can heal without the curative action of the inner healer."[1403] ".. no physician can be effective without the inner doctor."[1404]

It is here that the danger arises: some doctors repress their illness. They may feel that weakness, illness, and wounds have nothing to do with them, that he is the strong healer and that his poor patients live in a different world. This is because the same "wounded healer" archetype is also activated in the physician, but the physician is also, like the sick person, unconscious, and projects–"sees"–his (the therapist's) sickness into the sick person! This may include unresolved illnesses both psychic and somatic.[1405] It is all too easy for the doctor to develop "..into a physician without wounds and [who, therefore] can no longer constellate the healing factor in his patients."[1406] Healing only occurs as both the doctor and patient

---

[1399] Quoted in Grossbecdk, "Archetypal Image," p. 142., from E. Newmann, Art and the Creative Unconscious, Bollingen Series 61.
[1400] Guggenbühl-Craig, Power, p. 45.
[1401] Ibid., pp. 46, 47.
[1402] Ibid., p. 36.
[1403] Ibid., p. 90.
[1404] Ibid., p. 91.
[1405] Grossbeck and Taylor, "The Psychiatrist," p. 135.
[1406] Guggenbühl-Craig, Power, p. 92.

experience each other as "same," not "different" or "opposite."[1407] "The image of the wounded healer .. makes of the doctor the patient's brother rather than his master."[1408] The key is empathic identification. Grossbeck writes:

> Hitherto I had believed that, as taught in medical school and psychiatric residency, one must always show forth strength and hide all weaknesses in order to be the best kind of physician. Through many of the experiences, dreams, and work with patients, it became apparent that in analytical work one cannot hide wounds or weaknesses; one in fact must confront and make them conscious if he is ever to have the hope of becoming a genuine wounded healer .. attempts to hide or disavow one's weaknesses may result in disaster and failure.[1409]

Splitting the "wounded healer" archetype is damaging for both patient and doctor. The sick person becomes perennially sick since his inner healing process is not activated. The physician , on the other hand, becomes a self-important, narrow-minded person blind to his own psychological development. Only by sensitivity to his own pain and sickness can the doctor constellate the inner healer in the patient:

> The physician must be in touch again and again with his own wounds, or 'inner patient,' so that the patient can connect with his own healing powers, or 'inner physician,' to effect the cure. In essence, both participants must experience the health-sickness polarity if the patient is to be freed.[1410]

And,

> all his knowledge and technique, in the final analysis he must always strive to constellate the healing factor in the patient. Without this he can accomplish nothing.[1411]

Guggenbühl-Craig recommends that the only way the doctor can avoid the power-play of remaining "well" and keeping the patient "sick" is to do what people not schooled in analysis do to develop: intensive inter-personal relations, friends who touch him deeply, repeatedly throw him off balance, stimulate him, and show him time and again who he is, how weak and pompous, vain and narrow. This is not a matter of gathering a circle of disciples and basking in their adulation, nor is it a matter of transforming relationships into analytical relationships.[1412]

Jesus Christ is the "wounded healer," par excellance:

> Jesus Christ was wounded and bore the sins of man. He came to heal the world of sin and death, yet he bore all sins and had to die. He refused ever to make use of power, acknowledging only God his father as powerful. Thus he is the wounded healer in the highest sense.[1413]

THEOLOGY OF THE CROSS

> In his own person he carried our sins to the gibbet, so that we might cease to live for sin and begin to live for righteousness. By his wounds you have been healed.[1414]

Christ completely identifies with us in the Incarnation, frees us from the "dis-ease" of sin by His suffering and death in the Crucifixion, and guarantees victory and new life in the Resurrection.

His identification is especially emphasized in the book of Hebrews: ".. he had to be made like his brethren in every respect ... for because he himself has suffered and been tempted, he is able to help those who are tempted;"[1415] "For we have not a high priest who is unable to sympathize with our weaknesses, but one who in every respect has been tempted as we are;"[1416] "Although he was a Son, he learned obedience through what he suffered; and being made perfect he became the source of eternal salvation to all who obey him.."[1417] These passages reflect a very human Jesus, one who grows and develops,[1418] one who is perfected through suffering, one who can help those who suffer pains and hurts because He also has gone through them and been victorious.

> In every pang that wrings the heart,

[1407] Stein, "Power," p. 77.
[1408] Guggenbühl-Craig, Power, p. 97.
[1409] Grossbeck, "Archetypal Image," p. 143.
[1410] Grossbeck and Taylor, "The Psychiatrist," p. 136.
[1411] Guggenbühl-Craig, Power, p. 100.
[1412] Ibid., pp. 135, 136.
[1413] Ibid., p. 100.
[1414] 1 Pt. 2.24 NEB.
[1415] Heb 2.17.
[1416] Heb 4.15.
[1417] Heb 5.8.
[1418] Cf. Lk 2.52.

The man of sorrows has a part.
He sympathizes with our grief,
And to the sufferer sends relief. [Michael Bruce, "Where High the Heavenly Temple Stands," ca. 1764]

Paul notes that Jesus absorbed our sins: "Christ was innocent of sin, and yet for our sakes God made him one with the sinfulness of man.."[1419] and noting that Christ, by becoming a curse for us, has set us free from the curse that the Law brings.[1420] By His atonement on the Cross, Jesus Christ heals the disease of sin. Death becomes the gateway to life: "Unless a grain of wheat falls into the earth and dies, it remains alone; but if it dies, it bears much fruit."[1421] The new life is possible because He who descended from heaven is "lifted up" (exalted, glorified) by being placed on the Cross. "It is not by 'simple verbal testimony that Jesus will bring the truth home.' He must do it by costly action, the action of holy love."[1422]

Christians are members of Christ's body[1423] and therefore participate in His life as His "followers" (as opposed to mere "admirers")[1424] The implication is that although the atonement has been made and no further sacrifice is necessary to atone for sin, one nevertheless suffers by being a member of the Body of Christ: "..Christ suffered on your behalf, and thereby left you an example; it is for you to follow in his steps;[1425] "persecutions will come to all who want to live a godly life as Christians."[1426] Paul even writes: "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and in my flesh I complete what is lacking in Christ's afflictions for the sake of his body, that is, the church."[1427] This does not mean something is lacking in Christ's work; it simply reflects the pattern of the Christian life which is "Christ in you"–one's life is a living statement, a re-presentation, of the message, therefore, suffering and rejection. It is what one's life says. God is found on the Cross, in suffering and rejection. The implication is that if one wants to be near God or in His presence, one must be where He is: out seeking the lost, not with the 99 righteous ones, on the Crosses of life, not in comfort. Thus, the writer of Hebrews: "..Jesus also suffered outside the gate, to consecrate the people by his own blood. Let us then go to him outside the camp, bearing the stigma that he bore."[1428]

The Christian re-presents, i.e., makes present, Christ and His work, not by words, but by actions. One's very life becomes a "living letter" for all to read.[1429] Paul notes that He helps us in all our troubles so that we are able to help those who have all kinds of troubles, using the same help that we ourselves have received from God;[1430] we speak as Christ would have us speak;[1431] we declare His forgiveness: "If you forgive any man's sins, they stand forgiven."[1432] Just as Christ did not live for himself, neither do His followers: no one should look out for his own interests, but for the interests of others.[1433] Ultimate judgement is based on faith, which refers to relationship to Christ, so that the life of Christ continues to live as one gives the cup of water to the thirsty, food to the hungry, clothing to the naked, or fellowship and presence to those sick and imprisoned,[1434] and as one becomes sensitive to the needy Lazarus who only has crumbs to eat.[1435] These are social actions in the prophetic tradition proclaiming God's concern that people live with each other in a life-giving manner, not a matter of declaring in words one's faith. None of this is done self-consciously–"Lord, when did we.." or "when did we not.." Healing the broken person, reconciling the fragmented society, occurs because the Christian bears the presence of Christ who forgives, [1419] 2 Cor 5.21.

---

[1420] Gal 3.13.
[1421] Jn 12.24.
[1422] Miller, "John 3.1-21," p. 177.
[1423] 1 Cor 12.27.
[1424] Cf. Kierkegaard, training, pp. 227, 231, 234. "A follower is or strives to be what he admires; an admirer holds himself personally aloof, consciously or unconsciously, he does not discern that the object of his admiration makes a claim upon him to be or to strive to be the thing he admires." [p. 234].
[1425] 1 Pt 2.21.
[1426] 2 Tim 3.12.
[1427] Col 1.24.
[1428] Heb 13.12-13.
[1429] 2 Cor 3.2.
[1430] 2 Cor 1.4.
[1431] 2 Cor 12.19.
[1432] Jn 20.23.
[1433] 1 Cor 10.24.
[1434] Mt 25.31-46.
[1435] Lk 16.19-31.

heals, and blesses. Jesus declares, "He who receives you receives me."[1436] Bonhoeffer notes that Christ's fellow-workers are to meet those to whom they are sent "..as if they were Christ himself ... They are bearers of his presence."[1437]

Dietrich Bonhoeffer emphasizes "conformation" ethics, conformation to the image of Christ. Commenting on Romans 8.29, "Whom he foreknew, he also foreordained to be conformed to the image of his Son..," Bonhoeffer writes:

> Those who follow Christ are destined to bear his image .. Christ's followers always have his image before their eyes.. It penetrates into the depths of their being, fills them, and makes them more and more like their Master.[1438]

Elsewhere he writes that the Scriptures are not concerned with forming a new world by programs and plans. There is only one form which overcomes the world: the form of Christ. The form of Christ is not an application of Christian principles or Christ's teaching; it is a matter of being drawn into Christ's form. This is not an ideal to be worked-at, as we attempt to become "like Christ."

> To be conformed to the image of Christ is not an ideal to be striven after. It is not as though we had to imitate him as well as we could. We cannot transform ourselves into his image; it is rather the form of Christ which seeks to be formed in us (Gal 4.19), and to be manifested in us.[1439]

This is not a matter of cognitive knowledge, but of living, existential reality. The life of Christ continues in the lives of Christians: He is not dead! He lives! Thus Paul writes: "I live, and yet no longer I, but Christ lives in me,"[1440] and, "To me to live is Christ."[1441] Since Christ lives in and through us,

..we too can 'walk as he walked' (1 Jn 2.6), and 'do as he has done' (John 13.15). 'Love as he has loved' (Eph 5.2; John 13.34; 35.12), 'forgive as he forgave' (Col 3.13), 'have this mind which was also in Christ Jesus' (Phil 2.5), and therefore we are able to follow the example he has left us (1 Pet 2.21), lay down our lives for the brethren as he did (1 Jn 3.16).[1442]

Thus, to be transformed into His image[1443] means to be conformed to Him as Incarnate, Crucified, and Resurrected.[1444] Because Christ is incarnate, the world cannot so easily be disregarded: "There is no part of the world, be it ever so forlorn and ever so godless, which is not accepted by God and reconciled with God in Jesus Christ. Whoever sets eyes on the body of Jesus Christ in faith can never again speak of the world as though it were lost."[1445] The Church is not an assembly of believers; it is Christ Himself–His Body–who has taken form among men.[1446]

An application of this, as the Christological Hymn[1447] asserts, is that the form of a Christian's life, "Having the same mind as Christ," is to empty oneself, be humble, go to the cross, be obedient, be a servant. Von Loewenich writes:

> Christians must become like their Master in all things ... The Christian life is one of lowliness.., just as surely as Christ lived here on earth in the state of humiliation .. Christ has preceded us on the way which rejects all human greatness .. Forsakenness, impotence, and despair become our lot in this discipleship .. The Christian's glory consists exclusively in this weakness and lowliness.[1448]

Conformation to Christ implies taking up His Cross and following Him. In other words, the follower of Christ is conformed to His death;[1449] the Christian life is a life of crucifixion.[1450] This means not only suffering and rejection as such, but suffering and rejection for the sake of Christ.[1451] "Suffering and rejection sum up the whole cross of Jesus."[1452] Jesus did not merely suffer; had that been the case He might have had the sympathy of the world. But He is also rejected. Christ, living in His followers, implies that they, too, will share in this:

[1436] Mt 10.40-42.
[1437] Bonhoeffer, Cost of Discipleship, p. 245.
[1438] Ibid., p. 337.
[1439] Ibid., p. 341; Cf. Bonhoeffer, Ethics, p. 80.
[1440] Gal 2.20.
[1441] Phil 1.21.
[1442] Bonhoeffer, Cost of Discipleship, p. 344.
[1443] 2 Cor 3.18, Phil 3.10, Rom 8.29 & 12.2.
[1444] Bonhoeffer, Ethics, p. 81.
[1445] Ibid., p. 205.
[1446] Ibid., p. 83.
[1447] Phil 2.5-11.
[1448] Von Loewenich, Luther's, p. 118.
[1449] Phil 3.10, Rom 6.4f.
[1450] Gal 2.19; Bonhoeffer, Cost of Discipleship, p. 342.
[1451] Ibid., p. 98.
[1452] Ibid., p. 96.

> Just as Christ is Christ only in virtue of his suffering and rejection, so the disciple is a disciple only in so far as he shares his Lord's suffering and rejection and crucifixion. Discipleship means adherence to the person of Jesus.[1453]

Everyone has their cross and need not seek one! There is no need to pursue suffering deliberately! Suffering is a natural part of life: "The Christian life is a discipleship of suffering .. Christ's suffering is still repeated daily in our lives .. Therefore our sufferings are a work of the Holy Spirit .. God does not want self-chosen sufferings ... Sufferings are a sign of God's grace, proof that we are God's children."[1454]

Therefore Bonhoeffer can make the now-famous, startling statement: "When Christ calls a man, he bids him come and die."[1455] Die to what? Bonhoeffer answers that this varies from person to person. For the early disciples, it was leaving home and work to follow Him; for Luther, it was departing from the monastery. In all cases, it is death to the "old man," leaving the comfortable but slavishly imprisoning Egypt's of life.

While only the sufferings of Christ are a means of atonement, and there is nothing special in bearing our cross,[1456] such cross-bearing suffering simply shows us to be linked together with Christ.

This is primarily because the Christian becomes a "man for others," and bears the burdens of others (i.e., their sins and guilt). Bonhoeffer refers to this as "deputyship," and writes: "Jesus was not the individual, desiring to achieve a perfection of his own, but He lived only as the one who has taken up into Himself and who bears within Himself the selves of all men."[1457] As "Body of Christ" the Christian participates in Christ's life, bearing the sins of others and completing the wounds of Christ.[1458]

> While it is true that only the sufferings of Christ are a means of atonement, yet since he has suffered for and borne the sins of the whole world and shares with his disciples the fruits of his passion, the Christian also has to undergo temptation, he too has to bear the sins of others; he too must bear their shame and be driven like a scapegoat from the gate of the city ... He becomes the bearer of other's men's burdens--'Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ' (Gal 6.2). As Christ bears our burdens, so ought we to bear the burdens of our fellow-men ... My brother's burden which I must bear is not only his outward lot, his natural characteristics and gifts, but quite literally his sin.[1459]

Jesus, notes Bonhoeffer, was not involved with promulgating new ethical ideals or even with making Himself good.[1460] His concern is entirely with actions of love for real people and to accomplish this, He enters into the fellowship of guilt, taking the burdens of their guilt upon Himself. He is not the pious one who desires to be perfect at the expense of others, or to look down on mankind as the only guilt-free man while the rest of the world goes to ruin under the weight of its guilt. Writes Bonhoeffer:

> From His selfless love, from His freedom from sin, Jesus enters into the guilt of men and takes this guilt upon Himself.[1461]

This theology has ethical implication for the form of life of His followers:

> In this, Jesus Christ, who is guilty without sin, lies the origin of every action of responsible deputyship. If it is responsible action, if it is action which is concerned solely and entirely with the other man, if it arises from selfless love for the real man who is our brother, then, precisely because this is so, it cannot wish to shun the fellowship of human guilt. Jesus took upon Himself the guilt of all men, and for that reason every man who acts responsibly becomes guilty. If any man tries to escape guilt in responsibility .. he sets his own personal innocence above his responsibility for men, and he is blind to the more irredeemable guilt which he incurs precisely in this; he is blind also to the fact that real innocence shows itself precisely in a man's entering into the fellowship of guilt for the sake of other men.[1462]

What does this mean in practical, concrete life? Bonhoeffer writes that if the world despises someone, the Christian will love and serve him. If the world does violence to someone, the Christian is there to offer comfort. When the world dishonors

---

[1453] Ibid.
[1454] Von Loewenich, Luther's, pp. 118-119.
[1455] Bonhoeffer, Cost of Discipleship, p. 99.
[1456] Cf., Von Loewenich, Luther's, p. 120.
[1457] Bonhoeffer, Ethics p. 225.
[1458] Col 1.24.
[1459] Bonhoeffer, Cost of Discipleship, p. 100.
[1460] Mt 19.17.
[1461] Bonhoeffer, Ethics, p. 241.
[1462] Ibid., pp. 240-241.

and insults one, the Christian is the one who sacrifices his own honor to cover his brother's shame. Where the world seeks gain, the Christian will renounce it. Where the world oppresses, the Christian is the one to stoop down and raise up the oppressed.[1463] Commenting on the Beatitudes, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy," Bonhoeffer writes:

> These men without possessions or power, these strangers on earth, these sinners, these followers of Jesus, have in their life with him renounced their own dignity, for they are merciful. As if their own needs and their own distress were not enough, they take upon themselves the distress and humiliation and sin of others. They have an irresistible love for the down-trodden, the sick, the wretched, the wronged, the outcast, and all who are tortured with anxiety. They go out and seek all who are enmeshed in the toils of sin and guilt. No distress is too great, no sin too appalling for their pity. If any man falls into disgrace, the merciful will sacrifice their own honor to shield him, and take his shame upon themselves. They will be found consorting with publicans and sinners, careless of the shame they incur thereby. In order that they may be merciful they cast away .. their personal dignity and honor. For the only honor and dignity they know is their Lord's own mercy, to which alone they owe their very life.[1464]

Only a Christian can afford to give up his life, to sacrifice his own innocence in order to bear the sin and guilt of others. The reason is that holiness is never a personal accomplishment; it is always a matter of being in the presence of the one who alone is holy. While we are on earth, we are simul iustus et peccator. God works through people being priests to each other: "..the Christian is the man who no longer seeks his salvation, his deliverance, his justification in himself, but in Jesus Christ alone ... The Christian no longer lives of himself .. he lives wholly by God's Word pronounced upon him."[1465] Unlike the model of psychological transference, this Word can only come from the outside; it does not immanently repose in him: "In himself he is destitute and dead. Help must come from the outside, and it has come and comes daily and anew in the Word of Jesus Christ.."[1466] How does this word come to us? Only through others! It comes only through other people. "God has put this Word into the mouth of men in order that it may be communicated to other men. When one person is struck by the Word, he speaks it to others."[1467] This is the meaning of the "universal priesthood of all believers:" "..my brother is God's servant on my behalf, and I am the servant of God in his behalf."[1468] God's people "..have no word of God without the word of their fellowman."[1469]God's people "..receive grace and truth by the service of their brothers whom they serve."[1470]

In a real sense, Christians become "little Christs" to their neighbors; Luther writes: "You must take other man's want and infirmities to heart as if they were your own, and offer your means as if they were theirs, just as Christ does for you."[1471] The Christian becomes "a man for others:" (1) Christ is the measure and standard of our conduct (John 13.15, 34f.; 1 Jn 3.10); and (2) our conduct is that of a member of the Body of Christ in which each becomes a Christ to his neighbor (1 Cor 12.12, Rom 12.4f, Eph 4.4, and 12ff, Col. 3.15).

> Just as Christ was disposed toward us in living, dying, and rising for our salvation, so we must be disposed towards others, our neighbors .. as members of the body we act toward others as Christ acted for us .. As Christians we are to forget the self and take on our neighbor's sins, weaknesses, and foolishnesses as if they were our own, just as Christ took on our infirmities. We are to do this .. because to be a Christian means to be a member of the body of Christ, which is created by God to function in a certain way, viz., according to the pattern of action of its head and thus according to the inner essential meaning of the Gospel.[1472]

The inter-personal relations of Christians are to be marked by usefulness, helpfulness, expending oneself for the good of the other– "..to unthinking, spontaneous service of the other members,, not because they find anything in it for themselves .. but solely because God has determined that the church exist in this fashion.[1473]

The glory of the cross is that this healing activity can continue, that we are privileged to participate in healing activity by bearing one another's burdens, that Christ continues to live. It may be a cross–a cross indeed!–but it is the way of life to [1463] Bonhoeffer, Cost of Ciscipleship, p. 289.

---

[1464] Ibid., pp. 124-125.
[1465] Bonhoeffer, Life Together, pp. 21-22.
[1466] Ibid., p. 22.
[1467] Ibid.
[1468] Haroutunian, God With Us, p. 77.
[1469] Ibid., p. 79.
[1470] Ibid., p. 80.
[1471] Luther, WA II, 750, Sermon von dem Hochwürdigen Sakrament des heiligen wahren Leichnans Christi, 1519; Quoted in Bonhoeffer, Communion, p. 127.
[1472] Ziemke, Love for the Neighbor, p. 48.
[1473] Ibid., p. 63.

emerge, even a life itself: a suffering, full of pain and grief, but we are privileged to be a means to guarantee its perpetuation. This is the power of the Cross today, as it lives through the followers of Christ to transform lives, to heal and reconcile and make whole.

Henri Nouwen views both the Christian community in general and the Christian ministry in particular, as a sharing-in, identification-with, and dealing-with, the pains of people so healing may occur when both the Christian community as well as its members become "wounded healers."[1474]

Christian ministry identifies and articulates the hurts and pains of people, because of participation in the same reality. Christian ministry is characterized by compassion, an entering in, availability-to, presence-with, another person. It is authoritative and authentic only insofar as it identifies with people and their sufferings.

Unfortunately, most people are not healed because they do not face their issues. They repress; they do not know how to handle their experiences or even identify and articulate them. Running away from problems frequently occurs when people do not know they have resources with which to handle their issues.

The one who can heal is the one who can "see" the issues, face them, and not be crushed. The Christian leader becomes oine who "..can articulate the difficult, painful parts of experience; show that he is still all right.."[1475] Thus, alcoholics frequently are helpful to other alcoholics because they "see through" all the denials and attempted cover-ups, unmask and identify the issue, label it, and confront it. Nouwen writes of people with problems facing such a leader:

> If you have the courage to listen to us and hear our pain and struggles without having solutions, if you are really willing to feel these things–then we are also free to feel our own struggles and we don't hve to run away from them.[1476]

A Christian community, as a whole, operates under the same principle. It is a setting within which there is sufficient support–a safety net–so that people can be vulnerable enough to touch their pain and own it; it is a "safe place" within which healing transformation occurs:

> ...the church .. is called to create a space where we are free to face the real struggle, where we are free to face our true pain, where we are free .. to realize how sinful we are, and therefore a place where we can discover the need for God's grace and mercy .. a place where we feel a certain trust, a certain safety and a certain protection, but a protection not to help us avoid problems but to face them, to deal with them and to look at them.[1477]

The Christian healer is one who identifies with people, the one who has learned to hear the struggles of his community in his own heart and feel their pain. The healer/leader is the one who is with his people in such a way that they can say, "You are with us." People do not look for answers in sermons or conversations; they become excited when the leader is able to touch their reality.[1478] Nouwen writes:

> ..the minister is called to recognize the sufferings of his time in his own heart and make that recognition the starting point of his service .. his service will not be perceived as authentic unless it comes from a heart wounded by the suffering about which he speaks.[1479]

The opposite is usually, unfortunately, what people encounter:

> If there is any posture that disturbs a suffering man or woman, it is aloofness. The tragedy of Christian ministry is that many who are in great need, many who seek an attentive ear, a word of support, a forgiving embrace, a firm hand, a tender smile, or even a stuttering confession of inability to do more, often find their ministers distant men who do not want to burn their fingers. They are unable or unwilling to express their feelings of affection, anger, hostility or sympathy.[1480]

Christian leadership is accomplished only through service to those enduring the crosses of life. The only proper posture is that of a servant who enters into situations, is vulnerable, and shares. This becomes an availability-to and a participation-in, or, rather, an offering of oneself to God to be His instrument through which He continues to "..so love the world that He gave His only begotten Son.."[1481] Nouwen enunciates the basic principles of leadership:

[1474] Nouwen, "The Parish;" Nouwen, Wounded Healer.
[1475] Nouwen, "The Parish," p. 2.
[1476] Ibid.
[1477] Ibid, p. 4.
[1478] Ibid., p. 2.
[1479] Nouwen, Wounded Healer, p. xvi.
[1480] Ibid., p. 71.
[1481] Jn 3.16.

..no one can help anyone without becoming involved, without entering with his whole person into the painful situation, without taking the risk of becoming hurt, wounded or even destroyed in the process. The beginning and end of all Christian leadership is to give your life for others.[1482]

He adds–

Who can save a child from a burning house without taking the risk of being hurt by the flames? Who can listen to a story of loneliness and despair without taking the risk of experiencing similar pains in his own heart and even losing his previous peace of mind? In short: 'who can take away suffering without entering it?'[1483]

The key is "..to make his wounds into a major source of his healing power.[1484] This does not mean openly, blatantly engaging in exhibitionism: "..no suffering human being is helped by someone who tells him that he has the same problems .. Open wounds stink and do not heal."[1485] What it does mean is that the Christian leader sees his own pain and suffering as rising from the depth of the human condition which all men share.[1486] resulting in care and compassion, understanding and forgiveness, fellowship and community.

Thus, one is able to heal by authoritatively forgiving his brother ".. because forgiveness is only real for him who has discovered the weakness of his friend and the sins of his enemy in his own heart and is willing to call every human being his brother."[1487] Jung writes:

It is presumptuous to think we can always say what is good or bad for the patient. Perhaps he knows something is really bad and does it anyway and then gets a bad conscience. From the therapeutic, that is to say empirical, point of view, this may be very good indeed for him. Perhaps he has to experience the power of evil and suffer accordingly, because only in that way can he give up his Pharisaic attitude to other people ... How can anyone find out how much he needs o be saved if he is quite sure that there is nothing he needs saving from?[1488]

Or, the hymn by Frederick William Faber:[1489]

'Tis not all we owe to Jesus;
It is something more than all;
Greater good because of evil
Larger mercy through the fall..

Sanford writes:

Paradoxically .. to become whole certain people may first have to become ill ... we cannot say that a person who never suffers evidence of malfunctioning is whole; such a person may simply have never been touched by the powers within, and so may never reach his maximum possible development. For illness can have the effect of dissolving (dismembering) our conscious personality in such a way that an entirely new state of consciousness is allowed to emerge.[1490]

The Christian leader does not take away pain: that is not his mission, anymore than God removes our problems. He has promised to walk beside us in our sorrow, to be with us in our valleys. Authentic Christian life is a matter of living, not talking (or writing!) It is a matter of being-with and doing; love is always an action, a verb and not a noun, a thing, a feeling. ".. let us not love by word or tongue, but with actions and in truth."[1491]

A PARTING WORD

We may not be able to return to Paradise. Something even greater has happened! God has come out to where we are, and He in us continues to pour out His blood, where we meet him, "outside the camp." "Let us go forth, therefore, unto him outside the camp, bearing his reproach."[1492] Instead of having only pleasure in Paradise, now we have God and each other. There is a positive meaning to our pain of having experienced severe and sustained combat in battle; God transforms the coal [1482] Nouwen, Wounded Healer, p. 72.

---

[1483] Ibid.
[1484] Ibid., p. 83.
[1485] Ibid., p. 88.
[1486] Ibid.
[1487] Ibid., p. 41.
[1488] Jung, "Good and Evil," CW 10, Para 867.
[1489] "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy."
[1490] Sanford, Healing, p. 71.
[1491] 1 Jn 3.18.
[1492] Heb 13.13.

into a diamond through the pressure and heat of suffering. Through our wounds, we have been made fit to be the hands, feet, mouth and mind, conveying our Lord's life and love, grace and healing and peace to wounded, hurt souls. Our credentials to serve the Lord's mission are not degrees from institutions but our wounds. Future pastors should be asked, "What are your wounds and how are you dealing with them?"

In his wounds you have been healed
–1 Peter 2:24b

BIBLIOGRAPHY

American Psychiatric Association, Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 3d ed., DSM-III, Washington, D.C.: American Psychiatric Association, 1980, pp. 236-238.

Barrett, C.K., the Gospel According to St. John, London: SPCK, 1958.

Benko, Stephen, The Meaning of Santorum Communio, (Studies in Historical Theology, No. 3), Naperville, Il.: Alec R. Allenson, Inc., 1964.

Bernhard, Rev. J.H., A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel According to St. John (International Critical Commentary), Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1928, Vol. 1.

Bettelheim, Bruno, The Informed Heart, Autonomy in a Mass Age, New York: Discus Books, 1979.

Bonhoeffer, Dietrich, The Communion of Saints, New York and Evanston: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1953.

_____, The Cost of Discipleship, rev. ed., Trans R. H. Fuller, New York: The Macmillan Co., 1963.

_____, Creation and Fall, Temptation, Trans. John C. Fletcher, New York: The Macmillan Co., 1959.

_____, Ethics, Ed. Eberhard Behge, Trans. Neville Horton Smith, New York: The Macmillan Co., 1955.

_____, Life Together, Trans. and Intro John W. Doberstein, New York and Evanston: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1954.

Bultmann, Rudolf, Theology of the New Testament, Volo. 1, Trans. Kendrick Grobel, New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1951.

Cirlot, J.E., A Dictionary of Symbols, 2nd ed, Trans Jack Swage, New York: Philosophical Library, 1971.

Delitzsch, F., Isaiah, Commentary on the Old Testament, Vol. 7, Trans. James Martin, Grand Rapids, Mich.: William B. Eerdmans Pub. Co., n.d.

Diel, Paul, Symbolism in Green Mythology, Human Desire and Its Transformation, Preface Gaston Bachelard, Trans. Vincent Stuart, Micheline Stuart, and Rebecca Folkman, Boulder, Colorado: Shambhala Publications, Inc., 1980.

Dostoyevsky, Fyodor, Crime and Punishment, Trans. Sidney Monas, New York: New American Library, 1968.

Dupre, Louis, The Constitution of the Self in Kierkegaard's Philosophy," International Philosophical Quarterly 3:4 (Dec., 1963) 579.

Edinger, Edward F., Ego and Archetype, Individuation and the Religious Function of th Psyche, Baltimore: Penguin Books, 1972.

Eising, H., "זָכַר," in G. Johannes Botterweck and Helmer Ringgren, Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament, Trans. David E. Green, Vol. IV, Grand Rapids, Mich.: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1980.

Eliade, Mircea, Shamanism, Archaic Techniques of Ecstasy, (Bollingen Series 76), Trans. Willard R. Trask, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1964.

Frankl, Viktor, Man's Search for Meaning, Preface by Gordon W. Allport, rev. ed., Trans Ilse Lasch, New York: Simon & Schuster, 1962.

Frim, John, "Creation Spirituality and the Shaman," Bear & Company Magazine 3:4 (1984) 22-23.

Glover, Hillel, "Survival Guilt and the Vietnam Veteran," The Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease 172:7 (1984) 393-397.

Gould, Rev. Ezra F., A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel According to St. Mark. (International Critical Commentary), Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1896.

Graves, Robert, The Greek Myths, 2 vols., Baltimore, Md.: Penguin Books, 1955.

Grossbeck, C.J., "The Archetypal Image of the Wounded Healer," the Journal of Analytical Psychology 20:2 (July, 1973) 122-145.

Grossbeck, C. Jess. and Taylor, Benjamin, "The Psychiatrist as Wounded Physician," The American Journal of Psychoanalysis 37:2 (1977) 131-139.

Guggehbühl-Craig, Adolf, Power in the Helping Professions, Dallas, Texas: Spring Publications, Inc., 1982.

Halifax, Joan, Shaman, The Wounded Healer, (The Illustrated Library of Sacred Imagination), New York: Crossroad, 1982.

Haroutunian, Joseph, God With Us, Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1965.

Hendin, Herbert, and Haas, Ann Pollinger, "Combat Adaptations of Vietnam Veterans Without Posttraumatic Stress Disorders," The American Journal of Psychiatry 141:8 (August, 1984) 956-960.

Heschel, Abraham J., the Prophets, New York and Evanston: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1962.

Hillman, James, Suicide and the Soul, Dallas, Texas: Spring Publications, Inc., 1976.

Hoskyns, Sir Edwyn, The Fourth Gospel, Ed. Francis Noel Davey, rev. ed., London: Faber and Faber, Ltd., 1947.

Howard, Stephen, "The Vietnam Warrior: His Experience, and Implications for Psychotherapy," American Journal of Psychotherapy 30 (1976) 121-135.

Jacob, Edmond, Theology of the Old Testament, Trans. Arthur W. Heathcote and Philip J. Allcock, New York and Evanston: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1958.

Joines, Karen Randolph, "The Bronze Serpent in the Israelite Cult," Journal of Biblical Literature 87:3 (Sep., 1968) 245-256.

Jung, C.G., Aion, Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self, 2d ed., Trans. R. F. C. Hull, (Collected Works, Vol. 9, Part 2), Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1959.

_____, Answer to Job, 2d ed., Trans R. F. C. Hull (extracted from Collected Works, Vol. 11), Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969.

_____, The Archetypes and the Collective Unconsciousness, 2d ed., Trans. R. F. C. Hull, (Collected Works, Vol. 9, Part 1), Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1968.

_____, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 2d ed., Trans. R. F. C. Hull, (Collected Works, Vol. 14), Princeton: Princeton University press, 1970.

_____, On the Nature of the Psyche, Trans. R. F. C. Hull (Excerpt from Collected Works, Vol. 8), Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1960.

_____, On the Psychology of the Unconscious, (in Two Essays on Analytical Psychology), 2nd ed. Trans R. F. C. Hull (Collected Works, Vol. 7), Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1966.

_____, "Problems of Modern Psychotherapy," in The Practice of Psychotherapy,(Collected Works, Vol. 16), 2d ed., Trans R. F. C. Hull, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1966.

_____, Psychology and Alchemy, 2nd ed., Trans R. F. C. Hull, (Collected Works, Vol. 12), Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1968.

_____, The Psychology of the Transference, (Collected Works, Vol. 16), Trans. R. F. C. Hull, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1966.

_____, Symbols of Transformation, 2d ed. Trans R. F. C. Hull, (Collected Works, Vol. 5), Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1956.

Keil, C. F., and Delitzsch, F., The Pentateuch, (Commentary on the Old Testament, Vol. 1), Trans. James Martin, Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans Pub. Co., n.d.

Kelsey, Morton T., Adventure Inward, Christian Growth Through Personal Journal Writing, Minneapolis, Mn.: Augsburg Publishing House, 1980.

Kerenyi, C., Asklepios, Archetypal Image of the Physician's Existence, Trans. Ralph Manheim (Bollilngen Series LXV:3), Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1959.

Kierkegaard, Søren, Christian Discourses. Trans. Walter Lowrie, London: Oxford University Press, 1940.

_____, Concluding Unscientific Postscript, Trans. David F. Swenson and Walter Lowrie, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1941.

_____, For Self Examination, Recommended for the Times, trans. Edna and Howard Hong, Minneapolis, Minnesota: Augsburg Publishing House, 1940.

_____, Edifying Discourses, Vol. II, Trans. David F. Swenson and Lillian Marvin Swenson, Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1944.

_____, Purity of Heart is to Will One Thing, Trans. Douglas V. Steers, Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1956.

_____, Training in Christianity, Trans. Walter Lowrie, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1941.

Kirk, G. S., The Nature of Greek Myths, New York: Penguin Books, 1974.

Kjeseth, Peter, "NEHUSHTAN and Ernst Bloch-Raymond Brown and Biblical Studies," Dialog 17:4 (Autumn, 1978) 280-286.

Larson, Bruce, Ask Me to Dance, A Guide to Becoming More Than You Are, Waco, Texas: Word Books, Publishers, 1972.

_____, Risky Christianity, A New Way for God's People, Waco, Texas: Word Books, 1976.

Luther, Martin, Lectures on Genesis, Chapters 1-5, (Luther's Works, Vol. 1), Ed. Jaroslav Pelican, Saint Louis, Mo.: Concordia Publishing House, 1958.

_____, Lectures on Isaiah, Ch. 40-66 (Luther's Works, Vol. 17), Ed. Hilton C. Oswald, St. Louis, Mo.: Concordia Publishing Co., 1972.

Mahedy, William F., "'It Don't Mean Nothin;" The Vietnam Experience," The Christian Century (Jan. 26, 1983) 65-68.

Manjo, Guido, The Healing Hand, Man and Wound in the Ancient World, Cambridge, Ma.: Howard university Press, 1975.

Marin, Peter, "Living in Moral Pain," Psychology Today 15:11 (November, 1981) 68-74, 77, 80.

_____, "What the Vietnam Vets Can Teach Us," The Nation (November 27, 1982) 545, 558-562.

Milgram, Stanley, "Behavioral Study of Obedience," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology 67:4 (1963) 371-378.

Miller, Donald G., "John 3:1-21," Interpretation: A Journal of Bible and Theology 35:2 (April, 1981) 174-179.

Miller, William A, Make Friends With Your Shadow, Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1981.

Morrison, Clinton D., The Powers That Be (Studies in Biblical Theology, No. 29), London: SCM Press, 1960.

Nisetich, Frank J., Trans. Pindar's Victory Songs, Foreword Hugh Lloyd-Jones, Baltimore: John Hopkins University Press, 1980.

Nouwen, Henri J. M., Out of Solitude, Notre Dame, Indiana: Ave Maria Press, 1974.

_____, "The Parish..A Safe Place to Face our Pain," Alban Institute, Action Information 7:1 (Jan-feb, 1981) 1-5.

_____, "The Selfless Way of Christ, Downward Mobility as Christian Vocation," Sojourners 10:6 (June, 1981) 12-15.

_____, The Wounded Healer, Garden City, New York: Image Books, 1979.

Pedersen, Johs., Israel, Its Life and Culture, Vol. I-II, Copenhagen: Branner og Korch, 1926.

Pieper, August, Isaiah, Trans. Erwin E. Kowalks, Milwaukee: Northwestern Publishing House, 1979.

Pindar, Third Pythian Ode, in The Odes of Pindar, Including the Principal Fragments, Intro and Trans. Sir John Sandys (Loeb Classical Library, No. 56), London: William Heinemann, Ltd., 1919.

Rosen, David H., "The Pursuit of One's Own Healing," The American Journal of Psychoanalysis 37:1 (1977) 37-41.

Rowland, Beryl, Animals with Human Faces, A Guide to Animal Symbolism, Knoxville: The University of Tennessee Press, 1973.

Sanford, John A., Healing and Wholeness, New York: Paulist Press, 1977.

_____, The Kingdom Within, The Inner Meaning of Jesus' Sayings, New York: Paulist Press, 1970.

Schwab, Gustav, Gods and Heroes, Myths and Epics of Ancient Greece, Trans. Olga Marx and Ernst Horwitz, New York: Pantheon Books, 1946.

Schweizer, Eduard, The Letter to the Colossians, A Commentary, Trans. Andrew Chester, Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1982.

Slotzki, The Rev. Dr. Israel W., Isaiah with Hebrew Text and English Translation (Soncino Books of the Bible), London: The Soncino Press, Ltd., 1959.

Smart, James D., History and Theology in Second isaiah, A Commentary on Isaiah 35, 40-66, Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1965.

_____, The Old Testament in Dialogue with Modern Man, Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1964.

Solzhenitsyn, Aleksandr, "A World Split Apart," Commencement Address Delivered at Harvard University June 8, 1978, New York: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1978.

Stein, Murray, "Power, Shamanism, and Maieutics in the Countertransference," Chiron, A Review of Jungian Analysis (1984) 67-87.

Stringfellow, William, An Ethic for Christians and Other Aliens in a Strange Land, Waco, Texas: Word Books, Publishers, 1973.

Thielicke, Helmut, How the World Began, Man in the First Chapters of the Bible, Trans. and Intro. John W. Doberstein, Philadelphia: Muhlenberg press, 1961.

Torrey, Charles Cutler, The Second Isaiah, A New Interpretation, New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1928.

Von Loewenich, Walter, Luther's Theology of the Cross, Trans. Herbert J. A. Bouman, Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1976.

Von Rad, Gerhard, Old Testament Theology, Vol. 1, The Theology of Israel's Historical Traditions, Trans. D. M. G. Stalker, New York: Harper & Brothers, 1962.

_____, Genesis, A Commentary, (The Old Testament Library), Trans. John H. Marks, Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1961.

Westermann, Claus, Creation, Trans. John J. Scullion, Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1974.

_____, Isaiah 40-66, A Commentary (The Old Testament Library), Trans. H. G. Stalker, Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1969.

Whybray, R. N., Isaiah 40-66 (New Century Bible Commentary), Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans Pub. Co., 1975.

Wiesel, Elie, Night, foreword by Francois Mauriac, Trans. Stella Rodway, New York: Discus Books, 1969.

Williams, Jay G., "Genesis 3," Interpretation, A Journal of Bible and Theology 35:3 (July, 1981) 274-279.

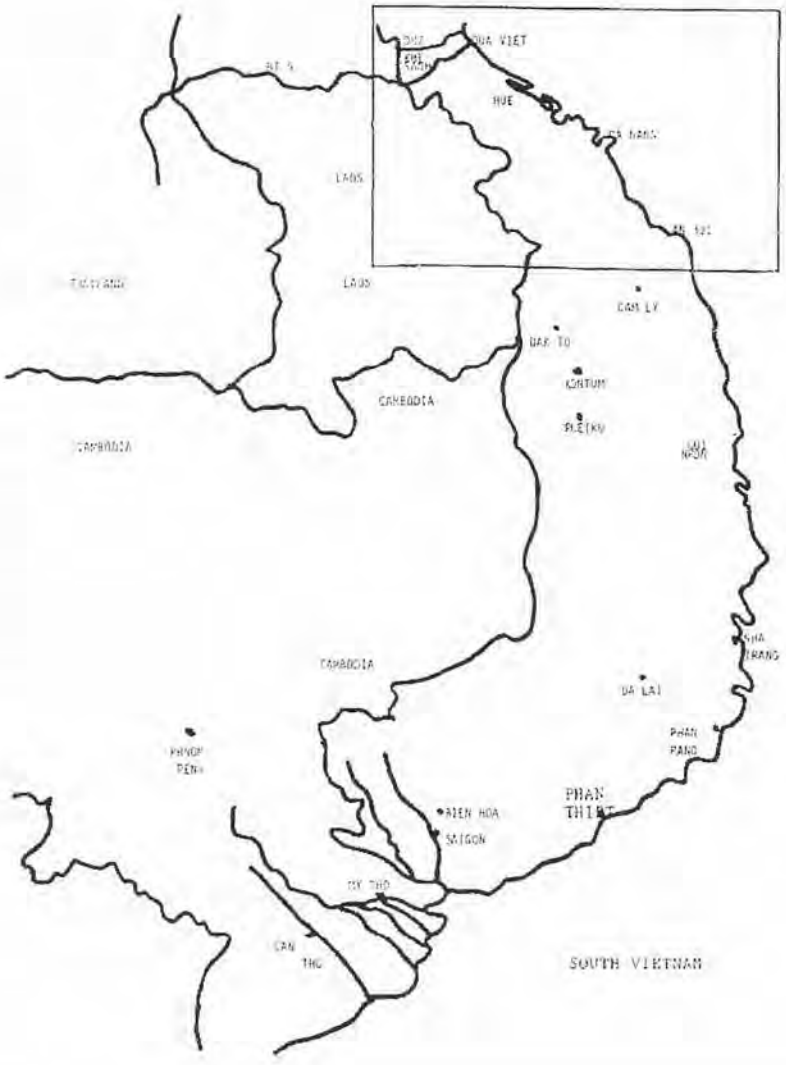
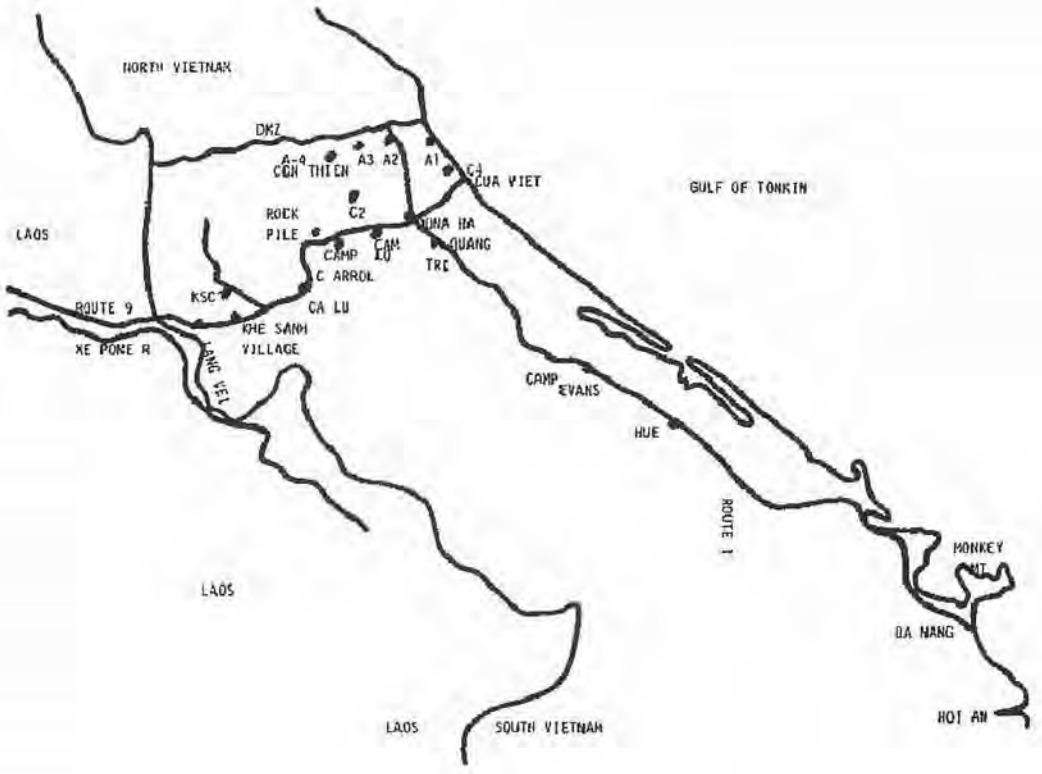
Ziemke, Donald, Love for the Neighbor in Luther's Theology, The Development of His Thought, 1512-1529, Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1963.

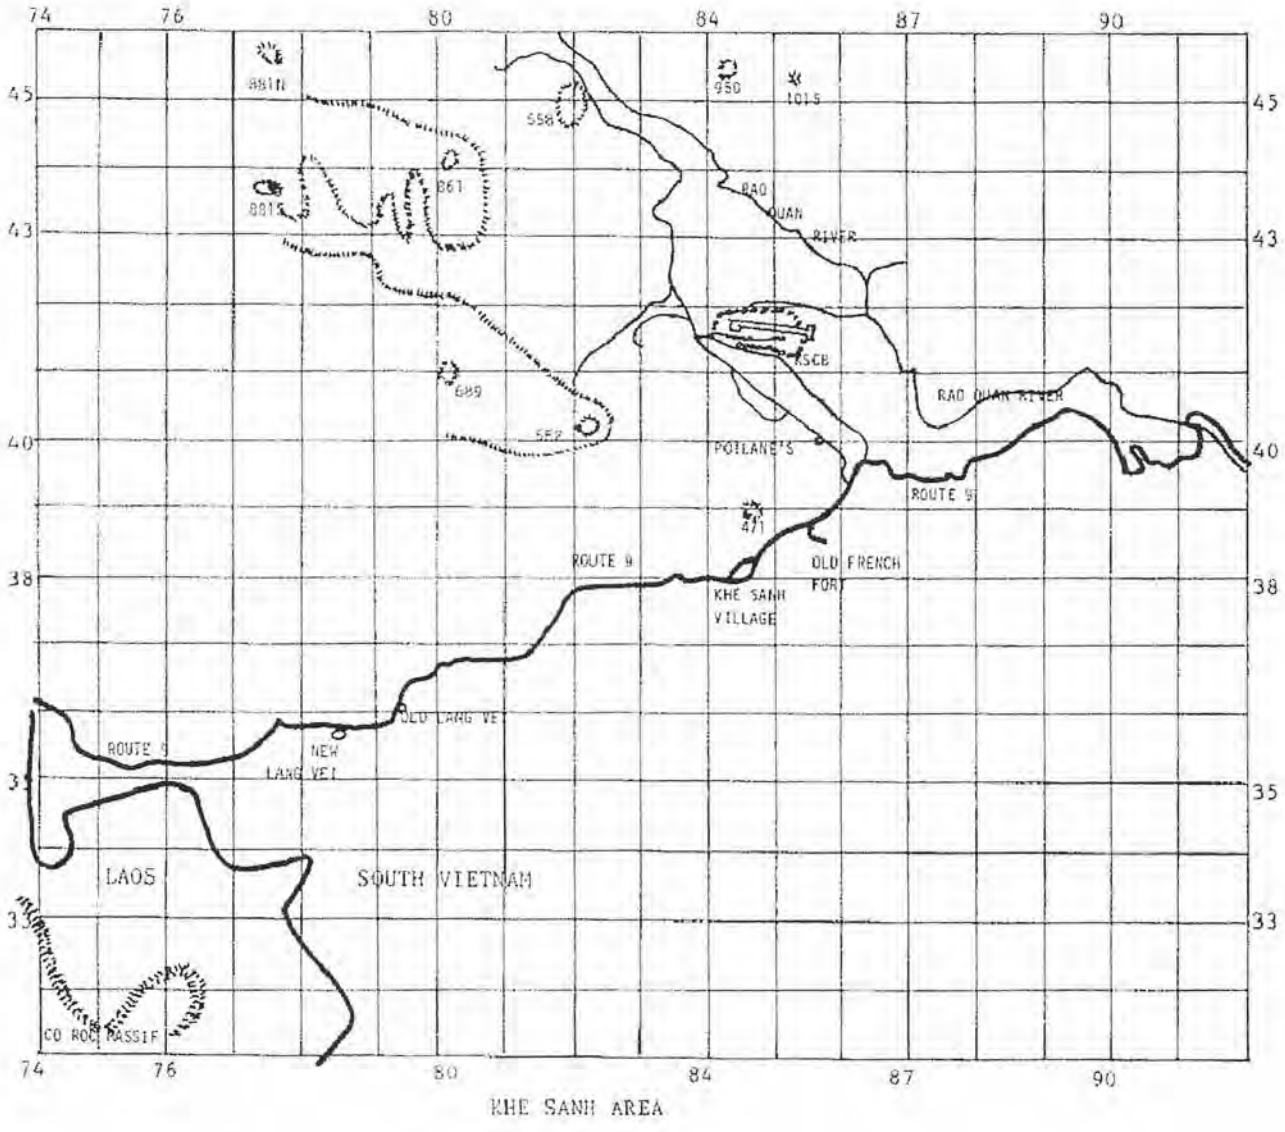


SOUTH VIETNAM



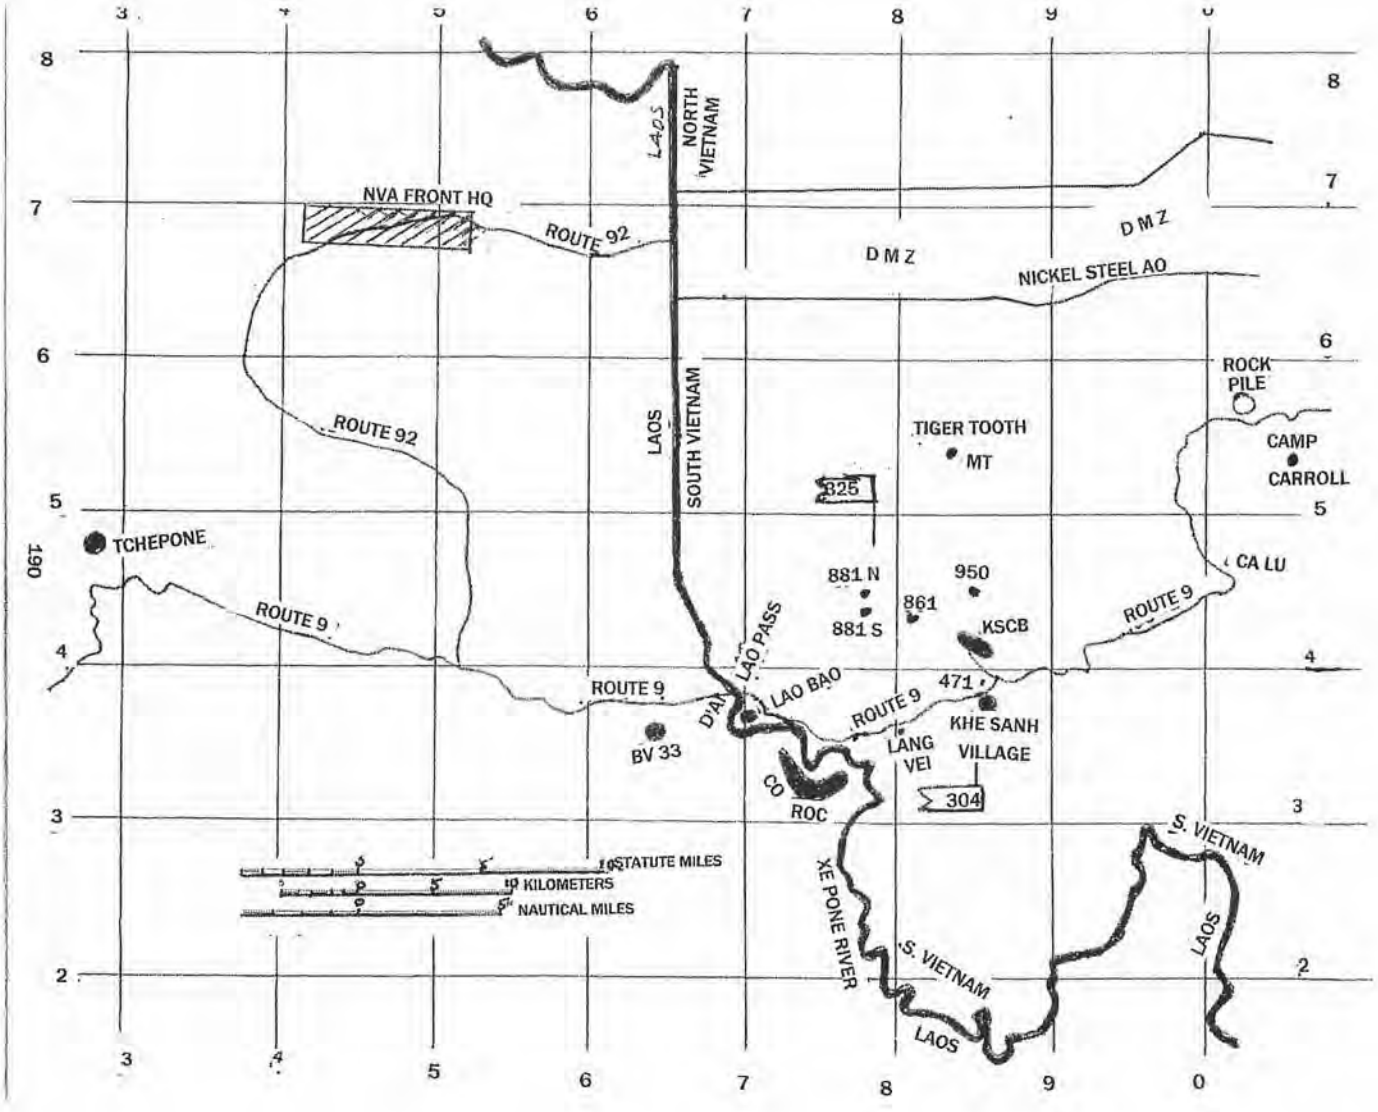
I CORPS TACTICAL ZONE

I CORPS TACTICAL ZONE

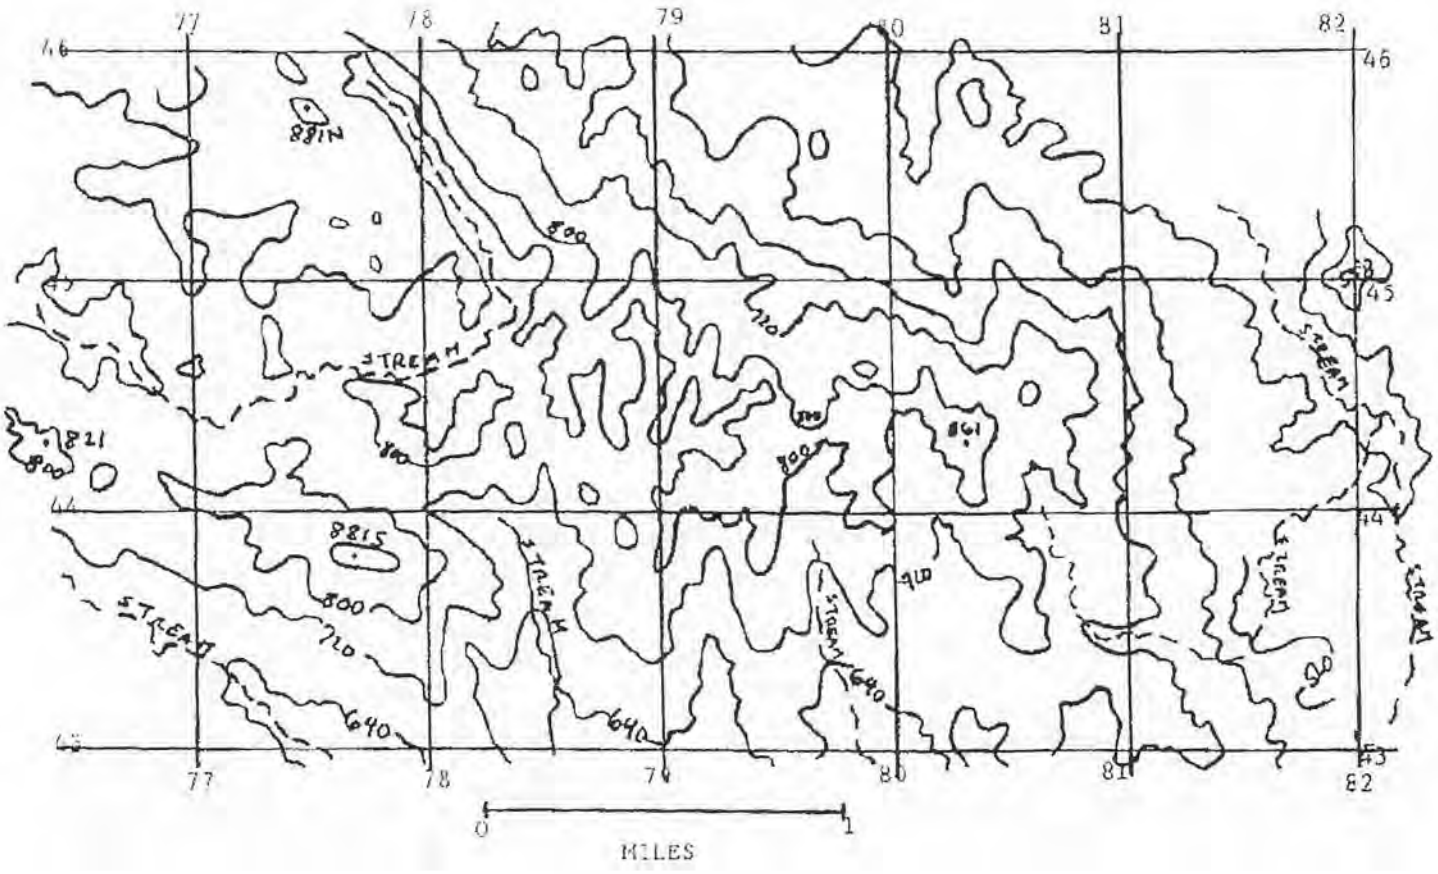


KHE SANH AREA

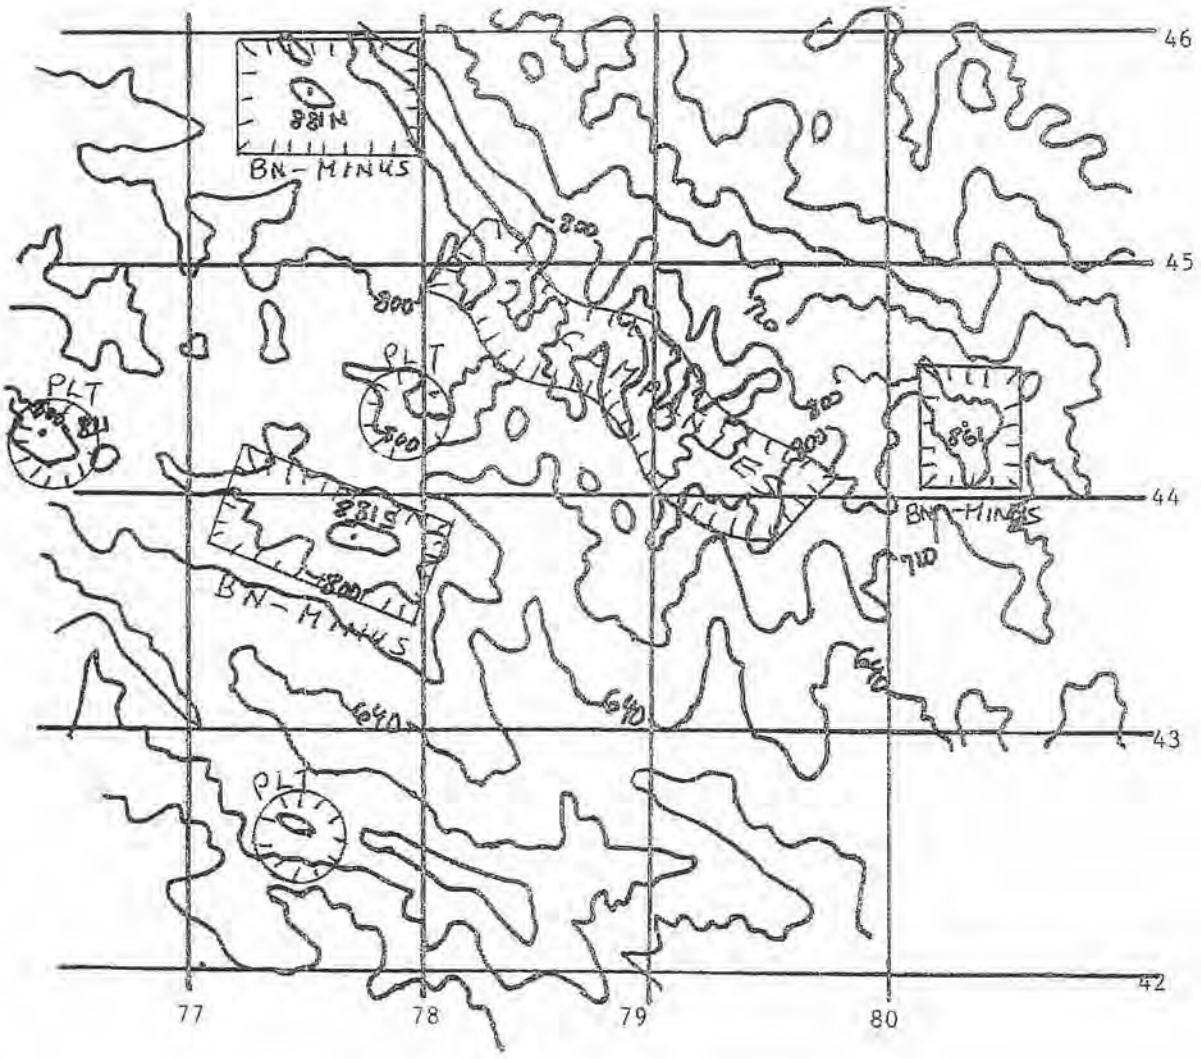
KHE SANH AREA



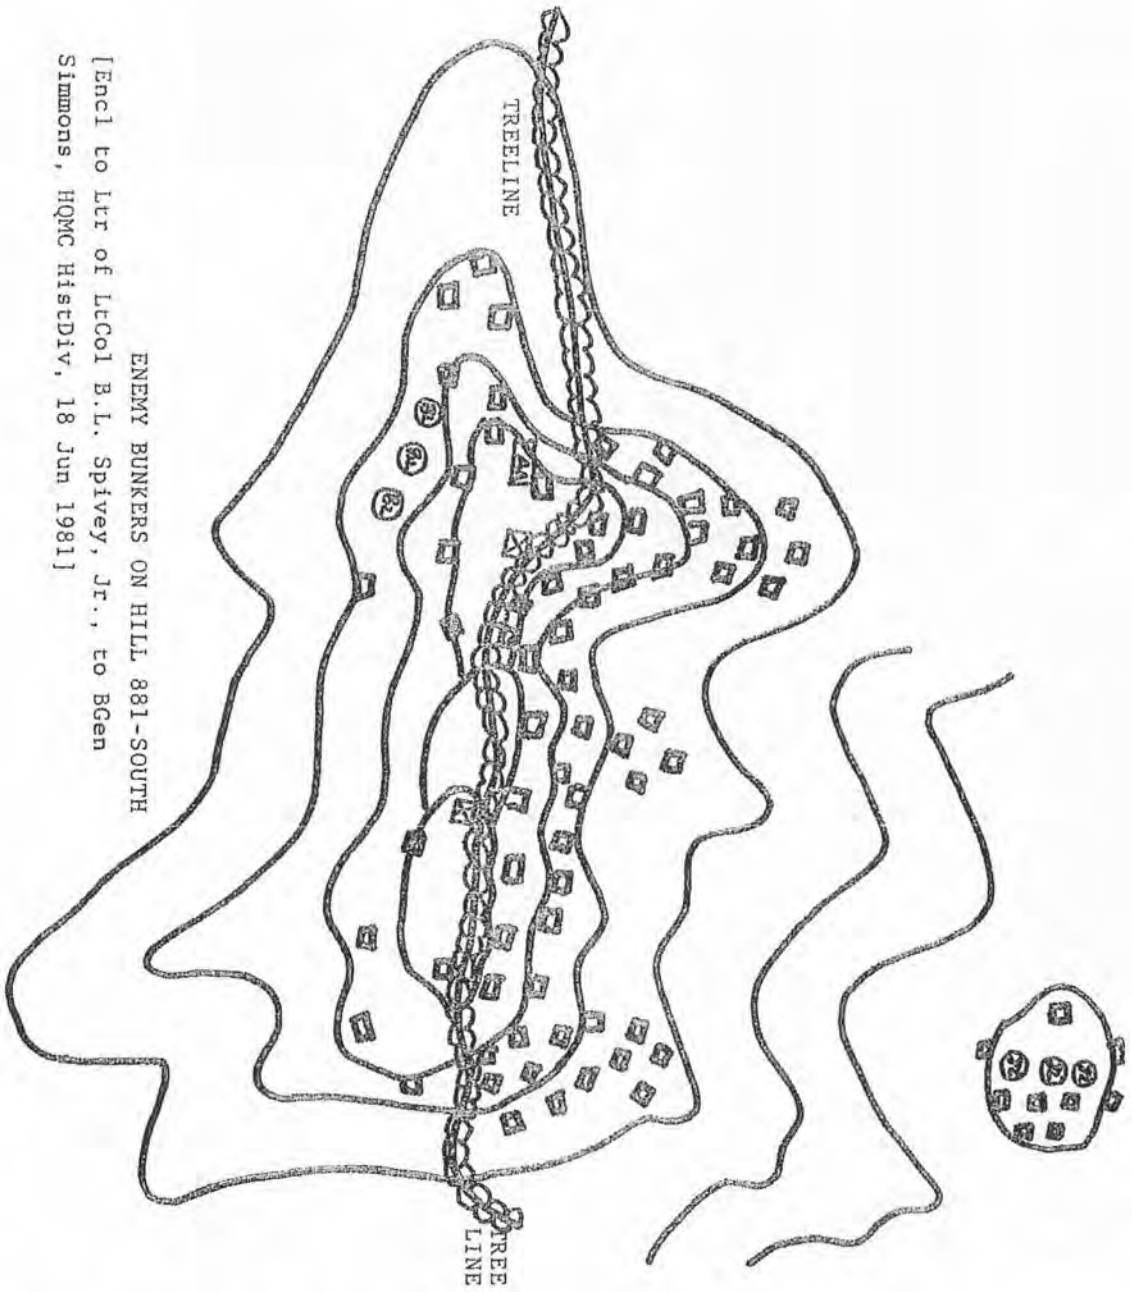
KHE SANH AREA DURING SIEGE



1967 HILL BATTLE AREA



NORTH VIETNAMESE POSITIONS DURING BATTLE OF THE HILLS
[Intelligence Section, AAR, appended to ltr of LtCol B.L. Spivey, Jr., to BGen E. H. Simmons, 18 June 1981]



ENEMY BUNKERS ON HILL 881-SOUTH

[Encl to Ltr of LtCol B.L. Spivey, Jr., to BGen Simmons, HQMC HistDiv, 18 Jun 1981]

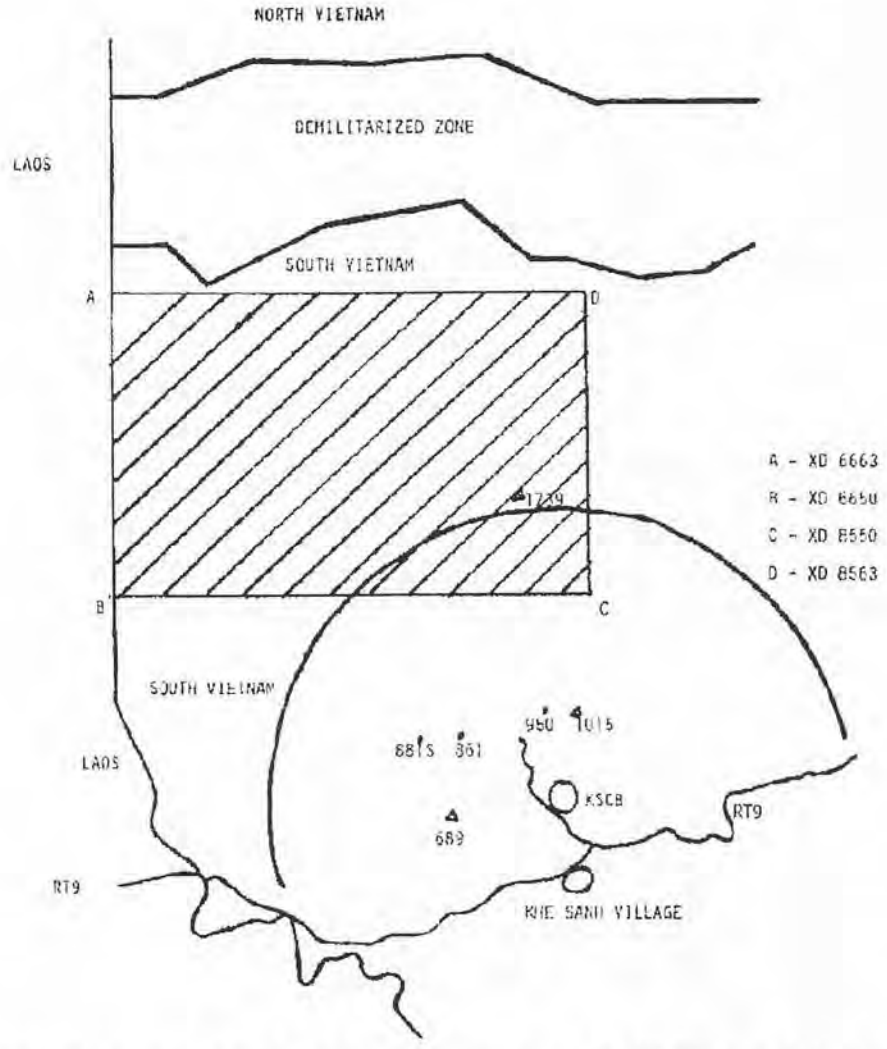
ENEMY BUNKERS ON HILL 881-SOUTH DURING SIEGE

A new AO was assigned on 5 May: XD 750480 to XD 770480 to XD 770470 to XD 820470 to XD 820440 following trail east to XD 831442 to XD 835444 following river southeast to XD 863420 to XD 750420 to XD 750480. [SOP 051710/May67, FRAG 1-67].

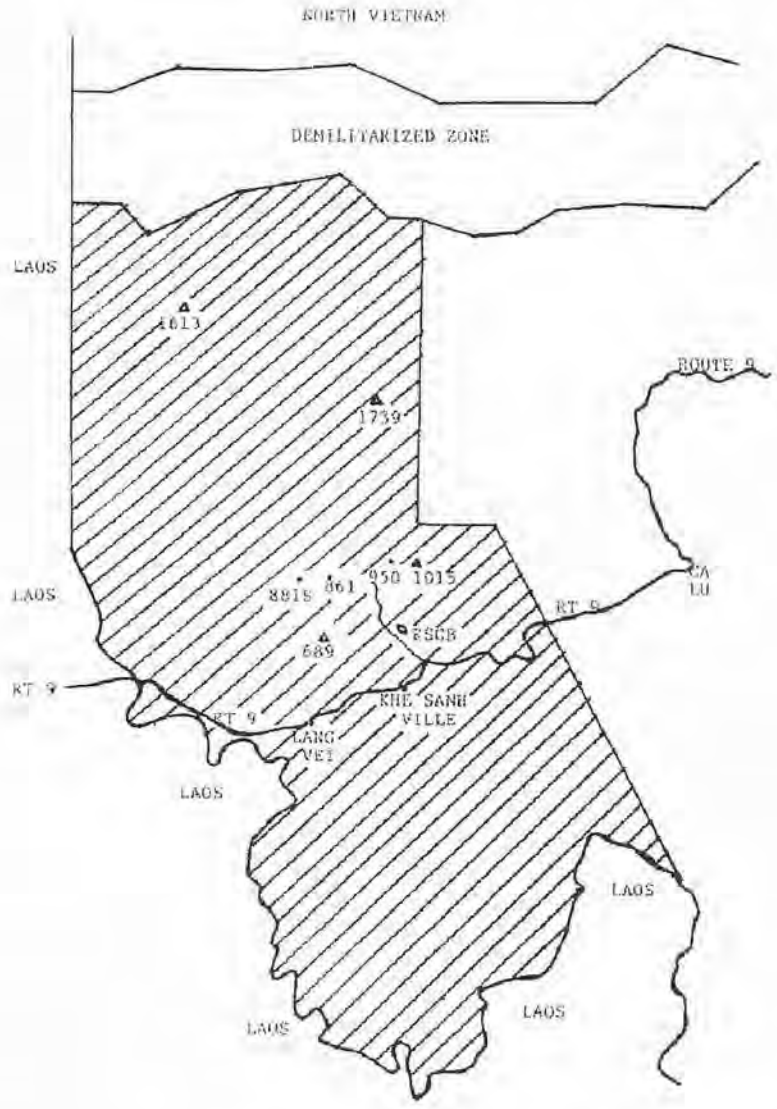
AREA OF OPERATIONS - MAY, 1967 1:100,000

MILES

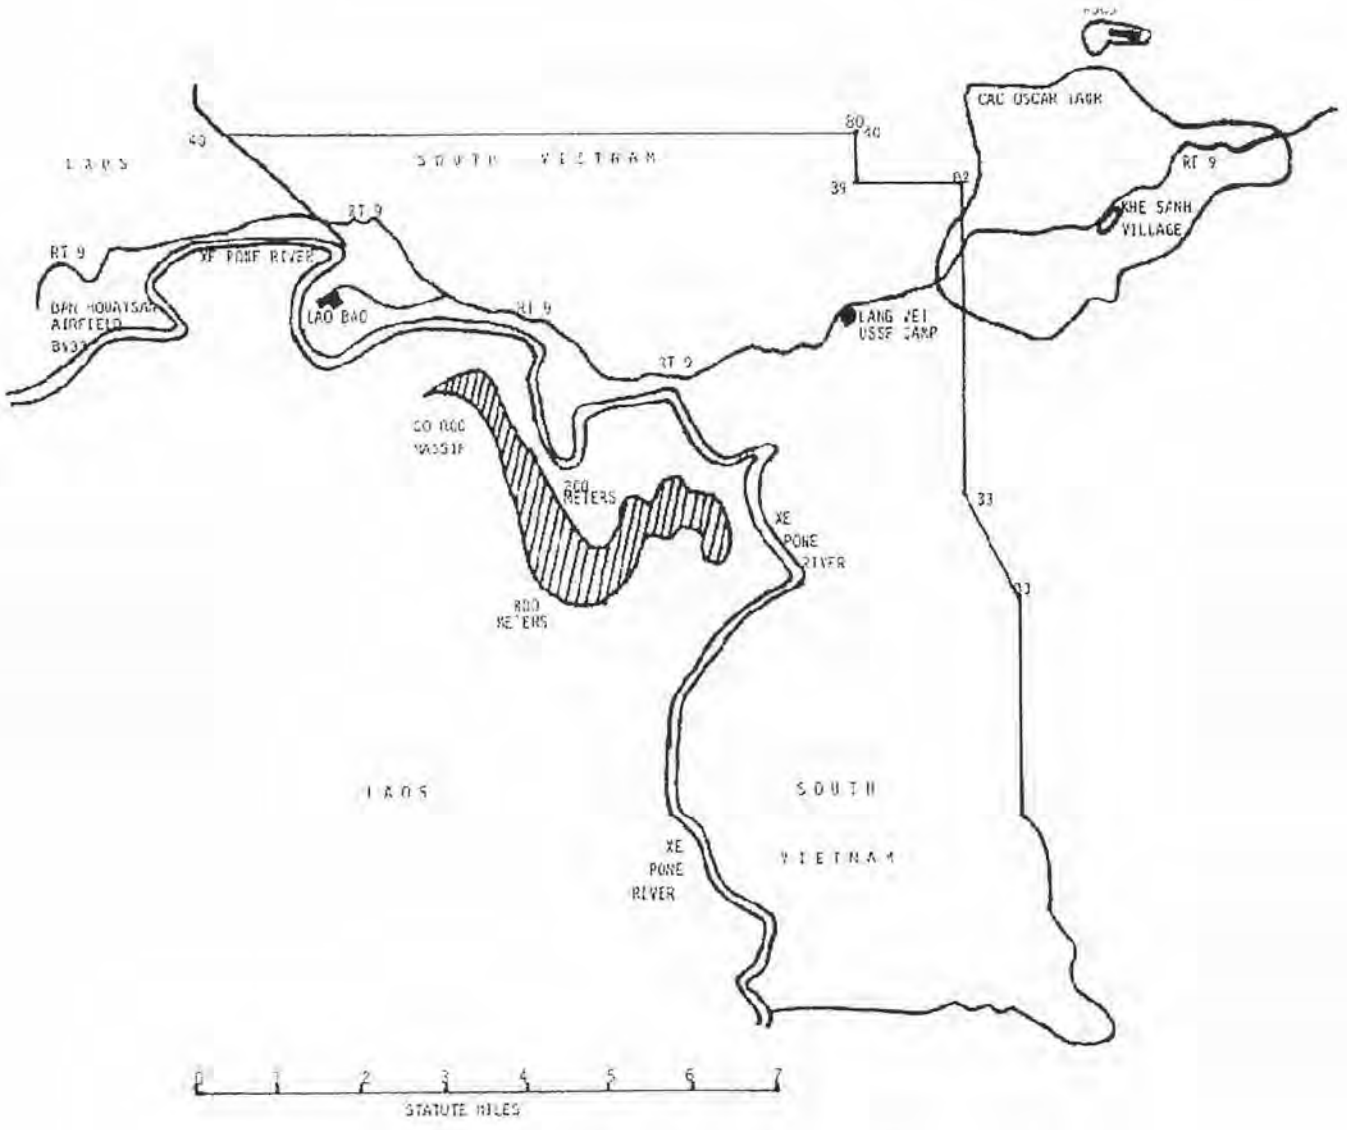
KHE SANH AO 5 MAY 1967



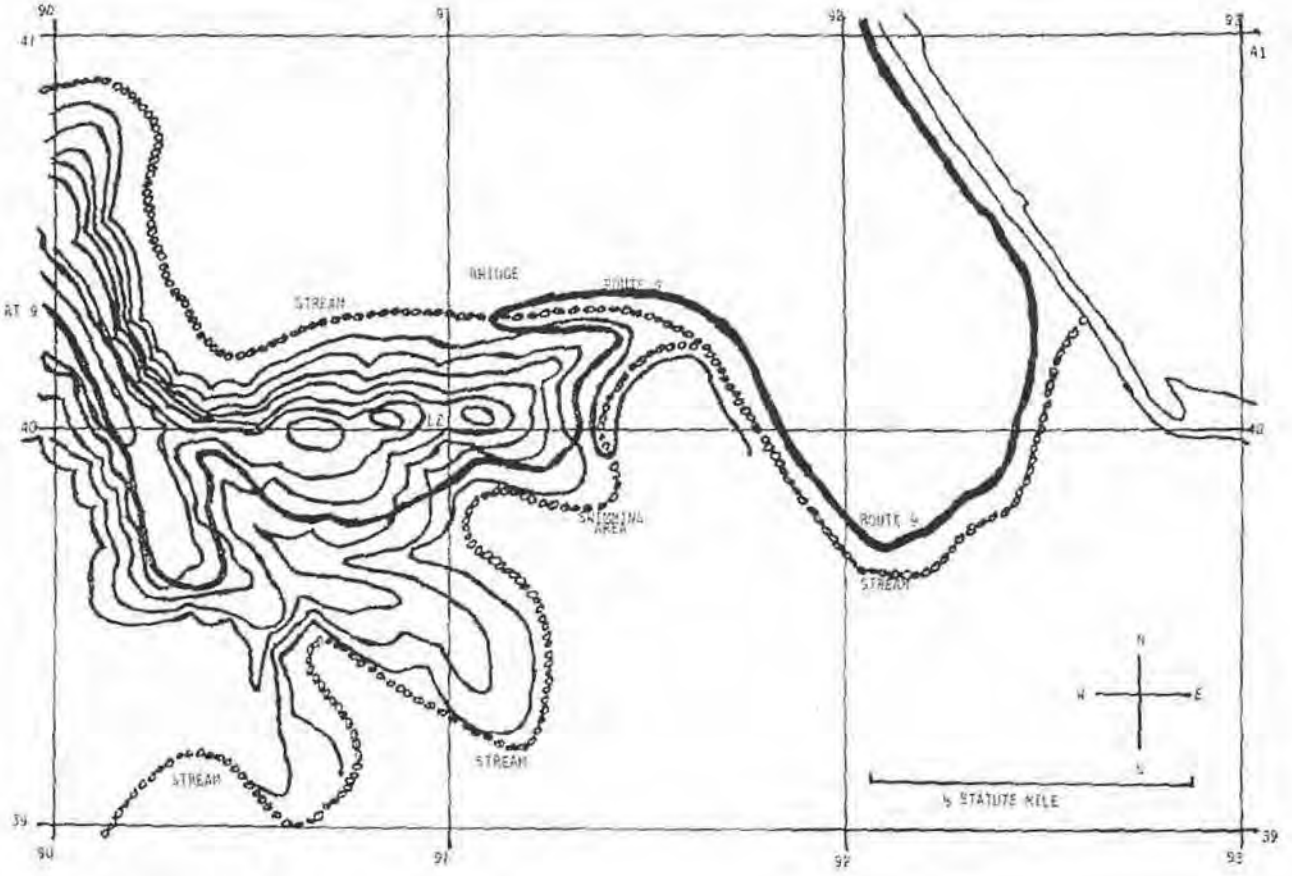
3rd MARDIV OP ORDER 6-67 AO Indicating the 15 KM Arc for infantry and box for force recon patrols (shaded area)



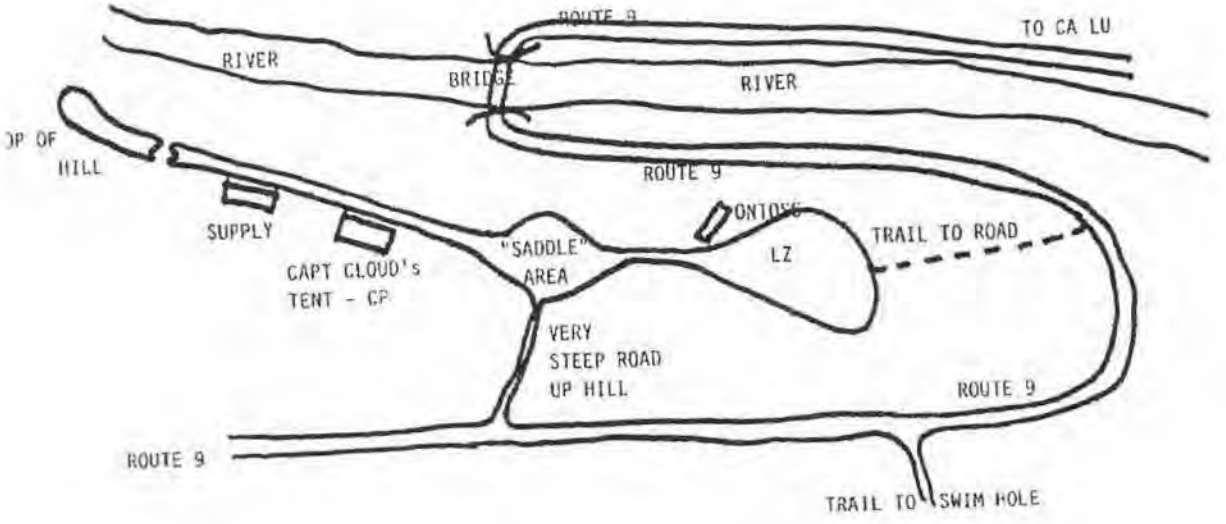
OPERATION CROCKETT AREA OF OPERATIONS



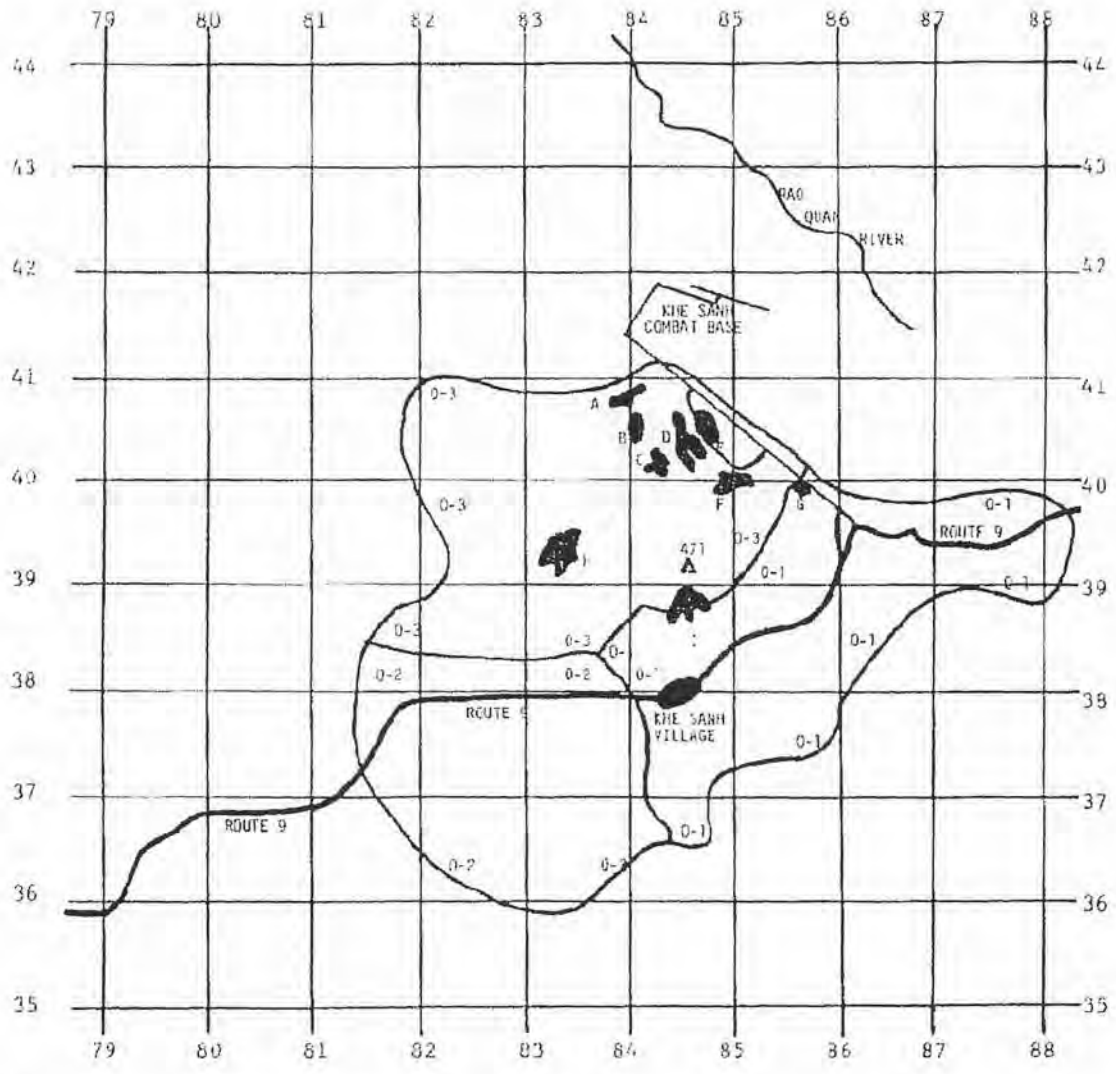
LANG VEI AREA OF OPERATIONS LATE 1967



BRIDGE SITE MANNED BY C/1/26



THE BRIDGE SITE



TACTICAL AREAS OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE CAPs OF CAC OSCAR AND BRU MONTAGNARD VILLAGES:

- A Ta Cong
- B Rachac
- C Lang Kat (also called Tadoq)
- D Areng (includes Lamboiq, Sarbai, and Ruang)
- E Clong Sareh
- F Chuua and Pacoong
- G Home of Felix Poilane
- H Tum Plang

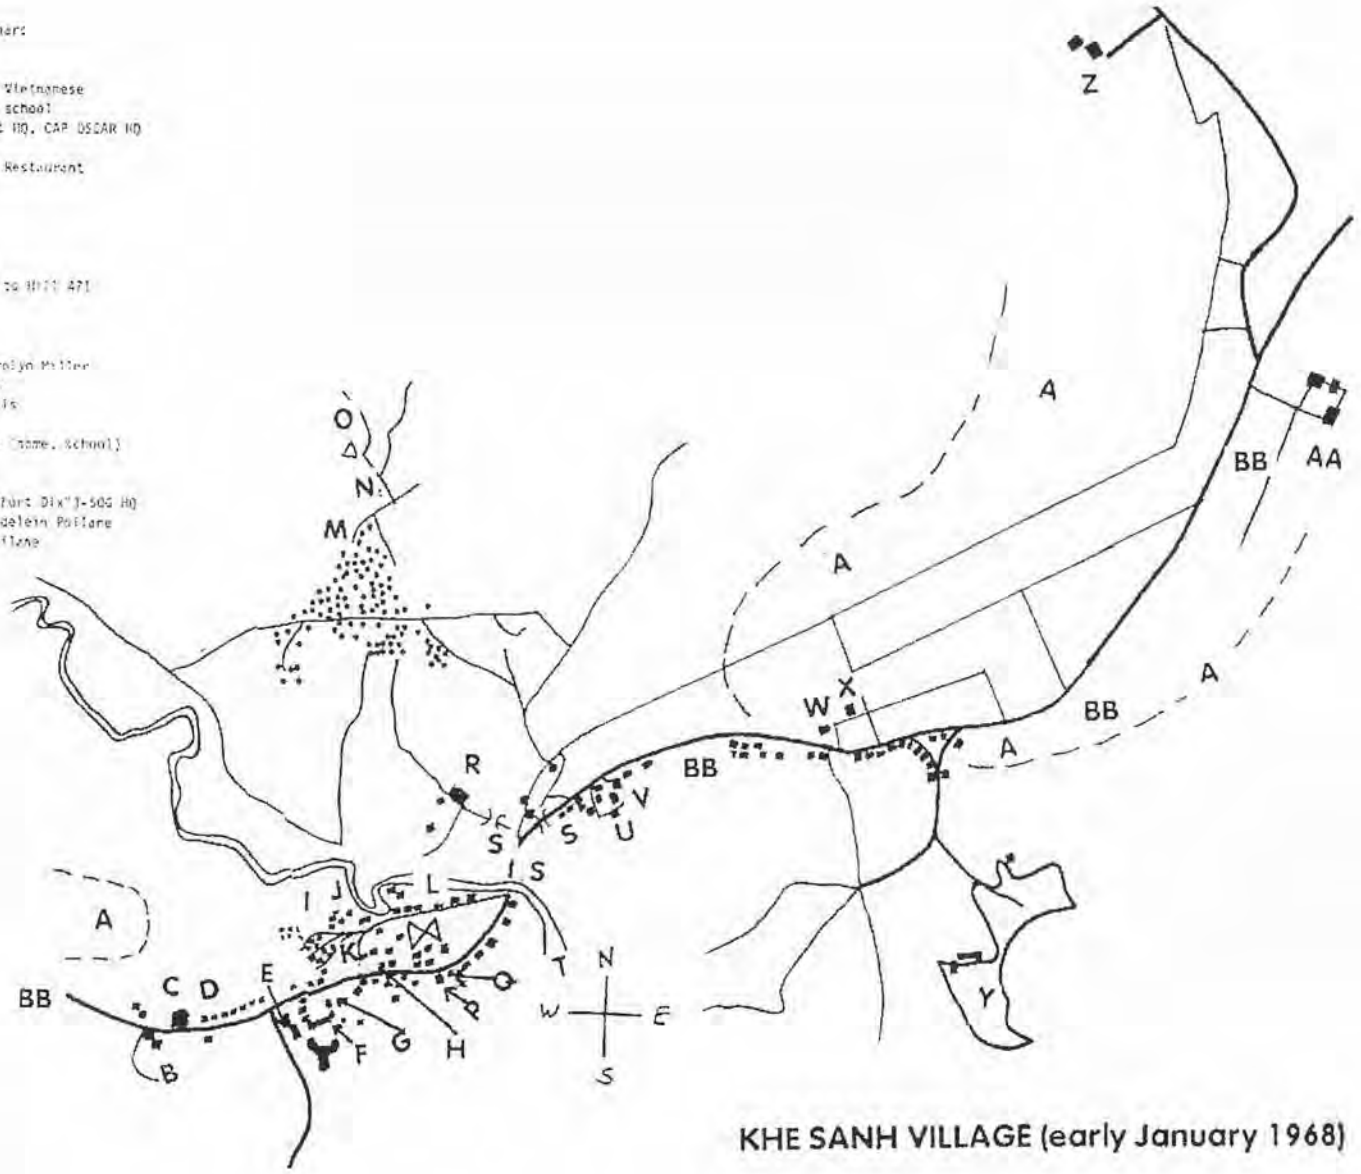
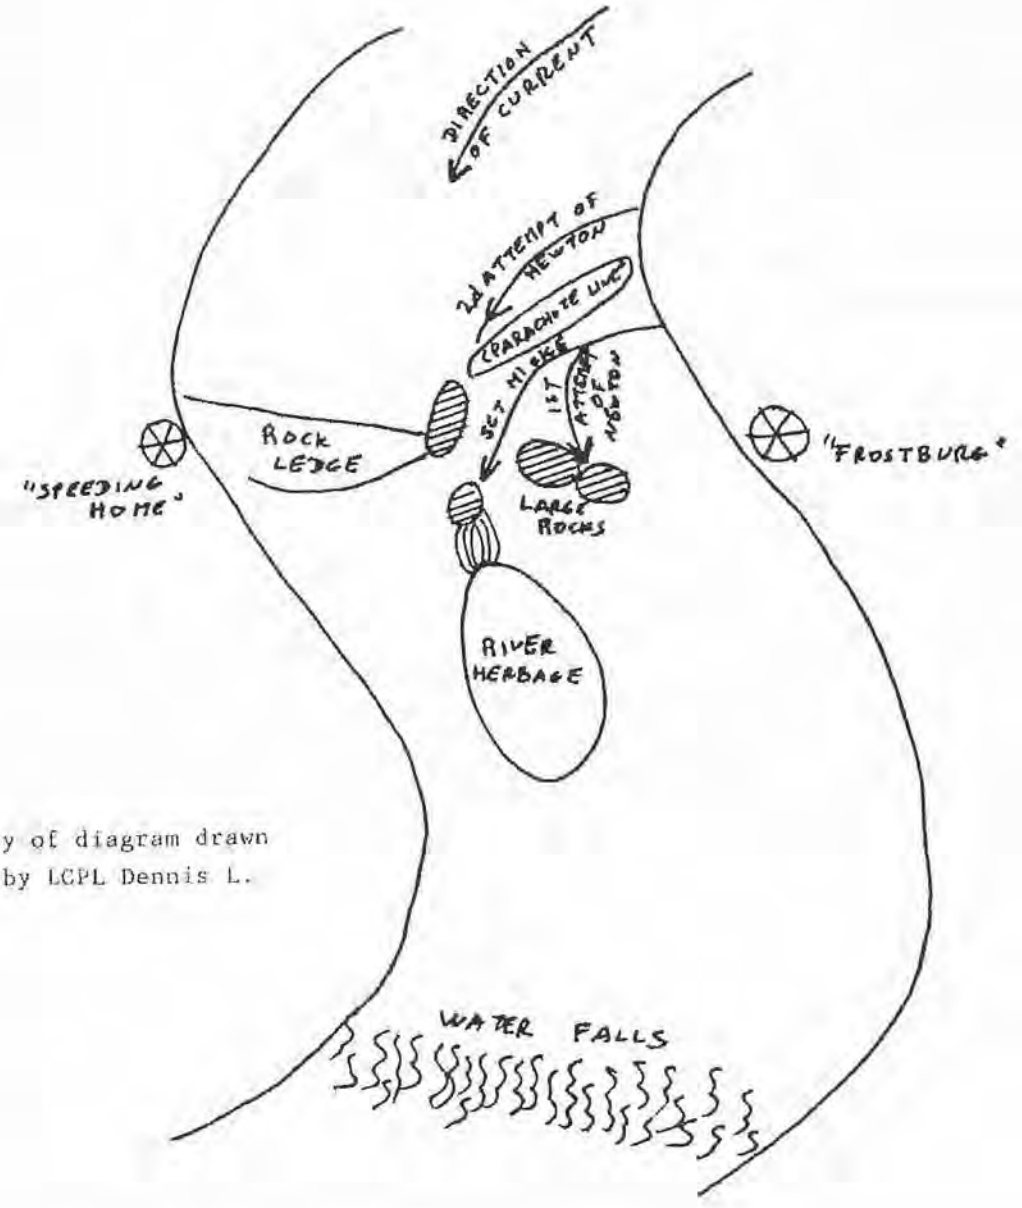
HILL 861 - AUGUST 1967

HILL 861 - AUGUST, 1967

A - Coffee trees, orchard
B - Simard's house
C - CAP O-2
D - Laundry hootches, Vietnamese
E - Buddhist shrine & school
F - Huong Hoa District HQ, CAP OSCAR HQ
G - Jail
H - "Howard Johnsons" Restaurant
I - Graves
J - Grove
K - Black Market
L - Market
M - Bru hamlet, BREN
N - Very steep ascent to Hill 471
O - Hill 471
P - school
Q - Dispensary
R - Home of John & Carolyn Miller
S - Bridge (3 bridges)
T - Rapids & water falls
U - Rev Loc's chapel
V - Rev Loc's compound (home, school)
W - Nun's quarters
X - Fr Poncet's house
Y - Old French Fort ("Fort Dix")-SOG HQ
Z - Home of Felix & Madelein Pollare
AA - Houses owned by Pollone
BB - Route 9

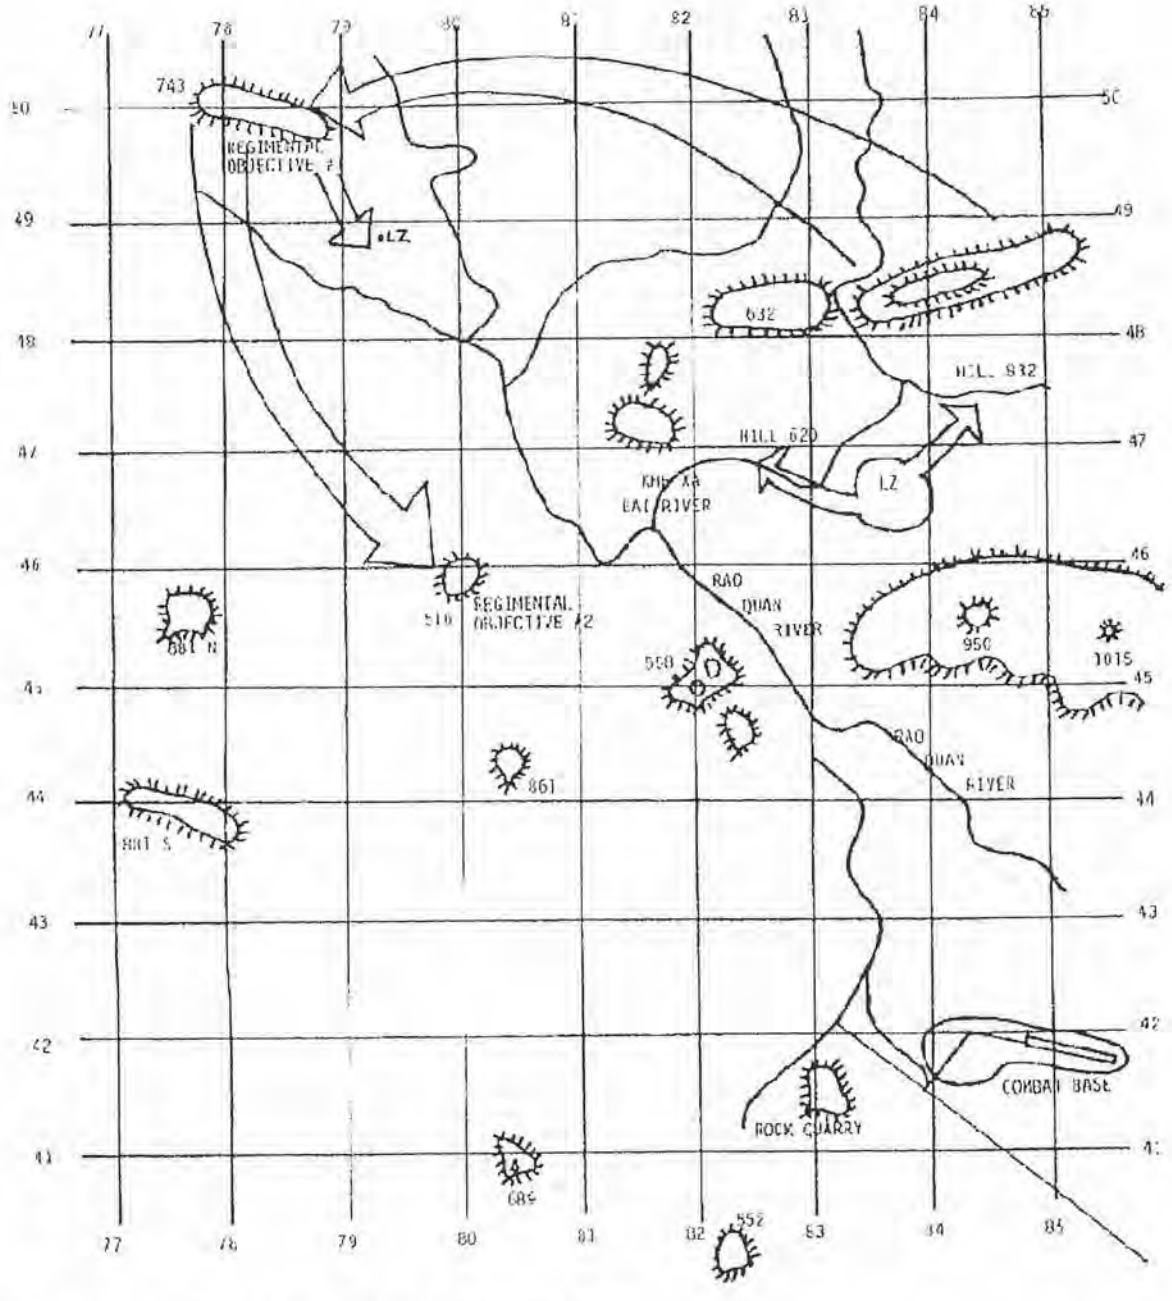


KHE SANH VILLAGE (early January 1968)

