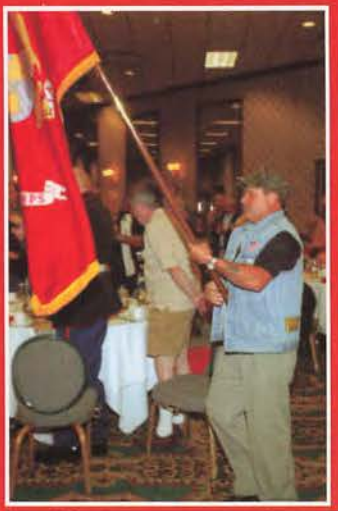
SPECIAL EDITION KHE SANH VETERANS
ANNUAL REUNION RENO NEVADA
COVERAGE STARTS ON PAGE 63



President's Message

I would like to thank all those who contributed their time and effort in making the reunion in Reno Nevada an enormous success. I believe everyone had a great time, especially the un-named member who won $ 25,000 at the Keno game. We had a lot of first time attendees, several of which joined the Khe Sanh Veterans.

An election was held for the position of Member At Large which resulted in the election of David Smith, Dale Pack & Leland Upshaw. A big thank you to outgoing Members At Large: Cliff Treese & Dan Fisher for their contributions. Dan Fisher moved over and was voted in as the Chairman of the newly formed Scholarship Committee. Monies to fund the scholarship fund will come from the sales at the Khe Sanh PX, (Silent Auction) and from individual donations. Bill Jayne & Richard Noyes have already contributed to the fund. Richard sent his contribution in the Memory of Robert "Doc" Topmiller. Details of applying for funds and eligibility will be ready in time for the forthcoming Denver Reunion

Vice President

To All my Khe Sanh Brothers and their families: This past reunion was the best reunion we've ever had. I want to thank Tommy Eichler, Russ & Cathy Turner, and Bob and Rita Moxley for doing a great job at the Registration table and for helping make this reunion be the best ever. I also want to thank Russ Turner for putting in his time at the PX table with me, helping out with sales; it made my job a little easier. I hope everyone will keep up the support of the PX throughout the year. I am going to add a lot of new stuff this year to the PX and I hope you are as excited as I am. Don't forget to pay your dues this year to help pay for the Red Clay Magazine. Next year we are going to Denver, and I hope to see you all there.

Reunion Committee:

The 2009 Khe Sanh Veteran reunion will be held on 19-27 July 2009, in Denver Co. It will be held at the :
Marriott Denver Tech Center located at 4900 S Syracuse Street, Denver CO 80237
Phone # 303-779-1100

Room Rates $ 89.00 For Single Or Double
There is a 14.85 % State Tax
There is No Fee For Parking
As we discussed at the reunion there is no easy way to get to the Hotel from the airport. The bus fee is 13.00 per person one way. We could find no other form of transportation at a lower cost. There is a Hertz Rental Agency at the hotel so we may be able to rent a few vans and some of the early arrivals could volunteer to pick members up. We will have to see if we can work something out. It is a beautiful hotel and all the rooms have been newly remodeled. They offer amenities: Heated Pools, an atrium large enough to seat the entire membership, a large outdoor lounge that will stay open until there are no customers (for you Late nighters), salon, health spas, and the public transportation to downtown Denver is 5 minutes from the Hotel (See Enclosed Brochure).

Many of the rooms are equipped with a balcony so I suggest you smokers make early reservations since they will go fast, and Denver is a Non Smoking State. You can smoke on the balconies.

OBIT

USMC Bravo Btry 1/13

Ron Shouse has informed me that he has decided to turn the property where his good friend Phil Mineer suffered a tragic accident, into a memorial park bearing his name. It will be available to anyone just seeking a little peace and quiet, and a place to rest. Phil's wife agreed with his decision seeking to honor Phil, not mourn him. Khe Sanh Chaplain Owen Matthews conducted a heart wrenching memorial service at the Reno Reunion for Phil. Many of his friends and fellow members of Bravo Btry 1/13 were in attendance. Phil was a fun loving guy and will be sorely missed by the Khe Sanh Veterans.

September 2, 2008

We are here today to bid farewell to Bob Topmiller and in doing so, attempt to cope with the unimaginable tragedy and bewildering circumstances of his passing. The meaningfulness of Bob's life is measured in as many ways as the people it touched. He was a husband, father, grandfather and brother and a son, who lost his mother in his early teens and whose father passed away less than a year ago.

When I met Bob, during the first weeks of the 1968 siege of Khe Sanh, he was fresh out of Navy corpsmen school; yet had already witnessed more carnage and human suffering than any 19-year old American boy should be called upon to do. Bob was twice wounded by shrapnel ministering to the wounded at Khe Sanh. As such, it would be easy to explain last week's tragedy by concluding that he also received a mortal wound to his spirit -- and just did not succumb until last Wednesday. However, I believe it would be a great disservice to oversimplify his extraordinary life in that way.

Navy corpsmen are called "Doc," by the Marines they fight to save. Yet, that seemingly trivial monosyllable carries with it volumes of respect for the dedication and bravery of these individuals. To be called "Doc" is one of the highest accolades in the Corps. Therefore, I will henceforth refer to my friend by that title.

Just last month at the Khe Sanh Veterans reunion, Doc reunited with Rick Noyes, a former Recon Marine at Khe Sanh. Rick, who was wounded while patrolling outside the base, would be the first combat injury Doc treated. Strangely enough, of all the hundreds of wounded who would eventually be carried to the Regimental Aid Station, Rick and Doc had been high school friends in Cincinnati, and up to that point had been unaware each was billeted just a hundred yards from the other. Though Doc initially found my lame attempts at humor during the siege to be inappropriate, which they were, we soon became great friends. When he left Vietnam five months later, a large group of us Marines attended his going away party near Phu Bai and paid him the ultimate honor by singing Anchors Away (though not having taken the time to learn the song, we replaced every lyric other than the chorus "Anchors away my boys" with "la-la-la.")

I would not see Doc again for another 37 years – but he was in good hands. Upon returning to Great Lakes Naval Station, he met Terri Nicks, a fellow corpsman. Though Terri had not gone to Vietnam, she was spared none of the wretchedness of treating wounded, for many of the most severely wounded, burned and mentally unhinged victims of the fighting were medivaced directly to that distant hospital. It was Doc's great good fortune that they fell in love and married; because Terri could share some of the heartbreak and pain of that war with him. Sadly, she too would be forever haunted by her patient's screams of pain and the helplessness of not being able to heal them all. Terri would go on to give life to four wonderful children, but in a very real sense, she gave life to Doc as well -- probably decades of life – decades throughout which other lives, like my own, would be so profoundly changed for the better. Without Terri as the anchor in his life, Doc may have drifted away before many in this room today would have ever had the opportunity to know him. Doc himself recognized this in the Preface to his recently published memoir Red Clay on My Boots, when he expressed his gratitude to her in these words: "Most important, my wife Terri, who has fought the battle of Khe Sanh by my side for close to 40 years."

With the support of his family, Bob left two decades of retail marketing behind and entered the halls of academia; earning his doctorate in history here at UK in 1998. He went on to become an inspiring university professor, who possessed a prodigious intellect and was fearless in the pursuit of truth. As his friend and fellow Khe Sanh veteran, Steve Orr, commented recently, he never spent even a short amount of time with Doc when he did not come away from the encounter having learned something new. I have had the opportunity to come to Kentucky each of the last three years and speak to history classes at EKU. There I was able to observe Doc in the classroom. His serious-minded and accomplished students gave him enormous pride; though he never stopped trying to reach them all, and, I think, recognized that even the more unremarkable kids were taking something away that would forever change the way they viewed their world. As the 19th century historian, Henry Brooks Adams, once wrote: "A teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops." Of all that he accomplished in his life, this may well be Doc's principal legacy.

Doc's numerous visits abroad, living with Terri in Korea, and later traveling alone, more than a dozen times, throughout South East Asia, not only expanded his student's horizons in a unique and personal way, but also his own. He soon became an admirer of the teachings of the Buddha, with their focus on the pursuit of enlightenment through searching and self-discovery. Doc endured a highly emotional return to Khe Sanh alone in 1996, when most of the terrain features, recognizable to those who served there were still visible. As his awareness grew, he befriended numerous monks and nuns, writing The Lotus Unleashed, about the Buddhist Peace movement 1964-1966. A derivative of this was discovering the incredible number of children suffering from the residual effects of herbicides during the war. He and Terri have sacrificed in order to provide an ongoing endowment to a facility, The School of the Beloved, in Hue. Steve, Doc and I visited there last December, and the happiness of those poor children, whose profound neurological disorders would otherwise condemn then to lives of unspeakable degradation -- is a powerful testament to human kindness.

Doc also became an active supporter of human rights, especially the religious rights of persecuted Buddhists in Vietnam. His voyage of enlightenment led him to champion the cause of world peace, and his writings to that end earned him the international Peace History Society's prestigious Charles DeBenedetti Prize in 2007. His quest for knowledge and enlightenment led him to some disturbing places as well. His interview with survivors of the 1968 My Lai Massacre, as described in Red Clay on My Boots, is as unremittingly painful to read as anything now in print. Before long, Doc was traveling up the Mekong River to the killing fields of Cambodia. I will never forget his despondency while describing Phenom Penh, a city run by murderous thugs and teeming with starving families and a seemingly endless parade of amputee beggars, whose injuries were caused by the unbelievable amount of unexploded ordnance still lying about from the war. It was a harrowing and depressing experience; one which took him months to recover from physically, spiritually and emotionally.

Earlier this year Doc ventured further up the Mekong, into regions of northern Thailand and the Golden Triangle, where bandits, insurgents and drug lords held sway; a place where few native Thias, let alone a single American traveler, would dare go. So driven was Doc to continue upriver, he made the very dangerous decision to enter Burma (Myanmar) and observed living conditions in the world's most closed and oppressed society. "The worst I've ever seen," he later said. Had Doc been captured by the military forces of that paranoid regime, it is unlikely he would have ever been heard from again. Somewhat ominously in retrospect, it was here Doc's passage up what the locals had for thousands of years called the "The Great Mother River" -- came to its conclusion.

Life often imitates art and it is hard not to see the similarities between Doc's ever more perilous ascents up the Mekong River and that of the protagonist Marlowe in Joseph Conrad's Heart of Darkness (or for those who prefer film to books, Martin Sheen in the Vietnam war movie Apocalypse Now). Only Doc's journey was not fiction.

Ironically, it is the fictional character, Marlow, who provides a most valuable insight: "It is when we try to grapple with another man's intimate need," Marlowe said, "that we perceive how incomprehensible are the beings that share with us the sight of the stars and the warmth of the sun."

Doc became increasingly frustrated by what he perceived to be his failure to inform a generally apathetic and self-absorbed American public about what he now so intimately knew to be the consequences of that war. This was particularly true in what he felt was the shameful treatment disabled U.S. military veterans received from our own government. To help remedy that, Doc was nearing completion of a book detailing the history of the Veteran's Administration, and their systematic efforts over the years to deny benefits to vets suffering from the effects of nuclear testing, Agent Orange, PTSD and Gulf War Syndrome.

As a result of this frustration, Doc's courageous pursuit of the truth seemed to take on a redemptive quality. It was as if he had decided to shoulder for us the peril and pain of learning these things. He would not avert his eyes, so we might. He would absorb and endure, for as long as he could, the guilt and remorse at how that war, so long ago, had inflicted such unrelenting human suffering. He would spare us the horror of the truth.