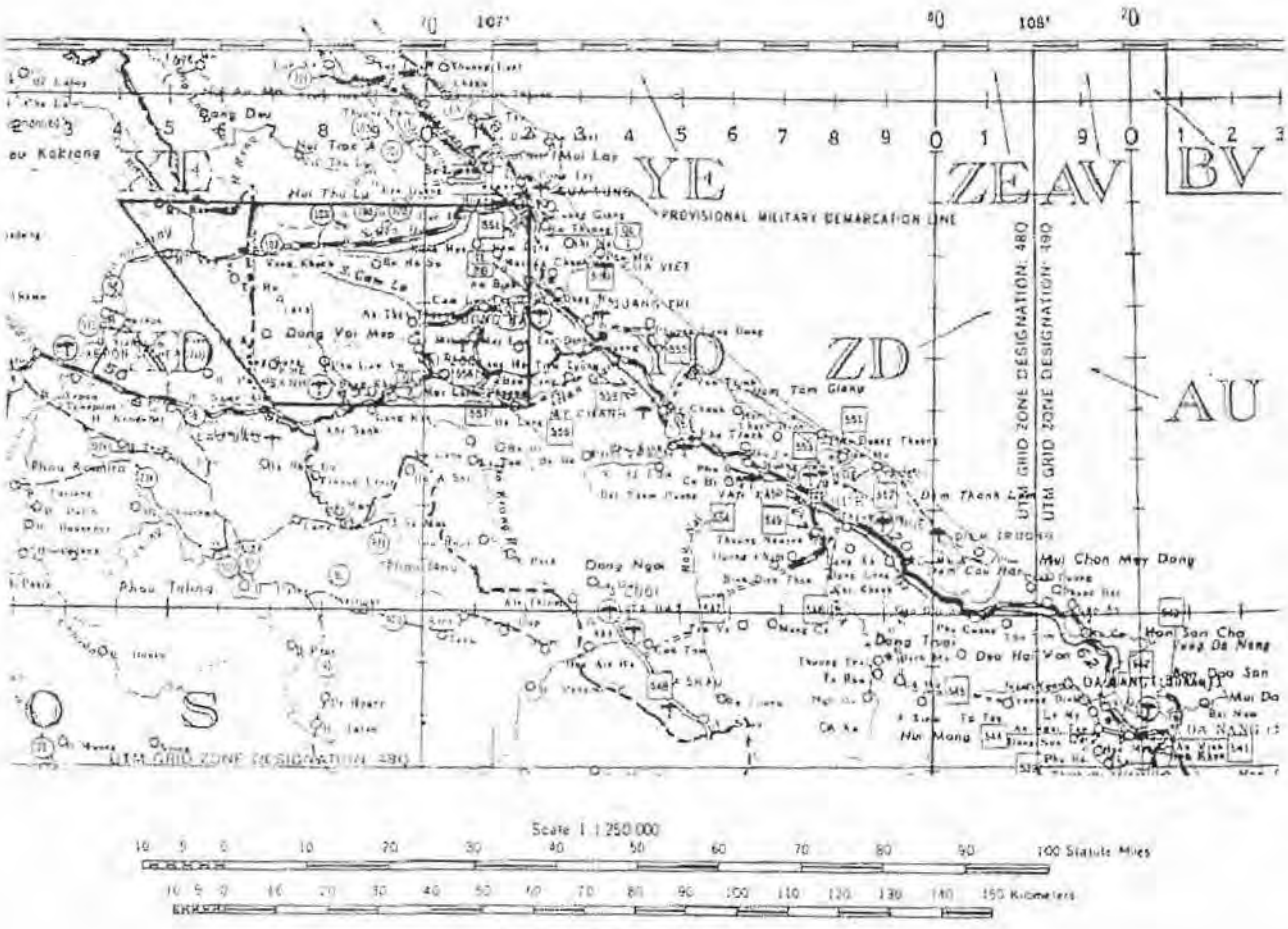


[Exact copy of diagram drawn 17 Nov 67 by LCPL Dennis L. Newton]

SITE OF DROWNING OF MEGGS, RAO QUAN RIVER AT XD 843437

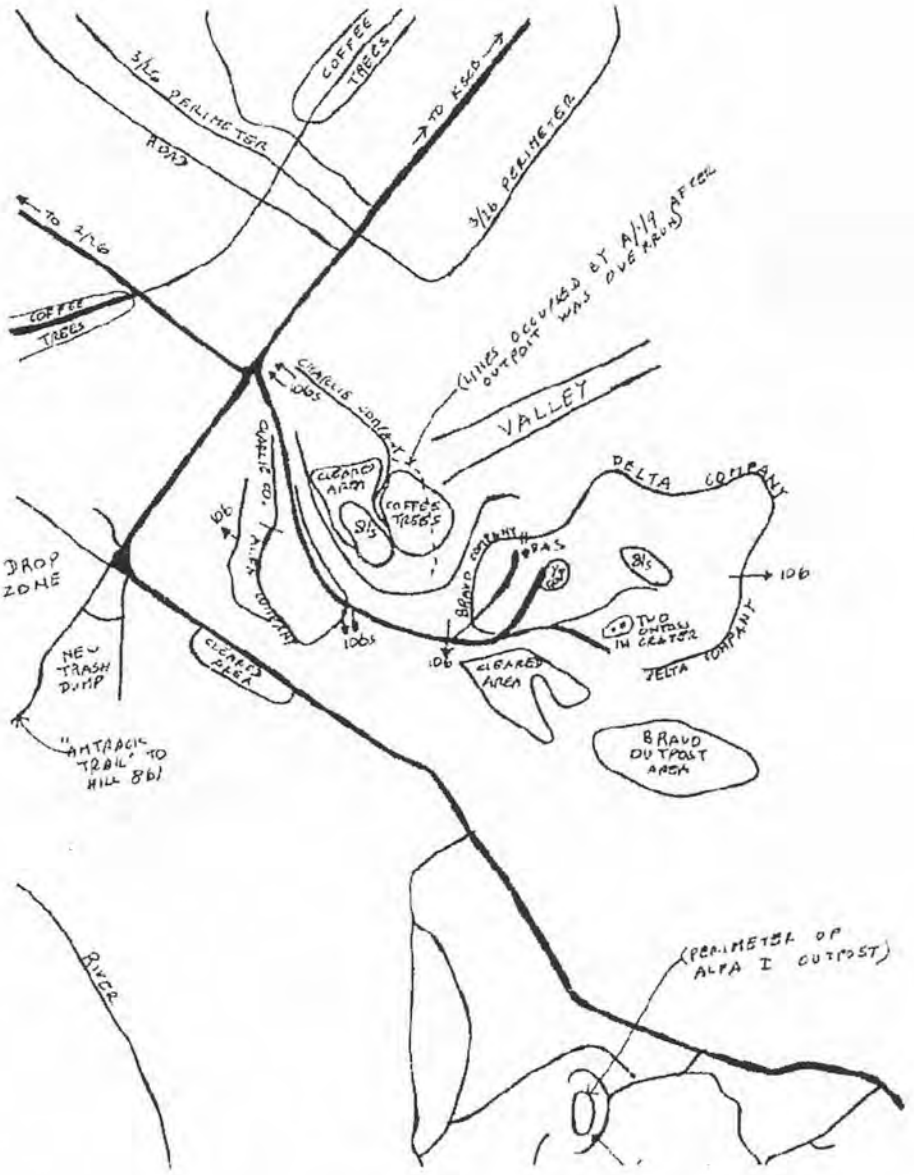


1/26 BATTALION OPERATION 28-30 DEC 1967

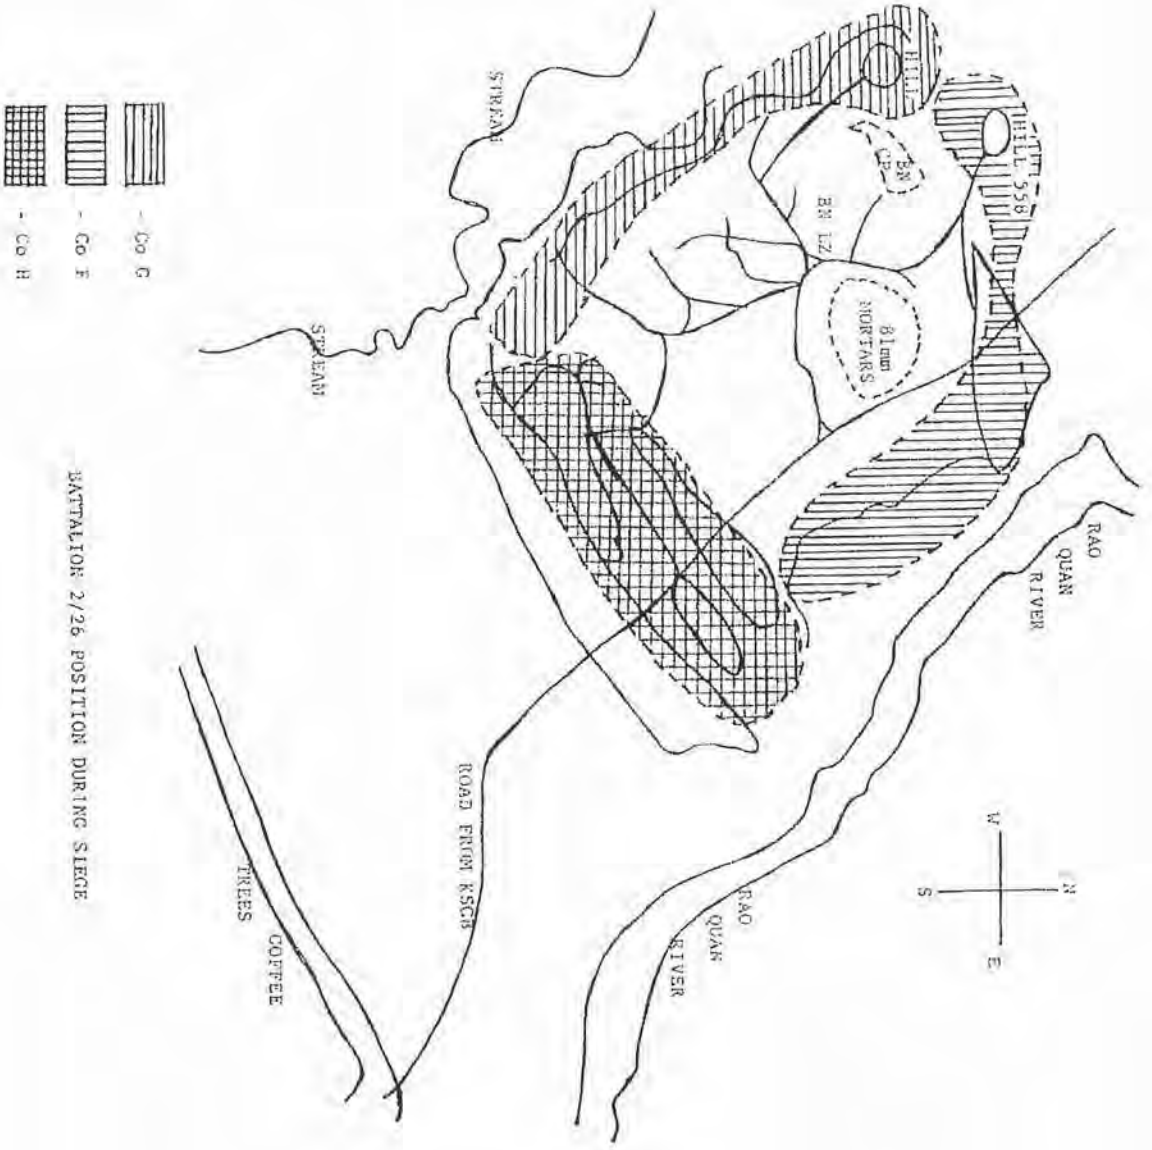


NIAGARA AO

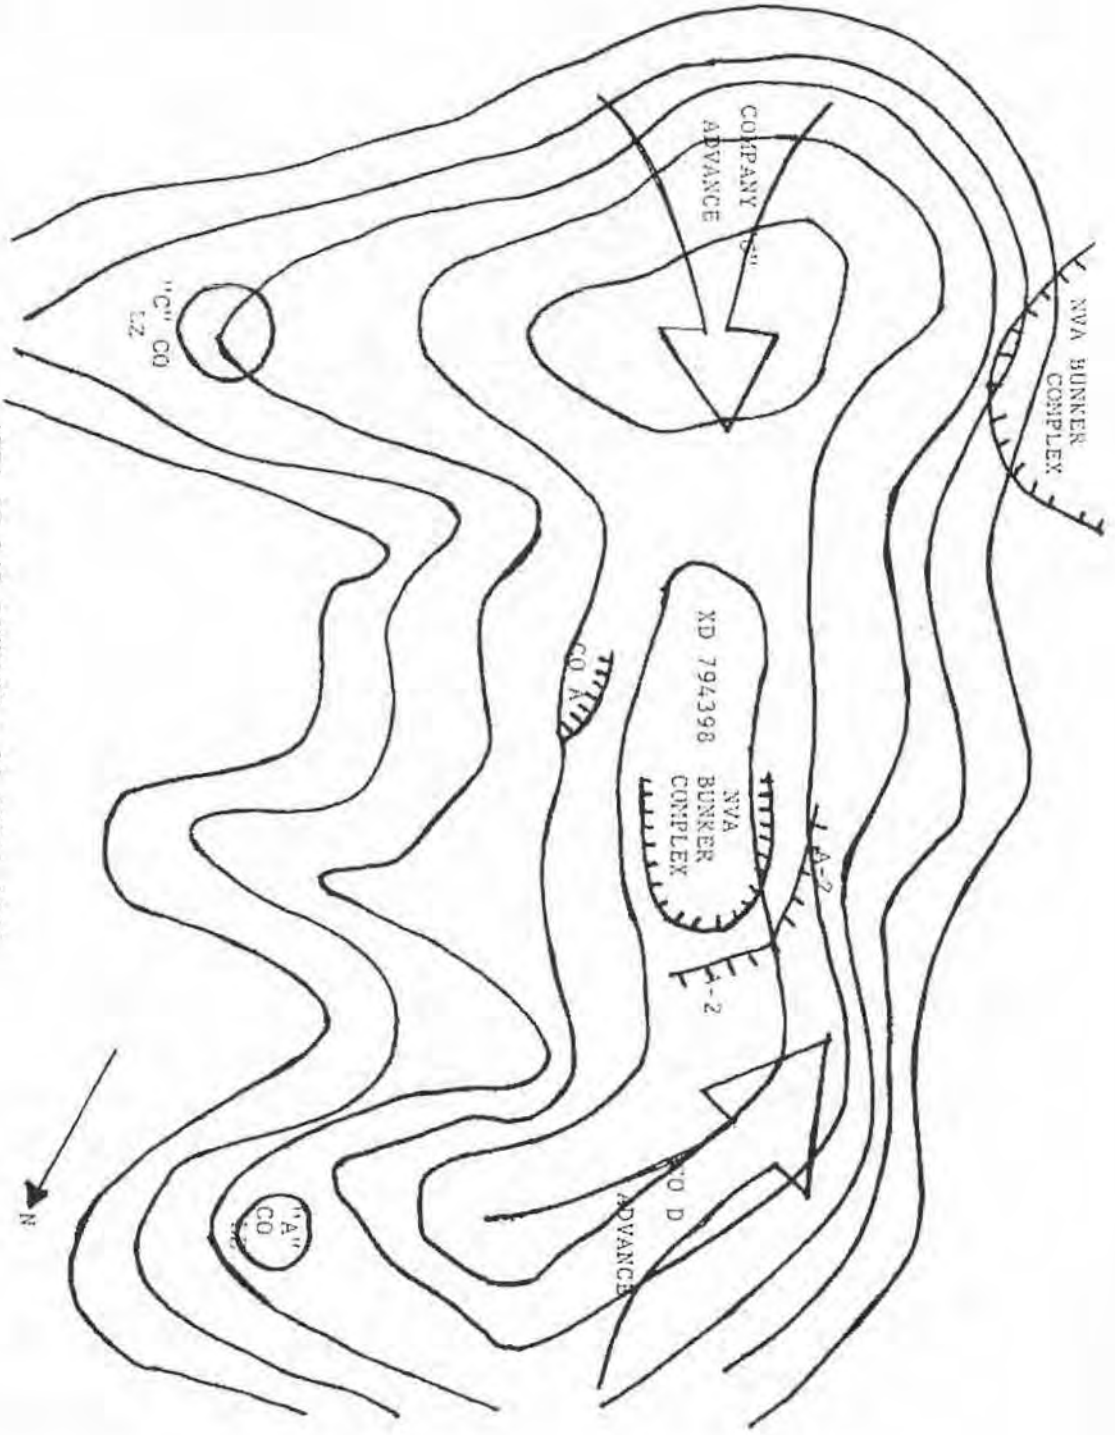
OPERATION NIAGARA AO



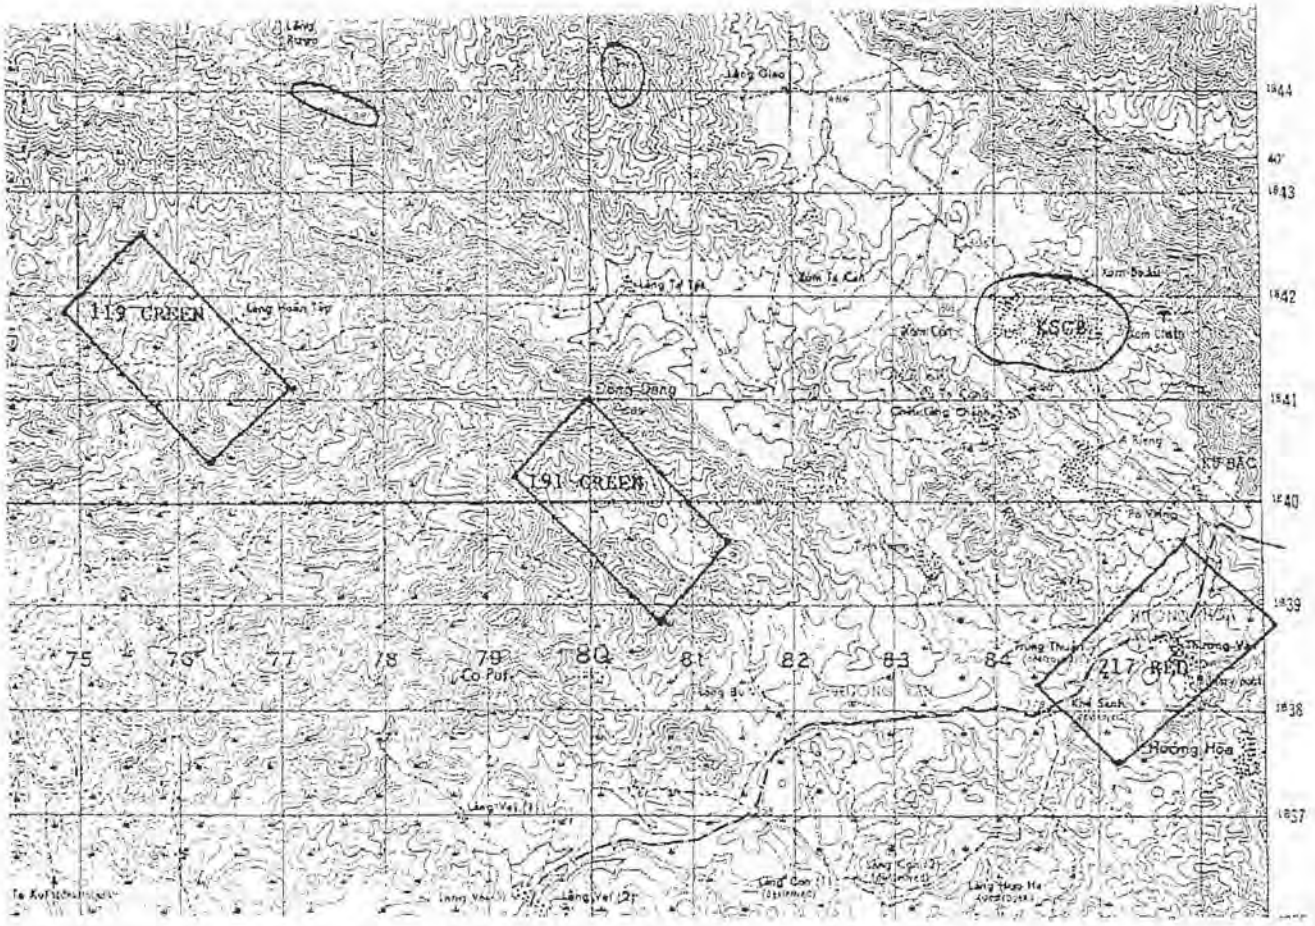
POSITIONS OF BATTALION 1/9 DURING THE SIEGE



POSITIONS OF 2/26 DURING THE SIEGE

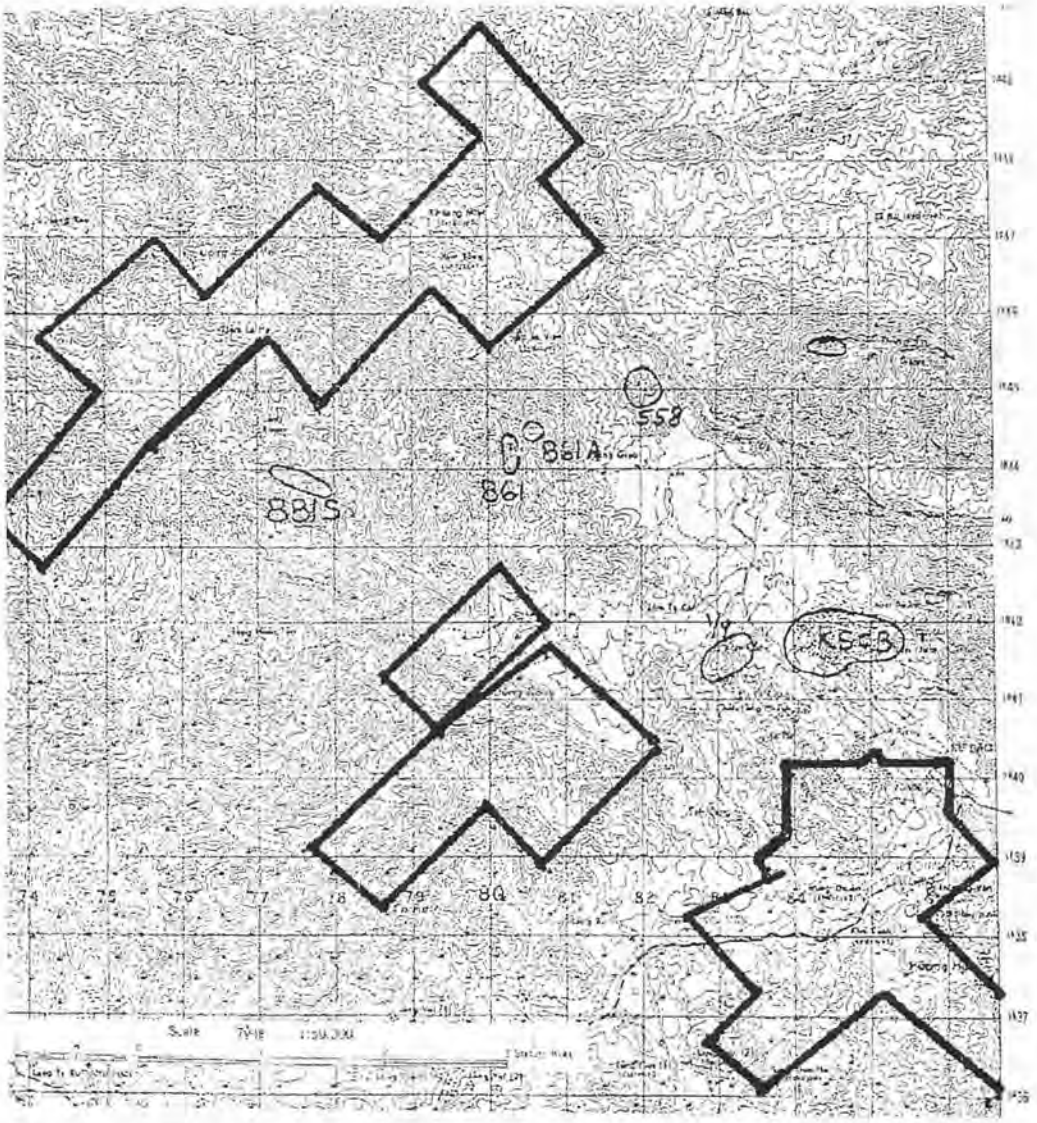


AREA OF 1/9 CONTACT, 16 APRIL 1968

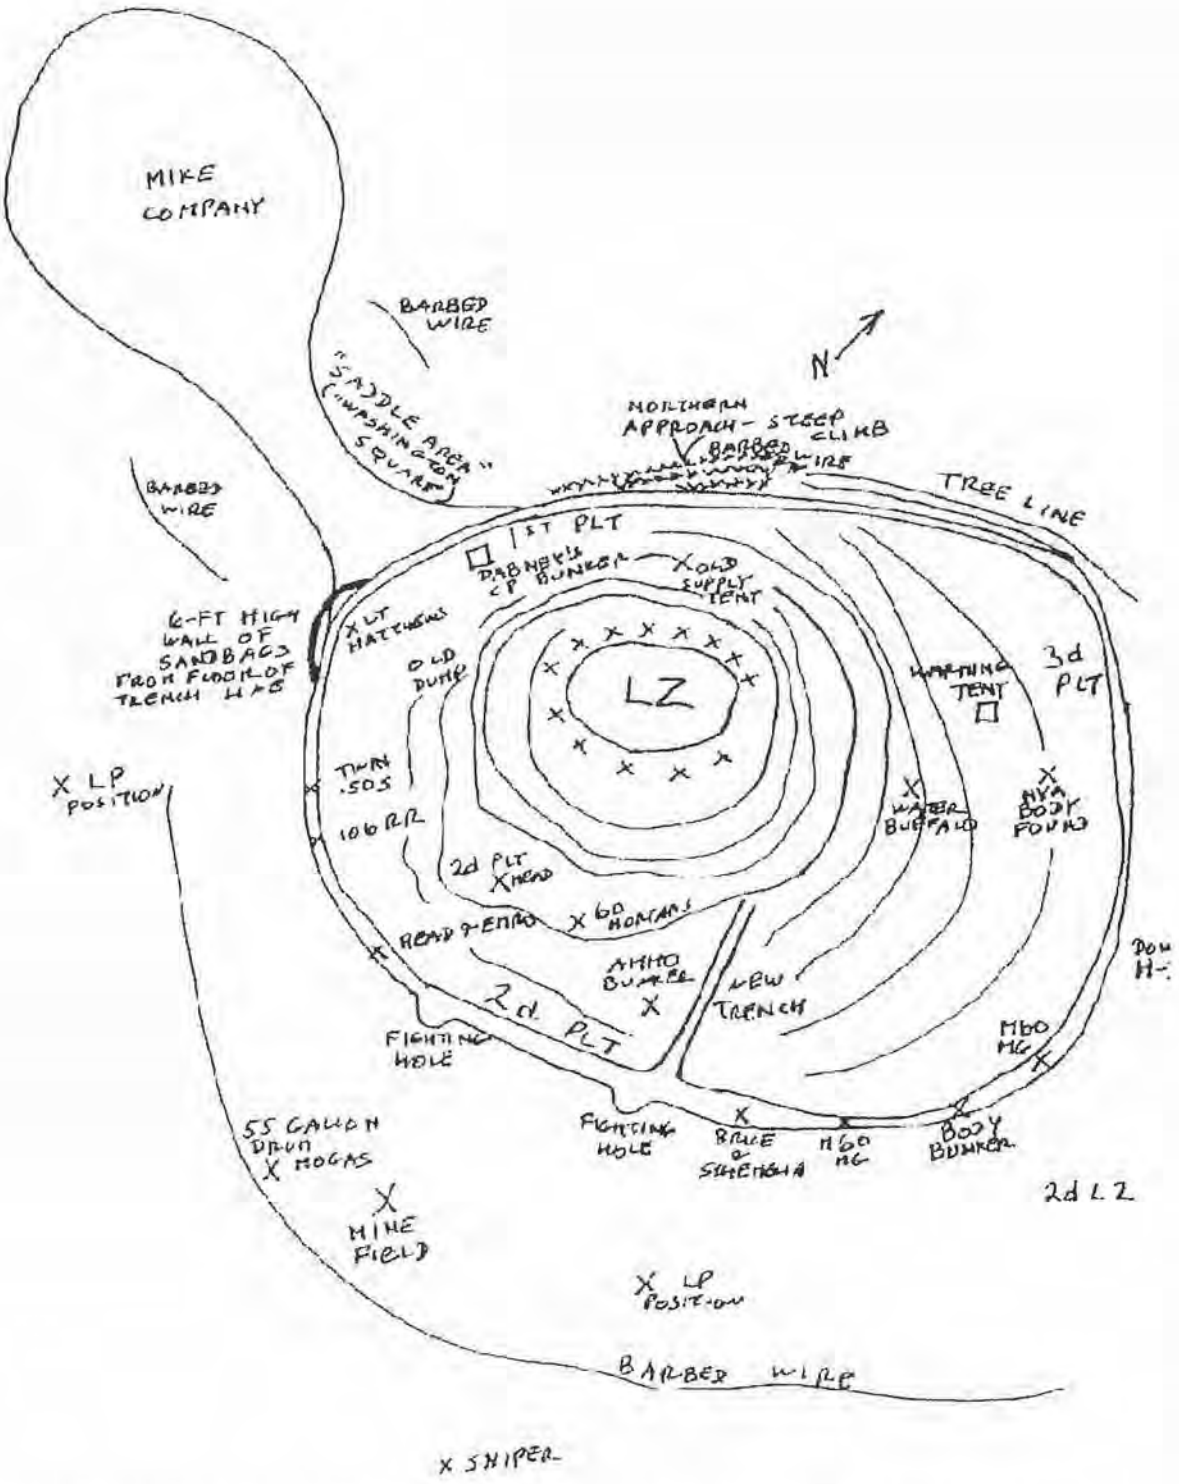


ARC LIGHT STRIKES 27 FEB 1968 INVOLVING THE TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF KHE SANH VILLAGE

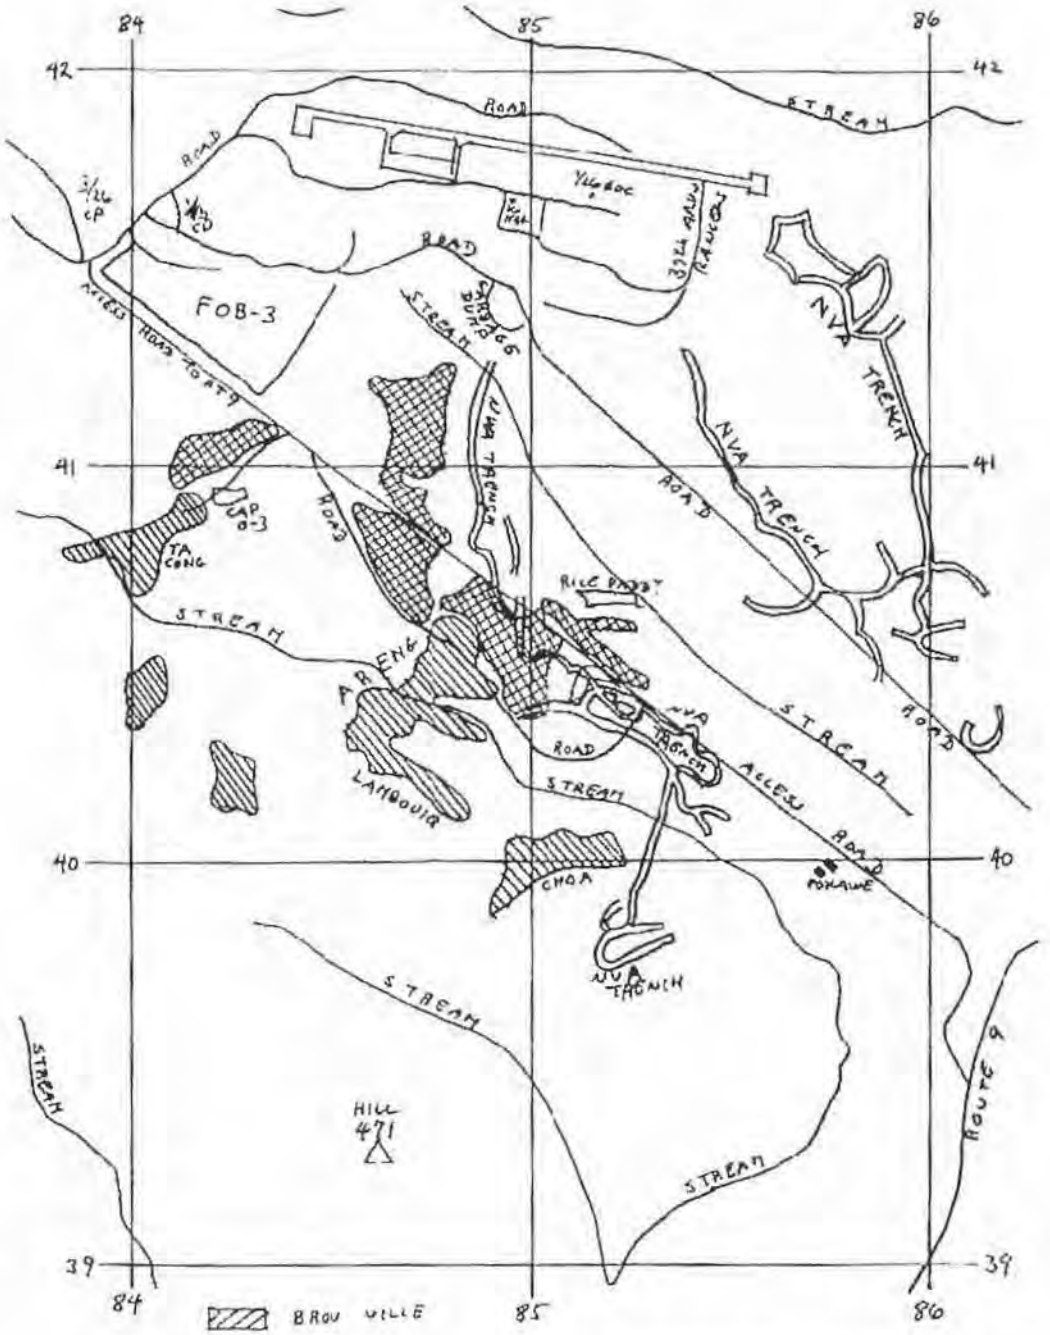
KHE SANH 119 GREEN, located approx 2000 meters southwest of Hill 881S (XD756426 - XD771411 - XD763404) was struck with 6 aircraft and produced 2 hours of secondary explosions [COMUSMACV 261727Z/FEB68 in III MAF COC Journal and File 26-27Feb68 #276; 3rd MarDiv COC 070645Z/Mar68, Arc Light BDA in III MAF Operation SCOTLAND Journal File Pt. 5, #383; III MAF COC 081551Z/Mar68, Arc Light BDA in III MAF COC Journal and File 08-09 Mar 68 #342]. KHE SANH 191 GREEN, some 3,000 meters southwest of KSCB, XD793403 - XD807389 - XD800410 - XD814396]. KHE SANH 217 RED, THE DESTRUCTION OF KHE SANH VILLAGE: XD852375 - XD867389 - XD844383 - XD859390]. [COMUSMACV 261727Z/Feb68, 260643Z/Feb68, and 260641Z/Feb68, Arc Light Strike, in III MAF COC Journal and File 26-27 Feb 68, #276, 278, and 279, respectively].



ARC LIGHT STRIKES 01 - 05 MARCH 1968



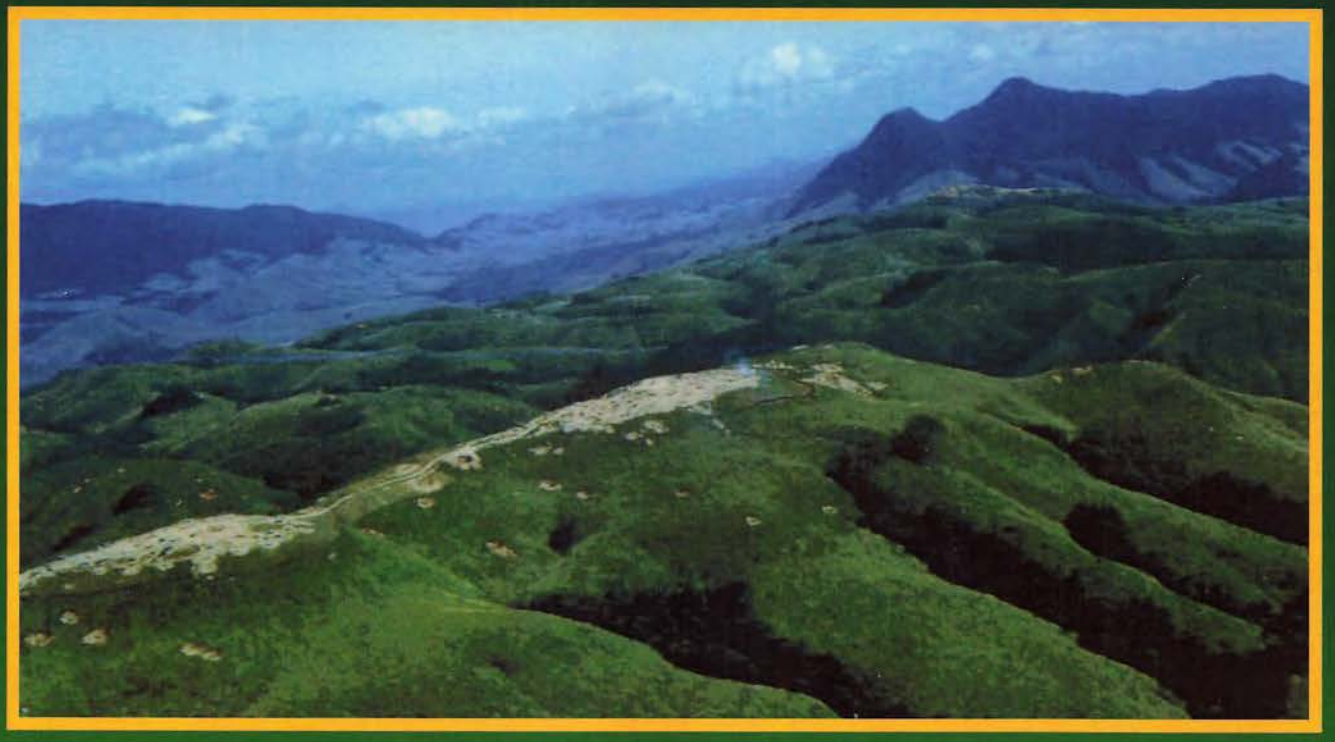
HILL 881-SOUTH DURING SIEGE [Letter from James E. Schemelia, 04 July 1984]



NVA TRENCH SYSTEM (Early March, 1968)
(Copied Mar68 from diagram in COG; trees from photo of Jan68)

NVA TRENCH SYSTEM DURING SIEGE

HOME WAS WHERE THEY "DUG IT", SOMETIMES IT WAS A LONG WALK TO MINISTER MY FLOCK. CHAPLAIN RAY W. STUBBE



HILLS 950 & 1015 IN BACKROUND, AND HILL 861 BELOW THEM. VIEW LOOKING NORTHWEST. SHOWING MAIN & WESTERN "FINGER PORTION" OF 881 SOUTH

SOUTHERN SLOPE OF HILL 881 SOUTH LOOKING NORTH

PEBBLES IN MY BOOTS Vol. 3

A SELECTION OF
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS INCLUDING:
"Khe Sanh: The Setting"
"Bunkers: A Personal Reflection on Dealing with PTSD"
Selected prayers, letters, articles, and presentations

BY
CHAPLAIN RAY WILLIAM STUBBE
WAUWATOSA, WISCONSIN
25 February 2014

PEBBLES IN MY BOOTS Vol. 3

A SELECTION OF
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS INCLUDING:
"Khe Sanh: The Setting"
"Bunkers: A Personal Reflection on Dealing with PTSD"
Selected prayers, letters, articles, and presentations

BY

CHAPLAIN RAY WILLIAM STUBBE

WAUWATOSA, WISCONSIN
25 February 2014

TABLE OF CONTENTS

FOREWORD i

ESSAYS:

Khe Sanh: The Setting 1
Born in Violence 1
Early History: The Lao Bao Pass and Route 9 (Quoc Luong 9 or "QL-9") 4
Prison 13
The Back Yard 16
Early French Settlers 20
Missionaries 31
Capture of Millers 36
Subsequent Years 37
The Brou 38
Siege Period 47
Refugee Village 50
In Subsequent Years 54
Bunkers: A Personal Reflection on Dealing with PTSD 55
Prologue 55
Narrowed Life 58
Ancient Words Packaged our Experience: Narrowed Life 63
Genius Loci 71
Broad Place 72
Wider Context 75
Memorial Services 86
1983: WHEN I PLUNGED INTO THE PIT OF PTDS 89
Talk to Lutheran Church Women, 21 May 1983 89
Chaplain's Corner, 28 Oct 1983 95
Funeral Meditation for Lance Corporal David B. Gander 95
Prayer, Veterans Day Ceremony, Chicago, Il, 11 Nov 1983 97

PRESENTATIONS, PRAYERS, LETTERS, NOTES

Khe Sanh Vets in the New York City Ticker Tape Parade, 07 May 1985 98
Diary notes while a patient at Stress Disorder Treatment Unit, North Chicago VA, IL 99
Proposed Logo for Khe Sanh Vets, Inc, 07 Aug 1996 99
A Personal Note from your Temporary Editor, Spring, 1998 100
Talking Points on Khe Sanh, 11 Feb 2007 101
Letter to Beverly Welbourne, 20 July 2006 104
Letter to James Dingman, 06 August 2007 104
Near Death Experiences, 06 September 2008 105
A Few Humorous Incidents recalled during my service as a Chaplain, 13 July 2011 108
Letter to Larkin Spivey, 31 May 2011 112
Letter to Peter W. Brush, 05 June 2011 113
Letter to Lance Larson, 06 June 2011 113
Letter to William Biolsi, 06 June 2011 114
Letter to Roger Howes, 08 June 2011 114
Letter to Roger Howes, 13 August 2011` 114
Prayers for the 20th Anniversary of the Dedication of the Vietnam Monument, Milwaukee, WI 115
Letter to Constance Gibbons, 24 October 2011 115
A Note on Living with the Legacy of the Experience of Intense, Prolonged Combat 115
Prayer on Veterans Day, 11 November 2011 116
Veterans Day Talk, Miller Coors Brewing Company, 11 November 2011 – Veterans Day Origin 117
Letter to James Taylor, 02 December 2011 119
Letter to Anthony E. Sibley, 23 December 2011 120

Letter to Steven Lownds, 28 January 2012 121
Letter to Ben Cascio, Esq., 21 May 2012 121
Flag Day Prayer, Milwaukee, WI, 14 June 2012 122
Letter to Fince Rios, 02 July 2012 123
Letter to William Biolsi, 03 July 2012 124
Prayer for Visiting Vietnam Wall Ceremony, Oshkosh, WI 124
Letter to Rev. William Hampton 125
Letter to Lance Larson, 31 October 2011 125
Veterans Day Prayers, 2012 126
Prayer to remember a Civil War Veteran 11 November 2012 127
Letter to Rev. James Rutherford 128
Letter to Bob Cavanaugh, 14 February 2013 128
Letter to Ken and Betty Rodgers, 15 Feb 2013 129
Letter to Ken and Betty Rodgers, 13 April 2013 130
Letter to Roger Howes, 15 April 2013 131
Letter to Edward W. Welchel, 25 May 2013 132
Letter to Ron Wheat, 27 May 2013 133
Letter to James D. Armbrust, 29 May 2013 134
Letter to Julie Van Metre, 30 May 2013 134
Letter to M. Doc Piper, 02 June 2013 134
Flag Day Remarks and Prayer, 14 Jun 2013 135
Letter to Gary Foster, 21 June 2013 135
Letter to Lance Larson, 29 July 2013 136
Remarks, Moving Wall Ceremony, Pleasant Prairie, 14 Sep 2013 136
Prayer, Moving Wall Ceremony, Pleasant Prairie, 14 Sep 2013 138
Veterans Day, Invocation, Miller Coors Brewing Co., 11 November 2013 139
Veterans Day, Benediction, War Memorial Ceremony, 11 November 2013 139
Table Grace, Veterans Day, 11 November 2013 140
Remarks, World War II Veterans, Lutheran Home, Wauwatosa, WI 140

SHORT INTERVIEWS
Interview with Mike Bartley,(WITI) 27 February 1993 141
Conversation with Yvonne Sluga, (WYMS) 20 May 1996 142
Conversation with Robin Holzhauer, 13 November 1996 (Wauwatosa News) 145
Interview by National Museum of the Marine Corps, Quantico, VA, 20 June 2005 148
INTERVIEW BY JAMES KURTZ, Wisconsin Veterans Museum, 05 Dec 05, 15 Feb 06, 26 Apr 06 149

APPENDIX
NATIONALLY BROADCASE TELEVISION PROGRAMS 208
MISCELLANEOUS INTERVIEWS 209
A SELECTION OF WRITINGS PERTAINING TO VIETNAM 210
PUBLIC APPEARANCES RELATING TO VIETNAM 214
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS AND QUOTATIONS INCLUDED IN BOOKS AND NEWS ARTICLES 217
CORRECTIONS TO VOLUMES 1 AND 2 OF PEBBLES 257

ILLUSTRATIONS
Tiger Tooth Mountain, Hill 1739 XD930546 3
Dr. Jules Harmand Expedition - 1876 6
Khe Sanh Area – 1876 Jules Harmand Expedition 7
Lao Bao Prison 13
Lao Bao Prison (Summer, 1967, photo by Fred Patton) 14
Felix Poilane 19 July 1967 with Marine pilots and his pet deer 27
John and Carolyn Miller and children interviewed by Shackney of CBS at their home 23 Oct 1967 35
Brou men carving crossbows in Tum Plang village, Khe Sanh, 26 September 1967 38
Brou villages at Khe Sanh and TAORs of Combined Action Company OSCAR 40
Brou man making crossbows in Tum Plang ville – 26 September 1967 41

HM3 Dale W. Faidley of CAP O-3 with Brou children – 26 Sep 1967 42
Brou children in ville – 13 Sep 1967 46
Brou refugee child 49
Bob Handy and Brou children – Mai Loc Refugee Center, 23 May 1968 53
Chaplain Stubbe's bunker in C Med, ca. Oct 12967 55
After Attack 56
Khe Sanh Combat Base 57
Shrapnel damage at Khe Sanh 58
Marines at Khe Sanh temporarily taking shelter during siege 60
26th Marines COC bunker – 14 April 1968 62
Khe Sanh Trot 67
Digging to improve defenses 69
CH-53 in which pilots were killed 71
We shared everything in our trenches and bunkers 78
Recon trench, 14 Apr 1968 79
Chaplain Stubbe leading worship for Marines of C/1/26, 28 Jan 1968 84
Memorial Service on Khe Sanh Airstrip – 10 October 1968 88
New York City Ticker Tape Parade – 07 May 1985 98
Proposed Logo for Khe Sanh Veterans, Inc., 07 Aug 1996 99
Marble Mt. Area, DaNang 107
Chaplain Stubbe on Crow's Nest, Marble Mountains, DaNang 107
Scout dog and Marines on Hill 861, 11 Aug 1967 109
FOB-3 Pass for Colonel Lownds 121
Stubbe, Lownds, Breeding, and Kaheny at Rappold Monument, July, 1997 121
Flag Day 2012 122
Marines of C/1/26 at Swim Hole, Bridge Site, 08 August 1967 125
With my Uncle Ray during World War II 140

FOREWORD

The following is the third volume in the series, Pebbles in My Boots, collections of various types of documents through the years that concern what may be likened to pebbles in a boot, eyelashes in an eye, slivers in a finger, a nagging headache, a melody that one cannot get out of one's mind, a persistent problem or nagging thought. These are minor things that seek to take the entire stage, like small "black holes" of exceedingly dense matter that attract all energy and emit none, which suck in all our energy, our life's concern. They are what Tillich once described as "demonic": referring to the process in which a part attempts to become the whole. In this particular case, the essays, prayers, talks, notes, sermons, poems, and other items in these volumes are echoes of experiences of intense and prolonged battle at Khe Sanh, Vietnam, in 1967-1968.

Volume 3, very probably the last in the series, begins with an essay, "Khe Sanh: The Setting" which provides the larger context on which the bloodiest battle of Vietnam unfolded. Much more happened here than that battle. This essay helps to provide a better understanding of the contours of the landscape of our experience, shaping what happened. Formed with the collision of large land masses many millions of years in the past and more recently (the past 10,000 or so years) through volcanic action, the subsequent battleground saw two large forces colliding (echoing in the Sates as two energized, almost frenzied factions tore the fabric of American society). The eruption of almost inconceivable violent destruction (perhaps 40,000 or more killed in three months, more tons of bombs dropped in the immediate vicinity that in all of World War II in the Pacific) produced the bloodiest battle of Vietnam.. In recent centuries, invading forces passed through Khe Sanh on what eventually became Route 9.

A major prison in the area, imprisoning both Giap and Ho Chi Minh, may help explain their fixation on Khe Sanh. The fall of a nearby Laotian city, Tchepone, focused American attention on all of Vietnam and may be the reason we eventually sent advisors followed by large numbers of troops. The early French settlers, missionaries, and local Montagnard tribal people are all discussed in this introductory essay.

The second essay, "Bunkers: A Personal Reflection on Dealing with PTSD," describes the initial attack on 21 January 1968 and subsequent horrors of the siege with its resulting, reverberating effects on people in terms of a narrowed life (angst) and broadened life (larger context) as a description of the process of PTSD, an attempt to provide an understanding of "what is" for those who experience prolonged and intense combat

The collection of items in "1983: When I Plunged into the pit of PTSD," reflects attempts to find God and to discern a meaning in the midst of the shambles and wreckage of a time when numerous TV images of Vietnam (in connection with the new Vietnam Memorial Wall in DC) rekindled flames of fireplace logs which had almost cooled into dark, unnoticed ash. The fires of confusion and panic, fanned by contemporary events in my life—not only the TV images (which made me wonder if any were still alive who were with me at Khe Sanh), but also the death of my grandmother and my imminent retirement from the Navy Chaplain Corps (which had become my life), plunged me into PTSD. The experience, upon much later reflection, seemed to resonate the paradigm of baptism—being buried in the waters (which, for the ancient Hebrew symbolized chaos and death) and emerging an entirely new person with new eyes to see reality more clearly. (One is reminded of Plato's tale of the cave in Republic, Book VII, not only of seeing reality instead of shadows, but also the propensity of the cave-dwellers to blind him and even put him to death—e.g., isolate him through institutionalization and marginalization). A review of a career as a Navy Chaplain's activities, a mystical meditation printed in the local Navy base newspaper, a funeral meditation for a Marine killed in Beirut, and a prayer at the dedication of the Chicago Vietnam Memorial Fountain, conclude this dark essay.

The following items echo Khe Sanh in subsequent years, beginning with the 1985 New York City Ticker Tape Parade, a logo (symbol) of Khe Sanh, and various talks, letters, essays, prayers, poems, talks, and interviews.

Appendices list nationally broadcast TV programs in which I appear, miscellaneous interviews, my writings that touch on Khe Sanh, public appearances relating to Vietnam, a listing of quotations in books and news articles, and a list of corrections to Pebbles, Volumes 1 and 2, conclude this book which hopefully may be helpful to those seeking to make rational sense of what is essentially irrational and to understand what is far from usual human life, to grasp what is ungraspable. Reality is always greater than our awareness of it and our awareness of it is always greater than anything we say about it or remember of it, as evidenced by others from the same experience providing details we didn't notice, and the experience of the great Russian author, Dostoevsky's lament that he couldn't put into words the images in his mind. The attempt becomes like climbing a pole coated with grease, or the ancient Greek myth of Sisyphus rolling the stone up the hill but never reaching the top; the stone always rolls back down the hill as the one rolling it continually attempts to roll it to the top. Perhaps the pain of attempting to unfold the hidden memories and communicate them to others conjures the myth of Prometheus who gives mankind the gift of fire but for his efforts is chained to a rock on Mount Caucasus on which his liver is pecked at eternally by an eagle (or vulture) until he is finally released by Hercules. My own metaphor is of an old LP record which is scratched by violent, damaging action and replays the same song continuously and disturbs one until someone else picks up the playing arm, lifts it and moves it so that the song of life may continue.

For me personally, however dark and chaotic the times (both in warfare and in subsequent times of PTSD), God has always been present, in the shadows, in the pit, on the crosses that kill. "Truly God was in this place and I did not know it." (Gen. 28.16).

–Ray William Stubbe
25 February 2014

KHE SANH: THE SETTING

BORN IN VIOLENCE

When those attempting to resolve mysteries of the Missing in Action in Vietnam returned to the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei, they brought along Captain Frank Willoughby[1] to indicate the position of his command bunker.

> "When Willoughby got up there, he was flabbergasted. We had dug in one place which we thought—we'd used the old imagery—we thought we were digging at the right place, and there was nothing there. Well, when he got up there and looked around—it took him awhile to orient himself—the entire place had changed. It used to be forest all the way you could see to the west. There was hardly a tree out there. There's some sort of brick-making concern or tile-making concern not far away and they'd been excavating the earth there at the old Lang Vei for use for the manufacture of bricks or tile. They had excavated it out to the point where it had changed the terrain. ... They searched and searched and they eventually found the location of part of the bunker. They did excavate the site, but as I recall, they didn't find any remains."[2]

Veterans of the Khe Sanh siege who have returned to the Khe Sanh Combat Base have frequently remarked at their inability to orient themselves and discern the airstrip. They are unaware that the US Army constructed a parallel airstrip to support their operations during LAM SON 719 in January-March, 1971[3], or that the North Vietnamese occupied the base in 1973 during which they installed missiles and greatly lengthened the airstrip.[4] Subsequent developments on that ground had completely altered its landscape in only a few decades!

A thousand periods of a thousand years each is a million years—just a flash in the history of our planet. Geology studies periods of time extending backwards many millions of years, during which major changes to the landscape occur. From radioactive decay, fossils, and other measurements such as magnetism, it is apparent that some land masses were once joined together, like the eastern coast of South America and the western coast of Africa. Continents move atop molten rock on a gradually cooling planet. Occasionally these plates separate and by volcanic action, the molten rock beneath erupts to form new islands in the ocean or earthquakes on land.

About seventy million years ago, such large piece of land we now know as India, moved northwards some 4,000 miles over a period of 30 million years from the eastern coast of Africa and, approximately 40 million years ago, gradually slammed

---

[1] Commanding Officer of A-101, the US Special Forces unit at Lang Vei immediately before the siege and when the unit fell on 07 February 1968. Willoughby died 26 April 2000.

[2] Conversation with Mr. Robert DeStatte, 08 November 1995. Mr. DeStatte was then working with the DOD's POW/MIA Task force.

[3] Arriving 2130, 31 Jan 1971, the 27th Engineer BN joined forces with Task Force 326 to build the runway. While an initial survey of the existing 3500-ft. airstrip indicated it could be quickly repaired, later survey of it indicated extreme damage from artillery and rockets with well over 50 significant holes and significant sub-grade washout. Consequently, a parallel assault airstrip, 60 ft. by 3200 ft. was constructed and used until the permanent strip could be repaired. The new 3200 x 60 ft. airstrip was completed on 4 Feb 1971 and the air facility at Khe Sanh became operational on 14 Feb 1971. [Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed, 2008, p. 422].

[4] North Vietnamese development of Khe Sanh within days of the ceasefire that began on 27 January 1973, was reported in February when the South Vietnamese accused North Vietnam of emplacing three anti-aircraft missile sites near Khe Sanh which were disclosed in aerial photography on 18 Feb. ["Red Missile Sites Reported in South," Milwaukee Journal, Monday, 26 Feb 1973, p. 2]. The following month, the missile sites were removed. ["Reds Bow to Ultimatum, Shift Khe Sanh Missiles," Pacific Stars & Stripes, Tue., 13 March 1973, p. 1]. The following month, two helicopters containing 16 members of the International Commission for Control and Supervision (including representatives from North Vietnam), enroute to Lao Bao were shot down. Lao Bao, with a population then of 350, was one of three ports of entry and the ICCS was preparing to station a team there to monitor supplies moving through the border. ["2 ICCS Copters Lost in Viet, "Pacific Stars and Stripes, 27:98 (Monday, 9 Apr 1973), p. 1].. In May, 1973, 4 missile sites were reported at Khe Sanh which also noted the airstrip had been improved. ["SAM Site Spotted," Pacific Stars & Stripes, Monday, 7 May 1973, p. 6]. In August, 1973, news reports indicated that engineers and labor gangs were extending the airstrip at Khe Sanh to more than a mile in length and covering it with steel matting. [Hoffman, Fred S., "N. Viets Plan to Hold Land?" Pacific Stars & Stripes, Wednesday, 22 Aug 1973, p. 6]. Another news report of August, 1973 reported Khe Sanh was occupied by 8,000 to 10,000 North Vietnamese and the base now included storage and supply areas equipped with several surface-to-air missiles, anti-aircraft guns and heavy artillery. Photography revealed the runway was now 5,300 ft. long. [Huet, Marc, "Reds Build Khe Sanh into Fortress," Pacific Stars & Stripes, Thurs., 30 Aug 1977.]

into Tibet in Asia lifting it up some three miles and forming the Himalaya Mountains. Scientists have determined it continues to move north at the rate of two inches per year.[5]

Another such collision of land mass occurred when a chunk off the coast of Australia moved north and collided on the coast of what is now Laos during the Devonian period.[6] A shallow, neritic[7] sea lapped against the edges of this land mass (Indochinese Massif Central).[8] The "Kontum Massif," formed some 120 million years ago,[9] moved beneath an ancient sea bed of deposited shells and sea life which formed limestone over millions of years.[10] Red sandstone, containing the remains of reptiles and silicified wood, covers all of lower Laos.[11]The collision, about 40 million years ago,[12] formed the 1300 mile-long Annamite Cordillera,[13] (also known as the Trung Son Cordillera), an almost impenetrable boundary between Laos and Vietnam, gradually lifting up an ancient sea bed. Results of this collision are visible in steep declivities on the eastern side (facing Vietnam) while more gentle slopes are seen on the western side (facing the interior of Laos).[14] Thus was formed, for example, the Co Roc Massif, the cliff land mass in Laos facing Vietnam. Over millions of years, as the land gradually rose, abundant monsoon rainfalls carved numerous caves in Co Roc as well as the entire area.[15] During the 1968 siege battle at Khe Sanh, NVA emplaced artillery which fired on Khe Sanh Combat Base from these caves. Other caves in the Khe Sanh area

---

[5] Time-Life Books, eds., Voyage Through the Universe, The Third Planet. Alexandria, Va.: Time-Life Books, 1989, p. 52.

[6] Of the Paleozoic Era, approximately 380 million years ago.

[7] "neritic": the shallow part of the sea near a coast and overlaying the continental shelf.

[8] Hoffet, J.H., "Notice sur le Feuille de Hue, 1933, and Complements – 1962 par H. Fontaine et E. Saurin,. Dalat: Service Geographique National du Viet Nam, 1962, p. 5. Workman, however, dates gneisses from the Kontum Massif at 520 million years. [Workman, "Geological Structure of the Indochina Peninsula," Proceedings, Regional Conference on the Geology and Mineral Resources of Southeast Asia, Jakarta, 4-7 August 1976, ed. S. Siryosujono and A. Sudadjat, p. 206]. Workman also dates its age at 530 million years ago. [Workman, Geology of Laos, Cambodia, South Vietnam and the eastern part of Thailand. Institute of Geological Sciences, National Environment Research Council, Overseas Geology and Mineral Resources, 1977, p. 5].

[9] Hutchison, Charles S., Geological Evolution of South-east Asia, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1989, p. 43.

[10] J.H. Hoffet, a French geologist, explored the Khe Sanh area during 1920-1930 and was informed by Captain Laval, a colonist at Lao Bao, of the existence along the banks of the XePone River, a few hundred meters from Colonial Route No. 9, of a deposit of very large trunks of Araucariosylon, layered and embedded in the sandstone. [J.H. Hoffet, Etude geologique sur le centre de l'Indochine entre Tourane et le Mekong (Annam Central et Bas-Laos), Hanoi, 1933, p. 95.. The Araucariocylon is a tree closely related to living araucarias, a large group of the pine family now confined to the southern hemisphere. [Simpson, George Gaylord, Fossils and the History of Life. Scientific American library. New York: Scientific American Books, 1983, p. 21].

[11] Hoffett, Notice sur.. op. cit., P. 6].

[12] Hutchison, op. cit., pp. 50, 126, 150. During the Namurian-Viséan time. (The Viséan is the lower Carboniferous, also referred to as the Mississippi system in the US. The Namurian is referred to as the Pennsylvania System in the US. H. Fontaine notes: "The Kontum Massif is supposed to have collided into South China Block during Middle Paleozoic. On the other hand, limestone is very widespread in Central Indochina (Viet Nam and Laos) and is particularly developed in the Carboniferous and the Permian. Sea went away from Southeast Asia mainland after the Triassic in many places and after the Lower Jurassic in the rest of the region.;" [Fontaine, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 11 Oct 1990].

[13] A "cordillera" is a chain of mountains, usually the principal system of mountain axis of a large land mass, such as the Andes Mountains in South America. Annam is the middle nation of what became Vietnam. Tonkin was the nation to the north, Cochinchina was the nation to the south. The "impenetrable barrier" of 1300 kilometers is mentioned by Fromaget, Jacques, "Indochine Francaise Sa Structure Geologique, ses Roches, ses Mines et Leurs Relations Possibles avec la Tectonique," Bulletin de Service Geologique de L'Indochine, Vol. XXVI, Fascicule 2, Hanoi, 1941, p. 8.

[14] Shrock, Joann L., Stockton, William, Jr., Murphy, Elaine M., and Fromme, Marion: Minority Groups in the Republic of Vietnam. Department of the Army Pamphlet No. 550-105, Ethnographic Study Series. Washington, D.C.: Headquarters, Dept of the Army, 1966, p. 55.

[15] Madame Madeleine Poilane noted: "All along the Annamese chain [caves existed]. This is the reason, moreover, that the Ho Chi Minh Trail was able to be built and protected. ... It was inconceivable to think that the V.C. might have retreats as secure and protected as these, but that explains why they were very mobile in making use of this route either on foot or bicycles, or bys truck. They were at home..; they wanted victory and these natural hiding places greatly contributed to their success. They took shelter there when the American planes passed overhead. They had the time to take refuge in these shelters or in the forest with all the agility for which they are famous." [Letter of Madame Madeleine Poilane to Ray W. Stubbe, 6 July 1990]. The NVA headquarters controlling the Khe Sanh siege battle, secretly designated "B5-T8" and located in Laos just west of the DMZ, was located in an area "..where massive limestone deposits dissolve in tropical downpours, sculpting needle-shaped pinnacles, sink holes, and culs-de-sac. North Vietnamese Army workshops, apartments, and stockpiles took advantage of giant caverns with cool, dry, blast-proof halls three or four stories high that extended 1,000 feet or more .. into many hillsides." [Collins, John M., Military Geography for Professionals and the Public, Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1998, p. 371].

provided safe and hidden places to cache supplies. Apparently, Hill 881-South contained a submerged field hospital prior to the 1967 Battle of the hills which collapsed during that battle from 10,000-pound bombs which were dropped on it.[16] Subsequently, Marines who dug bunkers opened spaces that belched forth overcoming fumes of decomposing bodies.

TOGER TOOTH MOUNTAIN, Hill 1739 XD930546

The collision of the Kontum Massif into the Indochinese Massif Central also caused eruptions of granitoids which are related to the rift-subduction or collision-related.[17] During the Quaternary (the recent, past million years to the present), Tiger Tooth Mountain[18] to the north of Khe Sanh Combat Base,[19] moved southeast.[20] The pressure from the northwest (like the movement of NVA against the Marines in 1968) eventually resulted in five small volcanoes, Cua Tung, Gia Linh, Cua, Khe Sanh, and A Dua Ap,[21] along with hot springs located between the volcano of Cua and that of Khe Sanh.[22] The first two volcanoes are located on a plain and do not exceed 100 meters. The third, the small plateau of Cua is 265 meters high; Khe Sanh is 400 meters high and A Dua Ap, 700 meters. "If one links, by drawing a line, these 5 basaltic plateaus, one gets a curve which marries perfectly in the contours of the Tiger's Tooth Massif ... This line, linking these 5 basaltic sites corresponds to a circular fault line, the line of least resistance, which was created at the moment of the great pressing."[23]

Thus, Khe Sanh was born in great heat and violence of volcanic eruption. The subsequent siege battle of 1968 might make one ponder whether a spirit of violence shrouded that area from its inception! Indeed, two-thirds of Vietnam is occupied by metamorphic and igneous rocks.[24]

The volcanic basalt, upon weathering, decomposes into red laterite clay[25] which covers the Khe Sanh area, and was the reason Eugene Poilane began cultivation of coffee in the 1920s since the soil is rich and fertile. With the further advantage of a winterless climate, essential for rubber, tea, and coffee cultivation, the red laterite soil of Khe Sanh was especially suitable for Poilane's coffee plantation. Coffee was first introduced in Indochina in 1888, and in 1937, 1,500 tons of coffee were produced.[26] Additionally, since native Bru were, at the time, not civilized, Vietnamese were brought to work the plantation,

---

[16] SFC James Perry, Medic on the 4-man MACV Advisory Team #4 in Khe Sanh ville, later noted that the NVA had a hospital and field mess in the caves and tunnels in Hill 881-South, and that as many as three or four thousand NVA may have been killed as these caved-in during the bombardment. [Conversation with James Perry, 28 May 1986]. As the Battle of the Hills erupted, on 24 April, 2/Lt Thomas G King of B/1/9, reported his two platoons swept the cave complex of Hill 861. Sgt. Roger Ynostrom, "Hill 861 Cave Complex Shields NVA Battalion," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:19 (12 May 1967), p. 12. Madame Poilane writes: "The Viet Cong were able to hide in these caves where there was water available, were able to build fire and cook their meals without anyone seeing the smoke. They also slept in them and used them as a site to care for their sick and wounded." [Madame Madeleine Poilane, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 6 July 1990].

[17] Hutchison, op. cit., p. 293.

[18] XD 832543. The age of Tiger Tooth Mountain is difficult to determine due to the lack of clear contacts and true metamorphic aureoles. [Hoffett, Notice sur la Feuille, op. cit., p.; 9].

[19] The site of the first US Marine operations and infantry unit (76 Marines from G/2/3) at Khe Sanh when Major Alfred M. Gray, Jr.'s Signal Engineering Survey Unit (SESU) occupied it in April-June, 1964

[20] Hoffet, J.H., Etude geologique sur.., op. cit., pp. 119, 129, 134; "Notice sur la Feuille de Hue," op. cit., p. 7.

[21] Approx. locations: Cua Tung (YD280810), Gia Linh (YD210420), Cua (YD100540), Khe Sanh (XD835418), and A Dua Ap (XD693508). The eruption of these basalts occurred over an extended period of time, ceasing some time less than 600,000 years ago. "The lack of alteration observed in certain basalt flows suggests, moreover, a very recent age." [Workman, D.R., Geology of Laos, Cambodia, South Vietnam, op. cit., p. 30].

[22] Hoffett, Etude, op. cit., p. 131.

[23] Ibid.

[24] Thach, Tran kim, "Structural Geology of the Republic of Viet-Nam: a Preliminary Survey," CCOP Newsletter 1:4 (June, 1974), p. 22.

[25] Hofett, Notice sur la Feuille de Hue, op. cit., p. 12, 24; Hoffett, Etude, op. citl., p. 117.

[26] Fisher, Charles A., South-East Asia, A Social, Economic and Political Geography, London: Methuen & Co., 1964, p. 541.

and thus Khe Sanh village developed. When Poilane arrived, there was only one house on Route 9, the engineer who supervised the construction of Route 9.

The laterite soil became as slippery as ice during the rains and collapsed trenches and bunkers built by Marines in late 1967, some with fatal result.[27]

Gold is found in the streams of the Annamite Cordillera,[28] and arsenic is found in the hot springs of the Huong Hoa River.[29] Hematite (iron ore) is found south of the highway running from Dong Ha to Lao Bao,. "It appears to be of sedimentary origin and perhaps dates from the Upper Permian, also indicating a period of immersion."[30] However, n extensive mineral survey of Southeast Asia reports an absence in the Khe Sanh area of iron ore, cassiterite (tin), wolframite (tungsten), molybednite (molybdenum), chromite, copper minerals, lead and zinc minerals, stibnite (tin), uranium minerals, gold, silver, bauxite (aluminum), manganese minerals, phosphate rock, rock salt and gypsum, potash, graphite, limestone for cement, quartz sand, clay minerals, precious stones, coal, lignite, petroleum, and natural gas.[31]

The rock quarry at Khe Sanh became the source of basalt which was crushed to form a drainage base beneath the metal air matting, making the airstrip useable despite heavy monsoon rains which had washed away much of the laterite base. The "rock quarry" site was examined on 23 August 1967.[32]

The Annamite Cordillera only offered a few mountain passes: Mu Gia (WE 8153 (17-40 N / 105-47E), Ban Karai (WE 262117 (17-22 N / 106-09 E), and the D'Ai Lao Pass where Route 9 passes from Vietnam into Laos along Route 9 near Khe Sanh (XD 697368 (16-37 N / 106-36 E). The latter has been described as linking "up with a barely hillocky basalt plateau covered with grass and groves. The pass, about 150 meters high, is not even marked by a difference in slope that is visible to the naked eye."[33] Because of this pass, Route 9 passed through Khe Sanh and became a strategic entry point for invasions through the centuries between Vietnam and lands to the west.

EARLY HISTORY

THE LAO BAO PASS AND ROUTE 9 (Quoc Luong 9 or "QL-9")

It is this latter mountain pass by which attacking armies moved east into central Vietnam (the country of Annam) and moved attacking westward into Laos. In 1282 the Mongol General, Sogatu, followed the route through Lao Bao moving westward.[34] along the present Route 9 passage to attack the Annamites, forcing them into the mountains. (On American tactical maps, Khe Sanh Combat Base is labeled "Xom Cham"[35] (literally, "village of Chams"), thus denoting the home of warriors. (The Chams established their kingdom in 192 AD with their capitol in what is now Hue City. They continued to move northward, replacing the original aboriginal tribes (like the Bru) which were pushed into the hills, and conducted raids into the area around what is now Hanoi. In the Centuries following there was almost continuous warfare in what is now Quang Tri Province between the Chams and others. The Chams were known for their fierce, war-like quality as pirates, and for their

---

[27] The bunker being constructed to house the regimental comm section collapsed on 17 Sep 1967, killing PFCs Omar David WITMER and Ronald Olin McCLUNG.

[28] Hoffett, Notice sur la Feuille, op. cit., p. 21.

[29] Ibid., p. 48.

[30] Ibid., p. 41.

[31] Fontaine, H., and Workman, D.R., "Review of the Geology and Mineral Resources of Kampuchea, Laos and Vietnam," Third regional Conference on Geology and Mineral Resources of Southeast Asia, Bangkok, Thailand, 14-18 November 1978, pp. 582-595.

[32] Ireton, John C., Director of Construction, DaNang Area Naval Facilities Engineering command Contracts, Republic of Vietnam, Letter ECJ:eaj, Ser 874, Sep 5, 1967, Subj: Report on the Examination of Quarry Site and Aircraft Landing Facilities at Khe Sanh Outpost, Republic of Vietnam; forwarding of. The base under the M-2 matting required 5 to 8 inches of crushed rock on top of the existing laterlaste subgrade. The basalt knob was located about 2,500 meters directly west of the Khe Sanh COC, one of three small isolated knobs at approx. XD825415, Map Sheet 63423 III N, Series L8020.

[33] Bourret, "La Chaine Annamitique et le Plateau du Bas Laos a Ouest de Hue," ["The Annamitic Chain and the Plateau of Lower Laos to the West of Hue"], Bulletin du Service Gelogique de l'Indochine, Vol. XIV, Fascicule V, Hanoi, 1925, p. 20.

[34] Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Sons of the Mountains, New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1982, p. 85. Reference is made to Henri Maspero, "Histoire d'Annam," pp. 35-36.

[35] U.S. Army, Army Map Service, Series L7014, Vietnam 1:50,000, Edition 3, Sheet 6342 III, Huong Hoa, at XD850418; Dept. of Defense, 652 D Engineer Battalion, Series 7014, Vietnam 1:50,000, Sheet 6342 III, Edition 6, Huong Hoa, at XD 845417; Dept. of the Army, Army Map Service, 29th Engineer BN, Series L803, Vietnam Special Use, 1:12,500, Sheet 6342 III H, "Khe Sanh and Vicinity," at XD850417.

artistic style. During the Vietnam War, there was a Cham Museum in DaNang housing specimens of their art. When the Mongols invaded in 1282, the Chams moved westward into the mountains.[36])

From the mid-18th Century, the Annam kings, Vo Vuong (1738-65) and Gia Long (1802-20), extended Vietnamese authority into the highlands of the present Savannakhet Province of Laos by moving through the D'Al Lao Pass moving into Tchepone.[37] In 1827, Siamese (Thai) forces moved through the D'Al Lao Pass and the Vietnamese abandoned their positions, fleeing to Cam Lo.[38] The occupation of the Annamitic[39] mountain chain by the Siamese was disastrous for the Montagnard tribes involving imposition of tax to be paid in gold and massive transplantations of the population. "Overcome with hopelessness, their fields .. abandoned the tribes fell into terrible poverty."[40]

On 24 July 1877, Dr. Jules Harmand, a Navy doctor, set out from the Mekong for Cam Lo in Annam. After several different attempted routes, he left Tchepone and finally arrived at Al Lao (Lao Bao) in August, 1877.[41] Also called "Dinh," and "D-Al Lao," Lao Bao contained a penitentiary "..which serves as a site for exiles, much like New Caledonia, destined mainly for women, children and those convicted of political crimes by Tong-king. .. The place is extremely unhealthy .. to live in Dinh might seem a disguised death sentence without bloodshed. It appears that few survive more than four or five years under such miserable conditions."[42]

While in the (Khe Sanh) area, he moved through mountain slopes and noted indications of a road in used in times past. He reached the Rao Quan River on 29 July 1877:

> "I discovered a torrential river which flows into the Sea of China. This is the Rao Quan. Though I had yet to cross the great mountain chain, I could perceive their deep-blue summits and the deep valleys which cut through them, yielding passage to this great river. Evening. I have encountered a group of savages who were seized with terror upon seeing me, throwing down their arms and kneeling before me. Their charming village is Mois [Montagnards]... The poor souls, who speak a little Annamite, received me as best they could, without asking me any questions. The ancient chief put his immense house at my disposal! They bring me dry fish and rice. They also roasted for me a squirrel I had killed along the way. ... The next morning, I went hunting in the ravines, which yielded a good harvest of plants. It is beautiful country—if I had provisions, I might be tempted to remain for three or four days longer. ... We had to descend the steepest of inclines to reach narrow valley floor where we discovered the river Rao Quan,. Here the Rao Quan is a true river, hundreds of meters wide, with smoothly flowing waters. Unfortunately, we soon encountered numerous rapids. ...I The natives regarded me curiously—this extraordinary being who seems to have dropped out of the skies—kneeling around me in a circle. They were dressed in sleeveless vests, singular, in that they were made from sheets of bark from the Anitaris toxicaria,[43] tree."[44]

On August 1st, "The terrain becomes tortuous, rising and falling again and again. Our guide leads us through a maze of paths that climb and fall without end—followed by rocky ravines. It is impossible to recognize any landmarks, given the dense [36] Hickey, op. cit., p. 85.

---

[37] Ibid., pp. 159-160.
[38] Ibid., p. 179.
[39] Annam (capitol, Hue) was the central nation of what later became Vietnam; the country of Tonkin (capitol, Hanoi) was north and Cocinchina (capitol, Saigon) was south
[40] Bourette, Bernard, "Essai d'historie des populations montagnards du Sud Indochinois Jusqu a 1945," Bulletin de la Societe des Studies Indochinoises, n.s., Vol. 30, No. 1 (1955), p. 55.
[41] Mission Pavie Indo-Chine, 1879-1895; Geographie et Voyages. Vol. IV, Voyages au Centre de L'Annam et du Laos et dans les Regions Sauvages de L'Est de L'Indo-Chine par le Capitaine de Malglaive et par le Captain Riviere. Introductions par Auguste Pavie. Paris: Ernest Leroux, Editeur, 1902, p xvii.
[42] Harmand, Jules, Le Tour du Monde: Le Laos et les Populations Savages de L'Indo-China,I Troisieme Partie: Dusie Bang Hieng a Hue L'Annam, Chapter 22, p. 303.
[43] Madame Madeleine Poilane noted that when her husband's father, Eugene Poilane,first came to Khe Sanh Bru tribesmen wore clothing made from the bark of a poisonous tree. The bark was soaked in rivers for some time to remove the poisonous sap. [Conversation with Madame Madeleine Poilane, 01 January 1968, mentioned in Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript, 01 Apr 1970, p. 242]. Mr. John Miller, upon review of this, clarified: "Just a note on Mrs. Poilane's comments. It is true that the Bru did make clothing from the bark of a certain tree. In fact, we possess a bark shirt made for us by a Bru man from such a tree, and we have observed Bru men wearing such shirts even in our time in the Khe Sanh area. The bark of this tree, however, is not poisonous in itself. The placing of the bark in the water is to soften the bark and condition it for use as wearing apparel. It just so happens that this is the same tree from which the Bru take the sap, boil it down, and thereby produce the poison which they use on the tips of their arrows and spears. After processing, this poison can be fatal if it enters the blood stream. It has no effect at all if swallowed." [Letter of John Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 9 Oct 1969.]
[44] Harmand, Le Tour du Monde, cited, p. 309.

foliage. After traversing the final slippery slope, composed primarily of clay, I perceived Annam—all dry, bare, yet cultivated throughout. What a contrast!"[45]

The Annamites are very much afraid of savages, and they could only attribute my presence, having seen me arrive from the west, to magical and supernatural causes."[46] Dr. Jules Harmand's arrival was "the first traversal of the Annamitic Chain by a European."[47]

DR JULES HARMAND EXPEDITION - 1876

He noted Annamites feared to venture into the dark hills inhabited by the Mountain tribes: "The laborer of these lower valleys showed an invincible repugnance to try to go up the mountains, to sleep in the forest, to drink water however clean of rains which (he thought) caused the fever."[48] The fears were well-based; there are instances where Annamites who ventured into the mountains were sold as simple Kha to Laotian slave-traders.[49] The Khmer and Chams, and after the Fifteenth Century, the Laotians advanced into the Montagnard territories, but the Annamites only "furtively ventured west of the frontier sensibly fixed at the mountainous rim,"[50] while seizing lands cultivated by the Montagnards.[51]

During 1888-1889, the Siamese pushed as far east as Cam Lo, until an expedition by two French officers halted their advance. The Siamese established themselves on the outskirts of Ai Lao which had been fortified by the Vietnamese in 1837 but evacuated when the Siamese advanced eastward.

The Siamese were then forced out of Ai Lao and Captain de Malglaive from the Pavie mission arrived in November, 1890, reoccupying Ai Lao.[52] (The Pavie Mission worked to further French influence and arrest Siamese expansion)[53]. When the French arrived at Ai Lao, nothing remained of the Annamite fort occupied only three years earlier by a French post.[54] Only seven enlistedmen remained.[55] On 3 January 1891, the Pavie Mission split and Inspector Odend'hal traveled by canoe to Ai Lao, noting that the people regarded the French as Allies against the Siamese invaders. "We will finish by giving to the Kha [the Montagnards] their liberty as a race and by limiting on the one side the Annamites and the Laotian on the other,

---

[45] Ibid., p. 311.
[46] Harmand, Jules, "Rapport sue une mission en Indo-Chine de Bssac a Hue (16 Avril – 14 Aout 1877), Archives des Missions Scientifiques et Litteraires, Vol. 5 (1879), p. 279.
[47] R. Bourret, "La Chaine Annamitique et le Plateau du Bas Laos a L'Ouest de Hue," Bulletin du Service Geologique de l'Indochinoise, Vol. XIV, Fascicule V, Hanoi, 1925, p. 13.
[48] Mission Pavie, op. cit., p. 102.
[49] Ibid., p. 108.
[50] Bourrette, "Essai d'historie des populations..," cited, p. 43.
[51] Ibid.
[52] Ibid., p. 83. Pavie notes that Joseph of Malglaive was "..one of the nicest officers that it has ever been my pleasure to know. Above all, the temperament of the soldier, correct and straight character, just and good, and of a great simplicity. His father, from a family in Lorraine complete military background, himself retired from the Army with the most honorable titles, Lieutenant Colonel of engineering. He was in Algeria, in the center of Marango, and played the part of the first efforts of the colonization after 1848." [Mission Pavie, cited., pp. ix – x.] The same source notes that Dr. Malglaive entered St. Cyr at 19 [the Napoleonic military school, comparable to the American West Point] and responded to a call in July, 1884, to the Marines and left for the Campaign of Tonkin, Indo-China." [Ibid., p xi.]
[53] Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Sons of the Mountains, Ethnohistory of the Vietnamese Central Highlands to 1954. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1982, p. 237.
[54] Mission Pavie, op. cit., p. 133.
[55] Ibid., p. 134.

to the lands which they actively cultivate." [56] The D'Ai Lao Pass (Lao Bao) was seen to be the connecting link that joined Laos and Vietnam:

"The Allao Passage provides access to those regions inhabited by the independent Khas. Allao is the isthmus between Annam and Laos. ... It is the economic key to Indo-China, and can easily be linked to Tourane, the best port on the Annam coast."[57]

In 1904, The French began construction of what was to became Route 9[58] for economic reasons:

"It was felt that Laos could export cattle in large quantities, fine woods, rubber, lacquer, ivory, precious metals, and in return it would seek fabric, clothing, and jewelry, and articles made from iron. Shipping by way of Saigon was too costly and only use of this route was significant. The Governor General, Mr. Beau, faced with this situation, did not hesitate to make, in spite of numerous difficulties, the trip from Laos and to return to Annam along the recommended route in order to verify for himself the value of this project."

KHE SANH AREA – 1876 JULES HARMAND EXPEDITION

"His opinion and that of all the competent men who have traveled through and studied the Annamitic Chain in all directions is that this is the only practical and economical access route. Accordingly, Mr. Beau will request necessary funding to open this route to large cartage beginning with the terminal station of Dong Ha on the Annam side, an d extending as far as the Mekong on the Laotian side. The high-level resident, Monsieur Mahé, after studying for his part all the possible passages did not hesitate with the full weight of the resources at his disposal, to undertake important work projects of this nature. Under his energetic direction, a considerable effort took place; he hopes to be able to reach the Annam border in 1907."[59]

The layout of the future Route 9 was planned by Mssrs. Bourard, Assistant Public Works Engineer and Odend'hal, Civil Service Administrator, both of whom died early during the project. Work continued under the supervision of Mr. Valentin, the Province Administrator.[60] By 1907, Quang Tri Province included 45 Europeans, including 32 men, 6 women and 10 children (among whom are 5 half-breeds). Out of the 32 men, 16 are government employees, 14 are apostolic missionaries. There were about 100,000 Annamites, 35 Chinese, 3 Indians, and 15,000 – 20,000 Khas (Moi from the Annamitic Chain).[61]

IMPORTANCE OF ROUTE 9 IN FOLLOWING YEARS

The crucial significance of Route 9 dramatically unfolded in the second half of the Twentieth Century. QL-9, the principle east-west road extending from Dong Ha to the east of the Thai border, became one of the major infiltration routes intensively

---

[56] Ibid., p. 133.

[57] "Les provinces d'Annam: Quang Tri," Revue Indo-Chinoise, n.s., 2, Vol. 1, issue #69 (15 Nov 1907)," cited, p. 1591.

[58] Ibid., p. 1588.

[59] Ibid., pp. 1593-1594.

[60] Ibid., p. 1588. Mr. Prosper Odend'hal, one of Pavie's officers, was a recognized scholar and had accumulated considerable information on Cham ruins in the mountains,. On 12 February 1904, Odend'hal wrote to Father Guerlach of the Kontum Mission that he intended to make a tour through the central highlands to learn more of the origins of the highland people. He was particularly interested in some of the ruins that had been discovered in various places and wanted to visit the King of Fire and the King of Water, after which he would return to Kontum,. Guerlach wrote back strongly urging Odend'hal to abandon his plans to visit the Kings of Fire and Water due to unrest. Odend'hal did not heed the warning, and confided that he had additional goals of gaining the King of Fire's submission to French authority and to see the fabled sacred saber. He was not to be hindered. While meeting with the Kings, he refused to eat a chicken and also to drink from the bamboo tubes inserted in rice wine, stating he only drank water. When he returned to the village, it was abandoned and he was set upon by Jarai warriors who attacked him and burnt the hut. Witnesses reported hearing many screams. He died in 1904. [Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Sons of the Mountains, Ethnohistory of the Vietnamese Central Highlands to 1954. Yale University, 1982, pp. 281-184.

[61] "Les provinces d'Annam..," op. cit., p. 1583.

employed by the end of 1958 by Communist forces.[62] As early as 1959, Route 9 was considered too insecure to be included in a request for general road improvements in SVN.[63] The enemy situation in the summer of 1961 gave indications that North Vietnamese forces would push eastward along Route 9 toward Hue.[64] Over 700 Communists were infiltrating into SVN per month. "The fall of Laos has placed Route #9 in Communist hands .. and gives the RVNF [Republic of Vietnam Armed Forces] commander the task of delaying from both North and West."[65]

During the summer of 1966, the CIA reported that the North Vietnamese were using Route 9 in Laos, just west of Khe Sanh, to move up to 600 tons of supplies per day in dry season and 125 in the rainy season.[66]

In September, 1966, MACV requested the current status of Route 9 from Route 1 at Dong Ha to the Laotian border, its current traffic ability in maximum vehicle size for the entire section, specific route segments passable to non-motorized vehicular and foot traffic, information concerning flooding, coordinates of interdictions (bridges out, road cuts, etc.) that hinder movement, and information bearing on its use as an enemy infiltration route.[67]

The first vehicles to use Route 9 since September, 1964, were a "Rough Rider" convoy on 27 March 1967 of 68 vehicles[68] which departed Dong Ha at 0832H and arrived at Khe Sanh Combat Base (KSCB) at 1115H without incident, bringing with them 3500 pounds of rice, 4320 pounds diesel, 4680 ;pounds Class IV, 6640 pounds Class V.[69] It was hoped that this initial convoy would encourage the use of Route 9 by civilian and government vehicles and relieve the district's dependence on air cargo.[70]

Project #9024, the opening of Route 9 to Class 25 traffic for the 15.2 miles from Ca Lu (YD003542)(to Khe Sanh (XD845380) was the result of successful efforts by 11th Engineer Battalion personnel that had begun 26 February 1967 when Co A moved the 27 miles by road from Dong Ha to Ca Lu with 12 vehicles and 40 men to commence road and bridge construction.[71] On 26 February 1967, a reinforced Engineer Platoon from Co. A, 11th Engineer Battalion, consisting of 3 officers and 56 enlisted Marines together with materials and equipment was deployed to Ca Lu to establish a Command Post and base of operations. On 4 March, another deployment of 2 cooks and 34 combat engineers deployed to Ca Lu. The next day, bridge repairs and a bypass at YD002453 was initiated, consisting of forming and pouring concrete on existing abutments to reinforce the deck slab and strengthen the existing abutments. On 8 March, bridge repairs were begun at XD987441 by replacing as missing concrete stringer with a timber stringer, installing one span of wood decking, and the repair of remaining existing deck and abutments. On 11 March, construction work was begun at XDF994445, completed the next day. During 13-15 March, bypasses were constructed at XD943424, XD 935421, and XD 921419. On 16 March, construction work was begun on approaches to the bridge at XD913403 in preparation for the erection of a fixed span bridge. On 18 March, a detachment from Co B, 11th Engineer Battalion of 3 officers and 70 enlisted Marines plus one Army officer and 18 Army enlisted from the 1st Bn, 44th Artillery Regiment, were deployed to XD913403 on Route 9 to provide adequate security and assist in the maintenance of Route 9. On 19 March, the 1st Bridge Platoon transported and erected 45 feet of fixed-span, Class 35 bridge, thus completing the opening of National Route 9 to Khe Sanh.

General Walt (CG, III MAF) radioed General Westmoreland: "Since Khe Sanh had been isolated to vehicle traffic for over two years, I consider the restoration of National Route 9 to service to be an event of great tactical logistical, and economic [62] "Memorandum from the President's Military Representative (Taylor) to the President (Kennedy)," 18 Sep 1961, in US Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-62, p. 304.

---

[63] "Memorandum of a Conversation," 21 Nov 1959, US Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1958-60, p. 250.

[64] "Memorandum from Edwin F. Black of the Office of the Secretary of Defense to the President's Deputy Special Assistant for national Security Affairs (Rostow)," 27 Jul 1961, US Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-63, p. 245.

[65] "Memorandum from the Secretary of Defense's Assistant for Special Operations (Lansdale) to the President's Military Representative (Taylor)," US Dept. of State, Foreign Relations, 1961-63, p. 239.

[66] CIA Memorandum, "The Vietnamese Communists' Will to Persist," SC No. 097624/66, in "An Analysis of the Vietnamese Communists' Strengths, Capabilities and Will to Persist in Their Present Strategy in Vietnam," 26 Aug 1966, Fig. 1-4.

[67] MACV J-2 281500Z/Sep66 to CG III MF, in III MAF COC Journal and File, 28-29 Sep 1966, #J119.

[68] 1 Mite, 3 M-38 jeeps, 8 radio jeeps, 3 ¾-ton trucks, 15 2-1/2-ton trucks, one M-49 tanker, 13 dump trucks, 17 5-ton trucks, 4 M-55 MG, 2 wreckers, and 2 ONTOS.

[69] Logistic terms: Class I is rations, Class II is general supply (782 combat gear, uniforms, etc.), Class III is POL (petroleum, oil, lubricants), Class I V is fortification materials, and Class V is munitions.

[70] 3rdMarDiv COC 270956Z/Mar67, Cong Ha to Khe Sanh Rough Rider Convoy,; 3rdMarDiv Command Chronology, March, 1967, p. 30; FMFPAC: Operations of U.S. Marine Forces, Vietnam, March, 1967, p. 63; III MAF Command Chronology, March, 1967, pp. 7-8.

[71] 3rd MarDiv FWD 2312440Z/Feb67, Route 9 Road Construction; Tab B to Encl (1) of 11th Eng Command Chronology, March 1967.

significance," and added, "It is my intention to continue improvements to Route 9 and run an appropriate number of convoys."[72]

The opening of QL-9 was part of Phase I of PRACTICE NINE, the construction of a barrier consisting of Strong Points and Combat Operations Bases (COB) to halt the influx of North Vietnamese Army soldiers and supplies into South Vietnam.[73] PRACTICE NINE (interestingly involving bases along ROUTE NINE!), also known as the "McNamara Line," or the "trace," envisioned positions along Route 9 to block infiltration into South Vietnam:

> "Operations in the western piedmont/mountainous area will be conducted from a series of battalion combat operating bases. This plan envisions these bases expanding from Camp Carroll westward along Route #09 toward the Laotian border. Logistic support feasibility and weather will probably limit the initial bases to Camp Carroll, Thon Son Lam [the "Rock Pile"], Ca Lu, and Khe Sanh. Subsequently, bases would be established in the vicinity of Lang Ru'on [1000 meters NW of Hill 881S] and Lang Vei, with the positioning of an additional battalion at Khe Sanh. Thus, a reinforced division eventually will be utilized to maintain control and surveillance along Route #9 to the Laotian border."[74]
>
> "Strong Points included A-1 (YD267755, A-2 (YD215742), A-3 (YD169716), and A-4 (YD115701), and Base Areas C-1 (YD221681), C-2 (YD127666), and C-3 (YD108603).[75]

Opening Route 9 was important as a means to diminish the burden on aircraft committed to logistic support of Khe Sanh. Upgrading of the Route was to continue until it could permit 60-Ton traffic, enabling tanks and self-propelled artillery to move from Cua Viet to Lao Bao.[76] Aside from such strategic implications, the road meant a supply of rice to pay local PF and Bru Montagnard military personnel of FOB-3, Special Forces at Lang Vei, CAC OSCAR, and Bru workers at the coffee plantations, the only source of their income. Felix Poilane could transport his coffee out of the area.

Early on 21 July 1967, a convoy of the large 175mm guns together with trucks filled with ammunition, C-4 explosives, claymore mines, and other ordnance, was moving west on Route 9, its destination Khe Sanh Combat Base.[77]

(An attempt to determine why they were dispatched to Khe Sanh made by contacting COL Padley and COL Lownds, the two Commanding Officers of 26th Marines near that event determined that neither could state the reason. The Change of Command occurred 0900, 12 August 1967, three weeks after Col Padley departed. Realization of NVA intentions to lay siege to Khe Sanh had obviously not yet been apparent. It is possible that the formation of FOB-3, which became operational in November, might have indicated artillery support for patrols into Laos or support of FOB-1 patrols already operating in Laos might have triggered the move. A more convincing reason for the 175 guns moving to Khe Sanh was pre-positioning prior to the monsoons to support a large-scale operation known as EL PASO which was planned to jump off from Khe Sanh and move along Route 9 into Laos to sever the Ho Chi Minh Trail.[78])

Based on intelligence reports of a heavy weapons company north of Khe Sanh and increased movement along Route 9, MIKE Company, 3/26, was dispatched from Khe Sanh Combat Base in a northwest direction where several base camps had been discovered by reconnaissance patrols.[79] Simultaneously, a patrol from First Platoon of B/1/26 swept east on Route 9. Both Marine units encountered fierce combat resulting in 19 Marines killed. The aggressive Marine patrolling had prematurely sprung a NVA ambush that had been laid from XD943423 to XD967432 along Route 9 consisting of 2000 meters of anti-personnel mines, 82mm mortars, .50 caliber machineguns, and NVA claymore-type mines. Meanwhile, the 175mm guns, which had reached Ca Lu, promptly returned to Camp Carroll. A search of the NVA positions revealed that personnel had no identification: there were no letters or photographs. The NVA force had completed construction of 25 bunkers and was in the process of constructing 75 more. There were five ruck sacks of new equipment, including extended rations. LtCol Wilkinson made the evaluation that the enemy were not there to capture the 175 guns; they probably were unaware they were coming, but rather were preparing positions that during the monsoon would prevent Route 9 being used to resupply Khe Sanh and move battalions against Hills 881S, 861, and the Combat Base itself or conduct small, commando

---

[72] III MAF 280346Z/Mar67 to COMUSMACV.
[73] "Briefing Paper, Subj: PRACTICE NINE, Encl (6) to 3rd MarDiv Command Chronology, January, 1967, p. 3.
[74] III MAF OpPlan 12-67, 121800/Sep67.
[75] III MAF OpPlan 11-67, I Corps, ARVN-III MAF Defense of Northern Quang Tri Province, 181630H/Jun67.
[76] FMFPAC, Operations of U.S. Marine Forces, Vietnam, March, 1967, p. 63.
[77] Comments of LtCol James B. Wilkinson at 1/26 Staff Briefing, 22 July 1967.
[78] For information on EL PASO, see Collins, John M., Military Geography for Professionals and the Public, Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1998, Chapter 12, "Operation Plan EL PASO," pp. 367-384. EL PASO was shelved due to the approach of NVA units in December, 1967, to lay siege to Khe Sanh. A later operation, LAM SON 719, was launched in early 1971.
[79] Comments of 1/Lt Thomas A. Bailey, HQMC Oral History Tape #1768.

terror raids with satchel charges. He noted that much 782-type gear, rifles, and ammunition had been hastily abandoned because of SPOOKY striking the area.[80]

During September, 1967, extensive rains struck the Khe Sanh area,. From 16 to 18 September, Khe Sanh Combat Base received 21.24 inches of rain.[81] By the end of the month, several bridges on Route 9 connecting Khe Sanh Combat Base to supply depots at Dong Ha had been washed out.[82]

By early January, 1968, Route 9 from Dong Ha westward to Khe Sanh had been interdicted by both weather and enemy action, with most of its bridges impassable.

In the early days of the siege of Khe Sanh, despite very extensive bombing—more tons of bombs were dropped in the immediate area of Khe Sanh than in the entire Pacific during World War II,[83] and target identification through electronic sensors which had just arrived, NVA trucks continued to use Route 9 to move troops and munitions During an interview of Captain Harry Baig, Target Intelligence Officer of 26th Marines by W.G. McMillan, Science Advisor at MACV (the MACSA), the following interesting exchange occurred:

> BAIG: Trucks were going right by Khe Sanh [village]. Even though we did put up roadblocks [by artillery] they had little effect on the trucks.
>
> MCMILLAN; You mean on Route 9?
>
> BAIG: Yes, sir!
>
> MCMILLAN: Enemy trucks moving on Route 9, right by Khe Sanh?
>
> BAIG: Yes, sir, oh, yes, sir. We couldn't stop them at all. When the enemy trucks heard an aircraft overhead they would stop moving, so we needed a SLAR aircraft then to sense their position. There was no single aircraft that had all of this gear aboard. This means also that the planes are required to fly at a very low level—which is perfectly all right, but it completely incapacitated the artillery [due to SAV-A-PLAN: the planes could not fly where there was danger of colliding with projectiles]. So we are balancing the use of such aircraft on the one hand, against denial of our artillery on the other hand, and frequently we had to tell the aircraft to go home. Even with the artillery firing .. we could not completely block the road traffic.[84]

By March, 1968, an Intelligence Estimate of the Route #9 Area[85] reported that aerial photography as of 28 December 1967 and other available information had disclosed 26 bridges/culverts between Ca Lu and Khe Sanh on Route #9, nine of which were impassable or destroyed. In addition, this segment of Route 9 is impassable in four other locations due to craters and in one instance a landslide.[86] The Intelligence Estimate described the area:

> "The route #9 area from Ca Lu to Khe Sanh rapidly changes from low hills to low mountains intersected by both perennial and intermittently streams. These hills and low mountains are limestone and generally aligned on a West to East axis. The Rao Quan and Da Krong River Valleys bisect Route #9 on a Northwest to Southeast axis. From these valleys, relief rises abruptly to over 800 meters, on the average, to the North, East, and West. In this vicinity mountains are also highly dissected by numerous perennial and intermittent streams. Slopes along Route #9 and in the Da Krong Valley have a general gradient of 40 to 60 percent with some to 100 percent. Virtually the entire area, both low hills and mountains, is covered by dense undergrowth, forests, and continuous 2 to 4 layer canopy. Foot movement is extremely difficult and principally limited to trails, tracks, and along stream valleys where brushwood and clear undergrowth forests are found. Long range observation is poor throughout the area due to dense undergrowth and rugged terrain, however, personnel traversing Route #9 can be observed from many preselected vantage points. Short range observation is generally poor in this area for the same reason. Aerial observation is extremely limited throughout the area. Trees range from 75 to 100 feet in height .. Fields of fire for flat trajectory weapons are seriously curtailed. ...

---

[80] Comments of LtCol Wilkinson, Staff brief, 22 July 1967.

[81] 26 Marines command Chronology, September, 1967, Encl (1), p. 2.

[82] The following bridges were washed out: XD755353 (6 mi. southwest of Khe Sanh), XD991492 (1 mi. northeast of Khe Sanh), XD942423 (6 mi. northeast of Khe Sanh), XD925421 (6 mi. northeast of Khe Sanh), and XD914403 (4 mi. northeast of Khe Sanh). [FMFPAC 170446Z/Oct67, SITREP #931.]

[83] Tolson, LTGEN John J., Airmobility, 1961-1971 (Vietnam Studies), Washington, D.C.: Dept. of the Army, 1971, p. 167 notes twice as many tons. Gen William W. Momyer, USAF, "Operation NIAGARA," in Trest, Warren A., Khe Sanh (Operation NIAAGARA), 22 January – 31 March 1968, CHECO Report, 13 Sep 1968, Supporting Documents, No. 12. Total for Pacific Operating Area, WW II: 32,735 tons; total at Khe Sanh (22 Jan – 29 Feb 68): 53,380 tons.

[84] Baig interview by MACSA, MACV, 24 April 1968, pp. 6-7. Interview by W. G. McMillan.

[85] 3rd Marine Division, "Intelligence Estimate of the Route #9 Area," in Messages, Etc. March, 1968, Part II, #183. Document dated 19 March 1968, Ser 02407968.

[86] Ibid., Para 2.a.(2)(b).

all high ground that dominates Route #9 at any given point must be considered key terrain. This is especially true in the area west of NS grid line XD 93 where Route #9 becomes extremely circuitous. Of note, is the location of the last ambush in this area which occurred in the vicinity of XD 9643 on 21 July 1967, and involved an estimated NVA battalion."[87]

Route #9 was simply impassable by this time. The task of opening Route #9 fell to the 11th Engineer Battalion which received a Warning Order on 16 February 1968. On 08 March, Co A, 11th Engineers, moved from Dong Ha to Ca Lu in order to open the stretch of road from Ca Lu to the Rock Pile where one bridge and three culverts had been destroyed, and participate I the building of LZ STUD[88] The main effort began 01 April as the Engineers focused on the final 15-mile Ca Lu to Khe Sanh section containing 27 bridges. By 07 April, the Engineers had made 21 of the 27 bridges passable with 6 other spans undergoing replacement or repair.[89] The bridges along Route 9 were constructed by the French and were steel stringer, wide flange with concrete decking. The concrete decking consisted of segments 18" wide and across the full roadway width. Much of this concrete had deteriorated and dropped out. In addition, the enemy had blown the bridge abutments back 20 feet, making it necessary to construct bridges larger than originally planned.[90]

To accomplish this ask, Co D, 11th Engineers, opened the road to make it passable for tracked vehicles to include tanks and self-propelled artillery. Co D was followed by Co B whose mission was to improve the by-passes, widen the road, clear each side, and generally upgrade the bridges. Co A had the construction responsibilities at LZ STUD until 08 April when it was flown to Bridge #33 (XD918416) to prepare its approach. Co C was at Dong Ha re-fabricating non-standard, steel stringer bridges. 3rd Platoon, 3rd Bridge Company, 7th Engineer Battalion, accompanied Co D, handling the actual construction and placement of the bridges. The Bridge Company's motto was: "Erections are our Business!"[91]

During this operation, CH-54 "Sky Crane" helicopters of the 1st Air Cavalry Division's 470th Flying Crane Co. were used to fly in completed M477 bridges into three sites, speeding completion of the road reopening mission. The CH-54 lifted one 30-ft. bridge, which completely assembled weighs 16,500 pounds, and two 38-ft. bridges, which assembled in a skeleton fashion weigh up to 16,000 pounds.[92] Bridge 9-29 was the first to be emplaced using the Sky Crane.[93] Other bridges included 9 fixed steel-section bridges, one culvert bridge, and one pontoon bridge. Four of the original French bridges left intact were repaired. Three of the fixed steel-section bridges and the pontoon bridge were constructed by a platoon from the 7th Engineers' 3rd Bridge Company before being heli-lifted into the field.[94]

The final bridge was emplaced on 11 April, and the next day, Route #9 was capable of sustaining 60-ton traffic across the width of northern ICTZ [I Corps Tactical Zone]. The task had been completed in 12 days and required the construction of 10 bridges and major repairs to three others.[95] General Westmoreland described the task as "Herculean." In addition to the bridges, numerous sections of the road had to be cleared of landslides and craters.

The first vehicle to drive into Khe Sanh from Ca Lu since the ambush of 21 July 1967 was driven by the Commanding Officer of 11th Engineers, LtCol Victor A. Perry. Major Joseph C. Thorp, the battalion S-3, and Captain Randy Brinkley, Commanding Officer of Co D accompanied the Colonel. Gunnery Sergeant Lonnie Roberts of D Company described the scene:

"It was late in the afternoon. The sky was overcast. And the countryside, beginning about four miles from Khe Sanh, looked as though it has been dead a long, long time. The hills were grassless and pocked with bomb and artillery round craters, and the trees were barren and blackened. There were a few piles of bricks along the roadside. The wooden frames of door and windows jutted out. One of the brick piles had been houses.

"The countryside in those last few miles was totally desolate.. 'like a battlefield after the battle in a World War I movie.'"[96]

Some of the engineers had built signs along Route 9 similar to the old Burma Shave road signs: THANK YOU – ARMY – FOR RESCUING US – BUT THE @UCKING WAR – IS OVER.[97]

---

[87] Ibid., pp. 1-2.
[88] Later called "LZ CAMEO" since its location on the map was near "Khe Meo" and later, Vandegrift Combat Base, or "VCB." [Comments of LtCol Victor A. Perry, HQMC Oral History Tape #2755. Perry was CO of 11th Engineer Battalion.
[89] FMFPAC, Operations, April, 1968, pp. 64-65.
[90] Comments of Major Joseph C. Thorpe, HQMC Oral History Tape #2755.
[91] Comments of Maj Joseph C. Thorpe, HQMC Oral History Tape #2775; diary of Ray W. Stubbe.
[92] Comments of LtCol Perry, HQMC Oral History Tape #2755.
[93] Comments of Capt Randy M. Brinkley, HQMC Oral History Tape #2755.
[94] III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:18)03 May 1968) p. 3.
[95] FMFPAC: Operations, April, 1968, p. 65; 11th Engineers, Command Chronology, April, 1968, p. 9.
[96] III MAF News Release No. 1246-68, printed in III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:19 (10 May 1968), p. 3.
[97] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry for 10 April 1968.

By 1972, with the abandonment of Khe Sanh and defense of the western Quang Tri Province and Route 9 areas, the NVA naturally moved into the area. Major Walter Eugene Boomer, present on Fire Base Sarge (YD028478, Dong Toan Mountain), one of two fire bases[98] perched on the mountains to the east of Route 9 as it wended on a north/south leg overlooking the old Vandegrift Fire Base, was defended by the 4th Battalion, Vietnamese Marine Corps. Major Boomer and Captain Ray Smith were present at the position as advisors. The positions were ineffective against encroaching NVA units since active patrolling did not occur and Route 9 was not visible from SARGE. It was patently clear to Major Boomer that significant NVA activity was unfolding to the west. He informed General Ghai who visited SARGE, "We would see boxes stacked along the road for a short period of time and then they would disappear." General Ghai did not have the manpower to patrol to the west, a fatal mistake.[99] Route 9, the ancient invasion route, was now the highway for NVA units to move east and the fall of South Vietnam was now certain. For the North Vietnamese, "Highway 9 was the path to victory in northern I Corps."[100]

During the years following the war, what was once South Vietnam greatly increased in population. Khe Sanh village now had multi-storied concrete buildings. During a visit in mid-March, 2003, a visitor to Khe Sanh village could watch TV in Khe Sanh village and, even more amazing, notice a surreal blue glow emitted from a Bru village of Bru watching TV![101] Like the French who first built Route 9 for economic reasons, not for the reasons of east-west invasion that had first made the passage significant, the Vietnamese now needed improvement to Route 9 for commercial development.