I discussed this hypothesis with him a few months ago. He pondered it for a few moments and then said, "Mike, that's just your beer talking." Yet, I think I caught a flicker of acknowledgment in his eyes, and was suddenly gripped by a heartbreaking reality. Then, the profoundest of all biblical absolutes popped into my mind: "Greater love has no man than this, that he lay down his life for a friend." Bob Topmiller was my hero. How could he not have been? In the short time I had to know him again, he restored within me a belief in the nobility of human character. His extraordinary intellectual gifts and his confidence in the empirical process were always tempered by a calm spirituality, which caused even a cynical, old pagan like myself to recognize there might be a place in this universe for both.

I am eternally grateful for that; for the honor of his friendship; and for the simple pleasure of his company.

I was honored to be a part of the final tribute to 'Doc" yesterday in Lexington, Ky. The visitation/ Memorial Service was well attended, overflowing into the isles.

Those who attended from the KSVA :
Ron Rayner from MI (KSVA Chaplain)(A-1/26)
Rick Noyes & Wife from OH (B 3rd Recon),
Jack Haigwood and Wife from OH (CBMU-301)
Mike Archer from NV (Comm 26th Marines)
Steve Orr from ID (Comm 26th Marines)

Tributes were given by his daughter, Jamie, Rick Noyes & Mike Archer, a former student of Doc's and by Todd Harch, a co worker from the College (EKU), where Doc recently retired from.

The American Legion Post (Man-O-War Post 8),Honor Guard, commanded by John Kalbfleisch, did an outstanding job at the grave site. with the final farewell activities.

A little get together was then held at Doc's favorite pub, right across the street from his house. It was well attended also.
Rest In Peace "Doc" Topmiller

PS. Two of the 3 sons of Doc were Marines ,serving in the Gulf War. Terri, his wife was a Navy Corpsman, serving at the Great Lakes Naval Hospital, where Doc met her, married her, and spent the last 39 yrs together.

CHAPLAINS CORNER

I wish to thank Chaplain Owen Matthews for nominating me and President Tom Eichler, for appointing me to the position of Chaplain for the Khe Sanh Veterans. I believe it to be both an honor and a privilege to serve such an outstanding organization. It is my goal to write an article for the general good of the membership for each edition of RED CLAY. I certainly recommend to everyone that can, to attend next year's reunion in Denver. The reunion this year in Reno has made a tremendous impact on my life and my view of my role in the war. My heart was warmed by the fellowship of the people who shared life-changing experiences with me 40 years ago. We are "Eternally Bonded".

The Real Problem Concerning Post-Traumatic-Stress-Disorder
By Ron Rayner Chaplain:
Khe Sanh Veterans, Pontiac, MI Fire Dept., and Vietnam Veterans of America Chapter 133 Oakland County, MI

It is front-page news when a police officer, firefighter, marine, soldier, airman, sailor, or coast guard personnel risks his or her life to save a comrade or a perfect stranger. There is an abundance of evidence that there is courage and self sacrifice among the United States military personnel and community emergency responders in America.

In many cases when there is exposure to extreme danger or horrific images and no proper counseling afterward, something called post-traumatic-stress-disorder develops. As I am not a doctor, I will define PTSD as mental wounds from unusual situations. (Google PTSD or go to eagleprep.com for full definition)

The real problem with P.T.S.D. is not that people are mentally wounded from a traumatic life-threatening event and suffer from Post-Traumatic-Stress-Disorder. The real problem is that most of the victims are in denial and will not seek help for this life threatening disability. These courageous individuals who risk their lives for others cannot accept that they may also need help from a mental health professional. The minds of military personnel and emergency responders are wounded each time they see or handle things like maimed friends, dead babies, and mass casualties. Near death and extremely frightening experiences are also on the list of events that can wound a person mentally. The effects are accumulative. Long service and many mental wounds increase the possibility of PTSD.

I know that I personally was in denial. I always thought I was a tough guy and didn't need help. Being tough is definitely part of the job that these occupations demand. But what I have learned and what these brave people have to realize is that mental wounds can ruin your life and kill you just like a physical wound. These individuals who spend much time in harms way commonly accept depression, divorce and estrangement from their children as occupational hazards.

I have PTSD. I was diagnosed in 2000, 32 years after Vietnam and 6 years after retiring from the fire service. The only reason I am getting help for my problem is that when I went to my county Veterans Services officer to fill out the forms to receive hearing aids, he looked at my combat record and convinced me to seek help for PTSD. My story on how I handle this problem is on my website at eagleprep.com.

While taking chaplain classes sponsored by The International Fellowship of Chaplains in 2003, I was shocked to learn that over 170,000 Vietnam veterans had committed suicide by 1987. This is almost triple the deaths that had occurred in the war itself. In November 2004 a firefighter friend of mine committed suicide. He was in denial right to the end. I also knew two firefighters who drank themselves to death. Congress is investigating the numerous suicides among today's US military.

My secular purpose as a chaplain has been to convince veterans and emergency responders who may have PTSD to seek a mental health care professional's opinion on their mental health.

Just like diabetes, without daily care, PTSD can be a killer. I believe that unlike diabetes, it is contagious. (This is debatable in the mental health community) The people that risk their lives for complete strangers on a regular basis quite often infect their families with this mental heath problem. It is a strange phenomenon that people, who will give their families almost anything material they ask for, will not make a visit to a mental health provider to insure the mental health of their family.

One of the symptoms of PTSD is outbursts of anger at little insignificant things. I used to accept my bad temper as a normal condition as my grandfather and my father had certain things that set them off also. Duh! My grandfather was a police officer for over 20 years and my father was a firefighter for 35 years. The family legend has always been that a bad temper was just hereditary.

The Khe Sanh Veterans 40th Anniversary Reunion of the Siege of Khe Sanh was held July 28-August 3, 2008 in Reno, Nevada. A recurring theme during the reunion was veterans who were being treated for PTSD trying to get the other veterans to seek help for PTSD.

A friend of mine who was in my machine gun squad in Vietnam came to see me at the reunion. We hadn't seen each other since December 1968. We talked and discovered we had similar lives. He had been a police officer and I had been a firefighter. We both had lost our tempers more than once and were involved in physical altercations. We both had suffered from road rage. We both had problems relating to our families. Emotional numbness also seems to be a problem with the both of us. We both have recurring suicidal thoughts.

This Marine on June 5, 1968 exposed himself to enemy fire and rescued a wounded Marine from extreme danger. He received a Navy Commendation Medal for that. On June 7, 1968 he helped rescue two marines in a similar situation. He received a Bronze Star for that. I believe this same Marine would risk his life to help someone today if the situation presented itself.

All I am asking my friend and all other veteran and active duty military personnel and emergency responders to do, is to be evaluated by a mental health care professional for the possibility of PTSD. It can't hurt and can only help. I can almost guarantee that no one will be shooting at them on their trip to the clinic. Sometimes the seemly easiest tasks in life are the hardest to accomplish.

A part of PTSD therapy is a technique called "thought stopping." When a troubled individual identifies that his or her thoughts are headed in the wrong direction he or she should call a halt to the negativity. They may even yell "STOP" out loud. They must then replace those thoughts as described by Marcy Blochowiak in her book No Glass Ceiling, Just Blue Sky from Simple Truths.

"One powerful technique that can stir your emotions and change the way you feel is to use 'emotional triggers.' Our emotions are powerful motivators

IN MEMORY OF A GOOD FRIEND

By Larry McCartney

Robert Marvin Reed, Sr.
E Co 2/26
Born: November 29, 1948
Died: August 14, 2007

As with the many of the rest of us, every year at this time I experience "anniversary dates" which trigger memories, today is one of them. Forty (40) years ago today, Thursday, March 7, 1968, the experience I have come to know as Khe Sanh ended for me, I was injured and medivaced; first to the Khe Sanh Combat Base, then to Quang Tri, Da Nang, and finally Camh Ranh Bay. I was extraordinarily fortunate though, I was not seriously injured and was hospitalized for just three (3) weeks, I was released from the hospital on Thursday, March 28, 1968 and made my way back to Echo Company and Hill 861-A, by Sunday, March 31, 1968. It just wasn't the same as before. Probably because there was a "hole" in time, a three (3) week hiatus during which I lived like a normal human being.

This year the "anniversary dates" have been particularly poignant. This year has been more emotional than most for a lot of reasons, not the least of which is because of the time span, it's been forty (40) years now. Where has the time gone? However, it's also been poignant because it's the first anniversary of the "Tet Offensive" since I lost my dear friend, my mentor, my hero, Robert Marvin (Bob or Bo) Reed.

While I first met Bob Reed on Hill 861-A, I didn't get to really know him until the Summer of 1968, when he became my squad leader. We became inseparable friends, a friendship that transcended the years. Being in touch with Bob through the years helped me immeasurably; particularly during the yearly Tet anniversary. Thanks to Bob I knew I wasn't alone. I knew others were experiencing the exact same feelings as was I and I knew others cared. Thanks to Bob I knew others were continuing to do their best and make the most of the opportunities the good Lord gave them.

It was tough for Bo because he physically suffered so much from the effects of his many wounds, as well as his Agent-Orange related illnesses, but he never gave up and he never gave in. Like the rest of us he suffered more than a few setbacks in life, but he kept striving to achieve, he kept a positive attitude and he led by example. To the very end he was a United States Marine. I've been fortunate to maintain contact with Harrison Reed, one of Bob's sons, and Harrison recently sent me the following poems written by his fiancée, who helped care for Bob up to the very end. Thank you Harrison and thank you Alana!

He whispers, he speaks, he tells his story,
He laughs, he smiles,
Memories fade as quickly as they came,
He's trying to hide fear.

He lays there sleeping, dreaming,
His chest rises,
His breathing slows,

He knows these dreams will end soon,
Even when he's at peace, he's terrified.

Bathing, soaking everything up,
His eye wanders,
His heart searches,
Thoughts pass through his mind,
The danger is real and he knows it.

We stand there being strong like he always was,
He cried for us, never for himself.
He's learned to let go,
As the ashes scatter across the field,
The danger is gone, his battle is over.

He watches us now, waiting and guarding,
We were his life and he was ours,
He's happy now, he's safe,
He enters our dreams now and is a memory never to be forgotten,
But he's not scared now, he's finally at peace.

© Alana DeHart

I miss him,
I need him,
I feel him,
He's here.
I can't stop,
I don't want to forget,
My hero, my soldier, my Marine.

He visits,
I see him,
I sense him,
He's home now,
But where is home?
I want to be with him,
My hero, my soldier, my Marine.

It's all starting to fade,
His laugh,
His voice,
His face,
It hurts to know he'll never come home.
He struggled, he fought so hard!
My hero, my soldier, my Marine.

They may have forgotten,
Your medals,
Your war,
Your life,
But we can't and we won't,
You are our world; this is our fight now,
My father, my hero, my soldier, my Marine.

OBIT

My father, Dale Lee, a member of Khe Sanh Veteran's Organization, passed away on 03/21/2008.

Dale Lee
Born: 7/31/1946, Vernal, Utah
Death: 3/21/2008, Moab, Utah

Dale Lee, 61, passed away suddenly on Friday, March 21, 2008, at Allen Memorial Hospital in Moab, Utah.

Eulogy

Dale was born in Vernal, Utah on July 31,1946, the 6th son of Glenn and Marie Lee. His five brothers were generally good to him and he idolized them because of the athletics they were involved with. Dale grew up in Vernal and married Patsy Ann Colobella in May 1964. They had one daughter, Cindy Rae Lee. They were divorced in 1966. He married his dear, loving Sharron Lea Sharp Feb. 18, 1967. She stood by him through "thick and thin," good and bad times. Sharron was always there for him. Sharron was his wife, friend, and lover. They had two wonderful and diverse children, Tracey Dickerson and Benjamin Lee.

Dale joined the U.S. Army in March 1966 and became a Special Forces "Green Beret" and served in Vietnam. During his time on earth he was always proud of his accomplishments as a Green Beret. Vietnam did rule his life though. Dale worked most of his life in the oil fields. He started in the summer of 1962, and other than the three year Army stint and a short tour of working in Southern California, he worked over 40 years in the "patch" as they call it, retiring as a nuclear safety officer. Most of that time he was in the employ of Halliburton.

Dale love hunting, the Rim of Diamond - especially early in the morning and toward evening, and music by the Doors, Beatle's Sgt. Pepper Lonely Heart Club Band, Pink Floyd, Jefferson Airplane, Bee Gees, Johnny Cash, Roy Orbison, Bread, Eagles, Marty Robbins.

He is survived by two daughters: Cindy Nelson of Rock Springs, WY; Tracey Dickerson of LaSal, UT; a son Benjamin Lee of Albuquerque, NM; Four brothers: Dennis, George, Art, Morgan; and five grandchildren. He was preceded in death by his parents, wife Sharron, and a brother Larry.

Today was a day like no other. I, Darlene Pedrick watched my loving husband of 27 years pass in the comfort of our home. A very long battle with hopes of a liver transplant, since going on a list in 1998, ended today for Him. With all of your Prayers, they gave him wings to fly tonight, home to his mom dad and brother. I thank you ! I am going to take some time to set up a grave site service, but I just wanted to share with you all. You have listened to me go on and on for so long and now his final chapter has end. KHE SANH CORPSMAN TO PHYSICIAN

Walter F. Schlech III, M.D.
By: Craig W. Tourte

It was just a short notation on the "View Our Guest Book" section of the public web site, "Khe Sanh Veterans Home Page." Nothing special really, one of many posted every day by various visitors, including Veterans of the Vietnam conflict, those who had served at the combat base, students, family members of Veterans and little memorandums from the public who wanted to make a comment relating to Khe Sanh or the Vietnam War.

The writer identified himself as Wally Schlech, MD, Nova Scotia, Canada. Under comments was the notation: HQ Btry (1/13) Jan-Aug 1968. Since I had served with the same unit at the Marine Corps Combat Base of Khe Sanh from July 1967 to April 1968, I was naturally curious about Doctor Schlech and contacted him.

Wally Schlech told me he had served as a Hospital Corpsman at Khe Sanh. During the ensuing years he has contacted several he had served with including Corpsman (Doc) William Ballew, and was aware that Lieutenant Hal Lasker, the now deceased battalion surgeon, had become a psychiatrist in New York. I was familiar with Doc Ballew and Doctor Lasker as they treated me for a rather serious medical condition at Khe Sanh. I have since spoken to Doc Ballew and thanked him for taking such good care of me. Mr. Schlech continued that he has also spoken to Gunny Klidonas (Sergeant Major James Klidonas) whose shoulder he treated before taking the Gunny to the air field for medical evacuation.

Wally Schlech said he left a small New England college and joined the United States Navy where he served his military tour as a Navy Corpsman at Khe Sanh. When he returned home he monitored the events of the Vietnam War through the Navy Times. He noted that Lance Corporal William Robert Yaskanich was killed in action on February 23, 1969; a Marine Mr. Schlech had served with at Khe Sanh. Mr. Schlech said that Yaskanich had received a Navy Commendation with V for running communications lines at Khe Sanh during the Siege.

Wally Schlech returned home and went back to college in 1969. While attending a social event he inadvertently became engaged in conversation with Jim Munroe who had just returned from Vietnam. It was during that conversation Mr. Schlech learned that Jim Munroe had also served with Headquarters Battery of the First Battalion, Thirteenth Marine Regiment. Munroe told Wally Schlech that he had joined the Thirteenth Marines in Da Nang after the Siege and had in fact served with Corporal Yaskanich who had been killed in action. Jim Munroe discussed the events leading to the death of Lance Corporal William Yaskanich, describing how the unit had been overrun, how he and Yaskanich had jumped into a hole together when a Chicom grenade was thrown in and exploded killing Yaskanich. The injuries to Munroe ended his combat tour in Vietnam, which was why he was attending college and subsequently the event that evening. Mr. Schlech told me Jim Munroe is now the Very Reverend James Munroe, Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, MA., a long way from a foxhole in

L/CPL DADO, ME & SCHLECH

Vietnam.

Wally Schlech related that he lives in Halifax, and describes it as a small community. He recalls the day he happened to meet Dick Murtha an attorney from New York who had moved to Halifax. During their conversation Dick Murtha revealed that he had been an infantryman with the Third Battalion, Twenty-Sixth Marine Regiment and had also served at Khe Sanh. Mr. Schlech believes he and Mr. Murtha may be the only Khe Sanh Veterans currently residing in Canada.

This issue has been discussed by many who served at Khe Sanh, I thought it was interesting that Doctor Schlech mentioned it to me and I certainly understand how that event would leave an impression on his memory. One of the things that bothered Wally Schlech was that since Headquarters Battery was the Regimental Headquarters, those going to various Thirteenth Marine Regimental units had to fly into Khe Sanh as transients, and then report to units elsewhere. He recalls a billeting tent near Headquarters which took a direct hit from a 152mm artillery shell. Corpsman Schleck was called to treat the wounded and tend to the dead and remembers how tragic it was, as so many had just arrived in country and were waiting orders to go elsewhere.

I noted that Donald Saunders was killed in action at Khe Sanh, who was a member of our small detachment and recalled that incident to Doctor Schlech. He remembered that Donald's body was brought to him on a small cart, and that an 82mm round impacted near Saunders who took shrapnel up under this armpit where his flak jacket didn't cover. The Corpsmen tried to insert a chest tube but tragically Donald Saunders died quickly. I told Mr. Schlech that I had spoken to Saunders just minutes before he was killed and that I packed up Donald's few personal belonging in preparation for them being sent home to his family.

(Corpsman Wally Doc Schlech) Walter F. Schlech III Medical Doctor, is currently an internist and infectious disease specialist and a full time faculty member at a medical college in Canada and now a member of the Khe Sanh Veterans Association. Welcome home and to your Khe Sanh Veterans Association Doc Schlech.

Craig.

As a PS I am ongoing in my rehab. I do not intend attending the reunion in Reno. I found this picture which was taken at our new location in Quang Tri of Doc Ballew.

Doc, just wondering how you're getting along and if your going to make the reunion in Reno this year. I was reading the guest page on the Khe Sanh Veterans Home page then I came across a post by Wally Schlech. He noted that he was a corpsman with HQ 1/13, did you know him?. He identified himself as an MD living in Canada now. Hope this finds you well.

THE 30TH.

By Craig W. Tourte

I was reading a little article describing "closure" for families and I was reminded of the POST Steve made many months ago about his friend telling Steve to "just get over it" relating to the memory of those who were lost. I hate that word "closure," it's like closing a book, the word is just too darn simple and it is usually said by those who will never understand.

Here we all are some forty years later, still in pain, still remembering the faces, the smells, tastes and fear. Heck, we still remember the weather and the time of day, but I think worst of all, we still feel the loss. No, loss is not a strong enough word to describe that gut kicking, heart pounding emotion we feel, when we remember those who were with us. I think one of the difficulties is, we just can't describe the pain to someone else, to someone who thinks we should just find "closure," who wants us to, "just get over it."

I have talked to many people over the years about their hardships, love, death, jobs, relationships, children, divorce, and illnesses. Some I have admired, some were not so admirable. In all of those years and in all of those occasions I have never heard anyone outside of our family here, use the words that Steve used to describe the men he knew. "...honor of knowing...,' and "...acts of courage..." and not once have I ever heard the use of the word "closure" used when those events or memories of those fine, brave men who were discussed amongst us. I fear that some families have gained closure, perhaps the names of those who died in battle are never spoken anymore, perhaps the weeds grow thick about the tombstone, perhaps no one recalls, remembers or even cares about their memory. Some may have just gotten over it.

But we remember, we remember that it was an honor to know them and we remember their acts of courage and we'll never have closure.

Thanks Steve

WHEN YOU LEAVE THE JOB

By Sam Messer
CBMU-301 (Seabees)

The following is how this Seabee feels about those I lived with while in the service and especially at Khe Sanh.

When a good Veteran leaves the "job" and retires to a better life, many are jealous, some are pleased, and yet others who may have already retired, wonder. We wonder if, they know what they are leaving behind, because we already know. We know, for example, that after a lifetime of camaraderie that few experience, it will remain as a longing for those past times. We know in Military life there is a fellowship which lasts long after the uniforms are hung up in the back of the closet. We know even if he throws them away, they will be on him with every step and breath that remains in his life. We also know how the very bearing of the man speaks of what he was and in his heart still is. These are the burdens of the job. You will still look at people suspiciously, still see what others do not see or choose to ignore and always will look at the rest of the Military world with a respect for what they do; only grown in a lifetime of knowing. Never think for one moment you are escaping from that life. You are only escaping the "job" and merely being allowed to leave "active" duty.

So what I wish for you is that whenever you ease into retirement, in your heart you never forget for one moment that "Blessed are the Peacemakers for they shall be called children of God," and you are still a member of the greatest fraternity the world has ever known.

Not unlike a lot of other Vietnam veterans in general, and with Khe Sanh Veterans in particular, do I have Survivor's Guilt. For me it's intense, particularly so during this time of year. Why did I survive? Have I lived an honorable life? Have I minimized my mistakes and corrected those which I could? Have I made the most of the opportunities I've been given that others never had? Have I done right by the memories of my fallen comrades? Would they be proud of what I've accomplished with the time they never had? They're unanswerable questions. We live with them. We don't whine or complain; well most of us don't at least, after all, with but a few exceptions, we're Marines! We just go about life and do the best we can.

THE LITTLE MEN

The men who sneer at honor,
The men who scoff at pride,
The men who think those foolish
Who went and served and died.

The men who know not greatness,
The men who know not strife,
The men for whom self-interest
Is all there is to life.

What could they know of courage,

How could they find the nerve,
When self is all they worship,
And ego all they serve?

As mice despise the eagle
That leaves them bound to earth,
Our uniforms and ribbons
Remind them of their worth.

We know their haughty sneering
Is born of self-contempt,
For we have lived in danger,
And they have only dreamt.

Ignore the little slanders
That come from puny souls.
Disdain the empty critic,
Despise their petty goals.

For you who served with honor
Would choose to serve again
Your worth by far surpasses
Ten thousand little men.

2007 LEFTWICH TROPHY FOR OUTSTANDING LEADERSHIP
Captain Jon Smith USMC

By Ken Pipes
C/O B Co 1/26

Col. Morris and Mac:

I got a heads up on the above a few days ago, from a good friend out of the old era! A superb selection as we know Captain and Mrs. Smith personally. They live just a few streets above us in beautiful down town Fallbrook! As you know, this is the single highest, professional Honor a Marine Rifle Company Commander, can attain. Capt. Jon has also spent time with the East Coast Marine Recon family!