> "The highway plays a key role again today, but Highway 9 no longer supports armed conflict—those days are forever in the past. The future for Highway 9 and Quang Tri Province is many times brighter. Today Highway 9 supports economic energy and development, social contact, expanding commerce, international relations with neighboring countries, and communications. It will provide a basis for sustainable development of the region and the country."[102]
>
> "National Highway 9 will be the springboard for development because it will improve access to and from Laos, Da Nang, and the Cua Viet Port.... At present, as was the case in the late 60's and early 70's, National Highway 9 is a two lane road crossing about 45 streams and rivers over reconstructed bridges of varying configurations. The alignment of the road today [2004] exists as it was then. The road is dangerous in places due to narrowness, blind curves.., near proximity of villages, and diverse types of vehicles.... Its rehabilitation and upgrade will clearly reduce travel time and enhance road safety and provide a strong foundation for the economic development that is planned in Quang Tri Province. Further, it will provide improved travel times to Hue and Da Nang for commerce originating in Laos, thereby providing an efficient opening to new market opportunities[for lumber and coffee].[103]

On 16 March 2000, Stanley Consultants of Muscatine, Iowa, was invited by the project Management Unit No. 85 of the Vietnam Ministry of Transport, to submit a proposal for the rehabilitation and upgrade of Highway 9 from Dong Ha to Lao Bao through Khe Sanh and a northerly bypass around Dong Ha from the Cua Viet port to Cam Lo. The contract was awarded 01 December 2000. On 22 December 2002, a ground-breaking ceremony for the start of construction of Highway 9 in Cam Lo occurred, and on 19 March 2003, the segment of Highway 9 from Khe Sanh to Lang Vei was underway. Construction came to a successful close on 24 May 2006.[104] It was just short of a century after the French had completed constructed Route 9 in 1907.

Reconstruction of Highway 9 presented many challenges: "unstable side slopes, rock slides, igneous rock, broken bridges, blind curves, cliffs, dangerous turns and curves, recalcitrant contractors, and schedules and budgets. I fought against a demanding client many of the members of which were ex-NVA, and locals who would sometimes relieve us of car batteries and tools (but not that often). I wrestled with women carrying the Quang Ganh, with the Xe Dap Tho and the Xe Cong Nong. I fought cigarette smugglers and errant cars going off cliffs and lousy or drunk drivers and the occasional flash flood."[105]

When reconstruction and improvement was completed, the highway was two lanes all the way between Dong Ha and Lao Bao and the width was widened (by several meters in some places), curves were straightened, rock faces laid back and short

---

[98] The other at YD0348, about 2,000 meters away being near Nui Ba Ho, YD015511.
[99] Comments of Major Walter E. Boomer, 8 March 1983, HQMC Oral History Section, Historical Center, Washington, D.C.
[100] Andrade, Dale, America's Last Vietnam Battle, Halting Hanoi's 1972 Easter Offensive, Lawrence, Kansas: University Press of Kansas, 2001, p. 40.
[101] Foster, Gary, "The Valley of Blue Light," May 14, 2003.
[102] Gary Foster, "National Highway No. 9," a presentation to Project Management Unit No. 85, Vinh City, Vietnam, June 14, 2004, p. 2.
[103] Ibid.
[104] Letter from Gary Foster to Ray W. Stubbe, 19 October 2010.
[105] Letter from Gary Foster to Ray W. Stubbe, 4 November 2013.

re-alignments were made.[106] Much unexploded ordnance was encountered on Route 9 between Khe Sanh and Lao Bao but there were no explosions and no one was harmed.[107]

PRISON

The entrance to the Khe Sanh area was via a place of agony set within the luxuriant jungle, the Lao Bao penitentiary.

LAO BAO PRISON (upper, right of center) and village of Van Phu-ong (lower left) in isthmus formed by Xe Pone River dividing South Vietnam and Laos. USAF mission AM4389 flown 28 January 1968 by 460th Tactical Reconnaissance Wing

Lao Bao became the site of a prison to which Christians were sent to their death, constructed on order of Minh Mang (1820-41).[108] On 25 May 1834, Father Odorico died of hunger here after no one had been permitted to bring him anything to eat or drink.[109] In his diary entry for 19 July 1877, Dr. Jules Harmand visited the Lao Bao prison describing it as a "..palissaded camp without trench nor ramparts and without any cannons. Dinh serves as a site for exile, much like New Caledonia, destined mainly for women, children and those convicted of political crimes by Tong-king. ... The place is extremely unhealthy. ... to live in Dinh might seem a disguised death sentence without bloodshed. It appears that few survive more than four or five years under such miserable conditions."[110] When one woman confided her misfortunes, Dr. Harmand asked, "Why do you not escape into Laos?" Horrified, she replied that the Laotians would eat her. "I assured her that Laos is populated by extremely gentle peoples. She wanted to believe me, but the idea that the Laotians were cannibals was rooted in the culture."[111]

In 1896, the French established the prison at Lao Bao as one of their two major penitentiaries with a space for 250 prisoners.[112] In 1915, a prison revolt by laborers using sharp tools destroyed the Lao Bao prison.[113]

---

[106] Ibid.
[107] Ibid.
[108] Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Shattered World, Adaptation and Survival among Vietnam's Highland Peoples during the Vietnam War, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1993, p. 141.
[109] Guy Marie Oury, Le Vietnam des Martyres et des Saints [The Viet-Nam of Martyrs and Saints], 1988, mentioned in a letter from Madame Madeleine Poilane to the author, 06 July 1990. On 19 June 1988, 117 Christian martyrs of Vietnam were canonized saints by Pope John Paul II.
[110] Harmand, Jules, "Le Laos et les populations sauvages de L'Indo-Chine, cited, p. 303.
[111] Ibid., p. 304.
[112] Zinoman, Peter, The Colonial Bastille, A History of Imprisonment in Vietnam, 1862-1940, Berkeley: University of California Press, 2001, pp. 42, 62.
[113] Ibid., pp. 139, 155. "After stabbing three guards, one of whom they decapitated, the prisoners broke into the barracks of the Garde Indigene, killed the handful of militiamen they found inside, seized several dozen rifles, and pillaged the treasury. After setting fire to the seventeen buildings in the penitentiary complex, forty-two prisoners fled across the border into Laos, leaving behind eight dead guards and the ashes of what had once been the largest penitentiary in Annam." [p. 155].

LAO BAO PRISON (Summer, 1967, photo by Fred Patton)

The American, Harry Hervey,[114] writing of his travels in the area in the 1920s, noted the prison at Lao Bao was as grim as a medieval fortress, housed some hundred or more native criminals, and was administered by a guard of Annamite troops and one white man.[115] He noted that the Moi ("Savages") in eastern Laos between Tchepone and Lao Bao, resulted from intermingling of the aboriginal tribes of the ancient Chiampa [Chams] with Laotians and Annamites. Over the entrance was a plaque commemorating the bravery of the prison guards during the 1915 mutiny. Hervey's description is chilling: "The convicts lay in rows on broad wooden slabs built against the walls, with cangues[116] about their necks and their feet thrust into stocks. Smoky lamps half illuminated the two great wards, casting a soiled reflection upon the many faces... The whole scene swam in a nauseating stench."[117] He noted the prisoners appeared as an irregular line of half-naked prisoners, chained and some wearing the cangue. "When I reached the gate I saw more convicts .. walking with difficulty because of the linked rods joining their ankle-bands. All had their hair closely cropped and wore ragged clothing."[118] Hervey was shown a huge ledger which the officer in charge called his "guest book," containing pictures of each prisoner and a brief description of their crimes and penalties. A few included "executed" and a date.[119] "The convicts lay in rows on broad wooden slabs built against the walls, with cangues about their necks and their feet thrust into stocks. Smoky lamps half illuminated the two great wards, casting a soiled reflection upon the many faces. I caught the gleam of numerous bare, sweaty bodies ... The whole scene swam in a nauseating stench."[120] His departure gave him great relief: ""..the place had oppressed me."[121] In his malaria delirium, Hervey grasped Lao Bao, the penal colony administered by "protectors" to punish delinquent "children" as a symbol: "the tyranny inherent in white men."[122] It "..expressed the inevitable brutality resulting from a civilized temperament brought into contact with a temperament not complicated by a surfeit of acquired knowledge."[123]

Hervey next describes his passage through the Khe Sanh area:

> "Soon after leaving the village of Lao Bao, we were spinning through a cool green forest utterly unlike the humid jungles further inland. ... the people we passed [Bru], like the scenery, were different. These natives were the Moi, aborigines of [114] Henry Clay Hervey was born 5 Nov 1900 in Texas and began newspaper writing in 1916. He began traveling when young and visited Asia, Africa, Europe, and South America. For several months, he studied in a Buddhist monastery in Burma. Sun Yat sen was among his friends. He wrote extensively: Caravans by Night, 1922, The Black parrot, 1923, Where Strange Gods Call, 1924, Ethan Quest, 1924, Conga, 1927, King Cobra, 1927, Red Ending, 1927, The Iron Widow, 1931, Red hotel, 1932, Travels in French Indo-China, 1933, The Damned Don't Cry, 1939, School for Eternity, 1941, The Veiled Fountain, 1947, Barracoon, 1950, as well as a play, several movies and about 70 short stories and novelettes. He died 12 August 1951. [Who Was Who in America, Vol. 3 (1951-1960). Chicago, Il.: Marquis Who's Who, Inc., 1963, p. 395. Dustcover of King Cobra.

---

[115] Hervey, Harry, King Cobra, An Autobiography of Travel in French Indo-China, New York: Cosmopolitan Book Corp., 1927, p. 278. Hervey was born 05 November 1900 in Beaumont, Texas, served 3 mo. as a 2nd Lt in 1918, wrote 15 books and about 70 short stories on his numerous travels in Asia, Africa, Europe and South America. For some months he studied in a Buddhist monastery in Burma, lived in the homes of natives, and visited Asiatic rulers. The late Dr. Sun Yat-sen was one of his friends. He led an expedition into upper Indo-China in 1925 and discovered additional Khmer ruins. He remained unmarried and died 12 August 1951.

[116] A cangue is a heavy wooden board hung around the neck as a punishment in China.

[117] Ibid., p. 281.

[118] Ibid., p. 278.

[119] Ibid., p. 280. The method of execution was the guillotine

[120] Ibid., p. 281.

[121] Ibid., p. 287.

[122] Ibid., p. 285.

[123] Ibid.

the mountains of Annam. They seemed gentle, half-frightened savages, with their wide, guileless eyes and long hair. Some were carrying bales of thatch or long strips of bamboo; one or two had crude bows slung over their shoulders. I had thought it impossible for a people to wear less clothing than the Laotians without being entirely naked, but the Moi achieve this feat. Instead of a loin cloth, their one garment, if it may be called that, is a narrow though adequate strip of cloth passed under the crotch and fastened to a string about the waist."[124] Hervey continues—"Beyond the border defining the end of Laos and the beginning of Annam, the road was cut into the side of a mountain. ... There were stretches of forest tangled in creepers, sudden sheer precipices that dropped into fronded gorges; now and then a waterfall tumbling soundlessly in white fire; and always ahead, seen at intervals above the winding road and the tops of trees far blue mountains that seemed to drink their color from the sky. Suddenly I found the increasing perilousness of that narrow road intruding upon my enthusiastic admiration of the scenery. On one side was a mass of dripping, mossy stone, a veritable cliff; on the other, the mountain lowered its perpendicular side into rapids fully two hundred feet below. We were racing along the ledge at ridiculously high speed."[125]

Beginning in January, 1929, an expedition to the areas of Tonkin, northern Laos, and then down the Mekong River to Savannakhet and then by road over Route 9 to Quang Tri, was conducted by Harold J. Coolidge, Jr., of Harvard University, and Theodore Roosevelt. Coolidge notes his travel by car down Route 9 at dangerously high speeds, often killing chickens and even dogs, and was informed that this was due to the superstitious beliefs of the natives who jumped so that evil spirits following them would be killed by the car![126]

During the 1930s, an increase in anti-colonial political unrest increased the political prison population and, in 1934, a Communist document was confiscated at Lao Bao which enunciated the power and sophistication of communist prison organization; such prisons were routinely described as revolutionary schools.[127] Between 1930 and 1932, Giap along with his brother, Vo Thuan Nho, and several other influential Viet Minh were imprisoned at Lao Bao, a period of his life which he always passes over in silence.[128] One can only wonder whether General Giap's negative familiarity with this area may have informed his subsequent actions during the siege at Khe Sanh! Another inmate of the Lao Bao Prison was Ho Chi Minh himself.[129]

In 1954, a French column going from Laos back into Vietnam was ambushed at Lao Bao by Viet Minh, with much bloodshed.[130] The Vietnamese occupied Lao Bao for a number of years in the late 1950s and early 1960s. During this time, LtCol Nuyen van Thieu, who later became the President of South Vietnam, was its commander.[131] In 1960 (around July), William Colby (later Director of the CIA) picked up an automobile in Hue and drove with his son and a friend from Hue to Lao Bao finding it heavily jungle-covered and abandoned.[132]

After arriving in July, 1963, the American Advisor to the 1st ARVN Division at Khe Sanh, Captain Eugene Hardy, found Lao Bao's ruins to contain rectangular boxes, like ovens into which they put prisoners, closed them, and slowly cooked them.[133] Major James Whitenack, Senior Advisor for Huong Hoa District March-December, 1967, recalls: "They had walls that were 20 or so foot thick. They had cells in one area exposed to the weather and the elements—no roof other than bars on the top. You could walk into a hallway with doors going into these cells completely open to the weather, open to the sun, the rain, the

---

[124] Ibid., p. 287.
[125] Ibid., p. 288.
[126] Coolidge, Harold J., Jr., and Roosevelt, Theodore, Three Kingdoms of Indo-China. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell Co., 1933, p. 44.
[127] Ibid., p. 218.
[128] Currey, Cecil B., Victory at Any Cost, the Genius of Viet Nam's Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, Washington: Brassey's, Inc., 1997, p. 25.
[129] Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Shattered World, Adaptation and Survival among Vietnam's Highland Peoples during the Vietnam War, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1993, p. 142.
[130] Conversation with Dr. Gerald Hickey, 21 May 1990.
[131] Conversation with Mr. James Morrison, 09 January 1994.
[132] Colby, William, with James McCargor, Lost Victory, A Firsthand Account of America's Sixteen Year Involvement in Vietnam. Chicago: Contemporary Books, 1989, p. 43. Conversation with William Colby, 28 April 1990. Due to Mr. Colby's untimely death, it was impossible to ask him whether this may have been connected with contact of agents which were sent into Laos, or if it were simply part of his familiarization with the country. Mr. James Morrison (4 tours in Southeast Asia—one in Laos, one in Cambodia, two in Vietnam, was XO of the "C" Company of SOG in DaNang) states that Colby was probably at Lao Bao in connection with the Vietnamese Strategic Technical Directorate (STD) supporting BV-33 beginning in 1960. [Conversation with James Morrison, 04 January 1994].
[133] Conversation with Eugene Hardy, 21 June 2003.

weather."[134] Major Fred Patton, commanding the element that would eventually become FOB-3, surveyed the Lao Bao site and concluded that it would be a perfect location for the newly formed FOB-3 unit: "The walls of the fort itself were pretty well intact except on one corner and they had all kinds of heavy walls still standing inside. It would have taken a minimal amount of materiel and effort to make one hellacious fort out there."[135] Patton flew to Saigon which disapproved the site, claiming it was within mortar range of surrounding high ground. "It was funny because a few months before that I had been in downtown Saigon waiting on a parade with [General] Westmoreland and we got run off the street by mortar fire!"[136] A Bru named Onya whose parents worked for the Pollanes and who was educated along with the Pollane son, Felix, in Hue University and thereby became a kind of unofficial leader among the Bru (although not really a chief since leadership was hereditary in the Bru tribe), "..was just beside himself [at the disapproval]. He said, 'I'll put 1500, 2000 men out here in nothing flat,' and he really looked forward to it."[137]

As of April, 1990, the Vietnamese had established a prisoner camp at Lao Bao housing 400-450 inmates.[138]

THE BACKYARD

North Vietnam resumed movement of men and materiel into South Vietnam by using trails in Laos, beginning construction of these trails on 19 May 1959, the 69th birthday of Ho Chi Minh and thus the origin of the transportation unit, "Unit 559," the numbers referring to the date of its origin.[139] They crossed the Laotian border on 14 Dec 1958 and annexed a remote piece of land just west of the DMZ[140] which later became the location of the NVA Front Headquarters, with the secret designation of B5-T8 controlling the Khe Sanh Siege.[141] In response, South Vietnamese forces, dressed in Laotian military uniforms, stationed troops along Route 9 at Ban Houei Sane, just inside Laos.[142]

Following the coup of 09 August 1960 led by Kong Le, an obscure Lao paratrooper, overthrew the Laotian government of Prince Tiao Somsanith.[143] The city of Tchepone[144] soon became a target and was reported captured on 01 May 1961,[145] routing the defending Royalist 12th Infantry Battalion, remnants of which displaced to Thakkek On 02 May, South Vietnam took emergency counter-measures due to the overrunning of Tchepone by Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese forces and moved an infantry battalion to Lao Bao, and on 04 May, a 150-man Special Forces group, in civilian clothes, penetrated about six miles into Laos to aid Laotian government troops withdrawing eastward from Tchepone toward the border.[146] The South Vietnamese forces withdrew to the border on 23-24 May.[147] To fill the vacuum left by the departure of BI-12, they organized Battalion Voluntaire 33 (BV-33)[148] which located at a small dirt air-strip at Ban Houei Sane (also known as LIMA SITE 189).[149] South Vietnam also positioned artillery at Lao Bao to provide fire support for BV33.[150] On 05 Sep 1963, Eugene DeBruin,

---

134 Comments of Mr. James Whitenack to the author, 06 October 1988.
135 Conversation with Fred Patton, 09 September 1997
136 Ibid.
137 Ibid.
138 USDAO [US Defense Attaché Office], Bangkok, Thailand 230919ZApr90 in Library of Congress MIA files, reel 355, folder 286. The camp (also known as Camp C-5) consisted of 8 inmate detention buildings, four cadre houses, assembly hall, and a kitchen.
139 Conboy, Kenneth and Morrison, James, Shadow War, Boulder, CO; Paladin Press, 1995, p. 115.
140 Conboy, Kenneth and Morrison, James, "Early Covert Action on the Ho Chi Minh Trail, Vietnam, August, 2000, p. 31.
141 B5-T8 was located approx. 9 miles west of the western Vietnam/Laos border at the DMZ at a place called Sar Lit (XD6266). [General Directorate for Rear Services, People's Army of Vietnam [Tonc Cuc Hau Can, Quan Doi Nhan Dan Viet Nam], Van Tai Quan su Chien Luoc Tren Duong Ho Chi Minh Trong Khang Chien Chong My [Strategic Military Transport on the Ho Chi Minh Trail During the War Against the United States], Hanoi, 1988, p. 77, classified "Secret" [Mat]].
142 Conboy and Morrison, Shadow War, p. 115; Conboy and Morrison, "Early Covert Action..m," p. 31.
143 U.S. Dept of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961-1963, Vol. 1, Vietnam, 1961, p. 126.
144 48QXD 3244.
145 CIA, Current Intelligence Weekly Summary, 04 May 1961, MORI 207619
146 CIA, Current Intelligence Weekly Summary, 11 May 1961, MORI 207620
147 CIA, Current Intelligence Weekly Summary, 01 June 1961, MORI 207623.
148 Conversation with James Morrison, 09 January 1994.
149 Ibid. The BVs, Voluntary Battalions, unlike regular Army units, were not deployable. They remained in an area with their wives, children, and chickens and pigs 150 Conboy and Morrison, "Early Covert Action..," cited, p. 33.

while working on an Air America resupply of that unit, was shot down and became Missing in Action.[151] After that incident, resupply of BV-33 was from Air America flights originating in DaNang (occasionally stopping enroute at Khe Sanh).[152]

The Khe Sanh area now emerged as significant for the Communist strategy developed in the 1950s and 1960s which dictated capture of periphery territories and working backwards towards centers of power. The plan was to "find its bases far from the capital and gradually work inward against the government in hope that after a number of years it would be strong enough either to assault the capital itself or bring the government to its knees in a protracted struggle."[153] QL-9 became the principle east-west infiltration routes, intensively employed since the end of 1958 by Communist forces.[154] The enemy situation during the summer of 1961 gave indications that North Vietnamese forces would push eastward along Route 9 toward Hue.[155] The situation reflected a menace and the Chief of the MAAG [Military Assistance and Advisory Group], Vietnam, was "..convinced that this guerrilla war cannot be won by free world unless effective steps taken to plug up porous border."[156] That the border might be incapable of being sealed almost doomed further American assistance and involvement in Vietnam. In late 1961, planners in Washington, D.C., explored the idea of introducing an international force to guard against infiltration from Laos into South Vietnam.[157] Chief of Naval Operations reported: "Current information from the Chief of the Military Assistance and Advisory Group at Vietnam indicates that Viet Cong infiltration is mainly overland through Laos. Since the fall of Tchepone, Communist forces have had free access to the Vietnam border by this secure and well concealed route."[158]

Exploratory efforts to halt this ingression became the focus of the biennial SEATO exercise,[159] TULUNGUN conducted 26-31 March 1962 with the scenario:

> "After the fall of Tchepone, Laos, to Pathet Lao and Kong Le forces, Aggressor used this route to infiltrate large numbers of guerrilla elements into northern Republic of Vietnam... Unable to cope with the overall deteriorating situation alone, the Republic of Vietnam government requested SEATO assistance in restoring order and government control."[160]

The Taylor Mission Report, proposing a "Frontier Force, Vietnam," indicated that as of the summer of 1961, the 325th North Vietnamese Division was just north of the 17th parallel and the 304th and 324th NVA Divisions were in the vicinity of Route 9. The Frontier Force concept included securing willing assistance of Montagnards to make infiltration along the 103-mile "hot" area impossible.[161]

Accordingly, a Special Forces "A" Team arrived at Khe Sanh Village and established a permanent camp there on 08 July 1962,[162] to check infiltration along Route 9 by North Vietnamese Army forces. It located just to the east of the village in an old French fortified hilltop that was neither secure nor easily defended, referred to as "the old French Fort."[163] The first team

---

[151] Eugene Henry DeBruin, in a C-46, was shot down 2 KM west of Tchepone, Laos (XD2748) over the village of Ban Nassong (XD2448) on 05 Sep 1963

[152] Ibid.

[153] George K. Tanham and Dennis J. Duncanson, "Some Dilemmas of Counterinsurgency," Foreign Affairs 48:1 (Oct, 1969), p. 166.

[154] "Memorandum from the President's Military Representative (Taylor) to the President (Kennedy)," 18 Sept 1961 in U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961-63, p. 304.

[155] Memorandum from Edwin F. Black of the Office of the Secretary of Defense to the President's Deputy Special Assistant for National Security Affairs (Rostow)," 27 July 1961, in U.S. Dept. of State., Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961-63, p. 245.

[156] Telegram from the Ambassador in Vietnam to the Dept. of State, 08 Dec 1960," in U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1958-60, p. 719.

[157] Westmoreland, A Soldier Reports, p. 145.

[158] Memorandum from the Chief of Naval Operations (Anderson) to the Secretary of Defense (McNamara)," 09 Oct 1961, in U.S. Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961-63, p. 329.

[159] Exercises were conducted every other year to test new concepts and ensure that armed forces of the SEATO nations could operate effectively with each other. These included STRONBACK (1958), BLUE STAR (1960), TULUNGUN (1962), and BACKPACK (1964). TULUNGUN, conducted 02 March – 12 April 1962 in the Philippines is a Philippine word meaning "mutual assistance."

[160] CG, Philippine Army/Commander SEVENTH Fleet Joint ltr FF/7/LWW:ml, 3500, Ser N32-N00184, 13 Dec 1961, Subj: Letter of Instruction for SEATO Amphibious Exercise 'TULUNGUN'," in USMC archives VE23.2.N121615; COMPHIBGRU OpO 301-62, 130900L/Jan62, USMC archives VE23.2.N.235/1.

[161] Letter from the President's Military Representative (Taylor) to the President," U.S. Dept of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1961-63, pp. 520-521.

[162] Shelby Stanton, Green Berets at War, Novato, CA.: Presidio, 1985, p. 46.

[163] 48QXD 859387, indicated as Thuong Van on military maps.

that arrived at Khe Sanh had already spent three of its six-month tour at DaNang before arriving at Khe Sanh in 1962.[164] C-123 Caribou aircraft from Thailand arrived and landed on the airstrip at Lao Bao but didn't have a reverse prop and slid off the small airstrip. "All of a sudden about 30, 40 Lao came over in camouflage fatigues with weapons and challenged us. It's one of those international things. They said their border was over on our side and we said it was in the middle of the river. But they had more men than us. Their Captain told us he'd been watching us from across the river knew we were in trouble and so he came over and helped."[165] The Medic from that first Special Forces team, Gerald J. Howland, noted the ambiguous understanding of the border at the time: "Neither Vietnamese nor Laotians knew where the border was nor did they care. We saw Laotian troops in Khe Sanh routinely then. They came in, in force. ... We had an airplane come in and skid off into the river. He couldn't get stopped because of wet grass. We'd sit down there at night guarding the stupid thing. The Bru would leave us if the tigers came, and that was every night."[166] The American anthropologist, Gerald Cannon Hickey, recalls his visit to Lao Bao in May, 1964 as "..a very Lao-looking village. The people wear Lao clothes. They were Lao. They weren't Montagnards. I'd been in Laos in the 50s and [Lao Bao] looked exactly like the Lao villages you'd see in the Mekong River Valley. There were piles of rubble and some half-standing walls, and that's all that was left. The whole place looked very strange. There was a big ambush in there in 1954. There was a French column going from Laos back into Vietnam and the Viet Minh ambushed them and killed a lot of people right in the path there, the D'Ai Lao Pass."[167] The western Lao/Vietnam border continued to be a matter of dispute; a joint U.S./Lao survey team attempting to resolve MIA sites attempted to travel to a particular site on 31 October 1992, but was stopped due to a border change which was now at the 63 north/south grid line.[168] When the French began to explore the area, Captain Luce began to search the archives in Hue for documents that defined the border of Annam and found that following the Siamese invasion of Vientiane between 1825 and 1827, Minh Mang had annexed the western mountainous lands of Quang Tri and the border extended westward to the Mekong river and that since that time, most leaders in these areas had paid tribute to Hue.[169]

The borders of the Khe Sanh area were not only ambiguous with Laos, there had been a smoldering dispute of where the Demilitarized Zone line was located. During the Conference of Berlin (the Potsdam Conference), at the conclusion of World War II, General Marshall asked Admiral Mountbatten (UK) what he thought of the idea of splitting French Indo-China into two and placing the southern half, south of 16 N, in the Southeast Asia Command. Admiral Mountbatten concurred.[170] (The northern portion would be under control of China). The precedent for portioning Indo-China was established.[171]

During the Geneva Conference, the dividing line became a matter of dispute. While the Vietnamese representative, Dong, was ready to go as far as the 16th parallel running just south of Tourane, (DaNang), the French representative, Mendes-France, insisted on French control of Tourane (DaNang) and Hue as well as control of the road (Route 9) running from Quang Tri to Savannakhet in Laos. Mendes-France insisted on the 18th parallel (Dong Hoi area).[172] According to classified French documents, Chou-En-Lai took the general view that Vietnam should be split. Giap said, "Split at the 16th parallel," and Mendez-France said, "split at the 18th parallel." Molotov said, "Then we agree that the split should be at the 17th

---

[164] Conversation with Jacques Standing, 20 March 1989. Standing was a member of the first team at Khe Sanh.

[165] Ibid.

[166] Conversation with Gerald J. Howland, 20 March 1989. Lao Bao later became a prisoner of war camp run by the Vietnamese. Also known as "Camp "C-5," it held about 400-450 inmates and was surrounded by a bamboo lattice fence and consisted of 8 inmate detention buildings. All inmates were Vietnamese. [Library of Congress, "Vietnam Era Documentation Collection in Microfilm" (Shelf number (o)92/300 MicRR, Camp Files: Lao Bao, Folder #286.]

[167] Conversation with Dr. Gerald Cannon Hickey, 21 May 1990.

[168] JTF-FA Honolulu HI 101102Z/Dec92. As early as 12964, North Vietnam claimed a border as much as six miles into Laos, assigning to Vietnam the area of the jungle trails of the ho Chi Minh Trail. A CIA document indicates: "In 1954 and again in 1958, North Vietnam followed up its claims by moving troops into the region, cited historical precedents dating from 1428 and termed the disputed area "uninterruptedly part of Vietnamese territory." [CIA, Current Intelligence weekly Summary, 11 Dec 1964, p. 6 (MORI 207893).]

[169] Hickey, Gerald Cannon, Sons of the Mountains, Ethnohistory of the Vietnamese Central Highlands to 1954, New Haven: Yale University Press, 1982, p. 235.

[170] US Dept. of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, The Conference of Berlin, 1945, Vol. 2, Washington: Govt. Printing Office, 1960, p. 377 [meeting of the Combined Chiefs of Staff, 24 July 1945]. President Truman sent a message to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek: "On the advice of the Combined Chiefs of Staff we have reached the conclusion that for operational purposes it is desirable to include that portion of French Indo-China lying south of 16 north latitude in the Southeast Asia Command. This arrangement would leave in the China Theater that part of Indo-China which covers the flank of projected Chinese operations in China.." [Ibid., No. 1273, p. 1321]

[171] Documents Relating to British Involvement in the Indo-China Conflict, 1945-1965, Misc No. 25 (1965), London: Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1966, p. 6.

[172] Dept of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1952-1954, Vol. XVI, The Geneva Conference, Washington: Govt. Print. Office, 1981, p. 1368.

parallel."[173] Bernard Fall indicates that Molotov's suggestion "..has been explained by the conciliatory role played at Geneva by the U.S.S.R., which in 1954 was trying to induce France not to join the European Defense Community."[174] On 20 July 1954, the 17th parallel was adopted.[175]

The second Special Forces team at Khe Sanh arrived about September, 1962, and it was during its 6-month deployment at Khe Sanh that s Vietnamese engineering battalion arrived and constructed the Khe Sanh airstrip.[176]

Americans at Khe Sanh not only "plugged" a hole in a porous border, but also used the location as a means of entering Laos which, although officially "neutral" was being used by North Vietnamese forces as a means to introduce armies and material into South Vietnam via the "Ho Chi Minh" trail network. Not only did Khe Sanh's proximity to the border as well as the pass through the rugged Annamite mountain range at D'Ai Lao (Lao Bao) permit introduction of intelligence-gathering activities (ground teams from SOG, and flights from Project TIGERHOUND observer aircraft), but since the tribal area of the indigenous Bru Montagnards was on both sides of the border. Anthropologist Dr. Gerald Cannon Hickey notes that for the Bru, "There was no border. A lot of the Bru spilled across the border into Laos. They never recognized the borders at all; the borders meant nothing to them."[177] Mr. John Miller of the Wycliffe Bible Translators, having been in Khe Sanh from 1961 and thoroughly learning the Bru language, subsequently found himself in Thailand where he not only discovered Bru living in Thailand, but apparently, there was a loose connection of tribal peoples extending from Khe Sanh through Laos and into Thailand, identifying themselves as "Bru" and having a similar language.[178] Carolyn Miller notes that the Bru in Thailand:

> "have a feeling that at one time they had a king. And one of the Bru men told me, 'Our problem is that we lost our king.' And so they see their sort of subjugated status as related to the fact that they no longer have a uniting kingdom, but feel that at one point they did."[179]

The Millers opine that the Bru probably originated in Laos and spread both ways. Those in Thailand perhaps located there for economic reasons, seeking land to plant food, or perhaps avoid the French demand for forced labor (to built Route 9, for example) or to leave the embattled Laotian area. "The fact that they are here at all has been a revelation to us."[180]

The tantalizing prospect of possible monitoring and control of the Ho Chi Minh Trail utilizing them as a counter-guerrilla force became the mission of "Special Projects" under Major George Quamo in FOB-3 at Khe Sanh. . James Morrison comments:

> "The reason for Khe Sanh's original establishment was to open up a conduit of an in-road with the Bru tribe that had occupied that area traditionally. The Bru, like other Montagnard tribes, didn't respect any lines that the French drew on the map. They had relatives that actually lived in Laos—and in North Vietnam. That was all their territory. They didn't care anything about 'north, south, east, or west.'"[181]

Mr. James Morrison, however, like the boy in the "Emperor's New Clothes" story, dared to disclose the truth of the situation. It simply was doomed; it couldn't possibly work.

---

[173] Joyaux, Francois, La Chine et le reglement du premier conflit d'Indochine, Paris: Publications de la Sorbonne, 1979, quoted in a ltr from W.W. Rostow, 17 Aug 1995. B.S.N. Murti [Vietnam Divided, The Unfinished Struggle, New York: Asia Publishing House, 1964, p. 20] opines that France insisted on the 18th parallel perhaps to compensate for the evacuation of Hanoi and Haiphong. The 18th parallel is the northern border of ancient Annam, passing through the Porte d'Annam, the entrance to Annam.

[174] Fall, Bernard B., "Indochina (1946-1954)," as part of the 3-vol. series, Challenge and Response in Internal Conflict, Dept of the Army, The Center for Research in Social Systems (CRESS) of the American University, p. 26. [Copy in archives of United States Military Academy, West Point, NY].

[175] Raskin, Marcus G., and Fall, Bernard B., eds., The Viet-Nam Reader, New York: Vintage Books, p. 84, Gettleman, Marvin E., ed., Viet Nam, Greenwich, CT: Fawcett Crest Book, 1965, p. 137. The Provisional Demarcation Line was fixed as follows: from East to West: the mouth of the Song Ben Hat (Cua Tung) River, and the course of that river (known as the Rao Thanh in the mountains) to the village of Bo Ho Su, then the parallel of Bo Ho Su to the Laos-Vietnam frontier. A 5-kilometer demilitarized zone on either side of this line was established. [Documents Relating to British Involvement..., p. 16]. The line was approximately 60 kilometers (roughly 37 miles) long.

[176] Conversation with Frank Fowler, 21 March 1989. Fowler was the light weapons specialist at the time.

[177] Comments made by Dr. Gerald Cannon Hickey on a video recording by John Wright, 17 June 1989.

[178] Comments of John and Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 12 November 1992. About 60 to 70 percent of the vocabulary of the Bru in Thailand is the same as that of the Bru at Khe Sanh.

[179] Comments of Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 12 November 1992.

[180] Letter from John and Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 24 March 1993.

[181] Conversation with James Morrison, 09 January 1994. Morrison had two tours in Vietnam, a tour in Laos, and a tour in Cambodia.

"You see, it's virtually impossible to infiltrate anybody with any degree of realism into that area: One, because of the limited Landing Zones because of the geographic features and all the karst and ridges. Secondly, you were compromised as soon as you got off the helicopter because of the noise of the rotary-winged aircraft. That area had one of the heaviest concentrations—not necessarily of AAA, but of forces. As soon as a helicopter was heard, there was someone on your trail. If you put them in by parachute, they were too strung out."[182]

Morrison called the effort "Star Wars," and added that the North Vietnamese, like the East Germans, Mongolians, and Chinese were experts at population and resource control, that any undocumented person is immediately spotted, and that teams sent out of Saigon into the area west of Lao Bao along Route 9 were all rolled up to the man, making the effort a total, dismal failure. On the other hand, George Quamo was under pressure from the national level, "to do something!"[183] The impossibility of operating in that area, saturated with North Vietnamese who considered it a strategic area, became apparent in the total disaster of the large LAM SON 719 operation in early 1971. Morrison also noted the impossibility of utilizing BV-33 at Ban Houei Sane: "BV-33 never really amounted to anything. There were a number of attempts to get them involved in on-going activities, but they didn't have the where-with-all;, they didn't have the impetus to try and intercede against a force that was much more organized, more highly trained, capable of running them off the map at their discretion. They [BV-33] were basically consigned to a position of sitting on a hill and eating food. That's all they actually did."[184]

On the other hand, early Army studies of the Brou reflected good possibilities for employing them in a military role:

"..the Brou can become an effective force against the Viet Cong. The tribesmen can serve as informers, trackers and guides, intelligence agents, interpreters, and translators. With intensive training and support, the Brou can be organized to defend their villages ..; with good leadership, they can be organized into an effective counter guerrilla combat unit. U.S. personnel who worked with the Brou reported that the tribesmen were effective and loyal soldiers. ... They defend themselves vigorously when they, their families, or their villages are threatened and when they have adequate resources and chances for success."[185]

"The Brou pride themselves upon their hunting skill and their mastery of traditional weapons; they are equally as proud of their skill and marksmanship with modern weapons. If a Brou can carry and handle a weapon conveniently, he will use it well."[186]

EARLY FRENCH SETTLERS

Monsieur Eugene Poilane, born of peasants 16 March 1888 in Saint Sauveur de Landemont in the department of Maine et Loire, France, left school at the age of 11 or 12 without a diploma and in 1909 and served in the French military as an artillery worker in Indochina at the Naval Arsenal in Saigon.[187] Life was hard on soldiers at that time and, although he smoked, he sold his tobacco (his pay) in order to have a little coffee and something to eat; he thus abandoned smoking.[188]

"Indochina was then a true paradise and to live there at that time must have been very tempting for young men from France and elsewhere. Many of them stayed on after their military service was over. They settled there and led the life of the colonist, a life full of charm and the exotic, of pretty women, all petite and beautiful with their long black hair. Many of them intermarried with the native women."[189]

Following World War I, Monsieur Eugene Poilane met Professor Auguste Chevalier, a French botanist who, impressed with Eugene's courage and insight, arranged for his assignment to the Saigon Botanical Institute which designated him a field botanist in 1919 and an agent of the Services Forestiers d'Indochine (Indochina Forest Service) in 1922.[190] He was promoted to Museum Correspondent in 1928.

In 1921, Eugene returned to France for a population census and met his future wife, Mlle Yvonne Bourdeauducq[191] at a beekeeping exposition.

---

[182] Conversation with James Morrison, 21 November 1994.
[183] Conversation with James Morrison, 26 February 1995.
[184] Conversation with James Morrison, 27 M<arch 1994.
[185] Schrock, Stocktonm, Murphym abd Fromme, op. cit., p. 78.
[186] Ibid., p. 79.
[187] Obit., Museum d'Histoire Naturelle de Paris, Revue Adansonia, Tome IV (1964), pp. 352-354.
[188] Letter from Madame Madeleine Poilane, 6 July 1990, to Ray W. Stubbe.
[189] Ibid.
[190] He was promoted to Museum Correspondent in 1928.
[191] Pronounced "board-a-duke."

"She was just a "girl," 13 years younger, who thought that you got pregnant from kissing on 'the mouth.' She was very naïve and had been raised in a strict family where you don't share 'little secrets' with others. It was a traditional bourgeois family where young girls are not supposed to ask questions. She was neither equipped nor prepared for married life. She still wanted to be a nun, but faced with domineering parents (her mother wrote the letters she sent to her fiancée), she gave in. When the moment came to leave for Indochina .. she told herself: OK well, I'll become a missionary over there.

"His wife adapted to her new way of life and henceforth followed him around in his travels down various trails, always in pursuit of flora, plants. She slept under a tent and shared the life of a coolie. She herself became quite adept at analyzing flora and was able to assist her husband in his work."[192]

In 1922, Madame Bourdeauducq-Poilane gave birth to her first girl, Yvonne, born on 4 August in Saigon. Her second child, Jeanne, was born 19 June 1924 in Hue.[193] Eugene Poilane then embarked on his botanical explorations in Annam, an effort requiring vigor and endurance in the tropical forest environment. There were insects, animals, reptiles, and leeches, along with the ever-present malaria, requiring daily doses of quinine. All water had to be boiled. New trails were cleared in the jungle, meals were prepared on the spot, and the work was very hard.

"..the leeches multiply. They suck your blood and you soon have them all over your body. You have to constantly get rid of the little beasts which quickly transform themselves into living-breathing syringes. A lit cigarette applied to a leech makes it let go and the same is true for wild honey. There are also ticks which bite you and gorge themselves on your blood. There are several types of these, some of which, when they are 'stuffed' resemble little peas and you can knock them off; others look like little crabs which dig into the skin, causing extremely painful bites which hurt for several months. There are also fire ants whose bits causes a very unpleasant burning sensation. There are also other species of ants, some of which are considered a delicacy by the Montagnards who eat them raw. They supposedly have a slightly acid taste."[194]

Additionally, there were tigers and wild boars, civets, panthers, honey-eating bears, pumas, and ocelots, pythons, cobras, and banana snakes which this couple encountered in their wanderings through the jungle area. From 1922 until 1947, specimens were sent by Eugene to the Museum of Natural History in Paris at the rate of 1,500 to 5,000 a year, reaching by the end of 1947 a total of more than 36,000. He found 21 new species for the first and 19 for the second time, traveling by foot up to the Chinese, Burmese, and Siamese borders gathering his specimens in barely known or even unknown areas.[195] Two genera have been named after him: Poilania and Poilaniella.[196]

His travels brought him to what eventually became Khe Sanh where he discovered a plateau of red earth. The village of Khe Sanh (The words "Khe Sanh" mean "green river") did not exist at that time; there was only a straw hut of the French engineer who built Route 9.[197] Eugene requested the French authorities to grant him a concession in this virgin area and he was given five years to develop the area.

By 1926, Eugene Poilane had settled at Cu Bach[198] where he built a straw hut to house his little family and continued his botanical explorations which included a search for precious, beautiful woods. He saw his wife two weeks out of a year.

On 30 April 1931, Mme Bourtdeauducq-Poilane gave birth to Felix Poilane at Khe Sanh alone; her husband was in the jungle collecting botanical specimens. When a doctor finally arrived, he simply declared "all was well." Eugene continued to father children, leaving behind six at the time of his death (20 April 1964).[199] Mme Madeleine Poilane notes that Eugene Poilane"..loved his family a great deal and he wanted to have many children who would surround him and continue his work."[200]

Near the time Felix was born, a Bru Montagnard named Onya was born.[201] Anya's father was the Poilanes' chauffeur and his mother worked in Mme. Boudeauducq's kitchen. Madame Madeleine Poilane recalls her as "very neat, very discrete, and [192] Poilane letter, 06 July 1990, cited.

---

[193] Ibid.
[194] A. Camus, in A. chevalier, Journal d'agriculture tropicale 1 (1954) p. 385, in letter from Mme Madeleine Poilane, 6 Jul 1990.
[195] Poilane letter of 6 Jul 1990, cited.
[196] Obit., Museum d'Histoire Naturelle de Paris, Revue Adansonia, Tome IV (1964), cited, p. 353..
[197] Poilane letter of 6 Jul 1990, cited. Comments of Felix Poilane to Ray W. Stubbe, 01 Jan 1968.
[198] Located where the Khe Sanh base access road meets Route 9, just east of what became Khe Sanh village, XD860404.
[199] On Monday, 20 April 1964, M. Eugene Poilane was killed in an ambush while traveling on Route 9 to Quang Tri City in his Citroen, accompanied by M. Llinares. He was 76. Vide, Stubbe, Ray W., Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed. (2008), p. 13.
[200] Poilane letter, 6 July 1990, cited.
[201] Also referred to as Ahnia and Anya. A letter of 20 Mar 1970 to Dan Kelley from him concludes with "Mr. A- NHA."

very honest."[202] Daniel Kelley, a Marine Corporal with CAC OSCAR in 1967 who became especially close to the Bru, learning their language and speaking it fluently, recalls that Onya's father had relations with Madame Bourdeauducq and on the basis of that Onya and Felix grew up together.[203] Madame Madeleine Poilane notes that Felix and Onya were like little brothers, and Eugene Poilane sent Onya to Hue University along with his son, Felix. Onya spoke fluent French and was even baptized, but when he returned to his Bru village, he readopted Bru customs, taking several wives. He didn't work; his wives did all the work for him. Due to his ability to converse in French and his university education, Vietnamese officials in Khe Sanh used him as a natural mediator between the Vietnamese and the Bru. Positions of leadership in Bru society are hereditary, and thus he was never officially given that status among the Bru.[204]

(In late 1967, Onya, as Assistant District Chief of Huong Hoa, gave an impressive appearance, in sharp contrast to the ill-clad Bru in the area. He was dressed in tiger utilities and had highly polished combat boots, fairly short, very clean in appearance, well poised—almost like a diplomat, the kind of a person with whom one is naturally respectful.[205] His activities and loyalties during and after the siege were, however, uncertain. Cpl Daniel R. Kelley recalls that "prior to and during the first days of the siege, Anya had disappeared for several days at a time which was never explained. Ultimately he did elect to stay at the airbase which means perhaps something in his ever balancing act."[206] Kelly writes, "I myself don't put too much faith in Anya. I was asked many times while I was there [at the Bru Refugee Village at Cua] what I thought of him. for the most part I painted a rosy picture because we needed every bit of help we could get."[207] After the siege, while attending a meeting in Hue, his four wives and children were killed in a VC raid.[208] In the 1972 Offensive, when the Bru were moving from Cua to Hue, fear-struck with crumbling security, Air America planes were lined up to evacuate them, but Onya tried to block it. "He didn't want to lose the funds from the refugees leaving."[209] Dr. Hickey, shocked, recalls, "I was willing to kill Onya. Onya did a divination ritual—The Bru have many—with a chicken and an egg and some rice and said the spirits were advising the people not to move. The Minister of Ethnic Minorities, Nay Lutte, had enough and said to the people, "You really have to move because the North Vietnamese Army is moving on the City of Hue and the defenses have crumbled, and you're going to be caught in heavy fighting." They eventually did move that day as 2300 of them flew to Darlac Province where they could farm and the soil was similar to that of Khe Sanh; it's high and cool. The Rhade built houses for them and they adjusted well.[210])

Eugene's only income was his salary as a Museum correspondent and so he began clearing the land to plant a coffee plantation. He brought back 9 coffee beans from a trip to Tonkin and began a tree nursery with those nine beans which eventually became a coffee plantation.

Eugene was also interested in determining whether or not various fruit trees would grow in the Khe Sanh area and established an experimental orchard[211] where, in addition to growing Charl coffee, he introduced new species to the area from France, Japan and other countries. He noted in his notebooks any change in the plant's behavior, ad diseases contracted. He introduced vines, peach trees, pear trees, chestnut trees, walnut trees, hazelnut trees, and attempted to introduce the date tree. The experimental garden included a large lane of trees which provided nuts used in making paint.[212] Madeleine Poilane described the wide variety in the experimental garden:[213]

---

[202] Poilane letter of 6 July 1990, cited.
[203] Conversation with Daniel Kelley, 23 May 1988.
[204] Letter from Mr. John Miller, 9 Oct 1969: "Mr. Anha has come in to his position of prominence among the Bru by virtue of the fact that he was appointed by the government to be assistant district chief. Prior to this he had no special status other than the influence he bore because of his education and background with the French. Actually it is because of this background that he was considered the logical man to take the assistant District Chief position. Traditionally he would not be in a position of authority, since these positions are hereditary in the Bru system. But since he was appointed to his position, he automatically superseded other Bru leaders as far as the government is concerned. And because he is not the go-between for the Bru and the government the people naturally look to him as the authority in the area. His parents worked for the Poilanes for many years. In fact he was pretty much brought up with Felix."
[205] Diary of Ray W. Stubbe, entry for 13 September 1967.
[206] Daniel R. Kelley, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 28 March 1970.
[207] Ibid.
[208] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 10 June 1990.
[209] Conversation with Dr. Gerald Cannon Hickey, 02 June 1990.
[210] Ibid.
[211] Located at approx. XD834425, off the road extending to the northwest of Khe Sanh Combat Base.
[212] Poilane letter, 6 July 1990, cited. Probably tung trees.
[213] Letter of Madeleine Poilane, 18 July 1988, to Mr. Ronald Drez, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968." Madeleine Poilane notes that the President of Vietnam, Ngo Dinh Diem, visited this garden in July, 1959.

"We have many fruit trees: orange trees, mandarin trees of several varieties, banana trees also with different sorts of bananas. There are avocado trees, persimmon trees of several varieties .. Papayas, very juicy lemons, durians, a fruit very much savored by the Chinese [which] smells very bad and one must stop up one's nose .. in order to be able to eat it. I never succeeded in being able to overcome this odor, and because of this I deprived myself of a fruit which, it appears, very tasty. If you have a Durian in the house it's not possible to sleep, so strong is the odor! The Chinese buy this fruit at a huge price. There are kola nuts, very much prized by the Senegalese, the Arecca nut which is used to prepare betel with leaves of the cocoa plant which we also had. We had superb mango trees but which did not bear any fruit, alas. Felix had succeeded in making a pepper bed ... Numerous tea trees serve for our personal use.... We sold oranges and mandarins individually. ... We also had large trees called tung which produced fruit which was sold to make oil for paint. We sold these nuts only a few times. People were not very interested in this fruit which was a pity for us."[214]

In 1953, Felix (now 22 years old) suffered a serious accident on Route 9 while in a 4/4 French army vehicle which overturned on a curve in the road near Cu Bach. He was caught beneath the truck and suffered a fracture at the 12th lumbar of his spine which paralyzed him from the pelvis down. He was unable to move his legs. It was decided to send him to France on a hospital ship for rehabilitation. He was admitted to military hospitals in great pain and required morphine shots. When he was able to walk with the aid of crutches, he took a correspondence course, earning his C.A.P.[215] and found a job as an assistant accountant in Bonneuil, France. On 21 and 22 May 1957, he met his future wife, Madeleine in Voyuvray, Madeleine's birthplace, during communion of Madeleine's godchild, Maurice Balleur. It was Pentecost. Madeleine recalls:

"We made each other's acquaintance in front of the post office. Felix was riding his motor-scooter. That evening, Maurice's parents had a party at their place. The scooter passed by once, twice ... We heard him of course and asked him to stop in. Felix wanted to get to know me a little better than he had on the side of the road... All night long I thought about the name Felix Poilane which sounded so strange to me!

"The next day, the Monday of Pentecost, we decided to make a trip to the banks of the Loire. Felix looked after the kids. We helped him give out the snacks and .. we talked. ... I felt something inside me that drew me towards this young man, and I believe that he too felt a desire to see me again

"The next morning, I came home from Tours on bicycle to get back to work. I had only one thought in mind, and on Wednesday I found a letter from Felix. I wasn't surprised.. ... And that's how the whole adventure began.[216]

Felix and Madeleine were married 3 August 1957. Only a few days earlier, Madeleine had lost her mother who died of cancer of the liver. They booked passage on the steamship, "Laos," and departed Marseille, France 22 November 1957. After stopovers at Port Said, Aden, Bombay, Colombo, and Singapore, they arrived at Saigon on 16 December 1957. Madeleine was sea-sick the entire journey.

When they arrived at Khe Sanh on 21 December 1957 (at the height of the monsoon season), Madeleine was shocked at what she saw. Their large house of 16 rooms—"none of which was habitable"—had not been maintained, and the future of Vietnam was uncertain.[217] The local priests, who had harvested and cleared the land in the absence of Felix. Father Romain, a Benedictine priest told Madeleine, "You will be a queen here." Madeleine held back her tears, seeing only holes in the ceiling and floor, no doors of windows, the cold monsoon winds freely blowing into the house, and the ceiling of their bedroom, on the second floor, was supported by branches of coffee trees. There was no bed. Their luggage had not yet arrived from Saigon and they only had a few things. Eugene Poilane provided two iron beds on which they put mats. Their first meal was bread with salted butter and some bananas. There were only two bowls and a few dishes.

Life for their first year together at Khe Sanh was primitive and harsh:

"We had to go to Quang Tri, a distance of 70 kilometers from Khe Sanh, in order to get provisions and buy the necessary things in order to live. My husband managed the plantation alone for the first time. It was necessary to work for a year in order to see how things were going to come out. Identity papers were necessary in order to travel. To go to Dong Ha there were no fewer than 14 bamboo gates to cross and we had to show our papers. Most of the time the soldiers looked at the papers upside down with a great deal of seriousness. They did not want to show that they did not know how to read and write. We didn't say anything, trying to keep our calm. Afterwards the name of Poilane alone was all that was needed as a passport."[218]

---

[214] Ibid.

[215] Certificat d'aptitude professionnel, the equivalent of a vocational high school diploma.

[216] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam 1957-1968, in her letter of 6 July 1990, cited.

[217] Ibid.

[218] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam 1957-1968," cited.

There were five coffee plantations at Khe Sanh:[219] (1) Eugene Poilane divorced his wife, Madame Bourdeauducq, married a Nung from North Vietnam, and bought out the coffee plantation of his uncle, M. Lecas (who died of cholera and is buried at Khe Sanh). When Eugene was assassinated 20 April 1964, title passed to his second wife. This plantation was located on the area on which Khe Sanh Combat Base was constructed plus the experimental botanical garden to the northwest. The Combat Base access road was really a private road built by Eugene Poilane. This plantation also included a plantation bought from Eugene's sister, (the former Lucas plantation). (2) When Eugene divorced, Felix managed his mother's plantation (Madame Bourdeauducq) from the time he returned from France (Dec 1957) until the siege (22 Jan 1968). This plantation is bounded by Route 9 next to the little bridge on the Cu Bach stream, to the bridge of Ta-Con, to entrance of Khe Sanh, then to the terrain of the combat base bounded by a long row of trees (called Abrasins) separating this plantation from that of Eugene's. (3) The Laval plantation. M. Laval was a retired French officer who established a plantation just west of Khe Sanh village.[220] When he moved to France, M. Raymond Simard, a soldier who had little relatives in France, purchased it following his second marriage to a Eurasian who had a little boy whom he adopted.[221]

(After the siege, he settled in Bourail in New Caledonia). The Simard house was the last house on the western edge of Khe Sanh village, located across Route 9 from the CAP O-2 position. In late 1967, when the Marines occasionally fired 60 mm illum mortars that landed in the Simard orchard, Corporal Daniel Kelley, using his meager French, was able to discover that the wild firing, was brought on by trip flares in the CAP O-2 tripped by an ocelot. Kelley discovered Simard to be very friendly and the conversation was informative. "We would set these flares in the evening and then the next morning the Bru women would come in, disarm the flares so they could start working in his backyard. We thought: if they can do this! If we tried to do the same thing, we'd set them off."[222] Kelley observed the basic honesty of the Bru—primitive but very moral: M. Simard had a fruit orchard in addition to his coffee trees, yet the Bru wouldn't touch his fruit trees to take some; they'd buy bananas in Khe Sanh ville rather than touch his.[223] When the siege began and NVA forces inside Khe Sanh village attacked the two CAC OSCAR compounds, CAP O-2, at the western edge of the village, received rounds from Simard's orchard as well as the Buddhist pagoda across Route 9.[224] Sgt Harper and the CAP O-2 driver, Tyson, said that the NVA were in Simard's house and so the Marines blasted the house with LAWs. They received a considerable number of RPGs in response and knew they could have been overrun, but the NVA were apparently focused on the District Headquarters.[225] Aerial photo recon of 25 January 1968 disclosed 94 foxholes at XD847376, just off Route 9 near Simard's house, opposite the CAP O-2 position (possible an ambush position for forces attempting to reinforce Lang Vei).[226]

A fourth plantation had a history of intrigue. Originally planted by M. Rome, it was located to the east of Khe Sanh village, just north of Route 9, Both the wife of M. Rome and his gardener were Japanese. The wife was suspected of spying for the Japanese and The Rome family enjoyed "high living" until they mysteriously disappeared.[227] The property reverted to the Vietnamese government and was subsequently rented by Monsieur Emmanuel Llinares who was married to a Vietnamese. M. Llinares, originally from Montpellier in the Herant (the northeast Pyrennes of France),[228] had been a wealthy man living in North Vietnam but fled south during the "Passage to Freedom," losing everything; he had no love for the North Vietnamese![229] His wife, however, had contacts with the Viet Cong. A network of VC was discovered in the village at the bottom of the plantation, at the Riviere Rao Quan, leading to a resettlement of all Bru Montagnards in the area, at which time at least 5,000 Bru went over to the VC side.[230] Following a double assassination of two of the Llinares workers in the house, the wife departed and demanded protection of the Quang Tri Province chief and never returned to the plantation and her husband.[231]

---

[219] Madeleine Poilane, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 26 Jan 1971.
[220] Poilane letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 7 May 1971.
[221] Poilane letter, 6 July 1990, cited.
[222] Conversation with Daniel Kelley, 23 May 1988.
[223] Ibid.
[224] John R. Roberts ,letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 27 Dec 1972.
[225] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry, 22 Jan 1968.
[226] 6470 Recon Tactical Squadron 270100Z/Jan68, Initial Photo Intelligence Report, in III MAF COC Journal and File, 27/28 Jan 1968 #120.
[227] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry for 19 July 1967, conversation with the Poilanes. (Stubbe, khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 Apr 1970, p. 32.)
[228] Letter of Mrs. Poilane to Ray Stubbe, 6 July 1990, cited.
[229] Comments by Mrs. Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 27 May 1986.
[230] Letter of Mrs. Poilane, 6 July 1990, cited.
[231] Letter of Mrs. Poilane to Ray Stubbe, 7 May 1971, cited. Llinares ended up in a Vietnamese re-education camp, according to his daughter, Madeleine who had married a Vietnamese officer and was awaiting his return to France. (Letter of Madeleine Poilane to Ray W. Stubbe, 6 July 1990).

Captain John D. Wagelstein, CO of the Special Forces Detachment at Khe Sanh, arrived in October, 1965, for his 6-month tour and recalls good relationship with the Poilanes but not with Llinares, a Basque; he regarded that as "..one piece of unfinished business I didn't attend to before I left Vietnam. We had an operation. A recon element out had spotted him on the road about two o'clock in the morning by himself. Shortly after, maybe a minute or two later, a patrol of VC came by following him and my intel handler, named Minh, was convinced that he was—we always had known that the guy had a lot of connections. We always thought that he was involved in supporting the VC .. and Poilane didn't have much to do with him. I thought that strange except if you looked at it from the point of view of whom was supporting whom, I think Poilane was trying to stay neutral and I think this guy, the Basque, was in it up to his ears. Minh wanted me to mount a little cleansing operation against this guy, but it all happened shortly before my departure."[232]

On 09 September, 1967, an officer at Khe Sanh noted that M. Poilane was having difficulty transporting his bags of coffee to be sold and that M. Llinares apparently just wanted to leave the area, abandoning all his many bags of coffee as well as all his money.[233]

(Although the Japanese technically occupied Vietnam in 1940, they did not move further west than the Rock Pile.[234] They were technically "ousted" the following August, but no one came to remove them. The Poilanes lived in Hue from March, 1945, to July, 1947.).[235]

In February, 1954, the VC from Laos and Vietnam joined forces and all the French planters abandoned their homes and the "French Fort" and took refuge in the Lao Bao prison stronghold. At that time, Eugene Poilane took a wound in his leg from a mortar round and Mr. Simard lost his wife (although, Felix stated, she wasn't his wife; they were merely living together. They all remained at Lao Bao about four months.[236]

The final plantation was worked by Benedictine Fathers who arrived at Khe Sanh in 1955 on land given them by Eugene Poilane located just south of the junction of Route 9 and the base access road. It was at this time that Madame Bourdeauducq left Eugene Poilane.[237]

In 1958, Rev. Bui Tan Loc, a Vietnamese Protestant pastor returned to Khe Sanh and built a well-constructed church building and school on the eastern edge of Khe Sanh village. (He had been at Khe Sanh three years earlier, but, without adequate preparations, had gathered no followers). He was a missionary to the Bru and no Vietnamese attended his worship.[238]

One Sunday morning in 1958, as five Bru women were clearing a rice field of weeds, 500 meters from National Route 9 they were attacked by a tiger. The man-eater tiger had been roaming the villages and already had killed a dozen Montagnards. Madame Poilane recalls the incident:

> "One Sunday morning, after we returned from Mass, the Montagnards of the village of Ta Con came to tell us that a woman had just been killed by the tiger. This took place 100 meters from National Route 9. The women—there were five of them—had come into the rice field to pull weeds. The victim's mother was among them. We know her very well. The tiger had lied in wait for them and had jumped on the woman, mortally wounding her with its paw. (They know just where to strike). The mother and the three other women had been screamed and pulled on one side of the woman while the tiger pulled on his side in an attempt to drag off his prey to devour it. They eventually succeeded in driving off the tiger and the latter left the woman lying on the ground. We still didn't have a rifle. Felix's rifle, which we had brought with us from France, had been confiscated by the Vietnamese customs officers. You need a Vietnamese permit and we didn't have one, all of which made things difficult for us. As a result, things got really messed up when it came to the coffee harvest. No one would any longer leave the village. It was as if someone had cast an evil spell, for nothing like this had happened in this village for the past ten years. For three months we had no harvesters and we began to become quite concerned. After a good number of palavers, the entire village finally decided to come out, but the women would pick the coffee beans and the men would set up a guard all around the area where the coffee plants were, armed with their spears and their chop-chops.[239] This lasted quite a while until people's minds settled down, fear

---

[232] Taped comments of COL John D. Wagelstein to Ray W. Stubbe, 9 May 1986.
[233] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry for 09 September 1967.
[234] Comments of LtCol Donnelly at HQMC Historical Division. LtCol Donnelly worked in the G-2 of FMFPAC and 9th MAB and had frequent conversations with the French priests at Khe Sanh.
[235] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry for 19 July 1967, conversation with the Poilanes. (Stubbe, khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 Apr 1970, p. 32.).
[236] Ibid.
[237] Letter of Mrs. Poilane to Ray Stubbe, 26 Jan 1971, cited.
[238] Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited.
[239] Probably the large curved knife used in clearing brush, called a pria by the Bru.

slowly vanished, and the village returned to its normal life and we returned to our coffee. After this serious incident, the Head of the Province entrusted a carbine to my father-in-law [Eugene Poilane] who gave it to Felix. As a result, knowing that we were now armed, people's confidence was completely restored."[240]

In 1959, this tiger was killed by Megarde, a Vietnamese military hunter, and peace returned."[241] Before the war in Vietnam, Felix Poilane owned a herd of 120 water buffalo, and almost every day lost one to a tiger. A tiger hunt followed in which 47 tigers were killed.[242]

At the end of their first year at Khe Sanh, Felix and Madeleine Poilane had enjoyed a good harvest and could focus on repairing the buildings. Madeleine had lost eleven kilos and went to Gral Hospital in Saigon. She also had a case of malaria, despite taking daily doses of quinine. Madeleine no longer dreamed of returning to France. She was pregnant, expecting her first child, and the joy of this changed everything. Refurbishing the house in order to house a child now became urgent, and Felix, aided by his workers, completely repaired the house beginning with the roof and ten all sixteen rooms, one by one. The plantation returned to a normal rhythm and Madeleine taught school for the Bru as well as provide medical treatment for them.

"I loved these primitive tribes and they loved me in return. This contributed a great deal to my adjustment. There was so much to do for these mountain people, so poor and living in such backward conditions. ... I spoke a great deal with the women.... The principle problems for these women was not to have too many children and also how to take care of them. This was easy for me to explain to them after the birth of my daughter, Francioise [born 01 Oct 1959].. ... I continued to learn the language. ... I had a real attraction for these primitive people who were very near to us. This contributed to my desire to remain on the plantation."

Felix and Madeleine Poilane returned to France for two months in 1961. Francoise was not yet two years old and the plantation was entrusted to the care of Father Corentin. At the beginning of 1962, Madeleine had a miscarriage, and on 16 September of that year, a violent typhoon wreaked extensive damage, felling trees that blocked roads. It was necessary to clear away everything. Eugene Poilane's house lost its roof. Repairs were quickly made and life returned to normal. Madeleine gave birth to "a very large boy of 5 kilos (11 pounds) named Jean-Marie."[243]

During this period, news focused on a supposed attack by the Vietnamese on Buddhists, following false rumors that had been spread. Several Buddhists in Saigon burned themselves in the public square in order to proclaim they were being persecuted by the President of the Republic and his brothers, one of which was Archbishop of Hue. "They concocted the story that the Archbishop had buried Buddhists alive in his garden, and there were people credulous enough to believe these fabrications. This disturbed life in Vietnam for a rather long time. Afterwards, they discovered that there were elements of the Viet Cong among the Buddhist monks who hid themselves under the orange tunic."[244]

Despite political unrest in South Vietnam, life for the Poilanes at Khe Sanh returned to normal. Friends arrived to see Eugene Poilane's experimental orchard,[245]hunt deer, grouse pheasant and wild animals, such as the tiger and wild boar, the latter causing major destruction in the coffee plantation. Felix enjoyed hunting and this put meat into their diet as well as that of their workers. On 19 and 21 December 1961, Felix successfully trapped a tiger (providing meat to eat)[246] as well as a spotted panther which had killed a pig in a neighboring Bru village. The Bru asked Felix to trap it with his big jaw steel trap. Madeleine later sent the skin of the panther back to France; she had also sent the skins of two tigers killed by Felix.[247]

In February, 1964, Monsieur Wolff, a French pharmacist from Dong Ha, arrived to visit Monsieur Llinares who was sick. Upon returning, Wolff was killed, perhaps mistaken for an American. Then, on Monday, 20 April 1964, Eugene Poilane was killed with three bullets, one of which near the heart was fatal. This was at kilometer 51 on Route 9 and Llinares was a passenger, unharmed. The American Special Forces detachment, which had been at the Old French Fort, then asked the Poilanes for permission to use the airstrip at the end of a road of the boundary of the plantation run b Felix and that of his father, Eugene. "We accepted of course and the airbase because of this began its existence. Afterwards the airbase was enlarged. It was about 30 hectares or more of pasture land which was taken over gradually."[248] (This was Khe Sanh Special Forces camp, later, Khe Sanh Combat Base).

---

[240] Poilane letter of 6 July 1990, cited.
[241] Letter of Mrs. Poilane to Ray Stubbe, 26 Jan 1971, cited
[242] Ibid.
[243] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited.
[244] Ibid.
[245] Poilane letter, 26 Jan 1971, cited.
[246] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited
[247] Ibid.
[248] Ibid.

By 1964, after the fall of President Diem, Route 9 was cut off and bridges blown up, and the Poilanes could only move their coffee by American planes that landed on the Khe Sanh airstrip. In addition, manpower became scarce since men were now soldiers, attracted by regular pay.[249]

On 3 March 1964, Father Poncet of the foreign missions of Paris arrived, followed by Father Mauvais who came to assist. In May, 1967, nuns of Saint Paul of Chartes came and moved into a place near the priests to work with the Bru.[250] A Marine from the CAC OSCAR unit in Khe Sanh village once reported that he went to Father Poncet for confession. He didn't speak French; Poncet didn't understand English. No problem. Father Poncet had all the common sins listed in English on one side of a card, and had the Marine point to the sin and indicate how many times. He then flipped the card on which were printed the penances in English. Father Poncet pointed to the penance and indicated how many.

A 4-star General from the United States visited the Poilanes who indicated problems with defoliation sprays in nearby Laos. The winds from Laos carried the spray and destroyed their durian trees which were more than 25 years old and now no longer produced. They lost all their leaves. Madeleine recalls that upon leaving, "the General said Good-bye and tapping Felix on the shoulder he said to his men, 'Be careful when you go to Laos. Check the wind when you drop defoliating chemicals.' Following this defoliation, we filed a claim for damages.. We never received anything in return. We found out that the Americans had given aid but the Vietnamese must have kept these for themselves."[251]

FELIX POILANE 19 July 1967 WITH MARINE PILOTS AND HIS PET DEER. Photo by Ray W. Stubbe

The Marine base continued to enlarge and Felix, who spoke excellent English, established good rapport with them. "The Marines were on our land and they had the kindness to assure us of their help for everything that we might need. ... When it was an absolute necessity the Marines placed at our disposal C-123 and C-130 airplanes to take several tons of coffee either to Dong Ha, Hue, or even DaNang. On the return trip we could also bring up rice and as many provisions as we needed. With our fellow planters we formed a group to avoid asking our neighbors for too much.... I add that the Vietnamese likewise profited from these round-trips for their provisions."[252]

On the other hand, life was far from easy for Felix Poilane. Many Marines assumed that the Poilanes must be paying taxes to the VC in order to survive. However, Bernard B. Fall, the Vietnam expert, notes there are three provinces in South Vietnam where the VC did not collect taxes: Quang Tri Province is one of the three.[253] As the American presence developed and ever changed with new personnel arriving on the scene, Felix was always uncomfortable; the American attitude toward him vacillated as much as any Vietnamese duplicity. Mrs. Carolyn Miller (of the missionary team at Khe Sanh for many years) noted:

> "He knew that he was under suspicion, and he never knew how he was going to be regarded by the Americans. One [Special Forces] team would come in and figure that he was essential to the prosperity of the economy, so they would help him every way they could, would set up these civic committees and he would be on it, and so forth, and the next group would come in and they would decide that he had to be working for the Communists, and so they wouldn't let him near the base and it was total hostility, total suspicion. It was hard."[254]

---

[249] Poilane letter, 26 Jan 1971, cited.
[250] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited.
[251] Ibid.
[252] Ibid.
[253] Bernard B. Fall, "The Theory and Practice of Insurgency and Counterinsurgency," Naval War College: Review 17:8 (April, 1965).
[254] Comments of Mrs. Carolyn Miller to Ray Stubbe, 27 May 1986.

On 09 October 1967, Felix explained his difficulty to obtain clearance to fly out his coffee saying "they used to fly it out on Air America flights, but they no longer come here to the Khe Sanh airstrip. Then we could fly on 'space available,' but no longer. No consumer goods are arriving. The basis was said to be to cut down the black market."[255] The next day, while conversing with Major Bruce B. G. Clarke, the Army Advisor to the District Headquarters, Clarke simply said, "There's no hope for the Frenchman," in a tone not expressing empathy but rather something that gave him power and authority. He added that Colonel Padley, the Senior Officer Present and CO on the Khe Sanh Combat Base, had allowed some coffee shipments to be flown out, so Major Clarke reported this to the Marine Colonel's superiors. He added that he, Major Clarke, has ultimate authority in this area as MAVC representative and "nothing goes out unless over my signature."[256]

The arduous task of growing coffee was exacerbated by the fortunes of war. Marines regularly bulldozed his coffee trees as just so much obstruction to providing adequate fields of fire, little appreciating the great care expended in the development of coffee trees which require eight to ten years before producing good returns.[257] First, nurseries are made and plants are placed in aerated soil a little before the rainy season, usually in May. Vegetation grows fast in the hot, humid weather creating the necessity to dig up the young sprouts which sap the strength of the plants and cut the plants lest they grow too high. Three kinds of coffee were grown at Khe Sanh. Arabica coffee grows on a very small shrub, no more than two meters high. The plant is very fragile and was decimated on the Poilane plantation by a disease for which the Poilanes had no cure. Before the plants died, Arabica coffee trees produced 25 tons per year, harvested at the height f the monsoon season. With no sun to dry it, it was prepared by the "wet method" in which the beans were placed in large cement tanks filled with water until they swelled and fermented. The seeds were then placed dried in a drying room. A second coffee plant, Robusta, came from a small tree and was harvested the beginning of January and placed in a drying room.[258] Cheri coffee originated in Africa and is a tree with a rather large trunk and long branches with broad leaves with a beautiful dark green color. The tree may reach three or four meters in height and is well adapted to the red earth of Khe Sanh. Harvesting of Cheri coffee is done from the 15th f April to the end of September, and the Poilane plantation produced about 20 tons annually.[259]

Coffee production at Khe Sanh was no small matter for the economy of the area. Over 20 tons were annually produced, involving $250,000 GVN and 20 to 50 Bru workers were employed every day.[260]

Felix built a large straw hut in front of the Poilane house as a school for the Bru children taught by Madeleine. Marines delivered empty ammunition boxes which were transformed into tables and benches. Madeleine taught them their own language (in written form), French, and rudiments of the catechism, and Marines occasionally stopped by to bring "goodies for the children."[261]

On Saturday, 20 January, Mr. John Miller hurriedly stopped by to tell Madame Poilane: "You must leave. Things are going badly." Madeleine remembers crying as her world suddenly collapsed: "My life was so tied up with that plantation that I couldn't imagine leaving it."[262] Felix was absent at the time being with the workers who purchased rice and was surprised at the quantities of rice they bought. Then, on Sunday, 21 January 1968, when the siege of Khe Sanh was triggered, Madeleine and Felix were preparing to attend Mass in Khe Sanh with their two children, but soon decided against it. She recalls extensive bombing, the American relief force landing at the Old French Fort, and encountering a surviving Vietnamese soldier who has succeeded in reaching her house and hiding:

> "I did not quite know—this could have been a Viet Cong. He spoke to me and told me that one of his comrades, who had jumped from the helicopter, was seriously wounded and that he was hidden in the small house behind the house where the coffee was stored. I called my husband because I did not quite understand. Felix scolded me for having gone outside. He went towards the soldier and the latter explained to him what was happening. By hiding himself he followed the boy up to the small house and discovered the wounded man who had a shattered shoulder. He had wrapped his wound with towels and the coagulated blood indicated his condition. He was suffering a great deal. My husband decided then to give him a shot of penicillin and we gave them something to eat and drink. We recommended

---

[255] Conversation with Felix Poilane, Monday, 09 October 1967. Diary of Ray W. Stubbe, entry for this date.
[256] Conversation with Major Bruce B.G. Clarke, 10 October 1967. Diary of Ray W. Stubbe, entry for this date.
[257] Madame Poilane, letter of 7 May 1971, cited.
[258] The drying room is large with woven grid work on which the coffee is placed. Long, dug-out passages covered with sheet iron distribute hear from a large wood-burning oven operating day and night. The coffee beans are stirred atwice a day. [Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968" cited].
[259] Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited.
[260] Notebook of CPL Frank Iodice recording notes from a brief by Lt Preston, 26th Marines S-5. Stubbe, Autobiography, Part VII, Khe Sanh, Vietnam, before the Siege, notes for 17 Oct 1967.
[261] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited.
[262] Poilane letter of 6 July 1990, cited.

that they not go out from where they were because this was too dangerous. [Aircraft] continued to pass overhead and to drop their bombs. The helicopters went around constantly. We no longer could do anything for this poor, young soldier."[263]

Madeleine and Felix Poilane moved into their cellar and slept on improvised beds. On Monday, the 22nd, fighting continued in Khe Sanh village and the nuns succeeded in reaching the Poilane house, attempting to reassure them. Towards the end of the afternoon, M. Llinares reached the house for refuge while his son, Emmanuel, remained on his plantation. Felix drove on the combat base, turned the Vietnamese soldiers over to the Marines, and then returned. Upon his return, some Vietnamese offered 500 P for him to drive aged or infirm people to the base, and he made numerous trips as Madeleine remained at the house with the children who were screaming in their rooms at the noise from the bombing.

Felix said, "We're leaving." Madeleine recalls: "I couldn't believe it, but it was dangerous to remain there with the children. Everyone left the plantation. We were the last ones to leave, turning loose our dogs as well as our little bambi [deer]. We stopped the oil-operated refrigerator, locked the doors, and left in the Renault 2 CV for the base. Upon arriving there we saw complete disorder. ... Father Mauvais, who did not wish to leave, finally made up his mind to do so and arrived completely exhausted. He had to crawl in areas that were bare in order to arrive at the Marine base."[264]

Due to the confusion on Khe Sanh Combat Base, "Felix asked to return with his family back home to his coffee plantation. Colonel Lownds refused and proposed to bring us to Lang Vei. There we would be safe and protected. Our proposition to go back home was completely of our own because we did not want to stay at the base with these confusing conditions. ... We did not want to go to the Savannakhet area. We knew that if Khe Sanh was abandoned by the American troops it would be the end and the entire area occupied by the NVA. Therefore, it would also be for us the end of any hope of returning back to our plantation. It was absolutely clear for us. There was too much time elapsed since all this was prepared (since the Hills attack [April-May, 1967]. Felix was born in Khe Sanh and had a good knowledge of the Vietnamese people. ... The VC and NVA had to strike very strongly, like in Dien Bien Phu."[265]

In all the confusion on the base, as hundreds from Khe Sanh village arrived to be evacuated, Madeleine sought temporary refuge in a place containing some barrels. "Alas, they were tar barrels! I had tar everywhere on my legs. Fear was everywhere. The children huddled against me. In spite of all the dramatic aspect of the situation, a Belgian female journalist was there and she asked me questions—where I was from, what UI was doing at Khe Sanh, and so forth. She was not concerned about our situation, our suffering at leaving everything behind us. I cursed the profession of journalist!"[266]

The Poilane family then boarded a C-123 which brought them to DaNang. Very fortunately, they did not evacuate to Lang Vei which was subsequently overrun by tanks on 7 February 1968!

"We succeeded in leaving in a C-130 for DaNang, heavy-hgearted at leaving everything behind us we thought and leaving no doubt forever our plantation and everything that was our reason for living. ... At DaNang there was great calm. Nothing had yet happened.... On arriving they washed my legs and removed the tar from my skirt. ... Two days later we left for Hue."[267]

On the night of 31 January/01 February, as Tet commenced, Madeleine and her two children were aware of gunfire on all sides and pushed wardrobes against the windows for protection from shrapnel and put mattresses under the beds for sleeping. The children were very frightened. Gunfire was continuous. Eventually they were able to move safely to the School of the Sciences. Her 4 year-old son, Jean-Marie, cried during the continuous gunfire and shattering of glass. Sister Paul Xavier arrived with consecrated hosts in her large, black apron and gave communion to all, including Jean-Marie—his first communion. On 11 February, they boarded a boat, disembarked in DaNang, and moved into the School of the Sacred Heart where they had their first hot meal in a dozen days. They then learned that Father Poncet had been gunned down in Hue. Apparently a nun had been wounded and Father Poncet, along with Monsieur Llinares, went out to render aid. The priests spoke Vietnamese and were able to explain their presence in that part of the city still under control of the Viet Cong. Monsieur Llinares located a rack of tobacco and the priests were bringing the tabernacle when the Viet Cong fired on them in cold

---

[263] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited.
[264] Ibid.
[265] Letter from Madame Poilane to Ray W. Stubbe, 21 June 1995. On quoting Madame Poilane's statement about moving to Lang Vei to Col Lownds, he responded: "No. I never thought it was safe out there. I know definitely that I would never transfer them to Lang Vei. I would never do that." [Conversation with Col David E. Lownds, 10 June 1995). Perhaps it was one of his staff who made that suggestion. In all the turmoil of that chaotic situation, Madame Poilane's identification of Col Lownds may be suspect.
[266] Madeleine Poilane, "Memories of Vietnam, 1957-1968," cited.
[267] Ibid.

blood, killing Father Poncet and wounding Llinares in his wrist. Llinares was able to take refuge in a ditch along the highway. (This was 13 February 1968).[268]

When Khe Sanh was officially "liberated" in early April, Felix was determined to return to inspect his house. The Americans were very reluctant to grant him permission due to continuing danger. Neither did Madeleine want Felix to return; she even hid his passport. He informed her he would return with another passport, so she returned it to him. His departure was postponed until Holy Saturday, 13 April 1968. He was due to return that night, but didn't, and Madeleine, with a presentiment of his death, could not stop crying. On Easter Sunday evening, one of the sisters, Mother Angel, informed Madeleine that Felix had died at Khe Sanh, the only one out of 15 passengers to die, although an American sustained a skull fracture and died five days later. A funeral was conducted at the Cathedral of DaNang on 18 April with nine priests concelebrating. Felix, born and died at Khe Sanh, was not yet 37. Madeleine and her two children departed Vietnam on 22 June 1968.[269]

Upon her return to France, Madeleine Poilane was sick for a year and a half. A Vietnamese doctor in her area cared for her and she started work as secretary for the Mayor of Creteil, France, on the first of December 1969.[270]

In January, 1971, recalling her life at Khe Sanh, Madeleine Poilane writes: "What I think of Khe Sanh after having lived there ten years is very simple. In time of peace, it is an ideal region, a little paradise where living is good. ...I was very much engaged with the Montagnards, caring for them, helping them in any way and they repaid me a hundredfold. ... My children had their youngsters for playmates and we even had two little Montagnards at the house, a fourteen year old boy and a little eight year-old girl who lived with us continually. We had many enriching human contacts. They told me of their customs. I told them of God, trying to make them understand that we should have only one God who will reunite us. ...It was heart-rending for me to leave. I did not know it then. I thought that we were going to be refugees at the Marine camp. ... We intended to spend our lives there, to raise our children there, who adapted very well, having been born in the country. We had a double reason: the plantation and the development of our beloved Montagnards."[271]

In the summer of 1971, Madeleine Poilane sought reparations for war losses, not of the plantation (which belonged to her mother-in-law) but for possessions in her house, the car and one year of income from coffee sold, all of which remained at the house which was abandoned at the beginning of the siege on 21 January 1968. She noted that Vietnamese received their indemnities and wondered if something might be forthcoming from the American government.[272] Ray W. Stubbe wrote both Senator William Proxmire[273] and the US Department of State.[274] After both sought comments from directly responsible individuals, both responded, citing the Foreign Claims Act of 10 August 1956,[275] (Title 10, US Code, Section 2734) implemented by Chapter 10, Army Regulation 27-20 which excluded claims resulting directly or indirectly from an act of the US Armed Forces in combat, but that she might have a legitimate claim from the government of South Vietnam.[276]

In 1972, Madeleine Poilane wrote that Jean-Marie was nine years old and wanted to be a doctor; Francoise was 13 and in a private school. "Please pray for me. It is difficult to live alone. I don't have friends because Saturday and Sunday I stay at home. I don't like to go out for a walk. ... Jean-Marie is often sad; he thinks of his father and asks him to help."[277]

On 3 February 1990, Madeleine Poilane retired after working 20 years in the Creteil city hall and started work in a parish in southwest France for a priest in charge of two parishes, as well as teach catechism and handle the secretarial work. Her two children were now employed. Francoise was a receptionist at the County Court in Creteil while her husband worked in the Creteil mayor's office. They have a little girl, "Marine." Jean-Marie, now 27, is a computer engineer[278]

Madame Madeleine Poilane died on 6 January 2007. Her son wrote: "It was quite sudden. ...On 26 December, I went to her house to pick her for celebrating Christmas with my wife and her grandchildren, and I found her very weak, almost unable to walk. We took her to the hospital where they found a very advanced cancer. They told us that she had few weeks to live,

---

[268] Ibid.
[269] Ibid.
[270] Madeleine Poilane, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 18 December 1971.
[271] Madeleine Poilane, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 26 Jan 1971, cited.
[272] Letter from Madeleine Poilane, 18 August 1971.
[273] Letter from Ray W. Stubbe to Senator William Proxmire, 30 September 1971.
[274] Letter from Ray W. Stubbe to Department of State, Attn: Mr. Fabian A Kwiatek,Assistant Legal Advisor for International Claims, 30 Sep 1971.
[275] Title 10 United States Code, Section 2734.
[276] Letter of LtCol (JAG) William R. Mullins, Chief Foreign Claims Division, 1 Nov 1971, and Letter from Senator William Proxmire, 17 December 1971, with appended letter from COL W. A. Rutledge, Adjutant General, MACV, 10 Dec 1971.
[277] Letter from Madeleine Poilane, 4 October 1972.
[278] Letter from Madeleine Poilane, 6 July 1990.

but her health degraded very fast and she died in the hospital 12 days after. ... One small consolation is that she did not suffer at all. She passed away peacefully. ... Unfortunately, after my father died tragically, everything changed for her and us also. After, life was not the same."[279]

MISSIONARIES

The first Protestant missionaries arrived in Vietnam in 1911 with little support or opposition from French officials. When American involvement in World War I seemed doubtful, all American missionaries in Vietnam were ordered to depart, neutrals being regarded little better than enemies.. When the war was over, they were freely admitted to Cochinchina and Tourane (DaNang) since it was a "foreign concession," but since the remainder of Indo-China was merely under the "protection" of France, a treaty of 1877 between Western countries and the Emperor of Annam, excluded them. The treaty granted Christian missionaries the right to propagate their faith, but noted this only applied to Roman Catholics since they were regarded as the only Christians. Additionally, the Emperor and his ministers were "against the teachings of the Protestant doctrines to their people."[280]

Christian missionaries first arrived at Khe Sanh in 1931, but unable to adapt, departed.[281] From the 1940s, religious services for Roman Catholics were available from priests traveling from Hue.[282] On 3 March 1964, Father Poncet of the Fathers of Foreign Missions from Paris was named rector of Khe Sanh. Frequently seen by Marines in his blue trousers and riding a bicycle,[283] he was killed in the middle of the street by Viet Cong on 13 February 1968 in Hue during the Tet Offensive.

A Protestant Vietnamese missionary to the Bru, Pastor Bui Tan Loc, a graduate of the Christian and Missionary Alliance Bible School, first arrived at Khe Sanh before 1955 but, without adequate preparations, departed and then returned in 1958, building a very nice church building on the eastern edge of Khe Sanh village as well as a school for Bru children. Rev. Loc proudly exhibited his children to visitors, having them sing "Jesus Loves Me, This I Know" in Bru, English, and Vietnamese. Since the latter is a tonal language, the meaning of the words determined by the tone of the voice, the words sung to the Western hymn tune made everything entirely meaningless in Vietnamese. It did sound, however, quaintly and warmly "nice" to visitors who, warmly smiling back to him and the children also did not understand the words or appreciate the confusion the children must have experienced. Pastor Loc's wife had the blackened teeth of a beetle nut user.[284] A little over a year later, following the destruction of Khe Sanh village by massive B-52 strikes[285] destroying all his work there, Pastor Loc asked for a Vietnamese church and was assigned the church at Hoi An. After only a few months there, he experienced emotional issues from the battle and retired in DaNang.[286]

John and Carolyn Miller first met each other at Houghton College in New York where Carolyn's father was President. John arrived in Vietnam in 1959,[287] while Carolyn endured several weeks in a kind of "boot camp" in Ixtapa, Mexico, for missionary translators destined for primitive tribes where they practiced carpentry, workings of engines and appliances, and other "pioneer living such as gardening, butchering, and haircutting ... everything from injections to dentistry, to tropical diseases, and many other subjects." Carolyn planned to meet John, already in Saigon, be married, and then commence their work at Khe Sanh.[288] In April, 1960, eighteen prominent leaders presented President Diem with a manifesto to promote democracy and guarantee civil rights which he refused to sign. The following November, eighteen signers of the manifesto supported an coup, which was unsuccessful. As a result, President Diem's government refused entrance visas due to the unsettled

---

[279] Letter from Jean Marie Poilane, 21 February 2007.

[280] Franck, Harry A., East of Siam, Ramblings in the five divisions of French Indo-China. New York: The Century Co., 1926, pp. 118-119. Franck notes that Annamese were converted to Catholicism by whole villages, an inducement being that they were permitted to retain their ancestor worship. On the other hand, Protestant missionaries permitted converts to retain all the wives they possessed at conversion provided they didn't add to them. [Ibid., pp. 119-120]. See also: Hefley, James C., By Life or by Death, Grand Rapids, Michigan: Zondervan Publishing House, 1969, p. 18.

[281] Comments of Mr. John Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 26 Aug 1967.

[282] Ibid.

[283] Abandoned at Khe Sanh Combat Base and later used by Chaplain Walter Driscoll during the siege.

[284] Diary of Ray W. Stubbe, entry for 21 Sep 1967.

[285] Khe Sanh village was totally destroyed on 27 February 1968 (probably due to the prescience of Captain Harry Baig in view of the regimental-size assault on Khe Sanh Combat Base 19 Feb/01 March), in target box XD852375 – XD867389 – XD 844373 – XD859390. [COMUSMACV 261727Z/Feb68, 260643Z/Feb68, and 260649Z/Feb68, Arc Light Strike, in III MAF COC Journal and File 26/27 Feb 68, #276, 278, and 279, respectively].

[286] Letter of John and Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 27 January 1971.

[287] "Missionary Team Devotes Life to Teaching Montagnard Tribe," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:39 (29 Sep 1967).

[288] Letter of Carolyn Miller to "Dear Praying Friends," March, 1961.

situation. Carolyn's plans were temporarily halted until it was suggested that she enter South Vietnam as a visitor, then be married, and then apply for residence as John's wife. It worked.[289] They were married on Friday, 28 July 1961 in a French reformed church in Saigon, and following a two-week honeymoon at Nha Trang and the mountain resort of Dalat, they returned to Saigon to prepare to begin their translation work.[290] During November, 1961, John and Carolyn were studying in Hue in preparation for their move to Khe Sanh to work with the Bru tribe. Approximately 50,000 Bru lived within a thirty-mile radius of Khe Sanh.[291] An estimated 15,000 Bru lived in the immediate Khe Sanh area..[292] John was fortunate to study "with the only speaker of the Bru language that we know of here in the city of Hue."[293] (Bru referred to the town of Khe Sanh as "Saran.")[294]

In January, 1962, the Millers arrived at Khe Sanh, and first moved into a house in the village of Lang Bu,[295] a Bru village west of Khe Sanh village and east of Lang Vei, along Route 9. Lang Bu was chosen since they were told they were required to be close to the District Headquarters for security reasons and were required to be near Route 9. Also, Pastor Loc had visited several of the villages and there were already some Christian believers in Lang Bu.[296] Vegetables (and occasionally meat) was purchased at the small market in Khe Sanh. Basic supplies like rice, flour, and oil were brought up from Hue. They bathed in a nearby river at the foot of the hill near Bu and dug an out-house "to the great amazement of people in our village who thought that that was a terribly dirty way of taking care of oneself."[297] Although the Bru knew no English and the Millers were unfamiliar with Bru, fortunately a few of the Bru knew a little Vietnamese and they were able to communicate. When they first arrived at Lang Bu, the entire village came out to greet them in typical Bru hospitality and helpfulness, and carry all their wooden barrels of books, furnishings, and clothing. John Miller discussed his needs with the village elders, and one, Khoi No, said he'd sell his house to them for $60.00. John offered $30.00, feeling everyone in this part of the world bargains for prices. "We thought he was trying to bargain with us, so we offered $30.00. He said, 'Well, if that's what you want to pay–.' We later found out he was offering a very fair price." Khoi No then moved temporarily in with his sister and eventually built another house.[298] Fairly soon after they arrived, The Bru suspected strange people in the village one night and sent out a patrol. "The next day they told us it was alright because they had found out what the problem was: it was ghosts! Somehow that wasn't all that reassuring to us!"[299]

Despite the overwhelming beauty and apparent peace, tensions of the war were always present. While the Millers were temporarily away from Khe Sanh, around midnight of 25 March 1964, the Communists arrived and tossed their household goods on the ground and informed the Bru they were about to burn the Millers' house. The Bru persuaded them not to burn the house because it was in their village of straw-thatched roofs, so they departed. The Bru them moved everything back into their house, except for a few things the soldiers kept.[300]

The difficulty of living at Khe Sanh was not only living in the midst of a very primitive culture where the language was totally foreign; dangers from Communists were always present. Like the monsoons of the area, tensions would come and go. One time, the village chief at Bu came to the Millers, drunk. He has been sleeping in various houses, not his own, because as a village official, he was a likely target for threats, torture, or assassination. So he slept one night in one house, another house the next night, and so on. Now, drunk, he blurted out that he was no longer afraid; the Communists, he said, were not after him at all; they were after John Miller! After that, the District Chief in Khe Sanh village asked the Millers not to sleep in Bu. Rev. Loc had a Bru-style house (straw thatched roof) on his church grounds in Khe Sanh village which became the nighttime residence of the Millers. During the day, they were in Bu.

The Millers departed Khe Sanh then and Carolyn gave birth (on 14 May) to their son, Gordon, at Saigon, while John completed a translation of the Gospel of Mark into Bru as well as portions containing the Christmas story and the story of the prodigal son and a series of seventeen reading primers.[301]

---

289 Hefley, op cit., p. 40.
290 John and Carolyn Miller, letter of September, 1961.
291 III MAF, Personal Response Project: Personal Response News and Notes, 1 June 1967, p. 1.
292 John and Carolyn Miller, English-Brou Language Familiarization Manual, March, 1967, p. 1.
293 Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, November, 1961.
294 Conversation with John and Carolyn Miller, 11 May 1990.
295 Conversation with John and Carolyn Miller, 27 May 1986.
296 Comments of John and Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 16 December 1967 and 27 May 1986.
297 Conversation with Carolyn Miller, 28 May 1996.
298 Comments of John and Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 16 Dec 1967 and 28 May 1986.
299 Comments of Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 11 May 1990.
300 Letter from Gene Zimmerman, 15 May 1964. Conversation with John and Carolyn Miller, 27 May 1986.
301 Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, September, 1964.

After being away from Khe Sanh for about six months, they returned and again located on Pastor Loc's property. The District Chief gave them a dozen young men to prepare as teachers, and John continued his work on translation.

Carolyn was preparing for an afternoon session of teaching when an American jeep arrived informing them that the Consulate in Hue was sending up a plane to Khe Sanh to whisk them away in an hour! The U.S. bombed North Vietnam. All Americans were to be taken to Hong Kong. The plane arrived. The Millers gathered with the group of Americans in Hue when somebody from the Christian Missionary Alliance (CMA) told them: "Since you're not government employees, you don't have to go if you don't want to go." After checking with the Wycliffe director in Saigon, they temporarily located at Saigon. It was assumed the North Vietnamese would pour across the DMZ. When they didn't, John returned to Khe Sanh.
Since they were due for a furlough anyway, they travelled to Saigon and from there, to the States.[302]

While away from Khe Sanh, the literacy work was continued by Pat Bonnell, Nancy Costello, and Eugenia Johnston of Wycliffe who also resided in Pastor Loc's "guest house." The "guest house" was enlarged to include a porch and a place for very sick people to remain overnight. Pat Bonnell, a nurse, ran a clinic every day including Sundays, while Eugenia Johnston taught at a little school with a dormitory for the children who then returned home on weekends. Average attendance for the school was 55 Bru children, however a problem was that girls were needed at home to manage other children and do chores.[303] Following a Christmas program, a medic team from the Special Forces on Khe Sanh base, arrived with the news that Khe Sanh village was about to be hit and they couldn't remain at their house. They went to the Khe Sanh Special Forces camp (then on the base), and on 3 January 1966, Communist forces shelled the base during evening formation with 120mm mortars (the first time this large caliber weapon was used by them in Vietnam) causing 13 KIA and 50-60 WIA. Pat Bonnell aided in the medical treatment of many very seriously wounded Special Forces soldiers.[304]

After about a year's absence, the Millers returned to Vietnam, arriving in Saigon on 13 March 1967 to resume their work among the Bru, translating Vietnamese textbooks into Bru, training of Bru teachers to teach in the villages, and continue translation of the Bible. They returned to the house on Rev. Loc's property and made arrangements to move into a new house to serve as their residence and a training center.[305] Their son, Nathan Andrew, was born August first in DaNang, and by November, 1967, they had moved into their new house,[306] an old French-constructed house that had been destroyed by the Viet Minh some 20 years earlier.. As of 01 April 1967, there was no roof, doors, or woodwork and it was a ruin. It was the former home of Felix Poilane's aunt.

> "When the French built, they really built! All the walls were about three feet thick of concrete, even the interior walls. The Viet Minh, who wanted to destroy everything French, probably did not think it worth the effort to destroy all the walls!"[307]

The Commanding Officer of the newly-forming SOG [Studies and Observations Group] unit, Major Fred Patton, took an interest in refurbishing the house for the Millers. Although told it couldn't be done, he persisted, and after much effort, time, and money, the project was gradually completed. After the Marines arrived[308] additional eager hands participated in the effort. The battalion chaplain, David Meschke,[309] conducted a fund drive to provide shutters, drapery, and plumbing and the Millers moved into their new home on 15 May 1967.[310]

> "During the first week of June [1967], the men of 1/26 contributed $635 in a command approved special drive known as 'PROJECT MISSION HOME.'" They gathered 74,930 piaster (converted at rate of 118 piaster per dollar)"for use in renovating, modernizing, and painting their present home."
>
> "During the first week in July the men of 1/26 will be contributing to another command approved special drive known as "PROJECT MISSION TYPEWRITER." This fund will be similarly converted into piaster and given to the Millers to be

---

[302] Comments of Carolyn Miller to Ray W Stubbe, 28 May 1986.
[303] Comments by Nancy Costello and Pat Bonnell at Camp Tien Sha, DaNang, Vietnam, 10 December 1968.
[304] Conversation with Pat Bonnell, 12 June 1990. For the attack, vide: Westmoreland, A Soldier Reports, pp. 123, 196, 198; CPO Mick Taylor, "Tigerhound O1E's 'hunt' for Marines," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:28 (14 Jul 67; History of 20th Tactical Air Support Squadron, Jan-Mar 68, Tab T, 20th TASS, in Vol. II of Quarterly History, 504th Tactical Air Support Group, Jan-Mar 68, App 6, Subordinate Unit Histories.
[305] Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, April, 1967.
[306] Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, November, 1967.
[307] Comments by John and Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 17 December 1967 and comments of John Miller, 05 January 1968..
[308] BN 1/3 arrived 29/30 September 1966.
[309] Chaplain of 1/26 until July, 1967. Lead elements of 26th Marines arrived at Khe Sanh 11 May, following the Battle of the Hills.
[310] Comments of Mr. John Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 5 January 1968.

used for the purchase of equipment for the Wycliffe literacy effort, particularly for a specially made typewriter with Bru diacritics added to the keyboard.."[311]

A genuine goodness and truth radiated in the presence of the Millers, one that might be encountered once in a lifetime. Major Harper L. Bohr, Jr., the 26th Marines regimental S-2 in late 1967, once remarked, "If Jesus Christ were to be walking on earth today, I could see Him as John Miller."[312] The Miller home was, in fact, a spiritual oasis, sometimes visited by Marines and Special Forces soldiers. Many became deeply impressed by their presence, commitment, work, and what they reflected.

Their work, like that of the Wycliffe translators generally,[313] was truly amazing, perhaps reflecting in action what Christianity in its truest form is really meant to be. First, they listened before speaking. Wycliffe translators live in a tribal village, listening to the sounds of the language. There are many odd sounds not familiar to American ears—vowels, clicks, guttural grunts, and nasal sounds. Bru is a complex language with 62 sounds that included 40 vowels.[314] Not living in comfort in one place and occasionally "visiting" the people (as was the case in many early missionaries), they shared in the life of the primitive tribal people they were to serve.

After listening, they form a vocabulary and decide on an appropriate written form. As John Miller translated the Bible into their tribal tongue, Carolyn Miller formed classes to teach young Bru to read their language, not merely speak it, making the Bru literate for the first time in their cultural history. To assist in her effort, some Bru primers were prepared for the children, illustrated by Miss Eugenia Johnson.

One Bru man was chosen to test the Bible translation, to determine if it meant what was intended. The message must have meaning in terms of what the reader understands, not simply what one wants to day. (Communication is what is heard, not what is said). These assistants were initially and unfortunately called "informants," a title that created instant suspicion of intrigue and spy nets in a war area! Their first helper was "Paoq" (pronounced "Pa-Ayo" with a guttural stop "Q")[315]. The entire process, painstakingly slow, might require some fifteen years or so of work. After translating, the translator team then moves to another tribe. There is no intention of making people dependent on them or creating an "empire." for their own future security and sense of accomplishment. There is only forward movement. Also, there is no salary, only support rendered by those who catch the vision and are willing to assist and support their work. One Marine, shocked at seeing "round eyes"[316] voluntarily here—especially with their children blurted out: "You actually live here—and with your family!?" Mr. Miller replied, "The love of Christ constraineth us"[317]—probably using a word the Marine didn't understand, but he did understand the communication by the Millers' very presence.

The Bru were always willing to help, tell the Millers things they needed to know, and help them say things in Bru.

> "We had a young fellow that the Vietnamese pastor in Khe Sanh [Loc] had arranged to come and teach us, but he was there only a very short time, I think only a week, and left. And we didn't know until later, but he came from an area south of there, down by the river, and apparently the Communists had sent word to him not to teach us, but to get back home or something would happen to his family. So he took off.
>
> "We didn't know that until much later. But what happened was the man that he was staying with, in the village, apparently felt some responsibility when the kid took off, and so he started coming. And he came each morning for awhile and would help us to learn. We recorded him telling things on the tape recorder and then we would transcribe it and try to learn something of the grammatical patterns.[318]

---

[311] Turn-over file of Chaplain David L. Meschke, 4 July 1967.

[312] Comments of 16 Dec 1967.

[313] Wycliffe is named after John Wycliffe who first translated the Bible into English in the 14th Century. John Wycliffe received his bachelor's degree from Oxford University in 1370 and his doctorate in theology two years later. He regarded the Bible as the only authority for an understanding of God. His effort to translate the Bible from Latin into English and make the Bible readable to every Englishman led to an attack by those who viewed this as an effort to diminish their positions of authority and power. He was denounced by the Pope and lost his teaching position at oxford and was forbidden to preach. He reached the height of his national influence in 1376, completed the translation between 1380 and 1382, and died of a stroke in 1384. As a final condemnation, his remains were exhumed in 1428 and thrown into the river that ran through his hometown. [Mark L. Anderson, "The Spirit of 1376," Wycliffe Bible Translators: In Other Words, September 1976, pp. 1-2.

[314] Hefley, By Life or by Death, cited, p. 58.

[315] Conversation with John and Carolyn Miller, 11 May 1990.

[316] Marine slang in Vietnam for Americans and westerners generally as opposed to "slant eyes," referring to Vietnamese.

[317] 2 Cor. 5.14. "Constrain" is the King James Version word. Modern translations use: "controls" (English Standard Version, Revised Standard Version) and "urge" (New Revised Standard Version). Comment made at dedication of chapel at 3rd Shore Party Battalion, Quang Tri, Vietnam, 16 June 1968..

[318] Comments of Mrs. Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 28 May 1986.

JOHN AND CAROLYN MILLER AND CHILDREN INTERVIEWED
BY SHACKNEY OF CBS AT THEIR HOME IN KHE SANH
23 Oct 1967. Photo by Ray W. Stubbe

In November, 1967, John Miller was working with his Bru helper, Poaq Ayooq, on the book of Acts and a group of Bru young men began Thursday evening Bible studies at the Miller house.[319]

On the bright and sunny Friday, 5 January 1968, Colonel Lownds informed Mr. Miller that he should temporarily leave Khe Sanh for his own safety until the situation is safer, but to do this in such a manner that he doesn't create a panic (and probably so that his departure doesn't indicate to the enemy that we were aware the enemy was about to attack!). Mr. Miller mentioned there was a Bible conference he is supposed to attend, so his departure would not signal any unusual situation.[320] Also on 5 January 1968, an infantry patrol from Company K/3/26 found two caves at XD803452 containing 150 pots, 17 lids, 40 trays of copper and brass and two ceremonial swords.[321] After being informed these belonged to the Bru and that all items must be returned under penalty of court-martial, all disappeared. The Bru, evidently, had temporarily secreted these items during their temporary resettlement as part of the Strategic Hamlet program in the early 1960s in which they moved from the hills to several new villages built along Route 9 near Khe Sanh Combat Base. The Bru "characteristically live in permanent villages where they build their houses by family units,"[322] and regarded their present villages as only temporary and intended to return to their original villages. Before resettlement in the Strategic Hamlet program, "The Bru lived in very closely-knit villages, very close together. The houses were in a small area, and then they would walk to their fields which would be spread quite some distances. Each family had a permanent field in which they planted."[323]

John Miller returned to Khe Sanh Combat Base on Saturday, 20 January, just hours before it was to be attached—much to the chagrin of Colonel Lownds, and picked up his land rover on the base and drove it into Khe Sanh village where he picked up his translation helper, Mando, and also went to the District Headquarters to pick up his mail. "They were quite up-tight there. The bombing runs had already started and the earth was shaking."[324] Moving with haste, John was unable to retrieve any other personal belongings, drove his land rover back to the combat base, and departed with his helper. His land rover was driven from the combat base at the conclusion of the siege when 1/26 moved down Route 9 to Quang Tri, arriving Monday, 22 April 1968. "Although it has a few shrapnel holes, it is apparently still OK. The Marine driving it didn't know it was the Miller's and was going to keep it for himself. They were pretty proud of it. The G-5 staff later rescued it.[325] Carolyn recalls, "All the windows were out and it had shrapnel holes all through the body of it."[326]

While in DaNang in January, 1970, the Millers continued to work on Bru educational materials and also translate some scripture portions. "At the moment Chuop and I are going over the book of Genesis for the last time before typing a final draft."[327] They noted that the Bru continued to suffer. "The people are having a difficult time obtaining enough food and basic necessities. ... They still talk much of returning to their homes in the Khe Sanh area from which they came two years ago, but the prospects for this look rather dim to say the least. And since there are 'no more refugees' (on paper) in Quang Tri

---

[319] Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, November, 1967.
[320] Ray W. Stubbe, Diary entry for Friday, 05 January 1968.
[321] 26 Marines SITREP #263, 051330Z/Jan68.
[322] John and Carolyn Miller, English – Brou Language Familiarization Manual, March, 1967, p. 1.
[323] Conversation with Carolyn Miller, 28 May 1986.
[324] Comments of John Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 03 June 1990.
[325] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry for 22 April 1968.
[326] Comments of Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 03 June 1990.
[327] Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, January, 1970.