Additionally, as small as this world has shrunk; Capt. Jon Smith's father was our Arty Liaison Officer in 1/26 before, during, and after the Siege at Khe Sanh! He was the late Harry Baig's strong right hand in planning the fire support for the entire Siege --across the spectrum! I know Captain Smith's father extremely well as do many others. We spent many months together from Khe Sanh to the Go Noi and all places and gun battles in between. Father, Captain Smith was awarded the Silver Star and other decorations during his tour with our Battalion in those tough years; 1967/68--TET!

As evidence that the apples do not fall far from the tree; Captain Bill's other two son's are also career Marines and Outstanding examples of our young Combat Brethren! One son is an H-53 pilot with a bunch of air time in Iraq and other garden spots in that desert, where he was shot down! Believe the oldest is a long serving Gunnery Sgt.--Meritoriously promoted to that rank and the recipient of at least one Bronze Star with Combat "V." Not sure what the Gunny does, but it is somewhere in the Special Ops Community. Captain Bill's last two son's I have not met--looking forward to the honor, hopeful, in the not too distant future.

Captain Jon has a beautiful wife and two precious young children, a boy and a girl. At any rate, this is such outstanding news that I felt it should be shared with all our Marine Family across the boards!

Congratulations to Captain Jon Smith and the entire Smith Family! Semper Fidelis!

DOWN & BACK

By Craig W. Tourte

I had some personal business to attend to in San Diego this weekend so I asked Steve Wiese (B/1/26) if he would like to accompany me on the flight down and drive back up to Sacramento. Steve said he would be more than happy to go with me as long as I fed him sufficiently. I really needed another driver so I relented and agreed not to stop at fast food establishments on the way back. He was talking steaks and I was thinking soup and sandwich. Steve managed to get in touch with (now retired) Lieutenant Colonel Kenneth Pipes (then Captain and CO B/1/26) who lives in Fallbrook, which is just outside of the East gate of the Camp Pendleton Marine Corps Base. Colonel Pipes graciously requested that we stop by for a little visit.

I was able to complete my business in San Diego, obtained a car and we drove the forty or so miles to the Skippers house arriving early afternoon. Before we left Sacramento I had called the golf course on the Camp Pendleton Base and asked if we could play, being disabled Vietnam Veterans and all, but we were denied. We took our golf clubs anyway, anticipating on finding a course to play somewhere on the return drive home.

During our visit with Colonel Pipes I think I mentioned to him our being denied playing on the base and he immediately got on the phone and had a conversation with someone at the course. What do you know, "they can come on over and play anytime," the guy told the Colonel.

Neither Steve nor I had been on the Camp Pendleton Base for forty some odd years, and to tell you the truth, I didn't remember much about the place except a lot of hard training and humping up and down the hills. The Colonel drove us all over the place, even at $4.60 a gallon for gas. I was amazed at what I saw and all that I did not remember. We stopped by the golf course and made a tee-time for the following day and it was once again, "come back anytime" as the Colonel looked over our shoulders.

That evening Colonel Pipes and his wife took us out and bought us dinner. We could have stayed for hours and talked and visited, and we did cover a lot of territory during our rather lengthy discussions and reminiscences. Although I had never met Colonel Pipes before, I felt as if I had known him for the last forty years. I think Khe Sanh Veterans are like that, it just takes a few minutes to connect. Private or Colonel, in old age we are now equals and it's our experience during that time which bonds us.

Steve and I played golf the next day, hooking up with a married couple to complete our foursome. Of course he was a retired Marine and had been an aviator who flew off a number of different carriers during the Vietnam War and after his service tour flew for Continental Airlines. Somewhere around the eleventh hole our discussions turned to Vietnam and what we did and where we were. Steve and I mentioned that we had been at Khe Sanh during the Siege and the guy almost started crying. He said that he had seen the wounded from Khe Sanh come in to Da Nang; they were in poor condition with that "thousand yard stare." He thanked us several times and then hugged both of us when the game was over. I was very moved by the experience and Steve and I talked about how much we appreciated the recognition.

We pulled in last night around midnight both pretty exhausted. We got along fairly well during our time together and I appreciated Steve driving the last 200 miles of our nine hour, 500 mile trip. I so enjoyed meeting and visiting with Colonel Pipes and his wife. Colonel Pipes was severely wounded during the March 30th Revenge Patrol and I was truly honored to have been in the same room with he and Steve. I look forward to seeing Colonel Pipes again during the reunion in a few weeks.

By Cpl Jerome Howell

I have always contended that there was humor at Khe Sanh. It was sometimes hard to come by, but it happened. A few days after the day we took over 1300 rounds, around February 21st, 1968. I had only been in Khe Sanh about a week, digging bunkers and air lifting supplies on the re-supply LZ to the hills. I learned that there were three places on the base where you had to be very alert: the Navy shower, outhouse, and med station. Anywhere on the base was dangerous, but some areas seemed to attract a lot more incoming: the West Turn Around Point, our Company area, and the LZ where I air lifted supplies, especially at the height of the siege, when we were getting hit with so much artillery.

The LZ was a very dangerous area. We had a couple of names for the LZ, we called it the "Impact Area," or the "Saddle." We didn't have any cover, and standing on top of a load of small arms ammo, army Logs and water, under a chopper, or where one couldn't hear anything. If one could hear the report of a firing, it only took about 4 seconds to get to you. If we had time, we would join others in the trenches, or hide between the rock crushers the Seabees left near the LZ.

I do not know how many knew the story behind that big hole and the C-123 that was hit on the West Turn Around Point. It was drug off the Turn Around Point and deposited in that hole big enough to except much of the plane. This hole was about 30 feet from my bunker where Sgt. English, and L/Cpl Ron Kieger resided. One day, someone left a pallet of anti-personnel mines there, and as the day wore on we became concerned about it. I decided to finally take a shower, and wash my lovely socks, that were so stiff I could have bounced them off the wall inside of the bunker.

I am enjoying a rare occasion at Khe Sanh, a shower. A Rocket came in and hit near the West Turn Around point. I suddenly got the feeling I had better abandon the shower. I made it to the closest bunker, a small one, the smaller the better I thought, and jumped in. It was occupied, but I do not remember his name. I did learn he was from Minnesota. He looked at me astonished that I was almost naked, and he said " What the heck!" I said " No matter bud, showers are dangerous around here!" He and I spent the next 15 minutes that seemed like an hour, hugging each other counting these rounds coming in. Then all of a sudden there was this huge explosion, the bunker we were in collapsed on us, and the lights went out, I was stunned for a few minutes. After it was over the Marine in the hole with me says, " Man, we will have to quit meeting like this." My reply was, " Don't worry about it, I will take a spit bath from now on." So I had to get enough courage to get back to the shower again, but this time I took my uniform with me.

The explosion left a very large hole, as I said about 30 feet from my bunker, and as I said before, a C-123 ended up in it!. A few days later I was standing next to it looking at it, and a Major came by and asked me what caused the hole. I thought I would be a smart ass and told him, "Well sir, didn't you hear about that 300mm Chinese artillery piece they brought down here?" He turned white in the face and walked way mumbling to himself that he would have to check it out. Heaven only knows what reaction he received on his inquiry.

Every now and then nature has her call, and I grabbed a Play Boy magazine that I had stashed away, and off to the old outhouse I went. I wasn't in there 5 minutes and a 130mm round came in and hit behind it in the 3rd Engineer area. It helped me out the front door, and I crawled to the Navy shower to pull up my pants. Here sat the Bn. Chaplain with a smile on his face. He says " Well, it looks like they caught you with your pants down."

I said, " Well sir, it's nice meeting you, but I must be on my way, this Navy shower and I do not get along too well." I left him there as I crawled to a bunker. I never could find that Play Boy magazine.....I have written Ray Stubbe and he can't remember if he was that chaplain or not. He did say that this explosion of the anti-personnel mines, was heard all over the base.

In boot camp, they can never prepare one how to react to death. Khe Sanh was spooky at times. When the wind would blow, there was this aroma that came from the west side of the base facing Laos, that we called "no man's land." This area was totally barren of trees, just craters. The NVA had a hard time removing their fellow soldiers off the battle field, so they began to rot in the hot sun. We did notice much of our pet rats, who were the size of a medium sized cat, began to thin out when they ate these bodies.

Of course the ARVN Co that was dug in along this side of the perimeter were eating the rats. Then there was a rumor going around that there was an out break of Bubonic Plague going around where these dead bodies were; we surmised that must have put a crimp in their eating habits. One day going by their area from the drop zone, I noticed them skinning them over an open fire in a pot, and they even had their women with them. That must have been cozy, with all the incoming. I would throw grenades at the rats, one bite from them and it was off to Da Nang for shots in the gut. One never dared to sleep on the deck, we could hear them at night scratching their way to get inside our bunker. Sometimes we thought it sounded like the NVA digging tunnels into the base, as they did at Bien Ben Phu.

The dirt at Khe Sanh was red clay, it stuck to everything. My socks were red, my letters home had red dirt on them, and when it rained, we lived in red mud. And not being able to shower much, left the inside smell of bunkers quite up lifting.

At times, at night when trying to write a letter, the incoming would come in and you could hear the rounds hitting close. The sound would come through our air vents, muffled a bit. We always wondered which one was going to become a part of your bunker. We knew our bunker probably wouldn't take anything over an 82mm mortar. Even though we had layers of sandbags, steel sheeting, and big rocks on top of the bunker. We wanted the round to explode on top instead of inside. One thought we did have, was that the NVA were tunneling in, and would run around throwing sacks of C-4 into our bunkers. At times there were fire fights along the west side of the base, it was quite a light show, along with B-52 drops along the Laotian border. The tunneling I mentioned and the rats, made for quite a stress factor, wondering if it was a rat or NVA. We slept mostly above the deck, often hearing rats scrambling around.

I arrived at this moon scaped terrain on February 18th ,1968, and as soon as I got out the back of the C-46, we scrambled for cover. The zone we were dropped in became the work area I would be assigned to. Whenever a chopper came in or near this area it was either mortared or hit with artillery fire. So I found a hole to lay in until the mortars laid off. I found my way to where 3rd Shore Party's company area was located. I was greeted by Sgt. English who had a big smile on his face. He took us to where he had a small crew filling sandbags and building a large bunker that had been hollowed out by the Seabees. I set up camp in Sgt. English's bunker. Every 5 to 10 minutes an artillery round would come in, and we all would hit the ground. This went on most of the day. That night I didn't get much sleep, listening to incoming hitting all over the base. The next morning, Sgt English picked me to go with him up to the drop zone to cut down some tree trunks to support the ceiling in this bunker of steel skids he had relieved off the strip after a skid drop was performed. This tree extraction was performed outside the perimeter and made me quite uneasy.

On February 21st, right after the fog lifted, the incoming started. That day we took a record amount of incoming, estimated about 1300 or more rounds of artillery, mortars, and 122mm rockets. I learned they had 120mm Chinese mortars. It blew down any tents we had standing, and made shambles of the base. I had been told Khe Sanh was an R&R resort before the siege where ARVN soldiers came to relax, and one of the tents we had in our Co area had some gambling going on.

After February 21st, life changed on the base. We lived strictly underground. If one thinks about it, this base was only 1 mile long and 1/2 mile wide, an easy target for artillery.

My life on the re-supply zone was one stressful ordeal, with very little cover from the constant shelling. L/Cpl Kieger and I were pinned down in between these two ground crushers the Seabees left near the zone. One round came in and hit in the middle of one. It was so loud our ears rang for hours. I crawled around it to see where the round hit. In the middle was a hole with smoke coming out of it, the round went off inside, if they had not been there, they would have been picking our body parts off the ground.

Another close call that really blew me away was the day I was at the other end of the zone next to the conventments. I was airlifting supplies to hill 861, and while a CH-46 chopper hovered over me I felt a brush of wind and rocks hit me. I looked over and saw a round had gone off inside the conventments so I flagged off the chopper for a 2nd try, and jumped into this small bunker. Another round came in and hit next to the bunker, as I peeked out the bunker I saw this hole with smoke coming out of it right where I was standing when I tried the lift. I began to feel as if someone had my number. I was thinking, I had to get back out there and attempt another lift that was successful. This was the way things happened out on the strip and re-supply zone.

Same with an Otter that came in all shot up, which had holes in it that I could put my fist in, it looked like Swiss cheese. All I could think about was the Marines inside of it. It took me three tries to get that thing out. The zone was nothing more than raw terror. After awhile one became numb, and only had one thing in mind, listening for that report to come from Co Rock mountain where the big guns fired from, the 152mm guns.

At first we would count how many seconds it took to hit us-it was 12 seconds, including the 130mm self propelled guns, later I discovered they had 168 of them out there. Then it went down to 7 seconds then 4 seconds. This was the time one had to decide what to do. So the Khe Sanh stupor became the habit. Walking or running, one's body would be hunkered over listening for that report. This went on for me until March 14th, when I was hit with shrapnel, along with L/Cpl Kieger and another Marine, whom I cannot remember his name who was killed on the zone by 82mm mortar fire. The Marine that died was in country two weeks. The night before he talked about his girl friend from home; he was a nice guy, and I felt somewhat responsible for him. So I told him to stick close to me and be mindful of what I said. The next day we were airlifting out parachutes from the drop zone laid on steel skids destined for Da Nang to be re-folded. When airlifting parachutes I always hung out among them so in case of incoming they might suck up the shrapnel instead of me. This young guy wondered out in front of them and a mortar came in and hit near him and, he received a head wound. The next two incoming hit Kieger, taking out a part of his calf the size of a tennis ball. Sgt English and I took him to the med station.

I left the med station quickly knowing it was on the NVA hit list and staying around there was a hazard. I first jumped into a fighting hole and observed three journalists with their cameras hanging around their necks. All I could think of saying was, "This is not the place to be," and headed for the company area first, then across the strip to the zone. About 30 minutes later I was hit, I flew up a few feet and came down flat on my face. Sgt English came over and like out of a John Wayne movie, takes out his K -bar and cuts my uniform open near my left thigh and says, "Well Howell, you still have your jewels," with this big smile on his face. I ended up in Dong Ha medical center, Kieger went to Japan. The other Marine went to Da Nang to graves registration. This was one of the two ways one got out of there, other than being bit by a rat-wounded or dead.

As I lay on the table in Dong Ha they started to dig for the metal in my leg. We started receiving incoming, and they all left the room. So I rolled out from the table and crawled into the bunker with them. After it was over we went back in, and they decided they would leave the metal in my leg. I spent three weeks in Quang Tri near the airstrip in A Co's rear area with a gaping hole in my leg with a drain in it. I had a tremendous charley horse and had a heck of a time walking around. They finally decided to sew it up. To this day I still have that NVA calling card In my leg.

I found A Co's supply tent laying on the deck with big boxes laying all over in a big mess. So myself and a couple of Marines put the tent back up and organized it, inventoried it, and made it functional. The Staff Sgt in charge told me if I did a good job he would see if I could stay and run it. It did not happen, for as soon as I was able, they sent me back to the land of enchantment. I came back in May and operation Pegasus was kicking off and the 1st Air Cav was making their appearance.

After I got back in May of 68', things were tailing down. Just a few sporadic rounds would come in now and then, so we went to airlifting out damaged jeeps, one Cobra that was hit sitting in the conventments, and one stripped down 46 chopper, etc. By the end of May or beginning of June, we airlifted out to Dong Ha. This is when old Kieger (while we sat in the little watering hole we had,) decided to extend his tour 6 months after receiving a "Dear John" letter from home. I tried to talk him out of it, go home, straighten it out, and if he wanted to extend, do it then. He was stubborn and stayed there. That was the last time I ever saw Kieger or Sgt English.

A couple of Marines that were on Hill 881 in A Co, 3rd Shore Party Bn. that knew him said he went bonkers. I was re-assigned to FLC in Da Nang, Rations Company Supply BN, and met Larry Day, a Marine I went to boot Camp with. Another person I have lost contact with. Khe Sanh was a life changing event for all who served there.

My time at Dong Ha from Nov 25th to Feb 18th and FLC from June to Dec 68' are another story. I developed a dislike for the way the war was being fought. The manner in which mail was being delivered at Khe Sanh really made us mad. Mail was delivered and the bags were left on the turn around point. Incoming attempting to hit the plane ruptured the bags, and the mail was blown all over the landing strip. They made us get out there to pick it up, we just didn't feel risking our lives for mail was hard to take, even though I never received any.

A REUNION STORY

By Craig W. Tourte

I had a great time at the reunion this year. It's doesn't matter where the reunion is held, the extravagance of the accommodations or lack there of, it's the comradeship that is important to me. On Thursday Steve Wiese (B/1/26), Mike Fishbaugh (FLSU-1 & FLSG-B), David "Tony" Tonick (A/1/26) and myself, drove over to Genoa Nevada, a little town about forty miles south of Reno, tucked up against the high Sierra Nevada Mountains. David served eight months in Vietnam before he was shot in the back, the projectile exiting through the front right side of his neck. A jagged scar remains and is a reminder to all of his service, bravery and sacrifice. Genoa was named after the birth place of Christopher Columbus in Genoa Italy. We stopped off for a cold one at the Genoa Bar, said to be the oldest and first established bar located West of the Mississippi (or something like that). I bought Mike a T-Shirt, him being from Kentucky and all; I wanted Mike to have a little souvenir from his Nevada Travels. I can almost guarantee that no one in Kentucky has ever heard nor been in the small little dusty and hard to find town of Genoa. Like the Marine Corps Combat Base of Khe Sanh, if you're in Genoa, you're no where.

For many years Steve Wiese owned and operated a successful construction company and did a great deal of traveling, I was surprised to hear that he had never heard of, nor been to Genoa before that day because he certainly has been everywhere else. We continued our travels, driving up the steep 11.2 mile Kingsbury grade, climbing to over 7000 feet above the desert floor to South Lake Tahoe where we stopped in at the Beacon Restaurant and gazed out over the world famous deep blue lake while we had lunch. We continued our trip with a slow drive around the east rim of one of the most beautiful lakes in the world, onto highway 50, descending down to the desert floor then on to Carson City, the state capitol of Nevada and back to Reno. It was a great afternoon.

On Friday evening Steve Wiese, Tom Horchler (H.Q. 1/13) and myself, were the invited guests of Khe Sanh Veteran and Association member Michael Archer (Author of "A Patch Of Ground") who lives in Reno. Mike's guests included the two sons and the grandson of the late Lieutenant Colonel John A. Hennelly, Commanding Officer of the First Battalion Thirteenth Marine Corps Regiment at Khe Sanh. Both men are former Marines and the grandson is entering Marine Corps boot camp in late August. There was an array of various dignitaries, scholars, writers and academics amongst the professionals present. As the twenty five or so of us gathered in the back yard, Mike stood and introduced each guest, announcing their name and giving a brief personal history of each and their individual achievements. It was one of the most amazingly articulate and even humorous oral presentations of introduction and recalled personal information I have ever heard, and I was privileged to have been present and to have been invited to his home. Mike introduced me as a Khe Sanh Veteran and writer, perhaps a bit gratuitous, but I appreciated the introduction.

It was the first reunion for many, often a difficult and lonely time for some. Marco Soto, Chuck Teasley, Andres "Pete" Torres, David "Tony" Tonick and Phil Nuchereno were just a few who attended the reunion for the first time. Marco and Pete are from Sacramento and I know they attended the reunion because I asked them to come. I appreciated them taking the time to drive over from California. Both attended the reading of the names at the California Vietnam Veterans Memorial along with myself, Steve Wiese, Ernie Spencer, Carrie Pepper and others.

Steve Wiese asked my wife and I to join his table for dinner. I was honored to have sat with Ken Pipes, Ben Long, Ken Korkow (all with B/1/26)), Chuck Teasley (C/1/26) and their wives. I tried to keep an eye on Pete Torres and Marco Soto because I knew they had arrived late to the reunion and I didn't want them to feel left out because they didn't know anyone. I observed that Pete had connected with the others at his table and was pretty engaged. Marco and his wife sat a couple of tables away from ours. I introduced myself to Marco's wife and thanked them both for coming. Marco told me that when he signed his name on the reunion sign up board he noted the name of David Tonick, and asked if I knew who he was, as both David and he had served in the same company in Vietnam and he had not seen David for over forty years. Marco took out his wallet and showed me an old color photograph of David taken during the war. At that point my heart skipped a few beats and I had to take a couple of breaths. I'm just assuming here, but I had to believe that Marco and David had been rather close in Vietnam. My understanding is that the last time Marco saw David was when he and David were severely wounded and Marco was told to grab any other wounded and get on the chopper. David was removed from the field of battle with a rather large wound to his back and neck. In June of 1968 Alpha and Charlie Companies were attached to Delta Company, all with the Twenty Sixth Marine Regiment, when they assaulted up a small hill containing spider holes, towards an enemy held trench line. Marco sustained a wound to the back of his neck and had his M-16 jam during the assault. Many who survived the Siege at Khe Sanh were killed and wounded.

I took four steps to my left, less than ten feet. As I stood in front of the next table. I told David that there was someone at the next table who he should meet. David stood up and followed me the few feet to where Marco was sitting. I noticed that David had a photograph of himself taken in Vietnam attached to his reunion name tag. The exact same photograph that Marco had showed me just seconds before. It was a private moment and I left them alone to get reacquainted.

I sat down at my friend Tom "Louie" Horchlers table. Tom had talked me into attending our first Khe Sanh reunion some five years ago. I asked Tom what he thought of this reunion and Tom said it was the best one so far. I considered that for a minute, recalling how difficult those first reunions were for me and how each proceeding reunion was a little easier and more enjoyable. I told Tom he was right, it was a great reunion, perhaps because we were just emotionally prepared for it, Tom just smiled knowing it has been a long road traveled. I glanced over at David and Marco knowing it was their first reunion, and was sure they would feel the same way.

THE POWER OF REUNIONS

By Neil Kenny L Co 3/26

Four years ago in Dallas, I hijacked a young Army Captain in the hotel lobby; by the name of Pete Chambers. Seems Pete was with Special Forces, a Surgeon, and had just returned from Afghanistan. He was somewhat reluctant to join me and perhaps was thinking this was some sort of Marine Corp scavenger hunt or other such trick we 'devil dogs' are oft known to play on 'soldiers'.

I assured Pete it was all good and that he would do well to spend some time with Warriors like himself. The rest is as they say, History. I recall at the end of the reunion saying to Tom Ford and a few other, "Imagine if four days back from Nam we walked into a room full of Marines from Iwo? Imagine how different our lives might have been?' I was thinking of course of that soothing balm for our Heart and Soul that you can only get with and from a Kindred Spirit.