Province, there is no help available from the Refugee Service. The only thing that keeps the people going is the fact that there are so many men serving in some sort of military outfit. This is about the only source of income for the Bru."[328]

In early 1972, just a few weeks before the North Vietnamese push through I Corps, John and Carolyn Miller completed translating the New Testament into Bru and travelled to Nha Trang to check it before leaving on furlough. Not only was the New Testament translated, many Bru for the first time began to burn their ancestral fetishes. "Other forms of demon worship had been given up earlier, but the powerful force of the ancestral fetishes still bound many."[329] Dramatic progress had been made during the previous five years:

> "..we have seen the beginning of a government sponsored program to teach the Bru to read and write their own language. We have seen the first Bru to graduate from a government normal school. We have seen the first Bru students attend the Bible School sponsored by the Protestant Church of Viet Nam. We have seen the first Bru serving as pastors among their own people. Now, by the Lord's help, we have seen the completion of the initial translation of the Bru New Testament."[330]

In the summer of 1972, the Millers, now at the University of North Dakota, Grand Forks, had the book of Romans ready for printing and were anxious to complete it since Miss Eugenia Johnson and Miss Pat Bonnell were due to live with the Bru in their new resettlement area 40 kilometers from Banmethuot. They had not heard anything about the 5000 or more Bru people who were overrun by the North Vietnamese in late March of 1972, all living at the time in Quang Tri Province.[331]

By January, 1975, a "committee check" on the Bru New Testament had been completed, and the Millers were now performing a "concordance check" to note every occurrence of key Greek terms against their translation.[332]

CAPTURE OF THE MILLERS

John and Carolyn Miller and their 5-year-old daughter, Lu Anne, were at an American embassy official's home in Ban Me Thuot, a provincial capital, when captured by North Vietnamese forces along with five Christian and Missionary Alliance missionaries.[333] The last contact with them was 10 March 1975. Their other three children, Marjorie, Gordon, and Nathan, were safely in school in Saigon.[334]

They were released 30 October 1975 after seven months of harrowing imprisonment and flown from Hanoi to Bangkok, Thailand aboard a United Nations chartered flight.[335]. It was only after they arrived at Bangkok that they learned that their other three children had been flown out of Vietnam to live with Carolyn's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Stephen Payne.[336] News reports indicated their captivity was far worse than originally reported. "For much of their imprisonment they were kept 'under utterly uncivilized, primitive and bare survival conditions ... strange and contrary to international law.'" They were forced to sleep on wet ground under leaky huts and deprived of privacy much of the time. At one camp, 1,000 prisoners had only one latrine with three holes.[337]

During their imprisonment, Le Anne became so ill, her recovery was uncertain. There was no medicine in the camp. A Vietnamese prisoner in the camp, however, was able to give them some tetracycline tablets and Lu Anne recovered.[338] While in Communist hands, several Vietnamese tribal people visited the prison to see their relatives, and John was able to copy some portions of his translation of the New Testament epistles into Bru and give them to these visitors for those in Bru villages. Carolyn was especially comforted by the book of I Peter, especially 1 Peter 3.13-15.[339] Unfortunately, when released, the manuscripts of their translations into Bru were retained by the Communists.

---

328 Ibid.

329 "Flee!" Wycliffe Bible Translators: Translation, July-September, 1972.

330 Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, April, 1972.

331 Letter from the Millers, 16 July 1972.

332 Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, 8 Jan 1975.

333 "Missionaries Missing After Viet Attacks," North San Diego Blade Tribune, 23 March 1975, p. 14. Letter of Richard S. Pittman, Director for Asia Wycliffe Bible Translators 334 "Vietnam Work Shifted to Philippines, Millers Reported Alive in Ban Me Thuot, Wycliffe Bible Translators: Other Words, June, 1975, p. 1.

335 "Millers Home!!!" Wycliffe Bible Translators: In Other Words, December, 1975, p. 1

336 Ibid., p. 8.

337 "Saigon Missionaries Tell of Mistreatment," Los Angeles Times, 10 November 1975.

338 "The 232 Days," Wycliffe Bible Translators: In Other Words, January, 1976, pp. 1-2.

339 "Now who is there to harm you if you are zealous for what is good? 14 But even if you should suffer for righteousness' sake, you will be blessed. Have no fear of them, nor be troubled, 15 but in your hearts honor Christ the Lord as holy, always

SUBSEQUENT YEARS

After living in Houghton, New York,[340] the year of 1976, the Millers departed on 10 July 1977 for the Philippines in order to complete the Bru New Testament. On 20 March 1981 a small parcel arrived in the mail marked "Book" and stamped "NV" (no value). It was the Bru New Testament in print. How ironic, they thought, to be stamped "No Value!"

> "No one could ever total up all that went into the production of it in terms of the human effort and sacrifice of those who gave of themselves to teach us their language, to befriend us, and to struggle with us thru every stage of its preparation despite the heartache and suffering of living in wartime conditions. Nor could such a value be put on the concern, sacrifice, and faithfulness of so many partners from many places in the USA, Canada, and other parts of the world, without whose participation it would have never happened either."[341]

In a letter written from Houghton, New York in December, 1986, the Millers wrote of the spirit of the Bru Christians:

> "In recent news from Bru friends in Laos we learn that one of our closest friends and colleagues among the Bru is very ill. Pa-ayo (i.e., the father of love) was the first Bru to show any serious interest in learning to read and write Bru. He became our first translation helper as we worked together to translate the book of Mark. Pa-ayo had believed in the Lord Jesus before we arrived in Bru country. He was truly a 'child' in the faith, but over the years we could see the Word of God doing its work in his heart. He became a firm believer and a leader among the Christians, though as far as we know he never preached a sermon nor held any official church position. The Lord tested and tried him in many ways. One of the early tests was whether or not he would adhere to the prescribed Bru practice of placating clan spirits. Pa-ayo decided he could no longer do this and still honor the Lord. Yet to go against the established system would result in his being expelled from his clan. But the Lord honored his commitment by later bringing the entire clan to trust in Himself.
>
> "When we were discussing the printing of the Bru New Testament with a group of Bru leaders, Pa-ayo said, 'Print it as small as possible.' Knowing that Pa-ayo already had eye problems and couldn't read small print well, we wondered why he would make such a request. He replied, 'I know it would be hard for me and other older people to read, but I'm thinking of my children. If it's small, it will be easier to hide and easier to carry if we have to flee from place to place.'
>
> "He was also concerned that Bru children learn to read and write Bru. He understood the value of his and other Bru children learning to read and write the national language.. He expressed this in one of the last letters we received from him, in which he asked for Bru literacy materials so he could teach his own grandchildren how to read and write Bru...."[342]

The 1990s brought renewed persecution of Bru Christians:

> "As to myself, in this country they forbid me to do the work of the Lord. With their mouths they say it is all right to believe, but if there are those who truly believe the Lord, certainly they become angry immediately. For example, in my village here, before there were only Bru people who believed. But still they persecuted them. As for me, they summoned me and threatened me repeatedly. More than 100 times they summoned and interrogated me....
>
> "They would take our Bibles and Hymnbooks. Many times I went to ask for their return but they never returned them. When I saw that, thanks to God's suggestion, we would tear out one sheet from the Word of God and one sheet from hymn book and this I would carry in the pocket of my trousers. If I met friends from the group of believers, whatever place we met, we would hold a meeting. If the authorities came on us, they would only get that one sheet ... There were three villages that when the authorities pressured them, they gave up their salvation. ... It was very sad.
>
> "In my village there are both Bru and Raday. In Nov 1990 there were 2 people who were new believers who came to meet in my house. Then the 2 became 3, and the 3 became 5. They were praying to the Lord that He would call more. Then there were 11, then 17, then 20 then 42, then 70. Then despite extreme persecutions there were 90 who believed in the Lord. Then 120, then 140, then 170 until today there are 180. So the authorities are very angry."[343] being prepared to make a defense to anyone who asks you for a reason for the hope that is in you; yet do it with gentleness and respect, (ESV)

---

[340] Letter of John and Carolyn Miller, January, 1977.

[341] Letter of John and Carolyn Miller, April, 1981.

[342] Letter of John and Carolyn Miller, 4 December 1986.

[343] Letter from Mpoaq Muai included in letter from John and Carolyn Miller which included several letters received in September, 1991.

By 1993, the Millers could report a growing desire among the Bru to have the Old Testament translated in their language, an "awesome task," and that half a dozen Bru young people are now studying at the university level in Viet Nam.[344] Having transcribed their Bru New Testament into Thai script facilitated local Bru living in Nakhon Phanom, Thailand to compare words and phrases which were the same and which differed in order to produce a translation suitable for them.[345] Persecution of Bru Christians in the area reminds one of the truth of the old adage, "the blood of the martyrs is the birth of the Church." The Millers write:

> "Earlier this month we had the privilege of meeting with a church leader who lives near the Bru and knows them well. He told us of six Bru families who had become believers. When they refused to continue to engage in spirit placation as prescribed by their animistic beliefs, they were reported to provincial authorities for the crime of disrupting the well-being and stability of the village. The men held firm to their faith and as a result were imprisoned. Our friend told us with a smile, 'Six believers went into prison, eight came out.'"[346]

In Vietnam (presumably in the Khe Sanh area):

> "We found that earlier reports of a change of heart on the part of officials from the areas where they live were unfounded. Nine families of believers in one Bru village have had to leave the village and set up homes in a jungle area. Two of our visitors had gone to try to help them. They reported that even while they were there another person expressed the desire to believe and follow the Lord. They cautioned him, 'Don't you know you will be expelled from the village if you take this step?' 'Yes, I know,' he replied, 'but I want to believe anyway.' ... Now the chief of his village wants all eighteen families of believers in t hat village to leave. The national church is being told that they are to have nothing to do with the Bru believers. .. they are told, 'This has nothing to do with you.' Yet seven believers from the national church were also arrested recently for holding an 'unauthorized' meeting at Christmas.[347]

THE BROU

Four days into the siege at Khe Sanh, the base was a shambles, surrounded by tens of thousands of well-trained and experienced North Vietnamese soldiers. Marine reconnaissance teams patrolling the surrounding area, caught off base as the enemy shelling began on 21 January 1968, included team FROSTBURG patrolling near Hill 222 close to the abandoned Brou villages of Lang Kat (1) and (2) south of Route 9 near the former 1/26 bridge site. They were scheduled to return to the base on the 21st of January, but had to remain in the bush until the 24th as they continued to patrol the area north of Route 9, spotting numerous NVA with packs moving on Route 9. During the last days of their patrol, they passed through some Brou villages where the Brou offered them sanctuary until they were finally able to be evacuated.[348] Marines and Special Forces soldiers who came into contact with the Brou regarded them as brothers.

BROU MEN CARVING CROSSBOWS IN TUM PLANG VILLAGE, KHE SANH, 26 SEPTEMBER 1967. OFFICIAL USMC PHOTO A800107 by Ray W. Stubbe

---

344 Letter of John and Carolyn Miller, 18 February 1993.
345 Latter from John and Carolyn Miller, November, 1993.
346 Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, 21 October 1997.
347 Letter from John and Carolyn Miller, 21 January 1999.
348 Comments of John M. Tighe on 9 June 1968. Tighe was the one who put out the air panel to guide the helicopters, a risky act wince the NVA could well have spotted him in the open. Then, as the choppers approached, one of the Marines in the patrol fired, an action that usually cases the helicopters to depart or fire back! Daniel F. Velarde hit the Marine and knocked him out. He later claimed he thought he had seen something.

According to a census of 15 July 1967, there were 8,930 Brou living within 8,000 meters along Route 9.[349] According to a census of 31 December 1967, MACV listed the population of the area of Khe Sanh at 10,195 civilians.[350] The Bronze Star Medal file for Capt Henry Lebaron Preston[351] indicates 21,500 indigenous persons in the Huong Hoa District in January, 1968.[352] The Brou, unlike some of the other 31 Montagnard tribes in South Viet Nam had no political aspirations for autonomy or desire for revolt. They had no central political authority or organization.[353]

The approximately 1200 Vietnamese in the Khe Sanh area were centered in Khe Sanh village, about 2 ½ miles directly south of the Khe Sanh Combat Base, along the main east-west road in northern South Vietnam, National Route 9 (QL-9). The district town of Huong Hoa had been abandoned in the early 1960s; Khe Sanh village was also referred after this as Huong Hoa. The Brou were originally scattered throughout an area extending into Laos and North Vietnam, inhabiting various independent villages that did not have much to do with each other except through language or special events like an important wedding. They lived in houses closely clustered together and worked fields distant from their huts. Each family had a permanent field where they planted their fruit trees, coffee trees, or crops. Fields shifted from year to year, but not the villages. They were not nomadic.[354]

Prior to 1897, when they were pacified by the French, Brou lived in isolated villages in the mountains.[355] Madame Madeleine Poilane notes that when her father-in-law, Eugene, first came to Khe Sanh, the Brou were quite savage and when he drove the first vehicle on the road, the Brou were terrified.[356] Another Montagnard tribe, the Katu (near DaNang) remained quite savage, practicing human sacrifice. The Brou, however, had become quite friendly. One missionary attributes the difference to French influence, especially the Poilane's: the Katu aggressively resisted French encroachment into their areas. One finds old French coins among the Brou, but not among the Katu.[357] By 1965, the Brou had, for the most part, been resettled in various newly formed villages located in a 3-mile strip on each side of Route 9[358] for their own security from molestation by the North Vietnamese who impressed them into forced labor. Capt Allen B. Imes, the Commanding Officer of Detachment A-728 at the Special Forces Camp on the Khe Sanh airstrip,[359] recalls:

> "..there were 27/28 (?) villages that were forced to relocate along Highway 9. They were not happy about it nor did they try to reestablish villages comparable to those they left behind. I guess they considered them as temporary villages. I think it was a part of the Strategic Hamlet Program. The Vietnamese gov attempted to convince them that they were doing it to protect them. We went to some but I'm sure only a few out of all of them. .. On one patrol we found the American missionaries [John and Carolyn Miller in the village of Bu] and their child in one of the villages furthest away from Khe Sanh. We gave them all kinds of stuff to help make their life a little easier.. ... I remember some of the Yards would go to their old locations and farm their land but I don't ever remember seeing any of the old villages. I think the attitude was they were biding their time..."[360]

The new Brou villages (along with the meaning of their names):[361]

East of the road leading to Khe Sanh airstrip:

Poong potato

---

[349] Briefing by Lt Preston, S-5 of RLT-26, in notes of CPL Frank Iodice, a Marine of CAP O-3

[350] COMUSMACV 230615Z/Jan68, Special Telecon, in III MAF COC Journal and File, 23/24 Jan 68, #144. Area of census: XD760440 – XD 850440 – XD850420 – XD865420 – XD 867360 – XD 760360.

[351] S-5 of 26th Marine Regiment.

[352] Awards route slip dated 17 Jan 1968, Subj: Recommendation for Bronze Star in case of Capt H. L. Preston attached to NAVPERS 1650/6, Award Recommendation, 27 Dec 1967, in FMFPAC Awards Citations files, notes: Board Member LTCOL Clark, in recommending Bronze Star with Combat "V": "The Khe Sanh area covers 9 villages with 21,000 people."

[353] Shrock, Joann L., Stockton, William, Jr., Murphy, Elaine M., and Fromme, Marion: Minority Groups in the Republic of Vietnam. Department of the Army Pamphlet No. 550-105, Ethnographic Study Series. Washington, D.C.: Headquarters, Dept of the Army, 1966, p. 55.

[354] Comments of Mrs. Carolyn Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 27 May 1986.

[355] Shrock, et al, Minority Groups, op cit., p. 60.

[356] Conversation with Madame Madeleine Poilane, Monday, 01 January 1968.

[357] Comments of Miss Nancy Costello, Sunday, 23 July 1967, to Ray W. Stubbe; Remarks of Miss Nancy Costello at Camp Tien Sha, DaNang, Vietnam, 10 December 1968. Miss Costello arrived at Khe Sanh in September, 1965.

[358] Shrock, et al, Minority Groups, op cit., p. 61

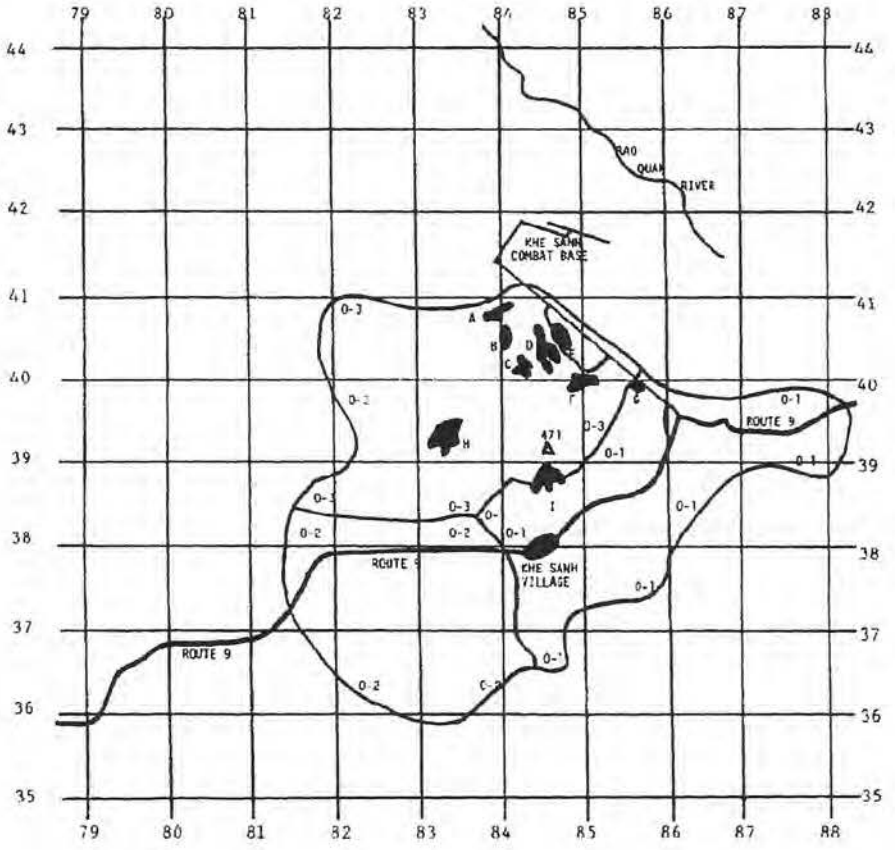
[359] 24 May 1964 to 30 Nov 1964.

[360] Allen B. Imes, email to Ted A. Showalter (Executive officer of A-728, 11 Apr 1964 – 30 Nov 1964) in letter from Ted Showalter to Ray W. Stubbe, 30 Nov 2013.

[361] Letter of John Miller to Chaplain Stubbe, 9 Oct 1969.

BROU VILLAGES AT KHE SANH AND TAORs OF COMBINED ACTION COMPANY OSCAR - (From map in 26th Marines COC at Khe Sanh, August, 1967)



TACTICAL AREAS OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE PLATOONS OF COMBINED ACTION COMPANY OSCAR AND LOCATION OF BROU VILLAGES

- A Ta Cong
- B Breh
- C Lang Kat (also called Tadoq)
- D Areng (Includes Lamboiq, Sarbai and Ruang)
- E Clong Sareh
- F Chuua and Pacoong
- G Home of Felix Poilane
- H Tum Plang
- I Breh

Chuah	sand
Pong Kho	a metal pot (pong) used for cooking (kho) with water
Partung
Sanrua
Eu	direct route, path, way

West of the road leading to Khe Sanh airstrip:

Bu	a tiger bites a person
Tum Plang	Tum means "stream" and "plang" means "thatch"
Breh	Name of a kind of tree
Areng	to make a Brou musical instrument called an "amam"
Tacong	A name of a tree that has thorns approx. 3 in. long
Con	An island
Tadoq
Clong Sareh	A tree named "sarch" close to a large body of water (maybe a lake)
Mpoai	Name of a large tree
Cheng	Lemon, lime
Truaih
Sartoong

In a way that Americans sometimes refer to themselves as "originally from ___" or betray a regional dialect, Mr. Miller adds: "Sometimes when people moved into a village from an outlying area they would refer to themselves as coming from their new village, but often they would retain the name of the old, so the situation became very confused."

BROU MAN MAKING CROSSBOW IN TUM PLANG VILLE
26 September 1967 – Photo by Ray W. Stubbe

Prior to moving in their new villages along Route 9, life in the distant villages in the mountains to the north of Khe Sanh created pockets of Brou culture which developed independent of other Brou villages, much like the peoples in the mountains of the Middle East and Appalachia. Additionally, the center of Brou territory appears to have been in Laos. A Marine of Combined Action Company OSCAR who had a special interest in learning the Brou language and customs, Daniel R. Kelley, observed:

> "There were cultural differences between the Brou of the different villages. Before they were gathered together in Khe Sanh in fortified villages, some had lived near rivers and fished mostly, others were agrarian. Language and customs varied—akin to regional differences among Americans.
>
> "The Brou at Khe Sanh had been regrouped into fortified villages. Before this many had traveled back and forth from Khe Sanh and Laos. Their religious practices (The Brou told me that Yiang Sursei, the name of their God, resided in a holy place in Laos), as well as some of their songs and dances, were influenced by the Laotian language and culture. Some of the Brou spoke Laotian well. I remember listening with Brou to Laotian broadcasts of news and music. They seemed to prefer Laotian songs over the Vietnamese songs, though they listened to both."[362]

For example, men bathed in the nude in Bu while in Areng and Ta Cong they wouldn't do that.[363]

During the resettlement, some Brou opted to remain in scattered, remote villages "in terrain too rugged for ready access by non-Brou and too isolated for frequent contacts with anyone else outside of their own village."[364]

Newly-arriving Marines were always surprised to discover that most of the local people at Khe Sanh were mainly not Vietnamese but Montagnards of the Brou[365] tribe. A Marine Lance Corporal once said: "You mean they're different people?" I always thought they were just Vietnamese who lived in the hills, in the boonies, backwards; I never realized they were different!" The Brou were, in fact, quite different from the Vietnamese in many ways. They were more muscular and stocky,[366] being part of the Mon Khymer ethnic group which is believed to have migrated from the Upper Mekong Valley into Indochina.[367] Their language, like American or French, was non-tonal, while that of the Vietnamese was tonal, spoken on several different levels of voice. In Vietnamese, a single word, like "dau" could mean "head" or "pain" depending on the tone of one's voice. The Vietnamese did not express their emotions, and, in addition, would say things and appear outwardly according to how they assumed the people they were with would want them to feel or think. They also did this among themselves. It was for this reason that the Brou assumed that Vietnamese had two gallbladders; the gallbladder was the source of emotion and mental activity according to the Brou, and therefore, Vietnamese, with their duplicity, obviously had two such organs![368] One could never trust a Vietnamese; one never knew how they really felt. The Brou, on the other hand, were basically honest; they expressed exactly what they felt. A visitor to the "forbidden city" citadel of Hue in December, 1967, would marvel at seven foot-high porcelain vases with intricate designs and a throne covered in gold (which had no ropes as barriers from children who might want to sit on it as parents snapped pictures!).[369] The Brou had no obvious or impressive cultural accomplishments. They were honest, kind, loyal, cheerful, and resilient to adversity or weather, disease and terrain, were hospitable, and did not steal. The Vietnamese looked down upon them as uncultured, regarding them as savages, making one wonder if every "civilized" people don't always require another group of people in their area they [362] Daniel Kelley, email to Robert Shippen, 16 Dec 2001, in letter from Daniel Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 18 Dec 2001.

---

[363] Letter of Daniel Kelley to Frank Iodice, 01 April 1985, unsent, forwarded to Ray W. Stubbe, 07 Aug 2006.
[364] Mole, op. cit., p. 44.
[365] Sometimes written as "Brou," two syllables: "BRO" (with a rolling "R" and long "O" and "OU" as in "ooze").
[366] Height varying from 5 feet 2 inches to 5 feet 4 inches and an average weight of 115 pounds; they have high cheek bones, wider noses than the Vietnamese, dark brown eyes light brown skin, and black hair. [Shrock et al, Minority Groups, op. cit., P. 62.
[367] Shrock, et al, Minority Groups, op cit., p. 87.
[368] Comments of Mr. John Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 16 December 1967.
[369] Personal visit to Hue, Tuesday, 05 December 1967.

consider racially inferior, and wonder even more at the price of developed culture which erodes the spirit of humanity—creativity, honesty, caring for others, and so much more. Vietnamese were offended when Americans spoke to a Montagnard as an equal. Some Americans who got to know them remarked that if they had to die for anyone, they could see dying for these people but certainly not for the Vietnamese.`

While Vietnamese women wore the colorful and attractive silk au dai, most Brou wore only the minimum of clothing (despite the cold climate during monsoons in the high altitude). A cultural custom of the Brou was to file down their long front teeth since long teeth made a person resemble an animal. To emphasize their humanity, teeth were cut off or broken at puberty in order to acquire a suitable mate.[370] Brou men typically wore only a loin cloth, but with the arrival of the French, the missionaries, and American military, by late 1967, most were wearing trousers over their loin cloths as well as a variety of suit coats and other clothing, creating a strange spectacle. Women wore skirts made from a piece of cloth wrapped around their body and tied with a knot at the waist. Children up to puberty wore very little clothing. However, after puberty, girls wore blouses until married and birthing their first child.[371] Two diary entries:

"As we walked through Ta Cong, little Brou children were playing with small, hand-made parachutes with small weights attached that they would throw into the air and watch fall. They had probably watched the many air drops we've been receiving on the combat base and were imitating them. Some had fashioned models of UH1E aircraft that were amazingly accurate, just from having observed them in the air. They now wear clothes, practically all from American Marines or from the Lutheran World Relief clothing distributed through Rev. Loc in Khe Sanh village."[372]

"Will, our cook here at CAP O-3, said that the clothing given to the PFs for further distribution to the Brou children never got to them and that it probably went instead to the black market in town. He said he now gives the clothing he gets to the children directly. The Marines here at this CAP unit—Will, Kaminski, etc., have been receiving large amounts of clothing for this purpose after writing home requesting it. They have done all this on their own initiative."[373]

HM3 DALE W. FAIDLEY OF CAP O-3 WITH BROU CHILDREN
26 SEPTEMBER 1967. Photo by Ray W. Stubbe

Some Brou in the Khe Sanh area were recruited to serve with US Marines in a joint-service unit known as Combined Action Company OSCAR officially organized 6 February 1967.[374] The Combined Action Program continued a traditional US Marine Corps model of Marines teaming with local troops to help them pacify and protect their own villages.[375] A CAC consists of 14 Marines and one Navy corpsman completely integrated into a PF (Popular Forces) platoon of 35 local soldiers.[376] There is a dual chain of command: the USMC and PF platoon commanders do not command or discipline the men of the other platoon in their

---

[370] Mole, op. cit., p. 44. Chaplain Mole notes that this custom seems to be dying out and many Brou retain their front teeth.
[371] Ibid., p. 45. Reference for the suit coats and wide variety: personal sightings of Ray W. Stubbe [372] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry for Tuesday, 26 September 1967. COL Lownds, in his comments at the Khe Sanh Veterans reunion at St. Louis Mio, in 1997, remarked at the accuracy of these models which even depicted protruding machineguns, and marveled that had they been given the same educational opportunities as Americans, a great artist may have emerged. [Col Lownds' remarks were printed in Khe Sanh Veterans: Red Clay, Issue No. 40 (Fall, 1997), p. 15].
[373] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry for Tuesday, 07 November 1967.
[374] Plans were completed with the Huong Hoa District Chief for the establishment of the three platoons of CAC OSCAR [SOP Khe Sanh 031530Z/Feb67, SITREP #3]. The three platoons arrived the morning of 5 February at 0945H [SOP 051315Z/Feb67] and the CAC at Khe Sanh was officially established at 061530H in Huong Hoa District Headquarters in Khe Sanh village. [SOP Khe Sanh 061414Z/Feb67, SITREP #6]. CAP O-1 and headquarters was located in Khe Sanh village (XD 846380), CAP O-2 at the western edge of Khe Sanh village (XD 843380), and CAP O-3 at Ta Cong village near the main gate of Khe Sanh Combat Base (at XD841408).
[375] The importance of civic action was evident in the Gendarmarie (later Garde D' Haiti) in Haiti and the Guardia National in Nicaragua, and during WW II, the Fita Fita Guard in Samoa. [Houts, MGySgt C.F.X., "Combined Action Program: Reaping the Rewards of New Hope, Dignity," III MAF: Sea Tiger 5:18 (2 May 1969), pp. 6-7]. In Viet Nam, the first CAC was organized near Phu Bai in August, 1965, shortly after the landing of BLT 3/9 in DaNang 8 March 1965, beginning the arrival of large Marine ground troops in Viet Nam.
[376] III Marine Amphibious force Order 3121.4B of 22 Jun 1968, paragraph 5.

CAP. The Marines are advisors and assistants to the PF soldier and support the PF platoon in integrated operations. The CAP conducts active and aggressive operations in the hamlet area to prevent VC incursions and attacks directed against hamlet residents and officials. The Marines of the CAP live and operate within the local hamlets.

Khe Sanh's CAC OSCAR had the peculiarity of being the only CAC composed of Montagnard tribesmen. Several of the Brou had previously served with French military units. CAC OSCAR included a Brou named Houm who other Brou claimed could not be killed and was known simply as "The Legend." The "Legend" was a 45 year-old man with a bristling black beard and a hard, line-etched face that stood about 5-4, wore a Marine utility cover, and carried an old, beat-up M-1 rifle. Houm loved rice wine and was known to consume an entire 5-gallon blitz can of rice wine during a single week.[377] As of the summer of 1967, CAC OSCAR consisted of 32 Marines and one officer.

Some of the customs of the Brou were strange to Americans. A patrol on 17 October 1967 from CAP O-3 found seven young Brou in the school house at Tum Plang in the act of intercourse. The Lieutenant wanted them brought in so they remained overnight in the brick school house at the compound at Ta Cong. Cpl Daniel Kelley said this was very unfortunate since this is the way Brou mate; there was nothing especially bad about it, but it was very embarrassing to the girls.[378] Kelley's close association with Brou revealed to him that it was common for young boys and girls to sleep together. He writes, "When I first observed this, I was surprised and completely unsure of its meaning."[379] Mr. John Miller notes that a common house in each village where young people sleep at night is calculated to assist young people to chose a spouse. Each village has at least one, perhaps two or three such houses. Girls occupy one room, boys another, and there is always an older person who owns the house. There is much talking and playing of musical instruments. A young man interested in a girl never approaches her directly, but through a friend. A young man will ask a friend if a certain girl might be interested in him. If so, they go off into the woods, rice field, or other secluded place. He gives the girl about 50 piaster as a token of his good faith in wanting to marry her, and then sexual union is permissible. Once a girl commits herself in this way, she is not free to go out with another fellow until her original partner has definitely broken off relationship with her.[380]

Brou were very loyal, hard-working, and friendly; they would not lie or steal. On 25 September 1967,[381] while accompanying a patrol from the Third Platoon of Marine Combined Action Company OSCAR, we crossed a hill, "Dong Che Rien," (the Marines called it "Michelle"—but could give no reason for that name), we arrived in a Brou village of Tum Plang (called "Bong" by the Marines).[382] There were several goats, a small girl walking around in a blouse made of camouflaged parachute, a man fashioning a crossbow out of some very deep red wood, pigs, multi-colored roosters, and a school teacher getting the children to sing hymns as part of their classes to learn to read their language. The Marines were here to conduct a MEDCAP, our "boxie" (from bac si in Vietnamese), HM3 Dale Faidley, treated about forty patients, mainly children. I watched the crossbow-maker using a knife called a Pria as a chisel, making very smooth and accurately carved wood. I asked if he might sell it. He wanted "an hours" pointing to my watch, but added that he wanted "an hours that didn't fall asleep." One of the Marines, Grohman, translated for me. We heard a gong in the distance being played like Morse Code.[383] This was

---

[377] "Montagnard A Living Legend," III MAF: Sea Tiger 3:38 (22 Sep 1967), p. 12; Comments by SFC James Perry to Ray W. Stubbe, July 1986.

[378] Ray W. Stubbe, diary entry, Tuesday, 17 October 1967.

[379] Letter from Daniel R. Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 28 March 1970.

[380] Mr. John Miller's comments on a study by Chaplain Robert L. Mole, 1967.

[381] What follows is based in diary kept by Ray W. Stubbe, entry for Tuesday, 26 September 1967.

[382] Mr. John Miller notes that "Tum" is the Brou word for "stream" and that all Brou villages have several names.

[383] The Brou had various musical instruments, including various flutes made from bamboo (a "tarial" about 6 inches long with several holes and pitched high; a "ken" which was a set of bamboo pipes with varying degrees of length and a round mouthpiece toward the bottom, built on the principle of an organ; a "kahlui" bamboo tube ranging from 2 to 3 ft. in length and an inch in diameter; a "pi" bamboo pipe about the same length as the "kuhlui" but smaller in diameter generally used at sad occasions such as a death of a relative; and a "amam" or small reed about a foot long with very small diameter which can be played by two persons making a very unique sound), a version of the "Jew's Harp" called a "ngcoong" made of bamboo and a "ngcaiq" which was smaller and made of metal; and various stringed instruments, including a "trua which is a 2-stringed instrument played with a bow, a "achung" which is a small bamboo tube about an inch and a half in diameter and a foot long with strings on the outer bark which are plucked; gongs (called "parnoh" and "chuang" which are gongs with a raised center which the Brou refer to with the same word as "navel"), and drums ("sacor"). [Letter from Mr. John Miller to Chaplain Ray W. Stubbe, 9 Oct 1969. Mr. Miller adds that there may be other instruments, but these are the major ones].

explained as a personal ritual before eating. People were wearing practically anything: women were not bare-chested as they recently had been, and children wore old T-shirts hanging down to their knees. Men, who wore only loin clothes until recently, now all wear trousers. A woman was chopping wood outside the ville. While watching the wood cutter making a crossbow, I suddenly realized I had placed my camera on a tree stump and then walked over to watch him. I mentioned this to Grohman who said, "Don't be afraid, Chaplain, the people here won't steal anything." I returned to the tree stump, and it was still there. I was beginning to know and deeply respect these Brou people, primitive though they are.

The Brou lived in constant fear since their religion was that of animism: the belief that spirits of departed ancestors and other spirits controlled everything and caused illness and misfortune if they were not appeased through sacrifices.[384]

> "Since the animistic religion of the Brou is predicated on fear and the desire to manipulate the supernatural world, Brou life seems to be an almost continuous round of sacrifices. With a fear motivated base, Brou religion involves a larger share of wealth, time, importance and concern than most non-tribesmen believe possible. But .. it provides the only means by which they can make sense of an otherwise senseless world."[385]

Large portions of the meager bit of food they had was usually tossed in the fields or within their homes to feed and appease these spirits, leaving them half-starved and susceptible to all the many infections and diseases that ravaged the jungle area of Khe Sanh. Seven out of ten infants died. All this, they believed was due to not having sacrificed enough or frantically searching for which spirit, out of the many, was troubling them. Less food made for more disease, and so the circular process fed itself.

During a visit to the Wycliffe Bible Translators home, John and Carolyn Miller were in the States on furlough, but Miss Nancy Costello, who had been at Khe Sanh in 1966, was living in their house. While there, a small boy was brought by his parents. He had been in convulsions for two days as Brou shamans attempted to exorcise the evil spirit from him. Miss Costello gave him two injections in his ass resulting in two large bumps. When I left, the small boy was in a coma, his eyes open with a small ant crawling on his eyeball. He looked dead. The mother slowly moved to the doorway, turned to the closed door, took one glance over her shoulder and began a deep and anguished sob. The threads of poverty, ignorance uncleanness, the boy, the mother, the helplessness, the suffering, the absence of modern society that would have prevented this, the enslavement to a religion based on fear, wove a very dark tapestry.[386]

Belief in spirits made for a dramatic, frenetic moment at CAP O-3 on Sunday, 03 December 1967. It was a very quiet, very foggy night until about 0300 when all the Brou along the perimeter started firing their rifles! Roberts, one of the Marines at the CAP O-3 position, got up so violently he put on his trousers backwards and stumbled out of the team house. Other Marines ran from bunkers, assuming we were under attack. The Brou claimed they had seen their evil god who devours people, known as "Panoah," prowling outside the wire; they fired to scare him away.[387]

One of the Marines of Combined Action Company OSCAR who arrived in mid-1967, Corporal Daniel R. Kelley, has previously served in an infantry company of battalion 2/16 near Phu Bai on blocking and sweeping operations. As with most Marines in Vietnam at the time, the shocking difference from his rather sheltered prior life in the suburbs of Philadelphia was violent. He still wore stateside, leather combat boots and his company was only issued jungle boots after they all developed jungle rot—bloated, sore cracked skin on their feet and hands, and became ineffective. He worried about not being able to shoot his rifle due to cracked skin on his fingers. His Lieutenant once called in artillery which landed among the troops resulting in four WIA due to the Lieutenant's miscalculation.

> "On operations we encountered a sweaty suffocating heat. We were constantly wet and fatigued from having to cut our way through jungle with machetes. We all had skin rashes and infected cuts from the high elephant grass. The leeches covered us all over. I had them even up the crack of my ass and on my prick. We lacked waster. I had dysentery most of the time. ... I was medevaced once for dehydration and another time trucked into the hospital, sick from drinking rice paddy water."[388]

Word went out for volunteers for CAC, and Kelley went to Khe Sanh traumatized (but not really aware of that at the time) from his infantry experiences of the previous months. His initial assignment was to the CAC OSCAR platoon on the western edge of Khe Sanh village, CAP O-2.

> "I tried to be reliable to my fellow Marines there, but unconsciously continued to keep distant socially from them. I spent my time interacting with the Brou and trying to learn the language. ... I became familiar with most of the [Brou]

---

[384] Mole, op. cit. ,pp. 59-60.
[385] Ibid., p. 63.
[386] Diary, Chaplain Ray W. Stubbe, entry for Sunday, 23 July 1967.
[387] Diary, Chaplain Ray W. Stubbe, entry for Sunday 03 December 1967.
[388] Daniel R. Kelley, email to Robert Shippen, 12 Dec 2001, forwarded by Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 18 Dec 2001

PFs, their girlfriends and their families. I ended up developing emotional bongs with more military and civilian Brou than most Marines developed with buddies in their units in their military tours."[389] He recalls the Brou in Khe Sanh as "refugees in their own land."[390]

After visiting the Millers, who gave him one of their Brou language manuals,[391] he spent evenings outside of the bunkers, learning Brou and talking with the Brou PFs, becoming like a brother to them. "We would talk of Khe Sanh, the language, the women, their songs. I felt myself insidiously pulled into emotional bonds with tem which pulled me away from my fellow Marines."[392]

After the environment of Phu Bai, Kelley felt no fear at Khe Sanh, and frequently walked down Route 9 with another Marine without a rifle, all the way to ville Bu and back. "I just didn't sense danger."[393] Through his conversations with the Brou PFs, he became aware that Brou PFs had to pay for their uniforms (which should have been issued to them free), that the Vietnamese government was notoriously slow in paying their wages and issuing them ammunition for their patrols. The Brou regarded their uniforms as a sort of status symbol with their girl friends., and were told they had to buy them on the black market at Khe Sanh village.[394]

One day, Kelley walked the short distance to the CAC OSCAR CP in the Khe Sanh District Headquarters where he happened to discover the National Police man torturing an elderly Brou man by electric shock from the hand-held crank generator of a field phone (which generates 35 volts) applied to his nipples and genitals. When asked politely to leave, Kelley shouted "You can't do that!" and stomped out to complain to the District Chief, Captain Nhi (a Chinese Nung), unaware that the Police Chief operated directly out of Saigon and didn't answer to the District Chief.[395]

Shortly thereafter, Kelley was promoted to Sergeant, but transferred from CAP O-2 in Khe Sanh village to CAP O-3 at Ta Cong, just outside the main gate of Khe Sanh Combat Base, so he could be in close contact with Anha who lived at Ta Cong.[396] Kelley remained here until December, 1967, when he returned to the States on the free 30-day extension leave, prior to returning to Vietnam. He wanted to continue his close relationship with the Brou at Khe Sanh.

"Tim," a Brou handyman dish washer at CAP O-3[397] invited some of the Marines to his "worship" at 2000.[398] Tim kept referring to us as his brothers. He was smiling, friendly, and happy. We removed our boots after mounting the small platform outside the door to his house, built like all Brou houses elevated from the ground on high poles. Several blood spatters were on the doorstep, perhaps saliva made red by betel nut. About eight people were gathered inside around a cooking placer in the center, a square of ashes with some burning logs and an iron ring supported by legs holding up kettles. Over all this was a square bamboo frame used in warming and drying rice. The men occasionally spat into this square of ashes, about two and a half feet square.

Tim's wife prepared the rice in woven baskets and large leaves while another person cut up pig into little pieces. They then poured a bowl of blood into the meat and stirred it into a reddish mess.

Two platters, each containing bowls of the red "mess," a few chunks of the cooked pig and several different types of rice in different bowls, were next placed before Tim, who sat in front of a wall of the house on which in the rafters were two small spirit houses constructed of bamboo and held together by what appeared as "comm" wire.[399] Tim lit a small candle and stuck it to the front of a spirit house. He next took some small square pieces of bamboo, about one and a half inches long by one inch wide and resumed his sitting position with legs crossed in front of him. He then began talking very fast and excitedly, looking up at the small spirit house. Also, in front of him, was a circular platter containing about a handful of uncooked rice

---

[389] Daniel R. Kelley, email to Robert Shippen, 14 Dec 2001, forwarded by Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 18 Sec 2001.
[390] Daniel R. Kelley, Letter to Frank Iodice, 01 April 1985, unsent, forwarded to Ray W. Stubbe, 07 Aug 2000.
[391] Daniel R. Kelley, Letter to John and Carolyn Miller, 30 November 1983.
[392] Daniel R. Kelley, Letter to Frank Iodice, 01 April 1985, unsent, forwarded to Ray W. Stubbe, 07 Aug 2000. So close did Kelley relate to the Brou that as of 1985, he could not recall the names of Marines at either CAP O-2 or O-3. [Letter to Daniel R. Kelley to Frank Iodice, 01 Apr 1985, unsent and forwarded to Ray W. Stubbe, 07 Aug 2006].
[393] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 07 July 1993.
[394] Ibid.
[395] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 15 July 1993.
[396] Daniel R. Kelley, email to Robert Shippen, 15 Dec 2001, forwarded by Daniel R. Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 18 Dec 2001.
[397] CAP = Combined Action Platoon. There were three platoons of Combined Action Company (CAC) OSCAR: CAP O-1 being the headquarters in the District Headquarters compound in Khe Sanh village; CAP O-2 being on the western edge of Khe Sanh village; and CAP O-3 at Ta Cong, a small Brou village just outside the main gate of Khe Sanh Combat Base.
[398] The following based in diary of Ray W. Stubbe, entry for Wednesday, 04 October 1967.
[399] There are no spirit houses seen in any of the Brou villes outside, as in Khe Sanh ville where the Vietnamese live; it appears as though the Brou place their spirit houses inside their own house. "Comm wire" is the black-coated wire used to connect land-line telephones.

through which he continuously stroked his left hand. He then took the pieces of bamboo in his right hand and tossed them hard against the floor. Sometimes they landed both concave, sometimes both convex. When one was concave and one convex, he became more animated, put both hands together like praying hands, raise them from the deck towards the small house, and always exclaim the same word. Occasionally, he would toss a few grains of the unprepared rice into the platters. Then he tossed some into one corner of his house and into the diagonally opposite corner. He then resumed his sitting position and with the platter of remaining, unprepared rice and rotated the circular woven black platter counter-clockwise and said some words, as though counting, and then rotated it to the right, and repeated the words. When finished, he smiled and asked us to join in the feast.

Since John Grohman (one of the Marines of CAP O-3) is able to speak some Brou, Tim explained to me (through John) what much of all that meant. First , he had paid $15.00 for the pig which was sacrificed. He earns $30.00 a month working at CAP O-3. I thought "if only our religious life meant as much to us!" His religious offering was 50%! He described this not as "15" but as "10 plus 5." When both pieces of bamboo were concave or both convex, he was not able to talk with the gods, so he throws a little pinch of rice to them as food so they will be pleased. When one is convex and the other concave, he is able to speak to them. He thanks them that they are in a better world and he converses with them. The throwing of rice in the house is to appease evil spirits.

The rotation of the platters is connected to his dreams. John says the Brou place great importance on the interpretation of dreams. He rotated the platter to the left six times for his six bad dreams, that the gods might take them away, and eight times to the right for his eight good dreams, that the gods might fulfill them.

He then placed the largest platter in front of us. Of course, the bloody part turned my stomach and I feared trichinosis and so didn't eat it, but did eat the various kinds of rice. One was very sticky and could be rolled into a ball. Another was just loose grains. Still another was in a bowl with pieces of cooked pig and very hot peppers. I only ate the rice portions. Of course, we're expected to eat everything, not to do so is regarded as an insult. I was very relieved the Marines were there to eat the bloodied pig! He also gave us very good, sweet bananas and coffee. We ate with American mess gear spoons and forks the Marines of CAP O-3 have given him.

Brou children in ville. Official USMC photo A193215 by Ray W. Stubbe 13 Sep 1967

Tim asked John to send the bac si (HM3 Dale Faidley) since his wife has a stomach pain. He said the gods didn't help much, but bac si's medicine does. John remarked that he probably could lead the whole village away from paganism, but had to be careful for the village chief who is already somewhat alienated from Tim because of all the military items and attention Tim gets from the Marines. However, upon relating this to Mr. John Miller, the Wycliffe Bible translator, Mr. Miller responded: "I think that the Marine who speaks of the ease with which one could change the worship patterns of the Brou is extremely naïve and does not understand the powerful hold that the Brou religious system has on each Brou life. Improved medical technique in itself will never do it, as is evidenced by the fact that the Brou man gave assent to the efficacy of modern medicine but went right ahead with his sacrifice anyway."[400]

On another occasion, I was invited to a funeral feast[401] in the Brou village of Chuah. The day was bright and cheerful. The village chiefs, the Dai Yien, were in the hut together with all the hamlet chiefs. First we were presented with a large vase about one and a half feet high and six inches in diameter filled with roots and herbs out of which protruded two bamboo "straws" about ¼ inch in diameter and four feet long. The vase was then filled with water until it was up to the brim. (I assumed it was "water" but may have been rice wine). Two people drink simultaneously while the host pours in "water" from a cup until it is again at the brim, so that the two have drunk one cup full. It has a sweet, amazingly alcohol-like taste and is called "Blang Kong." According to studies, although water is the ordinary beverage for the Brou, for ceremonial occasions a

[400] John Miller, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 9 Oct 1989

[401] What follows is based in diary entry for Tuesday, 24 October 1967, Diary of Ray W Stubbe.

fermented rice wine is brewed in large antique jars. During animal sacrifices, all tribesmen present, in order of their importance, take turns drinking rice wine through the long straw. Unless all participants drink, the sacrifice is believed to be ineffectual, the spirits being offended.[402]

We were also served the usual selection of different types of rice, water buffalo, and rice wine (must be 190 proof!)

Corporal Daniel Kelley noted that Brou in the resettled villages are happier than in their former areas because they feel safer. Furthermore, their rice paddy yields have increased more than when they were on the sides of the hills. Kelley noted that many of the Brou seem to have an affinity towards Laos—their customs and language. Some of the "hard core" remained near the Vietnam-Laos border. He noted that the Brou defecate by squatting, even when there is a "seat" in the "out house." The Brou PFs at CAP O-3 used to use the general head for all personnel there until they, instead of sitting on the seat, squatted with their feet planted on the sides of the hole, and defecated, sometimes with a wrong aim. A Marine going there, without looking, sat right in the elimination. It became a real morale problem. "We had to construct a separate head for them," he said.[403]

Then, the Brou proposed a novel solution: they could defecate outside the wire which would be a good deterrent if VC or NVA attempted to breach the wire. Unfortunately, Kelley recalls that while at CAP O-2, it was customary to leave at twilight and settle in the brush outside the wire for night ambush, and then with the cover of darkness, move into the designated ambush site.

> "On one of my first nights, I led the Brou/Marine patrol to a spot outside the wire. After much complaining by the Brou and understanding little Brou at the time, exasperated, I plopped down in the temporary area expecting them to follow suit. Ignoring military protocol, the Brou began to laugh heartily. Chagrined, I felt myself suddenly feel an oozy-wetness in the seat of my pants. I reflexively put my hand down and it also sunk down completely into the swamp-like mud. When I retrieved my hand I realized by the unusually distasteful smell, that I had invaded the area which was reserved for the VC, in the case that they would be so foolhardy as to attempt to assault the compound."[404]

We were offered some betel nut. This consists of a nut the size of a walnut, green and elongated, ellipsoidal in shape, of which a small part is cut. This, together with a piece of leaf coated with some white powder, plus a piece of bark that is placed in the teeth is all placed in the mouth and chewed. Some grains of black bark substance is sometimes added "to enhance the hallucinogenic effect," noted Kelley. The mixture creates blood-red saliva which is periodically expectorated. Over a period of time, the teeth turn black.

SIEGE PERIOD

Although the Vietnamese (and the Frenchman's family) were evacuated from Khe Sanh Combat Base on planes that delivered much needed artillery ammunition, the Brou were forbidden to depart and told to return to their villages.

Diary note for Tuesday, 23 January 1968: "Captain Preston, S-5 of Regiment said that the Quang Tri Province Chief, General Nguyen Am, was here today and said that all the Vietnamese could leave that wanted to, but the Brou Montagnards had to stay here, even though many desired to leave and were at the main gate. All the Brou have to return to their villages."[405] In mid-February: LtGen Xuan Lam, the I Corps Commander, refused to permit any Brou Montagnards from leaving Khe Sanh: VIETNAMESE GOV DID NOT REPEAT NOT DESIRE THE BROU TO BE EVACUATED. IN THE EVENT THIS POLICY HAS BEEN CHANGED IT WILL PRESENT SIGNIFICANT PROBLEM TO THIS COMMAND. REQUEST ADVISE.[406] CG, III MAF, reported: Commanding General, I Corps, General Lam, made decision that 5,000 – 6,000 Brou who desired to be evacuated from Khe Sanh could not be permitted to do so. The official reason given was that there is no place to relocate them or any available foodstuffs to feed them. Unofficially, however, it is felt that the age old animosity between the Montagnards and the Vietnamese was a motivating factor behind General Lam's decision. Approximately 10,000 pounds of rice available at Khe Sanh was distributed to the Brou there to alleviate their hunger.[407]

Cpl Frank Iodice had grown up in the hard-working setting of life in the country, operating earth-moving equipment. While in the 7th, 8th, and 9th grades, he used a frontend loader and bulldozer to clear land, build ponds and dams for farmers in

---

[402] Mole, op cit., p. 63.
[403] Ibid.
[404] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 07 July 1993.
[405] Stubbe, manuscript, Khe Sanh, 07 Oct 1971, pp. 831-832.
[406] 26 Marines 191316Z/Feb68 to CG, 3rd MarDiv.
[407] Trest, Warren A., Khe Sanh (Operation Niagara) 22 January - 31 March 1968, HQ PACAF, Directorate, Tactical Evaluation, CHECO Div., 13 Sep 1968, p. 37.

Georgia. Now he was one of the Marines assigned to Combined Action Company OSCAR, the 3rd Platoon, at Ta Cong village about 350 meters outside the main gate of Khe Sanh Combat Base. In an interview with him by Marine Corps Historical personnel the second week of March, 1968, he noted that Ta Cong, which had between 500 and 650 people before the siege was now "nothing but ashes," and that when the Marines evacuated, they brought with them only their Popular Forces platoon. He then told the story of the Brou that tore up those who, like him, had lived with them:

"FOB came out with the word that the PFs [Popular Forces]—they could stay in the compound and fight with us or we could put them through the wire as civilians,. They'd turn in their rifles, and they could go with their families to Cam Lo, which is about 35 kilometers. The Government of Viet Nam refused to fly them out of here. The Vietnamese personnel at Khe Sanh—I believe there was about 900 of them—they were all flown out. [Actually, there were 1200 Vietnamese evacuated]. As soon as the Marines were evaced out of the Khe Sanh one and Two [CAPs] and the District Headquarters, civilians came next and they evaced them all out to Quang Tri and Cam Lo. Then it came to the Brou . ... Their only source of income except to work I the coffee plantation here .. was $26.00 a month, and then they got a raw deal on buying rice fro the District Chief. That all stemmed from GVN [Government of Vietnam]. Anyway, with the evacuation: They were sending Vietnamese—civilians were all flown out. Then it came to the Brou. They wanted to be flown out too. But GVN said 'No.' I don't know who it was, but a Vietnamese General passed the word that there was no place to place the Brou, so they could stay in the area. Of course, we've declared this now an 'open fire zone,' and the air strikes from the 52s, the Arc Lights, commenced. And so, here we had all our Brou.

They were still out in all the villages and we were to start bombing. We had all our Brou PFs here. The men stayed here I the compound; they were all safe. But the wives and children were out in the villes. And they said, 'No; we can't fly civilians out.' They flew out the honcho Brou [Mr. Onya] and his direct family, and that was it, and some of the village chiefs. And the next thing that happened was: we started sending Brou out to the wire—the ones who'd volunteer—tell the families and all the tribes people that were in the villages to move into the hills and keep away from the villes, that we were going to start bombing. And the Brou didn't know what way–. They survived on nothing almost, a little rice, $26.00 a month, and whatever they made off the land. And they had no place to go—to the mountains, maybe. How could they live? The women and children like I said. The men were here on the base.

"So the next thing that happened was: here was a couple of days of bombing. And all my PFs ran to me, and they expected me to give them an answer. I had one Brou come up, and it looked like my village of Ta Cong had got bombed. It hadn't; it was just over the ridgeline from here it did. That Brou P came up and told me, he said, 'What am I supposed to do now? My mother and father and brothers are dead!' And I myself was interested. This was Chung; he works for FOB. I was interested enough to let it pass my mind of adopting him for a brother. I knew who he was talking about. The little boy's name was 'Bong.' Well, as it turned out, the bombs didn't hit Ta Cong. They was, as I said, about 1000 meters south. And that was the story. PFs coming up and asking me questions I couldn't answer: 'Why is WAH-JKEE [the Americans] bombing Ta Cong?' 'Why are the bombing my village and my buffalo, my wife and my children?' And explain it to them.

At this point in the interview, Cpl Frank Iodice's voice was cracking with emotion. He spoke with soft, broken words as he continued relating the evil he now knew:

"Then we came up with an option. We told—I told my Brou that they could—FOB told their personnel, their Brou personnel, we'd put them out through the wire and they could go with their families to Cam Lo and meet their wives and children and go to Cam Lo. Some of them left. Ah–,. Well, I'll just give you the straight scoop, that's all that's to it—ah—now our District Chief—my PFs and the CAC PFs work for the District Chief and he's responsible to GVN and ah, the District Chief up here, he's the representative for GVN—there was—FOB gave the word: now their personnel, they're hired by FOB and they could go. FOB could give them the word: you could leave, but—now I realize when that word came down there was a mistake made. FOB personnel were free to go—Brou personnel. But I knew our CAC personnel; it wasn't their choice. It had to go from the District Chief, and he was the direct superior of these Brou. And GVN were the only people that could give that word, and from the raw deal they already got, the civilians, I knew what was happening. So there was about a two-hour lapse before somebody realized what had happened. They gave the word that all the Brou could leave if they wanted to. And it was two hours, the word did come down that nom the CAC Brou can't go because they're responsible to this Captain [Nhe] and the GVN. But in those two hours, anywaym, I realiZed that with another man, I told all the Brou—we even got up some money to give anyone who wanted to leave and to make it out of here. But once again, their faith and trust in us, to quote one of the Brou—he told myself this and this other Corporal [Dan Kelley], he said, 'No, all the Brou are going to stay here,' .. they're goig to stay here and fight. And for the faith and trust they're putting in us, they're getting a raw deal.

BROU REFUGEE CHILD. USMC PHOTO A192894
Photographer and date of photo unknown

"Just yesterday, come Brou came in. We dropped anti-personnel mines, evidently that was what it was .. And they said that they saw these anti-personnel mines dropped down from WAUKEE planes, the American planes, and they thought even after the air-strikes we've had here now for maybe three weeks. And they saw them drop these small anti-personnel mines ["Gravel"], the first thing that popped into their heads was:, 'the WAUKEE, they're dropping us chow!" so they picked them up. After about a few hands burned and some arms shrapneled-up, they realized they were anti-personnel mines. And yet they still trust us!"[408]

Approximately 15 February, some 2,000 – 3,000 Brou tribes people attempted to move from Khe Sanh to Ca Lu but were intercepted at XD 852399 (about 300 meters west of the Poilane house) and turned back by the NVA.[409]

Unfortunately for those who remained at Khe Sanh, VC Brou cadres (from those who had not relocated in the hamlets along Route 9 in the early 1960s) set up their own government in the villages of Bu and Areng, forcing the village chiefs to flee for their lives. The VC had lists identifying the village elders and Brou PFs in each village which they obtained after they overran Khe Sanh village.[410] Kelley was ordered to ask the Brou PFs manning a portion of the FOB-3 perimeter if they would fire on their own people who the NVA might push ahead of a massive, "human wave" assault. The Brou PFs answered that they would fire, explaining that they had no place to run and that the NVA would surely kill them anyway for "being soldiers for the Americans."[411] The village elders who came to the FOB-3 perimeter provided good intelligence including convoys running continuously from Laos on Route 9 to different NVA command posts set up in the Brou villes. Bu was apparently the main command headquarters of the NVA. Kelley recalls: "I was told to tell them to spread the word to the villagers to flee the villages and head south. They looked at me in disbelief." Over time, additional Brou arrived at the wire, begging food. "I was saddened that Marines bargained C-rats for Brou jewelry, gold and silver bracelets used in paying for dowries, as well as prized old French coins and handicrafts—baskets and crossbows."[412]

Kelley was notified by a Marine Lieutenant that bombing runs were planned for the Brou villages and he was asked to sign a statement that the villages had been evacuated. "I angrily refused. Brou coming to the wire said the villages were occupied by Brou villagers and Brou VC cadres. They had fled at night at the risk of being shot by the cadres or NVA patrols." He remembers that an Italian news reporter managed to arrive in the FOB-3 compound and talked with Kelley who had studied Spanish and French in high school, and was a great fan of Verdi operas. "I explained to him that they were going to bomb populated villages." Months later, while at the Brou refugee village in Cua, he was told that the Americans did, in fact, bomb the villages, killing some of the friends and family members with whom he had developed friendships while at CAP O-2, including a Brou Sergeant's younger brother due to the collapse of his bunker during the American bombing who died at 18 with his girlfriend. Kelley opined that the bombing was the result of NVA activity in the villages and the possibility of using Brou civilians as a "human shield" ahead of an advancing human wave assault. After the villages were bombed, no more Brou came to the wire bringing intelligence of NVA activity in the immediate area.[413] Kelley recalls that a Marine Captain chewed him out and ordered him not to speak to any more news reporters. "I said, 'Well, I'm not going to tell any lies. if they're bombing the villages and there are people out there, I'm not going to tell them that there's nobody out there. We

---

[408]Interview of CPL Frank Iodice, USMC Oral History Tape #2621.
[409] 26 Marines 191316Z/Feb68, Subj: Disposition of Displaced Personnel, in 26th Marines Command Chronology, February, 1968.
[410] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 29 July 1993.
[411] Daniel R. Kelley, email to Robert Shippen, 5 Dec 2001, copy forwarded by Daniel R. Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 18 Dec 2001.
[412] Ibid.
[413] Ibid. Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 07 July 1993.

have village chiefs coming in and reporting that their villages are being bombed, that it wasn't their fault that the NVA were staying in close to the villages so they wouldn't incur casualties.' They said this was confidential information that shouldn't be said to the press. I said I didn't care if it was confidential or not, that there were people out there getting killed basically because they were in the line of fire. They wanted me to sign some type of report saying that the villages were now deserted. I refused to do it."[414]

During the early days of the Khe Sanh siege, Frank Iodice (also from CAP O-3) came to Dan Kelley with a plan to capture a NVA officer for intelligence purposes. "If successful, we would get a R&R, all expenses paid, and I agreed to go."[415] The Special Forces of FOB-3 gave Kelley and Iodice some amphetamines to stay awake and they departed with gas, gas masks into a very foggy day and smoky area with Brou PFs who were especially valued: "The Brou had a very uncanny sense—maybe from living so close to nature, in total darkness they could tell if someone was near them. Their senses were so acute, their smell and hearing, that they could detect things we couldn't. They taught us. It was one of the ironies that I always remember: here we were advisors to the Brou PFs and they were teaching us how to patrol!"[416]

They met an old woman in the village of Ta Cong, just outside the FOB-3/Khe Sanh Combat Base perimeter, across the access road. She was the only person in Ta Cong, fairly old and living in the ashes of the burnt-out village to keep warm. The Brou had evacuated the village and started to trek out and she felt she was too old.[417] The old woman was the grandmother of a young Brou boy the Marines called "Bong," a sort of mascot of the CAP Marines. Bong came up to the Marines and said, "My mother's dead. My father's dead. And now I'm going to go on patrol with Lacey and White."[418] The old woman provided some valuable intelligence to the Marines, telling of NVA activity in the area. She said the NVA came into Ta Cong every night, and based upon that information, Kelley and Iodice set up a night ambush to capture their NVA officer. "We stayed out at least one night. We didn't sleep at all. After we had been out at least one day, we were dead tired. And then the ambush was sprung. Iodice called out the coordinates by memory, and I can remember the mortar rounds coming in behind us. I thought, 'Geez, this guy's amazing! He doesn't have a map on him and he remembers.. He knew where he was. He called in the first mortar round and then just adjusted. We rallied to another point. We went back to look at the ambush site and did see some bandages and some blood and other paraphernalia of the NVA that we picked up and headed back to the wire."[419]

REFUGEE VILLAGE

Many Brou, caught as innocent third party civilians in the clash of NVA/Marines, began to walk east toward Cam Lo where a refugee center was established for them. The Brou population of the refugee center included Brou not only from Khe Sanh but also many of those who had opted not to settle in the Strategic Hamlet villages along Route 9 in the early 1960s. For many, the refugee center became a death camp. Carolyn Miller of the Wycliffe Bible Translators, recalls, "We asked them to write something about their experiences at that time. A couple of them said, 'Please, we don't want to think about it.'"[420]

A CIA civilian who had unexpectedly made an appearance with Marines of the 3rd platoon of G/2/3 fighting in the Battle of the Hills at Khe Sanh on 30 April 1967,[421] Bob Handy, arrived in FOB-3 one morning seeking Dan Kelley and said "You're going to be coming with me." "The next thing I knew, I was on a helicopter with him."[422] "I didn't know him from Adam."[423] "It never occurred to me to ask him what authority or have you cleared this with my superiors. All I knew I was working in the refugee area and had no paperwork. I never saw any paperwork."[424] There he met James Perry, the medic assigned to MACV Advisory Team 4 in Khe Sanh Village, and the three Americans—Handy, Kelley, and Perry—supervised the thousands of Brou refugees. Kelley recalls meeting Onya who felt he had been "sold out" by the Americans and there was no protection from VC in the area.[425] At the Brou refugee center, Kelley recalls sleeping four hours a day and running patrols.[426] He described the

---

[414] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 25 June 1989.
[415] Daniel R. Kelley, letter to Frank Iodice, 01 April 1985, unsent, forwarded by Daniel R. Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 07 Aug 2006. Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 29 July 1993.
[416] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 29 July 1993.
[417] Ibid.
[418] Conversation with Frank Iodice, 18 May 1986. Lacey and White were two Marines assigned to CAP O-3.
[419] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 29 July 1993.
[420] Conversation with Carolyn Miller, 28 May 1986.
[421] Comments of Sgt Ed Crawford in "The 1967 Hill Battles," Stubbe, Ray W., Pebbles in My Boots, Vol. 2, p. 105.
[422] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 26 June 2000.
[423] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 15 July 1993.
[424] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 25 June 1989. Kelley was actually assigned to the CIA unit known as CORDS. [3rd Marine Division, Civil Affairs & PSYOP Newsletter, 3-69 (15 March 1969 p. 1, notes Kelley was assigned to CORDS for the previous 18 months].
[425] Daniel R. Kelley, letter to Frank Iodice, 01 April 1985, unsent, forwarded by Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 07 Aug 2006.

camp: "It was so dry and just dirt. The flies were so bad. People were just dying because there was no water. There wasn't enough food and the weather conditions were just horrid. All we had was just a barbed wire around the refugee camp. In the evenings I would stay out with the Brou. I remember the MACV persons saying, 'You're crazy!'"[427] Eventually, Kelley felt he also had been abandoned with the Brou.[428] Kelley, Perry, and Handy were given MACV teams who did nothing. They were ordered to build a fort north of the camp, and the MACV team departed. Then Perry departed and Kelley was left alone in the camp. Attempts were made on his life, and Onya convinced him not to accompany patrols and even gave Kelley one of his own body guards, a PF NCO.[429]

Some 8 to 10 Brou died daily in the first few months.[430] The situation was desperate. Kelley remembers attempting to insert an IV in one Brou, but he was so dehydrated, it didn't penetrate the vein. "He basically cursed me and said, 'I want to die! Let me die!' And I said, 'You can't die!' And he died. We buried him. I was the only American who stayed 24 hours a day in the Brou compound. Perry would come in during the day but for some reason—I guess he was under direct MACV, so they required that he return to the MACV compound each night. Anya was so fed-up with everything that happened. He felt that he had been abandoned and betrayed."[431]

During this time, Kelley was actually held a prisoner in the Special Forces "A" Camp for two days after he had kicked out a Vietnamese Lieutenant out of the Brou village (which was off-limits to the Vietnamese). When he went to the A Camp to coordinate patrols, a squad of Vietnamese with two machineguns held him prisoner in the outer perimeter. "The A Team convinced them to let me come into the inner perimeter, and then I believe that the only way that I was allowed to leave was that the commander of the A Team threatened to bring in Marine tanks and blow the perimeter. So they helicoptered me out. After that I did all my coordinating through the MACV Captain in the Vietnamese village. The reason for that was not only that I had thrown out the Vietnamese Lieutenant but I had also found out about a scam; they had a deal where if a person was killed in combat, t hey would give an insurance policy to the family. But the Lieutenants were getting a kick back. I found out about it and reported it, and they were more upset over that, although they used the excuse that I had kicked this Lieutenant out of the Brou village. There were attempts on my life; there had already been two attempts to try to get rid of me."[432]

Daniel Kelley maintained a daily log,[433] entries which record his daily life in the refugee center. A few excerpts:

Apr 15, '68:

(1) FOB 3, Khe Sanh delivered: rice—8 bags, salt—4 bags, C-rats—20 cases, blankets—30, cigarettes—7 cartons. Are going to recruit 300 Brou. Maj. Smith very helpful.

(2) RD Team received today from Quang Tri: 4 M-1s – ammo, 500 rds, 3 grease guns – ammo 2000 rds; 12 carbines – ammo 4220 rds, received no carbine magazines; have 25 wpns already; 60 undershirts, 70 socks, 65 canteens, 65 cartridge belts, 85 canteen pouches, 70 berets, 70 boots, 160 black pajamas

(3) Teachers (accord. Mr. miller) will be paid – further training at Pleiku. 4 patients recently arrived.

(4) Spoke to RD leader: told him VN RDs not doing job. Told spoke to Capt RAO. If don't do job, hold pay or see me about getting rid of them. Told him: (1 needed educate Brou in cooking, (2) sanitation – dig shitters; (3) hold med. caps –keep me posted on critical patients

(5) ID cards – 300 P's per person. Was 40 P's – Mr. Anya get rid of them. 25 P's Khe Sanh.

(6) Need shovels and hoes to dig shitter and bury dead

(7).Close to 40 dead now – exact figure tomorrow

(8) RD structure – 14 VN, 66 Brou (81), 3 nurses VN, 1 Brou medic

(9) Lt DAY delivered wood, soap (300 bars), rolled oats, clothes (100 people), 8 bags cam. for wk. detail. Price now for CSM and oats – 400 P's per pack. Wk. detail all previous bags – 147 bags tomorrow have price; 100 Brou Cam Lo – 100 Brou Khe Sanh. Lost 4 bags? Also possible taken. Mr. Anya instructed that police be present to watch future transactions – if irregularity rectify legally!

(10) Mr. Anya would like Brou work on water project too.

---

[426] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 07 July 1993.
[427] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 25 June 1989.
[428] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 07 July 1993.
[429] Ibid.
[430] Daniel R. Kelley, letter to Frank Iodice, 01 April 1985, unsent, sent to Ray W. Stubbe, 07 Aug 2006.
[431] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 7 July 1993.
[432] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 25 June 1989.
[433] Shown to Chaplain Ray W. Stubbe, at visit to Refugee Center, Thursday, 09 May 1968.

(11) Will have Brou medic check VN dispensary daily; No. of Brou and VN present. If need food or medicine. Well treated?

(12) VN village not working with Anya – has not asked Anya for food – commodities – check into supplying VN from Khe Sanh too.

(13) Needs a radio – communicate district

(14) Prices:

bowl – 15 P's; large pot 150 P's, washbowl 80 P's

Sm. pot 80 P's, Salem – 350 P's per pack: 40 P's chicken 250 P's – 600 P's

chunk of meat 300 P's

Kool-Aid 10 P's per pack

(15) Med. CAP held – 120586 by 3/4 based district. Ran out of diuretics, need soap, skin problems – coughs & pneumonia not equipped to handle

(16) CAC HDQRS held one (treated at least 200 vicinity of 115583 treated at least 100.

(17) Need med CAPs at 1157 – both sides of Rt. 558.

(18) Fr. priest – MEDCAP. Leaving Quang Tri, back 2-3 days, buy medicine, like wood build beds in dispensary, says needs H_2O_2, alcohol, syringes, tetracycline

(19) Can get tweezers, hemostats, and scissors for RD corpsman.

(20) If new MEDCAP teams – see Anya – direct to where needed.

April 16, 1968

(1) Deaths – 71 – 2 hamlets VN - accounted for (5 died today) – combination of hot tents and cold ground

(2) 3/4 "K" held MEDCAP – treated 250; 150 at least diarrhea

(3) Delivered 200 sandbags, 20 boxes brown sugar, 2 cases corned beef, 12 cans dehydrated soup, 4 boxes macaroni

(4) Getting list of families

(5) Got recipes – no ingredients!

(6) Wk detail: 4 days received 54,390 P's for 177 bags

(7) PFs told 3/4 days taken Q. Tri to get paid

(8) 2 Brou taken VN dispensary need food

(9) RD VN (1) helped Americans, 2 teams of 2, cover area

(10)VN gave petition back

(11) Locks – catches 0 Med gear. Wood delivered – taken Cam Lo Brou – sell 1200 P's (used to be 700 P's

(13) Anya will write letters

(14) Held 4th Eng. class – (5 students)

(15) #10 cooking cans – juice cans

(16) Need rifle cleaning gear

(17) Lt Watts promised 5 mid-wife kits, 8 carpenter kits, 6 farm kits, cook utensils: pots, cups, spoon

Apr 17

(1) 35 bags – wk. detail – 10 beans, 25 oats, owe 165 bags. Have in Q Tri – perhaps tomorrow

(2) Gave Brou clothes – 200 people from chaplain

(3) Rice Q. Tri Anya bought – 400 bags 900 P's per bag – 350 for VN, 250 for Brou. Yet to have 30 bags.

(4) Mr. Uhler – paper on supplies from Anya give tomorrow

(5) Delivered 3 rolls concertina to Anya

(6) Sell sandbags – 3 P's per bag

(7) Using ;police vehicle convoy wood to Q. Tri from here

(8) Lt Watts – give 50,000 P's to Brou – Anya wants buy rice; 54,000 can buy 60 bags!

(9) Lt Watts buy utensil gets OK from District

(10) Med Cap 137 people – RD team at Lambouiq

(11) American doctor at market to give medicine – 100 treated

(14) 450 grams per lb.

(15) Getting tools start handicrafts

(16) 15 teachers paid – 4 or 5 months depending where previously on PF roster

(18) Bricks for making bakery and money pay laborers and cement (Lt Watts)

(20) Total Brou 5,668

Families – 1,026

No money - 758 families
92 deaths
(21) VM - total 1225 (population of Khe Sanh in Cam Lo)
Families - 353
8 VN died
Not paid - 35 families
(22) Total have paid - 2940
Total population - 6,893 Brou and VN
Total not paid - 5,953
(23) Roofing in Quang Tri - need trans.
(24) Put Brou along Rt. 558
(25) Lt Watts gave 5 wood shovels, 5 good rakes, 5 good pitch forks, 3 wood handles, 4 hoe heads, 5 hand claw, 6 hand shovel
(28) RDs - won't allow Lampboat ration medicine - says not in charge of them - can sell medicine 15 cents per pill if not supervised, talk to Phieu tomorrow
(29) Delivered 2 cases lunch meat, 72 lbs. meat, 1 box of clothes - 25 people, 1 bundle sandbags
(30 1 woman, 1 child died toda

BOB HANDY AND BROU CHILDREN
MAI LOC REFUGEE CENTER
23 May 1968 photo by Ray W. Stubbe

According to Bob Handy, Mr. Robert Brewer, the Quang Tri Province Senior Advisor (also CIA), referred to Daniel Kelley as "the Lawrence of Arabia for the Brou."[434] Dan Kelley was later awarded a Bronze Star Medal for the period July, 1968 - March, 1969.[435] He also received a personal letter from the President of the United States:

"Dear Mr. Kelley:

"I was particularly pleased to learn that you have returned home to the United States with a special distinction after serving in Vietnam. Certainly the interest which prompted you to master the Brou language at the northern provinces is to be commended. It speaks highly for America's mission in Vietnam and the rapport we seek to establish so that we may effectively help these people who have suffered so long in their fight for freedom.

"With my best wishes as you return to civilian life, Sincerely, Richard M. Nixon."

What the experience did to Dan Kelley, however, remained very dark; what the Brou endured was darker still:

"My Brou experience was unique. Neither history nor the majority of the Vietnam veterans know how 10 thousand Brou were decimated by American bombing and callousness. Optimistic estimate might indicate that 6 thousand survived the trek from Khe Sanh to Cam Lo only to lose perhaps a thousand to sickness, wounds, and starvation. ... While others lost buddies, I lost family. ... My mind's eye sees countless Brou faces, dead or ones left behind. Who can share that memory with me? Jim Perry was an unsung hero. Bob Handy - dead - he saved the Brou nation from extinction. ... So many promises made, and we left them behind, abandoned. ... my solace for all these years has been knowing that our all merciful God would not forsake them who were forsaken by their fellow men. ... My tragedy is having lost an extended family, the Brou. My error in other's eyes was to become too involved. But if they are family, you can't help but feel the pain of losing them."[436]

---

[434] Conversation with Daniel R. Kelley, 26 August 1993.
[435] HQ, United States Military Advisory Command, Vietnam, General orders No. 3313, 18 June 1969, Award of the Bronze Star Medal.
[436] Letter from Dan Kelley to Ray W. Stubbe, 8 April 1985.

IN SUBSEQUENT YEARS

The plight of the Brou, especially Brou Christians, continued. By September, 1969, the Brou refugee population at the refugee center increased by some 750 as the village near Ca Lu moved into the center when they learned that the Marines were leaving the area, bringing the Brou population to about 7,000. Finding land to cultivate was impossible; all the "safe" land was being cultivated by the Vietnamese.[437] In 1985, a Brou refugee living in Laos wrote the Millers a 12-page, single-spaced letter:

> "We are like young deer who have lost their mother, like young animals who have lost he forest, wandering around helpless and confused. Whoever they want to capture, they capture. Whoever they want to kill, they just kill. We are only like animals now. We ask you to pray for us about this."[438]

John Miller adds: This letter "represent something of the anguish and despair that can come to a people who have nothing more to live for in this life, who feel there is no one who can or will come to their aid." The Brou letter writer also wrote: "..The authorities imprisoned two men who were believers. They treated them harshly. They accused them falsely of many things and did many other things until finally they agreed to give up their belief in God. Only then they released them from prison. We ask you to pray very much for those who have denied the Lord. ... Since 1975, the authorities took the church building and the believers are no longer allowed to meet together to ray. All of us they treated very harshly. ... Many times Vietnamese people or Brou people reviled me because I believe in the Lord, and because I worked to translate the language of the Brou people with you. ... They say that I am the mouthpiece and the listening ears for you. Many schemed against me and many reported me to the authorities."

Brou refugees at Ban Me Thuot who returned to Khe Sanh in the late 1980s met continued hardship and persecution: "When they got there they were arrested, then spent some time in prison. Two of our teachers that were really committed to the Lord were arrested and they wouldn't release them until they gave up their faith. Finally, they said they would. They left them go, but they'll still be harassed."[439] The Millers wrote of continued growth of the Christian church among the Brou despite horrendous persecutions for following a "foreign" religion, for following the "American religion.." Another Brou wrote the Millers of "continued threats of imprisonment or hard labor for any believers who meet together to worship."[440]

While at a worship service in Savannakhet, Laos, the Millers sat next to a Brou who opened his Brou New Testament. The Millers noticed he had underlined 1 Peter 4.12-16, which reads, in part, "Dear friends, do not be surprised at the painful trial you are suffering as though something strange were happening to you. However, if you suffer as a Christian, do not be ashamed, but praise God that you bear that name." The Millers commented: "How appropriate, I thought, for these people who have known insult and indignity for their beliefs. Some have been imprisoned. They are not ashamed to suffer as Christians, and it seemed to me that they are not surprised at the things they are going through. Their calm and confident demeanor, as well as their confidence in the Lord, were a great encouragement to us."[441]

Not only did they meet persecution, those who returned to Khe Sanh were forced to live on land that was not productive. "Their traditional land has been taken over by others. They don't have that to hold them together. They don't have their own turf. [Although] they are back in that area, they don't have the good land along the road. They've been pushed back up into the mountains. The Vietnamese have taken over their former areas close to Route 9."[442] Some Brou were successfully engaged, however. One day, the Millers were talking in the hallway where they worked in Thailand and a man from the Ministry of Science and Technology upstairs approached them and, surprisingly, started talking in Brou as he joined in the conversation. Working for the Foreign Service, he had been in the Royal Lao Air Force, sent to the US and then to France to study administration. He was now in charge of the reconstruction of Route 9 in Laos between Savannakhet and Lao Bao![443]

A former US Army Special Forces soldier, Robert Donoghue, organized trips back to Khe Sanh to provide aid for the Brou. Writing in 1995, he mentioned three previous trips to Khe Sanh and was planning on a fourth, leaving 29 April 1995. He wrote: "The Brou are finally realizing that the Americans that left so many years ago have not forgotten them. ... the Brou, living in and around Khe Sanh and Lang Vei desperately require our help. ... A typical Brou community contains about 300 people, with an average family income from selling coffee beans of $80 - $100 a year. They need mosquito nets, medicine,

---

[437] John Miller, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, 9 Oct 1969.
[438] In letter from John Miller to Ray W. Stubbe, 17 Oct 1985.
[439] Conversation with John and Carolyn Miller, 11 May 1990.
[440] John and Carolyn Miller, letter to Ray W. Stubbe, May, 1990.
[441] John and Carolyn Miller, letter of 8 June 1991.
[442] Conversation with John and Carolyn Miller, 18 August 1991.
[443] Ibid.

water wells, clothing, and agricultural assistance. Medicine is nonexistent in the villages. There is no facility or teacher to provide an education for the Brou children."[444]

The Millers received a letter signed by several Brou Christians living in Khe Sanh [undated, but late 1991]: "Here in the Khe Sanh area there are now believers in many villages–in one village 5 households, in another 6 households. They are still not allowed to visit each other and they are not allowed to meet together to pray. ... There are believers in 50 households. We help each other to have enough food and clothing. We ask you to pray for us. Right now there is much sickness. We ask believers in Jesus Christ to pray for us about the following. First, ask God to allow those in authority to quickly know about His work. Second, that God will open the hearts of the authorities to allow us to meet together. Third, ask God to allow us to be able to teach the Word of God freely. ... The authorities told us this: 'During the war, the Americans devastated this country of Viet Nam. First came the religion of the Good News (a reference to the Protestant church). And if there is another war, they will kill all of us.' But we aren't worried (sad) at all about this thing. We just ask all believers to pray much."[445] [in Letter from John and Carolyn Miller 17 Oct 1991]..

Writing in 1992, the Millers quoted a letter they had received from a young Brou man who wrote: "There was a time when I denied and gave up the Lord. but when I came back to believe again in 1986 many times I encountered difficulties. Many times the authorities came after me and put me in prison. ... People in the area wanted to kill us to stamp out the work of the Lord. But we thank God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord: He really received your prayers and the prayers that others prayed for us. The work of the Lord was not destroyed. Many times difficulties came to test our faith, but we thank God that He helped us to be able to endure and to stand firm. ... God has called 530 people in our area to turn and believe in God. When the authorities saw that people were turning to believe in large numbers they arrested us again. They also imprisoned three of the new believers. These three felt great joy when they turned to believe in God and were healed of sickness. So they went telling the Word of God for others to know also. Now we meet separately, village by village, and we thank God that because of your prayers we are now able to meet together. In the past they said we were not even allowed to believe in God, but since 1991 they have allowed us to believe and to meet together in our separate villages."

In 1994, the Millers wrote:

> " 'This is that happens to people who become Christians,' the guards announced as they marched nine chained Brou men down the main road in town.. who refused to be involved in the traditional spirit worship of the area and were reported to the authorities as undesirables in the community. Six of the nine men are still in prison after one year and are still required to sleep in stocks. But they have not wavered in their commitment to the Lord and are determined to persevere. ... Despite continual harassment and opposition the number of believers continues to grow in significant numbers."[446]

BUNKERS: A PERSONAL REFLECTION ON DEALING WITH PTSD

By Ray William Stubbe

PROLOGUE

CHAPLAIN STUBBE'S BUNKER IN 'C' MED
Photo by Glen Waller ca. October, 1967

Just after midnight of Sunday, 21 January 1968, a rat ran down my bed, squeaking, and although we had a total blackout on the base, I had fastened a towel around the center of a camouflaged parachute covering the overhead and bulkheads of my bunker so that light from the single light bulb suspended in the center would not escape the bunker. I did this to discourage further visits by rats. The sermon for worship today was still not completed, and I planned to get up at 0500. Somehow this was communicated to the powers that be, for about 0500, I was awakened, not by an alarm clock, but by loud explosions of incoming mortars and rockets. Our base was under attack. Stunned, I cautiously dressed, knowing my bunker could protect from flying shrapnel and perhaps a direct hit by a mortar, but it could not withstand a rocket. I knew I should dash to the "C"

---

[444] Special Forces Association: The Drop, Spring, 1995, p. 63.
[445] John and Carolyn Miller, letter, 21 April 1992.
[446] John and Carolyn Miller, letter, 16 March 1994.

Med trench for better protection. Explosions eerily illuminated the dark night. The LSU[447] next to C Med[448] was on fire and the air was filled with the stench of burning sandbags while gasoline in the POL[449] area on the other side of C Med was sending up plumes of orange fire. Flares illuminated the entire sky, and sounds of whizzing, cracking, and explosions punctuated terror into everyone's soul. Incoming arrived in spurts of intensity. I cautiously moved to the door of my bunker, considering whether I should make a dash. My bunker now felt like a prison, isolating me from the company of others which I so desperately now needed.[450] Every time I considered running, another round exploded nearby. I knew from briefings that one should never run in a mortar attack; shrapnel explodes upwards, in a "V" shape, so that one might be flat on the ground almost next to an exploding round and not be hit; while standing, one was sure to receive pieces of shrapnel in one's upper body. On the other hand, rockets and artillery explode and spew shrapnel over the surface of the ground; the only safe place is below ground or in a bunker. Eventually, I disregarded the possibility of being hit and ran; the need to be with others overpowered any fear.

All the corpsmen huddled in the "C" Med trench. Rounds continued to explode until about 0830 (although I later learned that officially the attack ceased at 0630), mainly rounds cooking off in our ammo dump. Then, someone yelled "Gas!" It was from CS[451] powder that had been stored in our main ammo dump which was now exploding. I put on my gas mask and immediately felt claustrophobia and wanted to yank it off my face, but my mind, reminding me I needed to wear it, prevailed. Practically all the men needed to urinate. We forgot that our steel helmets were called "piss pots" for a reason! (Later, we kept some empty IV bottles in the bunker for this purpose). Rockets continued to shriek and explode with flashes of light like from a flash bulb of a camera. The effects of rockets were not only destruction from its blast but their shrieks that reminded one of scraping fingernails on a chalk board.

AFTER ATTACK. Official USMC photo A192619
Date of photo and photographer unknown

Eventually all, by necessity, departed from the trench bunker; there wasn't enough room for doctors, corpsmen, and casualties, and the incoming had stopped. I returned to my bunker and noticed a large part of an 82 mm mortar at my bunker's entrance along with pieces of shrapnel embedded in its sandbag walls. The bunker still stood. Ecclesiastes 9.12 came to my mind: "For man does not know his time. Like fish which are taken in an evil net, and like birds which are caught in a snare, so the sons of men are snared at an evil time when it suddenly falls upon them."

After talking with the casualties brought to C Med, I started to walk around the entire combat base, filled with nervous energy. Rounds from our ASP[452] on the east side of the base continued to explode, and I was confused as to what to do. Should I hold worship services? (The reality of what had happened hadn't yet registered.) I carried a large brass altar cross and a metal ammo box with small hymnals and communion wafers along with a bottle of wine. Unexploded and semi-cooked-off rounds were scattered everywhere—twisted pieces of brass, a mess of fleshette darts.[453] In some areas, there

---

[447] LSU is Logistic Supply Unit where C-rations and sandbags were stowed.
[448] 3rd Platoon, C Company, 3rd Medical Battalion, the base triage from which those wounded were evacuated by helicopters which landed on a spur of the airstrip nearby. There was also a Regimental Aid Station (RAS) and the 1/26 BAS (battalion aid station) located within the combat base.
[449] POL – Petroleum Oil Lubricants, the area containing drums of tar used in the refurbishing of the airstrip, JP4 fuel, and other petroleum items.
[450] Cf. the famous line, "Stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage." (In the poem by Richard Lovelace, 1618-1658, "To Althea, From Prison"). One might be imprisoned in ignorance, fear, superstition, prejudice, toxic relationships, etc.
[451] CS – tear gas. The powder was for dispensers that might be emplaced against enemy positions or on friendly positions to discourage assault by enemy troops.
[452] Ammunition Supply Point, where rounds of munitions were stowed in berms and bunkers.
[453] Fleshette darts were contained in a special 106 mm recoilless rifle round which might be set on muzzle action and spew 9,000 of these small darts, about an inch long. Some rounds of the 90 mm tank round were also filled with them. I picked up a handful of these and fashioned a cross made from them on my helmet cover. One group of fleshettes was in a circular package about three inches in diameter. I sent this home along with various pieces of twisted pieces of 105 mm artillery, and wasn't an area six inches square that didn't have a tail fin, a part of a mortar or 105 round, 4.2 round, bits of cylindrical pieces from a 90 mm canister tank round, rings holding bundles of fleshettes from a 106 mm beehive round or some other ordnance. It was scattered all over the ground.[454]. Most of the plywood hardback hooches had collapsed. The regimental mess hooch was burnt and the walls of the PX and Post Office hooches were a shambles. All the recon tents and hardbacks, being in the center of the base and sandwiched between the regimental COC[455] and the airstrip, were demolished, but there were no casualties; all had reached the safety of trenches in time.

As I walked towards our battalion COC on the east side of the base, tears from tear gas powder lingering in the air brought tears, and the words of Isaiah 24.1, 3, 19-20 came to mind: "Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty and maketh it waste. And turneth it upside down and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof. ... The earth is utterly emptied, and clean despoiled. ... The earth is broken, broken down. The earth is crumbled in pieces. The earth trembles and totters. The earth reels to and fro like a drunken man."

Our 1/26 CP[456] mess building was smoking; it had been hit (I later heard) by three direct hits. At our 1/26 COC, a large log had fallen down in the S-3 section. One Marine attempted to saw a ten-inch diameter log with the very small "bush saw" from a survival kit! A large quantity of C-4 explosives in the blazing ASP had detonated and the shock waves had cracked the timbers. Fortunately, there were no casualties.

Rounds from the ASP adjacent the COC continued to cook off. Some Marines said a Marine was trapped in a collapsed bunker in the middle of the ASP, so I went to help dig him out. We had to hit the deck several times from rounds that continued to cook off and I helped clear away some of the rubble. We all were aware we could be killed at any time, but by now I was also aware that I was numb and on automatic; we just continued.

I continued walking about the entire base. The 1/26 H&S office Marines had sought refuge in a small bunker which had no top, but everyone was OK. A 105 mm round had penetrated through their bunker walls and exploded just outside the bunker, but no one received a scratch. One of the Marines from the company offices had dashed out of his office bare-ass naked with only a flak jacket when the rounds first impacted. Those observing said it was humorous to see his bare ass wiggling to get deeper in a shallow trench as he attempted to get lower and lower.

KHE SANH COMBAT BASE. Official USMC photo A192624
Photographer unknown

I got another whiff of CS but didn't bother donning the gas mask as I aimlessly continued to walk about the base towards the regiment COC. One of the Marines gave me some water to wash out my eyes. The 1/26 BAS[457] had taken a few hits, and 3rd Engineers and "A" Battery is OK. One of the Marines from the "A" Battery said that the "C" Battery on the east side of the base near the ASP had been completely knocked out[458]. "P" ("Provisional") Battery of 155s had just relocated from the "C" Battery area to the western side of the base last week, and was OK.

---

the package, when it arrived, had a note from the postal authorities that read "area clearing device removed." The circular "package" of fleshettes had been removed.

[454] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, 1971, p. 811.

[455] Command Operations Center, the Command Post of the unit.

[456] Command Post

[457] Battalion Aid Station.

[458] Actually, the three tubes of "C" Battery (the other three tubes being on Hill 881S), continued to fire throughout the attack. Gun #5 developed a failed recoil mechanism. Following the attack, Guns #1 and #2 displaced to "A" Battery on the west side of the combat base and two days later, on 23 January, returned to their original location after it had been cleared of extensive, unexploded ordnance, joined with the newly-arrived "B" Battery.

"D" Company, 1/26, in the middle of the base, (the "Ponderosa" area) was moving out to reinforce Khe Sanh village CAC OSCAR and the District Headquarters. I wanted desperately to accompany them and asked, but 1/Lt Walter F. Chapman, the Company XO (and son of the Commandant of the Marine Corps) smiled at me and simply said, "No."

SHRAPNELDAMAGE AT KHE SANH
Official USMC photo A190181 by Hale 01 Mar 1968

As I continued walking down the lines, all seemed OK except for one Marine I saw on a stretcher. The skin covering his abdomen was missing leaving his intestines in plain sight. I wondered why no one had put a wet cloth over them—something I seemed to recall from Boy Scouts first aid, but didn't move. (I later realized I was frozen in numbness, perhaps shock; to my lasting guilt, I didn't run to comfort him. My life had narrowed). One Marine mentioned he had been on a LP[459] and had returned when the attack started. He forgot to tell those on the line they were returning, and barely avoided being hit by friendly fire.

In an effort to move casualties to a safer place while awaiting helicopter transportation to Phu Bai, eight wounded men were brought into my bunker. One was Captain Norman J. Jaspers, Jr., the CO of K/3/26 on Hill 861 who said that were it not for the "ring of steel" artillery supporting them, they would definitely been overrun. Their Company CP bunker took two direct hits. The 106 mm plus all its ammunition, one of two on the hill, was hit. Enemy snipers were inside the wires and shot several Marines. The Marines rallied and repelled them, retaining control of the hill. The Captain said, "They are all heroes." One of the Marines had WP[460] wounds, his whole face showing a sheen of copper.[461] His hands were bandaged, so I helped him eat some cookies I had received from home, placing them in his mouth like I would place communion wafers in worship, a sacramental eating communicating human caring. One man had a leg wound and passed out. The Captain lay on the deck with shrapnel in his leg. Then they were all medevaced.

By 1400 I was completely exhausted and ate part of a boned turkey C-ration and a can of fruit cocktail sent from home. News reporters began to arrive and HM2 Bernet of C Med expressed anger that helicopters which should have been used to evacuate wounded were being used to transport news reporters.

Seabee bulldozers were turning over dirt on the burning sandbags of LSU. Some of the Marines from CAP OSCAR-3 just outside the base arrived. At the recon area, one of the Lieutenants told me that he had gone to a bunker to check on the welfare of the Marines, but it was empty. It alone, of all the recon bunkers, had taken a direct hit and collapsed.

I walked back to the 1/26 COC bunker to report my activities and observations to our battalion CO, LtCol James B. Wilkinson[462], who suggested I remain at C Med and mentioned that "D" Company spotted a battalion-sized NVA unit in the open just north of Route 9 and east of Khe Sanh village and immediately returned.

*

NARROWED LIFE

For those who found themselves at Khe Sanh, Vietnam, experience of the battlefield became one of a gradual narrowing of life. All felt the effects of being hemmed in, cut-off, isolated, and pressured (compressed, narrowed, squeezed, confined, or choked), and helpless (having less options to act).[463]

Situated in a mountainous area, the main combat base and several outlying, detached outposts, Khe Sanh's remote location near the Laotian border and just under the Demilitarized Zone, engendered a sense of isolation and being cut-off. A two-lane, mostly dirt road, Route 9, contained some 31 old bridges and numerous possible ambush sites. Indeed, on 21 July

---

[459] Listening Post
[460] White Phosphorus
[461] Copper sulfate ($CuSO_4$) is applied on white phosphorus burns to stop burning due to contact with air.
[462] Commanding Officer of First Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment.
[463] This was also true of Rules of Engagement which restricted actions. For example, if a patrol received sniper fired from a build-up area, they were required to radio this information and request permission to fire. By the time permission was given—hours, perhaps even days later—any enemy would have departed.

1967, aggressive patrolling uncovered one such ambush site as 175 mm guns moved towards Khe Sanh.[464] The ambush site, still in preparation (probably to sever the supply route during the coming monsoon season), was detected, and a costly skirmish resulted. Route 9 was declared impassible.

Biblical amounts of monsoon rain—sometimes six inches a day[465]—washed out many of the bridges of Route 9 along with the foundation of the airstrip requiring placement of a crushed rock base and re-laying of the airstrip, closing the airstrip in the Fall of 1967. On 28 July 1967, Captain Johnson, the Commanding Officer of D/1/26, the unit occupying Hill 861, mentioned that most of the trenches and bunkers on that hill had washed out from the rains..[466] Some collapsed bunkers were deadly. A new bunker was being constructed on the combat base for the communications section, and Marines cut down trees near the base for reinforcing timbers instead of procuring treated timbers which were arriving for the construction of FOB-3. They heaped hundreds of sandbags on the roof, made heavier by the rains. Those constructing it were "short-timers" from A/1/26, Relieved of patrolling in the miserable cold on the muddy and slippery hills, they were due to return home shortly. It was early in the morning on Sunday, 17 September 1967:

> "I put on the new rain gear–coat and trousers, and the wide-brimmed rain cover. It was 0745 and it was raining and had been raining all night.
>
> "Just as I neared the Triage tent of "C" Med, an ambulance pulled up with Doctor DeMaagd, our 1/26 Battalion Surgeon. I helped carry one of the men into the triage [PFC Omar David Witmer, Jr.]. Blood was all over, coming out of his nose and mouth. He was unconscious. I helped cut off his rain gear, shirt and flak jacket. The doctor put a large tube into his chest cavity to drain blood from internal bleeding and permit him to breathe easier. They then inserted a tube into his neck. It all seemed so grotesque. Another Marine in very bad condition but conscious and in much pain, desperately pleading to have his head elevated to he could breathe, was brought into the tent. After they finished with the first man, they cut a hole in his chest cavity and he screamed in intense pain, but it drained the blood. Then they brought in others, not in such critical condition–only broken legs and arms. There were twelve in all, all from "A" Co of 1/26, all short-timers and therefore not on the operation in the bush. They all had eaten breakfast and were sitting in the new regimental communications bunker they had been building near our 1/26 COC. The bunker suddenly collapsed, not giving them time to escape and they became pinned down under the heavy logs loaded down with heavy, rain-soaked sandbags and pierced steel air matting. One of the men was our potential bugler, McClure; another man was the one who had received the shrapnel wound on 881 while watching the air strikes. Other than the two serious casualties, all complained of back pains, spines, and their legs."[467]

Helicopters transferred personnel, brought mail, and evacuated casualties while airdrops delivered heavy timbers and equipment to construct a new Special Forces camp at Lang Vei and a Forward Operations Base for Top Secret operations into nearby Laos.

Meanwhile, Marines at Khe Sanh daily patrolled through elephant grass higher than a man and bamboo thickets like so many rods of steel, up and down sharp slopes of hills muddied from the rains, through raging rivers (in which several Marines drowned),[468] and dense vegetation which shrouded possible lurking enemy soldiers who might be only a few feet away, undetected. Movement of patrols involved a narrowing, harrowing—experience.

Loss of air support due to fog and rain also resulted in weeks without mail and the sense of being cut-off from family and friends, and when mail finally did arrive, some received "Dear John" letters or letters relaying information of situations at home—a father beating a mother or the children, siblings using drugs or having trouble with "the law," desperate financial situations, death of a close relative (and not being able to travel home). Being literally half-way around the world, not receiving mail narrowed life for many.

---

[464] Moved from Camp J.J. Carroll, the 175s perhaps were being moved to Khe Sanh before the monsoon season which would have made Route 9 impassible in order to support soldiers from the FOB-3 base which was to be constructed in November, 1967, or perhaps the 175s were being moved to support a much larger force as part of Operation EL PASO which was planned to jump off from Khe Sanh and move along Route 9 into Laos to sever the Ho Chi Minh Trail. (For information on EL PASO, see Collins, John M., Military Geography for Professionals and the Public, Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1998, Chapter 12, "Operation Plan EL PASO," pp. 367-384. EL PASO was shelved due to the approach of NVA units in December, 1967, to lay siege to Khe Sanh. A later operation, LAM SON 719, was launched in early 1971.)

[465] The regimental S-2, Major Harper L. Bohr, Jr., reported six inches fell from noon 16 September to noon 17 September 1967. [Stubbe, Ray William, Autobiography, Part 7, Khe Sanh, Vietnam, before the Siege, p. 155.

[466] Stubbe, Ray William, Autobiography, Part 7, Khe Sanh before the Siege, p. 66.

[467] Stubbe, Ray William, Autobiography, Part 7, Khe Sanh before the Siege, pp. 154-155. The collapse occurred at 0745. Witmer was a married, 20 year-old. One other Marine, PFC Ronald Olin McClung, died of wounds from the collapsed bunker. [Stubbe, Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, pp. 94-95].

[468] PFC Omar David Witmer, Jr. (A/1/26 on 17 Sep 1967) and ,LCPL Marion Lee Meggs (B/3rd Recon on 16 Nov 1967).

MARINES AT KHE SANH TEMPORARILY TAKING SHELTER DURING SIEGE
Official USMC photo A190640. Date and photographer unknown

When the siege battle began, the approximately 6,000 American defenders[469] suddenly found themselves surrounded by some 40,000 well-trained and battle-experienced troops of the North Vietnamese Army (PAVN), one division of which (the 304th) had fought at Dien Bien Phu. Soon, a strangling network of trenches appeared like a clutching hand grasping to squeeze the combat base, while hundreds of incoming rockets, artillery rounds, mortars and recoilless rifle rounds exploded on the base. Although unintimidated and continuing their daily work in the open, moving supplies, laying communication lines, firing artillery from open parapets, checking on the welfare of the men and bringing them supplies, moving to and from briefings; they temporarily dashed to bunkers, trenches, and road culverts, but quickly re-emerged as soon as incoming ceased. After all, most were about 20 years old and lived as though they were invulnerable! Most were as oblivious of the very real probability of death from incoming as most " back in the world" are when leaving their garages to drive their cars are of possible accidents. Five days into the siege, after the entire base appeared as though a hurricane had destroyed it, and with daily and heavy bombardment, I decided I needed to spice up my C-rations with an onion after noticing some of the Marines of the recon unit had onions and there were beaucoup in a small hooch behind the regimental mess. So I crawled through the barbed wire surrounding the area where there is no trench for cover. It is in the center of the base, across from the regimental COC, the impact zone for most of the incoming. The door of the hooch was locked, but part of the wall was blown away, so I crawled in and grabbed a few onions to season my C-rations. Nobody here thinks, "What if a round were to come in?" If we did, nothing would get done! As it is, we all just do our work as normal, perhaps a bit more cautiously and moving a bit faster.[470]

Bunkers, which became a comforting, warm refuge, a sort of "womb" (even occasionally referred to as such!), sometimes became a tomb, which collapsed and were a target for enemy gunners. Two excerpts from my daily diary tell te story of the 106 mm recoilless rifle bunker on the perimeter near "C" Med.:

Wednesday, 07 February 1968

As I walked out of my bunker this morning, a crater about two feet deep and four feet wide just outside a newly-constructed wall of sandbags guarding the entrance to my bunker from blast silently shouted a reminder that life here was like walking through a mine field: at any moment, I would suddenly die without warning. I had passed two immense craters on the base in which I could stand with my head beneath its circumference. There was no safe place at Khe Sanh. Even the new regimental bunker being constructed took a direct hit just before it was to be occupied, totally destroying it.

Moving a few more feet, I met the Vietnamese interpreter of the Interrogator-Translator Team who told me that the Army Special Forces camp at Lang Vei had just been overrun by tanks. It was the first use of tanks by the enemy in Vietnam. "That place was built to take a whole regiment," he said.–" Perhaps they're on their way here," he added.

---

[469] Manning level as the Siege began: 244 USMC officers and 5528 Marine enlisted, 21 Navy officers and 207 Navy enlisted, 2 Army officers and 28 Army enlisted, 1 Air Force Officer and 12 Air Force enlisted, for a total of 5785. [26 Mar 222120H/Jan68 to CG, 3rd MarDiv] This does not include those at the Army FOB-3 appended to the combat base, those in the District Headquarters in Khe Sanh village (including CAC OSCAR) or those at the Special Force Camp at Lang Vei.. Manning as of 16 Feb: USMC (153 off/3039 enl), USN (10 off/188 enl), USA (1 off/19 enl), USAF (5 off/24 enl). Manning as of 16 Apr provides both FOB-3 and 37th ARVN Bn (CAC (1 off/30 enl, FOB-3: USMC 1 off/31 enl), USA (20off/105 enl), ARVN (2 off/455 enl); Stubbe, Ray W., Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed , 2008, p. 196].

[470] Stubbe, Ray William, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 07 Oct 1971, p. 867.

Khe Sanh Combat Base had been on Red Alert since just after midnight and we received an abnormally large amount of incoming. The majority landed in areas of 1/26 and 3/26. This and deteriorating weather, including rain, precluded assembly of reinforcements for Lang Vei. Visibility was less than half a mile. Enemy shelling this morning was so intense that by first light, the condition of the runway indicated that only light aircraft could land.

By afternoon, I decided to stay overnight on the perimeter lines in a nearby bunker that housed a 106 mm recoilless rifle squad. I certainly didn't want to be alone in a desperate situation. I wasn't the only one, of course; frequently I saw Marines here hugging each other during shrieks of rockets and deafening explosions of artillery.

As I walked the short distance from my bunker to the bunker housing the 106 crew, I noticed one Marine from that crew in the trench reading from a small prayer book I'd previously distributed to the troops. Their bunker presented all the warmth, quiet, and security of a womb. Obviously, the safest place was out in the trench-lines where only a direct hit killed. Above-ground bunkers, on the other hand were a large, visible target. A hit could collapse the overhead, crushing its occupants. A round which penetrated and exploded inside instantly killed all.

The base went on Red Alert at 0121 in the morning, meaning 100% manning of the perimeter, not the 50% we had maintained. I awoke at about 0200 as one Marine after another came and went, heating up some coffee or cocoa or eating a C-ration, just to reenter the light and warmth and closeness to human flesh of that womb.. The Marines started playing a small 45 RPM phonograph with the song, "I Heard it on the Grapevine," by Credence Clearwater, a nervous, jumpy song that seemed to resonate in their nervous movement in and out of the bunker and the trench. Maybe the song should have been worded, "I heard it on the PC-25 radio! The tanks are coming!" No one got any sleep. I listened to their dreams, shared their thoughts, and heard their fears.

Gary Thorpe, one of the Marines in this group was on his second Vietnam tour. During his first tour, he fired a 106 recoilless rifle in support of a squad of Marines that had been ambushed and was pinned down. Close to the ambush site on the slope of the hill there was a shallow cave into which the surviving Marines had managed to scramble. From there they desperately radioed for fire support. The enemy soldiers were almost at the mouth of the cave, lobbing grenades and firing almost directly into it when he was given the order to fire. He saw his first round took out the attacking NVA. His second round was aimed at NVA approaching the other side. Instead it went directly into the cave, killing all the Marine defenders. Gary murmured that since then he just wanted to die.

Another Marine in the bunker, Mike McKeever, had played high school football and basketball and was active in his church as an altar boy and sang in the choir. He was an Eagle Scout. His father had served as a Marine in Korea. His dream was to become a Marine Corps combat photographer.

Friday, 23 February 1968

Death's nearness was felt each day, actually many times a day. While sitting on my bed eating my one allotted C-ration for the day, called "Ham with Water Added and Eggs Chopped, Canned"–(I'm sure civilian restaurants couldn't possibly beat the DOD in creative food descriptions!), a sudden barrage of heavy arty struck us and a violent explosion shook my bunker. It sounded as though the round had stuck in the outer wall and I immediately thought of a delayed fuse that would soon explode the entire bunker. From 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., we received 1307 rounds, breaking the record for one day of incoming in Vietnam. Our base was only about half a square mile in area, and the devastation included 8 men killed, 38 wounded (19 evacuated).