Well, imagine my surprise when returning from Reno to have received the following email :

Hey Neil,

Pete Chambers here. MAJOR type, one each, US Army SF, O.D. Green... I am over here in "the show" again. This time Kabul, Afghanistan. Hard to believe it's been four years since Shannon and I attended the Khe Sanh reunion with you guys in Dallas. I have been back and forth now, four times. Have not collected any more wounds, but, the emotional scars are starting to be felt.

I retold the story of how I met the Marines of "the siege" last week. How you all brought me in like one of your own. How I was able to meet real heroes and be in the company of brothers. How, the best de-brief / psychological healing took place on one night in Dallas. I reflected on how I was given the honor to carry a flag during the opening ceremony, and how humbled I was when Doc Ballard placed the "Doc" medal over my neck. I told them of how broken I felt when I spoke to your crowd, and how understood I felt when a voice from the back said, "that's OK bro, we know how you feel."

When I was through speaking to these gentlemen there was not a dry eye at the table. The guys at my table were all veterans of years of service, all but two. I spoke with an "old guy" like me, a SF Master Sergeant, a Ranger 1st Sergeant and an old SF guy who was recently demoted to SSG for telling off an officer. (Who probably needed it)...

But, the two young guys sat in awe of the old grizzled vets and took it all in. One guy, a 1st LT who is here with New York State National Guard, on his first tour out of the gate. He is biting at the bit for some "action."We just hold his reigns and tell him to beware of what you wish for. The other guy, a Navy corpsman just sat and listened as we each told stories of guys we've lost, and how it was the toughest on those back home. Hell, to us there would be no better way to go.

Well, the young corpsman was spending a little time with me in the aide station here, getting his feet wet, and prepping to go down range. Quiet kid, not much to say, just did his job. This past week he went out west to support operations in that AO. How can I say well, I guess I'll just say it. We heard that he lost his life in an IED. He was supporting the Marines.

How many more times will I sit at a table with a bunch of old vets and talk about our heroes to wake up the next day to loose another? I know, this is war, but, this $h!t ain't easy. Thank God I only have 67 days and a wake up.

You know, each time I meet a new young kid, I kind of feel bad. Cause, they want to get to know me. But, I hold 'them off. Just don't want to get to know too much. I try to lead by example, but, not let anyone in too close. It hurts less that way.

Over all, the mission here is going well. The country appears to be better. The bad guys have less places to hide. Things get a bit sporty at times, but, I believe there is light at the and of the tunnel. I hope all is well with you and yours my friend. Say hello to the guys. I hope to see you all some day at a future reunion. I need to decompress.
God Bless.
Pete

Please keep this Fellow Warrior in your Prayers as we await his arrival back home.
Semper Fidelis,

Neil

UPDATE- POWNEY BW USMC
Posted on September 9, 2008 at 06:30:21 PM by Mike Fishbaugh

Hello Mike,

Glad to hear from you, I located Cpl Bruce Powney at 115 Lurie Street in SE Grand Rapids, Michigan 816-734-9026, I found him with assistance from 2 other KSV veterans, I spoke to Bruce he was on Khe Sanh for one year and has no idea where his Dog tag disappeared.

I accompanied 2 Marine Mothers back to Vietnam, One Son Ted Johnson was in my Platoon and was KIA in Hoi An in 1967. Ted was awarded the Bronze Star after his death. We travelled to Khe Sanh where another Mother's Son died defending a Bridge, He was awarded the Medal of Honor for his actions prior to his death.

While in Khe Sanh a young boy approached me and gave me a rusty Medal From a North Vietnamese Soldier, and Cpl Powneys Dog tag, he said that he found both of them while digging in the hills around Khe Sanh. The ribbon actually had cloth on it which would appear that it had been buried for years, possibly while still on a Deceased NVA Soldier. The Dog tag was with it so it could have been in the possession of a NVA Soldier that died during the siege. I called a M/Sgt Ron Olsen at 517-719-6717 in SE Kentwood Michigan, he was very enthusiastic about the find and stated that he would present it to Cpl Powney in a dignified manner when I send it to him. I sent it Fed Ex today. I was unaware of your organization or I would have attempted contact, possibly you would like to call M/Olsen and somehow participate in this little ceremony, if even only by letter to Cpl Powney.

M/Sgt Olsen's address is 4475 Lantana Drive in SE Kentwood, Michigan, 49512.
If you forward your address I will send you a copy of the letter that I sent to Sgt Olsen regarding the find.

WE GET LETTERS

Good Morning Tom;
Issue #70 of the Red Clay arrived in my mailbox this morning. Having read the first half before lunch I will finish it after supper this day for sure. Rereading the issue 70 for a second time will happen sometime next week.

Please find the enclosed check to be placed in the Red Clay fund account to defray your printing and postage requirements. Since my tax rebate will be here next month, I decided to spend it early.

As things look today participating in the 40th Reunion will not come to pass for this member as my wife's medical condition only allow me out of the house for an hour or so every other day. Having attended the 40th anniversary of the "D Day Landing" event at Omaha and Utah Beaches, I have seen just what can happen at any 40th reunion.

My wife and I were at Omaha Beach for the 1:00 PM ceremonies to start. There was a man asleep in a lawn chair a couple of rows in front of our position. Behind us was a couple from Texas. My wife, a Texan was talking away when the fellow in the lawn chair awoke from his nap and stood up. He looked at the couple behind us yelling at the man, what are you doing here? It seemed that the fellow behind us had been hired by the gentleman in 1948 to teach in his school where he was the principle. Asking where he was on D-Day, he said he was in the Navy operating a landing craft while the other fellow was a soldier assaulting the beach. The fellow who was the principle asked him why he never told him he had been on Omaha for the twelve years he worked for him. His answer was "you never asked."

That exchange of words made me think of how many Americans have gone to war, never to speak about it. This is more prevalent for the Vietnam Veteran than most others many would say.

THE COMMANDANT AND I

By Craig W. Tourte

I stayed at the Marine Memorial Hotel in San Francisco. A fine hotel with a long history, located in the heart of that historic and graceful city. While there, I visited the library and museum and walked the hall dedicated to the Commandants of the Marine Corps. I paused in front of the photograph of the current Commandant of the Marine Corps, General James T. Conway, remembering back to when I attended the Khe Sanh Veterans Annual Reunion held July 3-8, 2007, in Washington, D.C. It was drop dead hot and humid in Washington during the month of July and I wore the obligatory garb favored by most California's and other tourists to Washington at that time of year, shorts and t-shirt (this one happened to have the Khe Sanh logo on it).

One especially hot afternoon, Neil Kenny asked if I would be interested in visiting the Pentagon, Neil followed that question with the pronouncement, "we're leaving right now." I did a quick survey of my appearance, wrinkled and stained shirt, tattered shorts, gut hanging over my belt, probably needed a shave and bath and who knows what other personal hygiene attention I required at that moment. I was a bit embarrassed about my appearance and attire but the words, "we're leaving right now" took priority over my flaws. I wanted to take advantage of this once in a life time opportunity, so off we went to the Headquarters of the United States Department of Defense.

Sergeant Jeremiah W. Workman who was the guest of honor at the Khe Sanh Veterans reunion, was kind enough to provide myself and one other person with a very personal tour of the Pentagon. Sergeant Workman was awarded the Navy Cross for extraordinary heroism while serving with the 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment during the battle for Al Fallujah, Iraq. His assignment during the time of the reunion was aid and driver to the Sergeant Major of the Marine Corps.

We walked the hallowed halls of the Pentagon which was dedicated on January 15, 1943. It is generally considered one of the world's largest office buildings. It houses approximately 89,000 military and civilian employees, has 3,000 non-defense support personal, five sides, five floors, two basement levels and corridors that total 17.5 miles. We entered the location where American Airlines Flight 77 hit the wall of the Pentagon, now the location of a memorial and chapel dedicated to those fine Americans who were lost that fateful day. While walking along the corridor containing the various offices of the Marine Corps we paused in front of the office which had a small gold plaque next to the door proclaiming, "Commandant of the Marine Corps." The door was open and Sergeant Workman asked if I would like to go inside. Now look, I was a private in the United States Marine Corps from 1966 to 1968, okay so I was promoted to corporal a few of months before I was discharged, but all the same, I always had the heart of a private. I was never asked for my opinion, never put in charge of anyone or anything, - in retrospect, a smart move on the part of the Marine Corps - never spoke to anyone over the rank of lieutenant and here I was, about to enter "God's" office. Pot belly, stained shirt, ratty shorts, needing a shave and bath and certainly not "squared away" by anyone's standards… I stepped inside.

As we entered, we were met by a young major with a high and tight haircut who almost stood at attention when he saw that the person who entered the office was Sergeant Workman. As they visited for a few minutes I could sense the enormous amount of respect this officer had for Sergeant Workman and noticed several other officers peeking around the corner, speaking amongst themselves, their attention was directed towards Sergeant Workman, I was confident their conversation was regarding his combat experience and heroic deeds. Sergeant Workman told the major that he wanted to show a "Khe Sanh Veteran" the Commandants office and asked if it would be alright. The major's response was "of course" - the Commandant was not in - and opened up the door. Then this once very sorry excuse for a private in the Corps of forty years ago, proudly walked into the office of the Commandant of the United States Marine Corps.

I gazed at the large oak desk, my mind was racing with thoughts of all the decisions that must have been made in this office. I wondered how many times, some forty years ago, those who controlled the fate of 6,000, had uttered the words "The Siege at Khe Sanh." I wondered if these men of power and command really understood the sacrifices so many made. I wondered if they themselves had endured rocket after rocket, mortar after mortar, and the drenching incoming of artillery week after week and month after month. I wondered if these great men who stood in this office would have been as brave as those I had left at the hotel but a few miles away.

I asked if I could have my photograph taken behind the Commandants desk and was granted permission. As I stood behind the Commandants desk where so many great generals and admirals, important politicians, various world dignitaries and even presidents have stood, I reached over and picked up a business card from it's holder. The card read, "James T. Conway, General U.S. Marine Corps, Commandant of the Marine Corps, Headquarters, U.S. Marine Corps, 3000 Marine Corps Pentagon, Washington, D.C. 20350-3000." I was humbled by the experience, most appreciative to Neil Kenny and Sergeant Workman for the opportunity and I still felt like a private. However, I was filled with pride that I had been a Marine and was honored to be able to say I had served at Khe Sanh with some of the finest men I had ever known and I was proud to be an American.

As I left the Pentagon, knowing that in my lifetime I might never return and certainly I'd never again step into the office of the Commandant of the Marine Corps, I turned to Sergeant Workman and observed this tall, strong and proud Marine who had done all that was asked of him and so much more. I asked him what he thought the future had in store for him. He had done so much in such a short life. Led men in combat, seen comrades die, eliminated the enemy and suffered numerous wounds himself. I didn't know what to expect and was looking forward to his response. His answer was surprisingly simple, he turned to me and said, "I want to go back."

I understood his response completely, I have heard it many times before. I hope he understood mine, "you've done enough."

NEAR DEATH EXPERIENCES

By Reverend Ray W. Stubbe

There are at least half a dozen times I should have died. The verse of the hymn, "Through many dangers, toils and snares I have already come, 'Tis grace has brought me safe thus far," really rings true! Then there are the words of many of the Psalms: "I shall not die, but I shall live, and recount the deeds of the Lord." (Ps 118.17); "You have rescued me. I will tell of your name to my brothers and sisters; in the midst of the congregation I will praise you." (Ps 22.21b-22). "I will thank you in the great congregation: in the mighty throng I will praise you." (Ps 35.18).
Some of these were so minor; at the time, it was hard to discern that I was rescued, that it wasn't just fate or accident.