One round struck the nearby 106 mm recoilless rifle bunker where I had slept a couple weeks earlier. The exposed long barrel of the gun was undamaged. Several Corpsmen, Walt Driscoll, the Catholic Chaplain, and I dashed to that bunker, and a "Crackerbox" (ambulance) somehow made it there also. We carried out the four dead Marines that manned that bunker. The one I carried one across my shoulders had no head, only strings of flesh dangling out of a cavity where his neck had been. We searched, but were unable to locate his head.

When I returned to my bunker that evening to sleep, I noticed that the wall of aluminum air-matting sheets held in place with metal engineering stakes was bend inwards, indicating that a round was embedded in the dirt wall. I called EOD (Explosive Ordnance Disposal) and was told it was safe to sleep and that they'd be out in the morning to check it. I'm sure they just didn't want to venture out at night, and of course, no one could use flashlights at night anyway.

I fell asleep on my rack next to the bulging wall with an unexploded round probably embedded in it. Once we accepted the fact there was no safe place at Khe Sanh, paralyzing fears evaporated like the usual morning fog that shrouded us, and we lived for another day, always ready to share and care for each other.

26th MARINES COC BUNKER – 14 April 1968
Photo by Ray W. Stubbe

Earlier on Friday, 23 February, I visited the COC of regiment, located in the center of the combat base. It's an old concrete bunker from the days when this was a small Special Forces camp. Everyone here refers to these concrete bunkers as the "old French bunkers" but they are actually only a few years old.[471] I'd visited the Marine COC earlier (23 July 1967). The concrete opening led to descending stairs which made a few turns with steps varying in length from the normal foot or so to one stair that was over four feet long, and then suddenly dropped down to the next stair, accompanied by a sudden drop in the concrete overhead. If one didn't know it was there and duck, he'd get beamed. To the left was the regimental switchboard. Another turn to the right led to a small room where the switchboard had originally been located followed by a long corridor. To the left of the corridor was a maze ending in a room, the residence of the air officer and to the far right was the main COC with a large map on the wall opposite the entrance and walls filled with counters of telephones and radio operators along the other walls. To the left was a small opening to the adjacent room where the S-3 and regimental CO and XO and others could be briefed and current operations plotted on a large map. Going to the adjacent room, a little more crowded, one came upon the artillery and air sections, and then a small set of stairs to another room, the working space of the regiment S-2 and a very large map showing areas deep into Laos along the wall to the left and with maps directly ahead of the Montagnard tribal boundaries and other maps. The area of the S-2 was "L"-shaped with a room in the center containing an array of new and old maps and other materials. To enter the S-2 hooch, one again must duck or knock one's head on the concrete overhead—something I did several times in late 1967 when visiting the COC.[472].

As I visited with Major Jerry Hudson, the S-2 of regiment in the COC of regiment a Marine brought in a piece of shrapnel. Maj Hudson mentioned he is interested in collecting shrapnel to determine what we are receiving. He said he walks about the area placing a stick in the center of the crater (where the fuse buries itself) to determine the possible azimuth from which it was fired. Incoming for today totaled 1313 rounds.[473] Men no longer desire to leave Khe Sanh on R&R since that would involve going to the airstrip, a place of death.[474] On 23 January, along with ammunition, 4,000 pounds of body bags were flown into Khe Sanh Combat Base.[475] 200,000 pounds of ordnance were flown into Khe Sanh on 23 January. News accounts emphasize that at Khe Sanh, we are now facing "the largest and best-equipped military force that North Vietnam has ever concentrated on a single battleground."[476]

---

[471] The Khe Sanh Special Forces Camp was constructed in late 1964 to early 1965. [Stubbe, Pebbles in My Boots, Vol. 2, 2011, pp. 6 & 11]. After Marine battalion 1/3 arrived in late 1966, the Special Forces Camp at Khe Sanh was moved 19-25 December 1966 to Lang Vei. The move was assumed to be temporary and the Marines were ordered to maintain the buildings at the Special Forces camp, including underground concrete living quarters, underground concrete Tigerhound quarters, underground III MAF CIC [Combined Intelligence Center], underground concrete communications bunker, mortar pits inside the perimeter, 3 underground timber CIDG corner living bunkers, CIDG cook house, and a CIDG supply bunker with a concrete floor. [CO CO C 5th SFGA DaNang 180900Z/Dec66, Movement of Khe Sanh CIDG Camp to Lang Vei, and III MAF COC 250251Z/Dec66 in III MAF COC Journal and File #135 and 139].

[472] Stubbe, Ray W., Autobiography, Part 7, Khe Sanh Before the Siege., p. 43, entry for Sunday, 23 July 1967.

[473] 476 of arty, 14 of 60 mm, 372 of 82 mm, 4 of 120, 437 of 122 mm rockets, 5 of recoilless rifle, total: 1313, but LtCol James B. Wilkinson reported (from the regimental briefing) a total of 1407 rounds at the 1/26 staff and officer brief on Sat, 24 Feb 1968. Later in the afternoon, Major David Smith, CO of FOB-3, said we received over 1700 rounds if one also counts the rounds that landed in FOB-3. [Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 Apr 1970, p. 701].

[474] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 Apr 1970, p. 700.

[475] National Observer, 26 Feb 68, p. 4, in chronology of Khe Sanh battle.

[476] Time magazine 91:5 (02 Feb 1968), pp. 21*f*. (Note: news magazines are dated one week ahead of issue date). [Noted in Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 1971, p. 887].

The words of Psalm 18 provided words to contain our experience: "The cords of Sheol entangled me; the snares of death confronted me."[477] Collapsed bunkers and trenches, an almost daily experience, carried a deeper significance, a profound sense of narrowing life, our "cords" and "snares!" Everything about Khe Sanh implied this reality: the strangling by tens of thousands of surrounding enemy troops, mail delayed due to its lower priority—along with Red Cross routine priority messages of welfare reports and an attempt to limit aircraft from landing on an exposed, deadly airstrip pounded by incoming, daily surrounded by death and danger—sights of grotesque wounds, suffocating tear gas from the cooking-off ammo dump. This, and so much more, became our combat Sitz-im-Leben.[478]. In years following, aftershocks of battle continued. For those who fight in a battle, it never ends. It is "endless night."[479] You may take a man from a battlefield, but you cannot take the battlefield out of the man. The experience of battle became like a scratch on a LP record that constantly replays the same snippet of music until someone lifts the needle and playing arm to continue the song of life. Memories, nightmares, and constant flashbacks continue to narrow life. A mood or emotional outburst or sudden action activated by a current experience might involve an awakening of a latent, unexpressed (at the time) emotional reaction to a similar situation experienced during battle. The narrowed life of survivors continues to isolate. Battle is the experience of the narrowed life, a stenosis of the soul. We at Khe Sanh were being strangled, choked like those times breathing ceases as when overcome by intense emotion such as fear or wonder. For the people of the Old Testament, the soul was localized in the throat,[480]

*

ANCIENT WORDS PACKAGED OUR EXPERIENCE

NARROWED LIFE

Words and concepts, like boats carrying people, carry and package experiences so they might be contained, named, identified, known, examined, and handled. Dangerously destructive realities become safe to touch and handle, like handling radioactive radium in a lead container, electric wires with lethal current having sufficient insulating cover, and rubber gloves on hands working in hot water. Naming something gives us control over it, as Adam named the creatures[481] or the incident where Jacob wrestled with the angel at the Jabbok.[482]

The Hebrew word for "trouble" (sar, צָרַר) derives from an Akkadian word meaning "to wrap," and is related to the Arabic word sara, "tie up, bind."[483] The lexicon gives the following meanings of the verb: (1) bind up, tie up, be restricted, narrow, scant, cramped; (2) suffer distress; (3) show hostility towards, vex; (4) make a rival; (5) be sharp, sharp-edged.[484] The term suggests "spatial narrowness," "having no space."[485] As a noun, the Hebrew word is translated as "distress," or "trouble," as in the following examples: "You gave me room when I was in distress."[486] "Then they cried to the LORD in their trouble and he delivered them from their distress.[487] "In my distress, I called upon the LORD,; to my God I cried for help."[488] "Though I walk in the midst of trouble, you preserve me against the wrath of my enemies; you stretch out your hand, and your right hand

---

[477] Ps 18.5, ESV.

[478] Situation in life, a German term used by Biblical scholars.

[479] From William Blake's poem, "Auguries of Innocence:" "Every; Night and every Morn / Some to Misery are Born / every Morn and Every Night / Some are Born to sweet delight / Some are Born to sweet delight / Some are Born to Endless Night."

[480] The throat is the organ through which nourishment is received [Ps. 107.5, 9]. It "..is the seat of all the tumultuous longing and desire, seeking and yearning of humanity (Ps. 24.4, 35.25, 42.-2) and represents the seat and the process of spiritual feelings and inner conditions." [Kraus, Hans-Joachim, Theology of the Psalms. Trans. Keith Crim. Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1986, p. 145].

[481] Gen 2.19.

[482] Gen. 32.22-31. Jacob wrestled all day. The angel gives Jacob a new name, "Israel." Jacob asks the angel for his name, but instead of giving the name, the angel blesses Jacob. "..ancients did not consider the name as simply sound and smoke. On the contrary, for them the name was closely linked with its bearer .. containing something of the character of the one who bore it." [von Rad, Gerhard, Genesis, A Commentary (Old Testament Library). Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1961, p. 316]. In giving his name, Jacob reveals his whole nature, for the name "Jacob" designates him as a cheat; he is now given a new name of honor.

[483] Fabry, H.-J., "צר ," in Botterweck, G. Joahnnes, Ringgren, Helmer, and Fabry, Heinz Josef, Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament. Trans.. Douglas W. Stott. Grand Rapids, Mich.: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 2003, Vol. 12, p. 455.

[484] Brown, Francis, Driver, S.R., and Briggs, Charles A., A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament with an Appendix containing the biblical Aramaic based on the Lexicon of William Gesenius. Trans. Edward Robinson. Oxford: At the Clarendon Press, 1959.], pp. 864-866.

[485] Fabry, op. cit.., p. 456.

[486] Ps 4.2[1].

[487] Ps. 107.6, 13, 19, 28.

[488] Ps 18.6.

delivers me."[489] "..you have been to me a fortress and a refuge in the day of distress."[490] As an adjective, the term is translated "narrow": "Surely your waste and your desolate places and your devasted land—surely now you will be too narrow for your inhabitants.."[491] "The children of our bereavement will yet say in your ears: 'The place is too narrow for me, make room for me to dwell in.'"[492] "Now the sons of the prophets complain to Elisha, 'See, the place where we dwell under your charge is too small for us.'"[493] When Balaam was sent to curse the people of Israel, an angel of the Lord stood in the way, blocking his path and Balaam's donkey stopped moving: "Then the angel of the LORD went ahead and stood in a narrow place, where there was no way to turn either to the right of to the left."[494]

Motivated by the intensity of incoming rounds which, after a few days, included heavy artillery, Marines of the recon unit located in the center of the combat base dug deeper and deeper at Khe Sanh, but unfortunately in their desperate zeal, they dug in a straight line so that if a round were to land in the trench, the force of blast as well as shrapnel would strike those inside the trench. To minimize casualties, they dug "roll-outs" at the bottom and into the sides of the trench into which they could roll during incoming. With exploding rounds, the friable laterite soil crumbled into little pieces. Those inside were buried alive. Kevin Macaulay, one of the recon Marines, vividly remembers one such event. On 04 March 1968:

> "I ran forward and a section of the trench line wall directly above where these two fellows were improving the roll-outs had collapsed, so about seven feet of dirt four foot wide had fallen over the top of them, and as it had fallen, it had crumbled into small pieces. We had two Marines buried under about five or six feet of crumbled-up dirt. ... I immediately dropped down to my knees and started moving as much dirt as I could with my hands. A crowd formed around us. We dug and we dug, and after about five minutes, I started to tire and a fellow by the name of [PFC Rufus] Daigle took over, and after a couple of minutes, he started to tire, so I relieved him. [Five minutes later] ... we uncovered [PFC Edward L.] Stevens' left shoulder and with the entrenching tool, I finally pulled the dirt off the top of him, and I lifted his head and pulled his head back. He was buried up to his neck at that point, and I could see that he was still breathing. I guess the fact that his head was face-down, he had formed a pocket of air that he was still able to breathe. He was semi-conscious at the time, and as we pulled the dirt off his fact, one of the corpsmen handed me an ambu-bag and I put it over his mouth and gave two quick shoves and it forced air into his lungs and I brought him around. He immediately started to cry and scream and try to extricate himself from the dirt that he was surrounded by, but couldn't because his arms were still bent. And we calmed him down."[495]

Stevens committed suicide 29 June 1976.

The Hebrew word for "distress" and "trouble" with a root meaning of "narrow" or a "small" space" is also reflected in the Greek word for "necessity," "force," "constraint," ἀνάγκη (a-NAG'-kay) which conveys a root meaning of "narrowness." Plato explains the meaning:

> " ἀνάγκη (compulsion)..... is likened to walking through ravines (ἄγκη), because they are hard to traverse, rough, and rugged, and retard motion; the word ἀναγκαῖον may, then, originate in a comparison with progress through a ravine."[496]

Plato treats "necessity" as a divine principle in the center of the world, created through the combined work of necessity and mind.[497] In his myth of the hereafter,[498] ἀνάγκη is seated in the heart of the world with his three daughters, the Fates, Clotho, Lacesis, and Atropos.[499]

---

[489] Ps 138.7.
[490] Ps 59.16. Also, Pss 10.1, 25.17 & 22, 32.7, 34.17, 37.39, 60.15, 86.7, 90.11-12, 70.20, 107.1, 108.13, 119.143, 120.1, Job 15.23b, Isa 26.16.
[491] Isa. 49.19.
[492] Isa. 49.20.
[493] 2 Kings 6.1.
[494] Num 22.26.
[495] Taped comments of Kevin C. Macaulay to Ray William Stubbe, 22 August 1984 (Khe Sanh microfilm collection, pp. 2448-2450) also mentioned in Kevin C. Macaulay letter to his parents, 05 March 1968 (Khe Sanh microfilm collection pp. 4447-4450).
[496] Plato: Cratylus 420E, in Fowler, H.H.: Plato with an English Translation, Cambridge, Mass.:" Harvard University Press (Loeb Classical Library, No. 167), 1926, pp. 125-127. (ἀπείκασται δὲ τῇ κατὰ τὰ ἄγκη πορεία ὅτι δύσπορα καὶ τραχέα καὶ λάσια ὄντα ἴσχει τοῦ ἰέναι) [497] Plato, Timaeus 48a). Cf also Plato's myth of the "hereafter" in Republic X.616ff.
[498] Plato, Republic X.614-619,
[499] In Green myth, Clotho is trhe fate who spins the thread of life, Lachesis determines its length, and Atropos cuts the thread. In Plato's myth, Clotho sings the things that are, Lachesis the things that were, and Atropos the things that are to be.

Aristotle uses the word ἀνάγκη to refer to "all that which ... constricts and opposes life."[500]

Thucydides used ἀνάγκη to explain the causes of the Peloponnesian War,[501] where it is translated "necessity." Thucydides explains that a 30-year truce was broken and war erupted because there were no other alternatives; options had "narrowed." (The unstated implication might be: to avoid war, provide options; think outside boxed-in, narrowing reality.) "The truest explanation, although it has been the least often advanced, I believe to have been the growth of the Athenians to greatness, which brought fear to the Lacedaemonians and forced them to war."[502] "Growth and fear combine to create the necessity of war."[503] War results when there are no viable alternative courses since "..the only alternatives involve unacceptable consequences such as death, defeat, surrender, or the like... To avoid war, the Athenians would have had to relinquish their imperial rule and the Spartans would have had to remain indifferent to Athenian expansion. Neither for Athens nor for Sparta would these alternatives have been acceptable or even possible; the war was inevitable, because both Athenians and Spartans realized that it was"[504] The Athenians developed into a superior naval power only because attacking Persians had compelled them to do so following a great disaster in Sicily.[505] The Athenian argument: "In the case of the divine it is our opinion and in the case of the humans our clear conviction that by a constraint inherent in nature they rule wherever they have the power. This is not a law we enacted or first used once enacted: it was a reality already when we took it over and it will exist forever when we shall leave it behind. We are applying it in the knowledge that you and anyone else who has attained as much power as we have would do the same."[506] Oswald comments: "The drive to dominate others is here described as a necessary outgrowth of a universal order sanctioned by nature, to which all humans certainly (and the gods probably) are subject, whether they like it or not.."[507] While there are various "necessities" in every human situation, only those recognized as such are operative.[508] Education is necessary to show which are assigned the highest priority.[509] The superior person is the one who knows which constraint is operative.[510]

New Testament Biblical writers use the word ἀνάγκη to refer to "..hindrances to the soul. The main pint in ethical and religious life is to control them and to bring them under the dominion of reason."[511] New Testament thought differs from Greek understanding of the term: "..the situation of constraint does not lie in the natural conditions produced by the dualism of spirit and matter, but in the afflictions and oppressions, divinely caused and interpreted as divine visitations, either of the people or of individuals in the form of persecutions, enmity, subjugation, or sickness. The meaning of ἀνάγκη for the individual Israelite is made clear by [Ps. 106.13-15].[512]

Problems and pains narrow life so that one who suffers, e.g., a headache, infected tooth, a financial crisis or marital issue, might be so consumed by the pain or problem as to be unavailable to acknowledge another person's presence, much less love that person. Pains, difficulties, and problems narrow life.

---

[500] Grundmann, Walter, " ἀναγκάζω, ἀναγςαῖος, ἀνάγκη," in Kittel, Gerhard, ed., Theological Dictionary of the New Testament. Trans. & Ed. Geoffrey W. Bromley, Grand Rapids, Mich.": Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing. Co., 1964, Vol. I, p. 344. Reference is to Aristotle, Metaphysics IV.45.1015ª20 – 1015ᵇ9. (Vide in Aristotle: The Complete Works of Aristotle, Revised Oxford Translation. Ed. Jonathan Barnes. Bollingen Series LXXI.2. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1984, Vol. 2, p. 1603. Aristotle, Metaphysics I – IX. Trans. Hugh Treddenick. Cambridge, Mass: Harvard University Press, 1933. [Loeb Classical Library, No. 9. 271], pp. 222-227 (Metaphysics, Book V, 1015ª20 – 1015ᵇ15)

[501] Fought between Sparta and Athens, 431-404 BC.

[502] Thucydides, History of the Peloponnesian War. Book I, chapter 23, sentence 6 Trans: Charles Foster Smith. (Loeb Classical Library, Thucydides I, No. 108). Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1919, p. 43.

[503] Oswald, Martin, ANAΓKH in Thucydides, American Classical Studies No. 18, Atlanta GA: Scholars Press, 1988, p. 3.

[504] Ibid., p. 19.

[505] Thucydides, op. cit., Book VIII, Chapter 2. (Loeb Classical Library, Thucydides IV, Loeb No. 169, p. 193.)

[506] Oswald, op. cit., p. 42. Reference is to Thucydides, Book V, Chapter 105. (Vide in Loeb Classical Library No. 110, Thucydides III, p. 167).

[507] Ibid. (Reference is to Thucydides, Book V, chapter 105, sentence 2 (Loeb Classical Library No. 110, p. 167.)

[508] Ibid., p. 55.

[509] Ibid., p. 30

[510] Thucydides, op. cit., Book I, Chapter 84, sentence 4.

[511] Grundmann, op. cit., p. 345.

[512] Ibid., pp. 345-346. ("But they soon forgot h is works; they did not wait for his counsel. But they had a wanton craving in the wilderness, and put God to the test in the desert; he gave them what they asked, but sent a wasting disease among them." ESV).

The German word "angst" is a universal condition of being human and comes from an Indo-European stem meaning "painful, tight, painfully constricted."[513] A commentator notes: "When the special relationship between man and his environment is disrupted or uprooted by the operations of inexplicable .. forces which defy understanding and interpretation, primordial Angst is .. revealed."[514] Angst arises when one can do nothing with overwhelming experiences. Angst is "binding necessity—no way out."[515] Angst arises when it is difficult to move because of constrictions and pressures.

Paul Tillich, a popular and influential theologian in the middle of the last century, like those at Khe Sanh during the siege battle, experienced the loss of natural life destroyed by the ravages of war, life in static positions and trenches, in the mud and dirt with constant shelling, continually seeing friends killed and grotesquely wounded, the suffocating, pressed down, squeezed-out life on the battlefields of World War I. At Khe Sanh, more tons of bombs were dropped in the immediate vicinity than in the Pacific war zone of all of World War II.[516] As suddenly as one flicks a light switch off or on, the surrounding landscape dramatically changed from a lush, "Garden of Eden" paradise, full of vegetation of a thousand shades of green and a playground for wild and exotic animals, into a moonscape. It was as though an army of steam shovels had scraped life from earth's surface; the sight was as painful having one's skin flayed. It made one crazy as spring and summer's explosion of life now became winter's bleakness in an inhospitable, deadly setting.

Tillich, while lecturing as a visiting professor at the University of Chicago was interviewed shortly before his death in 1965 by an Air Force chaplain student at the University of Chicago Divinity School to whom Tillich poured out his memories as a young Prussian chaplain in World War I.[517] Pastor Tillich had volunteered on 1 Oct 1914 at the age of 28 to become an Army chaplain and joined his unit, the 4th Artillery Regiment of the 7th Reserve Division, on 11 Oct 1914. He subsequently participated in the most destructive battles of that war (1914-Soisson, 1916-Verdun, and 1916-Somme). The student Air Force chaplain recalls:

> "One of the things that I especially remember was how he was taken by the stark pictures of denuded trees, dead horses, and the destruction of the land by thousands of shell holes that resulted from the massive bombardment preceding the horrendous frontal attack on military positions. ... Tillich saw the destruction of the trees, horses, and land as an expression of the suffering of innocent nature as a result of humanity's estrangement expressed in the massive self-destructiveness of war."[518]

Soon, he no longer thought of death but realized he was "already in death, gripped by its force."[519] At Verdun, there were over 350,000 French casualties and an equal number of German casualties in the opening months and flame throwers and phosgene gas were first employed. In the Battle of the Somme River, British and French casualties exceeded 650,000 and German losses were about 450,000.[520] During these battles, Tillich lived in the trenches with his men. Tillich was forever changed by the battle experiences. One writer notes:

> "..a young Prussian army chaplain with intense blue eyes stands transfixed in the thundering fire-flashes of the German cannons against the rainy night sky. Numbly he looks down at the blood drenched bodies of his closest friends. Too many lay slowly dying on mud-bespattered stretchers, their screams and death moans weaving a spell of grotesque madness ablaze with cannon fire. Several are already dead, the rain making tiny wet exclamation points on their [513] Coe, David C., Angst and the Abyss, The Hermeneutics of Nothingness, American Academy of Religion Academy Series, No. 49, Chico, Ca." Scholars Press, 1985, p. 8. Coe refers to The American Heritage Dictionary, "Angh."

---

[514] Ibid., p. 12.

[515] Ibid., p. 22.

[516] Gen. William W. Momyer, USAF, "Operation NIAGARA," in Trest, Warren A., Khe Sanh (Operation NIAGARA) 22 January - 31 March 1968, CHECO Report, 13 Sep 1968, Supporting Documents, No. 12. Total for Pacific Operating Area, WW II: 32,735 tons; total at Khe Sanh (22 Jan - 29 Feb 68): 53, 380 tons.

[517] Also, he probably suffered PTSD. He rarely referred to his battle experiences and it is probable that most scholars remain unaware of it. Near his death, his wife mentioned that Tillich regularly woke up during sleep in their Manhattan apartment from disturbing dreams with violent twitching and screams. [Archer, Donald, "Paul Tillich as a Military Chaplain." paper presented at the annual meeting of the North American Pal Tillich Society, Boston, November, 1999, referenced in Peters, David W., "A Pluralist in a Foxhole, Chaplain and Theologian Paul Tillich's Encounter with the SWorld Religions," Military Chaplains Association: The Military Chaplain, Vol. 87, No. 1 (Spring, 2013), pp. 22-25.

[518] Ibid.

[519] Ibid. Reference is made to Wilhelm Pauck and Marion Pauck, Paul Tillich: His Life and Thought, New York: Harper & Row, 1976, pp. 40-41. This was also how many felt at Khe Sanh during the siege. In fact, once one has "gone through it" one emerges with a courage that causes one to dash out during incoming to pull in an injured, immobilized man to safety, to continue one's daily work in the open areas, oblivious to possible death—cautious, but not paralyzed in fear. Once one knows death is probable, one is free to live, perhaps characterized by a certain recklessness, oblivious to dangers others might avoid.

[520] Ibid.

closed eyelids. One young officer gazes up at the chaplain's insignia, his mangled body broken like a discarded dime store manikin. A wet cigarette dangles from his lips. One hacking, body-heaving cough and the life-light in his eyes goes out. The chaplain digs his fingernails into his palms and gulps down nausea. The dead, the dying, the red rags on the stretchers where legs and arms should be; the fire-flashes, the cannon's roar, the smoke, the rain and endless mud all swirl in together in a magic madness. With a shudder shaking his being to its very foundations, something changes in the chaplain's blue eyes. Many years later Paul Tillich was to confess that this night at the battle of the Marne "..absolutely transformed me. All my friends were among those dying and dead.'"[521]

Tillich uses the term "ontological anxiety" for angst and uses a spatial metaphor to indicate one of its sources:

"Every being strives to provide and to preserve space for itself. This means above all a physical location—the body, a piece of soil, a home, a city, a country, the world. It also means a social 'space'—a vocation, a sphere of influence, a group, a historical period, a place in remembrance and anticipation, a place within a structure of values and meanings. Not to have space is not to be. Thus in all realms of life striving for space is an ontological necessity.. ... But to be spatial also means to be subject to nonbeing. No finite being can rely on space, for not only must it face losing this or that space because it is a 'pilgrim on earth,' but eventually it must face losing every place it has had or might have had. As the powerful symbol used by Job and the psalmist expresses it: 'Its place knoweth it no more.' There is no necessary relationship between any place and the being which has provided this space for itself. Finitude means having no definite place; it means having to lose every place finally and, with it, to lose being itself. This threat of nonbeing cannot be escaped by means of a flight into time without space. Without space there is neither presence nor a present. ... To have no definite and no final space means ultimate insecurity. To be finite is to be insecure. ... Men create systems of security in order to protect their space. ... As long as it lives, it successfully resists the anxiety of not having a place. It courageously faces the occasions when not having a place becomes an actual threat."[522]

KHE SANH TROT. Official USMC photo A190245 by Haging

It is for this reason that the Hebrew mind could not conceive of a disembodied soul, and Paul asserts (contrary to the Greek teaching of the "immortality of the soul") a new, resurrected body;[523] John writes of a new heaven and a new earth.[524] Life needs a space; living beings require containers.

At Khe Sanh during the siege battle, it soon became apparent there was no safe place, no space for life. This resulted in everyone moving fast, a trot that some referred as the "Khe Sanh shuffle." Everyone knew the location of every nearby bunker. It also resulted in vehicles speeding down the main road, perhaps an attempt to outrun incoming, drivers not consider the additional space through they drove, increased the likelihood of receiving shrapnel. Those on the road were aware they might easily become struck by "incoming vehicles" as well as incoming from enemy rounds, but the rush of adrenalin and energy from the situation made everyone move faster as much as increased heat quickens electrons.

The basic need for safety motivated some to steal (or, as most would say, "procure") bunkering materials, especially the prized sheet of large aluminum airstrip matting and the thick aluminum pallets used by the Air Force to crate material arriving at Khe Sanh. So desperate were those who lived at Khe Sanh that an Air Force Mission Commander wrote in his final report: "Pallets make excellent bunker roofs and it proved almost impossible to keep them from being stolen. We had a 24 hour Marine guard but the thick fog made an excellent cover for midnight requisitions of pallets and chutes."[525]

---

[521] Ibid., pp. 129-130. (Coe references Rollo May, Paulus, Reminiscences of a Friendship, New Yorkj: Harper & Row, 1973, p. 18.

[522] Tillich, Paul, Systematic Theology, Vol. I. Chicago, Illinois: The University of Chicago Press, 1951, pp. 194-195.

[523] 1 Cor 15, especially verses 35-54.

[524] Rev. 21.1

[525] Pollica, SSGT Bruce W., and Rickey, TSGT Joe R., Monograph of 834th Air Division Tactical Airlift Support for Khe Sanh, 21 January – 8 April 1968, Document #25, "Attachment to Mission Commander's Report, Khe Sanh," by "Smith" dated (approx. 21 Feb 1968).

Recalling the early days of February, 1968[526] one Marine Sergeant described the desperation that led to stealing in order to live:

".. we didn't miss a day without getting incoming, and some of the days it was quite healthy barrages, shook up quite a lot of people, and got a lot of wounded out of it, a lot of killed. And the only thing I can really sway is, I can't see the reason we got so many killed because I think something could have been done to get materials in to build better bunkers so he men would actually be a little safer except maybe a direct hit or a delayed fuse round. We built our bunkers first for VT fuses, not for any heavy barrages like we were taking, and it seems like after that, people started getting with it, but you couldn't put more than three or four layers of sand bags on top of a bunker due to the fact that it would cave in on you. We had a case where a bunker did cave in on some men and kill them because they didn't have the reinforcements to hold the sand which weighs quite a bit of weight. So I think something could have been done, got in more runway matting or more materials of some kind, any kind 12 x 12s, anything. As it was, people were stealing from each other so they could live from one day to the next."[527]

Another Marine Sergeant recalls:

" I saw one occasion where a 122 mm rocket went through a bunker which had four layers of sand bags, a row of this portable steel runway matting, and two pallets of this wood-core aluminum pallets that the Air Force uses—the rocket had entirely gone through all this material, and had seriously hurt three of the men inside the bunker. If they had not been wearing their flak jackets, chances they'd all be dead today. Three of them were in serious condition when they were evacuated out of khe Sanh, but they were alive. Materials and the acquisition of them was an extremely thorny problem for a long, long time, and it seems to me, I feel, that we got short-changed in that regard because every time we had tried to get them, it seemed the supply system, for one reason or another, we were unable to get these absolutely necessary materials, and when we finally were getting them, it was almost too late. I'm sure a lot of men lost their lives because they were inadequately protected from shrapnel and the incoming rounds."[528]

On Thursday, 25 January 1968, Chaplain William Hampton arrived at Khe Sanh by helicopter as the new 3/26 battalion chaplain. He and others dashed into my bunker for safety from incoming rounds that always greet landing helicopters. We all sat in silence for some time. We had met at Camp Pendleton, California, when I came on active duty and he reported for a two-week training period. When the incoming paused, we walked towards regiment to pick up his orders. That area of the base had been receiving considerable amounts of incoming and was devoid of life, displaying the words of Jeremiah: "I looked on the earth, and lo, it was waste and void, to the heavens, and they had no light" (The morning fog shrouded us).. " I looked on the mountains, and lo, they were quaking. All the hills moved to and fro .". (Airstrikes on the mountain range just north of us will do that!) .."I looked, and lo, there was no man, all the birds of the air had fled. I looked, and lo the fruitful land was a desert."[529] The Marines in the S-1 shop of Regiment had today put metal airstrip matting over a hole they had dug inside their bunker—a bunker within a bunker. We then arrived at the bunker that was known as "Fort Hester," the large bunker with three stepped walls of sandbags bearing a sign placed there by LCPL Kenneth R. Thompas, with a double entendre:[530] "Home is Where you Dig it." After we picked up his orders, we walked to the western portion of the base, the Red Sector, where the 3/26 CP was located. As we passed the 1/26 BAS, two immense craters on either side of the road which had just missed the 1/26 by no more than ten feet silently shouted to us that there was no safe place at Khe Sanh. We peered at the ominous holes; no one said a word. Nietzsche once wrote something like "If you look into the abyss long enough, the abyss looks into you." When we arrived, the chaplain of 3/26, Roy Swift, told Chaplain Hampton not to return to my bunker to pick up his baggage "that place is too dangerous."[531] I had wondered why Chaplain Swift never visited casualties of his battalion at "C" Med after the base was attacked. Now I knew.

Colonel David E. Lownds, the commander at Khe Sanh, in his debrief[532] at FMFPAC[533] upon leaving Vietnam noted that he had constructed a new bunker to house his command staff. He consulted his engineers for specifications for a bunker that could withstand a 122 mm rocket, and being cautious, doubled the overhead covering . "The day before it was scheduled to [526] During an interview on 15 March 1968.

---

[527] Comments of Sgt. H. E. Stroud, Marine Corps Oral History Tape # 2452.
[528] Comments of Sgt Patrick J. Fitch, Marine Corps Oral History Tape #2498.
[529] Jer 4.23-26.
[530] At the time, the word "dig" had the colloquial meaning if "liking" or "respecting" (as in "I really dig that tune" or "I really dig him.") At the time, of course, we were all digging the earth for our homes.
[531] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 1971, p. 879.
[532] Headquarters, Marine Corps: Oral History Tape #3139.
[533] Fleet Marine Force, Pacific, commanded by a 3-star Lieutenant General (LTGEN Victor Krulak).

be finished, a 152 mm [artillery round] came in and went through both layers and went down in the bunker."[534] There was, indeed, no safe place at Khe Sanh; all of us who were there knew that.

A few excerpts from a diary kept during the siege reflect this experience:

10 February 1968: "I thought of how different things were from when I first arrived at Khe Sanh in July, 1967. I then lived in a tent. Things were bright, warm, dusty, lively. The corpsmen played horse-shoes or shot baskets during the day. I spent most of the time visiting the hills and accompanying platoon-sized infantry patrols throughout the surrounding jungle. I carried a lot of gear then: a large metal box of Bibles and a wooden ammo box with personal gear, and a blanket, cartridge belt, and helmet. All this necessitated a vehicle to carry me to the LSA. I was concerned then for large attendances at worship—the more the better and more glorious. The feeling-tone was freedom like the tent in which I lived: the air, dust, and rats freely moved in and out without hindrance, and I freely moved around the various outposts. There was sunlight in that tent, and I could stand upright. It was a time for feeling buoyant and good

DIGGING TO IMPROVE DEFENSES. Official USMC Photo 190932 by Moore. Date unknown

"Now we live in a bunker, cold and dark, many are subterranean. We withdraw inside because reality outside is lethal.
There are no windows that look within or without. The bunkers become more and more fortified. The atmosphere is foggy fear. Everything in the C Med area is now work on casualties, anxious panic and fearful flight. I carry less and less, only a home visitation private communion set and a few devotional brochures. I am concerned that worship services are small—the smaller the better, the smaller the more intimate. Things now are bleak, deadly, fear-full, frustrating, nauseating, and nervous. Yet, the Presence of God is known, even more powerfully. God's Presence is palpable."[535]

Thursday, 15 February 1968. The recon company at Khe Sanh, about 120 strong, has taken 70 KIA or WIA since 21 January.[536]

Saturday, 17 February 1968. "Convoys of otters from the combat base going to Hill 558 to resupply 2/26 were discontinued due to the enemy situation, and helicopter resupply of our hill outposts is a problem due to enemy antiaircraft fire. A new tactic needs to be developed. C-130s no longer land on the airstrip."[537]

Sunday, 18 February 1968. " Hill 881S took incoming and a Marine is dying. Rain and fog prevented resupply and plans were being made to parachute IV bottles, but abandoned. The man died."[538]

With Hill 881-South taking heavy 120 mm mortar shelling every time helicopters arrived,[539] evacuation of Marines killed proved deadly and the Marines placed the dead in a temporary "body bunker."

> "The body bunker was located between the two machinegun positions on the Second Platoon sector of the hill. It was a bunker that was located between two machinegun bunkers and had been abandoned because of the poor construction. It was narrow and it was too high. The parapet of this bunker just wasn't made properly to house a machinegun. The [534] Also mentioned in Shore, Moyers S., The Battle for Khe Sanh, Washington, D.C.: Historical Division, Headquarters Marine Corps, 1969, p. 57.

---

[535] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 1989, p. 554

[536] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript, 01 Apr 1970, p. 669.

[537] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 Apr 1970, p. 679. Not only the Khe Sanh airstrip, but also Hill 881-South's LZ was too unsafe for normal helicopter operations. Hill 881-S took large amounts of 120 mm mortars,. Other outposts (861, 861-A, 558, and 950) had been obscured by fog during which the NVA emplaced automatic weapons on neighboring peaks. A new tactic called "Supergaggle" was first employed on 24 Feb involving a large armada of aircraft to resupply some 32,000 pounds per hill per day by CH-46D helicopters of HMM-262. The package involved delivery of CS powder, close air support by fixed wing, supporting arms, laying smoke, and dropping of bombs with fuses set at varying times. The missions were hazardous with 3,000 – 4,000-pound external loads dangling beneath the helicopter rocking the aircraft side to side, and the ever-present possibility of mid-air collision. In one mission, without any warning, one flight of two resupply helicopters flew through an Arc Light strike, dodging bombs as they fell..

[538] Ibid., p. 680. The KIA was LCPL Homer Taylor, Jr., of I/3/26. [Stubbe, Ray W., Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, pp. 197-198].

[539] The M28 Soviet mortar can fire 12 – 15 rounds per minute, each round weighs 15.4 KG. Max range 5,700 M, minimum range 460 M.

parapet was located too close to the roof of the bunker, and for this reason, it was abandoned and not used for a machinegun bunker. We had no other facilities or no other bunkers in the trench line in which we put our mortally wounded. And this is what became known to us on the hill as the body bunker. We would stack them up, in some cases, later on, apparently, it did become full. When the chopper would come in, at the time that they would land, we would try to get one or two out at a time, and this often wasn't the case. We couldn't get any out at all, so we stored them in the body bunker. Later, when the body bunker became full, we started stacking them in the area where the water buffalo was, behind the warming tent. And this was a small, flat area of ground they had placed a cargo net in this area, and we would stack them in the cargo net sort of in the fashion that you would stack logs for building a log cabin. We would run three or four bodies in one direction, and three or four or five in the opposite direction, and a helicopter would come in. They would hook up the hook on the rings of the net to the bottom of the helicopter and the bodies were taken down to Khe Sanh that way."[540]

Wednesday, 21 February 1968. "At 1300, I received a phone call from Chaplain Heino on the landline. He wanted to speak with Father Driscoll. I walked to the Father's new bunker being constructed and there was a loud WHOMP! Corpsmen of "C" Med, in the trench, yelled that I should also jump into the trench with them for cover, but I just continued walking leisurely, assuming that all the noise was a "Final Protective Fire" by our own troops. Then came more WHOMPS and I realized that this was incoming. One round landed just where I would have been had Chaplain Heino not called; his call had saved me! I remained in the triage bunker as casualties arrived and then walked to Graves Registration to say prayers for the newly-arrived dead. An entry in their log for 19 January 1968 was number 12-68. Today, the newly-arrived KIA, E-6 P.M. Douglas, was 141-68, meaning that they have processed 129 dead since the siege began. This does not include those who died of wounds after being evacuated, of course.[541]

"It seems that wherever I go, the rounds come in! I have come to know the location of all the bunkers on the base! Usually it is foggy in the early morning and the men are walking about the base doing their various duties, and usually there's no incoming in the morning since the enemy FOs on the mountain range to our north are unable to see anything. Then the sun burns through the fog, the planes arrive, and so does the enemy incoming. And then there are all the wounded and all the dead. We go to our bunkers for a few minutes and then continue our work as normal, maybe walking a little faster, "the Khe Sanh trot" as it is called. The fog then rolls in again and the incoming diminishes, except around 1700H – 1800H when there is frequently an incoming barrage, evidently an attempt by the enemy to catch some of our people eating chow.[542] There are a lot of explosions at night, but I no longer "hear" them unless they are right outside my bunker; it's just part of the ambience."[543]

Thursday 22 February 1968 "Due to all the incoming we've been receiving, it became apparent to me that worship for even a small group for a short period of seven minutes was too dangerous. So I visited with LtCol Wilkinson and said I'd gladly do whatever he desired, but suggested general visitation of the men and not holding worship services as such, but offering prayer or communion if desired. He agreed. This way I will be covering more territory and not have the danger to others, although I increase the danger to myself. Perhaps the gospel of God's loving care, of God's grace, God's promise not to forsake us no matter where we are—perhaps all this will be communicated, not so much by what I say but through my actions and presence. At least I can be God's hugging, embracing arms.

"As I walked back to "C" Med, there was a barrage of incoming and I ducked into a LSU bunker, very low, narrow, with several feet of protective overhead covering.[544]

"Casualties started pouring into "C" Med from 2/26—seven KIA, one of whom was the 2/26 chaplain, Father Brett. One of the corpsmen asked me to remove the boots of a wounded Marine on a stretcher, moaning and covered with blood. His boots were caked with mud and blood, soon also covering my hands. The mixture started drying and I soon started to feel as though the skin of my hands was shrinking. At the time I thought that the sensation indicated the shrinking of our life itself. ("The life of every creature is its blood; its blood is its life."[545]) I went to my bunker to wash my hands in a small, yellow plastic basin I had purchased at a small stand along the road near Phu Bai from a Vietnamese girl. While washing, there was a large

---

[540] Taped comments of James. E. Schemelia to Ray W. Stubbe, 01 Aug 1984. Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, 1989, p. 466

[541] Ibid., pp. 684-685.

[542] While we had been briefed many times in the past that this is one of the NVA's favorite times to send incoming, there were, of course, no chow lines any more at Khe Sanh. Indeed, there were no mess halls!

[543] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 1989, pp. 585A-586.

[544] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript, 01 Apr 1970, p. 693.

[545] Lev. 17.14.

explosion and large pieces of metal flew into the air. A CH-53 had been hit; the blade slicing through the cockpit killing both pilots."[546]

CH-53 IN WHICH PILOTS WERE KILLED
Official USMC photo A190673. Photographer unknown

THE GENIUS LOCI

Past violence blanketed Khe Sanh as an invisible, yet palpably insistent, miasma. Khe Sanh sat atop an extinct volcano; the area had been born in violence and heat. Before the Siege battle, an occasional human skull unearthed from the depths by a Marine digging a trench or bunker on Hill 881-South like some horror emerging from the unconscious in a bad dream, would be placed on a pole until some visiting General ordered it removed,[547] A bomb crater, pock-marking the hill just to the west of Hill 861, never seemed to regain its verdant green, blanketing vegetation. Other craters, occasionally seen while on patrol along with a NVA rocket canister or some other evidence of their presence, constantly reminded everyone of past violence. Old, concrete fortified bunkers, perhaps a single hexagonal concrete bunker in the middle of the jungle, made one wonder if what had been was also now.

The area had been a battlefield for so long that even without such reminders; one could not but feel a spirit of the place, the genius loci. Past violence shrouded the entire area. If a new unit were to arrive with no turnover briefings, the apprehensions would remain. Marines and soldiers at Khe Sanh in the early 1960s and those there in 1971 said the same things about Khe Sanh: they felt alone and isolated, abandoned and vulnerable, uncertain of who lurked in the dark, mysterious hills, a feeling of being watched, an awareness that it was not a safe place. There was a lingering atmosphere of uncertainty despite the exceptional beauty and calm serene feeling and the exhilarating pleasure of just breathing it all into one's soul.

A good example was Hill 881-North, one of the three hills in the 1967 Battle of the Hills, but unmanned after that battle. Teams from our reconnaissance company occasionally patrolled the hill to determine if the enemy were using it. One of the recon Marines noted:

> "..the hill .. was so quiet and just like a lost soul would be. Normally you're real quiet and don't make any noise .. but everybody was extra quiet because you just felt like it was a resting place and that if you disturbed the spirit or the mood or whatever it was, you didn't know what would happen, but it would be bad. And it just seemed like a really evil place. It was like a sorrowful place. We only had a couple occasions we had to go through the area, and we'd always move as quickly through the area as possible because it's like you were intruding, and if you stayed too long, something would happen to you. You can talk all you want to about being superstitious and whistle when you go through a graveyard and all that, but unless you've walked through 881-North—and this was in broad daylight with the sun overhead–. I can't imagine going through that area at night ... You kept waiting to hear a sound, and there were no sounds. And the absence of sound was what was so strange. It was like walking through a time warp or something you'd walk to the other side and you were there, and it was like you were in a different dimension. It was just so strange."[548]

---

[546] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript, 01 Apr 1970, p. 694. KIA were Capt James Thomas Riley and 1/Lt Cary Carson Smith, both of HMH-463. Stubbe, Ray W., Battalion of Kings, 2nd ed., 2008, p. 204.

[547] "The commander on the hill, Captain John Raymond (CO, A/.1/26) mentioned that General Metzger arrived there a few days ago and discovered the human skulls the men had placed on stakes (a remnant from the Battle of the Hills fought here April and May), dug up while digging trenches and bunkers. 'The General looked at Col Padley; Padley looked at Wilkinson; Wilkinson looked at me; there was no place for me to look but up in the air. I think I lost some points there,' he said." [Stubbe, Ray W., Autobiography, Part 7, Khe Sanh before the Siege, p. 67.

[548] Comments of Ernest Clyde Husted, Jr., to Ray W. Stubbe, 21 August 1984.

Once the siege battle began (Sunday, 21 Jan 1968), pressure from the quantity of incoming and the strangling presence of tens of thousands of enemy troops surrounding us forced the defenders into increasingly narrowing crevasses in the earth—holes, trenches, bunkers, and culverts–for temporary daytime refuge during incoming bombardments and night for sleeping. By 07 March 1968, there were 510 bunkers of various sizes in use by the defenders at Khe Sanh.[549] Mike Scharfman, moving pallets of mortar and artillery munitions, dove for cover in a culvert along the road the afternoon of 7 February 1968 and remained there some three hours, frozen to the spot while the base received an devastating barrage. He emerged half red and half green from head to boot from laying in the red mud.

On a deeper level, we didn't penetrate the earth; the earth penetrated us. The red clay, weathered remains of its volcanic origin, now a fine, powdery dust, so penetrated our skin it seemed as a permanent stain as a tattoo. Weeks after leaving Khe Sanh, whenever I took a bath in a small aluminum mount-out box and toweled off, the towel looked as though I had used it to wipe a bowel movement. The red clay of Khe Sanh penetrated to our soul, where the spirits of Khe Sanh played their frenzied tarantella or Halloween dance macabre and displayed their tragic dramas in our nightmares.

The tactical map for Khe Sanh indicated it as "Xom Cham," or "village of Cham." In 192 AD, the Chams were established a kingdom, the borders of which were almost exactly Thua Thien Province, where Hue City is located. The Chams then moved northward into what is now Quang Tri Province until the 7th Century and conducted raiding parties into the area around what is now Hanoi until they were defeated and replaced by the Vietnamese. Perhaps a remnant of this Cham civilization settled at Xom Cham, the Khe Sanh airstrip. "Xom Cham," village of Chams, was the name of Khe Sanh Combat Base. This, plus its volcanic origins and centuries of invaders who passed through the area, echoed in many souls.

During the siege battle, some 40,000 flesh and blood enemy soldiers were poised to crush us as an avalanche in a human wave attack. Some outposts received attacks involving vicious hand-to-hand combat and deadly barrages of incoming rounds in moments of sheer terror and horror that continue to haunt and reverberate in nightmares many decades later stitched as so many penetrating needles into a fabric of day-to-day life on the battlefield. A war of will, courage, determination, resiliency in which unseen foes hurled rockets and artillery and formed an unseen, smothering cloud encircling us recalled the words of St. Paul, "we do not wrestle against flesh and blood .. but against spiritual forces.[550] (In Biblical thought, the "powers" mediate between God and humanity.[551] They were appointed by God to particular responsibilities in the cosmic order. "Spiritual authorities were generally considered to lie behind the human ones."[552]The foe was greater than exploding rounds or encircling soldiers; these were but the outer, visible specter of an inner motivating spirit or power[553] that narrowed our life into restricting bunkers and trenches, isolating and confining. Patrols to Khe Sanh village, a nearby Hill 471 or even close to our perimeter, were decimated; options and movement were limited.

BROAD PLACE

The LORD places those with trouble in a broad place: " He brought me out into a broad place; he rescued me, because he delighted in me."[554] "you have not delivered me into the hand of the enemy; you have set my feet in a broad place."[555] "Out of my distress I called on the LORD; the LORD answered me and set me in a broad place."[556] "Answer me when I call, O God of my right! You gave me room when I was in distress. Be gracious to me, and hear my prayer."[557] " I run the way of your commandments, for you enlarge my understanding."[558] "and I have come down to deliver them from the Egyptians, and to [549] FMFPAC 200327Z/Mar68 to CMC, CONGRINT Fortification Material at Khe Sanh. Cited in Stubbe, Ray William, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 06 June 1989, p. 649.

---

[550] Eph 6.12.

[551] Forester, Werner, " ἐξουσία ," in Kittel, Gerhard, ed., Theological Dictionary of the New Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1964, Vol. II, po. 566.

[552] Morrison, Clinton D., The Powers That Be. (Studies in Biblical Theology, No. 29). London: SCM Press Ltd., 1960, pp. 102-103.

[553] Cf. Walter Wink's analysis of spiritual powers which are not free-floating or ethereal, but are "the inner aspect of material or tangible manifestations of power." [Wink, Walter, Naming the Powers, The Language of Power in the New Testament. (Vol. 1 of The Powers). Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1984, p. 104]. "These 'Powers' do not .. have a separate, spiritual existence. We encounter them primarily in reference to the material or 'earthly' reality of which they are the innermost essence." [Ibid., p. 105].

[554] Ps. 18.19 ESV.

[555] Ps. 31.8 NRS.

[556] Ps. 118.5 NRS.

[557] Ps. 4.1 NRS

[558] Ps. 119.32 NRS.

bring them up out of that land to a good and broad land, a land flowing with milk and honey, to the country of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites."[559] "He brought me out into a broad place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me."[560] "He brought me out into a broad place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me."[561] "And of Gad he said: Blessed be the enlargement of Gad! Gad lives like a lion; he tears at arm and scalp."[562] "Like a stubborn heifer, Israel is stubborn; can the LORD now feed them like a lamb in a broad pasture?"[563] "He also allured you out of distress into a broad place where there was no constraint, and what was set on your table was full of fatness."[564] "He will show you a large room upstairs, furnished and ready. Make preparations for us there."[565]

In its etymology, the Hebrew word used in the Bible for "salvation," יְשַׁע, ya-sha, probably has the meaning "to be wide, roomy .. and would in the causative hiphil have to be translated with 'to make wide, roomy,' 'to make room for someone' .. the opposite would be צרר, 'to be crowded together, compressed.' Luther: 'As distress is our narrowness that presses in on us and makes us sad, so the help of God is our expanded room that makes us free and happy.' "[566] The Brown, Driver, Briggs Lexicon traces the root to the Arabic meaning "be capacious," "make wide," "spacious," "make sufficient," "be or live in abundance."[567]

The New Testament Greek word for "salvation," σωτηρία, (so-tay-RI'-a), carries the original meaning of the stem of the verb יָשַׁע as "to be roomy, broad," especially as opposed to oppression, which is properly "narrowness" צר, cf צרר "to choke," "to envelope," "to enwrap," hence "to be hemmed in, constricted, oppressed."[568] "As oppression is viewed as a kind of spatial hemming in or imprisonment, so rescue from it is a moving out into the open... Deliverance is imparted to the weak or oppressed in virtue of a relation of protection or dependence in which he stands to someone stronger or mightier who saves him out of his affliction. The thought is neither that of self-help nor of co-operation with the oppressed. The help is such that the oppressed would be lost without it."[569]

Salvation is from God alone; no one nor anything else saves. The root, יְשׁ, occurs 254 times in the Old Testament with the largest concentration being in the Psalms (136 times) and the prophets (100 times). Nearly half the Psalms include this word. in them, the Lord is always the subject; nothing and no one else "saves."[570] Fourteen proper names in the Old Testament are based on this word, including "Isaiah" (the Lord has saved), "Hosea" (Salvation), "Joshua" (The Lord is salvation), "Elisha (God is salvation), "Joshua=Jesus is related.[571] God is my salvation.[572] Commenting on Psalm 51.12 ("restore to me the joy of thy help and endow me with a willing spirit"), Weiser writes: "..the joy in the helpful nearness of God is the actual motive-power of the new way of life which the poet here envisages. Man is not able joyously to affirm in his own strength that he will do the will of God; or, to put it differently, he is not able to create the spirit of willingness by his own efforts .. it is the joy in God as the motivating force of man's actions which alone is able to transform ethical obedience into an obedience based on faith."[573] God saves because people take refuge in Him.[574] Significantly, the term "involves bringing help into a situation of distress and danger, to people where they are and need it, not removing them from it."[575]

---

[559] Ex. 3.8 NRS
[560] 2 Sam 22.20 NRS
[561] Dt. 12.20 NRS
[562] Dt. 33.20 NRS
[563] Hos. 4.16 NRS.
[564] Job 36.16 NRS.
[565] Mk. 14.15 NRS.
[566] Kraus, Hans-Joachim, Psalms 1-59, A Commentary. Trans. Hilton C. Oswald. Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1988, p. 139.
[567] Brown, Francis, Driver, S.R., and Briggs, Charles A., A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament with an Appendix containing the biblical Aramaic based on the Lexicon of William Gesenius. Trans. Edward Robinson. Oxford: At the Clarendon Press, 1959.]. p. 446.
[568] Georg Fohrer, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, 7:973-978, [Fohrer, Georg, "σώζω and σωτηρία in the Old Testament," in Friedrich, Gerhard, Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, ed.: Gerhard Friedrich. Trans and Ed.: Geoffrey W. Bromiley. Grand Rapids, Michigan: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1971. Vol. VII, p. 973.
[569] Ibid..
[570] Sawyer, J. F. and Fabry, H.-J., "יְשׁ," Botterweck, G. Johannes and Ringgren, Helmer, Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament. Trans. David E. Green. Grand Rapids, Mich: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1990, Vol. VI, p. 442 445.
[571] Ibid., p. 443.
[572] Ps. 18.47, 25.5, 27.9.
[573] Weiser, Artur, The Psalms (Old Testament Library), Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1962, , pp. 407-408.

From personal conversations with many dozens of men during the siege battle at Khe Sanh in early 1968, most expressed desired help, not in terms of removal from Khe Sanh, but rather of bringing something into the situation that would help to ensure life, such as new and additional troops, air strikes, and aircraft to evacuate our wounded. They sought an understanding of just what was happening and what might be expected, the presence of leaders which could be trusted.

In the account where Jesus sent His disciples ahead of Him as they traveled by boat at night on a stormy sea, Jesus walks on the water to the boat. They assume it is a ghost. Peter asks if he might come to Him. "But when he noticed the strong wind, he became frightened, and beginning to sink, he cried out, 'Lord, save me!'"[576] Apparently, he, too, was walking on the water as long as he was focused on Jesus, but began to sink when he focused on the problems and predicament of his situation. Once, while stranded for several days in a crowded room at Quang Tri, waiting for helicopter transportation, a missionary of Wycliffe Bible Translators remarked, "Never focus on the greatness of your problems; focus on the greatness of your God."[577] Suffering Job is finally restored and at peace once he encounters and is overwhelmed by an understanding and vision of the greatness of God.[578] God's unfolding future, which we might only dimly perceive, pulls us out of the narrowing life of memories which stick to our soul[579] or present turmoil in which we may be ensnared, out of the "box" which may be a prison or a tomb, into the "wideness of God's mercy."[580] Little things near us obscure greater things beyond us; they became irresistible countervailing luminosities. Those at Khe Sanh on the combat base could easily see Hills 950 and 1015 to the north, but those hills blocked the sight of the much larger Tiger Tooth Mountain (XD 832543). Abraham Lincoln once noted that holding a quarter before one's eyes blocked the sight of everything else. When at sea-sick on a ship, a good advice is to stand on the rolling deck and gaze at the fixed, distant horizon; what we see changes who we become.[581] Conversely, who we are determines what we see; our needs, concerns, interests, the way we've been taught to view as threatening or beautiful or important, controls what we see. I recall seeing some beautiful wild flowers while on a patrol off Hill 861 at Khe Sanh and remarked about them to the Company Commander the next day who said, "O, really, chaplain? I don't recall seeing any! I was looking for other things."[582] To focus one's mind on something not in the situation, making it enter the situation and focusing on it, sometimes proves useful in resisting torture or withstanding other pains and difficulties. Many of the men at Khe Sanh frequently talked of their dreams, their focus—a girl friend they planned to marry, a car they planned to purchase, a future they planned to pursue, an image from happy times as a youth, and so on. To know the "end of the story" is to be freed from a imprisoning and painful present. For Christians, the end of the story is not the turmoil of the present nor tribulations

---

[574] Ps. 37.40.

[575] Sawyer and Fabry, op. cit., p. 462 and 463.

[576] Matt 14.30.

[577] Meeting with Hank Blood on Friday, 08 December 1967. Hank Blood was travelling to Khe Sanh to purchase Mr. John Miller's Honda and related numerous accounts of how he narrowly escaped capture by VC. He was later captured along with several other missionaries during the 1968 Tet Offensive and murdered by them. He was a dignified, tall, mostly white-haired man with a British accent, continually reading from a small copy of the New English Bible. He said the secret of prayer is not the greatness of one's problem, but the greatness of our God. [Stubbe, Ray William, Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript of 01 Apr 1970, p. 445 and Khe Sanh, an unpublished manuscript of 07 Oct 1971, p. 675.

[578] Job, chapters 38 et seq. Restoration, Job 42.10-17. There are numerous other Biblical accounts of healing, giving confidence and courage, through visions of God: Prov. 29.18 ("where there is no vision, the people perish."), Moses is given confidence at the burning bush (Ex. 3.2); Jesus lifted up, John 3.14 (on the Cross) (referring to the people of Israel looking on the raised bronze serpent which Moses raised in the wilderness to be healed of the bites of the fiery serpents – Num 21.9); the Transfiguration (Matt 17.1-8, Mk 9.2-8, Lk 9.28-36), etc. Note the significant words of Irenaeus: "gloria enim Dei vivens homo, vita autem hominis visio Dei" (The glory of God is the living human, and the life of the human is the vision of God", Against Heresies 4, 20, 7).

[579] Cf. Alan Lightman's writing on one understanding of time: "The tragedy of this world is that no one is happy, whether stuck in a time of pain or of joy. The tragedy of this world is that everyone is alone. .. For a life in the past cannot be shared with the present. Each person who gets stuck in time gets stuck alone." [Alan Lightman, Einstein's Dreams. New York: Pantheon Books, 1993, p. 65].

[580] Cf., the hymn by Frederick William Faber (1814-63), "There's a wideness in God's mercy, like the wideness of the sea".

[581] Martin Buber writes of visiting a scholar who lived through World War II in which "..reality had been brought so close to him that he saw everything with new eyes and had to think in a new way." [Martin Buber, Eclipse of God; Studies in the Relation Between Religion and Philosophy. (Harper Torchbooks). New York: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1957, p. 6. Paul Auster writes: "Whatever you see has the potential to wound you, to make you less than you are, as if merely by seeing a thing some part of yourself were taken away from you." [Paul Auster, Country of Last Things. New York: Viking, 1987, p. 19].

[582] Stubbe, Ray William,, Autobiography, Part 7 (Khe Sanh, Vietnam, before the siege, 11 June 1967 – 17 Jan 1968), unpublished manuscript, p. 165. Conversation of 28 Sep 1967.

preceding the end, but God on the throne with the Lamb in it surrounded by the large company of those worshiping.[583] Placing problems and pains, difficulties and defeats in a wider context makes them as dark clouds in a greater sky: they are still present (one need not deny their existence or cover them over with drugs or activity) but they lose their power. They are depotentiated. Painful war memories, as so many pebbles in our boots, eyelash in our eye, sliver in our finger, like any other intense pain or problem, tends to narrow our life, excluding the possibility to love others or even be aware of them, and cut off enjoyment of the fullness of life that might be ours. The theologian, Paul Tillich, writes, "The claim of anything finite to be final in its own right is."[584]

WIDER CONTEXT

Human problems and pains are best handled by placing them within a wider context. Grasping the greater whole, the troubling, vexing part which drew all our energy (as a black hole in the universe draws all light and energy to itself) loses its power. Dr. Rachel Remen, a doctor specializing in treating terminal patients, wrote of a young teenager who, upon receiving a diagnosis of diabetes, became paralyzed in his anger. He has a dream. In the dream he sees a Buddha. He's not particularly religious, but has grown up in California where statues of Buddha are common. He gazes at the Buddha and feels some peace. Then, suddenly and without warning, an arrow is shot from behind him at the Buddha, and it strikes the Buddha in his chest. The young man is very angry. Then, very slowly, almost imperceptibly, the Buddha does something very surprising. The statue starts to enlarge. It becomes bigger and bigger until the wound is but a small speck. The young man awakens from his dream with confident joy, realizing that his wound of diabetes might become but a small part of his entire life.[585]

The wider context is God Himself who contains all things. This Biblical teaching, called "panentheism" ("God contains all things; all things are in God") is the opposite of "pantheism" (all things contain god, or spirits).[586] We live in God as much as birds live in the air and fish live in the sea. We live in the "force field" of God's love, forgiveness, Presence, blessing, love and peace. It is precisely in the darkness, emptiness, our live between the moments, even in injustice and cruelty—"on the Cross!" that God is to be found, or as the Episcopal lawyer, William Stringfellow noted in his small book, popular in the 1960s,

> "A Christian is not distinguished by his political views, or moral decisions, or habitual conduct, or personal piety, or, least of all, by his churchly activities. A Christian is distinguished by his radical esteem for the Incarnation.. by his reverence for the life of God in the whole of Creation, even and, in a sense especially, Creation in the travail of sin. The characteristic place to find a Christian is among his very enemies. The first place to look for Christ is in Hell."[587]

From the time of Solomon's dedication of the temple in Jerusalem to Stephen's speech at his martyrdom and Paul's sermon on the Aeropagus in Athens, Greece, the teaching has always been that "God cannot be contained."[588] God is at the beginning and at the ending of all (or, to use the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, is the Alpha and the Omega),[589] the Creator and the Consummator. An ancient speculation held that the Hebrew word for truth, אֱמֶת (emeth) was the seat of God, because it consists of א, the first, מ, the middle, and ת, the last letters of the alphabet [590] Things do not contain God; God contains all things.

---

[583] Rev. 22.3.

[584] Tillich, Paul, Systematic Theology, Vol. 1. Chicago, Illinois: University of Chicago Press, 1951, p. 134.

[585] Remen, Dr. Rachel Naomi, M.D.,: My Grandfather's Blessings. New York: Riverhead Books, 2000, "The Way Through," pp. 141-143.

[586] Thus, Jer 23.23-24: ""Am I a God at hand, declares the LORD, and not a God far away? 24 Can a man hide himself in secret places so that I cannot see him? declares the LORD. Do I not fill heaven and earth? declares the LORD; Eph 4.6: "One God and Father of all, who is over all and through all and in all;" Eph 4.10: ("He who descended is the one who also ascended far above all the heavens, that he might fill all things," Col. 1.17: ("He is before all things, and in him all things hold together," Acts 17.28: ("In him we live and move and have our being..;" Psalm 139.7-9: ("Where shall I go from your Spirit? Or where shall I flee from your presence? If I ascend to heaven you are there! If I make my bed in Sheol, you are there! If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea.." [All references are ESV]. One might note the greatness of God whose hem filled the temple in the call of Isaiah (Isa., Chapter 6).

[587] Stringfellow, William, A Private and Public Faith. Grand Rapids, Michigan: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1962, p. 49.

[588] 1 Kings 8.27 ("Behold, heaven and the highest heaven cannot contain you.."); Acts 7.48 ("The Most High does not dwell in houses made by hands"); Acts 17.24 ("The God who made the world and everything in it, being Lord of heaven and earth, does not live in temples made by man.").

[589] Rev. 1.17, 21.6, 22.13, Isa 44.6.

[590] Kittel, Gerhard, "A Ω," in Kittel, Gerhard, ed., Theological Dictionary of the New Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich.:" Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1964, Vol. I, p. 2.

The Christian teaching of Christ's Ascension also includes the omnipresence of Christ. Thielicke writes: "when he walked he earth, he was close to only a few .. his presence was limited by time and space. Only a few heard his word. Since the Ascension, however, He is equally present .. at family prayer in Chicago, in a Siberian peasant's cottage or in a little group of faithful prisoners of war .. He passes through the doors of our homes, through the walls of prisons, and through the barbed wire of their 'isms'."[591] That Christ ascended "to the right hand of God" does not imply Christ's absence from the world; rather, it implies Christ's ascension teaches Christ's Lordship over all, or as Paul wrote, "He who descended is no other than he who ascended far above all heavens, so that he might fill the universe."[592] God is available to us at all times,[593] and in all places.[594] God is as near to us as our breath. Prayer, whatever words we use, when it comes from the heart, places us in the presence of God. Psalm 46, perhaps also written after a battle and also the basis of Martin Luther's hymn, "A Mighty Fortress is our God,"[595] packages in words the awareness felt in a chaos of the siege of Khe Sanh: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of danger. Therefore we will not fear, though the earth should change, though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea.." (the "mountains" being our leaders, our nation, our places of strength; the "sea" for the Israelite was a place of chaos, a dwelling place of demons. Ancient Israel, unlike its Phoenician neighbor, did not develop a sea-going trade; they didn't venture into the sea).

On Sunday, 25 February, while a platoon-sized patrol from B/1/26 was being decimated just a short distance from our lines, I had crossed the wide, open airstrip and was in the northern perimeter, the Blue Sector, moving through the trench line and bunkers of C/1/26. A patrol there was just about to depart (perhaps to reinforce B/1/26) but halted. As the Marines returned to their trench and bunkers to dig and fill more sandbags, an enemy sniper was firing, but no one seemed concerned and just continued as though the sniper didn't exist. I, myself continued walking, mainly above ground since there was no continuous trench in the "C" Co. area, but rather a series of interrupted trenches and talked with the Marines along the way. Then came the very soft sound like a large drum pounded, indicating the firing of enemy guns. After counting a few seconds, I fell face down into a trench as incoming rounds began exploding, mainly in the middle of the combat base, the helicopter revetments, and the "C" Co. line. Suddenly there was a very loud boom (as eight pallets of anti-tank land mines, I was to learn the next day) exploded, leveling all of Shore Party that was still left standing above ground and making a crater over ten feet deep and ten feet wide, as I later saw. (It also demolished the 1/26 BAS shitter). I felt something I really hadn't experienced until this point. I found myself mumbling to God in unintelligible words and sounds as rounds continued exploding. I got up several times, but sounds of shrapnel making odd, whistling sounds as they moved through the air made for a symphony of death that continued many minutes after the land mines detonated.. Psalm 18.4-12 came to mind.[596] [591] Thielicke, Helmut, I Believe, The Christian's Creed. Trans. John W. Doberstein and H. George Anderson. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1968, p. 197.

---

[592] Eph. 4.10.

[593] Matt 28.20b: "Remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age."

[594] Cf. Gen 28.15-16("Know that I am with you and will keep you wherever you go, and will bring you back to this land; for I will not leave you until I have done what I have promised you." "Surely, the LORD is in this place—and I did not know it."); Joshua 1.9 ("Be strong and courageous, do not be frightened or dismayed, for the LORD your God is with you wherever you go."); Isaiah 43.1-5 ("Fear not; for I have redeemed you, I have called you by name; you are mine. When you pass through the waters, I will be with you .. when you walk through the fire, you shall not be burned .. Fear not; for I am with you."); Psalm 139.7-10 ("Whither shall I go from your spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, you are there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, you are there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall lead me."); Romans 8.38-39 ("I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.").

[595] Perhaps written as Jerusalem was besieged in the days of King Hezekiah. In 732BC, Damascus fell. Ten years later, Ashdod fell, and in 701BC, Jerusalem was besieged by the Assyrian king, Sennacherib (Vide 2 Kings 18.3-19.37, Micah 1.10-15, Isa 10.28-32). Then a miracle happened during the night as an angel of the Lord slew 185,000 of the enemy (2 Kings 19.35). A similar situation occurred when Constantinople fell in 1453 and the Islamic Turks then captured Belgrade. With a force of 80,000, they captured Hungary and killed some 15,000, beheading those captured on the Plain of Mohacs. In September of that year, they moved towards Vienna. Then, miraculously, they retreated. The great 46th Psalm came to Luther's mind as he lived through these events and he wrote a paraphrase on it, "A Mighty Fortress is our God.

[596] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 7 October 1972, pp. 1117-1118; Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 01 April 1970, p. 711], Psalm 18.4-12: The cords of death encompassed me; the torrents of destruction assailed me; 5 the cords of Sheol entangled me; the snares of death confronted me. 6 In my distress I called upon the LORD; to my God I cried for help. From his temple he heard my voice, and my cry to him reached his ears. 7 Then the earth reeled and rocked; the foundations also of the mountains trembled and quaked, because he was angry. 8 Smoke went up from his nostrils, and devouring fire from his mouth; glowing coals flamed forth from him. 9 He bowed the heavens and came down;

However, as most when breathing are unaware of the air, so in living, some remain unaware of God's Presence, of the liberating power to break out of suffocating, narrowing conditions of life into the "wideness of God's mercy" and God's Presence, love and peace. Our failure to realize this, however, does not negate God's purposes, as the quotation that the psychologist, C. G. Jung had written over the door of his house, and later was inscribed on his tombstone (in Latin translation): Vocatus atque non vocatus, Deus aderit ("invoked or not invoked, God will be present"). Or, as Jacob declared when he awoke from his dream, "Surely the Lord is in this place and I did not know it."[597]

Many others, however, we acutely aware of the Lord's presence, even in all the horror and terror, and even in the darkness. Well over a dozen men living in the siege battle at Khe Sanh later became priests and ministers, In conversations with them they note it was precisely in their battlefield experience they felt the presence and nearness of God, that God is with us in our struggles with forces that would smother and suffocate and do us harm.[598] God, who hides Himself,[599] , reminding one of James Russell Lowell's Civil War poem: "truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne / yet that scaffold sways the future / and beyond the dim unknown / standeth God within the shadows, keeping watch above His own."[600] God is on the Cross, God is present in our desperate need and dark places on life's path, God is present with us in our struggles with forces that smother and suffocate and do battle with us. "God's help is closest when distress is greatest (cf. Job 5.19)."[601]

Like an oasis in the desert, a very small opening might become the entrance to the broad place of peace. The small space may be the space between friends talking or hugging, a bunker or a trench, a small worship service in the midst of battle. We realize we are in a space of peace, a context within which we are blessed with opportunity to live, to be, to grow. Perhaps this is why, during the siege, one frequently saw Marines hugging each other in trenches or bunkers during incoming.

Just as radio, TV, or cell phone waves are all around us and in us and through us, but not evident to us without a receiver (radio, television set, cell phone), so also, God's Presence is made known in certain ways. The wider context of God becomes operative, for example, in a network of understanding friends and family, through grasping a greater understanding and mental grasp, through time's passage in which charged events become but a speck in a larger horizon, in the experience of nature's vastness and wholeness, in the ocean of love (as an action, a verb, and not a feeling or a noun), and in service to others to bring a fuller life (justice, mercy, service).

The "wider context" might be an "aha" realization gained from learning a different perspective from another person in the same situation. On the 20th of January 1968, as numerous casualties arrived at C Med from I/3/26 which was conducting a patrol to Hill 881-N before being recalled, I laid my camera on the ground in order to help carry a stretcher of a dead Marine to Graves Registration. When I returned, the camera was gone; someone had taken it. The loss vexed me for many years. On the undeveloped roll were pictures of the baptism of Gregory Popowitz, a Marine of the recon unit. His patrol had been shot out of its insertion zone three times and he requested baptism. That camera had been given me by my grandfather and has taken some sharp photographs later donated to the Marine Corps Pictorial Division which transferred them to the National Archives. Many years later, a good friend, Ernie Husted, of the recon unit at Khe Sanh, said, "Whoever stole that camera saved your life." At first, I couldn't understand. He explained that since I was always snapping photos, instead of taking cover in a trench or bunker during the shelling of Khe Sanh, I would have stood up to take a picture, and most probably would have been killed or seriously wounded. Suddenly, I realized he was correct. The loss never again vexed me. The words of Joseph to his brothers, who had sold him into slavery, packaged the liberating, healing words of my friend; whoever stole the camera meant it for evil, but God meant it for good.[602]

The "wider context" might be a community of veterans who have lived through the same experience, who can hold the pain, understand and listen without judgment, and who might supply missing parts of the story or a different perspective. The thick darkness was under his feet. 10 He rode on a cherub and flew; he came swiftly on the wings of the wind. 11 He made darkness his covering, his canopy around him, thick clouds dark with water. 12 Out of the brightness before him hailstones and coals of fire broke through his clouds. (ESV)

---

[597] Gen. 28.16.

[598] Those who later became priests and ministers include: James Carmichael (E/2/26), Timothy Sims (M/3/26, who later became a Navy Chaplain), John T. Wielebski (A/1/26), Paul Longgrear (A-101 Special Forces), Tom Stott (G/2/26), Michael Stuart (2/3), Woodrow T. Schellenberg (1/9 Cav), Alan R. McLean (1/26), James D. Bailey (I/3/26), Gary Trowbridge (B/3d Recon), Charles E. Goodman (H&S/1/9), Keith Kapple (F/2/26), Ernie Elmore (CAC "O"), Donald Denton (1st Radio), Jim Everidge (G/2/26), Harris D. Himes (B/3d Tanks), and Michael C. Loehrer (B/1/13).

[599] Isa 45.15.

[600] Lowell, James Russell, the Present Crisis, lines 38-40.

[601] Fabry, H.-J., "צרר ," op. cit., p. 460.

[602] Gen. 50.20, :As for you, you meant evil against me, but God meant it for good.."

New Testament word for community, κοινωνία, (coin-o-NEE'-a), means "primarily participation in something, not fellowship (companionship)."[603] It is not community based on everyone joined together by liking each other or accidentally placed together (as a citizen of the same country), but joint participation in the same reality. It is not links in a chain joined as a necklace, but rather spokes in a wheel joined together because all are fixed to a common hub. In this case, men are joined together through having participated in the same battle experience; the heat of the battle welds people together in an especially strong bond. (As with metal welding, the weld is stronger than the pieces welded together.) Destructive memories, like holding onto an electric wire that is killing but cannot be released since it paralyzes, can be handled without destructive consequences through the "wire insulation" of the community.

A typical instance was a Marine who suffered many years with guilt at not digging faster to reach a trapped victim in a bunker which had been struck with an incoming round. On 23 February 1968, when the bunker of the Supply Officer of 1/26, 1/Lt Kim Johnson, was hit by incoming, LCPL Leopold ("lee") R. Burger and Joseph R. Murray, who had just departed the bunker, immediately returned to the bunker to dig and rescue Lt Johnson. "We were digging frantically. I remember as soon as I saw his face, I cleared the dirt from his face and I touched his hand and went for a pulse, but I could already see that the color and everything else was out of him. There was not a mark on him."[604] Murray was given Burger's telephone number, called him, and later said, "That was one of the most important phone calls I've ever made in my life! Perceptions are different, and my perception screwed me up for a long time. It was a real therapeutic phone call. I always thought that I dug in slow motion, and he told me that was not his perception. He was right next to me. I always blamed myself for that guy's [Johnson's] death. I felt if I had dug a little faster–. But according to Lee, I dug as fast as he. That phone call that I made to you, and then you called back, I can't tell you how much that helped!"[605]

WE SHARED EVERYTHING IN OUR TRENCHES AND BUNKERS
Official USMC photo A191072
Photographer unknown. B Co, 3d Recon Bn

The greater context of community (which was really the presence of God) became evident in the many bunkers visited during the siege of Khe Sanh. We were limited to only one C-ration a day (instead of the normal three) and one canteen cup of water per day (because the water point, a large rubber container aloft (like an urban water tower one sees in the States), was frequently punctured by shrapnel from exploding incoming rounds).[606] In the many dozens of bunkers visited during the siege battle, men were observed giving their last drops of water to a thirsty comrade as well as cans of precious food, indicating the presence of Jesus who said, "I was thirsty and you gave me drink, thirsty and you fed me."[607] Marines freely shared everything they had. Marines dashed out of bunkers, trenches, and other protective places to pull a Marine wounded from incoming to safety—while incoming still exploded–a daily, commonly observed event. Unintimidated, Marines dashed out during incoming to splice severed land lines so those in command bunkers to communicate with each other or with artillery tubes, displaying a "courage to be" in the face of death (what Tillich referred to as "non-being")[608] whose ultimate [603] Benko, Stephen, The Meaning of Sanctorum Communio. (Studies in Historical Theology, No. 3). Naperville, Il.: Alec R. Allenson, Inc., 1964, p. 80.

---

[604] Conversation with Lee Burger, 06 June 1993.
[605] Conversation with Joseph Murray, 06 July 1993. Note: Many combat veterans, as well as those experiencing great stress, report things happening in slow motion..
[606] Overheard in the 1/26 COC bunker: The battalion S-4 was chewing out a Marine for using potable water. The Marine replied, "I only used a thimble-full, sir!" The S-4 replied: "Do you realize we might not get another drop out of the water point?" [Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript, 01 April 1970, p. 701]. On Saturday, 24 February 1968, LtCol Wilkinson, the 1/26 battalion commander, reported that we have only 500 gallons of water left on the base and that the water point had not received water for the last three days.. [Ibid.]. In another observed conversation, one corpsman at C Med said to another, "You didn't shave this morning!" The reply, "Well, I drank up all my water allowance last night." [Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, cited, p. 704].
[607] Matt 25.31-43.
[608] Vide, Tillich, Paul: The Courage to Be. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1952.

source if God.[609] The ancient Jewish toast, L'Chaim, ("to life!") affirms life despite all the persecutions throughout the ages as the gift of God, the source of all life. "No matter what difficulty life brings, no matter how hard or painful or unfair life is, life is holy and worthy of celebration ... It has always seemed remarkable to me that such a toast could be offered for generations by a people for whom life has not been easy."[610]

Conversations in the bunkers frequently were sprinkled with humor. When a rocket exploded nearby, narrowly missing the bunker, someone said, "Those NVA gunners are piss-poor; they couldn't even hit us!" (Disregarding the fact that a 122 mm rocket has a range of 12,000 meters; it might have been fired from a gun over 7 miles away!) Courage to affirm life in the presence of death can only be traced to the source of life. The great variety of bunker styles was evidence of creativity. Some were "L"-shaped to minimize damage from shrapnel or force of blast should a round land in one portion. Likewise, many were built perpendicular to the trench line for the same reason. The great recon trench consisted of one long trench through the recon area on which Marines furiously dug deeper and deeper. The trench was over seven feet deep, but unfortunately in one straight line. They were motivated to dig furiously, and did include some "roll-outs" at the bottom of the trench and even a buried pisser, a submerged 55-gallon drum covered with a screen. During one period of incoming, a Marine jumped into the trench and only at the last second spread his legs planting a foot on either side of the pisser![611] Some, like those of the reinforcing platoon from Co "D" 3rd Recon Bn which arrived to reinforce "B" Co. just before the siege, were zig-zag, also to minimize blast damage. Some, like Shore Party's, had a very long, small diameter shaft opening with a ladder which opened into a small cavern bunker deep beneath the earth, and was able to survive the immense explosion on 25 February 1968 of eight pallets of land mines next to it that left a very large crater. Some bunkers had small openings like windows for shooting ports.

RECON TRENCH –Official USMC photo A193277 BY Ray W. Stubbe 14 Apr 1968

Most built their own bunkers, including officers. A few relied on working parties to build them. When the bunker for the Executive Officer of 1/26 was being constructed, the enlisted Marines were unable to build their own bunkers; during the night, they secretly removed all the air matting from the Executive Officer's new bunker being built and placed it on their own. Then, very early in the morning, they removed the pieces of air matting off their bunker and replaced them on the Executive Officer's bunker. A wounded Marine[612] was moaning and groaning on the stretcher about to be medically evacuated. "I lost everything! I lost everything!" Attempting to console him, I asked if he had lost all his pictures or all his uniforms, burned in the incoming? "O no, Chaplain, you know all those little cans of peanut butter and jelly that come in the C ration? I had been saving them in a wood ammo box, and the incoming destroyed all of them. I lost everything!" While giving his part in the 1/26 battalion staff and officers meeting the morning of Friday, 26 January 1968, Dr. Harvey Demaagd commented on the two immense craters on either side of the road near the 1/26 BAS: "Well, they used to speed down the road, so we called in the NVA arty to make some obstacles for our trucks!"[613]

The "greater context" might be a circle of friends or even one close friend, in an "I-Thou" relationship Friends who accept and challenge, who are honest (a friend is one who will tell you your fly is open), who meet on the patio (instead of relating through roles, talents, positions)[614] pierce through the armor of defenses, through the mud, rust, scratches, and hard outer shell to our soul and enable us to be and to grow. Mr. Turek, Chairman of the Milwaukee County War Memorial, frequently remarked, "The nearest we can get to God is to behold Him in the face of a friend," (probably a reference to Jacob meeting Esau where Jacob said, "Truly to see your face is like seeing the face of God."[615] Friendship frees us from the sin of the cor

---

[609] Ibid., p. 186.
[610] Remen, Rachel Naomi, My Grandfather's Blessings, New York: Riverside Books, 2000, pp. 77-78.
[611] Stubbe, Ray William, diary entry for Thursday, 22 February 1968. [Khe Sanh Chaplain, unpublished manuscript, 01 April 1970, p. 695].
[612] LCPL Slaugenhaupt, A Co., 3rd Shore Party Battalion. Incident on 06 Feb 1968 [Stubbe, Khe Sanh, 1971, pp. 956-957].
[613] Stubbe, Ray William, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 07 Oct 1971, p. 887.
[614] NB Olsson, Karl A., Meet Me on the Patio. Minneapolis, Minnesota: Augsburg Publishing House, 1977.
[615] Gen. 33.10.

incurvatum in se (the heart turned in on itself),[616] living a lesser life encumbered with one's own agenda or self-preoccupation[617] or through "crispation" which Gabriel Marcel understands as becoming encrusted, opaque, sealed off from experience, hardening through pride or withdrawal into the self like a "crustacean animal who secretes around himself a shell which hardens with time, locking the world out as it locks itself in."[618] "Friendship, loving but forceful; encounters with one's equals, to attack and be attacked, to insult and be insulted.."[619] –friendship intensely lived and intensely suffered[620] can save a psychotherapist from increasing self-delusion. Friends "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."[621] Marines in the bunkers of Khe Sanh during the siege battle of Khe Sanh saw through any pretense of artificial roles. The wide variety of bunker styles reflected the wide variety in personalities and individual quirks which were tolerated because all were included within the greater umbrella of being another Marine. In subsequent life as a veteran, an attempt to recapture the sense of being inter-related as human beings instead of being related through social roles (found in the civilian world upon return) stifled revealing battle experiences to others, fostered social isolation, and while Vietnam was still raging, a desire to return there, and after Vietnam, being lost in one's past.

The "greater context" might be the sudden grasp by one's mind of an understanding. Chaplain Walt Driscoll, the Roman Catholic chaplain, mentioned he had visited the FSCC (Fire Support Control Center) as a barrage of incoming slammed into the base. Everyone departed the bunker, he said in order to determine from where it was being fired. (They stick a stick into the center of the crater to determine the direction). He said that all his fears disappeared despite the incoming because it was all explained, like we were in control of the situation. Arty doesn't have a lot of bunkers; the Marines go out when incoming arrives![622] To understand what is happening in life eliminates or diminishes its power.[623]

Perhaps it's a greater understanding as we look at our experience through the lens of the words of the Bible. A wounded man on a stretcher asks me to read to him the words of the 91st Psalm,[624] words which resonated our life experience at that time, in that place: "He will deliver you from the snare of the fowler (the one who catches birds in a cage, like the NVA encircling, caging us) and from the deadly pestilence (of ever-present death, illness, rats, wounding) ... You shall not fear the terror of the night (in the form of 40,000 NVA creeping closer, closer, attacking) nor the arrow that flies by day (rockets, artillery, mortars, sniper bullets), nor the pestilence that stalks in darkness, nor the destruction that wastes at noonday. A thousand may fall at your side (friendly casualties),[625] ten thousand at your right hand ("right hand" referring to our power: the NVA casualties)[626] ... He will command his angels concerning you to guard you ion all your ways ... I will be with him in trouble, I will rescue him.."[627] (Who at Khe Sanh would not be comforted and encouraged by these words?)

---

[616] Augustine: Confessions, uses this term to refer to sin.

[617] One of Gabriel Marcel's teachings on being "unavailable." [McCown, Joe, Availability: Gabriel Marcel and the Phenomenology of Human Openness. (American Academy of Religion Studies in Religion Series, No. 14), Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1978, p. 11.

[618] Ibid., p. 12.

[619] Guggenbühl-Craig, Adolf, Power in the Helping Professions. Dallas, Texas: Spring Publications, Inc., 1982, p. 135.

[620] Ibid., p. 136.

[621] Gal. 6.2 ESV.

[622] Stubbe, Ray W., Khe Sanh Chaplain, entry for Friday, 23 Feb 1968, p. 700.

[623] In 1983, when experiencing much of what later was identified as symptoms of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), I felt I was the only one with these problems and that I was definitely losing my mind. When I learned I was experiencing PTSD, that others also experienced this, I felt a freedom from it, even as it continued to be experienced. I could name it, face it, analyze it, and deal with it. Likewise, when facing a needle biopsy of the prostate, a nurse asked if I had any concerns. When I mentioned a previous needle biopsy and the clicking sounds of the device, and knowing in my mind that a small piece of prostate was being collected, the sounds were more disconcerting than any possible physical pain. When the nurse responded by drawing a very thin line on a piece of paper and said that this is the amount of tissue being retrieved, I was freed from all the anxiety when the clicking sounds of the device later occurred. Knowledge of what was happening freed me of worries; they were simply a product of my imagination. Three times in 2009 I suddenly felt that I was about to die, that I couldn't breathe (but then realized that I was breathing but could not get sufficient air). It felt like a plastic bag was over my head, like I was suffocating. I assumed I was having a heart attack and was dying, alleviated only when I yanked my boxing headgear from my head or found a wide open space (Episodes were on 26 Apr and 28 Jun 2008 and 08 Mar 2009). Only later did a Vietnam vet (Tony Longval, April 2009) tell me these were "panic attacks." Once I knew what they were, I never had another one. Knowledge of the situation became a "larger context" into which I could place the trouble or pain.

[624] Stubbe, Khe Sanh Chaplain (Unpublished manuscript), 01 April 1970, entry for Tue., 16 Apr 1968, p. 862.

[625] Friendly casualties, 20 Jan - 11 Jul were 990 KIA (402 for 20 Jan - 31 Mar, 165 for 01-16 Apr, 43 for 16 Apr, and 380 for 17 Apr - 11 Jul, when the base was abandoned).

[626] NVA casualties were estimated to 10,000 - 20,000 KIA. "Bru villagers south and west of Khe Sanh reported at least 2,000 and possibly 10,000 were killed by bombing. Casualties due to secondary explosions and fires from destruction and damage

The "greater context" might be Christian fellowship. A common center in Christ enables all people of whatever human category to be brothers and sisters. "At the foot of the Cross is level ground." The Christian Church is the hospital of the sick and wounded, a "safe place"[628] to share our shame, guilt, and sin and be accepted. Christian community creates a "space where we are free to face the real struggle, where we are free to face our true pain .. a place where we can discover grace and mercy."[629] Christian community is a space where people can say, "'I listened to you, and this is what I hear,' then people can say, 'Yes, you really understand it; you really know who we are.' That seems to be a very important task—first of all, to help people dare to recognize their own struggle. ... they say, 'If you have the courage to listen to us and hear our pain and struggle without having solutions, if you are really willing to feel these things, then we are also free to feel our own struggles and we don't have to run away from them.'"[630] The Church is called "..to create a space where we are free to face the real struggle, .. free to face our true pain, .. a place where we feel a certain trust, a certain safety, and a certain protection, but a protection not to help us avoid problems but to face them, to deal with them, and to look at them."[631] The Church is the space within which the Holy Spirit is active in compassion for one another "Let each of you look not only to his own interests, but also to the interests of others."[632] The Spirit works, not primarily in individuals but between and among individuals, thriving "by the comfort people give one another,"[633] God's "Spirit does not enter anyone for his private benefit. God's business is with his people, and for the sake of their life together as his covenanted people."[634] "We know no love of God without our love for one another, no forgiveness of God without our forgiving one another, no faith or hope from God, except as we have faith toward one another and hope for one another."[635] Focused on the Lord rather than on each other's defects, we are able to understand Edwin Markham's poem, "Outwitted:" "He drew a circle that kept me out / heretic, scoundrel, a thing to flout / but love and I had the wit to win / we drew a circle that took him in."[636]

Worship services were some of those openings in which eternity pierced our situation, where we were aware of peace in the midst of conflict, strength in the midst of helplessness over incoming, and felt hugged by God instead of the surrounding tens of thousands of enemy soldiers.

On Tuesday, 06 February 1968, I led 13 worship services attended by 96 with 42 communing. The first three were in the recon area (three inside bunkers, one outside) attended by 6, 6, 7, and 7. I then led one inside the 1/26 COC bunker attended by 6 with 5 communing, the one for the MPs in a hole near the ISO bunker, attended by 11 with 6 communing, one for a working party from D/1/26 which was cleaning up bad ammo at the ammo dump. This was in an excavated, large trench and attended by 12 with 4 communing. I then led four worship services for A/1/26 Marines attended by 4, 5, 9, and 3, one for 2nd platoon, 1st squad of B/1/26 attended by 4, and one for 81 mortars of B/1/26 in a large, deep hole, a future bunker, attended by 18 with 4 communing.

My opening prayer: "Lord, be present now we pray as we gather together to worship You, pray to You, hear You, and receive Your Holy Word. We know Your promise is that wherever two or three are gathered in Your Name, You are in the midst of them. We also know Your promise to be with us no matter where we might be. Let us be aware of Your Presence, O Lord, in our lives here and now, and let us have the strength and courage such awareness brings, for we ask it in the Name and for the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen."

---

to guns, bunkers, supply dumps, headquarters, and structures, although not capable of being accurately counted, must have been high. Assuming 2 NVA soldiers per secondary explosion, with over 6,000 secondary explosions and fires, 12,000 may be conservatively estimated. Some of these explosions continued several hours. Approximately 900 bunkers were destroyed, some of which must have been occupied. 300 gun positions were destroyed. Forward Air Controllers (flying O1 and O2 aircraft) counted 1,400 bodies, and approximately 1,000 bodies were killed on the wires of KSCB from three attempted assaults on the combat base in March, 1968. [MACV, "Khe Sanh Analysis," 8 July 1968, p. 13; Gen. Wm. C. Westmoreland, speech of 13 June 1968, to 3rd Air Division in History, 3rd Air Division, Jan - Jul 1968, Vol. 1, Exhibit #180, MACV, Command History, 1968, Vol. 2, pp. 423-424]. Reference: Stubbe, battalion of Kings, 2005, p. 266.

[627] Psalm 91.3, 5-7, 11, 15.

[628] Cf. Nouwen, Henri, "The Parish, a Safe Place to Face our Pain," Washington, D.C.: Alban Institute: Action Information 7:1 (Jan-Feb, 1981).

[629] Ibid., p. 4.

[630] Ibid., p. 2.

[631] Ibid., p. 4.

[632] Phil. 2.4, ESV.

[633] Haroutunian, Joseph, God with Us, A Theology of Transpersonal Life. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1965, p. 60.

[634] Ibid., p. 72.

[635] Ibid., p. 75.

[636] Alexander, A.L., Poems That Touch the Heart. New York: Hanover House, 1956, p. 61.

I then read the Scripture lesson appointed for the week (which seemed particularly applicable, Matthew 8.23-27) and prayed the appointed Collect (for the 4th Sunday in Epiphany, also very applicable to our situation!) The former was Jesus calming the troubled sea. The Latter: "Almighty God, who knowest us to be set in the midst of so many and great dangers, that by reason of the frailty of our nature we cannot always stand upright: Grant to us such strength and protection as may support us in all dangers, and carry us through all temptations; through thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen."

My very brief sermon pointed to how the Scripture lesson shows: (1) God is really God; He is in control and powerful. (2) He is personally concerned for the individual welfare and feelings of the disciples. I then proceeded immediately to the distribution of Communion followed with the Benediction (Numbers 6.26), and then talked with the men, perhaps giving a few hugs, and then left for the next bunker or trench.

At the second recon worship, the first Marine took the small chalice and swallowed all the contents! I had assumed that all would just wet their lips, but they all, evidently, could not get enough of the Lord's Presence in that desperate situation! Perhaps they intuitively grasped what St. Ignatius had written: that the consecrated bread is the "medicine of immortality, the antidote that we should not die, but live forever in Jesus Christ."[637] It caught me by surprise, and I didn't know if I should consecrate more wine, knowing that the others would probably follow h is example and didn't see the need to say the Words of institution each time, so I just consecrated the whole bottle and merely filled the chalice about half full.[638]

On Friday, 09 February 1968, the ancient Christian church history of Christians worshipping in catacombs in Rome as a safe place in a very deadly setting, continually came to mind. My diary entry for the day:

"Today was a good day to visit the men in the Blue Sector and lead worship for them. The fog shrouded us from snipers who might spot us and call in mortars or rockets as we gathered.

"First there was a small group of four men on the LSA from 2/26. The damp and quiet fog setting made the worship seem particularly intimate. I then proceeded to the point where the Blue and Red Sectors join and began to work eastward. Eleven men attended from the 3rd squad; 4 communed. 21 men attended from the 3rd squad; 5 communed. One Marine said he "wanted assurance." The man reads his Bible, prays, but has not attended worship for a long time and wanted prayer. I invited him to our worship and we later talked about God's love for him.

"One hooch had a squad of Army psychological operations soldiers from the 7th PsyOps, and worship was on a wooden platform in their bunker for four men; one communed.

"Continuing down the trench line, there was a worship service for the C/1/26 snipers: seven attended, one communed. 13 attended from 3rd platoon of C/1/26; one communed.

"The next bunker contained Army soldiers of the Quad .50s, a squad from "G" Battery of the 65th Artillery Group that has been at Khe Sanh since 21 November 1967. Their weapon consists of four .50 caliber machineguns mounted on the back of a 2-½ ton truck and can fire 2,700 rounds per minute.[639] Six soldiers attended the worship service and expressed how appreciative they were that a chaplain visited them in their bunker, just outside, where they worked. A hooch is very important to the men. It is more than a place to sleep. It represents their life—their creativity, their comradeship, sweat, and work, ingenuity, security, the container of their soul. It's here they run for refuge. In a very deep sense, the men want God to enter into their humanity, into their life. Entering all these dozens of bunkers on the combat base at Khe Sanh has a much deeper significance than merely entering places of residence!

"Five Marines attended a worship service from 3rd Squad, 2nd Platoon, C/1/26. One man, PVT Ransom Lee Stuck, spoke with me about possibly getting off active duty early. His enlistment has already expired, but he's now serving 'bad time' until the end of March. He has two athletic scholarships and wants to attend college. The platoon commander told me his case is still pending, but he'll probably be required to serve the extra time. (I saw him a few days later—in a body bag; he was killed 26 Feb.)

"Next was a bunker quite different from the others, fashioned out of the rectangular, slivery metal boxes used to store Navy 40 mm anti-aircraft rounds. It was the squad from "C" Battery, 1st Battalion, 44th Artillery, 108th Artillery Group, U.S. Army. The vehicle weapon they man is the 'Duster,' probably named for its speed—a 49,500-pound vehicle going 45 MPH, churning up a virtual dust storm of camouflage! The two 40 mm clip-fed automatic guns are capable of firing 240 rounds per

---

[637] Ignatius, Epistle to the Ephesians, 20:2. St. Ignatius lived c. 35 – c. 107 and was Bishop of Antioch

[638] Stubbe, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 1971, p. 955.

[639] SSGT Don Willis, "Quad 50s Protest Khe Sanh," in III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:12 (22 Mar 1968) p. 9; III MAF News Release No. 91-68.

minute.[640] It has the distinction of being Navy ammunition fired from an Army weapon on a Marine Corps base. Two soldiers attended worship from this unit.

"I then passed the helicopter revetments and crossed the airstrip, arriving at the Shore Party detachment (2nd Platoon, Co. "A", 3rd Shore Party Bn). It is always a squeamish venture to cross the LSA, loaded as it is with cases of ammunition, as well as the airstrip which has no place to run for cover. They are two good targets where enemy rounds lately have landed with predictable frequency and destructiveness. The Shore Party Marines work out in the open in this dangerous place, all day, day after day. The area is ghostly, with a burnt-down tent and men digging deeper and deeper. They are very warm and friendly and my visit gave them a brief 'Sabbath rest' from their Herculean labors. After I announced worship services, that anyone desiring to worship could do so, more and more gathered at the bunker where I was. I suggested that we hold several smaller-size services as there was a 'grave' danger that a single round might get everyone. But since my worship services are only about seven to ten minutes in duration, everyone gathered in an area where there were plenty of bunkers to dive into if need be. 22 Marines attended; 18 communed. I did feel uneasy at the number gathered; security in worship is better with small-sized congregations.

I then visited our battalion supply area. There was only one Protestant; the rest were Roman Catholic. So I led a worship service, complete with communion and sermon for the one Marine. The men there gave me two shirts, a dozen sox, and a canteen cup, saying they wanted to dispose of all their supplies since they'd probably get hit and would rather have the supplies distributed than destroyed, reminding me that our possessions become encumbrances if we retain them but life-enriching as we give them to others. I said I didn't want anything unless the men had everything they needed, but they assured me they have been sending supplies out to the men of our battalion. Then a second Protestant appeared, and I conducted a second worship service for him also–for the one Marine.

"Returning to C Med for more communion hosts and to clean the small chalice I had been using, now caked with red dust and wine, I found a few seconds to devour a C-ration pecan cake roll for lunch and then decided to hold a worship service for the Navy corpsmen of C Med. This worship service was conducted in their new underground Air Force evacuation team bunker and attended by corpsmen of C Med, the 3rd Medical Battalion Surgical Augmentation Team, some Air Force medics, and one patient lying on a stretcher attached to the wall and receiving an IV. Eleven attended; six communed.

"I then returned to finding the scattered sheep—men in the various pockets within this place of destruction and desolation. I came first upon a dilapidated metal hooch that looked like something out of a concentration camp, ugly and lifeless. It was Graves Registration. The men here were very relieved to have a worship service. They always only see dead bodies and body parts. Their jobs are voluntary; they can 'get out' at any time, but willingly do this service for the bereaved at home and as honor to their fallen brothers. What they do might determine an open or closed casket, they tell me. Perhaps few realize just what they do or remember them. Four attended the worship service, all those there; three communed.

"I then visited our 1/26 BAS. Doctor Demaagd has returned, buoyant and cheerful and as enthusiastic as ever. A worship service was held at the end of the BAS ward bunker. The lights went out half-way through the sermon, and I said a prayer in total darkness. A candle was lit during the Words of institution, and the lights came back on during the distribution, almost symbolically communicating the 'light of the world entering our darkness.' Nine attended; eight communed.

"No one was at 3rd Engineers; they are all out working. Likewise the Marines of Co D/1/26, which were all out on working parties. I held two worship services for Marines that remained in the area, one attended by four, the other by six.

"I then returned to Cpl William Barr of Co C/1/26 who is Roman Catholic but marrying a Lutheran, bringing him a catechism. He invited me for 'supper' in his bunker, and I had 'Ham with Water Added and Eggs, Chopped, Canned.' IO arrived there at 1615H and departed an hour later, walking behind the helicopter revetments where there were three damaged H-34s. One, YL-34, had carried me to the hills on many occasions.

"Just then, there were incoming rockets. The blasts were in rapid succession and kept getting louder and louder, one sounding like it exploded only a short distance behind me. I did what you should not do—run, fast and furious, a tendon in my leg ached badly, and I was panting with hyperventilation from the excitement. Rockets, with their whistling shriek are heard just long enough that you wonder where they are going to land and explode, and the blasts are frighteningly deafening. No description can adequately convey the fear they inspire. So, although today was quiet all day, probably because of the fog and the consequent lack of C-130s landing, I again had a 'near miss.' (I was here because I wanted to return to 3rd Engineers to conduct a worship service for them; otherwise, I would have returned to C Med by a route fairly far from these blasts).

"There was a good turnout at 3rd Engineers, the worship being conducted deep in a submerged bunker hooch of the Officer in Charge, Lt Gay. Due to the confined space, I had to commune the men individually as they were scattered in various places. one man spilled the chalice of consecrated wine all over the foot-locker I was using an an altar. 17 men attended; 11 communed.

---

[640] "All You Can See is Dust," III MAF: Sea Tiger 4:12 (22 Mar 1968), p. 5.

"Today, I conducted 19 worship services attended by 165 and 72 communed.

"I then reported to the battalion commander, LtCol Wilkinson, on today's activities. He is always interested in the men and their welfare. Capt Onslow, our S-4, was there. he is very fatherly, warm, and always interested in all my religious services and faithfully attends them. (He was later killed on 10 May, after 1/26 departed Khe Sanh. I also spoke with Sgt Timothy Keady who wants to be confirmed, not having completed his confirmation instruction back home.

"There was barely enough light when I departed the 1/26 COC bunker to return to my bunker in C Med, about 1930H."[641]

A picture was taken during the siege in which I am leading a small group of Marines in worship. It was one week into the battle, 28 January 1968, and the base was a shambles from the high amount of incoming we had been receiving. The base commander, Colonel David Lownds, had issued an order even before the battle erupted that everyone on the base would wear helmets. Oddly, this picture shows me and all the Marines with me without helmets. It was natural to take off head coverings in worship. In fact, during this particular worship, we did receive incoming mortars, we scattered, and reassembled. G.K. Chesterton once wrote: "Look at something long enough until it seems strange; you are seeing it for the first time." Many decades later, upon looking at that photo, I suddenly realized we were not wearing helmets and a realization that had a round wounded or killed one of these men brought a chill. Nor was it just this worship service; it was all my worship services at Khe Sanh during the siege. Only the words of the Psalm brought some comfort: "O God, the Lord, the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle."[642] Gunny George Bailey, NCOIC of the small Detachment, 1st Radio Company, III MAF, later remarked to me that one of the days when we were taking a particularly large amount of incoming, he lost half of his Radio Platoon; they were carrying litters and he didn't know where they were. He discovered them as he approached C Med where he also saw me leading a worship service. "And to me it was just a remarkable situation because I said, 'God, we're getting all this shit coming in on us, and here stands this man in total defiance of everything that I've ever known, and I went out there, and I knelt."[643] He said he found peace, like being in the eye of a hurricane that was wreaking destruction all around us. At my ordination, our church choir sang one of J.S. Bach's Motets, "Jesus Priceless Treasure" which included the words: "In thine arms I rest me / foes who would molest me / cannot enter there / Those who love the Father / though the storms may gather / yet have peace.." (Peace, of course, is not the absence of battle, but the presence of the Lord who grants the space, the context within which life may flourish and come to completion.

CHAPLAIN STUBBE LEADING WORSHIP AT KHE SANH FOR MARINES OF C/1/26 – 28 Jan 1968
Official USMC photo by SSGT John A. Reid A190294

---

[641] Stubbe, Ray William, Khe Sanh, unpublished manuscript, 1989, pp. 549-551.

[642] Ps. 140.7 KJV. What some might consider recklessness, but I consider faith (as living in a relationship with God in total trust and obedience), there was a definite disregard for dangers others knew; it was similar to driving a car in which one could be killed, but who thinks of that when they get into the car? The possibility of being hit by incoming didn't even occur to me. A very similar situation had happened in the summer of 1967. Co C/1/26 was at an outpost following the ambush on 21 July 1967 with the 175s coming to Khe Sanh. Visiting this outpost, I learned that Co B/1/26 was about five miles east on Route 9, and I told the battalion XO, Major Heath "Well, I'll just walk down there to lead worship for them." He was incredulously shocked and said, "But the company is five miles down the road." "I know, Sir, but I don't mind walking that far to hold services for them." "But this is all enemy territory!" He said it was entirely out of the question–too dangerous. [Stubbe, Ray William,, Khe Sanh Chaplain, 01 Apr 1970, unpublished manuscript, p. 76]. The possibility of being killed or captured didn't even enter my mind. Likewise, when Major Harper Bohr and I walked to Khe Sanh village from the combat base so he could deliver toys to the Millers, both of us and Mr. John Miller then walked back to the combat base, going over Hill 471. Major Bohr was unarmed—and was the S-2 of regiment. We were in a place of peace; no thought of possible capture or death by NVA intruded. This was 16 December 1967, as NVA were closing in on us and our recon teams were beginning to make significant contact resulting in Marines being killed.

[643] Conversation with George Bailey, 19 Oct 1989. Gunny Bailey died on 22 Dec 2004.

Peace is strength and life. Peace is victory because a person develops towards completion. One Biblical theologian even writes, "The great warrior is he who always has 'peace' in his battles."[644]

The "greater context" might be nature. Experiencing nature's wholeness reorients life into wholeness. Nature reorders, refashions, and realigns. The peace (which is more a matter of the presence of wholeness than the absence of noise) we experience in a walk through a natural area or the majestic beauty that creates awe and wonder, heal the soul. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork."[645].

The "greater context" might be service to others, working to bring justice, laying down one's life daily in loving service to others[646] an abiding within love which is an abiding in God, for "God is love."[647] and "if we love one another, God lives in us.."[648] God, the source of all life, the One who forgives and heals, lives within us as we activate that presence through our mutual love of each other. When I was a young pastor and visited elderly shut-ins, I mistakenly assumed it was I who was bringing them the warmth of friendship and, through prayers and sacrament, the Presence of our Lord. Frequently, they would give me great blessings of friendship sacramentally conveyed through cookies or a cup of coffee. Only gradually did I learn that it was neither I nor they who were blessing, but rather it was God, who is always present, who was blessing us, who was activated through our mutual love—love understood, of course, as a verb and action, not a noun or a feeling. We pass from death to life when we love others.[649]

Another description of the "wider context" might be the Hebrew word Shalom (שלום), translated as "peace," but having a vastly richer meaning: The Brown, Driver, Briggs Lexicon gives the meaning of shalom as "completeness, soundness, welfare, tranquility, friendship, peace;"[650] von Rad gives the meaning of "well-being with a strong emphasis on the material side;"[651] and Pedersen. understands the term to refer to that which is whole and complete, fulfilled.[652] Shalom is not the result of human effort; it is the result of God's blessing.[653] Like ripples from a stone tossed on the surface of the water, shalom moves outwards from a center, which is God. "May the Lord give strength to his people! May the Lord bless his people with peace."[654] "Oh that you had paid attention to my commandments! Then your peace would have been like a river, and your righteousness like the waves of the sea."[655] Old Testament usage indicates that health and prosperous growth surround the person who has peace. The blessed person "..is peace, his house is peace, everything that belongs to him is peace."[656] Peace expands outwards and describes the expansive place where life is free to develop to its completion.

God in the center of life or a group exerts blessing outwards. This obviously doesn't shield anyone from danger or death, but the Lord is with us in the danger and in death. St. Paul, writing from prison, notes both joy and peace due to the Presence of God in his very difficult situation: "Rejoice in the Lord always, again, I will say, Rejoice. Let all men know your forbearance. The Lord is at hand. Have no anxiety about anything, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made to known to God. And the peace of God which passes all understanding, will keep your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus."[657] The verse from First John, "Greater is he who is in you than he who is in the world,"[658] brings confidence and courage in the face of pain and problems. A saying from the apocryphal Gospel of Thomas, echoes a similar [644] Pedersen, Johs., Israel, Its Life and Culture, I-II. London: Geoffrey Cumberlege and Copenhagen: Branner og Korch, 1926, p. 312.

---

[645] Ps. 19.1 KJV.
[646] Jn 15.13.
[647] 1 Jn 4.16.
[648] 1 Jn 4.12.
[649] 1 Jn 3.14. For the natural life being one of death and passing from death into life, cf., Lk 10.28, Jn 5.24, Col. 2.13, Eph 2.5.
[650] Brown, Francis, Driver, S.R., and Briggs, Charles A., A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, Based on the Lexicon of William Gesenius. Trans. Edward Robinson. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1907, pp. 1022f.
[651] von Rad, Gerhard, "שלום in the Old Testament," in Kittel, Gerhard, ed., Theological Dictionary of the New Testament. Trans. Geoffrey W. Bromiley. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans Pub. Co., 1964, pp. 402-406.
[652] Pedersen, Johs., Israel, Its Life and Culture, I-II. London: Geoffrey Cumberlege, 1926, p. 311.
[653] Durham, John I., and Porter, J.R., Proclamation and Presence, Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies. London: SCM Press, 1970, p. 277.
[654] Ps 29.11.
[655] Isa 48.18.
[656] Pedersen, op. cit., p. 316.
[657] Phil 4.4-7. The original Greek word for "keep" is a military term referring to guarding by a sentry.
[658] 1 Jn 4.4.

encouragement: "Jesus said, 'If you bring forth what is within you, what you have will save you. If you do not have that within you, what you do not have within you [will] kill you.'"[659]

Diary entry for Thursday, 25 January 1968 (the fifth day of the Khe Sanh siege): It may seem odd, if not crazy to think of peace achieving fullness of meaning in the middle of fierce battle, but that's just the way it is. There is a palpable calmness present among practically all the Marines here. The screeching Russian-made rockets, causing fear-inspiring uncertainty as to where they will explode, an abrupt, sharp noise as spine-tingling as a fingernail scraped on the blackboard, don't seem to shake anything but the ground. Perhaps it's the hard training Marines receive, perhaps it's their comradeship, but I see in it the Presence of God, a peace based on Presence of God and strength, not on the absence of turmoil While it may seem odd to think of God present in a place like this and at a time like this, all so manifestly evil and a place of daily death, the people of Israel proclaimed God present in war: "Yahweh is a man of wars,"[660] and "mighty in battle."[661] Whether or not we are aware of this doesn't matter; our awareness and our initiatives and demands do not control God's action. We don't manipulate or control God! But, when we are aware of God's presence, we have joy in suffering, peace in turmoil, courage in the midst of enemies, hope in bleakness, light in darkness, faith when all supporting evidence lacks.

Some, of course, do not live in the broad place of God's meadow of peace, which is possible even in the most desperate battlefield or on a hospital bed on which one is dying. They do not find the various "openings" in the fabric of life, like holes on a golf course; they may not even be on a golf course! When I was about to go on active duty in 1956, my pastor said, "The military service is like a great heat: it may melt you into a blob or temper you into the finest steel." The very ancient pre-Socratic philosopher, Heraclitus (c. 540 – c. 470), left us with a fragment: Πόλεμος πάντων μὲν πατήρ ἐστι πάντων δὲ βασιλεύς, καὶ τοὺς μὲν θεοὺς ἔδειξετοὺς δὲ ἀνθπώπους, τοὺς μὲμ δούλους ἐποίησε τοὺς δὲ ἐλευθέρουις ("War is the father of all and the king of all; some he has marked out to be gods and some to be men, some he has made slaves and some free.")[662]

MEMORIAL SERVICES

On Saturday, 20 April 1968, a very large formation of about 250 Marines gathered in a formation at Quang Tri Combat Base. All the companies of 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion, including a new ECHO Company (commanded by Capt John Raymond who had commanded A/1/26 at Khe Sanh) had located together in this newly-forming combat base out of range of NVA artillery which had been striking the Dong Ha Combat Base. Bravo Company was the only one of the five recon companies to have a large slit trench running the length of their company tents; they knew to dig! They had the adjacent Marines of 3rd Shore Party Battalion and the Engineer Battalion dig it and gave the Marines of those units captured NVA gear they had kept as souvenirs.

It rained during the late morning and was very windy. The Marines formed a large "U"-shaped formation in front of a large, portable aluminum altar on which was placed a cross, open Bible, and eighteen bush hats (held in place by line strung over the top of the altar). Eighteen Marines with helmets stood directly in front of the altar. Father Bernie Filmyer and I stood on the other side of the altar. To one side was the American flag and on the other side were the church pennant and the church flag. (They wanted everything). The "B" Co. Gunny, Gunny Wells, read off each of the names of those killed from the company. As he read a name, one of the eighteen Marines advanced, came to port arms, and cleared his weapon. The

---

[659] Logion 70, quoted in Meyer, Marvin, trans and notes, The Gospel of Thomas, The Hidden Sayings of Jesus. San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 1992, p. 53. (Also quoted in Guillaumont, A., et al, :The Gospel According to Thomas. Leiden: E.J. Brill, and New York: Harper & Brothers, 1959, p. 41.)

[660] Ex 15.3. On the Lord being a war God, vide Köhler, Ludwig, Old Testament Theology. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1957, p. 26.

[661] Ps. 24.8. "If God is to meet man in history and act on his behalf, it must be in the world as it is. But the world which is, is a world which is sinful, for God has given to man a certain freedom. Therefore, if God is to work on behalf of man in the world, He must give the appearance to man of using sinful means—He must seem to be unethical in His behaviour. The alternative .. would be for all God's actions with man to be in terms of the miraculous, but this would not be meeting man in the world as it is." [Craigie, Rev. P.C., "Yahweh is a man of Wars," Scottish Journal of Theology XXII:2 (June, 1969) 183-188.]

[662] Fragment #44, in Jones, W.H.S., Hippocrates, Vol. IV: Heracleitus, On the Universe. (Loeb Classical Library, No. 150), Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1931, p. 484 (for Greek text) and p. 485 (for English translation).. Philip Wheelwright's translation (Heraclitus, Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 1959, p. 29, lists the Fragment as No. 25. The translation by G.T.W. Patrick, Heraclitus of Ephesus, Chicago: Argonaut, Inc., Publishers, 1969, p. 95, lists it as Fragment #44 as does Haxton, Brooks, fragments, the Collected Wisdom of Heraclitus, foreword: James Hillman, New York: Viking, 2001, p. 29, who gives a poetic translation: "War, as father / of all things, and king / names few / to serve as gods / and of the rest makes / these slaves / these free."

company "top" then took the weapon with his right hand, sharply grasping the top, and twisting it, pointed it downwards and harshly thrust it into the ground. The Marine then, slowly and, it seemed, sadly, placed the helmet he was wearing on top of the inverted rifle, stepped back, put on a soft cover he had in his utility trouser pocket, and returned to the formation. This was done for all eighteen. It took much time and the reality and tragedy seemed to sink in deeper and deeper as each new rifle was plunged into the earth. After this was done, the rifles and helmets still in place, the formation was dismissed and reformed as a close group about the altar in a more informal manner. The trumpeter from Division Band played Church Call, and the Father and I conducted the religious portion. The firing squad then fired three volleys and the bugler played Taps.

The Marines then walked off, returning to their area in what seemed with deep sadness at having lost their close buddies. I wrote the families of each of these eighteen. This is one of them:

"Dear Mrs. ...

"Thank you for your letter of the 12th. It is indeed with great difficulty that one can ever justify the loss of a person, even when that loss is occasioned by sacrifice to a greater cause. Death and loss of people is indeed meaningless and inexplicable; it is the enemy of man, but conquered through our Lord Jesus Chris's resurrection.

"Aside from all religious or political aspects of the war, one might say that value in life and a sense of meaning is only obtained through sacrifice and devotion to something or someone outside of oneself. In your case, this was to your son. But in his case, it was undoubtedly to service. This might have been an inner compulsion he felt to prove himself, as so many young men feel as part of growing up. I know your son was somewhat firm and when his mind was made up, that was the way it was going to be. ... Perhaps one of the reasons he was here was that he had just made up his mind to be here, and nothing or nobody would shake him away from that.

"He was medevaced to one of the hospital ships in November due to malaria, but returned to B Co. in December. He was part of a reconnaissance team called 'Dock Leaf' that experienced many close calls. In one week they were extracted from their reconnaissance zone of operations in an emergency situation, four times. Sometimes they were surrounded and could hear noises. After awhile some became quite jumpy and shaky. I believe your son was a little high strung and perhaps full of some degree of anxiety, as was the whole team.

"This might have been the occasion of his request for baptism. Although my denomination usually requires a period of instruction prior to adult baptism, being in a combat zone in which people might at any time be killed, has caused me to baptize anyone who desires to be baptized. I do, of course, briefly explain the meaning of baptism, but I have always felt that baptism is what God is doing, not what men are doing, and as one of the early church councils declared, its efficacy is not affected by the baptizer or the person being baptized...

"Mrs... I wish there were more I could write. I always visited the Reconnaissance area, and developed many passing friends there. They were always so friendly to me and seemed to appreciate my coming into their living areas and just listening to them and talking with them. Your son was one of those who always had a smile when I came around. I really didn't come to know him deeply, but I'[m sure he was living a life the way he felt he must. He had determination, courage, and conviction. He was friendly and kind. He suffered the same fears and temptations we all do. He was deeply appreciated as a friend by those close to and around him. In the end, it really isn't the quantity of life we live, but how we live the brief span of years we have. If he felt his life to be meaningful because of what he was doing, and if this gave him satisfaction, then at least we must be thankful for that.

"Please be assured I remember all those men daily in my prayers. I was especially dismayed in that I had taken a picture of the baptism of your son, but my camera was stolen when I laid it down in order to help carry off some dead bodies to graves registration. I would have treasured those photographs so much as I have no photograph of your son. But he does live in my memory and in the memories of those who were close to him...

"Please be assured I will remember you personally in my prayers, that our Lord will comfort you in your grief. Faithfully yours..."

On the back of the bulletin, I had written the following:

"We remember today those who gave their lives while engaged in a life in maintaining Khe Sanh Combat Base. How they died is not as significant perhaps as how they lived. Personal sacrifice is indeed great when one voluntarily lays down his life to serve his brother in one glorious moment, but greater still is the daily sacrifice of living a life in service to others, a continual laying down of one's life, for it is not life itself that is significant, but how one lives. These men were called from us while performing their duties and engaged in the life of our community at Khe Sanh.

"That day-to-day life, concentrated in serving others, involved a daily encounter with all the anxieties and fears struck into our hearts by the enemy, whether on patrol or on the base during "incoming." With firmness and faith, dedication to daily duty, and personal perseverance, we all held fast, refusing to weaken.

"Khe Sanh represents the triumph of all the armed services contributing in concert the greatest they could– perhaps the greatest expenditure of B-52 strike bombs; vast numbers of soldiers. But the greatest single factor was the resolve of courage by our U.S. Marines and corpsmen, living under continual threat of attack, through the screeching rockets, with shocking and fear-inspiring cracks, splats, and whomps of artillery and mortars, day after day after day. We held firm; the base is still ours.

"These men lived such a life of firmness and resolve despite unnerving adversity. The determination of their lives is the factor determining the triumph of freedom over forces of intimidation, the battle we now fight.

"Our Lord, as the Good Shepherd, laid down His life for us that we might have a more abundant life. He has said that we live as branches in His vine, living by participating in His same life of self-giving love. It was in this context He said, 'Greater love has no man than that a man lay down his life for his friend.' The promise of such a life of service: 'Where I am, there shall my servant be also.' Such love never ends: 'Having loved his own who were in the world, He loved them to the end,' and then washes His disciples' feet. 'God so loved the world that He gave..' That is the life these men lived; that is their accomplishment; that is their hope; that is their significance; that is their salvation. –Chaplain Stubbe"

On 06 May 1968, a memorial service was conducted for the Marines of 1/26 at Wunder Beach on the shores of the Suth China Sea, where battalion 1/26 located after departing Khe Sanh. The S-1 staff are in a large tent rather than the cramped, hot, humid bunker they had occupied in Khe Sanh in which it was necessary to make contorted movements in order to move from one place to another, where I/Lt Fitzgerald, the Adjutant looked like a survivor of a Nazi concentration camp.

The memorial service is in a blown-out concrete structure with no roof. At the entrance is a bell tower with the 1/26 bell.

MEMORIAL SERVICE ON KHE SANH AIRSTRIP – 10 Oct 1968
by E/3/4. Official USMC photo A192312 by SSGT Fred Lowe, III

1/Lt Ben Long read the Epistle from Thessalonians and enlisted representatives from the four letter companies read various parts of the liturgy. Chaplain Kelly gave the prayer and a short homily in which he emphasized that the real saints are those who enter the situations in which they sacrifice all, giving to others, sharing with others, giving of themselves, and neglect their own comforts. There were only about men from the entire battalion; all wore flak jackets and helmets. On the altar was a haversack and E-tool. I read the message I had prepared for the back of the recon memorial service bulletin. LtCol Fred McEwan, the new 1/26 CO (formerly the S-4 of 26th Marines regiment) made a brief comment and explained he had to attend a regimental meeting for tactical purposes. His prepared message was read by the 1/26 XO, Major McCartney:

"..In this service, we have honored not only those who have died at Khe Sanh, but all those who were there. We have fulfilled our promise to the families of our Marines killed in action. Equally important for you men of this battalion is the fact you will always remember the Battle of Khe Sanh. You will live with it for the rest of your lives and in so doing, you will always remember those who gave their lives.

"To each of you men who were there, I have this to say. For three months, the eyes of the world looked at you and the enemy, who was unable to claim success. At another outpost and milestone in Vietnam's history, the same enemy claimed success at the battle of Dien Bien Phu and with it fell half of Vietnam. Had Khe Sanh fallen there would have been far reaching effects. But Khe Sanh held. You held Khe Sanh living in the trenches, constantly subjected to heavy bombardment by mortars, rockets, artillery, recoilless rifle and sniper fire. You held because of your fighting spirit and indomitable courage. May God bless you and return you safely home."[663]

---

[663] Printed in Khe Sanh Veterans Inc.: Khe Sanh Veteran 2:1 (Fall, 1995), p. 8.

1983: WHEN I PLUNGED INTO THE PIT OF PTSD

Talk given to Lutheran Church Women, Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, Milwaukee, WI, Armed Forces Day, 21 May 1983.

The attempt at reviewing my experiences as a chaplain reminds me of a story I recently heard from the Jewish chaplain at Great lakes. Herr Goebbels went to a Rabbi and said, "I would like to learn Talmud.": (Talmud is a devotional book of Jewish wisdom). The Rabbi replied, "Herr Goebbels, you couldn't possibly learn Talmud. First you must pass a test of three questions." Goebbels replied, "Well, let me take the test." "OK," said the Rabbi. "Two men fell down a chimney. One emerged clean, the other dirty. Which one washed himself?" Goebbels replied, "The dirty one." "Wrong," said the Rabbi. "The clean one looked at the dirty one and thought he, too, was dirty, so the clean one washed himself." Goebbels said, "Well, give me the second question." The Rabbi went on, "Two men fell down a chimney; one emerged clean, the other dirty. Which one washed himself?" Goebbels said, "The clean one." "Wrong," said the Rabbi. "The dirty one looked at his hand and, seeing it was dirty, assumed his whole body was dirty, and so washed himself. I'm sorry, you just can't learn Talmud." Goebbels said, "Well, give me the final question. The Rabbi paused and then went on, "Two men fell down a chimney. One emerged clean, the other dirty. Which one washed himself?" Goebbels thought for a moment and then said, ":Both." The Rabbi said, "Herr Goebbels, you can never understand Talmud. How can two men fall down a chimney and one emerge clean and the other dirty?"[664]

The task of understanding one's life is almost just as difficult! And yet, the task, the imperative and duty to do so, is a revealing and healing endeavor because the evidences, the traces of, Christ's presence and love are discovered. I can see that my life has been an "Adventure with God." In a real sense, life is a parable reflecting spiritual realities in earthly metaphors and situations and with numerous unexpected turns, twists, and outcomes, like a parable. Although not always apparent at the time, our Lord's promise, attached to His command to go into all the world and proclaim the Good News to all,[665] that He will be with us no matter where we go,[666] can be discerned. His faithfulness never to depart from us and His faithfulness to lead us into life abundant[667] as He leads us from grace to grace,[668] and the reality of Paul's words in Romans 8.28, "All things work together for good to those that love God, who are called according to His purpose"—all this becomes abundantly clear. Some memories are quite painful; there are buried and unresolved griefs and guilts. But even here there is the healing of memories as they are seen through the eyes of Christ, as they are relived as though He were present.

There is, of course, a great danger. Jesus once said, "No one, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit to be my disciple."[669] Of course, here the word that is translated "Look back," is in a grammatical tense (Present participle) that should be translated, "forever looking back"—in other words, becoming stuck with the past. "Remember" in the Bible is always for the purpose of an action now.[670]

So, we look to our past because our God works in events, reveals Himself in history—even our own. And we can see that our life has really been an "Adventure with God."

This is how I now feel when I now begin to scratch the surface of all my experiences—when I look into eight completely filled file drawers of diaries, letters, notes and papers, somehow, according to His purpose, that have been kept throughout these past fifteen or so years.

I look back and ask, "Where was God in all of this?" and find that He was in smallness, among the poor and weak, in the ordinary things of life. God is like a little child speaking softly in a convention room crowded with cackling people, whose voice we don't always hear because we aren't listening for that voice. God is like the intricately beautiful snowflakes or the emerging life in a bud on a bush or tree that we see but never see. God is like the stars that shine at night that we never pause to see—or cannot see because of the sea of pollution in which we live. Or, He is like the stars that sine in daytime but [664] The Jewish chaplain undoubtedly took this story from an old Jewish story related in Ausubel, Nathan, ed., A Treasury of Jewish Folklore, Stories, Traditions, Legends, Humor, Wisdom and Folk Songs of the Jewish People. New York: Crown Publishers, Inc., 1948, pp. 3-4, "A Lesson in Talmud." In the story, the man requesting to know what Talmud was is a country peasant, not Herr Goebbels.

---

[665] Matt 28.19.

[666] Gen 28.15, Josh 1.9, Isa 43.1-5, Ps 139.7-10, Mt 28.20b, etc.

[667] Jn 10.10.

[668] Jn 1.16.

[669] Lk 9.62.

[670] Cf. Pedersen, Johs., Israel, Its Life and Culture, I-II. London: Geoffrey Cumberlege and Copenhagen: Branner og Korch, 1926, p. 106: "When the soul remembers something, it does not mean that it has an objective memory image of some thing or eventm, but that this image is called forth in the soul and assists in determining its direction, its action. When man remembers God, he lets his being and his actions be determined by him."

are not seen unless we go down into a deep hole in the earth and then gaze upwards. God is like the mushrooms: the presence of life in the midst of darkness and manure of life.

Where has God been in all of these tens of thousands of pieces of paper stuffed into eight file drawers that I am now beginning to look at? He has been active where and when there has been obedience to His Word, when his Word has been a matter of life and being, when there was been love—not as a feeling or a thing, a noun, but as an action, a verb., when people have chosen to let His Word live in them.

For example, there was a young lad[671] whose father had died when he was six and whose mother committed suicide when he was a teenager because she stole from her employer and was caught and was due to go to court and probably prison. She had stolen that she might give things to this young lad. He had no other family and was raised in foster homes after her death. He spoke often of suicide himself. he wore a death's head belt buckle and a black T-shirt with a ghostly-white face. I invited him out for a pizza one summer evening and he came to the lobby of the building where I live—a residence for officers. He appeared in his usual garb and, in addition, had a leather wrist band with spikes radiating outwards. he was, I found out later, into "punk rock." We waited there for a third person who was also going out with us for the pizza, for about half an hour. Although in civilian clothes, everyone passing me said, "Good afternoon, chaplain," and for a moment I thought, "What are they going to think: me with this very questionable person?" And then almost immediately I recalled how Jesus was misunderstood by being with the people He usually was with, and I felt this is doing the same thing—living Him, living His Word, being obedient to the Word—and suddenly didn't care at all what the others thought, only how much I could show this young lad that someone cared for him, might bring him more life, which was what I had intended in the first place.

The life of Jesus really is what life is all about. There is the fact of the incarnation, God becoming flesh and living with us. Really, that's the chaplaincy also, because chaplains live with their people in a most intimate way—at least, they can chose to do so. Chaplains share the same uniform, regulations, the same enemies, the same desperations and exasperations, the same places far away from loved ones and the same enemy shells. It's not a matter of being an outsider who visits them or someone they come to, but actually someone who shares their same life.

I

It all began for me as a chaplain at the recruit area of Great Lakes in the summer of 1966. One day one of the recruits said to me, "Why not visit our barracks tonight?" That thought had never crossed my mind. I felt that my job was simply to stay in an office and have people with problems come to me. I'd listen, attempt to clarify, and perhaps offer some suggestions—plus conduct worship services. But it was a job to do, and my off-duty hours were mine.

Nevertheless, I took him up on his suggestion and visited the barracks that evening. It happened to be the Bluejacket's Choir barracks, and they were so appreciative, they sang several of their songs for me.

What happened to me was revolutionary. I discovered that being a chaplain was not a job to be done but a life to be lived. I discovered that life for me exists in interpersonal encounters, in I-Thou, person-to-person encounters. Having been alone in graduate school or in professional work of pastoral calling and organizing All Saints Lutheran Church in)Oak Creek, I suddenly learned the meaning of those words in First John—which I happened to be studying at the time—"We know we have passed from death to life because we love the brethren." And I felt very alive—alive with God's love living through me.

I was reading Abraham Heschel's book, The Prophets,[672] at the time which had so much to say. " Biblical religion is what man does with God's concern for all men."[673] the prophets were people who felt their people's feelings and felt God's passion for justice and mercy for the poor, who brought God's feelings to the people and the people's feelings to God. And I recall how I just wanted to be with, to share, to love and care for—in other words, declare through life God's love and care and acceptance of them.

So I volunteered for more active duty and found myself at Naval Air Station, Alameda, California, in the San Francisco Bay area. There was an air squadron there, VAW-13. I used to be in the hangar when their places returned from practice flights at night, and was invited to many of their parties. Then they took me up in their single-prop A-1 "Skyraider" planes. It was always very scary: the planes were Id WW II vintage and always seemed they'd never get off the ground. Several of the pilots always tried to get me sick over Lake Tahoe by doing aerial maneuvers involving feeling like going up fast in an elevator or going down fast on a roller-coaster. I got very close to those pilots and their families who poured out their lives to me.

When I left, they gave me a card making me an honorary member of their squadron. I was told by one pilot they had only done that for three others in the previous four years.

"Being with," sharing the life of people, who were my parish, became my normal way of doing things.

---

[671] Jean Paul Dumerais.

[672] Heschekl, Abraham J., The Prophets, New York and Evanston: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1962.

[673] Ibid., p. 230

I must note here who the people a chaplain serves are. Unlike a civilian parish, a chaplain's responsibility is for the spiritual welfare of people of all religious groups, as well as those who are not religious at all—ensuring the Roman Catholics are visited by a Catholic chaplain for Mass, helping get a Mezuzah for a Jewish man. Also, and perhaps most usual, caring for people who have had no religious background. The Constitutional basis of the chaplaincy is to ensure the free exercise of religion, especially in those places and situations where civilian churches or clergymen are not available. The chaplain becomes the "reminder" of the faith dimension of life—remember that the word "remember' means to bring up the past in order to influence the present. The chaplain is the one who fights for God's desires for His people; he becomes the "conscience of the command."

In my notes I found a prayer given on the ship's general announcement system the evening of Saturday, 13 May 1972, which interrupted the movie in the officer's wardroom: "Eternal God, whose will is peace; we cry unto You for the ending of war and of necessity for men's preparations for war.." I later heard that one Marine officer said, "He sounds like he's against war." Another Marine officer replied, "Aren't you?"

The next night, Sunday, 14 May 1972, after working all Sunday on practice amphibious beach landings, with Major General Fred Haynes aboard our ship, I gave the following prayer over the ship's general announcing system: "Dear Lord, Heavenly Father ... Your divine Law says: 'Remember to keep the Sabbath day holy. Six days you shall labor and do all your work, but the seventh day is holy. In it, you shall do no work.' When you have thus spoken, who are we to disobey? We ask your mercy that your wrath rest snot heavy upon us ..."

Perhaps it's a matter of preaching on the Advent lesson of Isaiah 40 at Great lakes where it reads, "Tell her that her warfare is ended,"[674] and saying that the problem is the many really don't want warfare ended, and after the sermon heaving a wife complain that that was too gloomy, that she didn't like to hear these kinds of things and that she was angry with me.

Perhaps the ministry to people involves making the command aware that boots with special soles that keep one from sliding down muddy hillsides ought to be available to the men since they are available in the supply system and the men are falling down and breaking their bones. I was then criticized by the senior chaplain that such matters were n one of my concern. But God's concern for the welfare of His children must always be a chaplain's concern also.

The chaplain serves all the people, not just the ones with problems, the ones who are weak, the ones who come to him. The fact of Jesus is the fact that God comes to people, not that people come to God. This involves being part of the scene, being incarnate. Perhaps it's a matter of remaining on a ship while in a dirty and noisy shipyard period, when all the chiefs and officers move off due to the noise, smoke, fumes from welding, clanging hammers that resound throughout the steel hull and decks, and large tubes that clog all the ladders and passageways, and no privacy—remaining on board because all the enlisted men must remain on board, and this is the time for numerous informal conversations, sharing of life, communication of God's concern for them.

People served are all the people. I recall the poor—the very poor—mountain tribesmen in Vietnam who were resettled in a refugee area, after perhaps ten thousand of them were killed in the area in which I served during the big battle there. They were in the refugee area, starving, dying. One of the units I served—a reconnaissance unit that sent many small patrols, had a great abundance of excess C-ration cans of food—thousands of pounds of it. So I went to the di vision General's staff, a Marine Colonel, to propose taking this food to these starving people. he replied, in typical official tone, that that couldn't happen because food couldn't be given to Vietnamese civilians since it either ended up in the black market or was used to feed the enemy forces. And he had a point since that usually did, in fact, happen. I kept arguing for some time with him that there was a Marine unit there, there was a CIA man with them, etc., etc., and that it would be monitored carefully, that these people were literally dying from starvation! Finally, he relented, although nothing that there could be no publicity about it. Who knows how many hundreds of people were spared the pains, even death, from starvation from the food these Marines had in excess?

This is all because of Christ's love for all, due to His model of being present, the fact of His incarnation, the living of His mercy, and had there been no chaplain there, it probably wouldn't have happened.

This business of "being present," "being with," people, has actually saved my life; I am here talking with you today because of it! One morning, while at the Marine Corps boot camp at Parris Island, I was walking around the rifle ranges, away from my office. My enlisted helper later told me that a Sergeant came, asking "Where is the chaplain?" My helper said I was out. He also noticed that the Sergeant's rifle was on semi-automatic, not on "safe." Later, the is same man was apprehended. He didn't know me or I him, but he said he thought that if he shot the chaplain, then certainly he would be able to leave Parris Island!

---

[674] Isa 40.2.

It was about that time that I met a recruit, Private Gaskin. His father had been captured by the Japanese in World War II and survived. He was very faithful and would clean up the chapel area and my office without being told to do so. One say he wasn't at work and I called for him. "O, he was found unauthorized smoking." I was told. I told his superiors that he was a wonderful worker, very superior to most. A bout an hour later, he reappeared; there he was, suddenly standing at rigid attention in front of my desk and aid, "Sir! The Private wants to thank the Chaplain, Sir!" I never liked all that formality and told him I just told his Sergeant the truth. he was in a medical platoon recuperating from an operation. he eventually got better, returned to his training, and a couple of weeks later, reappeared suddenly , again at attention, and said, "Sir! The Private would like to invite the Chaplain to his graduation." He then said, slowly and very thoughtfully, "It's all the Private can give the Chaplain to say 'Thank you'." I went to it and met his father

There are many who question this business of a pastor "being present" in the armed forces. While at the University of Chicago graduate school in 1967, I recall a student asking me at lunch one day after I announced I was going on active duty and to Vietnam, "How can you go over to Vietnam as an official representative of the Church and thereby by your presence give tacit endorsement to the corrupt Saigon régime?"

A short while later, when I was in Vietnam, I was talking with a crying young Marine who had just been informed of the death of his uncle with whom he was very close, and he was unable to return home for the funeral. I put it down in my diary, "And this is supporting a corrupt Saigon régime!"

Some might question being there with those people. But is the Church to neglect those who face life and death issues, who are questioning what values to adopt—what is right, what is wrong, what is important, what is valuable in life—especially when they are away from their support systems—their home, their community, their home church? The presence of a chaplain with a unit making was does not imply an endorsement of what they are doing any more than the presence of Jesus of Nazareth implied an endorsement of the fallenness of creation by God!

An interesting footnote is that my roommate at the University of Chicago later wrote me, requesting support for his application for conscientious objector status. The letter arrived in the midst of a big battle in which hundreds were being wounded and killed, many of them my friends. I replied with a very strong endorsement in support of his application.

As I mentioned at the beginning, this adventure with God has caused me to do things and go to places I'd never have anticipated.

One day I noticed some men jogging and I decided it was about time I started doing something physical since my whole life up to that point had been quite sedentary. They happened to be Navy SEALs, the ones who SCUBA and parachute and do James Bond-type work. I started running with them, listen to their lives, and one of them, a Chief Bruhmuller—he had one eye that always looked off in another direction—suggested I accompany some of the SEALs in a training mission at a camp in the hills of northern Virginia for a couple of weeks. I h ad recently completed the Army Jump School and now had my silver wings and couldn't help but realize that when I was on ship that had a UDT detachment, no matter how friendly I tried to be with them, they always remained remote, probably because a Chaplain to them represented someone who dealt with the weak, the suffering, the ones with problems, and they needed to maintain a façade of strength. Only someone who shared their experiences would be let inside their castle, their walls. These SEALS, however, upon seeing I had the Silver Wings of a Paratrooper, allowed me into their conversations, and they readily shared their concerns, what was happening in their life. That small piece of metal on my uniform created instant rapport with UDT, SEALs, the Army Special Forces in Okinawa, the Marine specialized reconnaissance units at Camp Pendleton and so on, people rarely visited by a Chaplain or who rarely visit a Chaplain, but are part of all the people to be served. It was always for them, and in response to their requests, that did these things, not for any particular enjoyment of doing the jumping as such.

It's a matter of responding to a call, a need, a request for a pastor, and "being present," not just as a visitor who comes and goes, but as someone who has gone through the same experienced and shared the same life, and perhaps also been hurt in the process, a sort of "wounded healer." It's like the Marine who once told me in Vietnam how he was at a big battle (at Con Thien) and how a chaplain got off the chopper, went around the place handing out Bibles and saying hello and a few prayers here and there, that God loved them, and then left them, flying away in the helicopter. The Marine said, "He was only doing a job; he really didn't care about us at all, love us, know us; he just was involved in caring about what he was doing." Marines are very perceptive! A person who rings doorbells asking "Are you saved?" is insufficient. That's the point. We communicate by who we are, by what we do, by how we live, by where we are; we communicate very little by what we say.

One day I was sitting next to a Marine Captain,[675] the officer in charge of a training area in northern Okinawa. The instruction was on how to cross a raging river safely. That is very important. I know. I lost two of my friends in Vietnam who crossed a raging river. Basically, the strongest swimmer attempts to swim across with a rope tied around his waist. If he doesn't make it, he can be pulled back. If he does make it, he can tie the rope to a tree or rock and the rest can pull themselves across the river using the rope and safely reach the other side.

---

[675] Captain MacDonald.

One young Marine was paralyzed with fear and wouldn't cross the river by pulling himself on the rope. Others had gone before him; that didn't help. The Marine Captain ordered him; he froze. He reasoned with him; he didn't budge. Finally, although in clean, starched, pressed uniform, the Marine Captain dove into the water and swam next to the young lad who then pulled himself across the river. And then he did it alone. And he had a smile. He was happy, confident, alive, not paralyzed by fear.

There are many interesting incidents—hundreds more—and observations that could be made on what "being present," of communicating God's love, mercy, acceptance, healing, and forgiveness, to all, not just Lutherans or Christians even, but to all, by living with and sharing, but perhaps these few will suffice.

II

I must hastily add that a chaplain does all that a civilian pastor does; a chaplain never ceases being a pastor! In fact, under International Law, a Chaplain is not even a "military person"—if captured in war, he does not become a "prisoner of war." He is merely "attached" to the armed forces and does only religious duties. There are the pastoral acts of baptism, marriage, funerals. There is catechetical instruction for youth and adults. There is pastoral counseling, committee work, writing for newspapers. There is conducting of worship, preaching, private communion. there is visitation to the sick, dying, and the imprisoned.

Perhaps there is some bending, refraction—like the appearance of a pencil bent in a glass of water. The format of the order of worship, while never pleasing or even acceptable to everyone who is a Protestant Christian, is nevertheless conducted so most will be able to worship without compromising one's own theology or liturgical sensitivities. The Chaplain is protected by U.S. Law against doing his way of worship in any way that is contrary to his church's teaching. The Chaplain, on the other hand, may be the only religious leader present, there constitutionally to guarantee the free exercise of religion. I even recall a Baptist chaplain (Bill Asher) who spoke of having a very large aluminum tray of four-ounce paper cups filled with wine for his communion services in Vietnam!

Furthermore, on a ship at sea or in the field of a battle zone, things become so much more simple and real. Necessarily, there is a complete lack of "falseness." Those who are there are there to worship God "in spirit and in truth."[676] There are no sermon notes, no ministerial robes, no false flowers or any flowers for that matter, no organ music, stained glass windows, pews, family or girl friends. There is no effort to communicate only a feeling that will not last; there is agreement between appearance and reality. Here one communicates not himself, not "ecclesiastical trappings;" one only communicates and celebrates God. Everything is transparent, genuine; they can see quite readily into anything that is not "honest."

Here is a Pentecostal group which might offer a song. Here we might sing some "oldie but goodie" Baptist hymns. Free-style prayers, and the message of God's grace, love, forgiveness, acceptance, as well as challenge to grow and change, pointing to the evidences of God's goodness and presence in their lives here and now from having been with them and listening to what they observe and how they live. Here is a Second Class Corpsman, a medic[677] who tells me: "You know, it might sound corny, but after a long day of jumping from foxhole to foxhole as the men get wounded and scream out for help, and somehow managing to avoid getting hit, I sit down and see the beautiful sunset. And I see God in that sunset. And I thank Him for letting me live one more day and ask Him to please let me live another day." Our gracious Lord is always with us, even in the night of death and in what the prophet Joel called "the valley of decision."

III

There are many other facets in the work of being a Chaplain—for example, being close to authority structures and people who make decisions affecting thousands and therefore being in a position to influence those decisions and thereby minister to the spiritual and moral welfare of thousands at once. This may be ensuring there are times for worship or at least rest as well as pointing to things the command would rather not consider. They might never know it—the people who are served. Perhaps it is arguing on behalf of just one such as one lad who went to a hearing (Captain's Mast) for a minor disciplinary infraction and all his chiefs spoke against him as a poor worker, on the basis of which he received a reduction in pay grade which he could not afford, being married. What was really involved was a personality conflict that had gotten out of control: this young lad refused to use bad language and refused to be harsh on those he supervised in the same manner as his chiefs. So, I went to the Captain—sort of meekly since he was a very powerful person—someone everyone on the ship feared. In fact, his name was Pehr Pehrsson, and some pronounced his name "fear fearson." One retiring warrant officer at his retirement party quipped, "We have nothing to fear but "fear" himself!" So, I went to his cabin and in a very polite manner told him I thought his decision was wrong. It was already printed in the ship's Plan of the Day and there was something of futility in my being there since I just assumed nothing could be done. But I just had to tell the Captain it was unjust. He replied, "I've been expecting you, Chaplain. I had my doubts, too." He changed his mind, reduced his sentence, and had the man transferred off the ship to another ship about three weeks later.

---

[676] Jn 4.23.

[677] HM2 Packard.

But the point is the access to the power structure. It would be like the pastor talking with the Mayor or any of the judges personally whenever he wanted to do so.

IV

There is also the facet of meeting many thousands of beautiful people in the time period of a career, as well as the disadvantage of staying with one group of people more than three years: either you or they get transferred. One gets very attached to some of them; it is very painful to see them go.

There is the facet of going to interesting places—where St. Paul preached, where the Christians were thrown to the lions, meeting a Lutheran Bishop in Denmark or Danny Kaye.

There is the large variety of types of settings for ministry—in a chapel setting, in a group counseling setting, in the heat of battle, on an isolated island in the middle of the ocean, on a staff, in a hospital or in a prison, in training situations—camping out at night and staring up into the same magnificent beauty of the firmament which continued to declare the glory of God, or jumping out of an airplane with the others, or being on the same ship at sea that can't make fresh water for showers for a whole week along with everyone else.

But all of these facets of the chaplain's ministry—access to authority and what can be done, encountering a kaleidoscopic variety of places and people and situations—I can only mention these in passing.

CONCLUSION

You will notice I have almost entirely omitted my numerous—and they are numerous!—and significant experiences of war, the terrors and the horrors of it. This is because these experiences are simply just too painful for me right now. They have left me with scars that are just now beginning to emerge into my awareness, at times I don't want them to. vietnam has left many scars, and I'm told that more Vietnam veterans have died since the war by their own hand than were killed in the war itself.

The place where I was, for the most part, Khe Sanh, was actually quite beautiful before the big battle erupted there. I can recall attending staff meetings in which the S-2 (the intelligence officer) admitted that we really didn't know just what the enemy was up to. Battles raged everywhere but where we were. Only small numbers of enemy spotted here and there, no large numbers, no apparent patterns or strategy.

Then all hell broke loose for several months. What we hadn't realized was that those few individuals passing through our area were actually depositing pieces of ordnance here and there, and when the battle erupted, all those stored and buried explosives were in place to be used by the enemy against us.

These are like the unresolved and buried and unconscious griefs and guilts and fears in our souls.

Now I'm facing retirement. I was just passed over again for promotion yesterday. I'm in the second half of my life which always requires a struggle because the solutions which applied to the first half no longer work. I'm in a work where I get close to several people only to see them depart and knowing I'[l never again see them. And all of this—and who knows what else—is causing a lot of my Vietnam war experiences to re-emerge and making me experience panic, jumpiness, anxiety, an intense desire for withdrawal from everyone, and isolation, lack of trust in authority figures and structures. I have realized what's happening, and have taken the action of attending a group of Vietnam veterans at the VA hospital next to my naval base of Great Lakes, for help.

I recall writing in my diary while in Vietnam that the real casualties of war are always to the living, not those who have died. Then, I was thinking of the wounded, the surviving wife or children or parents of a dead man. Now, I myself know this personally.

As this is happening, however, I know hope. I recall the statement of Hank Blood—one of those Bible translator missionaries in Vietnam from the Wycliffe Bible Translators I once met in an airport in which we both were stranded a few days waiting for a plane. He was later killed by the Communist forces there. He said, "Never think of the greatness of your problems; think only of the greatness of your God."

I began this talk with a Jewish story. I want to end it with an old, familiar Jewish story. A man at Crakow once had a dream of a fortune buried under a certain bridge in Prague. So, he left home and went to the bridge and began digging under it. The bridge-keeper stopped him and said, "What are you doing?" He said, "I had this dream of a fortune buried under this bridge and left my home in Crakow to come here and get it." The bridge-keeper replied, "That's most unusual. I also just had a dream last night of a fortune that is hidden inside a certain house in Crakow, just like the house you described you live in!"

The point, I guess, is that we may look elsewhere for our fortunes when all along they were with us, in us. But we need others sometimes to tell us that. I ha ve had my experiences of my "adventure with God" which might be of interest to you, perhaps. But the point is that God is active in your lives also, and your "adventure with God" as you review your own life's history, is that will reward you, not someone else's treasure. For we have a gracious and loving father who gives us all, individually, His gifts, and who loves us all, individually, as exceedingly precious in His sight.

"CHAPLAIN'S CORNER," Naval Station, Great Lakes, Il: Great Lakes Bulletin 58:43 (28 Oct 1983) p. 9.

[Submitted with the title, "With God There is No Defeat" but the title was not printed][678]

In emptiness there is fullness. The empty tomb as much as the empty womb potentiates new life. When all else passes, God, He who has been there all along, remains. To be attracted to anything is to lose everything. To have is to not have. To have all is to be empty of all. To be completely empty is the threshold into the new, the full.

It is only when everything is gone that that which is everything is. A little speck of something—whether it be a personal trait, a fibre of self-will, an intelligent thought to make sense of reality, a confident assurance, a feeling, a proof, a posterity, something tangible—a trace of aught—even a mere speck—and one has nothing but the speck. it is only in total darkness that there is light. The light shines in the darkness.

In awareness of total abandonment, an experience of the absence of God, 'the dark night of the soul,' one is eternally begotten and born again through faith—that is, the absence of any proof, any splendor, anything seen, anything tangible, and any self-worth. Faith is always born in a desert; it is all God wants of us. We look not to the things seen, but the things unseen.

The Man of Sorrows is the Man who removes our sorrows to Himself, the Wounded Healer who can only heal because He is wounded. He becomes what we are so that we might become what He is. So He dwells in the shadows of our life—in the thirsty one, the hungry one, the poor who eat the crumbs that fall from richness that disregards everything but a good time, in the imprisoned and in the sick one. The meek inherit the earth. The race does not go to the swift nor the battle to the strong. There is only one authoritative voice: that of the poor, because then God Himself is speaking. God hears only the prayers of the poor who cannot even look up to heaven. God's Kingdom and salvation and riches are only for those who are despised, rejected, sorrowing, the pained and the hurting who need a Physician. God loves sinners, can heal only those who know they are sick, who have nothing to lose because they have nothing to lose. God rescues when all hope is gone, only then. The presence of suffering reflects the presence of God.

To be poured out until nothing is left is to be filled. In the nothing is everything. Not the Marine slogan 'to really live you must almost die,' but rather, 'To really live, you must really die.' As dead foliage fertilizes new growth, as the seed must die to give new life, so the corruptible is raised incorruptible.

The winters of our sorrows are never so great that they are not succeeded by springtime of nascent newness. In the valley of the shadow of death we encounter God with us. Like Elijah, we hear the voice of God speaking to us not in splendor and thunder, but in a hushed and muted whisper.

Removal of the anything, like sediment settling out of muddy waters, is purification. Wreaked wretchedness and the loneliness of loss frees and liberates us by throwing us into the abyss of the nothing, where God is. Only he who has experienced the nothing of this life has concomitantly experienced the eternal birth of the Son, the new birth from above. only he who suffers the cross inherits the crown. There is no resurrection without a crucifixion.

So we rejoice in our emptiness, our death, our sufferings, our loneliness, our depressions, our crosses. We have confidence when our hearts accuse us, when there is no apparent hope, when we recognize ourselves as wretched and helpless. God is greater. Christ arose! Ray W. Stubbe

FUNERAL MEDITATION FOR LANCE CORPORAL DAVID B. GANDER – 08 November 1983[679]

(Lessons: Psalm 46, 1 Cor 15.19-23, 35-38, 42-44, 52-55, 57-58a, Matt 5.1-9)

---

[678] The influence from reading Meister Eckhart is obvious.

[679] LCPL Gander, USMC, a 19 year-old serving in the Marine barracks in Beirut, Lebanon, was killed when the four story building in which he slept was blown up by terrorists. He had arrived in Lebanon 27 May and expected to return home in November on Christmas leave. His letters home tell of an incident in which a Marine patrol was hit by snipers, returned fire, and were then reprimanded for firing, disregarding "rules of engagement." In his letters he mentioned how little things back home have come to develop great meaning for him. At the time the two Marines came to his mother's home, they indicated there were 50 MIA, including David. [Bofrsuk, Alan J., "City Marine is presumed among dead," Milwaukee Journal, 26 Oct 1983, pp. 1, 8. Borsuk, Alan J., "A victim of Beirut blast, peacekeeper is laid to rest," Milwaukee Journal, 9 November 1983, Part 2, p. 3.].

Lance Corporal David G. Gander was born February 26, 1964, and died in the service of his country on October 23, 1983, in Beirut, Lebanon.

A few weeks ago he was wearing Marine green, serving his fellow Marines as one of the battalion's cooks, undoubtedly frustrated, wondering what it all meant, who the enemy really were, restricted by "rules of engagement" so they could carry weapons but not load them or fire back if fired upon, writing to his grandma that he never realized that the little things in life were so important, attending worship services, writing his mom about what the chaplain said, telling her that he was praying for his grandpa in the hospital; and he was 19 years old.

As I read about him in the newspaper, I felt I could have known him so very well. There were so many others only a few years ago, who also could not tell who the enemy were, who questioned, "Why are we here?" and "why do we have these stupid 'rules of engagement'?" Who were concerned and did things for the little children who frequently were the victims. Who would tell me they never knew how important the little things in life were, and would explain that they meant peace and quiet and just how much their mom did for them as they grew up—that's what they would really sway. It all sounded so very familiar. And I thought of the 473 men who died in the battle of Khe Sanh, Vietnam, where I was, many of whom I personally knew, and how I carried them, some missing parts of their bodies. And I thought: does it ever end? is there any hope?

You see, we all need a container for our soul, several containers, to carry us along our journey of life. Something to hold all our pieces together, to carry our dreams and hopes. We become anxious when our containers are broken, smashed, or just not there any longer, that die.

One container is our body. Another is our society and our government, and another may be a marriage or friendship, a company that employs us, our battalion, ship, squad, our church.

In the end, the best we can provide proves insufficient. The plans and policies, the superior technology—nothing prevented that psychotic madman and his load of explosives. I think it's important to realize that it was the best that man could devise that put Christ on the cross—the best in human justice, law, might and orderliness of society—Roman law, and the best and most strict morality and conservative tradition and emphasis on living the right way of the religion of the Hebrews: THESE are what put Christ on the Cross—the best of man is the sin.

Here lies a body, broken, as on the cross hung a body broken. That which was to contain life, to contain our hopes and dreams, the promise of a future, crushed, broken, shattered, torn.

How appropriate our lessons; how comforting is God's Word to us today! The body may indeed be broken, but it will be made whole; the body may indeed be subject to decay and hurt and pain; it will be transformed into what is not subject to decay or hurt or pain.

And we shall all—friends and family—be united together so that the fragmentation we feel of separation will change into an eternal togetherness. God has attached Himself—glued Himself as it were—to us in Christ, so Christ is fully human and fully God. Those who become part of Christ's body, His faithful people, through faithful dependence on Him, looking to Him, praying to Him—as did David, trusting Him, are His. And because, therefore, Christ arose, and He was the same flesh we are, and we are now part of His body, God did that in Him as a first indication of what He plans to do in general, we, too, shall rise to newness of everlasting life, where there shall be no more tears, no more wars, or diseases, or suffering. A container forever!

How can this be? It sounds so impossible. is this our experience?

A few weeks ago I did one of my favorite things: I walked through the newly-fallen colored leaves. I was amazed at the beauty of each leaf, of the extravagance of God's beauty, of His provision—so extravagant, reflecting the abundance of His goodness.

Now I see the trees, and the leaves have mainly fallen. There are only lonely bare branches. it seems as though the trees are dead, lifeless. yet, we know new life will come, that the trees will bloom again, that the winters cannot be so severe that there isn't new life in the Springtime. How do we know that? Can we prove it will happen again? Can anyone prove the future?

Or take the caterpillar in the cocoon, in darkness, in processes not observable, and then a beautiful butterfly,[680] more beautiful than the caterpillar ever was. Or a seed. Both Jesus and Paul point to the seed that dies is the ground,[681] seemingly, but then a big bush or tree emerges, only, however, as the seed is destroyed and dies.

O yes, all around us are numerous evidences of what God intends for us. The Gospel from the Sermon on the Mount[682] is that only when there is apparently no hope is there the possibility of real hope, only when there is emptiness is there the [680] Ancient Christian symbol of the resurrection.

---

[681] Jn 12.24, 1 Cor 15.36-44.

[682] Mat 5.1-9, the Beatitudes. Cf. Matt 9.12: "Those who are well have no need of a physician, but those who are sick."

possibility of being filled with a filling that lasts, that the only way to the Promised Land lies through the place of deserts as one deserted. How can one be comforted with the comfort that God can alone give unless they mourn? How can anyone be filled with what God wants to give if they are already filled with everything else? How can one drink of the water of life if they are not thirsty, or eat the bread of life unless they are hungry?

Now I have been with Marines in combat long enough to know how we all lose all the comforts—even light at night in which to read or write letters, unless one is lucky enough to have a candle. There is emptiness, abandonment; the rear never comes to understand or care, it seems. Continuous fear—snipers and incoming, shrieking rockets and thunking mortars. And yet one feels the presence of God in this unlikely place of turmoil, or shooting, killing, fear, and desperation, terror and aloneness. This is because everyone is so open, so human, caring towards each other, sharing the few heat tabs so others can have a hot meal, some water out of one's own canteen to a thirsty buddy. Maybe even huddling together during incoming and hugging each other as the rockets and mortars pound—yes, even Marines, desperately hugging each other.

No, I wasn't in Beirut then, but I was in Vietnam 18 months. I was in Parris Island; I was in the training areas of Okinawa. I was I the training areas of 29 Palms. And it is always the same. That's just how Marines are, usually. One feels real because everyone else is real!

No. I wasn't there then in Beirut, God was! That's for sure. And it is very easy for me to hear a voice, of the One who identifies with all our pain, hanging on a cross, and saying to our brother, David, "My son, today you shall be with me in paradise!"[683] For David apparently trusted God, prayed to Him, had faith. yes, there is an end to it all; there is hope; in the arms of a loving God. Amen.

PRAYER, VETERANS DAY CEREMONY, VIETNAM MEMORIAL FOUNTAIN, CHICAGO, IL, 11 November 1983

Father in heaven: we would like to forget, but we cannot.

How can we forget our friends daily dying in such horrible ways?

How can we forget when we wake up in a pool of sweat from nightmares?

How can we forget when memories cling to our soul and will not go away?

How can we forget 2,494 who are still missing, unaccounted for, whose moms and dads, wives and children, still wonder: will they come home?

We would like to be accepted, but we find ourselves withdrawing from a society that didn't care then and doesn't care now. Over 57,000 died there but over 80,000 have died since returning home by their own hand.

We would like to cry and wash away the memories in a baptism of tears that we might rise again to newness of life, but there are no more tears; or, we would like to be able to stop crying, but cannot.

We would like to scream at what we see: there are no ears, just as then, so now, more dead.

We desperately crave peace: there is continual warfare within and without, and more blood flows—detached heads, a dangling jaw—

Our souls bleed!

We cry to You for the healing to begin! for the healing of our memories, for the acceptance we so desperately crave, for the accounting of our MIA.

We, who have been in continuous, concentrated combat, are indeed those described by Your prophet Isaiah:

He was despised and rejected by men, a man of sorrows
and familiar with suffering
Like one from whom men hide their faces
he was despised, and we esteemed him not ...
We considered h im striken by God
He was pierced for our transgressions
He was bruised for our iniquities.[684]

Perhaps, we may therefore be the reminder to the rest of our society:

That war may not be waged with impunity;

that there us a cost—to those who still live—

and thereby help heal our broken society, that by our wounds all may be healed, they will look at us and think again.

---

[683] Lk 23.43.

[684] Isa 53.3-5.

May this memorial remind us always that the war is not over for many who are still fighting in a hostile and unfamiliar territory;
May this memorial remind us how we have been betrayed in statistics and body counts
May this memorial remind those who have a "hot heart for chilling deeds"[685] to think again
May the flowing waters of this fountain symbolize the flowing life from within that may again gush forth from healed hearts, healed by You, the God of all life
Amen.

KHE SANH VETS IN THE NEW YORK CITY 'TICKER TAPE' PARADE, 07 MAY 1985

[From those who gave their names and addresses to Ernie Husted while assembling for the parade]

NEW YORK CITY TICKER TAPE PARADE 07 May 1985. Photos by Ernie Husted. Banner made by James Hebron, co-organizer of the parade. About 50 Khe Sanh veterans gathered together, the first time since the siege.

[685] Sophocles, Antigone, line 88.

Peter ANDRONACO (I/3/12)
Tony ASTUCCIO (H/2/26)
Ronald BASCOM
"Doc" Dick BLANCHFIELD (B/1/26)
Ed BROWN (F/2/26)
Mark CARRAWAY, Sr. (1/9)
"Doc" John CICALA, Jr. (B/1/26)
Bob COLLIER
George DAVIS
Louis DELUCA (B/3dRecon)
Edwin DIAZ (F/2/26)
Barry FIXLER (E/2/26)
Tom FORD (F/2/26)
Alan GLICK (3/26)
Bob GREER (L/3/26)
Bob HAARMANN
Dennis HALL (H/2/26)
Jim HEBRON (B/1/26)
Leonard HENDERSON (HQ/1/13)
John E. HENNESEY (B/1/26)
Rod HERMANSON (B/3dRecon)
Gene ISAACS
Rick JOHNSON (1/26)
Steve JOHNSON (B/3dRecon)
Jack KILBRIDE (I/3/26)
Dr. LASKER (BAS, 3/26)
Jim LAVERTY (F/2/26)
Albert R. LUMPKIN, Jr. (B/3dRecon)
Kevin C. MACAULAY (B/3dRecon)
Dennis MANNION (K/3/26)
Hector MARRERO (1/4)
Charles S. MARTIN (M/3/26)
Steve McGUIRK (I/3/26)
Bill MESSNER (B/3dRecon)
Kenneth MOODY (F/2/9)
Tom MOREHOUSE (C/3dRecon)
Raul OBLIJAS
Vincent ORTIZ (E/2/26)
Mark A. PAGANELLI (C/1/9)
Richard PAOLINO (F/2/26)
Sid PATRICIO (D/1/26)
Gregory J. PELAND (3/1)
Isidor ROBERTSON (H&S/1/26)
John RODRIGUES
Miguel A. RODRIGUEZ
Horace ROLAND
Chuck RUDD (B/3dRecon)
Benjamin SANCHEZ (D/1/9)
Ray SANSIVIERO (D/1/26)
Larry SEAVY-CIOFFI (A/1/9)
Darrell SCOTT (B/3dRecon)
"Doc" Don SPROEHALE (I CAV)
Ray STUBBE (1/26)
Peter VALENTE (G/2/26)
Howard WHITAKER(W/1/13)

DIARY NOTES while a patient at Stress Disorder Treatment Unit, VA North Chicago, Il

Monday, 08 April 1985: Vietnam is like an exposed photographic plate that gets developed later in life.

Tuesday, 20 August 1985: In the book by Willa Cather, One of curs, a WW I youth goes to war and finds himself and then is killed. In the Nam, men found themselves, but are still alive; is this not even worse?

Thursday, 05 Sep 1985: The great battle had defiled. A ritual cleansing was unavoidable. No suitable sacrificial victim for the sacrifice or ritual was available. Therefore, all society became the target in disintegration, and the soldier became the sacrificial victim for himself in repetitive cycles of self-destruction. While in the "unclean state" and therefore apart from society, he could only do that which was appropriate to uncleanness since the "passage" by ritual cleansing had not been accomplished – therefore, multiple marriages (couldn't assimilate into the matrimonial, social function), multiple jobs, alcohol and drugs and sex and other violence – violence permeated into his very being. He was infected with violence.

PROPOSED LOGO FOR KHE SANH VETERANS, INC. – 07 August 1996

The "V" stands for: "veteran," "Vietnam," "victory," and the "V" in the Tactical Marks on all supply Mount-out boxes in the 26th Marine Regiment (which had a blue "V"). Twenty-sixth Marine Regiment is historically part of the FIFTH Marine Division.

The "K" and the "S" emphasize sharpness, twisted pain of the terrain: mountains, rivers, valleys, pathways. In some ways, the "S" is in the shape of a snake to emphasize power, danger, and renewal of life. As the snake sheds its skin it becomes a symbol of regeneration and power. Khe Sanh's terrain and experience is sharp, painful, twisting within memories, difficult to discern where one is at any time.

The nine-sided polygon outside represents the multi-faceted nature of our organization, which includes all branches of the armed services, local people, civilians, and the nine or so years in wh ich Americans ser ved at Khe Sanh.

The design is devoid of extraneous details; it is not "busy" (or complex) and is therefore suitable for a lapel pin, letterhead, buttons, or small patches. It is meant to be universal, applicable to all who lived and served in Khe Sanh. The design was completed 7 August 1996 by Ray W. Stubbe.

A PERSONAL NOTE FROM YOUR TEMPORARY EDITOR (Khe Sanh Veterans: Red Clay, Issue #41 (Spring, 1998), pp. 43-44. I had been temporary Editor of the Khe Sanh magazine/newsletter, filling in when Ernie Husted, Jr., was abruptly activated to go to Iraq.

This magazine is perhaps the backbone of our organization: the means of keeping us in contact with each other; the vehicle for expressing our feelings, thoughts, hopes and hurts; the forum for exchanging information that may promote healing and resolution of concerns by providing some of the 'missing pieces' in our experience since we all have the pieces of the whole that, together, will make us whole; the opportunity to make a permanent, historical statement for future generations; the unexpected gift of finding a long, lost buddy, and renewing some of the nourishment to our spirit that comes from a connectedness that affirms each other's basic humanity.

Various editors have contributed their 'labor of love' to make this magazine the much appreciated gift it is to so many. Their efforts are, indeed, works of love—love, not as an emotion, but as an action, an action which gives life to another without expecting any reward or recognition on the part of the giver. (What great lovers so many we've known as Khe Sanh were!). Ernie Husted, Jr., first started to add articles, print requests, poems, memoirs, and emphasized the fun, joy, things that would bring a smile. Ed Evans sought to make it more readable and include the 'heart and soul' of those who were at Khe Sanh. Ernie Spencer made it a first-class, professional magazine, and created a forum for exchange of communications, a dialogue, not unlike the campfire groups of warriors who would recount their experiences and feelings. He strove to make it a healing vehicle by being honest with our feelings and hurts which once recognized, can be dealt with. Ernie knew that the emotional and spiritual scars of war are best dealt with by means of artistic expression—such as poetry. I have emphasized the things that hopefully will make us proud to have been at Khe Sanh, as well as recognizing the lesser known people and units so that we will all appreciate our common brotherhood. We have always avoided political or specifically religious statements. My own hand was simply a temporary one, and I had planned to step down as soon as another Editor could be found. At the last reunion, one of the Board members stated that my efforts reflected my own 'agenda' and that this may have caused many of our brothers to drop from our membership. I sincerely hope not, but if I have offended anyone by how I have written the past five issues (No. 37, 38, 39, 40, and 41) I sincerely apologize to you.

Our new editor, Ray Truelove, is a Khe Sanh vet, has served as the Editor of the 3rd Marine Division's Caltrap magazine, is currently the Editor of the Florida state Vietnam Veterans of America newspaper (which received VVA's 1997 National Award for the best VVA magazine/newspaper in the country). Ray will be doing all of his work as a donation to our organization. He is professionally competent. He knows in his heart what it means to be a veteran of Khe Sanh. And, he obviously has a great first name!

I will continue to maintain our Khe Sanh archives. We currently have approximately 100,000 pages of letters, diaries, memoirs of Khe Sanh vets, copies of official reports, etc. If you desire to contribute any of this, please consider doing so. This information is very helpful when calls are received wanting to know some detail about some action.

We deal best with the past by taking the energy we have from it—angers, depressions, intensity, and using that to motivate us into serving the living. The motto for our Milwaukee County War Memorial is apt: 'Honor the dead by serving the living.' It is then we are able to be pulled into the future instead of being pushed by the past. Robert Penn Warren's poem 'When the Tooth Cracks—Zing' has these lines which are so appropriate:

> 'Must we totally forget a thing to know it?
> Perhaps redemption is nothing more than the way
> We learn to live with memories that are no longer remembered.'

Khe Sanh will always live with us who were there to experience what happened there, but not only as a place of sheer terror or overwhelming beauty or desperate isolation or feeling abandoned; it is also and more so the place where we looked into our brother's eye and beheld the presence of God.

The Hebrew word 'Adam' refers to red clay used to make pottery. Isaiah 64:8 may be translated: 'We are red clay; you formed us. The work of Your hands all of us are.' Red clay is, of course, the laterite soil of Khe Sanh formed by millennia of rains weathering the volcanic eruptions of the crater on which Khe Sanh sits, a place born in violence, with violence a lingering spirit of the place, a place of lush life because life feeds on life. The red clay penetrated our skin in such a degree that I recall that after departing from there, I would take showers and for several weeks, the white towel would have a brownish red that looked as though I had wiped another place of my anatomy. In some ways, I feel that the physical substance of this red clay carried a spiritual reality that penetrated into my very being, and the spirits of so many who lost their lives there are dwelling within me. (This sort of primitive understanding that touches very ancient religious concepts of 'taboo' and 'defilement' and 'uncleanness' as well as more developed religious concepts of 'sacramentalism.' Perhaps it is more akin to what we actually feel than what the modern mind permits us to 'see' as reality).

So I depart as your Editor, knowing that this magazine will be in very good, competent and caring hands, and that the contents will always be of great significance, for they will come from you, the readers, you, who are veterans of the Khe Sanh experience; the gifts are in all the people, and just need to be drawn out.

The British in India used the term 'So long,' as a farewell. It is an abbreviation of 'Salaam' which is derived from 'Shalom,' a blessing of peace, strength, confidence, the opportunity to live and grow and flourish. SO LONG! – Chaplain Ray W. Stubbe.

TALKING POINTS ON KHE SANH – (for presentation to Milwaukee Chapter of Military officers Association of America, 11 Feb 2007)

TIE-IN [2006 talk] Days and dates are the same now (2007) as in 1968 (until 29 Feb).
10 Feb: C-130 crashed, USAF: no more landings. (with fog, Rt. 9 impassible, DZ small, ammo dump hit, our situation very tenuous)
Humor: C Med: casualty out-runs the corpsman
Recon: scout dog in helicopter
Walk past recon, just prior to siege: "Gentlemen, circumcise your watches!" ["synchronize" not in Marine vocabulary!]
LCPL Wm. Slaugenhaupt: "I lost everything!"

GENERAL: Tchepone fell 01 May 1961
Operation TULUNGUN 02 Mar – 12 Apr 62
USSF at Khe Sanh 08 Jul 1962
Located 6 ½ miles from Lao/Vn border,
14 mi. S of DMZ most remote US base.
Cook – hills – volcano – Bru – isolation – Route 9

10 NOV 1967 On Hill 881-S, 4 ½ mi. from KSCB, Col Lownds: "You will all soon be in the American history books!"

DMZ Potsdam Conf. set at 16° [N-China; S-France]
Geneva Conf: Vietnam (Dong) wanted at 16°, running just S of Tourane (DaNang); France (Mendes France) wanted at 18° so Hue, DaNang, and Rt. 9 would be in its control. Molotov (USSR): "Then we are agreed, the parallel should be at the 17th." Officially divided 20 Jul 1954. Rostow: USSR was attempting to appease France so it wouldn't join NATO.

DONATION, MUSEUM: 27 Jun 2005, visited by Bill Brewster, Gayle Martinson
18 Jul 2005: picked up materials (2 truck loads)
10 Nov 2005: gave presentation at museum
23 Sep 2006: Exhibit opens ("In the Belly of the Dragon").
Give plug to donate materials to the museum!!

PRIOR TO SIEGE: Jeanne Dixon, summer '67, predicted 1200 dead at KS
Garden of Eden – tigers, ocelots, exotic birds, lush vegetation, coffee plantation
1200 Vietnamese civilians & 12,000 Bru civilians

SIEGE:
["The earth is broken, broken down. The earth crumbled in pieces. The earth trembled and tottered. The earth reeled to and fro like a drunken man." Isa 24.19-20.]

Became "blood bath," "killing field," "moonscape," a "Valley of Dry Bones." (A thing of beauty is not a joy forever) [Keats, "To Autumn"]

PERSONAL - 106 bunker, visited 7 Feb/hit 23 Feb, man with no head
- 24 Jan: recon bunker hit, men in my bunker
- Lost 30 pounds (185 pounds when arrived Vietnam, 129 at end of siege)
- worship services 7 min long.
- 10 Feb: week ending, (Sat): 53 services, 435 attended.
- 22 Feb: washing hands/shrinking blood/CH-53 hit.
- 91st Psalm
- effects, "endless night". Dad at talk. Mom's hair
- Dear John letters.

NEWS 25% of all evening TV, Feb-Mar 68
Cover, Newsweek 18 Mar "The Agony of Khe Sanh"
David Douglas Duncan, I Protest
"1,000-yard stare"

RT 9 9 of 26 bridges, Ca Lu-Khe Sanh

AIR Runway closed 12-25 Feb by USAF
Airstrip: 60 ft. wide, 3,900-ft. long 21 Jan – 11 Feb, USAF delivered 3,669 tons in 320 sorties

OMINOUS Tanks – 1st use, Lang Vei. 8 Feb
Pres. J: JCS signed that KS would be held, 29 Jan nuclear weapons considered compared to Dien Bien Phu [Note 304 Div].
Isolated, vulnerable, heavy shelling,
Daily fog.

INCOMING up to 1,600/da.
Col Lownds (prior) to erect false antennae, bunkers. LtCol Wilkinson's rejoinder
Phil Wright in trench, half green, half red
Recon man jumps into trench, avoids pisser.

BASE 0.9 mi long / 0.4 mi. wide, occupied by 2725

NVA B5-T8 Front HQ established 06 Dec

ORDNANCE More tons than all of Pacific, WW II, 1942-1943
NVA area, 564 sq km, we delivered 99,600 tons
we received: 11,114 rounds (arty, rock, mort, RR) 21 Jan – 01 Apr, ave 150/da (ave. of all of I Corps, VN, in 1967)
we fired: 117,643 rounds arty (including 12,441 175)
B52 128 500-lb. & 750-lb. bombs in area 1000 x 100 yards B52: 2,602 sorties delivering 75,631 tons (ave. of 35 sorties and 1,022 tons per day).
533 sorties delivered within 3 km KSCB brought up to 500 meters of our trenches

[Normal load, 108 bombs, but capable of holding 128 500 & 750-lb. bombs dropped in a rectangular pattern, usually 1,000 yards long and 100 yards wide. Sometimes the boxes overlap or criss-cross. Most flights consist of 6 aircraft together, covering an area one-half mile wide and three miles long, all within a period of several seconds. To obtain a grasp, one need only think of a comparable area within the city. Flew at 10,000 – 30,000 ft. altitude: unheard, unseen. A 750-pound bomb leaves a crater 30 ft. across and 10 ft. deep.]

Plus, 15,217 sorties TACAIR (daily: 184)

DZ
500 x 300 meters
1,000 yards off runway
Air-drops on runway thought might destroy it

LIFE
Clothes rotted off
C rats: 1 per day
water: 1 canteen cup per day (950 out of water 7 da.)
one Marine died on 881-S after being wounded and unable to be evacuated due to fog, 4 days
Marines on 881-S in "body bunker", 5 days of not able to be evacuated. In cargo nets
Bunkers, trenches collapsed suffocating people

KIA
Officially 205 (20 Jan – 31 Mar)
Official records of subordinate units: 274 KIA
Other units: +70, for a total of 344
Add Lang Vei, FOB, District, plus KIA from PEGASUS (1-14 Apr) and 15-16 Apr, 1/9) and 252 more are added, for a total of:
573 Americans, 20 Jan – 16 Apr, the date defenders of KS were there.

WIA
2,541 patients seen in C Med. Of them, 2,037 WIA and 490 NBC.
2,249 evacuated. Only 292 returned

NVA KIA
Over 10,000

Bru KIA
About 10,000

TOTAL:
Over 20,000 who weren't Americans, died on this battlefield, 21 Jan – 31 Mar 1968!

People there:
Capt Frank Kennedy: delivers several pints blood despite ¼-mi. visibility + fog, navigating by dead reckoning in his CH-53 landing by auto-rotation, guided by a hand-held Aldis lamp
Defenders awarded PUC
Gun crews in open during incoming; wire men run out to repair severed land lines during incoming
Dr. removes live mortar round from stomach [Dr. Feldman, Mussari]
DZ and supply movers in open
Officers & NCOs move about their troops
Stretcher-bearers move casualties to medevac choppers during shelling
Col. David E. Lownds & staff targeted and initiated strike request for 95% of B52s and generally conducted entire course of battle is disregarded.
During an ordinary day, his intelligence staff generated targets for 100 TPQ-10 strikes, 16 Arc Lights, 100 flights FW and up to 500 arty missions. Yet, only Westmoreland is in press.

Khe Sanh is not the strategy or tactics, a place to be analyzed or debated. IT IS THE PEOPLE THERE!

Men frequently gave last drops of water, food
Men rushed out during incoming to rescue buddies.
9 Mar: CPL Kenneth Williams killed as he shouted warning to LCPL John T. Reilly.
Jonathan Nathaniel Spicer – CO with Navy Cross

HUMOR Postal clerk and the money orders
Those NVA are piss-poor gunners!

LETTER TO MS. BEVERLY J. WELBOURNE, 20 July 2006

I've been long interested in how something very small, perhaps unnoticed, can have life-long and major consequences. Thus, the "thalodimine babies," or the long-term effects of DDT or radiation or Agent Orange or battle experiences that result in PTSD or the worms that got into the blood of POWs held by the Japanese in WW II that only after 50 years emerge as life-threatening, or the disease known as "shingles" emerging in 50s to 70s due to having had chicken pox as a child. I read in the Bible of how, in the end, the sheep are separated from the goats (eternal life verses eternal punishment) all based on whether or not one "gave food to the hungry, water to the thirsty, friendship and visits to the imprisoned and sick, clothing for the naked," and in both cases, they say "when did we see you hungry, thirsty, naked, in prison, sick, etc." as though it were unnoticed. Yet, eternal destiny is based on these little things of how we treat each other on a life-long basis, according to Matthew 25!

The little things of life! The things that are unnoticed at the time! An example is how Admiral Zumwalt, the senior Naval officer in Vietnam while his son was a young Lieutenant in river boats being fired upon by VC in the jungles around Saigon, attempted to help his son by making things less dangerous and lethal for him, by spraying the river banks with Agent Orange to defoliate and deny sanctuary and cover for the VC. Decades later, the son died from cancer from the Agent Orange, and his father, the retired Admiral, had to bury his son. He attempted to "do good," but only evil resulted. What came from the heart was insufficient. Who could have foreseen that the result would be so deadly? Yet, this little thing had deadly consequences that could not have been anticipated.

How much little things affect life! Like the fulcrum of a level (like a teeter-totter), these things move life decades later to our benefit or to our woe.

LETTER TO JAMES DINGMAN, 06 August 2007

Many years ago—far too many, unfortunately!—I learned in a philosophy class in college a distinction between two kinds of knowledge. In a class focused on Søren Kierkegaard, we learned the difference between objective knowledge and "interested" knowledge. The former is "scientific" (that is, knowledge gained by examination of an object from a distance, dispassionately) resulting in knowledge "about" the object. The latter is knowledge gained by immersion within an experience with an emotional investment, and results in knowledge "of" the object. The former seeks to know something (or somebody) by various descriptions that originate within the observer and have little or nothing to do with the reality of the object, such as when I say a table is of a certain dimension. The latter unfolds from within the object which discloses its reality to us. (The same distinction is found in the Bible. In the Hebrew scriptures (or "Old Testament") the Hebrew word Da'ath is used, for example, in the "knowledge" gained sexually or through commitment, as in the verse, "My people die from lack of the knowledge of the Lord," in which the cause is not ignorance of the details or knowledge "about" the Lord, but from faithful relationship and deep commitment, which refers to knowledge "of" the Lord.)

Most of the things we discussed involve the tension between those who "know" the events of Vietnam and the current plague of wars in the Middle East on the basis of knowing it from a distance, not from personal involvement. There may be passion and there may be an emotional dimension, of course, but it is still predicated upon information gained from a distance. You and I, however, are operating from a knowledge "of" based on immersion within the reality with an emotional investment and commitment. A certain frustration, even an "alienation!" results between those who have knowledge "of" in their dialogue with people who only have knowledge "about!"

Sometimes, the two become conjoined. In fact, I would think that those who have knowledge "of" are always seeking to know more "about" as well as make sense of the reality they have experienced.

Such has been my quest. The blinding exposure to combat leaves those who experience it, in a state similar to the famous parable told by Plato in Republic, Book 7. (The man chained with his fellows in a cave in which they stare at shadows case on a wall in front of them by people carrying various things and a fire which causes the shadows to be cast. The man escapes, sees the reality of the people carrying objects, returns to the cave to inform his fellows that what they see as shadows is not the reality. They regard him as insane or perhaps wounded by exposure to the light and tell him that if he continues to disturb them with his tales of "reality" they will kill him!)

In years past, well-meaning psychologists have asked me why I just don't forget the war. This is an impossible task, of course, since the memories are permanently engraved (or, as modern students of the human brain will teach, through a process of "neuroplasticity" the neurons have been re-wired and the part that processes the short-term memory and dreams, the hippocampus, has been permanently altered, physically, so that dreams are experienced in vivid reality, and much of reality becomes dream-like in "flashbacks."). I once asked the professor who taught my Kierkegaard class, upon meeting him several decades later, "how does one 'unlearn' knowledge gained as knowledge 'of'?" His response was by gaining knowledge "of" something or someone greater within which the experiences of the war might be contained as a part and not the whole. The process of doing this has consumed my years since then. My studies of Jung have added another process: that of transformation, in which the negatives become positives. Many combat veterans already do this when they draw upon the energy from the "black hole" of their experience and transform that into community involvement or other positive endeavors, and transfer the knowledge of caring for others they learned as a means of survival in combat to caring for others in ways that those who have not been exposed to the fragile and tenuous nature of life one "learns" in combat to everyday encounters.

In the meantime, it is up to you and I, and most of the veterans, to be the "living memory" of war, not in terms of simple information "about" but bringing the passionate awareness of danger so that similar mistakes are not so easily made. Elie Wiesel's book, Night, (about his experiences as a teenager in a WW II concentration camp) contains the tragic scene of a villager captured early in the war who returns to the village warning his neighbors to flee for their lives! They regard him as an idiot, mentally deranged, even a sort of clown, the sight of which evokes laughter—and then, all are eventually carted off to the concentration camps.

That story, like the Plato's parable, resonates with insistence today, and prompts you to continue your commitment to communicate the reality of what is, so frequently smothered in everydayness and (as Heidegger would say), "inauthentic" existence.

NEAR DEATH EXPERIENCES – 06 September 2008

There are at least a dozen times I should have died. The verse of the hymn, "Through many dangers, toils and snares I have already come, 'Tis grace has brought me safe thus far..," really rings true! Then there are the words of many of the Psalms: "I shall not die, but I shall live, and recount the deeds of the Lord." (Ps 118.17); "You have rescued me. I will tell of your name to my brothers and sisters; in the midst of the congregation I will praise you." (Ps 22.21b-22). "I will thank you in the great congregation: in the mighty throng I will praise you." (Ps 35.18). some of these were so minor; at the time, it was hard to discern that I was rescued, that it wasn't just fate or accident.

I was a Ph.D. student at the University of Chicago, in the field of "ethics and society." Following classes the morning of Friday, 27 January 1967, I started driving home despite a snowstorm that had been dropping snow from the previous day. It was only as I entered the Dan Ryan Expressway that I realized I should not have started the weekend journey home, for there were numerous vehicles in the three lanes of traffic stopped here and there in the different lanes and the exits, having an upward incline, were clogged with no possibility of exiting the freeway. In addition, balls of snow began to accumulate on the ends of my windshield wipers so that the wipers were unable to remove accumulating snow on the windshield. Desperately, I wove from lane to lane to avoid stuck vehicles while having my left arm outside the window, attempting to brush away accumulating snow while steering with the right hand! This continued all through the city of Chicago, the extent of the Dan Ryan and Edens Expressway, and the large flakes and large amount of snow continued until just past the Illinois-Wisconsin border, with only light snow falling in Wisconsin. The danger after entering Wisconsin, however, remained. Although there was less snow, it was still slippery, and while traveling on a two-lane stretch of Interstate 94, with no vehicles in front or behind me, my car suddenly skidded 180 degrees, facing in the opposite direction. Just then I noticed two large trucks, one in each lane as one was passing the other, approaching me! I had no time to get out of the car and run for what appeared to be a certain collision! At the last minute, both trucks miraculously moved to the pass me using the shoulder of the highway, on either side! By the time I arrived home, my nerves were completely shot. Classes at the University [of Chicago] were cancelled for a week.

I landed in DaNang at 1222, 14 July 1967, waiting for further transportation to 3rd Marine Division HQ at Phu Bai. Around 1700, word was passed there would be no further flights. We went to the Air Force officer's mess for supper and that there would be an Air Force C-130 going to Phu Bai at 2100. I met a Captain Harper L. Bohr, Jr., who was going to Khe Sanh to be the Intelligence Officer. He opted to remain at DaNang while I decided to take the USAF plane. It didn't depart DaNang until 2312. When I finally arrived at Khe Sanh several days later, Bohr noted that just after midnight, the DaNang Air Base was raked with rockets creating horrible devastation. The Stars & Stripes for 16 July 1967, reads: "At least 12 Americans were killed.. Witnesses said the Communists fired about 50 rounds of 120 and 140 mm rockets from two directions and with pinpoint accuracy... Destroyed in the attack were three big Air Force C130 transports which cost $2.5 million each.."

On 16 December, 1967, our regimental Intelligence Officer, Captain Harper L. Bohr, Jr., asked me to accompany him to the home of John and Carolyn Miller in Khe Sanh village. He had received 4 boxes of toys and clothing to give to the children there, and was going to give them to these missionaries to distribute. We caught a ride by jeep to the Miller's home. After visiting awhile, we walked back to the. I remember climbing Hill 471 and going through the various Bru villages. Bohr was point, John Miller was in the center, and I was "tail end Charlie." I didn't think anything of it at the time, although some of our recon teams were making deadly contact at the time in the general area, and Bohr later told me that he shudders when he thinks of what we did at that time: that the NVA were in the area and we could have been killed or captured.

On Sunday, 28 January 1968, a photo was taken of me holding worship. The photos (taken by Dick Swanson and SSGT John Reid) appeared in dozens of subsequent publications. I recall that we were interrupted by a mortar attack, took refuge, and then reassembled. Amazingly, none of us are wearing helmets. I apparently removed mine by habit of not wearing anything on the head while worshipping, and the others followed my example. Apparently, I did this during all the dozens of times I conducted worship on the base of Khe Sanh during the siege battle, and "amazingly" was spared getting shrapnel in my head!

Someone stole my camera the day before the siege battle of Khe Sanh began and I laid it down to carry some dead on stretchers to Graves Registration. When I returned, it was gone. It was a camera my grandpa Stubbe had given to me, and it took some very good photos even though it wasn't a single lens reflex. That really bothered me for many years; especially since I had photos on the film in the camera of people that I knew who died within a few days. One of my friends told me that whoever stole the camera saved my life, because during the incoming rockets and mortars, I probably would have been taking photos when I should keep my head down. And that was very true.

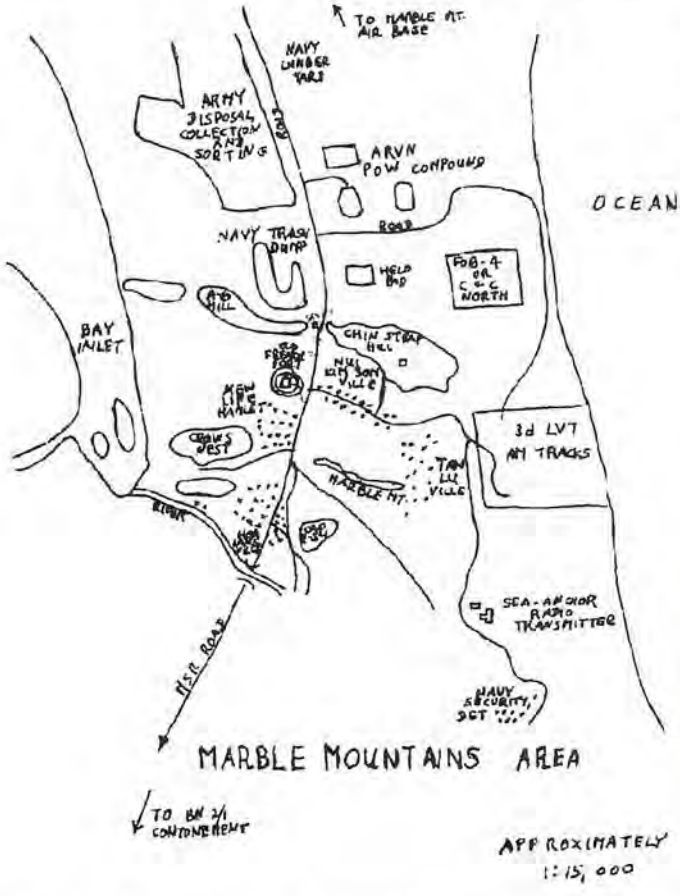
I was getting ready to visit all over the combat base which was always taking incoming when someone yelled to me that I had a phone call! (I can't recall the date; I didn't even write this down in my diary at the time, but definitely recalled it later.) It was the Chaplain Jack Heino, chaplain of 1/9. I don't even recall the conversation. As I was talking with him on the land line telephone, a mortar round exploded just where I would have been had I continued walking and not returned to take his phone call. He saved my life and didn't even know it!

I had blood in my urine and was sent to a hospital at DaNang, but returned to the siege battle after a couple of days—only after I promised I'd return for more testing. When I returned to Parris Island after Vietnam, I went to the hospital where they did a kidney biopsy and determined I had "glomerulo-nephritis" which is an auto-immune disease in which the body attacks itself (as in lupus). They said that it would clear up, and then return sometime within 20 years and was fatal—that I had only 20 years left to live at the most. They offered me a medical discharge, but let me remain on active duty when I made a decision, at that time, not to marry or take a civilian congregation. Well, I'm still here!

On Tuesday, 06 February 1968, I was in my bunker for the evening. Diary entry: "Turned in early, about 2030. At 2345 the base began receiving incoming rockets and mortars. At 2415 I heard one whistle in. The hootch shook briefly but violently. Silence. A dud? A delayed fuse? From the shaking of the hootch, did it land on the top or become embedded in the side? Then a tremendous WHOMP! I thought the hootch was going to collapse. I had wondered all along whether I should go out and check. If there were a round on the top or in the side, unexploded, to seek other safety. Yet, that would expose me, and it was total darkness outside. Maybe I should just run anyway to another bunker. Had I done that, I would have been caught in the WHOMP. I shined a flashlight inside, still laying down on my rack. Everything was in a dense fog of dust. All the remainder of the next few hours we kept receiving rounds, many near us. Then our artillery would blast away, and they'd be silent. Then they would begin again. This alternating situation prevailed for some time. But I slept most of the time." In the morning, I saw a crater about three feet from the entrance of my bunker where a rocket had exploded. [Diary, p. 604]

Friday, 23 February 1968. The base took some 1300-incoming rounds today. According to my diary entry, I was in my bunker at noon, eating a "Ham, with water added, and eggs, chopped, canned." "I was eating the cookies and drinking the cocoa from the B-3 unit when arty came in—heavy arty. One whizzed and the whole hootch shook violently. It sounded like it was stuck in the wall. Things were falling—dirt, pieces of wood. I immediately thought of a delayed fuze. If it were embedded in the wall of dirt outside my bunker wall, the whole hootch would explode. Yet, if I dashed out, a new round might come in and then I'd get dinged by shrapnel." Later that evening, I noticed that the wall had crumpled inward, right next to my rack, where I was sitting. It had been draped with a camouflaged parachute, so I didn't notice it previously. My diary entry: "Hit the pad and noticed that the wall was bent. It wasn't merely the top piece caved out, but the whole wall! There was an engineering stake inside, all bent also. This is what came in during my lunch! –while I was sitting with my back only two feet from it, on my rack! I was most uneasy about it all. Called up Major Hudson [the Regimental S-2], who said I should call up the EOD man. I was concerned that a nearby explosion might detonate it, were it a dud. The Major said it might. The EOD man said it was safe to sleep. [He probably didn't want to attend to this at the moment, there being so many other duds strewn about the base from the extraordinarily large amount of shelling today. So I slept all night right next to the "questionable wall." [Diary, pp. 700-701].

On 20 June 1968, I was on the Dong Ha Combat Base in the afternoon to visit a man from "C" Company, 3rd Shore Party Bn, to deliver a death message. My PC vehicle became stuck in the ammo dump there and some Marines from FLSG "B" volunteered to bring a wrecker, but after waiting an hour or so—it was now 1520—I decided to get a truck to take me to 9th Motors where I was able to get in a "bread run" vehicle back to my stalled PC. They managed to fix it, and I returned to Quang Tri Combat Base. At about 1630 some very loud bangs and immense clouds filling the sky alerted us to gaze north to Dong Ha Combat Base where the ammo dump was exploding—where I had just been in my stalled vehicle! Large balls of fire billowed into the sky. (There were, amazingly, no people killed. One tower with 2 Marines in it collapsed. Chaplain Fenning, the Division Chaplain, mentioned later that the explosion destroyed 10 million dollars worth of ammo).



MARBLE MOUNTAIN AREA, DANANG, VIETNAM Dec 1968
Drawn by Ray W. Stubbe from aerial photograph of area

CHAPLAIN STUBBE ON CROW'S NEST, MARBLE MT., DANANG
LEADING CHRISTMAS DAY WORSHIP – 1968

I was walking in the Marble Mountains of DaNang on the 19 August 1968 with my new clerk who had just come off a Navy ship [Richard Straubel]. He wore his blue Navy dungarees and a white sailor hat. We checked with the S-2 of the amphibious tractor unit there who said it was quiet. I wanted my clerk to see some of the carved Buddha statues I'd heard were there. So we spent most of the day walking in and out of various caves and grottos. A little Vietnamese boy joined us and was whistling—sometimes noticeably louder and with more agitation than at others. (I was aware of this at the time, but disregarded it). There was one time when I started to go into a cave area, but noticed a lot of tin cans and debris, and it didn't look too interesting, so I walked back out. It was at this point that the boy really whistled loudly and even darted away! After I came out, he rejoined us. My clerk, in the meantime, was photographing some statues. The next day, the Special Forces camp, the headquarters for the SOG units in northern I Corps (CCN, Command and Control North), just at the base of the Marble Mountains, was penetrated and almost overrun. Some of those who had been at Khe Sanh were stationed there and killed including a couple Sergeant Majors. I was told that there were about 70 of the NVA inside the Marble Mountains when I was going through it!

While serving as a Chaplain at the recruit training at Parris Island after Vietnam [1969-1970], I was walking along the rifle range. While I was out, a Sergeant came into my office on the rifle range and in a strange voice (according to my clerk) asked, "Where is the Chaplain?" As it turned out, I had never met the Sergeant. My clerk noticed that he had a M-16 and that the selector was on "semi automatic." I was unaware of all of this. I went to our Chaplains center on the base to get my mail at lunch time, and couldn't get near the building, because it was surrounded by MPs. I later discovered that the Sergeant thought if he shot a Chaplain, that he'd get transferred off Parris Island! So I'm here today because I wasn't in my office, but was among the troops!

A FEW NUMOROUS INCIDENTS Recalled during my Service as a Navy Chaplain – 13 July 2011

While there has been so much that is tragic and horrific that happened during intense and prolonged battle at Khe Sanh, there are also innumerable times when something humorous happened, humor which kept our sanity, maintained our humanity, punctuated horror with humanity, and revealed just how creative young Marines are. There are a few other incidents from tours during a career as a chaplain. I only regret not having kept a small notebook to record others!

A Marine Sergeant at pre-deployment training at Camp Pendleton: "They've made this 'fool proof,' but that doesn't mean they've made it 'Marine proof!'"

The S-4 of Regiment, Fred McEwan, had just made LtCol. Spotting him walking into one of the evening regimental briefings, and somewhat fatigued from the day's activities, I automatically said, "O, good evening, Major." Without a second's delay he responded, "O, good evening, Private!"

Shortly before the opening shots of the siege battle at Khe Sanh, Col Lownds announced at one of the evening regimental briefings that false antennas should be erected so the NVA forward observers on the ridgeline to the north would not target his headquarters. LtCol James Wilkinson, the 1/26 battalion commander, at his staff briefing the next morning quipped, "The regimental commander said we should erect false antennas. Now, instead of the regiment receiving ten rounds, the whole base will get several hundred!" (How prophetic!)

Col Kenny Houghton, G-2 of III MAF was at Khe Sanh ville to inspect the JTAD and found the two Army soldiers in civilian clothes. He asked why they weren't in uniform, and they replied, "Well, we're 'under cover'." Actually, being two young Americans, they stuck out like a sore thumb and were hardly inconspicuous!

While walking down the road towards the 1/26 mess hall weeks before the siege battle, the following was heard from the recon area. A patrol leader was briefing his team. "Gentlemen, circumcise your watches!" ("Synchronize" was just too big a word!)

Sometimes, things are definitely not very funny at the time, but upon telling the incident, they become very funny. The S-2 of regiment accompanied a patrol to Hill 881-S and later reported that a leech had crawled up his penis.

A recon team paused and several sat down. One Marine sat on what he assumed was a log, but when it moved, he realized he had sat down on a large python snake. He immediately fainted and the team called in for a medevac—which was, of course, denied.

I heard this from at least three veterans of the siege battle. Someone would walk up to the Postal Clerk wanting a money order. "Here's $100.00 for a money order." The clerk replied, "I'll take the $100.00 and give you a money order for $200.00." (The amounts varied, of course). The surprised Marine would say, "How can you do that?" The postal clerk replied, "Well, with all this incoming, all the records are destroyed." He kept what the Marines gave him, and the Marines were more than satisfied with the doubling of their money order amounts! (And whoever said that Marines were "jarheads?")

A wounded Marine from Shore Party (LCPL Slaugenhaupt) was moaning and groaning on the stretcher. "I lost everything! I lost everything!" Attempting to console him, I asked if he had lost all his pictures—or a phonograph—or all his uniforms—from the incoming. "O no, Chaplain, you know all those peanut butters and jellies in the C Rations? I had been saving them in a wood ammo box, and the incoming destroyed everything. I lost everything!"

Another wounded Marine on a stretcher was being medevaced. Seeing my concern for him, he blurted out, "O don't worry, Chaplain, they just got me in the ass."

Some Marines used C-4 plastic explosive to brush their teeth.

While on Hill 861 one night, I got up in the middle of the night to urinate, and startled some Marine who challenged me. "I'm just trying to find the piss tube," I said. He responded, "O, don't worry, Chaplain, all the Nam's a piss tube."

Glenn Waller had just reported to me as my new Chaplain's Clerk. I was about to make a phone call on the land line and had him hold down the telephone while I cranked it. Unfortunately, his hand was over the terminals—and got zapped with 35 volts.

Glenn and I were sleeping atop a large stack of C-ration cases in the supply tent on one of the hill outposts (I think it was 881-South), when he had to get up in the middle of the night to make a "call of nature." When he returned, the scout dog had moved onto his warmed poncho liner. "I was not about to chase him away!" said the startled Marine.

SCOUT DOG AND MARINES ON HILL 861 WITH LANDING ZONE IN BACKGROUND
Photo taken 11 Aug 1967 by Ray W. Stubbe

When the siege battle began, several of us were in the C-Med trench. Eventually, casualties began to arrive, and then a CH-46 medevac bird came. One of the corpsmen returned to the trench, heavily panting, blurting out, "My casualty out ran me. I wasn't able to pin the casualty card on him." "What kind of injury did he have?" someone asked. "O, he was wounded in his leg!" (The WIA was definitely motivated!)

During the opening days of the siege battle, the scout dog from recon dashed to a CH-46 waiting to embark the wounded and ran between the pilots and sat there. His handler ran aboard attempting to get the dog off the helo, but the dog was not about to be moved. "That dog was smarter than any of the rest of us," quipped one of the Marines!

During incoming, one Marine (Phil Wright) dove into a culvert that was filled with water. To everyone's amusement, when the incoming ceased and he emerged, he was half green, half red, from head to foot!

Another Marine jumped into the very deep recon trench as incoming began, and noticed to his horror that he was going right into the large 55-gallon drum that had been dug into the bottom of the trench as a pisser. Fortunately, he was able to spread his legs just in time and landed with one boot on either side!

While in a bunker during intense shelling, one of the Marines quipped: "Those NVA gunners are sure piss-poor! They can't even hit us!" Not realizing that the rockets had been fired from several miles away.

The scene of a Marine running from the shitter during incoming with his pants still down!

The Marine at an outpost manned by half Marines and half indigenous Montagnards. During the night, one of the Montagnards on the perimeter fired his rifle. (He later claimed he saw the evil spirit that devours people, Panoach, roaming around the wires.) The Marine in the bunker puts his trousers on backwards.

One Major, an XO of a battalion, had Marines build his bunker, keeping them from building their own bunker. During the night, the crafty Marines removed all the sandbags from the top of the Major's bunker and put them on their own! They replaced them before daybreak. The Major was oblivious–to far more than he realized!

While serving a 6 month extension in Vietnam at the US Naval Support Activity, DaNang, the senior staff at the White Elephant building, HQ of NSA whose offices held Navy Captains, including the senior Supply Officer, ordered soap for the Vietnamese women (the "washy-washy" women) to clean their uniforms and requested 3 "units" of soap. The building is an old French fort-style, rectangular with a very large court in the middle and only one entrance in one of the sides. Into this confined space came three very large trucks of soap. The unit of issue was "truckload!" Undoubtedly, with the large rains of the monsoons, the large courtyard would soon be transformed into a scene from the movie about Ensign Pulver and Mr. Roberts!

After Khe Sanh, while at MCRD, Parris Island:

A recruit—it was obvious for all he had was a white T shirt and his utility trousers and boots—went from house to house in the Colonel housing area. The wives answered their doors as the young man said, "I'm from the telephone company, and I've lost my way. Can you tell me how to get off this island?"

While standing duty as the Chaplain one night, a man on the telephone asked about the regulations for getting married in the base chapel. I replied that the Marine should come in and make the arrangements. "O no, we're bringing his fiancé. We want it to be a surprise!"

Another man called another night: "Are you the Chaplain there?" I replied, "Well, I'm one of about 20 here." (Pause). "Well, there's a Private____, and my daughter is pregnant! What are you going to do about it?"

A mother wrote an irate letter to one of the chaplains. She had previously written the Chaplain that her son was needed back home on the farm. The Chaplain had written to her that she would be happy because her son was determined to be illiterate and would be returning home. She wrote—the Chaplain showed us the letter at one of our Chaplain meetings—"I will have you know that my son cannot possibly be illiterate! He was born one month after we were married!"

A visiting Congressman (attempting to find something wrong) ran up to a Drill Instructor and squealed in a civilian tone of voice, "Excuse me, Sergeant! Did you just call that man a 'turd'?" In a booming Drill Instructor voice, the DI replied: "Yes, Sir, Congressman! 'Trainee Undergoing Recruit Discipline!'"

Some Recruits sneaked off to the Dempster Dumpster for a smoke one night. In the pitch darkness, one said, "Does someone have a light?" Immediately a match was struck—illuminating the face of the man who lit it: their Drill Instructor!

One recruit had difficulty telling 24-hour "military time," so his DI locked him in a wall locker. When he's rap on the door, the recruit would open the door and shout, "Koo-koo, koo-koo, the time is____." The Series Commander happened to be visiting, brushed up against the wall locker, and immediately the door flung open. "Koo-koo, koo-koo, the time is____."

One recruit was standing with his nose to the bulkhead in the battalion office. His DI told me, "I don't know if I should promote him to meritorious PFC or send him to Motivation." He went on to explain that the recruit was on his "service week" and had the duty of cleaning out the Officers' Club. Seeing all the half-empty glasses of mixed drinks, scotch, gin, whisky, beer, and whatever else lubricates the throats of thirsty Marines and provides anti-freeze in the wintry Parris Island weather, the recruit promptly drained all the glasses—into his own throat! (Marines are so neat, clean up everything so promptly!)

The RTR (Recruit Training Regiment) commander was full-Colonel Parrish who used to attend the small base chapel on a regular basis, sitting in a particular place near the radiators. One of the Chaplains at the staff meeting quipped that we need to turn up the heat in the radiators and "Perish Parrish in the Parish!"

While on Okinawa during another tour:

During inspection, the officer told a Marine standing at attention, "I hear there's a lot of pornography here!" The Marine immediately replied, "Sir, I don't even have a pornograph!"

Preparing for an inspection, the CO of 9th Motors was shocked to see a Marine painting blades of grass that stuck up between the concrete curb. "Why are you painting the grass, Marine?" "Sir, the grass is part of the curb, and the Private was told to paint the curb."

As the CO continued looking over his area, he saw something else that aroused his attention. The 9th Motors Tac Mark (those symbols that are sprayed onto water cans, mount-out boxes, vehicles, etc.) was a red hexagon with a white 9 in the center. He had told the Marine, "Put 9th Motors Tac Mark here"—on the wooden baffles that contained the trash buckets. What he saw were the words, painted on the wooden wall, "PUT NINTH MOTORS TAC MARK HERE!"

I recall jumping with Army Special Forces while on Okinawa into the Central Training Area, spotting trees and immediately going to the "trees" position—putting a hand in the crotch, putting an arm over the face, etc. The trees weren't the problem, however. Suddenly, I found myself deep in water with the canopy covering me which I desperately flailed to remove in order to breathe!

While on USS SHREVEPORT (LPD-12), a brand-new naval amphibious ship being commissioned at Puget Sound Naval Shipyard in Bremerton, Washington, we received a message from COM-13 (the senior naval command in the area, Commandant, 13th Naval District) that warned everyone. Ships were also being decommissioned during there, and with only a skeleton crew remaining to write out forms for every piece of gear remaining (involving long stock numbers that had to be looked up to be put on a very long form—for each item), sailors were tossing everything into Puget Sound that they could—encyclopedias from the ship's library, cans of paint, hammers, chisels, even navigation tools such as sextants and binoculars that cost hundreds and thousands of dollars, the ship's silver setting for the officer's mess, desks, chairs, carpets, etc. The message said: "All ships scheduled for decommission will immediately cease dumping gear in Puget Sound. It is becoming dangerous to navigate!"

In early signs of PTSD, I went aboard a Navy CH-46 that had landed on our new ship. It was shiny and spotlessly clean. It was due to take off to go to another ship and, other than the crew, I was the only one aboard. The crew chief told me to sit down and fasten my seat belts. "Seat Belts?!" I exclaimed. "Yes, sir, you need to buckle in." "Well, I've never been in a helicopter that had seat belts!" So I was about to sit down when I noticed there were windows in the ports. "You have windows?" "Yes, sir." (I'm sure he didn't have a clue about this squirrelly chaplain that was in his presence). "Well, in all the helicopters I've been in—in the Nam—all the windows were knocked out. How are you going to fire on the enemy?" I asked. (Now, I'm sure, he was surely uncomfortable with this nut). Then I said, "And I see that this helicopter doesn't have any bullet holes! I don't feel safe in this helicopter." I immediately dashed off—much to my relief—and, I'm sure, his also! It hadn't seen battle, and nothing that was untested in battle seemed safe.

The aviators that come on our ship tend to see all flying objects according to military nomenclature. Thus a "bird" is a B-ONE-R-D, and a "gull" is a G-U-ELEVEN, and a "fly" is a F-ONE-Y.

Our ship goes into the shipyards for several months of repairs, and each department (engineering, gunnery, navigation, operations, deck, supply, etc.) are given a print-out of work that will be done—mainly painting! Everyone is groaning over what they will have to do. One of the items concerns the two large 5-inch iron balls that sit on either side of the magnetic compass on the bridge for navigation that serve to keep the magnetic needles from other magnetic sources. Since there are two of them, the sailors refer to them as "the navigator's balls." Periodically, they need to be placed in an oven to ensure they are demagnetized. So the Navigator says, "You think you have troubles! How would you like to see this item: 'Bake the navigator's balls'!"

Our ship was commissioned, went south, then through the Panama Canal, then stopped at New Orleans and then Mayport, Florida, before arriving at Norfolk, Virginia. Part of the original gear, a large electronic organ for religious services, was not available when we departed Bremerton, but arrived one noon while eating lunch at Norfolk. Over the ship's 1MC (the general announcing system) were the words, "Chaplain, lay down to the quarterdeck. Your organ is on the pier." Several of the officers snickered, so I said, "Yes, and it weighs over 500 pounds—and it's electrified!"

At the farewell party for one of the officers of the USS SHREVEPORT (LPD-12), the officer referred to the CO of USS SHREVEPORT, Captain Pehr H. Pehrsson, when he said, "We have nothing to fear but fear himself!" (He pronounced his name "fear fearson." instead of "pear pearson.")

I go to ServMart, a place on the base where items are immediately available rather than going through the regular supply requisition process. It's a sort of 9-11 corner store for small amounts of consumables like ballpoint pens, pads of paper, etc. I notice that several of the bins have "SIN" on them and remark to the man in charge that they must have known a Chaplain was coming, "There's so much 'sin' around here!" He breaks up laughing. No Chaplain, you aren't looking at the right way. It's not "SIN," but "NIS" or "Not in Stock." You're looking at the labels upside down! (Like the aviators, I was seeing things in terms of my own world-view).

At Camp Pendleton, during another tour:

A Warrant Officer who has been "much into the cups" at the O-Club gives his saying of wisdom to the young Chaplain: "Chaplain! You cannot soooooooar with the eagles in the morning, if you hooooooooooot with the owls in the evening."

One of the Platoon commanders was frustrated that his Marines "blew" all their payday cash and had little remaining for the most important expenditure–haircuts! He therefore made them all enroll in direct deposit into a checking account. Unfortunately, one of the Marines subsequently wrote checks totaling several thousands of dollars. When confronted with his overdraft, the Marine defended his actions by saying that he was given all these blank checks and just "used them all up" for whatever amounts "necessary!" Blank checks turned out to be much better than cold cash for that Marine!

Having successfully completed the Basic Airborne course at Ft. Benning and parachuting with various units on Okinawa and Pendleton, I hear of one unfortunate parachutist. The wind had drifted him so that he was rapidly descending right into—Edson Rifle Range! Desperately he shouted "Cease Fire! Cease Fire!" but the recruits didn't know where this mysterious command came from, and continued. "Cease Fire! Cease Fire!" he continued. Finally, just at the last minute, they did.

During an amphibious exercise over the beaches of Pendleton, one of the chaplains broke his leg as the ramp of the LVT suddenly lowered on it. The Gunny angrily ran to him, "Marine, where's your rifle?" Then, upon seeing who it was, said, "O, you're just the Chaplain," and promptly ran off to chew some other Marine.

"Nothing's too good for the Chaplain, and nothing's what he's going to get!"

During an inspection, the inspecting officer said to a Marine, "I hear there's a lot of pornography in this barracks!" The Marine promptly said, "Sir! I don't even have a pornograph!"

At Great Lakes, during the Admiral's staff meetings:

"We follow the 'Mushroom Principle:' Keep them in the dark, and feed them plenty of shit."

"Remember the Law of the 7 P's: Proper Prior Planning Prevents Piss Poor Performance."

A dependent woman called the Chaplain to arrange for the baptism of her child and after sufficient counseling, it was arranged for the next Sunday. At the worship, the parents and child didn't appear. The Chaplain called the wife to inquire if all was OK. "O, I'm glad you called, chaplain. My baby croaked!" Stunned, the chaplain said nothing, and the woman continued, "But he's OK now, it must have been one of those 24-hour flue things!"

LETTER TO LARKIN SPIVEY, 31 MAY 2011

... I am attaching a small piece which hopefully may be useful as a book jacket comment....