• I was a Ph.D. student at the University of Chicago, in the field of "ethics and society." Following classes the morning of Friday, 27 January 1967, I started driving home despite a snowstorm that had been dropping snow from the previous day. It was only as I entered the Dan Ryan Expressway that I realized I should not have started the weekend journey home, for there were numerous vehicles in the three lanes of traffic stopped here and there in the different lanes and the exits, having an upward incline, were clogged with no possibility of exiting the freeway. In addition, balls of snow began to accumulate on the ends of my windshield wipers so that the wipers were unable to remove accumulating snow on the windshield. Desperately, I wove from lane to lane to avoid stuck vehicles while having my left arm outside the window, attempting to brush away accumulating snow while steering with the right hand! This continued all through the city of Chicago, the extent of the Dan Ryan and Edens Expressway, and the large flakes and large amount of snow continued until just past the Illinois-Wisconsin border, with only light snow falling in Wisconsin. The danger after entering Wisconsin, however, remained. Although there was less snow, it was still slippery, and while traveling on a two-lane stretch of Interstate 94, with no vehicles in front or behind me, my car suddenly skidded 180 degrees, facing in the opposite direction. Just then I noticed two large trucks, one in each lane as one was passing the other, approaching me! I had no time to get out of the car and run for what appeared to be a certain collision! At the last minute, both trucks miraculously moved to pass me using the shoulder of the highway, on either side! By the time I arrived home, my nerves were completely shot. Classes at the University [of Chicago] were cancelled for a week.

* I landed in DaNang at 1222, 14 July 1967, waiting for further transportation to 3rd Marine Division HQ at Phu Bai. Around 1700, word was passed there would be no further flights. We went to the Air Force officer's mess for supper and were told that there would be an Air Force C-130 going to Phu Bai at 2100. I met a Captain Harper L. Bohr, Jr., who was going to Khe Sanh to be the Intelligence Officer. He opted to remain at DaNang while I decided to take the USAF plane. It didn't depart DaNang until 2312. When I finally arrived at Khe Sanh several days later, Bohr noted that just after midnight, the DaNang Air Base was raked with rockets creating horrible devastation. The Stars & Stripes for 16 July 1967, reads: "At least 12 Americans were killed. Witnesses said the Communists fired about 50 rounds of 120 and 140mm rockets from two directions and with pinpoint accuracy ... Destroyed in the attack were three big Air Force C130 transports which cost $2.5 million each .. "

*On 16 December, 1967, our regimental Intelligence Officer, Captain Harper L. Bohr, Jr., asked me to accompany him to the home of John and Carolyn Miller in Khe Sanh village. He had received 4 boxes of toys and clothing to give to the children there, and was going to give them to these missionaries to distribute. We caught a ride by jeep to the Miller's home. After visiting awhile, we walked back to the base. I remember climbing Hill 471 and going through the various Bru villages. Bohr was point, John Miller was in the center, and I was "tail end Charlie." I didn't think anything of it at the time, although some of our recon teams were making deadly contact at the time in the general area, and Bohr later told me that he shudders when he thinks of what we were doing at that time: that the NVA were in the area and we could have been killed or captured.

*Someone stole my camera just as the siege battle of Khe Sanh began [on Sunday, 21 January 1968] when I laid it down while carrying some dead on stretchers to Graves Registration. When I returned, it was gone. It was a camera my grandpa Stubbe had given to me, and it took some very good photos even though it wasn't a single lens reflex. It really bothered me for many years, especially since I had photos on the film in the camera of people that I knew who died. One of my friends told me that whoever stole the camera saved my life, because during the incoming rockets and mortars, I probably would have been taking photos when I should have been keeping my head down. That was very true.

*I was getting ready to visit all over the combat base which was always taking incoming when someone yelled to me that I had a phone call! It was the Chaplain of one of the other battalions (Jack Heino, chaplain of 1/9). I don't even recall the conversation. As I was talking with him on the land line telephone, a mortar round exploded just where I would have been had I continued walking and not returned to take his phone call. He saved my life and didn't even know it!

* I had blood in my urine and was sent to a hospital at DaNang, but returned to the siege battle after a couple of days-only after I promised I'd return for more testing. When I returned to Parris Island after Vietnam, I went to the hospital where they did a kidney biopsy and determined I had "glomerulo-nephritis" which is an auto-immune disease in which the body attacks itself (as in lupus). They said that it would clear up, and then return sometime within 20 years and that was fatal that I had only 20 years left to live at the most. They offered me a medical discharge, but let me remain on active duty. I had made a decision at that time, not to marry or take a civilian congregation. Well, I'm still here!

* On Tuesday, 06 February 1968, I was in my bunker for the evening. Diary entry: "Turned in early, about 2030. At 2345 the base began receiving incoming rockets and mortars. At 2415 I heard one whistle in. The hooch shook briefly but violently. Silence, A dud? A delayed fuse? From the shaking of the hooch, did it land on the top or become embedded in the side? Then a tremendous WHOMP! I thought the hooch was going to collapse. I had wondered all along whether I should go out and check if there were a round on the top or in the side unexploded, so as to seek other safety. Yet that would expose me, though it was total darkness outside. I thought maybe I should just run anyway, to another bunker. Had I done that, I would have been caught in the WHOMP. I shined a flashlight inside, still laying down on my rack. Everything was in a dense fog of dust. All the remainder of the next few hours we kept receiving rounds, many very near us. Then our artillery would blast away, and they'd be silent. Then they would begin again. This alternating situation prevailed for some time. But I slept most of the time." In the morning, I saw a crater about three feet from the entrance of my bunker where a rocket had exploded. [Diary, p. 604]

* Friday, 23 February 1968. The base took some 1300-incoming rounds today. According to my diary entry, I was in my bunker at noon, eating a "Ham, with water added, and eggs, chopped, canned." "I was eating the cookies and drinking the cocoa from the B-3 unit when arty came in-heavy arty. One whizzed and the whole hooch shook violently. It sounded like it was stuck in the wall. Things were falling-dirt, pieces of wood. I immediately thought of a delayed fuse. If it were embedded in the wall of dirt outside my bunker wall, the whole hooch would explode. Yet, if I dashed out, a new round might come in and then I'd get dinged by shrapnel." Later that evening, I noticed that the wall had crumpled inward, right next to my rack, where I was sitting. It had been draped with a camouflaged parachute, so I didn't notice it previously. My diary entry: "Hit the pad and noticed that the wall was bent. It wasn't merely the top piece caved out, but the whole wall! There was an engineering stake bent inside, also. This is what came in during my lunch! -while I was sitting with my back only two feet from it, on my rack! I was most uneasy about it all. Called up Major Hudson [the Regimental S-2], who said I should call up the EOD man. I was concerned that a nearby explosion might detonate it, were it a dud .. The Major said it might. The EOD man said it was safe to sleep. [He probably didn't want to attend to this at the moment, there being so many other duds strewn about the base from the extraordinarily large amount of shelling today. So I slept all night right next to the "questionable wall." [Diary, pp. 700-701].

* On 20 June 1968, I was on the Dong Ha Combat Base in the afternoon to visit a man from "C" Company, 3rd Shore Party Bn, to deliver a death message. My PC vehicle became stuck in the ammo dump there and some Marines from FLSG "B" volunteered to bring a wrecker, but after waiting an hour or so. I decided to get a truck to take me to 9th Motors where I was able to get in a "bread run" vehicle back to my stalled PC. They managed to fix it, and I returned to Quang Tri Combat Base. At about 1630 some very loud bangs and immense clouds filling the sky alerted us to gaze north to Dong Ha Combat Base where the ammo dump was exploding-where I had just been in my stalled vehicle! Large balls of fire billowed into the sky. (There were, amazingly, no people killed. One tower with 2 Marines in it collapsed. Chaplain Fenning, the Division Chaplain, mentioned later that the explosion destroyed 10 million dollars worth of ammo).

*I was walking in the Marble Mountains of DaNang on the 19 August 1968 with my new clerk who had just come off a Navy ship [Richard Straubel]. He wore his blue Navy dungarees and a white sailor hat. We checked with the S-2 of the amphibious tractor unit there who said it was quiet. I wanted my clerk to see some of the carved Buddha statues I'd heard were there. So we spent most of the day walking in and out of various caves and grottos. A little Vietnamese boy joined us and was whistling-sometimes noticeably louder and with more agitation than at others. (I was aware of this at the time, but disregarded it). There was one time when I started to go into a cave area, but noticed a lot of tin cans and debris, and it didn't look too interesting, so I walked back out. It was at this point that the boy really whistled loudly and even darted away! After I came out, he rejoined us. My clerk, in the meantime, was photographing some statues. The next day, the Special Forces camp, the headquarters for the SOG units in northern I Corps (CCN, Command and Control North), just at the base of the Marble Mountains, was penetrated and almost overrun. Some of those who had been at Khe Sanh were stationed there and killed including a couple Sergeant Majors. I was told that there were about 70 of the NVA inside the Marble Mountains when I was going through it!

* While serving as a Chaplain at the recruit training at Parris Island after Vietnam [1969-1970], I was walking along the rifle range. While I was out, a Sergeant came into my office on the rifle range and in a strange voice (according to my clerk) asked, "Where is the Chaplain?" As it turned out, I had never met the Sergeant. My clerk noticed that he had a M-16 and that the selector was on "semi automatic." I was unaware of all of this. I went to our Chaplains center on the base to get my mail at lunch time, and couldn't get near the building, because it was surrounded by MPs. I later discovered that the Sergeant thought if he shot a Chaplain, that he'd get transferred off Parris Island! So I'm here today because I wasn't in my office, but was among the troops!

* 25-29 June 1999: Patient at VA Medical Center, Milwaukee, WI. On Thursday, 24 June, I went to the VA, very sick, asking for a nurse to take my temperature, but was told to telephone in to the nurse by phone! Instead, I went to the emergency room where one of the young intern doctors took a blood test and then poked in the abdomen. He said that if I had appendicitis, I would have leaped from the gurney in pain, and I didn't. He said to return "tomorrow, if the pain persists." It did. I returned. After a CT scan, the doctor said, "We're admitting you immediately. Your appendix is ready to burst." It's miraculous that the appendix didn't burst!

"USS San Francisco, Vietnam and Elvis"

"Experience is not what happens to a man. It is what a man does with what happens to him." (Aldous Huxley)

It is very easy for most of us to view Memorial Day Weekend as a time for relaxation and pleasure. Thoughts of cooking hamburgers and hot dogs over an open grill, visiting with friends and relatives, or perhaps, despite the high cost of gas, taking a trip to a nearby location of attractiveness, such as Santa Cruz come to mind. These thoughts also dominated my mind as I looked forward to the recent holiday weekend. Then, an envelope arrived at my home. Inside was an invitation to attend a memorial ceremony at Lands End at Fort Miley in San Francisco. It is where a memorial exists for the crew of the USS San Francisco from WWII. It was not just an invitation, however, as there was a hand-written note at the bottom from my long-time friend, Vince Rios. He was the Chair of Honor. The event was dedicated to him as· an "American hero."

The note said, "I really want to see you there and later at the Marines Memorial Club." It was signed, Vince," and to the left was a caricature of his face drawn by himself. His artwork was simple, two eyes, a mustache and upper lip. With that, I changed my plans knowing I must attend to honor my friend, as well as others who have worn the uniform of our armed forces, particularly those who have given lives and limbs for our nation.