> Numerous Vietnam veterans have asked the question, "Where was God in Vietnam?" If they haven't voiced it in anger, their experience of an absence of God–resonating laments one finds in some of the Psalms–turned them away from connections to God's love and life in years following their war experience. Larkin Spivey's collection of daily meditations reminds us how others, who have experienced the same events, are able to provide a different perspective, shine a different light, enable us to enter a different dimension, and receive healing, life, and peace. His remarkable collection of many dozens of individual stories interwoven with Biblical texts and comments,. may well help many to conclude with Jacob, "Surely the Lord is in this place–and I didn't know it!" {Gen 28.16] Healing of combat pain–indeed all troubles!–comes through placing them in a wider context, where they are acknowledged but lost their power as they become as clouds in a greater sky. Larkin Spivey's collection does just that: the wider contexts of a greater understanding. Spivey's book gives us the testimony of so many–("Seeing we are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aide every weight and sin that clings so closely.." [Heb 12.1] –since "sin" is basically separation from God, we might include "painful memories" as "sin" in this scripture). Spivey gives us the greater context of realizing that our war experience is but a part of our whole life. The greater contexts usually include a few good friends who understand and accept, close family members, and fellowship of faith. Mostly, Spivey provides us with the greater context of faith, of our Lord's presence–especially IN the darkness, ON the crosses of life, WITH us always {Mt. 28.20] even when we are half-way around the world, even when we find our bed in the hell of war [Ps. 139.8].

Spivey's inclusion of useful maps and brief monthly explanations, his focus on the Vietnam Memorial in DC, NVA soldiers, PTSD, the full spectrum of emotions of combat vets, numerous combat incidents, and testimonies from chaplains, make this a significant contribution to both a greater grasp of Vietnam and more important, a nurture of faith for anyone. His daily devotion approach, like a "time-release" medication for the soul, enables one to view combat experiences in color and not simply black-and-white–the same things, but seen more fully, richer (because of seeing them with the added spiritual dimension), and liberating.

Random comments while reading text:

PAGE	COMMENT
...
98	Picture of Catholic chaplain saying Mass. This was Father John McElroy on Hill 950 taken by me on 31 July 1967. (In 1969, I donated several hundred of my slides to the Marine Corps Pictorial Branch, AO3P, Headquarters Marine Corps, during a visit at the navy Yard doing research. The curators were interested since I had numerous photos before the siege of subject matter the III MAF photographers hadn't taken, and they said the photos were of very good quality. I gave them the originals and they made copies for me. In exchange, I was able to look through their collection and get copies of photos taken during the siege. When casualties arrived on 20 January–when India, 3/26, went to Hill 881-North, I laid down my camera near the C- Med triage tent to help carry KIAs to Graves Registration. When I returned, I discovered someone had stolen my camera. It was a gift from my grandfather, and held great sentimental value. So, during the siege, I took no photos! I always felt "bad" over that until a good friend from Khe Sanh, Ernie Husted (called "Preacher" and who was with the recon company) told me, "Whoever stole that camera, saved your life." I didn't, at first, understand, but he continued, "You would have been up, taking pictures, when you should have remained in the trench, culvert, bunker, and shrapnel would have got you." The words of Joseph, "You meant it for evil against me, but God meant it for good." (Gen 50.20) took on added meaning!
...

243 Quote from 2 Cor 6.4-10 has an interesting rendition in the old JB Philips translation which, as a boxer, I have found most interesting:

> J.B. Phillips translates 2 Cor 4.9 "..we may be knocked down but we are never knocked out!"
> The New Testament in Modern English, Trans. J.B. Phillips, New York: The Macmillan Co., 1958, p. 385. Greek: καταβαλλόμενοι ἀλλο οὐκ ἀπολλύμενοι. struck down, but not destroyed; (ESV) καταβαλλόμενοι literally means "cast down" and ἀπολλύμενοι of course means "destroyed."

297 The "overlay" reminds me of the regimental briefings in which a large 1:50,000 map was covered with various acetate overlays. On one, the "2" would plot detections of enemy (People sniffer, recon patrols, etc.), on one the "3" would plot patrols, on one the "14" (air) would plot resupply, etc. Eventually, the blue and red grease pencil markings, which were removed by rubbing with tissue paper, made the overlays more translucent than transparent, so that the underlying map was discerned with difficulty. I've often thought how our interpretations ("overlays") that we place on scriptural interpretations, on our estimate of other people, etc., become so many that it's hard to experience the reality itself!

342 Another valiant of the slogan that I saw at Camp Pendleton while going through staging: "THE MORE YOU SWEAT HERE, THE LESS YOU BLEED THERE."

PRAYER FOR THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEDICATION OF THE MILWAUKEE COUNTY VEITNAM VETERANS MONUMENT. Veterans Park, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 0930 Saturday, 22 October 2011

LETTER TO PETER W. BRUSH, Sunday, 05 June 2011

...

Concerning the Combat Action Ribbon: I'm attaching a copy of the ALMAR, the promulgating directive, Marine Corps Bulletin 1650 of 19 April 1969. The award was to be an individual award, not a "campaign" (or unit) award, Paragraph 4.A.(1) states that personnel on a fixed installation (e.g., Khe Sanh Combat Base) "are eligible when .. directly endangered by enemy fire or explosives." More germane, paragraph 6 of the original directive specifically includes ALL who were at Khe Sanh during the siege. It reads, "All personnel within an advanced base, e.g., Khe Sanh or Camp Carroll are eligible in event a heavy attack occurs which threatens the entire base,." The official SITREPs report that we were attacked by several hundred rounds a day–one day (23 Feb) by 1307 rounds. We were also assaulted by a regimental-size ground unit 29Feb/01 Mar. Now, I'm sure that the current Marine Corps manual that governs awards had omitted the specific, historical name of "Khe Sanh" and "Camp Carroll," but that does not negate the original directive's specific mention of those places. I'm also sure that current personnel at HQMC Awards have long forgotten this. Also attached is a clipping from the Marine Corps Gazette. Unfortunately, I didn't note the specific reference on the clipping–volume, issue number, month and year, and page. I would assume it would be from early 1969, however. Perhaps those who are at the Awards Branch no longer feel we endured a "heavy attack!" WE KNOW DIFFERENT!

LETTER TO LANCE LARSON, Monday, 06 June 2011

...

Your mention of different people seeing something so differently depending on whom they are is something that has interested me for many years. It's the basis of the Rorshak test (looking at ink blots and saying what you "see") which reveals WHO you are, not what the ink blots are! Rather than focusing on the disagreements that result, even leading to marriage breakups, shoot-outs, and war, not to mention polarized politics and paralyzing legislative capabilities, the different ways of seeing the same thing are also beneficial! I recall studying the psychologist C. G. Jung who noted basic, different psychological "types." He also recommended that boards of directors and those making decisions include people who see things differently in order for a more complete, whole picture to emerge, which anticipates all ramifications which might be overlooked if everyone in the discussion sees things the same way. Of course, leaders sometimes opt to gather people who see things as they do around them: it gives them more confidence to push ahead with their particular action, blind to what might happen because of a neglect of considering another way of looking at things. Jung was always interested in development of "wholeness,." completeness, and this might involve fractious debates.

I've also developed my own ideas on this. Sometimes, in a skirmish or battle, one person only "sees" one very small part of the entire action. By necessity, for survival, he needs to focus on that! Then, in the midst, perhaps he's wounded or leaves the battle before it's concluded, and doesn't know "what happened to so-and-so," and is in the dark about why things happened and the final result (the whole context of what went before and after). It's only by talking with others who were in the same skirmish and saw things differently, that healing and peace can come!

LETTER TO WILLIAM BIOLSI, MONDAY 06 JUNE 2011

Your mention of C/1/9 immediately brought back memories of that series of large ambushes at Hill 689 and the death of Capt. Himmer, and the eventual rescue of a Marine named Honeycutt. Indeed, the good Lord was with you to have escaped that! I actually was at Khe Sanh that day, having returned there on Easter Sunday, 14 April. After I was transferred from 1/26 on 29 February *(it was leap year), I returned to Khe Sanh at least weekly to visit A Company of 3rd Shore Party and B Company of 3d Recon (the two battalions I was now assigned to). A significant thing happened to me on 16 April when I was in one of the C Med bunkers. One of the wounded Marines on a stretcher asked me to say the 91st Psalm for him, which I did. Suddenly, here were words that held together our war experience and gave them meaning within a larger context. "He will deliver you from the snare of the fowler"–traps to catch birds, like ambushes trapping men or nets entangling us. "You shall not be afraid .. of the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flies by day"–assault waves of charging enemy, rockets and artillery! "A thousand may fall at your side"–our friendly casualties–"and ten thousand at your right hand"–"right hand" referring to our strength and the ten thousand being the enemy killed by our supporting arms! You, too, escaped the "snare of the fowler!"

LETTER TO ROGER HOWES, WEDNESDAY, 08 JUNE 2011

...

The accounts of WW II are good antidotes to annoyances that vex most people today; they encountered situations so vastly more difficult than those that seem to consume people today! It's sort of like being at Khe Sanh during the monsoons of late '67. Bunkers collapsing, trenches collapsing, people getting injured, shivering in the cold and damp weather and never able to get dry, always wondering if the enemy is creeping to attack us since we were so close to Laos and the DMZ and our aerial observers couldn't spot their encroachments, and so on. AND THEN, hearing one of the Marines return, having temporarily spent a couple days "in the rear" and hearing some distraught Marine complain that "they had the same flavor ice-cream two days in a row!" We, at Khe Sanh, hearing this, would obviously laugh! It was so absolutely bizarre! I remember Col Lownds at an evening briefing reporting on a visit to Phu Bai, "the wonderful world of Bai," as he called it. He mentioned how they actually had toilet seats! They had walkways (wooden pallets) so you didn't get your boots muddy! People were laughing. He was on a roll. He said, "They actually have air-conditioning–but I don't think they'll get it as cold as we have it here at Khe Sanh!" Col Lownds could be very funny at times!

LETTER TO ROGER HOWES, Saturday, 13 August 2011

Then, it suddenly came to me–the group of Iraq/Afghanistan vets I had visited only a couple hours earlier. I was so focused on what I was saying and then about getting to the gym from there, that I missed some of the reality of that time with them–until now! Suddenly, their young age came to my consciousness–... and their pain. One of the vets had a plastic helmet and a small shield and said he was "Captain America," and another vet had a small face mask and a green laser pointer and said he was the "Green Lantern." They were just kids, playful, just like the Marines at Khe Sanh before the siege I saw in their tents, playing practical jokes on each other, "grab-assing" and still innocent, not affected by the life-and-death struggle they were soon to know. Here were all these Iraq and Afghanistan vets, so very young and hurting so very much–just like those I knew in Vietnam. I've learned that whenever I have an intense emotional reaction about others, it's really not "about them" but something "in me!" (Projection!) So I was left with that uncomfortable retrospective memory of Vietnam: in fact, I was "there," back there in those tents, overwhelmed by the sadness of it all.

Gradually, however, I realized that (with very few exceptions), all of our Vietnam vets have, through the years, gained a better perspective on things–a greater context of understanding, of friends, of fellow vets, of immersion in social activity and perhaps immersion in the wholeness of nature, and hopefully, and primarily, an awareness of God's presence, or at least of love, which is the greatest context of all (and "God is love"), and are now living with the pains, but the pains have lost almost all of their intensity, forcefulness, and power. Also, most have become more sensitive to others; hurts, more compassionate, and more resilient. So I thought of these vets ... as youth who are embarking on a journey. It's almost like being case out of the Garden of Eden, but gaining awareness and consciousness and a life, even if it's no longer in the oblivious, pristine, naïve setting of innocence.

PRAYERS FOR THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEDICATION OF THE VIETNAM MONUMENT, Milwaukee, WI, 22 October 2011

PRAYER OF INVOCATION:

When Your people, O Lord, crossed the Jordan River, moving from a place of suffering, misery, and death, to a place of blessing, freedom, and life, they placed on the bank of the new land to be a memorial forever, so that future generations would ask: "What do these stones mean?"[686]

Today, O Lord, we face these stone spires made from extremely hard, durable Wisconsin red granite that should last thousands of years, so that future generations will see them and ask, "What do these stones mean?"[687]

May their red remind us always, as do the red stripes of our flag, of our birth in blood through sacrificial service.

May they remind us that we, too, have crossed over from death to life, of the blessing of each day we could not then have counted on.

Help us to rededicate ourselves to honor and serve each other.

Give us a vision that draws us into the future with confidence, commitment, and courage.[688]

Bless us with strengths equal to our tasks, not tasks equal to our strengths.

Keep, O Lord, those who currently serve in our armed forces, and their families, in Your protective care,.

Look, O Lord, with Your healing will, to those of our comrades in war who still hurt–physically, emotionally, socially, and spiritually.

In the assurance of Your Presence, Your love, Your healing power, and in Your Holy Name we pray. AMEN.

PRAYER OF BENEDICTION:

Now, may the Lord bless you with peace and life.

May the Lord keep you safe and secure, assured of His Presence and peace, live and love for you.

May the Lord motivate you to do justice, love mercy, and live a life of service.[689]

In the strength, love, presence, mercy, and Name of our Lord, we pray. AMEN.

LETTER TO CONSTANCE GIBBONS, 24 October 2011

I see by the Khe Sanh Directory that your husband was in the S-1 section of our battalion, 1/26. I still recall seeing the Adjutant himself in April, I think it was. He was, like all of us, so very gaunt; emaciated, nervous. (Was his name Fitzgerald? Right now, as I write this, I can't be sure of his name.) I recall he had a very large box of Purple Hearts for the Marines and Corpsmen of 1/26, and wondered why Di vision had sent them to Khe Sanh since the battalion would be moving, and now he had to transport all the Purple Hearts. There were hundreds of them! He and that box of Purple Hearts was a sort of icon, image, through which the reality of the siege battle was so apparent. It's a scene that I'[ll never forget.

It would be so easy to write something about how bad it was, and what happened to us, and the tragedy of war, and so on. Some of that might have its place, of course, and writing about it does help the writer–as well as readers who might be prompted to do the same, and thereby get what is buried deep within and place it in the light of day. I recall a very ancient Christian writing, the Gospel of Thomas, in which there is a statement: "If you take out what is inside of you, what is inside of you will heal you, but if you keep what is inside of you inside of you, what is inside of you will kill you." I think that's a very helpful insight.

Hopefully, the attached might be of some use, perhaps not. It's where I am right now in dealing with the lingering legacies of the experiences of prolonged and intense combat, over forty years ago!

A NOTE ON LIVING WITH THE LEGACY OF THE EXPERIENCE OF INTENSE, PROLONGED COMBAT

Perhaps for all of us who were at Khe Sanh during the Siege battle, the story of Adam and Eve expelled from Paradise echoes our own story. Despite the living conditions on Hills 861, 881-South, and other places at Khe Sanh, and despite the misery of monsoons, raging rivers, and torturous terrain, elephant grass and leeches, for the post part, the ravishing beauty

---

[686] Josh 4.1-7.

[687] Josh 4.6.

[688] Prov 29.18: "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (KJV)

[689] Mic 6.8.

we saw at Khe Sanh, cooler temperatures, separation from those in the rear–the Generals and their staffs along with their picky regulations, made our time there almost a Garden of Eden experience.

Then, suddenly, like someone flicking a light switch, all turned into horror, terror, desperation, isolation, living moment to moment with no assurance of another moment. Youthful innocence was lost forever; we could never again return to Paradise, "to the Garden" from which we felt expelled. We emerged completely changed and, for us, everything and everyone else also changed. It was hard to "fit in" and others made it even more difficult by despicable venomous hatred heaped on us as representatives of the war they hated. Just like Adam, we hid, only to hear the voice, "Adam, where you?" as our question. Where, indeed, were we?

Now the challenge became to live with it, to transform negatives into positives, using what we had learned to bring life to others, to make rational sense out of what was really irrational. Perhaps we had become more compassionate, more aware of injustices, more sensitive to what could injure. Perhaps our angers gave us energy to be productive. Perhaps we learned to put our pains and hurts into a wider context of meaning–a wider context of a larger understanding of what happened through talking with others who were with us and who saw things from a different perspective, through a wider context of friendships and a hopefully understanding family, through a wider context of an awareness of God's Presence and love for us, so that our dark pains became like dark clouds within a much greater sky. Perhaps the larger context became realizing that a few months of our life, however intense they were, were only a few months of a much larger life. Life and hopes, which had become narrowed, squeezed, pressed, crushed, needed greater containers, larger space. Everyone needs a container for their soul. Everyone needs their space. Everyone needs a good hug of embracing arms of love within which we feel a peace, like a hurt, crying child running into its mother's arms. The pain remains, but somehow, all is well. Perhaps the great context is our love for others, not as an emotion, but as an action–what we do, not what we feel. For the network of caring for others, that we knew in battle as we shared our last bits of C-ration, drops of water, as we dashed out to drag a wounded man to safety during incoming, all brought us closer together than blood relatives and gave us life. Humor and heroism in battle always emphasize life instead of death, courage that lives with the reality of fear but doesn't let it take control.

In the end, we can all become "wounded healers," as much as alcoholics and victims of abuse helping others with the same issues. We all have pieces of the whole, and when we come together, we become whole. Negatives are transformed into positives. In the end, we learn that God is on the cross of our pain and suffering, in our shadows and in our valleys.

–Ray William Stubbe, 24 October 2011

PRAYER FOR VETERANS DAY, Miller Brewing Co., Milwaukee WI, 11 November 2011

INVOCATION:

On this day and at this hour, O Lord, we remember our veterans – those who no longer walk or talk with us– the empty place at the table, the empty place in our heart – and we remember those veterans who still live among us, especially the homeless we don't see, and those who suffer physically, mentally, spiritually, and socially, and their families.

These men and women, by their actions and their life, reflect Your Words, O Lord: "Greater love has no one than to lay down their life for a friend,"[690] and, "I am among you as one who serves."[691]

As we remember them, now, here, we rededicate ourselves to pursue peace and to serve others. To us they pass the torch of burning light to run the race[692] of life set before us,[693] to achieve the goal[694] of life in its fullness[695] for all.

For that, for You, O Lord, they served.

For that, for You, O Lord, we live– to Your glory and in Your Holy Name.

AMEN.

BENEDICTION

Now, may the Lord bless you with peace and life.

May the Lord keep you safe and secure, assured of His Presence and peace, life and love for you.

---

[690] Jn 15.13.
[691] Lk 22.27.
[692] A metaphor from the Olympic Games.
[693] Heb 12.1.
[694] 1 Cor 9.24.
[695] Jn 10.10.

May the Lord motivate you to do justice, love mercy, and live a life of service.[696]
May the Lord give us eyes to see and strength to do what is needed to care those who have borne the burdens of battle.
In the strength, love, presence, mercy, and Name of our Lord, we pray. AMEN.

VETERANS DAY TALK – Given at Miller Coors Brewing Company's Veterans Monument, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 11 Nov 2011

Upon entering the remarkable National World War I Museum in Kansas City, Missouri, a visitor first sees a large map of France set in the floor below his feet. The map is covered with thousands of red poppies. There are so many, it is as futile to attempt to count them as it would be to count the colored leaves of Fall through which we recently walked. A guide quietly whispers that each poppy represents a thousand killed. It is overwhelming. The scene becomes a window through which we peer at another reality. Like standing in the midst of the black granite Vietnam Memorial Wall, we are silenced, overcome by the enormity of the loss.

When America entered World War I in April, 1917,[697] the war had been going on for three years. When it started, most assumed it would be over within months, but like the fly caught in a spider's web, once started, the agony seemed to have no end. New horrors snuffed soul and spirit as machineguns, warplanes, bombing, and poison gas, made the conflict a foretaste of hell. Ten months earlier, on 01 July 1916, 60,000 British soldiers marched in parade formation at the Somme River against German strong points, only to be mowed-down by a new weapon of war, the machine gun. The Battle of the Somme raged for four months, only mercifully stopped by rains. It was as if they were tears from God! There were over a million (1,293, 907) casualties in four months, just one battle of World War I.[698] During World War I, more than 8 million soldiers died, at least 19 million were wounded, and civilian casualties, obviously in the millions, can only be guessed.

That's why so many poppies cover that map of France in the World War I Memorial Museum at Kansas City, Missouri–over 8,000, one for each 1,000 soldiers killed. One is reminded of Lieutenant Colonel John McRae's famous poem written in World War I after four years' service in that war as he mourned the loss of a friend killed in that war and just before he himself was killed on 28 Jan 1918:

"In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place: and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.[699]

Today, we observe Veterans Day, formerly known as Armistice Day. [First observed in 1920, it became a legal holiday by act of Congress on 13 May 1938.] But, because World War I, the "War to End All Wars," only laid the seeds of future wars–World War II and Korea, Congress voted to change Armistice Day to Veterans Day,[700] a day to honor all veterans, living and dead, of all American wars.

[For a brief time, Veterans Day was moved to create a three-day weekend, but the significance of the sacrifice and service of veterans and not a long weekend's personal pursuit of pleasure, soon returned Veterans Day observance to November 11th.[701] This year's celebrations are not only the " the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month," but also the year 2011!]

---

[696] Mic 6.8.
[697] On 02 April 1917, President Woodrow Wilson addressed Congress and two days later, Congress declared War on Germany. [Brunn, Erik and Crosby, Jay, Our Nation's Archives, the History of the United States in Documents, New York: Tess Press, 2009, pp. 534-537. Congress declared war two days after the speech.
[698] Horne, Alister, Death of a Generation–Newe Chapelle to Verdun and the Somme, London: American Heritage Press, 1970, p. 85. There were 419,654 British casualties, 204,253 French casualties, and 650,000 German casualties.
[699] Remainder of the poem: "We are the Dead. Short days ago / We lived, felt drawn, saw sunset glow, / Loved and were loved, and now we lie / In Flanders fields. / "Take up our quarrel with the foe: / To you from failing hands we throw / The torch, be yours to hold it high / If ye break faith with us who die / We shall not sleep, though poppies grow / In Flander's fields."
[700] On 01 June 1954.
[701] The Uniform Holiday Act, signed 28 June 1968, made Veterans Day part of a 3-day weekend, along with Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, and Columbus Day. The first Veterans Day under the new law was observed with much confusion on

During a visit with my folks while on active duty, we were sitting quietly at a restaurant. Two ladies were conversing at an adjacent table. One said: "Would you believe, my neighbor served in the military for twenty years, retired, and is now drawing a pension?"

Her comment stunned me, paralyzing a sudden surge of anger. She would never know the six or eight month separations from family while serving overseas on a Navy ship, the regular grind of long watches at night followed by a full day's work, weeks without showers on a ship at sea, separation from growing up with friends over the years, missed job opportunities, not to mention war's horrors, terrors, and ugly scenes seared forever on the soul. You want my pension? Fine! You can also take my nightmares, my wounds, my inability to live a normal life! my lost innocence, my social isolation. You can have these also! Today, in the midst of high unemployment, veterans have an even higher rate. An alarming percentage of the homeless are veterans. Their suicide rate exceeds that of their civilian peers.

As I sat there at that restaurant table, listening to their conversation, my mind raced to a small bunker on a remote hilltop outpost in Vietnam. The Company commander there had taken the stiff cardboard sleeve of a carton of C-rations and written on it:

"God and the soldier we adore,
In time of war and not before;
The battle ended and all things righted,
God's forgotten, the soldier slighted."[702]

(During the early 1950s, while a student at Steuben Junior High School in Milwaukee, we always stood facing east for a moment of silence on the 11th minute of the 11th day of the 11th month. It was Armistice Day, the remembrance marking the end of World War I in a farmhouse on 11 November 1918.)

One of the stories to emerge from World War II tells of a soldier coming home after years of being away in the war. He telephones his parents. "I'm coming home," he tells them. They are ecstatic. He says, "I'm bringing home a friend who was badly wounded." Still overcome with joy, they tell him, "Bring him with you. It will be great to have both of you home!" His voice becomes serious, "But you must know that he has some ugly scars." They say, "That's OK. We know that war does bad things." Softly, he says, "But he also has lost a leg and an arm, and he has difficulty with large groups of people." They say, "Well, son, maybe it might be best if he goes to a hospital for those things where he will be more comfortable. But we are so excited that you're coming home." There's a click. He hung up the phone. He was the "friend," the wounded, damaged man.

[Veterans Day focuses on all veterans, the living and the dead. In a true sense, Veterans Day focuses on our whole society as we remember them and rededicate ourselves to the cause of peace that wars may cease, as we act to welcome home those who served, welcome them with jobs, with acceptance, with love.]

At his inauguration, President Kennedy uttered those words: "Let every nation know .. that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and success of liberty "[703] Today, we pause to consider that price, that burden:

WAR	KIA	WIA	TOTAL CASUALTIES	MISSING
World War I	116,516	204,002	320,518	3,350
World War II	405,399	670,846	1,036,245	30,313
Korea	33,741	103,284	137,025	5,127
Vietnam	58,209	153,303	211,512	2,489
Gulf War 1990-91	382	849	364	0
Iraq 2001-present	4,404	21,839	26,243	2
Afghanistan	1,135	6,141	7,276	2[704]

---

25 Oct 1971. On 20 Sep 1975, President Gerald R. Ford signed legislation restoring the annual observance of 11 November, beginning in 1978.

[702] The Company Commander was Capt John Raymond, USMC, commanding A/1/26 on Hill 881-South, Khe Sanh, Vietnam, noted in Stubbe: Khe Sanh Chaplain (unpublished manuscript), 01 April 1970, diary entry for 18 August 1967. Although Capt Raymond attributed the poem to "Lord Marlborough," it was actually written by Frances Quarles (1592-14), and its original form is: "Out God and soldiers we alike adore / E/en at the brink of danger, not before / Our God's forgotten, and our soldiers slighted." [Oxford Dictionary of Quotations, 3rd rev. ed., London: Oxford University Press, 1953, p. 404, No. 9].

[703] Kennedy, John F., Inaugural Address, 20 January 1961.

[704] Data as of September, 2011. Also: COLD WARS-1947, 1956: 92 KIA, 55 WIA, 147 total casualties, 0 missing. GRENADA, 1983: 19 KIA, 119 WIA, 138 total casualties, 0 missing. PANAMA, 1989: 40 KIA, 324 WIA, 364 total casualties, 0 missing.

Many of us will be more focused on a family member–a father or mother, brother or sister, a son, a nephew or niece–or perhaps a boy or girl from the neighborhood or church. [For as the German poet, Goethe, once noted: "I am rent to the core by this simple one's suffering; you pass carefree over the fate of thousands.[705] Only two weeks before the armistice ending World War I, my great uncle, NILS PETER ANDERSON, had been killed in the war.[706]]

Veterans Day focuses not only on the enormity of those lost in war, but on the living veterans who today live lost lives. A recent newspaper article noted there are roughly 107.000 homeless veterans in America[707] and goes on to state: Many of them are chronically condemned to wander our streets because the trauma they suffered serving our country has left them profoundly brain-damaged or disabled with terrible psychiatric conditions like post traumatic stress disorder.. These wounds of war are physically invisible, but they are no less life-threatening."

Following the death of his brother in World War I, the American poet, Archibald MacLeish wrote his poem, "The Young Dead Soldiers:"

> The young dead solders ... who has not heard them?
> They have a silence that speaks for them at night > and when the clock counts.
> They say: We were young. We have died. Remember us.
> They say: Our deaths are not ours; they are yours;
> they will mean what you make them.
> They say: Whether our lives and our deaths were for peace > and new hope or for nothing we cannot say; > it is you who must say this.
> They say: We leave you our deaths. Give them their meaning > Remember us.

Today, we remember. The word, "remember," as used in the Bible, refers not to mere thoughts in our mind, but bringing something from the past in order to affect present action. In other words, we pause and ponder in order that we might do something now.

Today, we rededicate ourselves to serving others and serving our country

Today, we rededicate ourselves to promote peace and justice.

Today, we rededicate ourselves to care for those who have borne the burden of the battle and their families.

May God bless us all with the vision and the strength to do this. God bless you all!

LETTER TO JAMES TAYLOR, FRIDAY, 02 DECEMBER 2011

I recently read an article .. that soldiers are experiencing an increased amount of casualties from IED's (we called them "booby traps") sending shrapnel into their private parts. they are not forced to wear a kind of bike shorts developed by the British to prevent dirt from getting into wounds and causing infections. I think they ought to wear steel cups! I recall that during the siege of Khe Sanh, I went to the artillery folks and got one of their "diapers." They wore "lower torso body armor" since they were in a static position by their tubes, to protect their privates. (All good Marine leaders need to protect their "Privates!") ☺ I wore this piece of equipment during the entire Siege as I walked throughout the whole base, day after day, bunker to bunker, trench to trench. I was medevaced for a couple of days due to a high fever, and I recall walking into the Officer's Mess at the NSA Hospital in DaNang just as they were eating lunch.

Everyone there was wearing clean, pressed utilities. They ate at tables with white table cloths and silverware! I couldn't believe the sight–after being in the siege for so long! I dreamed I went to heaven! I was wearing the "diapers" and also had a K-bar and gas mask dangling at my side, and my helmet with the cross on the front made from fleshettes! I was extremely grubby–and perhaps stunk as well. In fact, no one sat with me at that table while I ate–like I was literally "unclean" (like the Biblical lepers!). I felt rejected, so very alone, a curiosity, like a creature from another world–and while this was the

---

REVOLUTIONARY WAR: 4,000 KIA. WAR OF 1812: 2,000 KIA. MEXICAN WAR 1846-1848: 13,000 KIA. INDIAN WARS 1817-1898: 1,000 KIA. CIVIL WAR: at least 618,000 KIA out of an entire US population of 31 million. SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR 1989-1902: 11,000 KIA.

[705] Goethe, Faust II, 439f.

[706] Nils Peter Anderson, born 21 July 1896, died 25 Oct 1918. He had sailed for France 1 March 1918, was gassed 22 July 1918, and his body returned to the United States in 1921 for burial in Rienzi Cemetery, Fond du Lac, Wisconsin.

[707] Lawrence Tribe and Bobby Shriver, "Why Wounded Warriors Sleep in Dumpsters," The Wall Street Journal Thursday, 9 June 2011, p. A21.

experience of so many returning Vietnam veterans when they arrived in the States, this was even "in country!" One doctor came up to me with a small camera and asked if he could take a picture of me in all my battle gear and battle dirt. At the time, I felt he was regarding me as a zoo animal! Obviously, I'll never forget that scene. It's now been over 44 years and is still fresh in my memory.

Anyway, my "diapers" were part of his fascination. Maybe it was professional–damage by wounds to that area, an interest of some doctors. ... At the time, I just regarded it as though I were an object of disgust!

Funny how some memories get stuck permanently, like scratches in a LP record that keep replaying the same tune over and over again!

LETTER TO ANTHONY E. SIBLEY, Friday, 23 December 2011

Your very helpful note in the card clarified everything for me and now I recall it all. You were the Platoon Commander in A/1/26 on Thursday, 20 July 1967, on Hill 881-South. Three days earlier, I had arrived at Khe Sanh, and LtCol Jim Wilkinson mentioned that he'd like me to visit the hill outposts. So, off I went to Hill 881-South. I was still in stateside leather combat boots, fresh, green utilities, and very, very "green!" I remember leading a worship service on the LZ. For some reason, the story Jesus gold of the "wasteful" (prodigal) son in Luke 15 seemed to fit–the son "who goes off to a far-off country" and loses so much, but with the opportunity to "return" to his father (Jesus implies, God).

Well, after the worship was finished, I remember Captain John Raymond telling me, "Padre, you shouldn't talk about conditions of life of the men until you know them. There's a patrol leaving and you can go with them." Well, having decided at Camp Pendleton during pre-embarkation orientation in which I actually participated in an infiltration course, a night patrol in which we were caught and placed in a "POW camp" and so on, instead of merely observing these sort of things (which was what was done with chaplains)–so that I could get to know the Marines better—I told Captain Raymond that I would be glad to go.

After moving rapidly down the north slope of Hill 881-S, which is very steep and became more of an exercise in controlled falling than orderly movement. I remember going down a raging river with immense boulders, grass as high as a man in which I was especially careful always to keep in view the man in front and to my rear, but not to get too close. I remember you calling in WP registration rounds (I guess to determine exact location). Mostly, I remember that I was thoroughly exhausted after only half an hour, but knew I had to keep on going. I remember we came up the south slope–a long, gradual incline, and I was out of water. A corpsman gave me a few sips from his canteen. I remember scaling that hill, only to find that it hid another hill we had to climb before arriving at the top of the hill! My legs were cramping, I was a "basket case," but felt so very proud that I made it. Far more important, I now knew an appreciation for these Marines that I would not have known. I knew what they did, cay after day. I think they were up on 881 and 861 for 6-week periods, without showers. During the monsoons of September and October, trenches and bunkers collapsed, men were cold and couldn't get warm and dry. I remember Captain Raymond once giving me a sandbag full of soap bars from the SP pack and said, "Give these to the missionaries, Padre, we have no use for them up here." I wrote home and to others about the living conditions of the Marines on the hills. I will ALWAYS remember them and their conditions of life! I remember Captain Raymond had written slogans on C-ration sleeves. One said:

"God and the soldier we adore
In time of war and not before,
The battle ended and all things righted,
God's forgotten, the soldier slighted."

He had attributed it to Lord Marlboro, but it was actually from Francis Quarles (1592-1644), and the original reads: "Our God and soldiers we alike adore / En'n at the brink of danger, not before / After deliverance both alike requited / Our God's forgotten, and our soldiers slighted."

I had PFC Glen Waller assigned to me as my clerk. I was unaware he was a radioman in the company, and thereafter, Captain Raymond's attitude to me turned a bit sour–for taking one of his radiomen. Being so green, I was unaware of what I had done!

Many years later, someone sent me a clipping of John Raymond's obituary. At the time he was a full Colonel and was the Assistant to the Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps. He had retired only a month and then had a heart attack.

LETTER TO MR. STEVEN LOWNDS, 28 January 2012:

FOB 3 PASS FOR COL LOWNDS

Recently, one of the officers of a unit at Khe Sanh called FOB-3 sent me a pass he had in his collection of memorabilia from Khe Sanh, the pass for your father, COL David E. Lownds. Following an inquiry with Lieutenant General Ron Christmas and at his suggestion, I am forwarding that pass to you. Besides its historic value, this pass also has a picture of your father taken while he was at Khe Sanh (probably taken in late 1967; FOB-3 became operational, I believe, in November, 1967).

The officer was the intelligence officer and his name was Lt Gerald Crews. I was one of the Chaplains at Khe Sanh (July, 1967 - March, 1968), arriving there shortly before your father reported as Commanding Officer, and remaining there into the Siege battle. I frequently met your father, and later expressed to him that it is my belief that I and many others are alive today because of his very difficult but wise decisions for which he received criticism by some, but admiration from many. I wrote of much of this in correspondence with Lieutenant General Ron Christmas, and hopefully, some of this might have been shared with you. If not, please let me know, and I can write you of my memories of your father and include comments of some of those who were close to him. The good Colonel was a very highly respected and admired man. In almost all accounts of that particular battle, General Westmoreland is portrayed as the person making all the decisions when, in fact, it was your father and his staff that made all the daily, detailed decisions as to targets and tactics of that battle.

Please also know that I regard his passing and the passing of your mother with profound sorrow. I met both while doing research in Washington, D.C., and they entertained me at their home at that time. I also saw both of them at a Khe Sanh Veterans reunion at St. Louis, the only Khe Sanh reunion they attended. I recall speaking with your mother who related that her daughter was bereted by some of the students at the school she attended since her father was in Vietnam. Your mother related that not only did Vietnam veterans encounter hostility upon return to the States, but family members also received very negative reactions. In addition to great admiration for your father, I also have great admiration for your mother even though I only met her twice.

Please know of my very deepest admiration and sincerest condolences.

Left to right: RAY W. STUBBE, COL DAVID LOWNDS, EARLE BREEDING, JOHN KAHENY – at Glenn Rappold's Memorial – Khe Sanh Vets Reunion – July, 1997

LETTER TO BEN CASCIO, ESQ., 21 May 2012

... Yes! I very much recall the 1967 Christmas at Khe Sanh–the USAF planes overhead broadcasting Christmas carols, the resupply to the hills, and even taking an aluminum Christmas tree that had been sent to me to the newly-arrived unit on Hill 950 via a H-34. (It was always a problem for 34s since the LZ was so very small, the hill so very high for air density, and sometimes choppers actually "fell" off the slope to gain rotor turns!) As I recall, there was a lot of resupply work going on; you guys were really busy! And it was Christmas Day! While I don't remember speaking you, I'm sure that we did since I was in the choppers daily, moving between the hills and various outposts and the main base, and I sometimes ate at the regimental mess with some of the pilots.

As I recall, things were heating up at Khe Sanh by the end of December. Some of our recon teams were shot out and Marines were being killed. The NVA were moving in. We also had another whole battalion move into Khe Sanh in mid-December and another in mid-January and another one a couple days after the siege started. It's truly a miracle that any of us made it out alive!

Although I went through those days of shelling, clothes rotting off, and losing so much weight (went from 175 when I got to Vietnam to about 150 at the beginning of the siege to 129 at the end of the siege!), I've always felt–and told others as well–that those of you who flew the helicopters probably had a more fearful time because we, on the ground, became emotionally numb almost immediately, whereas you were constantly moving from a secure location (or, relatively secure!) at Quang Tri and Dona Ha and DaNang, and freshly exposed every day that you flew into Khe Sanh, totally aware of the dangers that we, on the ground, had pretty much adjusted to!

Also, you in the helicopters brought us vital medical supplies, totally covered our hill outposts (obviously fixed wing couldn't do that!), took out our wounded and brought in our replacements, and did so much more. My personal gratitude to the Wing is deep and lasts forever! We had no roads for overland resupply and fixed wing was actually suspended for awhile since Khe Sanh was regarded by the USAF, at least, as too dangerous to land following several C-130s being hit and burnt. So we totally depended on you of the Wing as our lifeline, like being in a burning building and having a hose connecting us to air, or being adrift in uncertain and dangerous seas and having a lifeline tossed to us in our desperation.

It was a chopper that brought me out of Khe Sanh when I was transferred to a unit at Quang Tri on 01 March. I remember walking down a road there, just after arriving, and some Marine was standing nearby. It was just the two of us. I remember he looked at me and said "It must be Khe Sanh." The Marine was from the Wing, but I didn't stop to talk. I guess I was too stunned. He referred to me as "it" and I must have been quite a spectacle with gas mask and so filthy and gaunt–like a ghost from the battlefield!

FLAG DAY PRAYER – Performing Arts Center, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 14 June 2012

O Lord, our God:
Today, Flag Day 2012,
as we recall experiences of our flag, we raise our thankful hearts
in grateful praise to You.
As we see our flag carried in parades:
those carrying the flag and the thousands of people lining the streets:
we acknowledge this land, its people,
and our government as your gifts.
You are the source of our rights:
life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.
As we see our flag carried in parades:
Our flag stirs a surge of strength,
a confidence of victory,
an abundance of memory of Your gifts to us through those who serve and have served us.
As we see our flag lifted up on flag poles, on Iwo Jima, on the moon for Olympic gold medal winners
We sense a surge of victory,

FLAG DAY – PERFORMING ARTS CENTER, Milwaukee, WI
Photo by Milwaukee Journal Sentinel photographer

a power of peace–
Your extravagant blessings.
Our flag reminds us we only rest securely in Your strong arms and caring hands.
However dark the times or bleak the battles of life, in the "rocket's red glare,
the bombs bursting in air," we behold our flag still there– as are You, always with us.
With You, we live
buoyantly, confidently, victoriously.
As we see our flag, covering coffins of those who gave their lives in loving, self-emptying service.
We acknowledge Your blessing covers us;
through the many millions
who have protected us, guided us, and enriched us.
In You we rest confident and comforted.
As we see our flag covering coffins,, You challenge us to serve others that all may have life abundant that our life's meaning implies service, even sacrifice,
We so: ask Your blessing upon our land and its people that we might be stirred to serve and continue to be a blessing to others in Your Holy Name.
Amen.

LETTER TO VINCE RIOS, Monday, 02 July 2012

.... I've always thought that the 1967 Battle f the Hills at Khe Sanh is something that has been overlooked and yet was so very important. When I put that together, I was struck by the way the Marines there faced their situation with such dedication and determination. I was also impressed with the conditions of battle–moving up and down those slippery, muddy hill slopes in rain, with no helicopters able to move them, just continuing to walk on and on, carrying their dead and wounded, weak from not only the physical conditions but also the stress of battle and having lost buddies, and yet they continued. This was Bravo Company, 1/9, the "walking dead," as they came to be known. I've often thought of that whenever I hear of women wanting to be in combat situations. I really don't think they know what they are asking for! Perhaps they have an understanding of combat as a matter of pressing buttons to release missiles or typing out things on a computer to send "death rays" on the enemy! But Marines who have lived in the mud and blood and agony of battle know much better. Those who have been in combat KNOW! I really don't think that women–some of whom may, indeed, be physically fit enough to endure the climbing of rough terrain in rain and mud, but most who couldn't–are fit for combat roles. They have their feminine hygiene issues, they have weaker muscle and less physically able bone structures (hips and legs), and might become a cause for others to become injured or killed in a situation like that faced by the survivors of Bravo Company, 1/9, in the Battle of the Hills! So those who want to have women in combat, I would show them the Battle of the Hills and ask: is THIS what you want?

As I get older, I have an increasing sense of pride at having been able to serve with Marines in combat and an increasing sense of admiration for those I knew–so full of life and caring for each other, so dedicated to doing their job, so full of a spirit of everything that is good and great.

LETTER TO WILLUIAM BIOLSI, Tuesday, 03 July 2012

.... I often wonder about what still remains after great historic events, or even in a family! I know that I only faintly remember my grandparents and very faintly a great-grandmother. Although I have names for ancestors further back, I never knew them and they are, actually, complete strangers. I suppose that our grandchildren or great-grandchildren (if we have them) will regard us the same way. We all seem to pass into obscurity, like the light on a stage in a dark room that moves, temporarily lighting the actors.

Someone once told me that when Saigon was about to fall, the men at MACV had assembled all their papers and had them packed in wooden crates on Tan Son Nhut Airport–over a mile long! Events happened so quickly, however, that it became necessary to evacuate the people from the American Embassy, and all those MACV records were left on the airstrip for the Vietnamese. I never heard whether they were destroyed, rescued and stored, or what happened to them, but obviously a very great loss in our historical records happened there. Then there was the fire at the National Records at St. Louis that destroyed millions of records of American servicemen several years ago.

In our electronic age, so much is so very temporary and kept on very fragile means. I'm told that all CDs are destined to self-destruct in less than 50 years, and who knows what computer programs will be available in 30 or more years to read what has been recorded electronically? In many ways, it's very humbling to realize how little of what we think is so important will remain!

I think of this since tomorrow is our Independence Day, the birthday of our nation. Most people will have their cook-outs or picnics or do some traveling to friends and relatives, but, like Memorial Day or Veterans Day, few will pause to remember. Of course, the important thing is that we DO have our freedoms and our wonderful nation, but it does trouble me that we've forgotten our roots to our great loss!

PRAYER FOR VISITING VIETNAM WALL CEREMONY, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, 17 August 2012

O Lord, our God,
  As we gaze at the great amount of names on this Wall,
    We pause, we are overwhelmed, we are silenced.
    There are so many:
  Behind each name, so many others:
    Comrades–brothers in battle,
    Parents, brothers, and sisters,
    Wives, sons, and daughters,
    Grandparents, uncles, and aunts
    Friends in school, on the job, and neighbors.
  All us who are lessened by their loss, not now enriched by what they may have become:
      Physicians healing tens of thousands
      Teachers molding the lives of our children
      Artists, musicians, and authors to enrich us
      Husbands, fathers, and friends.
Then, O Lord, we remember the vast amount of Your grace,
  Like rains transform parched earth to abundance,
  You change loss to gain,
    Depression to compassion,
    Death to life.
You are always with us:
You bless us with Your Presence
  No matter where we now are,
You transform us from what was and what is to shat shall be;
You bless us with your Power:
  To embrace and help each other,
  To comfort us that we may comfort others,
  To motivate us to bear each other's burdens.
May the amount of Your blessings, so vast and without number
  Keep us

In Your peace, Your love, Your strength, and
In Your Holy Name, we pray. AMEN

MARINES OF C/1/26 AT SWIM HOLE, BRIDGE SITE. 08 Aug 1967
Official USMC photo A193267 by Ray W. Stubbe

LETTER TO REV. WILLIAM R. HAMPTON, Saturday, 18 August 2012

... The picture is a very good reminder that we did, in fact, have some very enjoyable times, even at Khe Sanh–before all the horror and terror ensnared us in its web. It's a picture that also reflects the playfulness and humanity of these young men before they suddenly were changed forever into "old men facing come very serious questions" (of life and its meaning, etc.). The picture also portrays the sheer beauty of the country itself–almost a Garden of Eden Paradise–before it was ravaged by all the explosions that rendered it a moonscape and killing fields. Ever since those days, I've always had an uneasy reaction toward places serene and beautiful, knowing that they can change as suddenly as one flips a light switch, into terror and hell.

You arrived at Khe Sanh after the light switch had been flipped and didn't experience the breath-taking beauty we knew before 21 January. So maybe this picture will help you realize just how opposite the place once was from what your experience!

LETTER TO LANCE LARSON, WEDNESDAY, 31 OCTOBER 2012

... Why anyone would set their heart on getting something that acknowledges what they did is a mystery. Of course, Marines, and even Army Special Forces who worked clandestinely in Laos and Navy SEALS I have known all have a kind of professionalism that doesn't even think of "what others think" or "getting something out of it" other than accomplishing the mission and getting out alive! I don't know if I ever shared a story with you, but it sort of illustrates it. Once, while I was on active duty, I came home on leave and my grandma looked at my ribbons and, pointing a finger at one of them, said, "I like that one the best!" It was the national Defense Servicer medal (the yellow and red one) that everyone who was on active duty was awarded. I told her, "Grandma, everybody gets that; it really doesn't mean anything." She replied, "hat's OK. I like it the best. It's the prettiest!" At that point I really knew that none of these things mean anything–except to those who are in the group. In fact, once one leaves active duty, they aren't even worn.

Recently, I've talked with a Navy SEAL I once knew back in 1973 who was quite angry over some of the books coming out on SEAL Team 6 and the killing of Osama bin Laden since they promote only the author and perhaps disclose classified sources and methods. I was always deeply impressed by the SEALs. I first got to know them while I was temporarily at Naval Amphibious Base Little Creek in Norfolk, Va., between duty stations. I had left the ship I had served for two years as it went to the Mediterranean and had orders to 3d MarDi v on Okinawa, but the Navy ran out of transfer funds since it was the end of the fiscal year (as they still do!). The chaplains at Little Creek didn't have anything for me to do, so I went over to the UDT and SEAL building and asked if I could do PT with them. They were happy. I did morning runs on the sandy Atlantic beach with them in the ice and snow of January, 1973, and did exercises. The first time we did exercises, we were in a circle and the leader, who was in the center, said, "We'll start off easy–50 pushups." (Now, that wasn't "easy" for me at the time, but I went along). As we got into a prone position, the man next to me said, "Chaps, should I use right arm or left arm?" I'd never even heard of "one arm pushups" and thought he obviously was joking. So, supposing he was right handed, I said, "Chief, use your left arm." He promptly put his right fist in his lower back and did 50 one-arm pushups with his left arm! He had an odd appearance: one of his eyes looked off to the side. I wondered how he was with the SEALs! His name was Bruhmuller, and he'd just returned from a mission in Bolivia, as I remember. I got to know him in conversations, and he recommended I accompany one of their teams to a camp in the hills of northern Virginia (Camp A.P. Hill), and so for the first eleven days of February, 1973, I was with them as we learned escape and evasion techniques that involves learning how to read fingerprints, use dead drops, and all sorts of "spy stuff." The hootch was not heated, and I remember getting into and out of the sleeping bad and taking off/putting on my clothes inside the zipped-up bag! The men played practical jokes on everyone else–including me, and took me in as one of their own. I discovered a group that reminded me much of the Marines I knew at Khe Sanh–young, playful, creative, dedicated, supporting each other–just really great men.

Interestingly, although I was with them only a couple months, they, like the Marines at Khe Sanh, made a lasting impression on me. A few years ago, while talking to about a hundred chaplains at Great Lakes, I met a chaplain with gold jump wings and a SCUBA device on his uniform. We got talking about SEALs and I mentioned a SEAL who had "one eye that looked sideways while the other focused straight ahead." "O, that's Bruhmuller," he immediately said. "You know him?" I asked. He did, and he gave me his phone number. Well, Chief Bruhmuller and I reconnected after all these years, and he's sent me SEAL challenge coins, T-shirts, etc., and we've had some very good conversations.

It's much like our Khe Sanh vets reconnecting after all these many years. But it also shows how some of those experiences of many decades ago still connect us!

Anyway, in one of our conversations, he was severely critical of the author of the new book on SEAL Team 6, and I remember telling him, "You guys were all so professional, you just did your job and weren't concerned about getting any recognition for it." That's how I feel about all these kinds of awards. Just accomplishing a mission, just getting out alive and hopefully without injury, should be a great reward in itself. Just learning a bit more about what we're capable of doing–and perhaps also of our fears and things about ourselves that we didn't know–all that is a great gift. Those of us who've been through Khe Sanh and events like that have a much greater appreciation for peace, for the gift of life, for freedom and beauty and the important things of life–much greater, I think, than those who haven't gone through what we went through. And all of that is a very great reward, even if we also have wounds to body, mind, and spirit, and even if there are sleepless nights, emotional outbursts, difficulties in close relationships, and all the rest. That reminds me of someone who once told me that they wish they could get a retirement pension also, and I said, "Fine, you can also have my nightmares, my feelings that every day is my last day, the social isolation I sometimes feel because I remained on active duty and didn't develop high school or neighborhood friendships, and so on!

In a few days, we have Veterans Day and Marine Corps Birthday, and perhaps with that in mind, I have run off on too many tangents!

You might appreciate an experience I had a few weeks ago while going through a dirt bike trail near my home. I suddenly found myself alone, as frequently happens along that trail, but then noticed a young man slowly crouching in a clump of bushes. And HE HAD A RIFLE! Now, I know that most sane people would get out of that place as quickly and quietly as they could, or if they were a combat vet, might "flash back" to being in combat!. I, on the other hand, just walked up to him and, in a soft voice said, "What are you doing?" He explained that there were about half a dozen of them and they were "playing war." I said, "Very interesting." I asked if he were a veteran. No. I asked how old he was. 23. I thought: "You're a bit old to be playing war!" I asked what he was firing. He proudly replied they were biodegradable pellets. I said, "Very interesting," and walked away. One never knows what to expect.

VETERANS DAY PRAYERS – 11 November 2012

(Miller Coors Brewing Company and Veterans Day Banquet in the War Memorial, Milwaukee, Wisconsin)

INVOCATION

O Lord, those we honor today, reflect Your Presence with us:
We pause to praise Your life of love through their actions of service and sacrifice
May this time together:
  motivate, strengthen, and bless us:
  that we, like they, with courage fulfill Your purpose to bear one another's burdens that we, like they, with strength and hope reflect Your Presence as we serve each other and that we, like they, with compassion share and care,

affirm life in the midst of death.
What they have done penetrates our soul:
Your gift of love and life living through them– like fire infusing metal with its heat creating a glow of bright light and warmth in a cold night.
May those who serve in today's military be aware of Your Presence as strongly as the hug of a comrade during incoming,
May Your Presence through this fellowship nourish and strengthen us to serve in Your Holy Name. AMEN.

BENEDICTION

May the strong arm of the LORD keep you from all harm.
May the right hand of the LORD be your guide in serving others
May you see God in the face of your friend.
May the gracious Presence of the Lord still your troubled waters.
May our Lord's peace provide you opportunity to be whole,
do justice, help the needy, be an oasis of peace and life
May the Lord direct you
into paths of nourishment, strength and peace
in His Holy Name. AMEN.

PRAYER TO REMEMBER A CIVIL WAR VETERAN BURIED IN THE MILWAUKEE COUINTY GROUNDS, WAUWATOSA, WISCONSIN, 11 November 2012

A READING

"Let us now sing the praises of famous men, our ancestors in their generations ... Some of them have left behind a name, so that others declare their praise. But of others there is no memory; they have perished as though they had never existed; they have become as though they had never been born, they and their children after them. But these also were godly men, whose righteous deeds have not been forgotten."[708]

LET US PRAY:

Today, O Lord, we remember our brother, Herman Borghardt, comrade in arms from the Civil War, who died in 1898, and, with some 1300 others, without family or means,
was buried here.
Like an ember in the fireplace, our humanity glows with warmth and light as we remember, reconnect, and respect;
we reflect the value You, O Lord, place on all,
for human life is short, fragile, and valuable,
but with You, human life is neither forgotten nor forsaken.
Fragments of memory, of those we have known

---

[708] Sirach [also known as Ecclesiasticus] 44.1, 8-10.

and those hidden in dark shadows of the past, glow with warmth and light
as we share and we care, and honor the dead by serving the living, [709]
As we regard and respect the lives of others, we grow more whole, we are healed,
we are energized to serve others,
We all have parts of the whole;
as we come together, all are made more whole.
Today, we ask Your blessing upon Herman Borghardt and all buried here.
We ask Your blessing upon our nation.
that we never forget. You, the source of all life, peace, and blessing.
We ask your blessing upon us who live to serve
in Your Holy Name. We pray. AMEN

LETTER TO REV. JAMES H. RUTHERFORD, Tuesday, 20 November 2012

...

The weekend of Veterans Day involved me in giving prayers at three very different events, the most interesting of which was a small gathering on a hillside near a fairly newly constructed hospital in our Medical College complex. The hospital plans to expand, and the land on which it will be building is an old cemetery, a Potters Field, where indigent were buried back in the 1800s. There are no markers. When the new hospital building was constructed, it was also built on one of these cemeteries. Back in the 1800s, this area housed a Poor Farm, a Poor House, an Insane Asylum, a Hospital, and about five Potters Field cemeteries. When the hospital was built over the cemetery, the bones were dug up and transferred to the anthropology department of Marquette University to study what kind of backgrounds the dead may have had. Then, they were transferred to the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee where they are now stored in some warehouse. I think they should have been reburied in a mass grave with a suitable marker. Now, the same thing is happening. The hospital plans to build more buildings, and this will be on top of a cemetery of some 1300 graves. While researching the records, it was discovered that one of these was a Civil War veteran. A small group has formed to try to have his remains identified and have him buried in our local VA cemetery.

At the ceremony, a few Civil War re-enactors with their muskets, some medical types, and a few others gathered on a grassy hillside. There was a very strong wind that, at times, muffled any spoken words. I had been asked to give the prayer for the occasion, and preceded it with a quote from the Old Testament Apocrypha book of Sirach (the Catholics call it Ecclesiasticus) which seemed very appropriate. (A copy of my prayer is attached).

Two things interested me: one is that he wasn't forgotten. It seems to me that this is part of our being an "image of God," that we remember, just as our Lord never forgets us. This is over a hundred years later, but we still remember. The second thing is that the veteran had no identifiable descendents, but that a group of people took it upon themselves to do something, again reflecting the Lord's presence.

LETTER TO BOB CAVANAUGH, Thursday, 14 February 2013

...

It's very amazing that any of us made it out of those desperate months at Khe Sanh. We learned that life is precious, fragile, and short. You and those at FOB-3, in fact, had it even worse with your "strolls" into Laos even before the siege battle began. As one of my good friends from those days once told me, every day since then is a plus, a day we couldn't have counted on. Each day in which we can do something good for someone else, forgive, say thank you, and offer serve and help, enriches everyone, and every day that we receive these kind of gifts from others, is really a gift from above, from our Lord that brings life, peace, and blessing. That your son reached out and called me obviously indicates his great love of you, a love you have surely passed on to him as your life lives in him.

---

[709] Motto of the Milwaukee County War Memorial.

Although I only made it over to FOB-3 twice during the siege–and a couple of times before it, I don't recall you personally from those visits, but was always deeply impressed by the humanity of those I did meet. I recall a tough-looking soldier with a tiger's tooth on a necklace who told me, "I'm not a religious person, chaplain, but please pray for those people." He was pointing to the Lao refugees who had taken refuge outside FOB3's wires after the fall of Lang Vei. He said he knew many of them. I recall holding a worship service inside the medical bunker and everyone's eyes were fixed on me, almost to an embarrassing extent. When I finished, turned, and was walking out, I happened to notice a Playboy centerfold just above my head, and I'm sure they were gazing at that, not me! There was concern, there was humor. In recent years, I wrote some things, and came to know many others from FOB-3, including you, who gave me additional insights into the humanity of the troops there and some of the amazing exploits of several. All of you were so very human, and God loved all of you,

LETTER TO KEN AND BETTY RODGERS, Friday, 15 February 2013

Please know how pleased I was to receive a complimentary copy of your video, Bravo! and to know that these very brave Marines who went through so much are not forgotten and in fact, will be remembered through your efforts. I was on the base at the time and, of course, knew so many of those involved personally. Some remain with me and probably will be in my heart until I die–Ken Pipes, of course, and then another Ken, Ken Claire (or "Tarzan") and just so many! Recently, Ron Ridgeway contacted me and I was able to furnish him with his POW file which the Marine Corps wasn't providing to him (said he could view it if he visited them!) but which I had copied back in the early 1980s and which gave a very detailed account of the Jacques' patrol of 25 February.

Your video presents a first-rate expression of the reality of what happened, of war, of the effects of war. As I have often told others, those at Khe Sanh, as a whole and individually, were the best group of men with whom I have ever been associated. They were so very human–as your documentary so aptly portrays. They were also so very caring (for others), maintained a humor in the midst of horror, affirmed life in the presence of death, and many of them continue to live in my soul where they will, undoubtedly, live forever. Your video is profound in its impact, valuable in its historical documentation, and I'm sure, helpful and healing. You have given a labor of love, a significant insight into what needs to be said and preserved. It is not the tactics or strategy that matters, but the people involved. You caught not only experiences but emotions. I was greatly moved. The way you integrated actual sounds of incoming and footage shot at the time with contemporary shots of those interviewed was done expertly and with impact.

There are only a few comments I might make where I might question, correct, or expand on what was said

- There were probably not 20,000 NVA that surrounded us, but more like 40,000. In fact, there was a whole "Front Headquarters," (with their secret designation of B5-T8) located just west of the western edge of the DMZ under command of a NVA LtGen.
- The tonnage of airstrikes was greater than all ordnance dropped during World War II in the Pacific. [See references in my attachments]
- Perhaps one of the interesting men from Bravo Company, KEN CLAIRE ("Tarzan") should have been mentioned. He was KIA on the 25 Feb patrol and, despite his very gruff manner, kept everyone going when the ammo dump blew. There are other interesting Marines from BRAVO Company, 1/26, like Peter J. Mudinich, the German whose leg was broken by a clump of earth from a close-in airstrike–which shows how close these were run; and also Mussari who had a live 60mm mortar round in his gut taken out by one of the C Med doctors, and some others–see attached documents. These reflect some of the desperation and the reality of the incoming)
- Some mentioned several times the warning sounds of mortars leaving tubes. While this is an accurate memory–I, too, recall this, and counting about seven seconds before I knew an incoming round would explode–but what needs to be said also is that the sounds of all those many aircraft landing in the afternoons (after the usual morning fog burned off), muffled these faint warning sounds. Thus, we were suddenly, at times, subjected to unanticipated incoming. The sounds of the propellers of the aircraft only increased our nervous anticipation of being hit.
- The concussions (at 0:19:50) were probably more from very close-in B-52 strikes which were brought within 500 meters of our trenches to destroy NVA trenching. Men from Bravo Company actually reported seeing NVA bodies tossed into the air.
- Regarding food (at 0:22:15): we were limited to one C-ration per day and one canteen cup of water a day. I, myself, went from 175 when I first got to Khe Sanh, to 129 at the end of the siege!
- The significance of the tunnels might have been brought-out. Why they were so ominous. The 304th NVA Division at Khe Sanh had also fought at Dien Bien Phu and had tunneled in an attempt to blow up the base from underneath. Col. Lownds had a special scientific advisor from MACV, Edison Cesar, come up to Khe Sanh and make some recommendations regarding equipment to detect the tunneling. Col Lownds didn't believe the NVA was actually tunneling, but didn't dismiss the thought: it gave the troops something they could do to counter the enemy, he thought.

- The note on "slow motion" is so very correct!
- The patrol on 25 Feb didn't encounter 4,000 NVA! But they did come upon one of the NVA Strong points (mentioned in the official NVA histories–see attached in the discussion of the casualties of 25 Feb)
- There was a very angry exchange on whether or not to bomb the contact site–that there might still be survivors, yet the need to "get" the enemy.
- The man's name is "Author," not "Arthur." (See letter from Author Smith's sister in the attached excerpt from Battalion of Kings)
- The major point of contention I would have is that there were NOT 204 AMERICANS KILLED! This, the official regimental number, and also the number given in Congressional testimony on the electronic battlefield (sensors), does not reflect the 475+ killed for which I have names and dates, indicated in Battalion of Kings, nor does it even reflect the official numbers listed in subordinate battalion records! (I have an explanation that might help: the figures don't indicate the KIA who died after being evacuated, don't include other units (such as the Army FOB-3), don't perhaps include 1/9's 60+ KIA since although 1/9 was "operationally attached" (OPCON) to the 26th Marines, they were "administratively attached" (ADCOM) to 9th Marine Regiment. There is also an artificial ending of the operation at Khe Sanh–doesn't include the casualties after 30 March, even though units who were still at Khe Sanh continued to sustain casualties. For example, on 16 April, 1/9 had several dozen KIA!). Dr. Magilligan, the senior doctor of C Med, wrote in an article shortly after Khe Sanh, that there were 2500 WIA evacuated during the siege. (See attached documentation)
- I really appreciated Mike O'Hara's profound statement at the end of the presentation!

LETTER TO KEN AND BETTY RODGERS, Saturday, 13 April 2013

Your letter of 30 March–(certainly a most significant date–for the history of B/1/26!)–brought special blessings to me. Recent conversations with Mike Preston have reinforced my high regard for what you have accomplished–and, indeed, will accomplish in the future through the showings of your magnificent film that provides a penetrating and lasting image of Bravo Company, 1/26, during the Siege of Khe Sanh. Since I had been at Khe Sanh from July, 1967, many of those in Bravo Company were very familiar, some even good friends, and many who will be in my soul and memory forever. Some have continued as good friends though telephone calls and letters. Thus, your film has a far greater impact on me personally, going beyond simply illuminating a period of several weeks that have had such a great impact on my life–and certainly the lives of all who were there!–but going beyond that to highlight some that I personally know! What a great treasure you have mined and smelted out of the ore of the dirt of Khe Sanh! The metaphor is perhaps appropriate, for you have distilled out the precious metal through the anguish of the heat of dealing with powerful (and what might be destructive) memories and through the even greater anguish of having to edit-down to have the purified result that gives such a great impact as your film does.

Certainly, my criticisms are not meant in any way to detract from that! They are simply just another "input." My own conclusions are that "things were even worse" than what is related by the survivor's memories–there were far more casualties, far more enemy, and life was far more difficult and the heroism far more common and greater, and so on. In many ways, as I review what I experienced and what I've learned in the years following, I truly am in awe that any of us made it out alive. O, I know we had tremendous support (B-52s, closeness to supporting bases in the east, unlike Dien Bien Phu, and even the commitment of the White House and JCS!). And, as an editorial of the time says, "We had Marines!" All that aside, however, I'm totally convinced that it was really the Lord's doing that we had just the right people there–the right officers and non-coms and others with the right professional and human insights and strengths–and this was no accident of the G-1 of Division assigning them!)

President Obama mentioned only four battles out of our entire American military history when he was inaugurated on 20 January 2000 ("or us, they fought in places like Concord and Gettysburg, Normandy and Khe Sanh"), I personally suspect that that part was written by General James Jones who was then serving as one of his advisors. (General Jones had been Commandant of the Marine Corps and then Supreme Allied Commander of NATO before that–and had also served as a Marine Captain at Khe Sanh in a desperate battle on a hilltop along Route 9 just after the Siege in which he had to call napalm on his own position in order to repel NVA attackers. General Jones was the son of James Jones who was a Major in WW II who formed and led a special reconnaissance unit that did the preliminary beach surveys of islands in the Pacific that would later be assaulted by Marines).

Certainly, when William Colby (then in Saigon, but later head of CIA) took a jeep and drove up to Khe Sanh with his won in 1961 and went to the border town of Lao Bao, and when, in 1964, Floyd Thompson who was then with the Special Forces detachment at Khe Sanh was captured and became the longest-held POW of the Vietnam War, the place was destined to become a great battlefield. Built on the crater of an extinct volcano, and named on the tactical maps as "Xom Cham" (or "village of Chams"–those fierce pirate warriors that were on the coastlines of South Vietnam many centuries earlier but who had been pushed out of their lands by the Vietnamese moving southward from China and sought refuge in southern parts of South Vietnam–and perhaps also at what became Khe Sanh–thus "village of Chams!"–the place was born in violence which sort of lingered as a sort of spiritual atmosphere that was to shape what eventually erupted in our siege battle.

Interestingly, early French geology reports on the area (from the 1920s and 30s) note the high percentage of arsenic in the rivers at Khe Sanh, and I'm sure that many of the cancers and other health issues that have made many of our Khe Sanh veterans ill and even caused their death–along with the spraying of Agent Orange along Route 9 in April, 1968, are lingering legacies, as are the multiple injuries and deaths of Vietnamese metal scavengers who have unearthed unexploded ordnance of that battlefield.

And, of course, other units at Khe Sanh also suffered great loss. The Recon company, sandwiched between the Regimental COC and the airstrip, certainly the bulls-eye of incoming during the siege, suffered over 70% casualties (KIA and WIA), and 1/9, after breaking out of the Rock Quarry, lost almost all of its CP group on Hill 471 and then lost 40 KIA on a single day, 16 April 1968, when two of their companies were decimated as they patrolled from Hill 689. Then, there were the desperate, hand-to-hand combat experiences of the Marines of K/3/26 on Hill 861 (21 Jan), the Marines and ARVN soldiers in Khe Sanh village (21 Jan) that forced their abandoning of the position and the first loss of a seat of South Vietnamese government in the war, the assault on of E/2/6 on Hill 861-Alfa (5 Feb), the assault–first use of tanks by the NVA–on Lang Vei (7 Feb), and, well, so many other dramatic battles! (It is for some of this, plus my age and weakness, that I've abandoned a life-long project of writing a history of Khe Sanh. I'm in the forest and am lost in the trees!). I'm, a bit surprised by someone like Gregg Jones who is about to complete a history of the Khe Sanh battle! (Of course, there are many other dimensions as well–the B-52s and the aerial resupply, the heroic work of the doctors and corpsmen of C Med, the life on the remote hill outposts, the intelligence collection and evaluation, the NVA tactics and positions and that whole dimension, the White House and MACV and CINCPAC and JCA dimension, the political and press dimension and comparisons with Dien Bien Phu, and so on.). Khe Sanh is really a most complex "animal" (perhaps "monster," "dragon" or even "chimera!")

Khe Sanh was, indeed, perhaps the bloodiest battlefield in the Vietnam War.

Your movie, focusing on Bravo Company, enables us to see the whole through the experiences of the part, or, as William Blake famously put it (Auguries of Innocence),

> "To see a World in a Grain of Sand
> And a Heaven in a Wild Flower,
> Hold Infinity in the palm of your hand
> And eternity in an hour." [Lines 1-4]

Well, excuse my digressions!

Just wanted to thank you for your very kind letter and most of all for your dedicated, generous life-time action in making Bravo come to life!

With deep admiration, Ray

LETTER TO ROGER HOWES, Monday, 15 April 2013:

The idea of "community" is assumed, but is actually a matter of quite different approaches. There is the Roman societas, in which community is formed because of people who like each other, are bound to each other, like a chain. The symbol of Rome was the fasces which was a kind of ax embedded in a group of iron rods. the idea was that a single iron rod could be bent, but that all the rods bound together formed a stiff, unbendable unity. This idea is the source of that saying "united we stand, divided we fall." It's the idea that seems to be current in America–that of mutual understanding and acceptance, where we are united because we are joined to each other.

But there is another way of understanding "community." This is the one common to the New Testament and expressed by the word koinonia. This idea of community is that everyone is joined together by being joined to something held in common. It's not the idea of each joined to each other, but all part of the same community because all hold something in common, all are part of the whole. The unifying center may be "suffering"–a "fellowship of suffering," but it is more a matter of all being connected to the Spirit, the Lord, unified through participation in the Eucharist (body and blood). Like a wheel that is formed because all the spokes are joined to a hub, this community can be a whole of wisely differing members. The Church is such a community: there are rich and poor, educated and uneducated, young and old, wealthy and poor, of different nationalities and different philosophies, yet all kneel at the same alter, pray together, and work together. Human distinctions and differences really don't matter. Paul writes there are "male and female, slave and free," and so on.

In the former idea of community, these differences need to be abolished–although some who are into "integration" maintain that one must not forsake their own heritage but there must be mutual respect and acceptance of the differences. (Obviously, as the Bible puts it, "an Ethiopian can't change the color of his skin, nor a leopard his spots." Therefore, there must be "acceptance," pride in one's own "difference" and yet toleration of all). Nevertheless, there is an attempt to "level down," to have uniformity. In schools, this means to do away with grades and intellectual distinctions. We don't want our child to be "different" (even if that means the child excels!). We don't want people with a lot of wealth–all should share wealth equally.

In the latter view of community, however, human distinctions really don't matter. What matters is what unifies all–God. It is love (which is God), the maximizing of life (which is the gift of God), justice and righteousness (maintaining the community by having laws which keep us from harming ourselves and others–the Commandments). The 19th Century American philosopher, Josiah Royce, wrote that societies are kept together by having a common history/past/heritage, and a common set of expectations/goals/visions for the future. Our modern world outlook, however, is "postmodern," which means there is no center, no organizing principle that holds everything together, no heroes or people who compel our allegiance. We have multiculturalism and the internet in which everyone's opinion is as valid as another's. There are no "experts" or authorities.

Modern community, thus, is even "less" than the Roman societas. We have young people in the same room who no longer talk with each other, but text each other–in the same room! We have people on twitter or facebook or whatever, who, while "connected" in a vast network, nevertheless are very lonely. Language has become reduced to abbreviations and a few dozen words rather than a rich, full expression. This is a third idea of community–the electronic. With the invention of the printing press and moveable type came the diffusion of knowledge, the sharing of ideas that pierced through isolated clans and national boundaries. Now, with the invention of the internet, this has been made more instantaneous and widespread, but at the cost of genuine human community, I fear.

You and I both enjoy being in nature. You and I both enjoy musing over historic artifacts that "contain" and proclaim people of past generations. There is a certain warmth and sense of connection that comes from walking through a museum. Tangible objects seem to contain and preserve people and places of the past. And, we are part of the community with them. We see an object and muse over their life condition, their desires and hopes and dreams. I suppose that's why veterans and others become so alarmed when the US flag is burned by protesters, for the flag is not simply cloth, but carries with it all those who have given their lives for others in their society (whether this be military or also policemen, firemen, civic leaders, or just an old mother or father). A wedding ring is not simply a piece of jewelry; it is far more. Pictures of loved ones in our wallet are not simply another photo but seem to re-present (make present again) the person or persons in the photograph.

So, the idea of "society" or "community" has many different understandings, most of which aren't really clear to most.

LETTER TO EDWARD W. WELCHEL, Saturday, 25 May 2013

...

I think it was in eating that we had the truly only peaceful times–it was time for our elf or time in which we could share. I still remember people sharing C's and how some actually liked the "Ham and Limas!" I remember how some would take the Pound Cake and then frost it with a mixture of the cocoa and cream and sugar! I remember going through the barbed wire of the place on the base where C ration cartons had been stored (near the regimental mess hall) just to steal an onion in order to spice up the Cs knowing full well that there was no place to run if incoming suddenly came and knowing that I could die–all in order to get an onion! I guess we were all a bit crazy!! I remember that we were down to two C rations a day (when we should have had three) and one canteen cup of water a day. I lost so much weight! I went from 175 when I got to Vietnam to 129 when I left Khe Sanh, and I was not alone–the reduced food, the stress, the running around–all removed the weight. Sometimes, when I give talks to high school students, I say that "people want to do on a diet to remove weight? Well, the 'battlefield diet' really works, but I don't recommend it; there are too many adverse side effects!" The recon group at Khe Sanh (before the siege) had been issued the Long Range Rations–the only ones to get them there at that time. I guess my favorites were the "Beef Stew in Juices" and the "Ham with water added, and eggs chopped, canned" and I could tolerate the "Beans and Wieners"

In the middle of the siege, one man (Jack Corbett from 81s) once gave me a large glass jar (a little over a foot high and about 8 inches in diameter) filled with maraschino cherries! What does one do with several hundred of those cherries? Well, I remember lugging that glass jar with me and giving them out to the Marines I visited as I went from bunker to bunker and trench to trench. I later saw Jack Corbett in 1988 in Miami at our first Khe Sanh Vet meeting. He said, "Do you remember me?" I said that I didn't. He said, "I'm the 'cherry man' the one who gave you the glass jar of maraschino cherries!" I said, "Why did you do that?" He said, "Well, you looked so haggard and I said that I wanted to do something for the chaplain, so I went through the barbed wire the food area to get that for you!"

I remember how we used to make a "stove" by taking the C-ration opener and making holes in a can, bending the can somewhat, and putting one of the heat tabs in it to heat up the "heavy" of the C-ration or heat up water to make coffee. Sometimes, we'd use a small piece of C-4 and ignite that instead of a heat tab. When on patrols, I remember the engineers (who carried the C-4 to blow up trees blocking our route or whatever) always tried to get everyone to use C-4 for heating, saying that then they didn't have to carry it! I remember how it gave off a very hot flame that had little balls of white (like, an eighth of an inch in diameter).

LETTER TO RON WHEAT, Monday, 27 May 2013

...

My own position–at least my present position (which could obviously change with new insights, prayer, inputs from others in the Christian community, etc.) is that PTSD involves a permanent, physical change (namely, of the hippocampus, the part of the brain dealing with processing short-term memory and also involved in dream activity, which actually shrinks after exposure to combat, especially combat that is prolonged and severe). It is much like being blinded by physical damage to the eye, the loss of an arm, or a heart attack. I do not think of it as primarily an emotional response to combat. It is rather a physical alteration, wounding, of the brain. But just as the loss of an arm or leg obviously affects life with necessary adjustments being required, so does exposure to combat. It is also similar to a young child growing up in a dysfunctional family or a disadvantaged setting. Such a child, when grown, can always say, "but that's how I was raised." A more enlightened person will say, "but I have a choice. It's a matter of what I do with it. I don't have to let that control my life." Similarly, with an illness or physical damage to the body, an enlightened person might say, "But I am not my disease. I am not my damaged body," and so something about it, not letting "it" have control, but letting the Lord have control–i.e., heal!

...

I've come to realize that it's what we do with our wounds, and also that wounds are best handled by putting them in a larger context. Even non-Christians can do this–the larger context may be a circle of friends, an understanding family, a greater understanding of what's happening (e.g., Frankl's statement that when experiencing abnormal situations, our abnormal reactions are perfectly normal behavior (Frankl, Viktor E., Man's Search for Meaning, An Introduction to Logotherapy p. 18.), the realization that a tragic experience is only a small part of the larger span of life, and so on. The Christian, of course, places everything in the hands of our loving Lord.

...

The second thing I learned a very long time ago (see the attached part of an essay I wrote back on 10 December 1984!–that's quite a few years ago, and I've obviously since modified much of what I wrote then!) is this: that there are wounds that are unhealing, as experienced by both St. Paul and Jeremiah, as well as Job and many others. They are unhealing because God can use them for His purposes of bringing life to others. We then become "wounded healers." One might say that ONLY those who are wounded are able to be healers, much like Alcoholics Anonymous and other similar support groups, or even the church as viewed as a "hospital of sick sinners, healing each other with God's healing powers." Martin Luther once observed that in the end we are only "hungry beggars feeding each other." Unhealing wounds are a way of putting us in contact with others, much like that ancient Jewish story of the Rabbi who became blind, earnestly prayed to God to gain sight, but the Lord left him blind–so that he might have appreciation for and contact with those who are blind. The 12th Century Meister Eckhart also wrote of a nobleman who married a common woman who was blind. Eventually he blinded himself. Why? she asks! "Now I am like you," he replied. He loved her that much. Much like Paul writes of Jesus that He became sin for us who knew no sin so that we might be the righteousness of God, in what the medieval theologians referred to as "the exchange of attributes." It's always the Giver, not the gift, that Christians must emphasize. The blind person may ask the Lord to see, as did Bartimeaus, but the important aspect is the relationship to the Giver, not the gift, as the story of Jesus cleansing the ten lepers illustrates.

...

There's a very old story–(I first heard it about 50 years ago)–of a scene of hell. In it, there is a large banquet table full of delicious food, but everyone seated around the table is starving and miserable–because they have splints on their arms, can't bend their elbows, and thus can't get the food to eat! Then, the visitor is shown a scene of heaven. Paradoxically, it's exactly the same–the large table filled with wonderful food and people with splints on their arms so they can't bend their elbows. But these people are happy and well nourished. The difference: They fed each other.

Another thought comes to mind. I've also learned that reality is obviously much greater than what we experience of it. We are limited in what we can experience, and frequently others supply perspectives that we didn't "see" at the time. But also, our own experience of reality is much greater than anything we might say about it, for we might later remember some aspects we didn't think important at the time or didn't pay attention to, and so on. With our relationship to our Lord, we must always be open to new insights, greater understandings, and growth. I'm still learning! And the more I learn, the more I realize I don't know. But that isn't important. What's important is the personal relationship with my Lord, and that's what the Biblical Hebrew word for "know" means anyway–not head knowledge of facts but relationship. When Hosea laments "My people perish for lack of knowledge of God," he wasn't referring to facts about God, but relationship to God. We obviously have reconstructed the history of Israel so that we know more than did St. Paul of it, but we also obviously are not as spiritual as St. Paul!

LETTER TO JAMES D. ARMBRUST, Wednesday, 29 May 2013

...

I remember the CO on 881-South gave me a sandbag full of soap bars from those SP packs they received once a week (These were large boxes that were meant to supply a platoon for a week while they had no access to a PX and had cigarettes, bar soap, candy, writing paper and envelopes, and so on). He gave me that sandbag and said, "Chaplain, here, take this! We have no use for soap up here. Give it to the missionaries." Perhaps he had read Mitchiner's book Hawaii in which the missionaries were called "stinkies" by the Hawaiians because they didn't bathe!

LETTER TO JULIE VAN METRE, Thursday, 30 May 2013

Thank you for the photo of the Khe Sanh memorial plaque which is located in Arlington National Cemetery ..I looked up my records on this memorial. It was dedicated during a ceremony in early July with General Mundy, then Commandant of the Marine Corps, giving the main address to 210 in attendance on a rainy day. As I mentioned, the plaque was obtained by Mr. Ken Penn and his wife, Bernice, but I am unaware of where it was manufactured.

The Khe Sanh memorial plaque is located in Arlington in Section 2. Directions to it: From Main Gate, take Eisenhower Drive to McClellan Drive; take McClellan to Roosevelt Drive; go down Roosevelt to the Memorial.

LETTER TO M. DOC PIPER, Sunday, 02 June 2013

... As you are aware, there are so many disputes concerning the Civil War, World War I, and even some of the events in our own times–the JFK assassination, the attack on Pearl Harbor, and so on–even when eye-witnesses are still alive! How much worse will something like Vietnam be for those in the future since Vietnam was so complex, with so many different facets. I always tell those to whom I give talks, that Vietnam was many things to many people and that there's no single image that sticks out, for it all depends on when you were there, where you were, what kind of job you did, and how you interpret that–the impact. All these bring so many different stories, even for those who were in the same events! Perhaps of equal importance to what actually happened is the fact of the impact that had–what it meant or continues to mean.

In fact, most of life is really all about that fact: it's not what happens to us or happened to us or will happen to us, but what we do with it. There are so many who cling on to their upbringing, their social influences, and so on–and all of that IS very crucially important, of course. But really, the character of a person is really a matter of what they do with it. I recall so many examples, but one sticks in my mind right now–1st Sergeant Don Hamblen of 1st Force Recon Company. Don had been part of the force involved in the Bay of Pigs events in Cuba and part of the original group that first developed free fall parachuting from jet aircraft and going in and out of submerged submarines in order to land reconnaissance teams. In one parachuting exercise, he landed in some high tension wires, and had to have one of his legs amputated. There seemed to be no way that he could remain on active duty, but he was determined to do so. He got a prosthetic leg and got angry with others in the hospital who "gave in" to their loss of a leg. Like a good Marine, he yelled at such people! You can imagine the scene! Anyway, he got back to his unit. But then it became a matter of passing the Marine PFT. Could he carry another Marine and meet the time requirement of running? Most thought he would fail. But he persisted, and he passed the PFT.

Sometime later, he did retire from the Marine Corps and opened the Tokyo Bar in Oceanside, just outside Camp Pendleton. He used to bet the Navy corpsmen that visited his bar from Marine units at Camp Pendleton, that he could touch one foot to the ceiling while his other foot was on the deck. Of course, they all thought that was impossible. But he won. He merely detached his artificial leg and touched it to the ceiling while standing on the other leg! Of such are legends made!

It's not really a matter only of what happens to us, but what we do with it.

FLAG DAY 14 June 2013 – Performing Arts Center, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Please permit me to say a few words before our prayer.

Our National Anthem was written by a young American lawyer, Francis Scott Key, during the Battle of 1812. At "twilight's last gleaming" and some eight miles away, Key and two other Americans detained on a British warship in the harbor of Baltimore, saw the "broad stripes and bright stars" of our American flag. It was an immense flag, sewn by Mary Young Pickerskill. The stars were 26-inches across and, the stripes were two-feet wide. The entire flag was 42 feet wide and 30 feet high.

During the night, Key watched over the edge of the ship–the ramparts–as the British bombarded Fort McHenry for 25 hours with over 1500 bombs, each weighing 200 pounds. The rocket's red glare and bursting bombs illuminated the night sky, giving momentary glimpses our flag.

The next morning, by the "dawn's early light," Key saw that our flag was still there and wrote the words that became our National Anthem.

Our "flag-still-seen" symbolizes resolve and resilience. Our "flag-still-seen" affirms life in the presence of death; it is light shining in the darkness of doubt and despair, and our "valley of the shadow of death." Our "flag-still seen" glows–on debris-ridden land in Oklahoma after the hurricane. Our "flag-still-there" is found in the rubble of the World Trade Center on 9/11. Our "flag-still-there" is raised on horrendous battlefield of Iwo Jima in World War II. I was once in a battle in Vietnam in which for over two months our small base received up to 1200 rounds a day–mainly heavy artillery and rockets. Our courage held. Our men held. Our flag remained.

Our "flag-still-seen" reminds us of the presence and blessings of our Lord in our darkest times through people as channels of our Lord's gift of life and sacrifice for others and hope.

WITH THESE THOUGHTS, LET US PRAY:

Like our "flag-still there" O Lord, You remain with us always: to comfort, guide and bless us when all else fails. In the emptiness, darkness, and uncertainties we may face or perhaps even now know so well, You are with us.

Those of us who have experienced prolonged and intense combat know–after the rocket's red glare, bombs bursting in air, You remain. In the terror and horror of battle, You remain. Through our night of doubt, fear, and sorrow, You remain–to bless us through caring hearts and hands of our brothers and sisters.

As we see our flag still there, our position held after enemy bombardments day after day, week after week, month after month, we know, O Lord, Your remain graciously giving the gift of life–life which we know is short, precious, and fragile.

Our flag, O Lord, reminds us of all our people–people who have served and sacrificed that we might live as free persons / in order that we might serve each other, and not be imprisoned slaves to our own selfish needs, fears, and pains.

May the sight of our flag rekindle in us greater zeal to appreciate Your extravagant gifts to us / and reinvigorate our commitment to each other that all may be blessed / with life in its fullness in the power of Your Holy Name. We pray. Amen.

LETTER TO GARY W. FOSTER, Friday, 21 June 2013

... I do think, however, that far too much prominence is accorded to Gen. Giap. I really haven't seen anything in official NVA histories that indicates his presence or involvement in anything operational at Khe Sanh, despite the news accounts of the day and books written since then. The local commanders were the Division Commanders of the 304 and 325C Divisions, along with the Front Commander of B5-T8 Front which controlled all activities of the NVA in I Corps. Brigadier General Tran Quy Hai, a probationary member of the Party Central Committee and Deputy Minister of Defense, was assigned as the Front Commander. It is he, not Giap, who was in control of the Khe Sanh operation.

Also, the explanation as to why Khe Sanh was not attacked is easy. From the NVA strategy, the effort was to make Khe Sanh a situation where various reinforcements would come to its rescue, and then annihilate all the reinforcements. This is a basic NVA strategy that was employed on all levels. They would wound an individual, not kill him. Then, they would kill all those who came to his rescue. One might see the same thing with the attack on Lang Vei. The point was to annihilate all those who would come to rescue. When Khe Sanh village was attacked on the first day of the siege, the attack was by a battalion while a whole regiment lay in ambush to annihilate any reinforcements that might be sent from Khe Sanh Combat Base. Interestingly, we didn't "fall" for that trap in any of these cases. We didn't send a Marine infantry company out to Lang Vei (which had been the contingency plan). When Khe Sanh Village was attacked, Company ":D" of 1/26 was marching towards the village to reinforce it when they were suddenly recalled–because the ambush had obviously been detected (probably through signals intelligence). The 3rd Marine Division did not send reinforcements to Khe Sanh during the siege, knowing that many ambush positions had been prepared along Route 9 to trap them. In fact, the official histories of the NVA of the Khe Sanh battle go to some length to analyze why they failed at Khe Sanh–their strategy of luring in other units didn't work.

The explanation from the American side is that our B-52s totally annihilated tens of thousands, and the NVA were never able to gather into an assaulting mass. They attempted to do this on 29 February, sending a regimental-size force up from Route 9 to the Combat Base, but our electronic sensors detected their movement, and Mirza Baig fired artillery in some classic artillery tactics. Only two or three out of the entire regiment made it to the wires manned by 37th ARVN Ranger Battalion. (the artillery tactic involved firing three sides of a "box" and then firing artillery in waves up and down the inside of the box, using the 175s from Camp Carroll and Rock Pile. By mid-February, the 325th Division was so decimated that it retreated from the battlefield. Later, the whole 304 Division also.

So there are two very good reasons why Khe Sanh wasn't attacked.

Walt Rostow's daily memos to the President indicate that he had a very good grasp on what was happening. I don't think there was any enigma to him on this matter.

LETTER TO LANCE LARSON, Monday, 29 July 2013

...

The real importance is not the strategy, the details of the battle, and all that–those things ARE important, of course, but not my real concern! The real importance is what it did to us and to our families and our society in general. The "human impact" of what happened is what concerns me–and here there seem to be things that might be crazy to others–did we become "infected" with powerful spirits of violence and power outside of us? How do we handle PTSD and the other psychological and psycho-social effects and what do they all mean (are they simply alterations in our brain structure?) How do we communicate to others what they have absolutely no experience to which they can relate–that means everything to us, but absolutely no reference that they can appreciate what we say? What are the greater contexts into which they can be placed where their power is diminished (like placing something radioactive in lead containers?) (the greater context of a greater understanding, realizing the events are only a small part of life, the context of a group of understanding friends, or of other veterans of the same experiences who might see the same events from a different perspective, into the context of some spiritual relationship, in the context of the greatness and peacefulness of nature, and so on). In other words, what do we do with our experiences? All this gets into very personal, individual solutions that might not have any relevance to others who have the same issues, but which might be helpful to us. It's almost like the early pioneers in the westward movement, going through the situations of forests and attacks by Indians, but doing so individually, some arriving at their destination, others perishing in the movement of life!

REMARKS MADE AT THE MOVING WALL REMEMBRANCE CEREMONY - Pleasant Prairie, WI - 14 Sep 2013

We are overwhelmed by the immensity of this Wall. We are overpowered at the amount of names. And, behind each name, many dozens of others engrave a deeper gash in the black granite wall–a wife, children, parents, other relatives, friends, neighbors, schoolmates, and teammates. We are all interconnected. Several years ago, a Vietnam vet friend mentioned his visit to the Wall, seeking a particular name. Two women stood by the panel bearing his buddy's name. Reverently, his finger touched the name. One of the women asked, "Did you know him?" He said, "O yes, he saved my life." The older woman said, "He was my son," and the younger woman said, "He was my husband." Amid hugs and tears, strangers connected. We are all lessened by their loss.

Yet, however vast the specter of this Wall's black darkness, it would be twice as large if it listed those killed in World War I. The wall would be seven times as large if it listed those who perished in the battles of World War II. And, at a time when America's population was an tenth of what it now is,[710] the wall would be over ten times as larger to list those killed in our Civil War.[711]

Half a century ago, the tiny speck on the map called "Vietnam" ensnared us in its web or war. Those who were 18 in 1967 were born in 1949, just following World War II. They were three during the Korean War and grew up in the fears and uncertainties of Communism. When they were 7 or 8, some watched as their parents, like little children building forts, dug shelters in their backyards to protect against atomic bombs and their fallout. At school, basement hallways, marked as air raid shelters, silently reminded everyone of continual threat.

---

[710] US population in 1860: 31,443,321; in 1870: 39,818,449; in 1865 (by interpolation): 35,630,806. US population on 26 August 2013: 316,539,860. For other wars: US population in 1910: 92,228,496; in 1920: 106,021,537; in 1917 (by interpolation): 96,551, 287. US population in 1940: 132,164,569; in 1950: 151,325,798; in 1942 (by interpolation): 135,996,815. US population in 1960: 179,323,175; in 1970: 203,302,031; in 1965 (by interpolation): 1`93,826,630.

[711] 58,000 in Vietnam; 117,000 in WW I, 405,000 in WW II, 620,000 in Civil War.

Then, when they were the impressionable age of 12, they heard those magical, stirring words of a new young and charismatic President, John F. Kennedy, who (in 1961) said in his Inaugural Address: "Let every nation know .. that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to ensure the survival and success of liberty .. and so .. ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country." [712]

Now 18, those who heard those words led the charge "to slay the dragon and rescue the maiden" in that far-away place with the strange sounding name, "Vietnam." Most knew someone who fought in WW II. Now, it was time to step up and stop the Communist menace. Off to war they went. This Wall proclaims the burden borne, the price paid, and the hardship endured: the loss to all of a researcher to find a cure for cancer, a loving husband and father, a motivating teacher, a loyal friend, one who enriches lives of many.

The immensity of the burden and cost of the loss overwhelms us. We are reduced to silence, awe, and wonder. We begin to understand[713] its silent shouts to our soul. To those who pass by unknowing, and uncaring, we want to shout with the Old Testament prophet, Jeremiah: "Is it nothing to you, all you who pass by?"[714]

Most who returned from Vietnam were changed forever. The story is told of a soldier who called home at the end of World War II. The soldier tells his parents he's coming home. They are choked with emotion. He asks them if it's OK to bring a friend, his closest buddy. "O please bring him," they say. "It would be great to see him. O, we can't wait to see you!" they say. He pauses, "Well, he's been badly hurt." "That's OK, son," they say, "We'll make arrangements." "Well," says the son, "the wounds are severe. He's blind. He's lost a leg." There's a pause. They say: "Well, maybe he ought to go to one of the hospitals. He might not be happy with us." There's a click. The telephone goes dead. The son hung up. The "friend" was the "son" himself. "Can I fit back in?"

II

Some come, not knowing a particular person personally, but somehow realize these were real people with dreams, loves, and connections with others, whose sacrifice is not forgotten.[715]

Most come to the Wall seeking a particular name: a son, a father, a battle buddy, a friend, a brother. Some make a "rubbing" of that name and take it with them as a reminder. Some leave an object that carries special meaning. Some shed a tear, say a prayer, and rekindle a precious memory. If we're quiet, perhaps we hear them tell us they don't want us to grieve or be sad; that is not what they'd want for us. Perhaps we gratefully acknowledge that we are better persons for having known them.

The Vietnam Memorial wall differs from other war memorials by listing the names of those who died: war's human cost. Real people perish. Perhaps an even better memorial would not just list names, but would tell us their dreams, their loves, hobbies, personal quirks, and interests, things they said and did, and what made them laugh or get angry, sad, or concerned.

Despite the passage of half a century, through our love they live. These men live in us as long as we live; they circulate in our blood. Since they live in us, they make us want to live and not die.[716]

Engraved in the black granite Wall their names will be proclaimed to the centuries.

---

[712] John F. Kennedy, Inaugural Address, 20 January 1961.

[713] Both Plato and Aristotle claimed awe and wonder to be the starting point for knowledge. [Plato, Theaetetus 155D; Aristotle, Metaphysics 982b13].

[714] Lam 1.12.

[715] Cf. Sirach [also known as Ecclesiasticus] 44.1, 8-10: "Let us now sing the praises of famous men, our ancestors in their generations ... Some of them have left behind a name, so that others declare their praise. But of others there is no memory; they have perished as though they had never existed; they have become as though they had never been born, they and their children after them. But these also were godly men, whose righteous deeds have not been forgotten."

[716] Nikos Kazantzakis, Report to Greco, Trans. P. A. Bien, New York: Bantam Books, 1965. In writing of the death of his grandfather, Kazantzakis writes: "..he will live inside me as long as I live. We shall die together. This grandfather was the first to make me wish not to die–so that the dead within me should not die. Since then, many departed dear ones have sunk, not into the grave, but into my memory, and I know now that as long as I live they shall live too." [pp. 29-30]. "Both my parents circulate in my blood .. I have carried them all my days; neither has died. As long as I live, they too will live inside me.." [p. 44] On visiting a cemetery, he writes: "Thousands of generations inside me were screeching.. Never have I felt so deeply that our departed ancestors do not die, that at critical moments they cry out, jump to their feet, and take possession of our eyes, hands, and minds." [p. 101]. He writes: "Inside me were terrible ancestors who had not eaten as much meat or drunk as much wine as they craved, nor kissed as many women as they desired, and now they were bounding up fiercely in order to prevent me–and themselves–from dying." [p. 351]. "I was a man struggling and in pain, a man seeking deliverance ... from the terrible bellowing ancestors in me and to turn them into human beings.." [p. 436].

Engrafted our hearts, they live as long as we live, and, through our lives, their life is passed to future generations by how we live.

Included in the heart of God, they live eternally.

III

In an outpost bunker in the hills of Khe Sanh, Vietnam, in late 1967, a Marine wrote on a cardboard sleeve from a C-ration case:

"God and the soldier we adore
In time of war and not before,
The battle ended and all things righted,
God's forgotten, the soldier slighted."[717]

That's always the danger. Those who made this moving Wall's appearance possible, help us avoid that danger of forgetting. That danger of forgetting is avoided by those who observe Memorial Day and Veterans Day. That danger of forgetting is avoided with each singing of our National Anthem and each display of our flag. Mainly, however, that danger of forgetting is avoided by how we live with others as we seize opportunities to serve and make life better for all.

Remembrance gives power and fervor, motivation and direction. We remember; we act. The Milwaukee War Memorial's motto suggests "we honor the dead by serving the living."

This Wall beckons you and I to remember our fallen brothers and all who knew and loved them.

This Wall reminds you and I of the true cost of war–not dollars, but lives.

This Wall joins us to each other. We share the pain. We share our love. We share our life.

This Wall challenges you and I to serve, to give, to live, and to bear one another's burdens.

May God bless the families and friends of our fallen. May God bless our nation with healing and peace. May God bless our people with resolve to care for one another. May God bless us all.

PRAYER for THE MOVING WALL REMEMBRANCE CEREMONY, Pleasant Prairie, Wisconsin, 14 September 2013

We thank You, O Lord
for this opportunity to remember and reflect and rededicate ourselves;
We thank You, O Lord:
You enable and encourage us to remember
We thank You, O Lord
for those that we now remember.
Today we remember what must never be forgotten
Today we reconnect with what was, strengthened to face what will be.
Help us to honor the dead we remember by serving the living we shall encounter.
Keep us always within Your powerful peace and in Your holy Name.
We pray. Amen.

---

[717] The Marine was Capt John Raymond, USMC, commanding A/1/26 on Hill 881-South, Khe Sanh, Vietnam, noted in Stubbe: Khe Sanh Chaplain (unpublished manuscript), 01 April 1970, diary entry for 18 August 1967. Although Capt Raymond attributed the poem to "Lord Marlborough," it was actually written by Frances Quarles (1592-1614), and its original form is: "Out God and soldiers we alike adore / E/en at the brink of danger, not before / Our God's forgotten, and our soldiers slighted." [Oxford Dictionary of Quotations, 3rd rev. ed., London: Oxford University Press, 1953, p. 404, No. 9]. President Kennedy quoted this poem (with changes he made, as did Captain Raymond) Nov 26, 1962 [Platt, Suzy, Respectfully Quoted, Washington, D.C.: Library of Congress, 1989, p. 326].

VETERANS DAY – 11 November 2013 (Miller Coors Brewing Co)

INVOCATION

O Lord, our God:
on this day and at this hour
as we remember our veterans:
We are mindful of Your presence with us
In dark, desperate, and difficult days, when fears smother hope and desperation shrouds Your Presence.
Your Presence—
like the air we breathe unaware, is always there;
You never abandoned us.
Through service and sacrifice,
You creatively transform, renew,
and bless us with life,
strength, vision, and peace,
even in the midst of turmoil and trouble.
As we honor our veterans, O Lord—those no longer with us and those who still stand with us and especially those hospitalized or homeless—
We rededicate ourselves and seek Your vision and strength to serve the needy
to do good as we have opportunity, to leave our communities and nation better places than we received them, and to promote wholeness, prosperity, and peace in Your Holy Name.
We pray.
AMEN.

BENEDICTION PRAYER – VETERANS DAY – War Memorial Banquet – 11 November 2013

May the strong arm of the LORD keep you safe and secure and bless you with peace and life.
May the right hand of the LORD be your guide and strength in serving others.
May you see God in the face of your friend.
May the Presence of the LORD be your vision to live as you give.
May the peace of the LORD guard and keep you
May the LORD direct you
into paths of nourishment.
fullness of life and strength in His Holy Name.
AMEN

TABLE GRACE – VETERANS DAY – 11 November 2013 – Miller-Coors Brewing Co and Veterans Day Banquet, War Memorial Bldg., Milwaukee, WI

You open Your hand, O Lord, and satisfy the desire of every living thing.[718]
As we gratefully acknowledge Your gift of this food for our nourishment, we know we do not live by bread alone,[719] but by all Your actions[720] which nourish us.
As we eat this food, our soul feeds on the strength of friends and family,
Your love, beauty, and peace.
Today, we especially thank You for those who serve and have served our nation,
who guard and protect us
that all may have life–life in its fullness.[721] Bless us, we pray, that we may be Your food to nourish others through our presence, words, and actions.
Keep us
in the power of Your Holy Name we pray.
AMEN.

REMARKS TO WORLD WAR II VETERANS, Lutheran Home, Wauwatosa WI, 11 November 2013

Today, we thank our veterans, and especially those from World War II. We thank you for your service and your sacrifices. Most of all, we express our appreciation, which grows deeper the more we understand. O course, we can never fully know the cost and price of your service, but the little that we do know makes us stand in awe and wonder at how much you gave in such terribly difficult and uncertain days that we might be here today in comfort and security.

WITH MY UNCLE RAY DURING WORLD WAR II

My uncle Ray enlisted 28 June 1941 at the age of 22. He planned to serve a year in the Army. A few months later, the Japanese struck at Pearl Harbor. It was Sunday, December 7th, 1941, and he was now in the war "for the duration." (He was separated 7 November 1945). I was born in 1938, on his 19th birthday, and named after him. He was my childhood hero. When he came home on furlough, my grandpa– his dad, would meet him at the railroad station. He'd be in his Army uniform. He let me wear his cap. Sometimes I wore his ribbons on my shirt when I went to grade school.

Those of you who served in World War II undoubtedly had some family member—a father, an uncle, maybe a neighbor—who served in the Great War (later known as World War I), and grew up in the aftershocks and shadows of that war. It was a time of excess—flappers, zoot suits, the Palmer Raids, and the rise of Communism. Most of all, your childhood and teen years were lived during the Great Depression. I remember my mom saying that if she received an orange for Christmas, she was very happy. One of my grandparents picked up coal that dropped along the railroad tracks in order to provide some heat in winter.

Those who entered World War II, lived childhoods where their mothers sewed their clothes, where extended families cared for each other—there were no government programs then. People were self-reliant and yet cared for each other. Boys built crystal sets to listen to radio dramas with heroes confronting villains and which spoke of "truth, justice, and the American [718] Ps 145.16.

---

[719] Matt 4.4, Lk 4.4.
[720] Mt 4.4b.
[721] Jn 10.10.

way." Parents scoffed at absurd ideas such as space travel by Flash Gordon or talking into a wrist-watch telephone. How impractical and impossible! What's coming to our youth to imagine such things?

(If they were magically able to be transported into our times and walk our city streets, they'd say "Why are you worshipping idols held in your hands, silently and reverently gazing at them and praying to them?")

Because of the Great Depression, extended family—aunts and uncles and cousins—came together and helped each other. Most entering World War II were in their 20s and close to their families. When you went away into the service, you left that closeness for the great uncertainties of war. You had heard horror stories of gas, mechanized warfare, and airplanes dropping bombs from those who knew the horrors of World War I. World War II was not some little battlefield: it engulfed the entire earth. We didn't enter it with overwhelming military or economic advantage, but with great uncertainty. One of the sections of our National Anthem (which we don't usually sing) has the words: "Fight then we must / when our cause, it is just / And this be our motto: / "In God is our trust." / And the Star Spangled Banner forever will wave / O'er the land of the free / and the home of the brave."

And your hearts stirred with the voice of the powerful Kate Smith singing "God Bless America."

It was also a time in which the American soul remained very isolationist. Horrors of World War I created a revulsion against war. A protest movement called "America First" led by Charles Lindburgh attempted to discourage us from entering war.

As the war progressed, initial years of set-backs only deepened the uncertainty.
Desperation was evident in national rationing of food and gasoline. No new automobiles were built. There were numerous black-out drills in the cities. I remember, as a child, the necessity of closing the drapes at night lest any light seep out of the home that might guide a German airplane to drop bombs on Milwaukee! Our invasion of islands in the Pacific and land battles in Europe resulted in astronomical losses of men killed. Victory was uncertain for years.

Those of you who served in World War II were in for the duration. There was little certainty that you would return home. It was all "beyond grim."

Yet, miraculously here you are today. Through our Lord's great grace you are still here–to enjoy God's presence, beauty, and love, to do good for others, and to praise our Lord by how you live, by what you say and what we pray.

Today, we are here to give you a great hug and tell you how much we appreciate what you gave for us.

God bless you!

SHORT INTERVIEWS

INTERVIEW BY MR. MIKE BARTLEY 27 February 1993

[The following was broadcast on Milwaukee Channel 6, WITI, Saturday, 27 February 1993. Interview conducted at h ome in Wauwatosa, Wisconsin]

BARTLEY; Vietnam veterans vividly remember it as the turning point of the war, the Battle of Khe Sanh and the beginning of the Tet offensive 25 years ago. Vietnam veteran and photojournalist DEL CANNON and I visited one man who shares his memories throughout the religious season of Lent. Lutheran pastor RAY STUBBE reflects on the holy season, a holy season which challenged many of his friends' faith, 25 years ago, [scenes of Khe Sanh]. the dramatic siege of Khe Sanh in South Vietnam. Some say it was the turning point in the war, the beginning of the Viet Cong Tet Offensive. At the valley of Khe Sanh, 6,000 Marines protecting a tiny air base became encircled by the enemy. the Marines were outnumbered 4:1. As the Viet Cong constantly shelled the Marines, Pastor Ray Stubbe held services anywhere he could, in open areas, in the trenches. While enemy shelling killed and injured Marines often asked Stubbe, Why wasn't God present in Vietnam?

STUBBE: Because of the ghastly horror of it all. A lot were decapitated. We carried headless bodies. The wounds were horrible.

BARTLEY: But Stubbe says the horror became tempered by the sheer caring for each other. US soldiers held each other in the trenches to protect each other, to comfort each other.

STUBBE: God was present through the caring of people for each other.

BARTLEY; And while Marines struggled to stay alive, Khe Sanh turned many Americans back home against the war. Newsweek's cover, 'The Agony of Khe Sanh.' In Life magazine, Stubbe is seen praying with Marines. Stubbe saved many reminders of Khe Sanh, not only to remember those who gave their lives, but to remember those who survived, those who held on in the hills for 77 days, until the Viet Cong retreated. But Stubbe says it should be remembered not just as a military victory.

STUBBE: Mainly the cost, the tragedy of it all, that the good people be not forgotten, and to remember the living. We're not just remembering the dead people but all the veterans and the families.

[scene in church:

Stubbe: The blood of Christ, shed for you.

BARTLEY: Stubbe talks about Khe Sanh so that Khe Sanh will never be repeated. He says it's only appropriate to share his memories during the Lenten season.

STUBBE: Lent means Spring—new beginnings. It's life emerging from death.

BARTLEY: Ray Stubbe won the Bronze Star Medal for valor for his religious services. He's also the national director for a group of Khe Sanh veterans. Stubbe also wrote a book called Valley of Decision, The Siege of Khe Sanh. Stubbe lives in Wauwatosa. An interesting man. He finds lot of good lessons.

[other announcer]: He seems like a true hero who, like most heroes doesn't want any attention.

BARTLEY: Exactly. He speaks softly...

CONVERSATION WITH YVONNE SLUGA, 20 May 1996 [Milwaukee radio station WYMS, 88.9 FM]

SLUGA: This is Yvonne from WYMS radio. Basically we're calling you for Memorial Day. What was your role during the Vietnam War? What were your duties, and were you an officer or enlisted?

STUBBE: OK. I had been enlisted one time, in the Navy—this was earlier. Then, after being ordained, they were asking for Chaplains in the middle of '67, so I thought it was a good idea to—well, I just had an empathy for the service-people, so I went back in as a Chaplain, and immediately arrived in Vietnam to a place called Khe Sanh, which at the time was very pleasant and nice, cooler than the rest of Vietnam, high up in the mountains, right near the Laotian border and also the border with North Vietnam, the Demilitarized Zone. And everything was very peaceful there, almost like a Garden of Eden, very magical, a spiritual kind of place. And I went there as a Chaplain, and I was a Chaplain to a battalion. A battalion is about 1200 men—Marines, Navy Corpsmen. We were the only battalion at Khe Sanh [at the time]. We had attached units—engineers, communications set-ups, people dealing with supplies. And I was the Chaplain for everybody [there] then.

SLUGA: I see. Well, that was quite a job.

STUBBE: Yes. It was very interesting. Khe Sanh was not just a base. We had little outposts. We had hill outposts with company-size units. A Company is about 250 men each. And we had one on 881-South—we always called these hills by how many meters high they are above sea-level. We don't have any romantic names like "Pork Chop Hill"; it's just 881-South, or 861, and we had a high one, 950, which just overlooked the base. That was a communications relay location. Then we had an [Army] Special Forces camp called Lang Vei, which was right on the Laotian border. They got overrun with tanks during our big battle, and it was the first time the North Vietnamese had brought tanks into South Vietnam. Prior to the Siege, I used to stay overnight at these different places.

SLUGA: I have to ask you: What was your experience like, being a Chaplain?
You described, initially coming into this environment, feeling a spiritual–?

STUBBE: Well the place was very pristine. There were some local people there which were not Vietnamese. Oddly, everyone thinks all the people in Vietnam were Vietnamese, but there's these 31 tribes of mountain people that are called Montagnards, none of which can understand each other; they're all different languages. The tribe in our area were called the Bru, B-R-U. They were just very nice people. They were very friendly, happy, always smiling. During the Siege, they hid some of our Marines from the North Vietnamese. They were so primitive, they hadn't learned how to steal, believe it or not. I could wander around here or there and leave my camera, and they wouldn't even think of taking it. There were some missionaries up there. There was French coffee planter that had first come up there in 1918. So it was a very interesting place. And it was isolated, too. There was a road—if you can call it that—a highway that looked like a dirt driveway in the country. That was the main highway from Savannakhet all the way to the coast. There were 31 bridges from Khe Sanh to the next populated area to our east. So it was very easily ambushed and easily cut and our supply lines. Also, coming by air was not altogether easy because of foggy conditions that seemed to prevail in that area. So we knew we were isolated, and that was good, too, because it kept the Generals away and all those kind of people, although they still came occasionally. If they came from Okinawa, they'd always come the last few days of one month and the first few days of the next month. That way they got two full months of income tax deduction and two months of combat pay.

SLUGA: I was wondering for Memorial Day, what is something, or a message, that you would like to put into people's minds, from your experience?

STUBBE: Well, there's a cost. There is a big cost. I think that most of the people who went over there—I've talked with them over the years, now. In fact, we've organized a Khe Sanh Veteran group in the United States. We have about 3,000 members now. Most of them will all say that they went over because of Kennedy's words in [his Inaugural Address]: "We will bear any burden, pay any price, support any friend, oppose any foe—ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country" kind of thing. But they didn't realize the price and they didn't realize the burden and it did become very heavy after awhile. And I think that people just need to realize that we can get into these kinds of things so easily without really realizing what we're doing to people, both ourselves and the people we're involved with.

SLUGCA: Could you sort of expound on the idea of the cost? What were some of the—maybe some of your own personal costs, things that you had to pay or maybe that some people had to pay, or the church had to pay. Kinda give me some of those costs.

STUBBE: I just finished writing a book-length essay, 210 pages. I completed it last year—for Memorial Day—and it's just come out. It's an accounting of the casualties at Khe Sanh—the incidents and a little bit about the person, so that this is not just statistics or names on the wall. There are just so many—everyone is different. A lot of these people died helping other people. There seems to be a pattern. For example, one man who is a non-swimmer sees a local Mountain tribesman, a woman, crossing a river and getting swept down, jumps in, tries to save her, and does get her to the other side, but he himself is swept in the current and dies. His body is found a few days later. Or, a man—we're dropping supplies—with all the noise—three men are working out there, and two see this coming, the other one doesn't. They shout to each other. One pushes the other aside, but in the process of pushing the other one aside, he is himself crushed.

SLUGA: Things that you gained—of what are the things that you lost, too? With cost, even though you loose something because there's that price that you pay, you have to get something back.

STUBBE: Yes. There is a price. You do get something back. Well, I guess just by being over there, I had this style of being a Chaplain of wanting to be with the troops all the time. So, like I said before, I would stay overnight at these outposts and even go out on their company-size patrols. Things were fairly peaceful. I wasn't placing myself or anyone else in any real danger. But I just wanted to know the life that the men were living, and I did, and I got very close to a lot of these men, and found out what they had to endure—no showers for six weeks, and the clothes rotting off, and all that kind of thing. But I got passed over because of that later on. I found out that the Chaplains in Washington thought that I wasn't acting in a professional manner—staying in my tent and attending staff meetings and maintaining my distance and professional.

SLUGA: You know what I think you did—that was a tremendous gift.

STUBBE: Well I didn't realize—I would do it again obviously. I think we communicate what's important in life by how we live. But there was a cost and it affected my career later on. But I was able to finish my career and I was able to minister to people and help people, talk with people, and bring my religious dimension to people and share that with them. And so no matter what happened as far as other things are concerned, or professional things, is really immaterial, although it hurts. But that was a cost. And of course, from the battle, there are still all these memories and dreams. And I guess I'm sort of stuck there in a way. I'm the one that organized this Khe Sanh Veteran group, sort of like a shepherd getting all the lost sheep together. It has helped people to get in touch with each other so that they can share their feelings and experiences and so on. So it's had a very positive result, but that came out of my difficulties of not being able to forget some of these things. War—for those that are in a war, it never ends.

SLUGA: Absolutely.

STUBBE: That's another thing. I think that's why servicemen who are always at the cemeteries on Memorial Day know this—these are their family members! And there's always this feeling of everyone else shopping and having fun or whatever and—it's like living in two different worlds at the same time. That one phrase from Lamentations, "Is it nothing to you, all you who pass by?" is sort of a feeling that we all feel.

SLUGA: What I hear a lot of is that, the simple fact that, yes, we paid a tremendous price, but our payback for that, what we got back, was people bringing a message back to us that war has such a high price and to think more carefully.

STUBBE: Yes, exactly. Veterans have an awful lot to tell in that regard, and also from the experiences of war, there's a real feeling for just being helpful and being involved in community work, especially for those more disadvantaged. I find that a lot of our veterans are [change of tape]

What a valuable resource in our community our veteran group is or can be, in terms of sharing, listening—just like we disregard our elderly in many ways, which is sort of related to Memorial Day now in an expanded way, remembering all who have passed, not just military.

SLUGA: It's great that the vets get out and they speak—not all do—but there's some that are a little bit more eloquent than others. You're speaking out and reminding people of the pros and cons of things and give them a new perspective.

STUBBE: Vets do not like—certain questions are just so grating and so demeaning—like "how many people did you kill?"—that is just so painful. I think we should treat vets like we should treat our elderly: the elderly have the stories. We don't listen to them. Every tribe, every society, every group in civilization, but us, always listened to their elders in camp fires, in their sagas, in their stories, and they would pass on what they experienced and what they learned and it became part of the shaping myth for the people to live by—I use "myth" in the sense of something you live by, a story that you live by.

SLUGA: I think that myth is very important. I think that we all need to have a myth in our culture.

STUBBE: Well we do, but we just aren't always aware of it. But I think that the veterans can also contribute—not just verbally, having them talk or something like that—but getting involved in Little League or whatever. Some do not like to be in crowds, but they can still work with the blind or helping people to learn how to read, one-on-one kind of things, are very good at this, and do this.

SLUGA: Have you noticed whether the war has made people become more sensitive, especially with the veterans?

STUBBE: O yes, very definitely. When you don't have things, you learn how valuable—what you assumed all the time. I had people tell me—even over there—they said they never realized how much their mom did for them, washing all their clothes, and all that kind of stuff, until they were over there. They were mainly 18, maybe 19. But you never forget these things [lessons learned]. You learn how valuable peace is and quiet is and life is and beauty, and all these things that we just assume or—I think you'll find that veterans are keenly sensitive of what people do to each other, whether they share what little they have, how they regard people that are in need—that all comes from—like carrying a buddy while the rounds are still exploding, a wounded buddy through all that, to safety when you yourself might get killed, but it's just done. You didn't even think about it.

SLUGA: A lot of heroes.

STUBBE: Well, it's just commonplace. Yes, exactly. Yeah, the hero is always the one who always transforms the situation.

SLUGA: It's really a heroic journey to there—going to and coming back a heroic mind-set.

STUBBE: Yes, I think so. Of course, the other side of that are the wounds, not only physical, but emotional and spiritual, that people have. However, out of the wounds come the healing. The wounds are the doors and the windows into the spiritual dimension. And again, whether the shaman or whatever, the healer is always one who has been wounded. Even in Christianity, the Cross. But the Greek myth, the Asclepius, the symbol of the snake on a pole—the venom that kills but also heals, the woundedness. Woundedness is a real source of healing, not for the wounded person themselves, but out of the wounded, society is healed. Also in terms of making art. Out of this comes music and poetry and paintings, sculptures. Whether it's the Hopi with their sand drawing, people make art.

SLUGA: I think you said it very beautifully that out of the wounds come—

STUBBE: The healing, yes. So all of our Memorial Day celebrations, which is all of this woundedness.

SLUGA: And I think that people should know that.

STUBBE: Well, we embrace each other, and in a sense we're embracing our society at the same time.

SLUGA: Well, thank you very much, Reverend.

...

CONVERSATION WITH ROBIN HOLZHAUER, 13 November 1996 [For Wauwatosa News Times issue of 21 Nov 1996,]

...

STUBBE: I was involved in a battle in this place called Khe Sanh, two separate words. It's two Vietnamese words that mean "green river." Not too well known by too many people. Actually it should be pronounced "Khe SCHAN" because the Vietnamese "s" is "x" and "s" has a "sh" sound. But that's very arcane. The veterans who were there, prior to all the Marines coming there, the Special Forces, always call it "Khe SCHAN," and those who don't know, call it "Khe San". I was the chaplain there and I was there for 8 months, from July '67 to March '68, and from January through March '68 we had this very immense battle there, probably the biggest battle of the whole Vietnam War was there. And I was the chaplain on the base there, and kept a diary at the time, which has become of interest to many people, and I had a book come out, published by Houghton Mifflin on that battle.

HOLZHAUER: What's the name of the book?

STUBBE: Valley of Decision. The co-author is John Prados.

HOLZHAUER: Was it on your reaction to the battle.

STUBBE: No, actually—well, what happened was that I had written a lot of it and then—I'd written a large manuscript, unwieldy actually—it couldn't be published in its form. The publisher contacted John Prados, who is not a veteran but has done a lot of writing on the National Security Council and other high Washington scenes, and he added the Washington level, President Johnson, and that kind of thing. And then took my more personal observations.

HOLZHAUER: When was that published?

STUBBE:: Fall of 1991. This battle was—we had a little under 6,000 Marines there plus some Army people and Air Force, and a considerable amount of Army Special Forces, probably about 300-400. They had been there to this battle leading patrols into nearby Laos, which was about ten miles to the west of us. That's why they were there. In fact, that's probably why we were there—to protect them. They monitored the Ho Chi Minh Trail, how much traffic was moving, and reported directly to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and President. Sort of a spy group. They would go in on patrols of 3 Americans and 9 indigenous people to do that. They were there. They were so Top Secret at the time because we weren't supposed to be in Laos.

Anyway, when the battle started, we had about forty thousand (at least) North Vietnamese soldiers surrounding us—all at once. They came in from Laos. The people—as we found out since—on the higher levels—knew this was going to happen. This happened on Sunday, the 21st of January. About a week, ten days later, on 30, 31 January, is when Tet erupted throughout South Vietnam. Ours started about ten days earlier than the regular Tet battles. And some historians don't know whether to include us into the Tet battle or as a separate battle. At the time, some thought we'd be another Dien Bien Phu, and the President had the Joint Chiefs of Staff sign a statement that we would not be overrun. They even considered tactical nuclear weapons for awhile; it got that desperate. The North Vietnamese introduced tanks—for the first time in the war and overran a nearby, small Special Forces camp. And we all thought tanks were coming down the line for us. The end result was that there were 475 Americans killed there and about 2,000 medically evacuated with major wounds. People with broken arms and gashes in their arms and legs were not considered "major wounds;" they would just stay there. And there was more tonnage of bombs dropped in support of us in the immediate area than in all the Pacific in World War II. So it was a very massive undertaking. Some of the local people—they were not Vietnamese, but Mountain Tribesmen—and they were not permitted to leave the area by the Vietnamese. It was a racial thing, just like us with the American Indians or whatever. Every nation seems to have these, unfortunately—every society even. In Vietnam it was the Vietnamese versus the mountain people, the Montagnards. There were about 12,000 Montagnards of the Bru, "B" "R" "U", and they were not permitted to leave because the Vietnamese said there was no place in Vietnam where they could settle. They were sort of caught in between, and later on there was a refugee camp established some 20 miles away, and we figure that at least 6-8,000 Bru were killed during this battle. And probably up to 20,000 North Vietnamese died during those first three months. So it was very bloody battle. And because of that President Johnson didn't run again, and had a lot of political–. Right after the battle, we abandoned the place. So it's always been ambiguous who won.

HOLZHAUER: Why did they abandon it?

STUBBE: Well, it was very close to the Laotian border and there's a very high cliff right on that border, a river called the Xe Pone River, and the cliff, and in the cliff there were caves. The North Vietnamese put artillery pieces in there which could fire at us, but our artillery pieces didn't have enough range to fire back. So we depended on air strikes. International Law probably would have permitted us to go in there because Laos was neutral and like Switzerland and Sweden in World War II, a neutral nation is very well armed because it's supposed to keep out all the belligerents, and they didn't keep out the North Vietnamese, so when a neutral country doesn't keep out one belligerent, then another one can go in. But we didn't do that for diplomatic reasons. The Ambassador at the time, SULLIVAN, didn't want us to, and probably the public wouldn't have permitted it anyway. So for artillery reasons, and then because we had such limited amounts of people there—that is troops on the ground. They wanted us to adopt a more mobile posture, so they didn't have fixed bases. They would just move around here and there with temporary places. And that was very successful. I always heard that in a war, people take on the characteristics of their enemy, and that happened with us. We adopted the ways of the mobile North Vietnamese and used it very successfully.

But the main thing there, as a chaplain, was that I was involved with the day to day life of the troops, and I was part of all that too. I went through the same thing. And what I observed in general was how people cared for each other. There was a day to day usual heroism, and not being intimidated. We were constantly being shelled, by the way. Our base was about one and a half miles long and half a mile wide, which isn't too large for all those people, and we would receive up to 1600 rounds of rockets and artillery a day. These have a radius that people, when they explode, people get killed very easily. But our men—when the incoming came in, they took temporary shelter—fell flat on the ground or in a trench or into a nearby bunker, and just seconds after it was over, they'd be up and around. And some people were even out during this—they had to be, to repair communication wires that got severed or to spot where the rounds were coming from or that kind of thing. And then a lot of people would dash out during this to rescue people who were wounded. This was just always common. I guess what happens in a battle is that people just all realize they're going to die anyway, so in the mean time they might as well take care of each other. It becomes instinctual. And everybody becomes numb towards feelings.

HOLZHAUER: I suppose after three months of it you become [?]

STUBBE: Yeah it becomes that way. Although they used to call it the "ten thousand yard stare." People would see—people coming off of this and their eyes would be looking off ten miles away. And I would say that almost everyone who went through that–.

I organized a group. We started with about 15. We have about 3,000 now, nationally, in our Khe Sanh Veteran group. And everyone had some effects of that, coming out, although I would say that it's not that people are all that damaged. Actually most of our people are very productive, in fact they seem to have a dynamo of energy to do volunteer work. Some are volunteer firemen, or they work for the 4H Club, or they do civic work in one form or another—Little League or something, or may have two jobs, and are very active people. I don't know if that's from that, but it seems that people have a lot of energy—maybe the anger or whatever is somewhat transformed that way. But I would say generally that the people who were there at that time are people that I would like to have as neighbors—people that would maintain a humor and care for each other.

HOLZHAUER: Did you actually do fighting as a Chaplain?

STUBBE: O no, no! We're prohibited from that. What I would do is—during this and prior to, of course—I would just visit all around, wherever the people were. We couldn't gather people in a group of more than 3 or 4 because there was a ridge-line overlooking us with enemy spotters that would call-in rounds. So if they ever saw a group they would do that.

HOLZHAUER: People were targets?

STUBBE:: Yes, exactly, so I would just go around the trenches and the bunkers. I was all over the base all the time. And prior to the battle, we had hill outposts, and I'd be out all over the place. During the Siege I held little—and I mean little—services both in size and in time, any where's from one to up to ten in a bunker, and the service would last about three or four minutes. . In that was a short prayer, a scripture lesson, a one or two sentence sermon, a communion service, and a blessing, all in that time. And then I'd stay around with the men and see how they were doing, and move on. That is basically what I did. And I lived in the medical area, so I was always there with the casualties, the wounded that would come in, and we had a Graves Registration unit nearby where all the dead were. And I was saying prayers there for them.

HOLZHAUER: You remained on active duty to '85; is that right?

STUBBE: Yes, January '85. I stayed mainly with Marine units, although I was also on several amphibious ships—ships that hold Marines. Marines—they call them "naval infantry"—were originally men that were carried on ships to make landings on shores. That's basically what a Marine was, and still is. The Marines are now a separate military service, but that's only been very recent—maybe since 1980. Prior to that time, they were always part of the Navy.

HOLZHAUER: So you weren't actually drafted?

STUBBE: I volunteered. I had been enlisted one time in the Navy, right out of High School—I went to Washington High School and graduated in '56. Then I had a couple of years in the Navy. Then I got out and went to college and seminary. Then I started a church in Oak Creek called All Saints Lutheran Church. It's on Howell. Then I went to the University of Chicago graduate school just for a year. And then I went back on active duty as a chaplain.

HOLZHAUER: So you were older than most people, then?

STUBBE: Yes, I was 29 going on 30. I was born in '38, and this was '68. Most of the guys were 19.

HOLZHAUER: Do you think that made any difference in how either you dealt with the war or how the other people related to you over there?

STUBBE: No, not really. I had been there before the battle began. I arrived there in July. And during that time, we had little hills surrounding us, and we had units of 200 men each on them, and I would go out when they'd scour and check out the nearby area up and down the hills and the valleys and the rivers. It was very rough terrain. So I was in very good physical shape at the time, very lean. I was down to 130. I wish I were somewhere close to that now! Now I'm 58. But I kept very close to the troops there. I don't think that age was—I don't think they looked at me as being someone older.

HOLZHAUER: I was wondering—I read some of the letters that were in the book that you wrote—

STUBBE: Most of those were before the battle.

HOLZHAUER: One of them was apparently on the date—the 21st. But I was wondering whether some of the things that you wrote about then that you still think as true. There's a couple of things. One of them is in a letter of January 20th, were it says that "war is obviously immoral, what they fail to see is that man is not naturally good and that men will not naturally do what is right, and that the choices before men today are not black and white but of different shades of gray.

STUBBE: I can't say that people are basically bad or good anymore. I don't know. I really don't know. Like Faust, I can say after having lived all these years, "I now do know that I do now nothing know." I tend now to see more of the goodness of people. I would say that people are basically good—in fact, very good. The way that I look at people now is that they are basically good but they're covered over with coatings of mud that other people have splashed on them—or dented or scratched, but underneath they are basically good. But I still do think that we live in a world of grays. There is no absolute right course or wrong course, there's only better or worse courses or decisions. I think that we just deal with some good and some not good in everything. That's really not profound, but that's where I am now. I tend to see the goodness in people, and try to bring it out. And I really think that's what we're all called to do for each other, is to bring out the goodness in each other. That was written just as the battle was starting, and as it continued, I saw, for example, how we would run out of water or food, and people would share their last drops of water or morsels of food not knowing if they would get anymore. Our water all came in from a stream that was outside the base that was pumped into a large rubber vat-like container that kept getting punctured by shrapnel from the explosions. So we never knew about the water, or if the North Vietnamese would poison the stream or something like that. And there were some of our outposts that didn't have water for, like, ten days at a time. And we were down to one C-ration a day. That's one of the reasons people lost so much weight. I mean it was really very desperate; it really was. It was cloudy and all our resupply was by air. We never knew if we would get it.

HOLZHAUER: You were surrounded, like Berlin airlift.

STUBBE: Yeah, and our Drop Zone was extremely small, probably like a quarter of a city block, and we didn't control much area. There were so many enemy around us. We were prohibited from patrolling, from looking around, because they brought these B-52 strikes within a mile of us. And these things are awesome. If you can imagine an area in the city that's one mile wide by three miles long, one B-52 strike has enough bombs to totally annihilate everything that's in that area. And we would get dozens of these a day. And they used to be regulated to about three miles from friendly lines because they're so high you can't see them—for safety reasons, in case they erred just a little bit, a second or two, they'd drop the bombs on friendly troops. The situation became so desperate that they brought these to within half a mile of our lines. And people would be told ahead of time they were coming. They'd be in the trenches and actually bouncing from the shock waves. So it was really a very, very desperate situation. But within that, like I say, people shared what little they had, and it was little. It was right down to their last water and their last food—with each other. And that was just a common thing. Or they'd dash out to help someone. That was usual; it wasn't unusual at all. And so I just saw the basic goodness

[TAPE RAN OUT]

INTERVIEW BY S NATIONAL MUSEUM OF THE MARINE CORPS, QUANTICO, VA.

[Interview in home in Wauwatosa, Wisconsin, 20 June 2005; copy forwarded by Batwin & Robin letter 11 Jan 2006]. Interviewers used professional gear and were from Illinois] [The interview is spoken at the National Marine Corps Museum, Quantico, VA.]

NARRATOR: Lieutenant Ray William Stubbe, Chaplains' Corps, U.S. Navy, arrived in Khe Sanh in 1967 as the Chaplain of the First Battalion, 26th Marines, and experienced the worst moments of the North Vietnamese siege. he recalls the first massive rocket and mortar attack to hit the base on 21 January 1968, the bombardment that blew up the main ammo dump.

STUBBE: ... When the siege started, I woke up to the sound of rockets whizzing and loud blasts, and suddenly realized we were under a rocket and mortar attack.

I ran to the trench, and the supply dump to the east, to the east of us was on fire, they had sandbags and oil, and everything, that was all in flames. And on the other side of us was the dump for the aviation gas and tar that they were using in the repair of the airstrip, and that was all burning. So it was dark night with plumes of orange, yellow flame and sharp, cracking noises and whumps and whoomps and bombs and cracks.

And they hit pour ammo dump, which contained some drums of tear gas powder, and that spread over the base, and many of our people didn't have gas masks at the time, or if they did, they didn't bring them with them to the trench, they were still in the bunkers or tents, or whatever. And so there we were in this trench, at least where I was, with putting cloth with, soaked with water over our face trying to breathe, choking, coughing, feeling claustrophobic, and this went on for, it seemed like hours.

I helped dig some people out of some rubble, I remember, near the ammo dump, and the tear gas clouds were still sort of lingering, there were tears in my eye, there were pieces of exploded and semi-exploded ordnance all over the place including little darts that had come from these rounds that have these little nail-like things that are like one inch long, they call 'em flechettes.

NARRATOR: Chaplain Stubbe describes the ordeal of daily bombardments and the frustration of being targeted by enemy spotters in the surrounding hills.

STUBBE: We could move around in the morning, then usually the fog burnt off around noon or so, and that's when the aircraft would come, and that's when the shelling would come, basically, because they were tryin' to kill the aircraft.

There was that whole ridge that ran sort of parallel to the airstrip and we knew they had spotters up there that could call in mortars on us. And as far as I was concerned, personally, I was told that I couldn't hold church services that were more than six people because if these spotters saw more than, we figured if they saw more than six or so, that would be a lucrative target and they would call in mortars on us when they had us pretty well pinpointed.

So for some time, and all during February we were getting lots of incoming, that's the day, I mean, that's the month when we took like 1,600 rounds in one day. that's the month when on the 10th of February a C-130 Marine fixed-wing aircraft was hit and burnt up.

Khe Sanh was an exceedingly beautiful place but it was also a place of, of, of much violence and much exertion, and much, it just took out, it took out everything and it, but it drew people together.

We probably only got one ration a day, and sometimes we'd go like three days without water. And I went, when I arrived in Vietnamese, I was 187, and at the end of the siege I think I was 130 something. And all of us, the clothes were rotting off, clothes were, the uniforms were full of blood, and mud, and sweat, and grease, and everything else. In some cases the material had fused in with the skin, we were dirty, a little spacey I guess, but, but, but all thoroughly and completely alive.

INTERVIEW OF RAY WILLIAM STUBBE BY JAMES KURTZ, WISCONSIN VETERANS MUSEUM, MADISON, WISCONSIN, 05 December 2005, 15 February 2006, and 26 April 2006

[Note: Explanatory notes, inserted upon transcribing this tape, were inserted by Ray Stubbe in brackets].

[Interview of 05 December 2005]:

Kurtz: My name is Jim Kurtz, and I'm interviewing Chaplain Ray Stubbe at his home in Wauwatosa, Wisconsin, and the bird you hear in the background is Fred, very social and Fred may or may not contradict Ray, but we'll have to see.

Ray, when and where were you born?

Stubbe: I was born the 15th of August 1938 in Wauwatosa, Wisconsin—in fact just about half a block from here, from where I now live.

Kurtz: Did you grow up in Wauwatosa?

Stubbe: No. After that my parents moved out to 112th and North [Avenue], which doesn't exist anymore; it's the entrance to Highway 45 North at Mayfair Road. North Avenue from 92nd out there was at that time a dirt road, and Mayfair Road had only a little school, Fischer School, and everything else was wide-open space. I lived there until I was about 4, and then we moved to 60th and Meinecke in Milwaukee. My dad worked for a company [located at] about 33rd and North Avenue. He used to walk there. I used to walk to school. I went to Himont, Steuben Junior High, and Washington High School.

Kurtz: Did you graduate from Washington?

Stubbe: I graduated from Washington High School in 1956.

Kurtz: Did you have to walk all the way up and down the hill in the snow?

Stubbe: It wasn't all that hilly, but it was snowy—in fact the snow of '47 I remember: it all came down about three-foot in one night and had great fun. The whole city was paralyzed for a week.

Kurtz: What year did you graduate from high school?

Stubbe: 1956.

Kurtz: 1956, and that was in the middle of the Cold War.

Stubbe: Well things were—I remember [General Douglas] MacArthur being fired when I was in Steuben. He came back here to Milwaukee and they had a big parade.

Kurtz: Do you remember anything about the parade, or just remember it happening?

Stubbe: I just remember it happening. I remember his speech on the radio: "Old soldiers never die; they just fade away." He had a deep—and that kind of oratorical voice that Senator Everett Dirkson and Roosevelt, Churchill—people talked in that kind of grandiose style. I remember the air raid shelters in the hallways for the nuclear–.

Kurtz: Was it a reality that a male graduating in 1956 from high school would be going into the military?

Stubbe: No, not especially from Washington. Washington was a very academic school at the time. The feeling was: from Washington you could almost go to any college in the United States without any problems. I graduated in the upper tenth of the class. Later on, when I went to [St. Olaf] College [in Northfield, Minnesota], I took an entrance exam (which is sort of like the GRE they now have), a Minnesota test, and I was in the 100th percentile of that, so Washington was a good school.

Kurtz: So what did you do after high school, Ray?

Stubbe: Well, the year before my senior year, the summer before, I decided to join the Naval Reserve. Actually it was as my senior year started. It was 28 September 1955, I enlisted in the Navy Reserve, and went to Reserve meetings here in Milwaukee at a brand-new Reserve building (which is still there, but at that time it was brand-new—in fact, they were dedicating it and I looked at these "old" Captains—I was part of that little group where the Captains come in; they "pipe" the Captains aboard—"sideboys" they call them. I was one of the sideboys and I remember these "old, old, old" Navy Captains in their 30s and 40s, how ancient they are. I was 17. So I spent my senior year in high school in the Navy Reserve, which is very unusual for that school—and for me, academically, to be connected with the military.

Kurtz: What was the reason you joined the Navy Reserve?

Stubbe: I'm not really sure. I can't think back [for the reason] at those times. I'm not really sure, because I could have gone to any college after high school.

Kurtz: Were any of your family military members?

Stubbe: No. Well, my uncle whom I'm very close to, was in the China-Burma-India Campaign in World War II, and he and I were very close.

Kurtz: Did that have any influence, do you think?

Stubbe: I don't think so. And I had a great uncle, my grandma's brother, died in World War I, his name was Nels.

Kurtz: What side—with a name like Stubbe?

Stubbe: That was my mother's side—Anderson. He was at Fond du Lac, actually at a place called Hamilton, which was a little rock quarry area there, just south of—doesn't exist anymore. I think it was a time of confusion for me, quite frankly. I was all set to go into the sciences. I had been interviewed by a Case Institute of Technology [person], and I was thinking of the Colorado School of Mines. I was interested in geology and mineralogy and that kind of thing.

Kurtz: Let the record show that around the house [it's evident that] he's still interested in some.

Stubbe: O yes, rocks—I never gave up that interest in the mysteries and wonders of the earth.

Kurtz: Were you committed to go on active duty, Ray, as a result of joining the Reserve?

Stubbe: Yes, I had a two-year active duty [obligation] at that time. I think it was—my minister at the time had also asked me to consider the ministry, and that was so jolting for me—why did he do that? He was a really very powerful minister, well-known nationally, and I suppose to avoid the decisions, I thought, well, I'll get out of the box—we didn't use that term in those days.

Kurtz: What was that minister's name?

Stubbe: Austin Alvin Zinck, A.A. Zinck, Z-I-N-C-K. He was on national boards of our Lutheran group. He was from Nova Scotia. He had been President of a seminary and college up there before becoming our Pastor. He had a very powerful voice, and he was well-known for his scholarship. Not only was he President up there, but he also taught calculus, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, the Bible, and philosophy, and everything else. He was a very powerful person. A humorous aside: I was in Confirmation [classes] one time and—he was a big guy too—he was born in Nova Scotia of sea-faring people, and he said [speaks in low, loud, serious voice], "Ray, do you 'air'?" And I thought he meant, did I fart? And I said, "No, Pastor Zinck, No, I don't 'air'!" And he looked at me and said, "Yes, you do!" OK, yes, I do! He meant ":err," but I always pronounced that 'er' [as in "father"]; he pronounced it "air."

Kurtz: So, when you graduated from high school, you reported to the Navy. Where did you go there?

Stubbe: Yes, well actually I was able to do a two-week—I'm not really proud of this, but it's just what happened. I did a two-week Active Duty for Training at [Naval Training Center] Great Lakes [Illinois], went through that and finished that in the summer of '56, and then I got my orders to go on active duty [to report] on the 31st of October of '56, and they said that since you already went through the two-week boot camp and you're already Seaman Apprentice [pay grade E-2], you don't need to go through boot camp again. It was marvelous! So that's how that happened. Then I went to a Receiving Station in Brooklyn [New York], for about two, three weeks, and then I reported aboard the USS NOA, a destroyer, hull number 841, in Norfolk [Virginia] in, I believe it was, the 10th of December of '56, bitter cold, assigned to the deck force, 2nd Division, swabbing decks, chipping paint, and remained on the NOA about two years. After about three months on the Deck Force they were looking for someone for Ship's Office, someone who could type, and I had a very good clerical score, 67 or something like that, and a high GCT score—the Navy ones are lower than the Marines. So they brought me into the Ship's Office and they sent me to a Yeoman "A" School at Bainbridge [Maryland], and I made YN3, Yeoman Third Class, and eventually, before I finished my active duty, I was a Second Class Petty Officer [pay grade], E5.

Kurtz: So when you got out of the Navy, that was 1958

Stubbe: '58, yes. And I was in the middle of the Mediterranean at the time because there was a crisis at Lebanon—even then! In fact, that's where I got my first ribbon, an Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal, for operations off of Lebanon in '58, and they wanted me to—but I had already been accepted by St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minnesota, and they had an "early release program." Normally, I would have stayed in until October of '58, but they let me out in—I can't remember—August or September—it was right before school was to start. And I got right out of the Mediterranean and they sent me back and I got separated, but I still had reserve obligation, and went to St. Olaf College.

Kurtz: So did you graduate from St. Olaf?

Stubbe: Yes, in '62. And while I was at St. Olaf, I continued to go [to Navy Reserve meetings on Navy Island] to Minneapolis on Reserve meetings. I took the bus up there. I graduated with a philosophy major and was all set to go to Seminary at that point.

Kurtz: So you made a decision at St. Olaf to go to Seminary?

Stubbe: And the first year [at St. Olaf] I took courses that normally juniors take: I took Greek. I also took advanced chemistry—they had a normal chemistry course for those that just needed science credits, but I took the advanced one. It was a pretty heavy academic schedule, and I was over my head, but I was over my head. There was one experiment in chemistry where we got an "unknown" and we had to do the research to try to determine—they told us it was about ten different elements that it could be. We had to do the research on what kind of test to do. So they gave me this little test tube of unknown. It happened to be a uranium [compound], and the way to test for that was to put sulphuric acid with it and it would change colors (green and yellow). Stupidly—I mean, very stupidly,(because I had done chemistry when I was in grade school and knew better!), I poured the solution into the sulphuric acid rather than vice versa, and it exploded. Fortunately, I was wearing glasses, but it could have blinded me. And I realized at the time I was being a little lax, and that was probably not my thing to do, so I stopped taking all the chemistry courses.

Kurtz: So what seminary did you go to?

Stubbe: I went to a little seminary called Northwestern Lutheran Theological Seminary. It was on 100 East 22nd Street, Minneapolis. We were in the old Pillsbury Mansion buildings about a block away from the Minneapolis Art Institute, a very nice location. There were only about a hundred of us, less than a hundred of us for the three years, about thirty to a class. I graduated from there in '65, and about a year after I graduated they merged with Luther Seminary in St. Paul, which is a large seminary, about five, six hundred students on Como Avenue.

Kurtz: So how many were there in your class?

Stubbe: About thirty or so. I graduated second in academic rank in my class, and they were very disturbed that I was going on active duty later on. They thought I should have become a professor or something.

Kurtz: How did you know you were going on active duty?

Stubbe: OK, what happened there was, while I was in seminary, I joined a thing called a Reserve Chaplain Company, commissioned as an Ensign. The Navy had a—maybe still do—but anyway at that time they had a program for those becoming doctors, lawyers, or ministers, that they could become commissioned as an Ensign, but they weren't in their field; they were an unrestricted line officer, but you weren't like an 1105 [designator for Line Officer, Naval Reserve], which was a Line Officer. In my case, I was a 1945. Those numbers refer to codes that the Navy has for officers. So I joined a Chaplain Reserve Company. I think it was 9-6—Ninth Naval District, 6th Chaplain Company [which] met in Minneapolis, and I was the only Ensign. There were, like, four Navy Captains from World War II, and I think there was a Major [should be Lieutenant Commander]. Because of that I was able to go to the Navy Chaplains School at Newport, Rhode Island, one summer for two months.

Kurtz: You did that while you were at seminary?

Stubbe: Yes. At that time—we're talking '65—I graduated in '65. Going on active duty came later on, but I was in this Chaplain Company and remained as an Ensign there. And after I graduated, I became ordained on the 6th of June of '65, went to start a church in a suburb of Milwaukee called Oak Creek, and I started a church called All Saints Lutheran Church, which was a matter of canvassing a 16 square-mile area, everyone who was in there, saying "We're going to start church services; are you interested?" I have some interesting stories from that, too, but they don't pertain to this story. Anyway, I got it organized on Easter Sunday of '66. I don't know the date of that, but it was in April of '66. At that point I still yearned for the academic interests, so I applied for and was accepted by the graduate school of the University of Chicago, which was at that time—probably still is—a very prestigious—I think it was one of the three top theological graduate schools in the United States, and just to be accepted was quite an honor for me. And I went into a Ph.D. program for "Ethics and Society." I was only there for a year because at that time—this was '66—they were asking for chaplains. Well, there were two reasons: they were asking for chaplains and I thought, well, having been enlisted, I felt a kinship there. I felt a need—I guess you could call it a "calling." I had an inner sense that that's where I should be. I saw articles in Life magazine. I saw pictures of POWs, and it really affected me. That was the positive thing. The negative thing was that the University of Chicago—I was on the GI Bill at the time, so financially it was OK, but the Chicago theological school had this thing that they wanted you to be there maybe seven years before you got your Ph.D., and especially in "Ethics and Society" they wanted you to be proficient in economics, political science, sociology. You had to pass at their college level tests in all of those disciplines. So it was matter of: I'd be there maybe ten years or more. It would be forever. Chicago had a good reputation because they demanded a lot before they gave you their credentials. So I was there a year, and then I volunteered to go on active duty.

Kurtz: This would be in 1967?

Stubbe: '67, early. The Navy Chaplain Corps wanted me to come to Washington, which I did, and I was interviewed by the Chief of Chaplains himself and probably one other person in the room, and they said: OK, would you waive your 30 day waiting period to go on active duty? I said: Yes. So within a week I got my orders to go to Camp Pendleton [California] which I did in June of '67. And they had a three-week orientation thing [course] for chaplains. Prior to that they put the Chaplains in with the Field Medical Service School where the Corpsmen and Doctors would pick up things on first aid and how to treat casualties in the field and all that kind of thing. And they figured out that Chaplains did not need to know all the technical medical things, so they devised a course for just Chaplains. And we had an about-to-be retired Sergeant Major. I don't remember his name. He would put us under his wing. At the time, I was the only one [the only Chaplain going through the course at that time]. I was the only one in the "school." So I just went with the Sergeant-Major, and we'd go to the different ranges or places. We had courses on etiquette, customs of Vietnam—like you didn't touch [pat] the head of a child.

Kurtz: Do basically this was a Vietnam orientation?

Stubbe: Exactly, yeah. It was a Staging Battalion, but the chaplain part, I was the only one in. And they'd go to courses like where they'd fire the M79, and you'd get a chance to fire the M79. And they had an infiltration course where the infantry training people would come up from boot camp and they'd go under barbed wire and they'd fire over them. And I figured, well, if I'm going to be with these people, I need to go through that too. So that was the beginning of the end as far as I was concerned for promotion in the Chaplain Corps. They just said that was not a thing they would have liked me to do. But I felt I need to learn what these people are going through. So I did that. And I wasn't an athletic person. In high school I didn't have any sports. I was what they now call a "nerd;" I was an academic person—and going to the University of Chicago and all that kind of stuff. But nevertheless, I still felt that's what I needed to do, so I went through the infiltration course and the night exercises where you'd be captured as a POW and had to escape and had to be recaptured. And I remember one night we were out and there were just three of us, two Marines and myself, and the Marine in charge, a Corporal, said: OK, we got to move, and we didn't want to move because we thought if we move we're going to be spotted and that kind of thing. And he said: Well, if you don't move, you're going to be captured. And that's the kind of thing I was learning: I was learning. I was learning, in a battle situation that they would have to move under fire, under the enemy, and yet feel safe. And there were some cases where it actually happened, where that actually did happen: where the Marines stayed put and another Marine would say, You got to move, and they'd say: No, we're going to be rescued, and they were all killed. So anyway I was going through all that kind of stuff, and then I immediately went to Vietnam.

Kurtz: Before we get you to Vietnam, I got a couple of questions. Obviously you're a kind of person who follows stuff. Were you aware of what was going on in Vietnam? Starting with Dien Bien Phu, did that make any impression on you?

Stubbe: No. I wasn't even aware of the French thing at all. I think the only thing that really gripped me was some pictures of POWs in the Life magazine. They were in purplish, reddish or pink uniform. That really got to me. And O, I must say, another summer while I was still in seminary—one summer I spent in the Navy Chaplains School and the other summer I spent on Temporary Active Duty at the Naval Air Station at Alameda, California, and they had a squadron, VAW-13, which flew these A-1 Skyraiders, electronic—with chaff to jam radars. And they used to take me up flying with them. And the legend at the time was all about Dieter Dengler who had been captured in Laos and managed to escape. He was a German fellow and he tried to pass himself off as a German citizen. And these pilots were all—they had a detachment at Cubi Point, Philippines, and so they were talking about Vietnam a lot. Vietnam was a big subject at the time. So that was in my mind at the time.

(Kurtz: I'm going to turn the tape over.)

Stubbe: Included a letter that I wrote on behalf of Jon Geissmann, who was my roommate at the University of Chicago. What happened: as the siege started at Khe Sanh—just to jump ahead for a second here—we were all—I'll get into that later on—but I received a letter from his draft board. He was being drafted. So I wrote in long hand a letter on his behalf to recommend that he be given a deferment or something like that. So anyway, that's how that happened. I remember eating at the refectory—we didn't call it that then; we call it that in the seminary—at Chicago, it was in the Burton-Judson [quadrangle of dormitories] complex just south of the Midway Plaissance road. The dorms are quadrangles. We were eating lunch there one time when I remember I told the people I was eating lunch with, my fellow students, that I was going to Vietnam, and I remember one of them said to me, "How can you even think of doing that? You'll be the church's endorsement of a corrupt Saigon regime! How can you think of doing that?" And I remember at the time—there were so many things going on in my mind, I must say. One of the reasons—this thing about being with Marines, being in their life–. I guess part of that started—I had a two-week active duty for training down at Great Lakes as a Chaplain, and one of the people there said: Well, why don't you come into our recruit barracks some night and just talk with us? So I did. And it just dawned on me—we have a thing in Christianity called "Incarnation," a Latin thing that means "in the flesh;" it refers to God becoming [human] in Jesus. Called an "incarnation:" God becoming human, taking on human flesh. But that whole paradigm, I guess you could call it, really made a very deep impression on me. And then later on, when I saw the pictures of the POWs in the Life magazine. And then while I was at Chicago in Ethics and Society so I was reading all these people, even Martin Luther which I hadn't studied that much in seminary, oddly!

Kurtz: That's strange!

Stubbe: Well, I studied him, but not to the degree—and I was studying under a Methodist, Brian Gerrish, a professor, and we were studying what Luther thought about war, about being a Christian in society. He had this, what we call "The Doctrine of the Two Kingdoms," where God is over both the secular state and the church. The two are separate, but God pronounces that the state is God's servant too—in a secular way, to maintain order and justice, punish the evil and reward the good. And that kind of interaction—there was a war with the Turk; he wrote a thing called "May Christians Serve in the Military?" And I read these things for the first time in my life. And I was deeply interested, focused in the interface of religion and war. And oddly enough, none of my other Chaplain friends, through the years even, had never seemed interested in that. And for me, "Thou Shalt Not Kill?" What does that mean? Can a Christian be a soldier—or a Marine. So I did a lot of research. And of course I realized that that commandment did not deal with killing; it dealt with murder. The Hebrews were involved in holy wars—obviously it wasn't "war," it was—I got into all this stuff. And I studied the early church history. I really got into it.

Kurtz: Did the Chaplain School have anything like that?

Stubbe: No, no. They were interested—the Chaplains School was mainly a transforming place, a transformative experience, a place where you transformed from one reality to another, like a "boot camp for ministers," so you know the different ranks, you know what a battalion is, you know what a regiment is, you know what's on a ship, we had damage control drills on a mock ship that the Officer Candidate School—a big, steel box that floated on water and you put out fires, it's sort of sinking. Not all Chaplains went with Marines, obviously; some went to the Navy. It was a familiarization with terms, with Code of Military Justice, how to salute, how to march, what the left foot is and what the right foot is—minus all the weaponry kind of things.

Kurtz: Were you at all counseled that being with the men was not good for your career?

Stubbe: No. I think it was sort of assumed. Most Chaplains are academic, like I was, but they didn't have that—I don't know—. I'm not judging because a lot of Chaplains were very close—very, very close to their men, and a lot of them got out of the Service. Maybe some that were close to their men were able to stay in, too. I'm not saying that in a negative way. I'm just saying that after all that education—college and seminary and everything else—most, like doctors and lawyers—I guess they expected more of a "professional [distance]," and I was more, like, a friend. In fact, during the siege [battle at Khe Sanh] I couldn't do [worship] services because we just couldn't, and maybe I'd just hug somebody or I'd just talk with them: "how are things going," that sort of thing. So I was trying to be a friend, and yet, I did maintain my Chaplain [existence]; I wasn't "one of the boys,"—I'll put it that way. Some Chaplains did that: their language became very course; they would drink a lot and that kind of thing, and they became just one of the people, and I think they lost all their authority that way, because you do have to be different, but you have to [also] be the same. Again, the paradigm of the Incarnation—(I don't want to be too religious for this [interview], but the thing of being fully human and fully divine at the same time is a real "mystery," not that I was that, I [certainly] wasn't fully divine; I was fully human—I know I was, but you have to maintain a distance and also a proximity). Being a Chaplain is a very difficult, a very fine edge, but a lot of Chaplains would be so either just paternalistically pronouncing down or maybe they'd be very friendly and have a little Bible study group, or whatever, a religious thing. But I felt you communicate more by your actions and by your life and by your concerns, than by what you say. Those were the things I was learning in graduate school, and so when I went on active duty, that's the shape of how I became a Chaplain. I'm sort of unusual that way, I guess.

Kurtz: Well I've got a question about the difficulty then when you went to Vietnam, and that is: what were you told about dealing with people that came to you and said they were conscientious objectors or cowards, or they said, you know, the command that says "Thou shalt not kill."

Stubbe: I was very liberal—I'll put it that way, but probably with a sort of enlightened self-preservation. See, the situation at Khe Sanh was that we had at least three hill outposts that were manned by Marines. We had a combat base, and sometimes we would have temporary little outposts. We had a Special Forces camp. We had little groups of Marines that lived in the villages with the mountain tribesmen that we had, and half and half would be Montagnards and half Marines. The Marines were to teach them how to defend their villages. We had those things. And my feeling was that if a fellow came in and said that he had any doubts at all if he would fire on the enemy, that that person should not be in that situation where there was any doubt at all. Not only—I mean, sometimes I would be staying overnight at these positions. I didn't want somebody—the lines were pretty thin; there would be somebody maybe every ten feet at night, which was why they could never fall asleep, whatever, but if there was any doubt at all that someone was going to fire on the enemy approaching—because we were isolated. We were very close to Laos and very close to the Demilitarized Zone, in mountains, and the grass was six-foot high and there was a lot of vegetation and it was very rough terrain. So the enemy could creep in very easily and all of a sudden be there—which they did, later on. So my feeling was "get rid of them" [those claiming to be conscientious objectors]. And so I was very supportive of all conscientious objectors. And I still have a file, if you want to get it later on; I kept a file of all these people. But the Marine Corps—[actually the] Department of Defense—made it very difficult for conscientious objectors. They had a long, hard process, almost Herculean in scope.

Kurtz: What was the view of Company Commanders and Battalion Commanders if you told them that this kid shouldn't be there?

Stubbe: Yeah. They were not quite as liberal. They were short of people, basically, and they needed everybody they could [keep]. So, I'm not sure what happened to all of these people, except for one, a very prominent conscientious objector that reported in on the early part of January, 1968. His name is Jonathan Nathaniel Spicer. And Jonathan came—this is maybe the middle of January he reported aboard. The Siege started the 21st of January; so he was there about a week, ten days before. He saw me. He came in—a very "boyish" kind of appearance, demeanor; he looked like he was 12, 13 years old. He told me (and I learned from talking with him) that he was a son of a Methodist minister. He had never hunted. He had never been in sports. He had never been in a fight. His hero was Albert Schweitzer. He told me—I'll never forget; some of the things are engraved in my memory—he said: He didn't care what happened to him; he just didn't want to hurt anybody else. And I thought—well, for sure—I mean the other people that I supported, I supported; I just didn't know. The Chaplain's job was to determine the authenticity of an applicant and also to answer the questions on the religious development, because they had to have a religious basis. They couldn't just say they were opposed to wars, or to selective war. And in his case there was no doubt in my mind that this fellow was indeed a very genuine conscientious objector. And I said, OK, we'll start the process.

In the meantime, he had to go to his unit, which was the supply—a rear kind of thing. He was in supply of one of our line companies—I think it was BRAVO Company of First Battalion, Twenty-Sixth Marines. And I said: Well, we'll start this off; you come back and see me and we'll work this out; we'll write this up and we'll take care of it. Then the Siege battle started, and I hadn't seen him after that. The base was attacked. And about a day after that, the "Top," the First Sergeant of (I'm sure it was) Bravo Company came to me and said: "Chaplain, YOU!—You have to do something about Spicer!" He said, "He won't take up his rifle and clean it and the guys are beating him up." And I can understand that. When things get tense, people—especially the Marines—they have to depend on each other, and if there's a "weak link"—it's just like a hen pecking, the birds pecking the weak bird—that was a cause of anxiety, and so they were beating him up. And I said, "Well, I have a solution. I deserve a Chaplain's Clerk, by requirements. Chaplains deserve a Clerk, and I don't have one. My clerk had just rotated back, just prior to the Siege—a good fellow—he ended back up in DESERT STORM because he stayed in the Reserve in the Army. But anyway. It's sort of ironic. He left. So I had no Clerk, and I said I deserve one. I said: I don't really need one; I'll be honest with you, because I was on the base. I don't need a jeep driver. I don't need someone to carry a rifle to protect me. Those are the two main things that the Chaplains Clerk does—he carries supplies, drives the Chaplain, and protects him. So I don't need him. But my bunker is in the C-Med area, and they always need stretcher bearers. So you can assign him to me, and he'll work for 3rd Platoon of Charlie Company, 3rd Med Battalion; we called them "Charlie Med," which is where I was. He can be a stretcher bearer. OK. That's fine, he said, We'll get him out of our hair. So he reported to me. And I have to say to my shame, again, that was the last time I saw him, because I was all over the base all the time, and I didn't want him around me. I didn't want to be responsible for protecting him. Sometimes we just had to dive into a shallow ditch (or whatever) and there was probably only room for one person, or maybe there was no room, and I didn't want to be responsible for him getting killed. And I didn't pursue any more of his conscientious objection thing. And he was there in C Med, and I was all over the base until—and I left, and I still never saw him. And then I learned that he was helping to load casualties aboard a helicopter and a mortar exploded right as they were doing that. He took shrapnel in the sac around his heart, the pericardium, the doctors that were there were basically interns, they were not qualified to do anything [to do open heart surgery, that is], but they knew if they didn't operate, he'd die. They were successful. They got the shrapnel out of his heart, sent him on to Japan. He was there two weeks, and then he died of infection.

Kurtz: O my!

Stubbe: And then—he was written up in an AP release, or UPI, one of—all the papers in the United States, and there was a woman, Jurate Kazickas, who is a well-known writer, and she was wounded up there, grievously, along with the Engineer Officer, Bill Gay, and she was evacuated as a matter of fact, and she left her boots. And the story tells of these boots, which were tiny, small size, and they just fit Spicer, and he asked if he could have them, and he did—until he died. I always felt guilty after that, that if I hadn't intervened, he might have been transferred to the rear or something, but he would still have been alive. And I worked that through, eventually in that I did what I thought was right; he did what he thought was right; and it was just the circumstances.

Kurtz; Well, war is very [?], as you well know.

Stubbe: O yeah. But you can't—but all Vietnam vets seem to have this thing about guilt. It's sort of an ill-defined guilt and just pin it on to whatever they can pin it on to, whether it's deserved or not. And I pinned the guilt on—it's sort of like when a man comes back home from work and he's angry, and he started fighting his wife. It's not that his wife is wrong, it's just that she's there. You have to have some object to put the emotions on, and most Vietnam vets will pin the guilt on something that's really not really not worthy of that guilt, but they still feel guilty.

Kurtz: One last question, and then we have to go to Vietnam, and that is—this Spicer said he didn't want to hurt anybody. The fact that he wasn't doing his job, meant that he was hurting his fellow Marines, which explains why they were beating him up. Now how did you deal with that, where—if you and I are here together and I've got some responsibility to protect you.

Stubbe: Well, he just worked as a stretcher bearer.

Kurtz; But before he came out of the lines—he said he didn't want to hurt anybody, well, if he—

Stubbe: Well, I just tell, when he came to me, he said that he had told the people in boot camp, in ITR [Infantry Training Regiment], in Staging [Battalion]—there were four or five different things; he told them all. He had been told by his Recruiter that he could be a dog handler and that he wouldn't have to go into combat. Well, the recruiters in those days—we know—would do anything to get their quota, and so that's how they got him. And he soon realized that he was going to be a 0311 [MOS, Military Occupation Specialty] , an Infantryman. So he told all these people, all the way through, and he told me that they told him, Wait until you get to your next duty station. They didn't want to have to deal with it. So here he is, at Khe Sanh, about ready to have war—this conscientious objector, who should have been handled before he got over there, but was passed-off; they just didn't want to handle it, or they thought that maybe he'd crack and conform. So there he is. He comes to Khe Sanh. And I must say—people told me later on that I came to know really well, who worked as stretcher bearers, like recon people—recon people, reconnaissance Marines were unable to do their reconnaissance patrols because of the situation, and they would be sent to C Med to act as stretcher bearers, or sent to the lines or sent to move supplies. They told me that Spicer became in charge of them eventually, because he was there all the time. He was the permanent stretcher bearer and these other people came in and out, and he became like a "tiger." And what happened with Spicer was that when we had incoming, all the guys who would be carrying stretchers out to a waiting helicopter and we'd have incoming mortars because the [enemy] spotters on the hill would see the chopper, call in mortars. And all the other guys would run to ditches, trenches, and bunkers, and Spicer would stay out there with the guy—all the time! He'd lay down beside the stretcher and try to comfort the guy or even lay on top of him sometimes to give more assurance. And he did this all the time. So that when he did die, this article that I was mentioning—they were interviewing Colonel Lownds who was the regimental commander, senior officer present, and he said, well, that man deserves a Navy Cross for his bravery, which is one level under a Medal of Honor. And so he did. He received posthumously—his family received the Navy Cross. And I always thought it was very ironic that this conscientious objector, who never fired a shot got the Navy Cross.

Kurtz: Wow!

Stubbe I think that's quite a story.

Kurtz: As we're turning the tape over, Ray has told me that this is not the first time he's done it. Could you just tell me briefly relay a couple of these people who've been here.

Stubbe: There seemed to be a time—it all happened within a year or two. There was a fellow named Ron Steinman who was with the History Channel or ABC. He did a History Channel thing on Vietnam, and I was included in there along with several other Khe Sanh veterans. And then there was a fellow from the Weather Channel called me up and they were concerned with the effects of weather on war, and they did a section on Khe Sanh, and two people came up from Chicago and interviewed me for that. All these things, by the way, had been repeated on History Channel or Weather Channel, so I'd get telephone calls. And then one time, believe it or not, Ollie North himself, for "War Stories" said we want to do a thing on Khe Sanh, and I said, well, I just don't travel that much. In fact, I told all these people—the reason they came here is that—I guess maybe it's an effect of Vietnam or whatever, but I just don't like to travel. In fact, I get kind of panicky with pressure on the chest, sweaty palms, headaches, if I get out of Milwaukee. So they all came to me; they came to this house. And one time Ollie North came. I said: The only way we're going to do this is if you come here. He said: OK, I'll come. I had known Ollie from 1973 when I was on Okinawa with 4th Marine Regiment at Camp Hansen, and he had the Northern Training Area. And just before I'd gone to Okinawa, I had finished Army Jump School—I'm sounding more and more like a gungy Chaplain—really, and I don't think of myself that way. What happened there—I'm kind of scattered here—but it will come together. I was on a Navy ship called the [USS] SHREVEPORT, LPD-12, and I had orders to go to Okinawa, but the Navy ran out—it was one of these budget things where the Navy ran out of PCS money, Permanent Change of Station money because Congress hadn't passed the Continuing Resolution which, because of that, they didn't have money to transfer people, so I ended up at the Naval Amphibious Base at Little Creek in Norfolk [Virginia] where the SHREVEPORT went off to the Med and I was due to go to Okinawa. So while I was there, they didn't have much work for me to do there, so at that time I translated the Greek New Testament into English; I went through the whole Greek New Testament—academic again. But I said: I need to get some physical exercise because I'm going to Okinawa with Marines again because I had been on the ship and was a little out of shape. So there was a SEAL Team there, SEAL Team Two. And I asked them: Can I do training with you, physical training. They said: Sure! So I did morning runs with them. Of course they were in such good shape and I was in such bad shape—the heights of the mountains and the depths of the ocean we're talking here. I'll never forget we were in a circle to do exercises and the head guy said: We'll start off light; we'll start off with fifty push-ups. And if I could do ten—I don't know! But the fellow who was next to me was a Chief Boatswain's Mate named BRUMULLER. He had one eye that looked off to the side. He had just come back from Bolivia where he had done some nefarious thing that SEALS do, and he looked at me and said, "Padre, which arm should I use? Left arm or right arm?" And I had never even heard of anyone doing one-arm push-ups and so I thought he was pulling my leg, so I said, "OK, use your left arm." He did fifty push-ups with his left arm! Put his right hand behind his back. He said: "You should go to Jump School. You'd really enjoy that. You enjoy working out with us SEALS. You would enjoy going to Fort Benning!" So they got me permissive orders and I went to Fort Benning and I got my Jump Wings. And I must say that at that time I was an academic person, not physical, and it took every bit of effort that I had to get through Jump School. Most of the guys, it was a breeze; it is fun for them, but for me it was serious.

So anyway, I had my silver Jump Wings and I went to Okinawa and there I was able to jump. They had a Special Forces group there called SAFASIA, which I think was "Special Action Force, Asia." I guess I can say this now: they had nuclear weapons there at Camp Chinen and they had plans to invade mainland China. This was back in '73. None of this has ever been in the news, I'm sure. Maybe it's still classified. I'm sure it isn't, but anything with nuclear weapons—people get a little anxious. So I jumped with them in a place in the middle of Okinawa called Yomitan Peninsula. And then I also jumped with Marine Air Delivery people, and I got my Gold [Navy-Marine Corps] Wings. And I liked to go to the Northern Training Area because they were teaching rappelling off cliffs and river crossing techniques and all that kind of thing, and that's where I met Ollie North. He was the Officer in Charge, the OIC, of the Northern Training Area. And he really took care of his men. He got the Division Band up there for Marine Corps Birthday. One of his men, a fellow named GOLIGHTLY, wanted to be baptized. [He was] Southern Baptist. I told him: I'm Lutheran, and you'll have to be baptized again. He said: No, I want to be baptized, so we went in Shin Gawa River, I think it is, that ran through the Northern Training Area—very, very cold. And of course he wanted to be baptized by immersion, so we were in this river. And O, it was so very cold.

So that was my remembrance of Ollie North. And I'd taken some pictures of him with a [Marine Corps] Birthday cake—this young Captain. So he called me; he said he's coming over to do an interview. So he came, and I had a room at that time full of memorabilia from Khe Sanh which I've since donated to the Wisconsin Veterans Museum, and we were sitting up there surrounded by all these shrapnel and boots and uniforms and all that kind of stuff, and he was asking me various questions. And I remember I was looking off [into space], and all of a sudden I looked at him, and there was a tear coming down his eye. People remember him, I guess, because of the [Congressional] Hearings on Iran-Contra and all that kind of thing, but really Ollie is a very personable–. He is a good Marine. He took care of his men. He was a "person-type" person, officer. I'm sure he was a "mission-type" officer too, but basically he was a very caring—my memory of Ollie is that he was caring, sensitive person who has very deep feelings, and that's the way that I'll always remember him.

Kurtz: Well, it's time to go to Vietnam. We've talked about conscientious objectors and a little bit about a lot of things, but going to Vietnam. How did you go to Vietnam, Ray?

Stubbe: OK. I flew—as most of us did—some of us went by ship—I flew from Camp Pendleton—I don't think we flew from Camp Pendleton—I'm not sure where we took off from. But anyway, I landed in DaNang, and my first impressions there were how hot and smelly and—of course, I'd been in many foreign countries before in the Navy, so it wasn't that much of a shock. But it was hot and smelly. And I remember I wanted to drink a soda, and some of the guys there were saying, well, we can't use money. We had to use "funny money," so they had Military Payment Certificate, MPC, for a nickel or a dime or a quarter, and someone had some, and they bought me a coke. And I remember also there were three Marines there who were from Khe Sanh. And, of course, I didn't know anything about Khe Sanh. I didn't know how it was spelled. I don't think I'd even heard the term, even though the Battle of the Hills had been in the news. It just didn't register. But they were sitting there, and they had just received Silver Stars, I guess it was. They were with the recon unit. And they were talking about how they—I sat with them—and they were talking about Hill 918. Hill 918 is a little closer to the Laotian border; it's between Hill 881 and the Laotian border. They were talking about how they were going up there and clean it out—the North Vietnamese who were creeping in from Laos. So that stuck in my mind—Khe Sanh and Hill 918, and how young and how enthused and how full of life these—and they were so anxious to get back.

The other thing that happened at DaNang was that—I was only there for one day and they were separating us into bunches of people. Some were going to Khe Sanh, and some were going to Phu Bai and some were going to Dong Ha—there were three main groups, and I was in the group that was going to Phu Bai, and they were going to Khe Sanh. They gave us numbers and they would say, All those with numbers 1 through 60 going to Dong Ha, you can go, and they would go on a C-130 or whatever. And my number was such that I couldn't go. They ceased operations and sent us over to the Air Force area for supper. And then it was getting around midnight. I can't remember the date, but this would be in the middle of July, and they said: OK, there's another plane that's leaving for Phu Bai which you can take, or you can stay overnight and we'll get you out the next morning. Get some sleep. And I was just anxious to go on, to get out of a temporary thing. Little did I know it was so much better in DaNang. The bedding—it was an Air Force compound, and I was going to a Marine compound where there were no showers or anything, even in Phu Bai. So anyway I got on the last C-130 that left that night, and I'll never forget how claustrophobic I felt. I got on this C-130 and there weren't too many of us. And it was so hot, and the air conditioner started, and it looked like steam coming down from the outlets for the air conditioning. It was so humid that it was like steam. And then the ramp came up, and I felt so closed in even though it was a big plane, and landed in Phu Bai.

What I didn't know was that within five minutes after taking off that DaNang Airbase was hit with a very heavy rocket attack. The way I found that out was that there was another fellow that I talked with while I was at DaNang named Harper Bohr, B-O-H-R, who was going to Khe Sanh as the Intelligence Officer, the S-2 of the Regiment. And he and I had a very nice conversation. He was a very nice gentleman who was also a Lutheran, and we were talking about that. I talked with him for awhile, and then I was talking with these three Marines, and then I went to the Air Force compound. Anyway, eventually when I got to Khe Sanh, he told me about this rocket attack. He had stayed behind, because he probably knew better—that the Air Force had better—. But he said it was just terrible. He said they thought they were going to be killed. So I just escaped that by about five minutes.

So I landed at Phu Bai, and there I spent about a week with the Division Chaplain there, and they were deciding where to put me and giving me some orientation on Vietnam. And I remember the first night I arrived there I was so grubby and I said, Can I take a shower? And they said, No; there's no water. I thought: This is odd; this is like being on a Navy ship! So then I went to the "three-holer"—the outdoor facility that they had there, and there was a man sitting on one of the holes there with toilet paper wiping blood from his wounds; he had been hit by shrapnel and he was all bloody, and I thought, What am I getting into?!

So I spent about a week there, at Phu Bai. I could probably look up some more about that, but those are the [lasting] impressions that I remember about Phu Bai.

Kurtz: What did they tell you about what your role was in Vietnam, or job?

Stubbe: They didn't say very much. They told me eventually at the end—a day or so before I left there—that I was going to Khe Sanh, but I was going there on a temporary basis, that I was really assigned to Third Shore Party Battalion, which was at a place called Gia Le [pronounced: JAH-LAY]. Shore Party is a supply-moving unit for the Marine Corps, usually on a beach—traditionally they stage things into categories of petroleum, medical supplies, ammunition, food, water—in different areas, and then they move them out to the different units. It's sort of a half-way thing of organizing supply movement. In Vietnam, Shore Party did the same thing, only they were on inland bases, and they would move supplies. Anyway, they have a different uniform—well, they have the same uniform as everyone else, except that they have red patches on the outer part of their knees, and a little square red patch on their cover, on their hat. The one on the knees is, like, two inches by one inch—to designate—they're the ones that can be there, to get all the people who aren't supposed to be there with the supplies [out]. So anyway I was assigned to them. And the reason they were sending me to Khe Sanh [was] because their chaplain—there was only one chaplain—well, there was a Chaplain of First Battalion, Twenty-Sixth Marines. We call that "one-twentysix." His name was David Meschke, who had gone over with them, and I met him in Okinawa as a matter of fact. It's interesting that I had all these little contacts with Khe Sanh before I went there. He told me a little bit about Khe Sanh. So anyway, they said: We're sending you to Khe Sanh to fill Dave Meschke's place until we can get a new Chaplain there, but you're Third Shore Party Battalion Chaplain.

And the reason for all that kind of confusion was that 26th Marine Regiment was a unit of a thing called "9th MAB"—Ninth Marine Amphibious Brigade, which had its headquarters on Okinawa. MACV had determined that there could be only so many Marines "in country" in Vietnam, so that's why the Marines had quite an establishment on Okinawa, like repair facilities. The Army had these in Vietnam, but the Marines could only have so many people, so they decided to have as many infantry as they could—and air—and they had what they called the "logistic tail," they had only like two or three men for every infantryman, whereas the Army had like eight or nine in their logistic tail or support people for every infantryman because they could have more people in Vietnam.

So anyway, they had a thing called "Ninth Marine Amphibious Brigade" and the Marines in Vietnam were under the Third Marine Amphibious Force. They had to change from 3rd MEF to 3rd MAF because they thought the ["Third Marine Expeditionary Force"] was too militaristic or something. And the 26th Marine Regiment was a 9th MAB unit; they were not part of 3rd Marine Division or 3rd MAF. They were, operationally under them, but administratively they were under 9th MAF. The battalions, however, were considered 3rd Marine Division.

So, technically, I had my orders to Vietnam as a 3rd Marine Division Chaplain, but all the Chaplains that went to the 26th Marines, including the battalions which, even though they were 3rd Marine Division [units], they received their orders directly from the Chief of Naval Personnel to report to the 26th Marines because they were considered 9th MAB, a different unit. And they weren't even ordered to 9th MAB; they were ordered to 26th Marines. See, 26th Marines was part of the old 5th Marine Division. And this was their first year in Vietnam, so there were some technical and historic and administrative things they hadn't ironed out yet. And so I couldn't be the 1/26 Chaplain; I had to be the 3rd Shore Party Chaplain.

So anyway, I got to Khe Sanh, and I was there for about a week or so, and the Battalion Commander, whom I'd met—again, I met him in Staging Battalion [at Camp Pendleton] by the name of Jim Wilkinson, and he was going to Khe Sanh, although I didn't know that at the time. He was my Battalion Commander, and a wonderful gentleman, like Harper Bohr. And he said: We have these company-sized units—a company is about 250 men—we have these company-sized units out in different places, Hill 861 and Hill 881 [South]—they're named for how many meters above sea-level [they are], and he said: We haven't had a Chaplain go out and see them for some time. He said: We'd like to have you go out. So I went out to Hill 881 [South].

I must say that the time I arrived at Khe Sanh we had Third Battalion, 26th Marines, there, and their Chaplain was Bede Wattigny, W-A-T-T-I-G-N-Y. And he had been drafted by his Order—they had a quota—there were so few Catholics [Catholic Chaplains], that the different Catholic orders had to send so many Chaplains—they were ordered to, and he didn't want to be in the Service, and he didn't want to be in Vietnam, and he was very anxious to get out and go home. He told me—the very first words I heard [from him] he said when I got there, "The Marine Corps is the worst thing that ever happened to me in my life!" So he was not about to go out in [outpost] places.

So I went out to Hill 881-South, and the Commanding Officer there at the time [of Alfa Company, 1/26] was John Raymond. John Raymond was a very interesting fellow. He had—I went to his CP [Command Post] bunker there and he had little C-ration case cardboard [sleeves] on his walls where he had put different sayings. I'll never forget one of the sayings was: "God and the soldier we adore/ in time of war and not before/ the battle ended and all things righted/ God's forgotten, the soldier slighted." And I remember that because it became so significant after Vietnam too. And he attributed it to Lord Marlborough, but I looked it up [since then] and I can't remember who said it, but it's in the Library of Congress book of quotations. John Raymond got all his men who were available o the Landing Zone of Hill 881 [South] which is a bald top of the hill, and there was a wall made of cases of empty wooden 105 ammunition that were held in position by engineering stakes. And that's where the helicopters would land and so on. And so he got all the men who were available—who wasn't on patrol—the two platoons—a company has three platoons and a headquarters. There were a lot of people there, and they were all in line against this wall of wooden ammo boxes. And I remember looking at them, and they were all young. I guess the average age of the Vietnam enlisted person was 19. And they looked even younger than that. But they'd been o the hill for awhile. Their clothes were beginning to rot off. I remember one fellow—it really sort of shocked me. I saw him sitting there. They were all sitting. And his crotch was rotten out, and his male parts were hanging out. It's—wow, what have I gotten into?! Because I remember I had been in the University of Chicago, and I suddenly went to Pendleton for three weeks and Phu Bai for a week, and here I was in it. And this wasn't even war yet. But these guys that would be on these hills would be there for six weeks at a time—no showers or bath, no light at night. Some had sent home for candles and they were fortunate to have them. The squads would probably have Coleman lanterns, as did the Company CP [Command Post]. Everyone else, when the sun set, that was it. And of course one platoon a day would go out o sweeping patrols. The other two platoons would remain back to dig trenches and bunkers and move supplies and string the concertina and do that kind of thing.

So eventually—my modus operandi here—eventually what would happen was that I would go out to a hill [outpost]—come out on a resupply chopper. And of course while they're moving supplies, I couldn't hold services then because there was so much noise from the chopper and there was so much commotion. So the chopper would go off and I'd stay overnight there. And then at the end of the afternoon when the patrol that was out patrolling—the platoon—would come back and the supplies had all been moved and it was quiet, then I could hold a [worship] service for everybody that wanted to [attend], but I couldn't do it during the day. During the day a platoon would be out patrolling. I mean, I could probably have done it during the day, done a service, got a resupply chopper and take me back to the base or something. And maybe I'd get ten people who were available, but this way I could get, maybe a hundred! So I'd stay overnight, stay in their bunkers, one bunker or another. And by that time they'd moved all the supplies, the platoon that was patrolling was back. And then the next morning I would get the resupply chopper to the next hill [outpost] and do the same thing. That's how I would do that. And that's why, I guess, the senior Chaplains back in Washington—why isn't he going back to the base? Why is he staying in these isolated places that are in danger of attack, and whatever else.

Kurtz: What did the Marines think about this?

Stubbe: O, the Marines, they just loved this. They thought this was the best thing going. And I felt—because the Chaplain is kind of a lonely position. I was very sensitive to the fact that I couldn't become one of the guys kind of thing, and I was older, too. I couldn't of been [one of the guys]; I just wasn't about it. But I could of adopted their language and everything else. So I want to be with people, but I knew I wasn't—. So it's a lonely position, so I wanted to be with—

Kurtz: Watching the tape, which the people transcribing these things know is quite frequent. I was going to ask you the question: I would argue with you from my personal experience of being a Platoon Leader with a bunch of veterans is pretty lonely, too.

Stubbe: Yes, it definitely is. And of course there wasn't a bunch of veterans, but there were some that had second tours. And of course there's the Corporals and the Sergeants, Staff Sergeant—there aren't that many at that point. By that time there were a lot of casualties in Vietnam. There weren't many Staff Sergeants or Gunny Sergeants to go around, so the people that were older, say, the Company Commander on that side, and then maybe a very few on their second tour, and maybe a Staff Sergeant and a Gunnery Sergeant—there weren't many. And furthermore, some of the Second Lieutenants were Naval Academy grads, and some of them were Mustangs.

Kurtz: Tell the people what a "Mustang" is.

Stubbe: A "Mustang" is an officer who has been enlisted. In fact, the Company Commander of DELTA Company—his name was Johnson, when I first arrived there—was a Mustang. And all the troops loved him, because they knew that he knew what they knew. They couldn't put anything over him, but if there were something that was troubling to them—if they had a patrol—in fact we had some patrols that were kind of questionable, where he would stand up for his men and tell the Regiment: This is not possible. So there was, for new officers—I think the Marine troops really respected their officers—at least where I was, at that time. There wasn't this thing of "fragging" and there wasn't a haughty kind of thing. They drove their men pretty hard—the Company Commanders and the Platoon Commanders—but they were with them. I guess that's the thing: they were right with them and they seemed to understand and they were good officers. And I think the men who were there would say the same. In fact, I go to reunions now, and every once and awhile a former officer will come kind of with a cautionary hesitancy—what are my men going to think about me?—and I don't think there's one that I've seen at reunions and hugs and it's just really good to see.

Kurtz: Let's divide our chat here from the summer of '67 at Khe Sanh to the time the Siege started, and I have a series of things—I assume what you were going was going from hill to hill, but did you ever go to the Special Forces Camp?

Stubbe: Yes, I did that too.

Kurtz: Could you describe what that camp was like?

Stubbe: O God. [laughs]. Well, first of all, getting to it; it was almost on the Laotian border, and even there the Marines were hesitant to let me go. My Battalion Commander, by the way, was very open about letting me go wherever I wanted to go. He was very supportive, except that some times during this time you're talking about, some of our recon teams ran into trouble, and in fact some of them were shot and killed, and so I was spending a lot of time with the recon unit which was right in the middle of our base—try to comfort some of the guys and try to get to—"how are you doing?"—that kind of thing. And at one time my Battalion Commander told me, "Remember you're the 1/26 Chaplain, not the recon Chaplain." Just a gentle way of reminding me.

Yeah, one time I remember I wanted to go out to the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei, and I remember our intelligence people (I guess), not the Battalion Commander, but other people in the command bunker there said, "What do you have? A death wish?" And of course I didn't know, but during the Hill Battles earlier in '67, in fact, specifically on May 4th—the Hill Battles started the 24th of April when Bravo Company, 1/9, went up Hill 861 and they got shot at, and that precipitated the battle. And then on the 30th of April the two MIKE Companies [3/3 and 3/9] went up Hill 881 [South] and they had about 50 people killed or 60 people killed, and the battle raged on. On the 4th of May, the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei was overrun and the Commanding Officer and the Executive Officer were both killed—I since learned. I didn't know this at the time. They [the Special Forces] had recruited three Vietnamese for their forces there who were actually North Vietnamese agents. These three knifed the sentries that were no duty, permitting a force to come into the camp and they killed Captain Crenshaw and Captain Stallings who were the CO and XO, both Black, Afro-American. but the rest of the camp withstood the attack. And I interviewed the First Sergeant—his name was Steptoe, and he's since died, and we talked about this. But anyway I didn't know any of that. They knew that that camp had been overrun—or partially overrun—and it was a dangerous place to be. So I went there.

And my impression of the place was that it was just a pig-sty. It was totally "un-Marine!" I mean, the Marine base at Khe Sanh was muddy and dusty and dirty, but at least they picked up the trash and the garbage. But here were all these Vietnamese, and they were eating fish heads and rice and there was food all over the place, on the ground. There were rats. It was just a complete mess. It was just so messy. On the other hand, they had a plywood team house. They had white toilet seats. And they had a doctor—his name was Hunter—he was up there from Nha Trang, and he said, "Yeah, you Marines live with less than what you should; you're all masochists, you all live with less and you try to justify your existence to the Congress and stay in business by using less than the Army," and he went on and on and on. I was getting very angry with him.

Then that night I remember they were showing a movie, and I thought, My God! A movie! I can't believe this! But at the team house they had a white sheet and they were showing this movie.

Kurtz: The movie was inside the team house?

Stubbe: Inside the team house. And I remember: Gee, I'm going to see a movie! I can't believe it! I hadn't seen a movie in months. So I went in there, and the title of the movie came on, and it was: "You Can Never Go Home Again." It was probably from Wolf. And I remember I got so nervous. I walked out. I didn't see the movie. I walked out and sat on the picnic bench that they had there. And I stayed overnight in the same bunker that Crenshaw and Stallings had been killed in. I didn't know that at the time. It was a hexagonal—sort of like an old French kind of bunker there. Lang Vei had been—before the Special Forces went there—it had been an ARVN compound. The 2nd ARVN Division, I think, had a—. So anyway I stayed overnight in that very bunker where they were killed, and I didn't know it at the time. And there were rats squeaking around at night. And I remember I had a poncho liner which was a different kind—a yellowish kind that the Marines didn't have. I hadn't even seen a poncho liner up to that point.

So I had church services. And I came back a couple of times and stayed in the same bunker. I still didn't know anything about the attack that had been there. And the Navy Seabees were building a new Lang Vei camp just a little further west towards Laos. And I remember Captain Willoughby, Frank Willoughby, who was the CO of the Special Forces there—he had been a Marine Staff Sergeant at one time, he told me. And he was taking me around, and he said: O, we got two thousand meters, two clicks, of gentle, sloping fire. He said: We're keeping only Americans in the inner perimeter, and then we have barbed wire, and then the Vietnamese in the outer perimeter. And I still didn't know why—but I heard later on about being overrun—but he didn't tell me why. He said, "We can take a regiment!" And the Seabees were building a several million dollar complex. And I held [worship] services on—the Army calls it the "TOC," a Tactical Operations Center; the Marines call it a "COC," Combat Operations Center—one of those things that are different between the Army and the Marine Corps—like "enclosure:" the Army and Air Force spells it "inclosure," and the Marines, it's "enclosure." And the Army always has "hours," like "Thirteen hundred hours," whereas the Marines and the Navy just have "Thirteen Hundred." There are a lot of funny different little things that are different. So anyway the Seabees are building this TOC and there were these concrete beams that were across the top. And I remember sitting on one—there's a picture of me doing this; I only had Seabees for this [worship service]—were sitting on another one facing me, and I remember telling them: "You'd better not fall asleep during my sermon, or you'll fall back down into the bunker!" They'd be "off the beam!"

But anyway, I remember Willoughby telling me, "We can take a regiment." But it took just three or four tanks when they overran the place. They didn't anticipate tanks.

Kurtz: Did you have any interaction with the Vietnamese in the Special Forces camp?

Stubbe: No, none. But anyway, I got out there, and then I had to try to get a chopper to try to pick me back up because that was not one of their normal resupply things, and there was no road traffic to speak of. There was some, but very rare.

Kurtz: Why was there no road traffic?

Stubbe: Well, it's just that the Marines and the Special Forces didn't have anything to do [with each other]. Sometimes—there was one time I remember where the Marines sent a jeep out to Lang Vei—I guess to give some intelligence information or something. And they had little check points along the way that spelled the name of Colonel LOWNDS. They had check point "L," check point "O," check point "W," and I remember the Marine Captain at the time—we were bouncing along Route 9 which had a lot of pot holes and ruts. They called it a highway, but it was really a very bad dirt road, and this Marine Captain was going out to Lang Vei, and I went out just for the ride. It was late afternoon. And I think he had been drinking; he was "deep into the cups." He kept yelling, "Provincial Days!" "Provincial Days!" He was out of it. Maybe he was covering up his fear of going out to Lang Vei; I don't know. But I was completely oblivious; I had no fear at all. I'd been on patrols off the hills and everything else. So I was going out there. I just took a ride out and back with him. But other times I went out there, I went out by chopper—I think they were bringing things out to the Seabees, and then they'd go. And I was there. And then I had to try to call the next morning. I'd call SUNRISE ONE FOUR; I think that was the Regimental air officer net. The Regiment had a different—they were MORRAY, and later on became INTRIGUE, but for some unknown reason, the "air" was SUNRISE ONE FOUR. But anyway, they got a chopper just to pick me up and take me back.

Kurtz: In your mind, was that a problem with the Marines and the Special Forces didn't have much to do with each other?

Stubbe: O, it definitely was a problem. It was a problem for everybody; it was a problem for the Special Forces and a problem for the Marines. See, what happened was: the Special Forces were on Khe Sanh base in September of '66. Westmoreland thought that the North Vietnamese were really massing around that area and he wanted to beef up the area, so he put the First Battalion, Third Marine Regiment, Lieutenant Colonel Peter Wickwire—sent them into Khe Sanh base and upgraded the airstrip. At that time the Special Forces were still—that was a Special Forces camp. And I talked with people who were there at the time and they tell me that there was a terrible friction, that the Special Forces wouldn't let the Marines know when they were doing anything or what they were doing, because they were so "classified." And the Marines would see these indigenous patrols out in front of their lines; they didn't know who they were. And one time there was a fellow, Captain O'Dell, who was one of the Company Commanders there told me—O'Dell was an interesting person—he mentioned at one time there were these Vietnamese in front of the wire and the Marines went to the Special Forces and asked, Is this one of your patrols? And they said: No. And they said: Well, from henceforth, we're going to fire on all Vietnamese patrols that we don't know about. And the Special Forces said: We can't put up with that. So they just wouldn't get along with each other. Also, the Special Forces had concrete bunkers. Later on, the Marines used to call them "the old French bunkers," because they thought they were from the French days—they looked so old and dilapidated, but they were well-build, underground concrete bunkers. But they were built by the Special Forces. I think they occupied the base around 1964. Prior to that, from '62 to '64, they had been in Khe Sanh village at a little place just to the east called "The Old French Fort," [Thuong Van], which was a hilltop. So anyway, when the Marines came, they just couldn't get along with each other, so they said: We're going to move out to this ARVN base at Lang Vei, which they did. In December of '66 they moved out there. However, they sent a message that none of their bunkers could be damaged or destroyed because they fully intended to come back to Khe Sanh base; this was a temporary move for them, a temporary move that became permanent.

So they went out there, and then became very independent. Their AO, Area of Operations, was mainly along the Laotian border, along the Xepone River and then a little bit to the north. They were supposed to patrol that. The Marines thought: Well, they're really not patrolling it. And the Marines got all their reports from the 5th Special Forces at Nha Trang rather than from A-101 which was the detachment at Lang Vei, and there was always like a two, three week time delay there, so they were getting history rather than intelligence. And the Special Forces regarded themselves as "special," and they were Army, and they were just different. And there was also a MACV Detachment in Khe Sanh Village of four Army people, MACV Detachment-4, which were advisors to the District Advisor there, and they also—there was a Captain, B. G. Clarke, C-L-A-R-K-E; he's still around. But the Army and the Marines just didn't get along, at all.

So when these Special Forces built their [new] camp around November, December, '67—it was finished at a cost of well over a million dollars. In the meantime, when the Siege started, Khe Sanh Village fell, so they should have known. In fact, I've talked with people who were there at the time—Sergeant Craig—he's [since] died also. He wrote some books. He was a Sergeant First Class there. I think he was the Team Sergeant of Lang Vei when the siege started. He told me. He said, "We knew when Khe Sanh Village fell, there was no link between the base [and our camp]—five miles of nothing." But the people at Nha Trang and at DaNang, they had what they called their "C Camp," their support camp at DaNang, and they felt apparently that, like Willoughby said, "We can take a regiment." But of course they couldn't patrol or anything because of the enemy being around. They should have—Craig says, "We should have abandoned the place." But they had just spent a million dollars and the C Camp had no place for them to go. Where would they go? So, for one reason or another—I think it's more of a Special Forces fault than the Marines'—the Marines really didn't control them. That's another thing: the Marines didn't control them; they were controlled by a different agency, by the C Camp. So this wasn't a "unified command" so to speak, and that created a lot of problems when the tanks came. Well, before the tanks came, the Laotian Battalion just inside the other side of Laos, BV-33, at Ban Houei Sane, was overrun by tanks on Highway 9, and the aerial observers told Lang Vei that—that there's tanks in the area. So it shouldn't have been such a surprise that they had tanks. And then the refugees from BV-33 came to Lang Vei instead of going westward to Savannakhet, which is where they should have gone; they came eastward because it's a shorter distance, to Lang Vei. And so the village of Lang Vei became greatly enlarged with all these—. Because BV-33 was not just a military base that battalion voluntaire or whatever the French term is, BV anyway; they used the French designation—was sort of like a National Guard [unit]. They had been at Tchepone, and had been displaced when Tchepone was overrun in May of '61, they went to Ban Houei Sane, and they were supplied from the Khe Sanh side by Air America flights. So that's probably why they came to us. But they were not only military, but they had wives and children and chickens and pigs and everything else. The husbands would be in the military, but it was their whole family thing. So all these refugees came at Lang Vei. And because of that there was a Lieutenant Colonel that came up from the C Company from DaNang to be at Lang Vei because the Commander of BV-33, Lieutenant Colonel Soulang [Phetsompho] was there, so they wanted a field grade officer. So that's why when Lang Vei was overrun there was an Army Lieutenant Colonel there. There's a fellow in Wisconsin here who was the XO of Lang Vei; his name is Ken Willcox. I can tell you some stories about that.

Kurtz: Is he still around?

Stubbe: He's still around. [break in tape]. What was his name now? His code name was CROSSBOW, but anyway, saw him wounded and just left him. It was "every man for himself" kind of thing. And he [Wilcox] was not too happy about that.

Kurtz: Let's hop to—a typical patrol that you went out with the Marines.

Stubbe: These were all either one platoon or what they called "company-minus," two platoons. And they were really not dangerous. Even though it was a vulnerable area, we knew if there was enemy coming in. We had aerial observers, we had people sniffers, recon patrols further out, and everything else. I mean there was always a danger, obviously. Any place in Vietnam was dangerous. So I would go out with these fairly large patrols. And we would usually leave early in the morning—one platoon or sometimes two platoons, and we would go out and stay out maybe six to eight hours.

Kurtz: What kind of mission—were you in a circle?

Stubbe: They would follow a route. I guess they would look for—if a recon team thought they found grass patted down or evidence like a footprint in a trail.

Kurtz: So the recon teams triggered the patrol's objectives?

Stubbe: Usually, or, there were other things that were happening, like an aerial observer would see something, or the signals intelligence people—well, they didn't become active until around September, October, I think. But there were other intelligence things happening there. Sometimes I think the infantry would go out just to go out. Every day they sent a platoon out. Even if they didn't have a reason to do it, they'd still scour the area. So it was an area search more than a point search.

Kurtz: How did the men feel about going on patrol every day?

Stubbe: Well, they were tired, they were haggard, they were sick a lot of them. It was around September that we started getting one of the two [annual] monsoons, and so there was a huge amount of rain, and it would be always in the 40s, because we were pretty high up, and you could never get dry and even growing up in Wisconsin and going to school in Minnesota for seven years, I can truthfully say I never felt colder than I did at Khe Sanh during that time. In fact, there was one time: I used to have a little plastic-covered Greek New Testament that I had in my shirt pocket. We had these big—the Marines call them "blouses," you didn't tuck them in; they overhang [the belt line]. They had big pockets, and I had it in one of the pockets. And one of the people had am old ammo box that they were burning increments and C-4 to keep warm in their tent. And I was so cold that I got so close to that that the cover of my Greek New Testament melted, and it was all crinkled. I still have it. So I was very cold. And also the guys would get what they called "immersion foot," only it would be all over their hands. This is like "dishwater hands," if you got water on the skin too long and it never gets dry. So they tried to dry their boots at night. They developed a silicone grease that they could put on their feet to keep them lubricated. Also, the elephant grass which is very tall, was very sharp and full of bacteria. And the guys, for some odd reason—I don't know why—but they would have their sleeves rolled up to their elbows—this was before the monsoons—I'm talking in the July, August, time-frame; they would get these cuts on the elephant grass which would form large, watery blisters. And the Corpsman would give them bacitracin, or we had these little merthyolate glass bottles in a cardboard [sleeve]

Stubbe: Sometimes there'd be elephant grass, which would be about as tall as we were, and the blades would be, O, a good half-inch wide, and they'd be stiff and had a lot of bacteria on the edges so they cut into the arms of the Marines. Around July, August, September, before the monsoons came, the Marines always wore their shirt sleeves rolled up to their elbows. So they'd get these huge, blistery infections—watery—that would never seem to heal, even though the Corpsman would give them bacitracin ointment, and they'd use merthyolate. Sometimes our battalion doctor, the Battalion Surgeon—his name was Harvey DeMaagd—he had been with the battalion from the beginning. They used to have jokes about him, because he seemed to enjoy working with boils, to lance them, and he'd take these knives there, and he had this reputation about being this gruesome doctor. Everyone liked him. But anyway, some guys would get broken limbs because these hills were so steep and there were stream beds with huge, slippery rocks, and people would fall. Sometimes going up a hill—these are some of the things I learned by being with them—how they had to live. They'd use their rifles to pull each other up the hill. Sometimes even the leaders, the Platoon Commanders, the Company Commander if it were a battalion minus—two platoons—would go out and they'd get lost, literally. You couldn't climb trees. There were trees, but they were so high. It was impossible to view hill tops from which you could get a resection by the compass to find out where you were. So they would call in registration rounds from the artillery, which could fire am eight-digit grid coordinate which, I think, puts a round within a one-meter—either a ten meter or a one meter square. I'm not sure, right now. But anyway, they'd fire a white phosphorus, which would be very prominent with its spikes of white, very beautiful, like a Fourth of July fireworks only on the land, and then they could determine from where it landed where they were. They call these registration rounds. The artillery didn't like to fire those things because they were expensive, I guess, and Marines didn't like to spend, waste, the money. But that's what they would do.

So the patrols were very physically exhausting. We'd get dehydrated very fast. Most everyone took two canteens full of water.

Kurtz: Did you ever fill the canteens while out on patrol?

Stubbe: Sometimes some guys would, in the streams, and they'd use the Halozone tablets.

Kurtz: Tasted like iodine?

Stubbe: Yeah. I never did that. The very first time I went to the Battalion Commander said I should go out to the hills—I went out to 881 [South] and I held this church service and was appalled at the clothing of these men. The text I used as the meditation was "The Prodigal Son," Luke 15, because it talks about the young son going off in a far-off country and leading a very miserable life. And I talked about that. And I remember the Company Commander, Captain John Raymond, got me aside after that, and he said, You shouldn't really talk about how life is [for the troops] unless you really know what's it's like. He said: We have a patrol leaving; you can go on it if you want. That's another one of the reasons I went. So I went on that patrol and we went down the north slope of 881-South, the very slope the people assaulted up during the Hill Battles. I found out that moving was not a matter of walking, but falling. I sort of kept falling forward because there were so many vines and it was so slick and so steep, and I just kept falling forward, and my canteens were clanking and becoming detached actually from my web belt. I'd pick them up and put them back on. And they [the patrol] were moving at a pretty good clip. And we got down to a stream, a rushing stream, got all wet, and went up another hill, and then they fired this registration round [actually, called in artillery to fire the registration round] because they didn't know where they were, I guess. And by that time I was thoroughly exhausted; it was about an hour into the patrol. I just felt I couldn't do one more step, but I knew I couldn't go back. There was no going back; there was no way to do that. So the only thing to do was to stay with them. They couldn't evacuate me, either, because they didn't want to bring in a helicopter; that would disclose their position. Furthermore, they just didn't want to have a medevac. So I just kept going, and about seven hours later—eight hours—by that time I was completely numb and completely out of water, and the Corpsman was giving me sips from his canteen. I only took a sip at a time. I learned the value of water—how precious and how wonderfully tasting water is. And we went through some bamboo thickets, where people had to hack with a machete. And on another patrol, off [Hill] 861, I came across some rather thick bamboo. It came in different sizes; some of it was almost two-inches in diameter. And one of the things I learned in [Camp] Pendleton before I went over, was that if you run out of water, you can always hack off a section of bamboo and there's water in the sections. So I thought, I'm going to try this. I really didn't need it. So I hacked off a section of bamboo above and below the notch so there was one whole section, and I carved a little hole in it and started drinking it. And I thought: Gee, this is evil-tasting water! This is just terrible. And I spit it out, and hacked it [the section] open. And here inside were all these white, maggot-like, like worms. I immediately thought: O, I'm going to die. This must be poison, and I swallowed one of them. Later on, I found out that those were probably the eggs of a bamboo viper snake.

Kurtz: Did you run across any snakes when you were out on patrols?

Stubbe: I never did. But there were cobras in the area. Every once and awhile a cobra would come into a bunker, and there were pythons—large pythons that recon patrols would—. One recon patrol—a fellow told me that they stopped and this one fellow sat on what he thought was a log and it started moving and he realized it was this python and he fainted—a recon Marine, all tough, rough. And they called in a medevac, and of course they denied it.

But that area was just full of wild life. I'm sure there were species that had not been identified yet. People talked about the odd birds. There was a Special Forces fellow [Jon Cavaini] eventually on Hill 950 [in 1971] that told me collected insects. There was such a variety. And there were monkeys, there were rock apes—.

Kurtz: Any tigers?

Stubbe: There were tigers, yes. There were tigers. I never saw one, but a fellow who's in recon [Lionel Guerra] just sent me a picture. On this patrol he snapped a picture of this tiger that was fifty feet away or something. There were elephants. The tigers were eating up some of the children from the Montagnard tribe. Yeah, we had it all there. It was a beautiful, beautiful area. It was like a Garden of Eden before the siege.

But there were these nefarious things: there were the bacteria, the sores, the leeches. These [leeches] were like about one-inch long and they'd attach one end to some herbal material, a vine or a brush or something and then they'd try to get on your skin, usually on your wrists, your neck, or even on—the Marines, unlike the Army, would blouse their trousers above their boots; the Army would usually put their trousers in their boots, I think if I remember right.

Kurtz: Yeah, that's correct.

Stubbe: And—.

Kurtz: That's because we were smarter!

Stubbe: Yeah. Well, the Marines bloused [their trousers], but there were still sox, but sometimes on that bare skin, the leeches would get there. They loved bare skin. In fact, this Harper Bohr I mentioned at the beginning, this real wonderful intelligence officer—one time he was considering getting out and going into the ministry, but he went on a patrol from 861 to 881. Sometimes when they'd change companies, instead of going by helicopter, they would walk out, and I accompanied some of those, walking from the base to 881-South. That was quite a—but by that time I was in pretty good shape. But the young guys weren't. I mean, I was in better shape than the 19 year-olds, even though I was, like 29.

Kurtz: Were you ever—did the North Vietnamese ever bother you when you went out?

Stubbe: No. I was going to say, when this Captain Bohr went out on one of these walking things [from the base to 881-South], he came back and said: Chaplain, I hate to say this but the leech went up the end of my penis. And that happened some times. And that was very dangerous, because they could crawl up. A lot of the Marines, if they got them on their arms, would smash them. And then, the head of the leech, of course, would be under the skin and form another infection, and then Doctor Demaagd would come out with his probes and try to drain the boil, but the only way you were supposed to take off leeches was with a match, a cigarette lighter or with the insect repellant—squirt it on, they'd swell up and drop off.

So it was very difficult living for those who stayed on the hills: they couldn't take showers, their skin—one time—we used to get a thing called a "SP Pack." Because these people were out there, they couldn't go to the PX and so they had these, about two-foot cube box that candy, cigarettes, pipe tobacco, chewing tobacco, ballpoint pens, writing pads, soap and all this kind of stuff. They'd get a SP pack on the hill maybe every once a week or something to supply the 250 Marines. And one time the Company Commander—in fact, it was John Raymond—came to me with a sandbag full of these little bars of Dial soap. And he said, "Chaplain, take these out to the missionaries in town; we can't use these."

Kurtz: In town?

Stubbe: Khe Sanh village

Kurtz: O, the Khe Sanh village missionaries, OK.

Stubbe: We had what they called the Wycliffe Bible Translators. They were a husband and wife, American, John and Carolyn Miller, M-I-L-L-E-R., of the Wycliffe Bible Translators.

Kurtz: And what were they translating?

Stubbe: They were translating the New Testament. But they were also translating—they were making readers. See, the Bru were illiterate; they had no written language. So what these people would do—and this was global; they'd go to the Philippines, Africa, whatever, they were all over the place. And they would stay with a tribe that had no written language and spend, maybe a good year, just living with them and listening and recording all the sounds because different languages have different sounds that we in English don't have. We know some of the European vowels like the German and the French, but sometimes there's clicking sounds, sometimes there's a guttural stop.

Kurtz: Tonal, like Vietnamese is tonal.

Stubbe: Vietnamese is tonal, yes, but the Montagnards are non-tonal; they're like us. But in any event, they would live in the same conditions [as the tribe people], and they had no salary either; they depended on donations, which always amazed me.

Kurtz; So how did you—this is a good transition from the Marines to Stubbe: Yes, I'll talk about the indigenous people in a minute. They [the Millers] had arrived there about the same time the Special Forces people did, in '62, the Bible translators. They lived in the Bru village. Bru is the mountain tribe that is in Khe Sanh. They weren't in Khe Sanh village itself at this point; they were in the Bru villages. And then eventually they did get a house in Khe Sanh village.

Khe Sanh village—I have to segue back here a little bit—Khe Sanh village was mainly Vietnamese. There were 1200 Vietnamese living in Khe Sanh village, and there were some 12,000 mountain tribesmen that lived in little villages around here. Now Khe Sanh village was formed originally back around 1918 there was a Frenchman named Poilane, and his first name was Eugene. He was in the First World War, and he was down in Saigon, and he retired without going back to France at what eventually became Khe Sanh; at that time it was nothing. And he was interested in botany, and he started a coffee plantation up there. He also had an experimental garden where he tried to see if different fruit trees would survive in that climate. And he worked for the French government in Saigon to collect botanical specimens. And he would go off by himself, even to what became the border with China and send specimens back down to Saigon. Anyway, to maintain his coffee plantation, the Bru were not suitable workers at the time, he thought, so he started importing Vietnamese from the east, and that's how the Vietnamese got there, and that's how Khe Sanh village started: these were the workers on his coffee plantation. And he, "Papa" Poilane, was killed in 1964, just a little east of Khe Sanh by the VC or whatever. I could go into that if you'd like, but that's not significant [here]. He had many children. In fact he had—here I'm talking off the top of my head, I might not be accurate—but I seem to remember he had something like five children after he was 62 or something like that. He married a French woman, Bordedeque, and one of his sons was named Felix. And Felix was born while he was collecting these botanical specimens; his wife gave birth by herself to Felix. So Felix was born in Khe Sanh—is the significant thing here. He was born there and died there. Felix was the one I knew because Eugene had already been killed. And Felix went back to France and got his wife, brought her back there to Khe Sanh, I think around '64, '65, something like that.

Kurtz: How did they live?

Stubbe: They build a nice, big house. It might have been the old guy that built it; I don't know. In fact, I'm sure it was the old guy that built it. So they had a big concrete house that had red bougainvillea outside. Felix had a little pet deer outside that he had in a barbed wire enclosure. And there was also a Vietnamese Episcopalian minister who was sent up there as a missionary to the Bru and he had a chapel in Khe Sanh village. And there were also some French nuns there who had a little coffee plantation that was originally part of Eugene's coffee plantation.

So there were the Millers and the Poilanes. Her name was Madeleine, and they had two little boys. She moved back to France. She's at Creteil, C-R-E-T-E-I-L, France, right now. She's fully retired now. Her two sons, Jon Marie and the other one—one teaches mathematics, and I don't know what the other one does. But they survived.

Kurtz: Was there any impact on Khe Sanh during the French wars?

Stubbe: Yes, Madeleine tells me that—or wrote me—that—I take that back, they must have arrived in '55, when the French were still there. They took refuge at a place near Lang Vei, at a place called Lao Bao, which is an old French prison. It later on became a Vietnamese prison—or, prior—it was a Vietnamese prison in 1830s and then a French prison later on, in the 1930s it was a French prison because Giap and his brother were prisoners there. But anyway, the French took refuge there at Lao Bao, and when the Viet Minh came through. And apparently—I haven't been able to track it down—but apparently there was a big French battle right around there, at that spot, but I just haven't been able to Kurtz: During the French?

Stubbe: After Dien Bien Phu, after they were withdrawing, apparently there was a big battle there and they lost a lot of people. So Madeleine and Felix and "papa" Eugene, and who knows what brothers and sisters were still there, up to about '64, and then he was killed, and she stayed, and by that time the Millers were there, and the French nuns were there, and then Father Poncet, P-O-N-C-E-T—he was killed during the battle at Hue City, and Pastor Loc was the Episcopalian missionary. Father Poncet became very haggard [during the monsoon in late '67]. I remember giving him a case of C-rations one time. He had a motorcycle and the Catholic chaplain during the siege, Walt Driscoll—Father Poncet left his motorcycle up there and Walt Driscoll used that motorcycle to get to the outlying battalion areas during the siege. There are pictures of him in the news clippings.

Kurtz: Did—what did these people think about the Americans being there?

Stubbe: Well—how can I say this—the only ones that I know of—Father Poncet—I gave him the C-rations. I never really got to talk with him. He had this thing—he couldn't talk English too well. They had these Americans with the Combined Action Company and the MACV Team, and he had a piece of cardboard; on one side he had all the common sins and on the other side he had all the common penances. So he had these Marines or soldiers come in and they had to point on one side to the sins they had committed and indicate how many times with their fingers, and he would turn it over and point to the penances they had to do and how many times with his fingers. He did come in one time in the bunker [mine] during the monsoon, and he was so weak. I gave him this case of C rations I had in the bunker because I was too lazy sometimes to walk to the mess hall [in all the rain], so sometimes I'd eat a C-ration, and I just gave it all to him because he needed them. He wanted some communion hosts, and when I saw how haggard he was I gave it to him. He put it on his mechanical bike, not the motor bike. He did have the motor bike also. But I did talk one time with the Poilanes. I went and stopped by their house. They gave me a little crème de menthe in water, and they had two German visitors. I don't know who they were or what they were, but they were visiting. I remember talking with them briefly. They were talking about how hard it was to get the coffee beans out at that time. Captain Clarke in the village was not too happy with them. He thought they were VC and said they can't be there unless they're paying to the VC, and they really weren't. I'm convinced in my heart of hearts that they were just as much victims as we were. They had taken out their coffee with the Air America flights at one time that would stop at the base.

Kurtz: How did the Marines feel about the Air America taking?

Stubbe: Well, they didn't see it that much. It wasn't clandestine [but] there were so many things that happened at the airstrip—. Occasionally the "black bird" would come. The "black bird" was the command and control C-130 for the SOG team, and it was painted black, a dull black, with a bullhead [fish] thing off the nose that was the Fulton Sky Hook. It had all this odd communications gear, and you couldn't get near the thing. I remember taking a picture of it one time. And sometimes the whole airstrip would get filled with little planes. One time we had two A-1s who were with the Air Force rescue people, and they had run out of gas. So we had different things that happened on the airstrip, so it was not unusual to—so we'd see and say, "O, it's CIA, a blackbird, or all these Vietnamese planes or helicopters doing some mission, putting in a big force into Laos or something.

Kurtz: Before the siege—this is my last question—before the siege did any big shots like Westmoreland show up there?

Stubbe: Yes. They all came. I never met them. I knew they were coming and I always managed to get away from the base; I didn't want to see them. I remember one time General Krulak came and he got a picture with the other, the Catholic Chaplain there at the time [Chaplain McElroy of 3/26]. I was out at one of the outposts. General Bruno Hochmuth would come up every once and awhile; he was the Third Marine Division Commander. General Walt would come up. These were very rare occasions. There was one time about the 8th, early November, '67, and I was on Hill 881 and we got a notice something like: Three Code 5s and four Code 4s or whatever the hell—I remember it was something with "Codes." And that had to do with Generals and they said they'd be out in 15 minutes—One Five minutes. And indeed, there was a General Alfred Starbird who was from Washington, D.C., a four-star Army General who was from the Defense Communications Planning Group, DCPG, the ones who would be putting in all the sensors. And I remember he went with the Captain at the time, who was Bruce Greene, and they walked over to the north side of the landing zone, and General Starbird was pointing north. And I'll never forget, they were both pointing towards the north, just the two of them. Then they walked back. Of course, with them came General Hochmuth and who else, probably General Metzger, the Brigadier, and maybe some Army General too; I don't know. Right after that was Marine Corps Birthday when Colonel Lownds came up and said "You all will soon be in the American history books." I remember that. So occasionally Generals would come.

Kurtz: Well, let's shut down for today.

[Interview of 15 February 2006]

Kurtz: Today is February 15th, 2006. My name is Jim Kurtz and I'm interviewing Ray Stubbe for the second time, not because we didn't [?] the first time but there was so much information. And today, for Ray, we're going to set the scene at Khe Sanh from the geographic and the physical standpoint, geological, talk about the hills which fits into the geography and all of that, and some of the actions that he's familiar with before the siege, then we're going to go through the siege and from there we will get Ray's feelings about it. So Ray, why don't you start and tell us about the physical setting around Khe Sanh.

Stubbe: OK. Khe Sanh: I guess the thing that sticks out in my mind most prominently is its beauty. Many people have described it as almost enchanted, a place of spiritual dimension and impact. And these were not particularly religious people that are saying these things. But you could not help but feel a kind of spirit of the place. It was so beautiful. It was breath-takingly beautiful. The soil was a deep reddish, red-brownish clay, and thousands of shades of green, blue skies with clouds, mountains, not snow-capped of course, but nevertheless sharply rising hills and mountains. There were animals in the area; it was almost like being in a zoo. Most of us didn't see them all the time, but our reconnaissance teams that would go out commonly encountered tigers, python snakes. Even our infantry patrols would encounter large deer-like creatures called "kouprey," which were almost like caribou. There were exotic birds. One fellow back in '71, an Army fellow named Jon Cavalaini, who received a Medal of Honor when his outpost on one of the hills was overrun in June of '71, had spent several months prior to that collecting insects of various types. The area—it was like a primeval forest, undisturbed, and just with sheer beauty. And it was also cooler, because we were above sea level. Khe Sanh Combat Base itself was over 400 meters high and it was sort of a level place, and everything else was higher. So it was a relief for those coming from the more populated areas in the east. Also we had a sense of isolation which, prior to the siege, was a good thing. We were isolated from inspections from Generals and those kinds of people who would come in and pester us. We felt we were sort of off by ourselves. It was really a wonderful place to be.