The USS San Francisco was at Pearl Harbor during the attack on December 7th, 1941, and participated in seventeen major sea battles, including the last one at Okinawa. Its greatest recognition, however. was perhaps at the Battle of Guadalcanal on December 13th• 1942. 100 sailors and 7 Marines died during this battle. From the beginning of WW II to its end the ship and its noble crew fought valiantly for this nation and the cause of freedom. Several of the survivors were present for the event, and the humility of being present with these heroes ensconced the 250 or so people in attendance.

About 10 minutes before the ceremony started, however, we saw flashing lights at the end of the street.

It was an entourage of motorcycle officers from the San Francisco Police Department. Was it the Mayor? Perhaps it was a rock star? People speculated. I noticed that they encircled a van and knew that yes indeed, it was a rock star. It was person of "high standing" in the minds of all of us who were there. It was Vince Rios.

As the police entourage and van approached people started quietly saying, "It's Vince." For veterans of Vietnam, as well as from other wars, Vince is Elvis in Marine clothing. Vince is a well-decorated U.S. Marine, and a man who surrendered three limbs during combat in Vietnam. The year was 1969 and Vince's life would change forever, and he would embody the ultimate in 'human courage, dignity and generosity.

Despite the loss of limbs Vince went on to earn several college degrees

Vince went on to earn several college degrees. He would become an advocate for the disabled and for minorities, as well as for all who have served this nation in uniform. When Vince speaks, people turn quiet, not only out of respect, but because he speaks with an insight into the human experience that is stunning. He speaks with humor, reflecting his outlook on life. He speaks of courage, duty, honor and country - also reflecting his outlook on life. He has two sons who have followed in his footsteps, both serving in the Marine Corps, including service in our nation's present military conflicts in Afghanistan and Iraq.

After the event ended, people moved forward to say hello to Vince and to shake his hand. People posed for photos with him, recognizing that he is both a celebrity and hero. When he spoke he talked of the importance of caring for the men and women who now wear the uniforms of our nation's Armed Forces - of helping them when they return home, recognizing that there have been more than 4000 that have already given their lives for our nation. Others, like Vince, have been severely wounded, and need our care, compassion and respect.

Vince and his wife, Cheryl, left the next day to return to Texas where they now live. Being with him and his wife, along with the others who have given their limbs and lives for our nation made me realize that Memorial Day should always be about them - not us.

Henceforth, when I visit with Vince I will tell him that from my perspective he is bigger and more important than Elvis. He will laugh. He will then smile and say, "You're Damn right!" From what I know of Elvis, I suspect he would also say, "You're damn right! Thank you very much Vince." You and your colleagues are Memorial Day.

MEMORIES OF KHE SANH

By Clarke H. Wylde
C/O FLSG-A LSU

I am not sure why I am writing to my brothers at this time, unless its February and I have been recollecting what transpired many years ago in the Months of February & March of 1968.

I found an old red Clay magazine (Spring 2006 Issue 64) and it featured the combat correspondents and photojournalist. That really brought back memories. I remember Juarte Kazickas, it was really an exciting experience having her in the LSU compound. As the LSU Commander during the Siege, I had the pleasure of meeting her. My friend Jim Madara would have really enjoyed meeting her but did not get the chance. One of the few luxuries we enjoyed was our own shower. It had been constructed out of an Immersion burner in a 50 Gallon drum fitted atop a structure which resembled an old wooden outhouse. Members of Charlie Med & the Seabees as well as the Marines located in and around the LSU compound learned that if they brought a 5 gallon can of water they could use the facility and enjoy a hot shower.

In early March Marine Corporal Cobb informed me that a lady was inquiring about taking a shower. I quickly agreed and waved the required 5 gallons of water rule. If you can picture this, here we had this very attractive women going to take a shower in our home made structure that had more holes than wood. What to do.? Solution? I had all the Marines I could locate in the compound form a circle around the structure and gave them an "about Face" command. They remained in that formation until she had completed her shower.

I later learned that she had been wounded. I did not learn of her fate until reading the article in Red Clay. The only recollection I have of Robert Ellison was observing him lying in the prone position taking pictures about a hundred yards away from where I was fighting a fire in the ammunition supply point ASP # 3. I never saw him again and learned that he had died in a plane crash from the same article in Red Clay.

An LSU is a miniature supply and maintenance unit supporting the command. Ammunition was our most valued commodity. It was Para dropped onto a Landing Zone and brought to the ASP by Shore Party Marines. They sustained numerous causalities from incoming Mortar fire while performing this task. When the enemy blew the ammunition dumps at Danang & Phu Bai, they were quickly re-supplied. At Khe Sanh, we did not have that luxury.

Staff Sergeant Peterson and I decided we had to fight the fires and save as much ammunition as possible. When the NVA struck one of the ammunition berms, my ammunition technicians got into the adjoining berms surrounding the one which had been hit and kept the burning embers from starting a fire in the adjoining berms. Using this technique my techs fought three ammo fires and only lost the berm that had been originally impacted by incoming fire. No other command could make that claim.

While fighting the fire at ASP # 3, Robert Ellison captured a moment in history that changed my life and those who fought the fires with me. I remember those Marines risked their lives to save the ammunition so badly needed by the troops defending Khe Sanh. I cannot remember all of their names after all these years only a few come to mind, Cpl Cobb, S/Sgt Peterson, S/Sgt Davis and another corporal I only remember by his nickname " Pig Pen." Also my radio operator who never left my side no matter how critical the situation became. To those Marines and all the rest I want to give a belated "Well Done."

Sometime in late March one of my Marines gave me a copy of News Week magazine with the picture taken by Robert Ellison. "Hey Lieutenant, you made the cover of News Week, he exclaimed I would like to hear from any of the Marines I served with."

HALT WHO GOES THERE?

Sgt Vince Rios, USMC (Ret)

The field Marines in Viet Nam relied totally on the USMC issue hand-held compass at least once for finding their way in and around hostile areas. Marines became totally lost at least once, especially in the dark, was Corporal Barnard among them.

My squad was Third Squad in Second Platoon and my squad leader was Corporal Hugh Donald (H.D.) "Barney" Barnard. There was a no more squared away Marine than Barney - boots, brass, M14 rifle and magazines-spotless, teeth brushed and clean shaven-always and skives neatly folded and pressed. He was this way in garrison as well as in the field. Barney guarded a very personal spray can of WD-40 all-purpose metal lubricant and rust remover that he used sparingly on everything. It wouldn't surprise me in the least to learn that he still has that same can 42 years after leaving the Corps and that it is still half full! You had to love Barney. Barney insisted that his squad members meet his standards though we never did. David Schmidt, one of the younger Marines in our squad, confided in me years later that Barney was so demanding that he scared the heck out of him. Schmidt asked me if Barney scared me and I said no. He ticked me off a lot but he did not scare me because I knew I could clean his clock! Schmidt just laughed.

Our platoon commander was Second lieutenant Robert Andrew "Andy" Beeler. We nicknamed him "The Chin" because of his protruding chin. Actually another Marine, Lee Scalzilli gave him the name and the rest of us just picked up on it.

In those days, all enlisted Marines went to the Infantry Training Regiment (ITR) after Recruit Training and before unit assignment at Camp San Onofre aboard the Camp Pendleton Marine Base. We received compass classroom and field training along with other field survival training there. I found that the compass classroqm lectures and field exercises were mostly academic; we rarely found what we were seeking in daylight, let alone at night although we followed the compass march directions to the letter and avoided simple mistakes like shooting an azimuth close to or around anything metal. In the Marine Corps the equipment is never wrong and is never to blame for mistakes.

Marines need more than instruments to survive in combat, though. Marines need common sense, instinct, a good sense of direction, guts and a willingness to employ them all generously in night movements, as needed. The Corps insists that every recruit show these qualities albeit their endowment is as varied as are height, weight, shape, and form. Another trainee in ITR proved this point to me. He was chosen to lead our group on the night mine field and booby trap march but lost his nerve early on. I offered to take the point which he readily relinquished and our group came through in flying colors! To the chagrin of our trainers, we also found the Surprise trip wire discretely set well away from the path that if tripped would give out a loud "boom," thus my point man "endowment" was discovered.

Andy may have suffered from that affliction that affects second lieutenants making it difficult for them to bond with their compasses but if he did, it never showed because he always trusted my point man instinct and gave me free rein.

We arrived in Viet Nam in July, 1965 and for a short while we ran short-range squad size patrols along the coast north of Danang. Now it was late summer and we were further inland toward the west. Our squads were running longer range night patrols and night ambushes. We had to know where we were at all times which was difficult enough among the many look-alike rice paddies, tree lines and tiny villages. More importantly, we had to know where our "friendlies" were. Our friendlies included other Marine units and the Army of the Republic of Viet Nam (ARVN) units. Later we were also around and worked with U.S. Army units, but not now. Our unit; Alpha Company, First Battalion, Fifth Marine Regiment (A/l/5) was recently designated Echo Company, Second Battalion, Ninth Marine Regiment (E/2/9) in May in Okinawa. It was my first tour of duty in Viet Nam.

On one of many dark moonless nights our squad had night patrol. Barney at the helm and I at point with eyes peeled and ears cocked. I felt secure at the head of the column, with the patrol route memorized, away from the squad distractions with only me and the Gooks sharing the sights and sounds of the night. Occasionally Barney would come forward, tap me on the shoulder and point me in a different direction. After a few changes I realized that we were meandering aimlessly and had now wondered onto an ankle-deep wet rice paddy. We were no longer on our patrol route.

Finally I told Barney we were going in the wrong direction and insisted that we go in the direction I knew to be correct; he insisted that I lead the squad in the direction he knew to be correct and pointed me toward some high ground up ahead. Off I went moving as silently as possible in water with the rest of the squad in tow, fully exposed in the open rice paddy. Suddenly, as I approached the high ground, an unfamiliar voice called out "Halt, who goes there." I stopped in my tracks, motioned for the squad to squat down and said "E/2/9 patrol coming in." The voice said "advance and be recognized."

I could already see me reporting in to Saint Peter at the Pearly Gates and my great satisfaction was in knowing what The Chin would say ("What were you trying to prove, mister?") when Barney would have to report in to him, if he survived the barrage of 7.62mm rifle and machine gun fire that would surely follow my advance. (with M-14 at the ready, to be recognized.) Would this be my demise.

I was "recognized", and spared. As it turned out, the voice was from a Marine from one of our sister companies-Golf or Hotel. We were way off Course! I asked Barney how could he be so wrong and he said, "I don't know, something must be wrong with this compass. Look, this is the correct direction." As he brought the compass to his right eye, to my dismay, he was wearing his helmet the whole time! Now humbled by his blunder he let me do my job though ticked off but composed, as point man without anymore interference back to our platoon perimeter.

The Chin never knew.

OFF TO QUANG TRI

3/26

Our last terrible night at Khe Sanh was spent in the ARVN section of the perimeter, which added to our general misery and anxiety. Rats, the stench of garbage, and some bad vibes were not conducive to a good night's rest. The remnants of Kilo Company greeted the new day with an unspoken question "what's next?" I personally discovered that I had set a new standard of malaise, a triple headache: my normal I got to wear this G/D helmet all the time headache, a concussion headache, topped off with a tension headache. I had some Darvon and coffee for breakfast.

With a little free time, I decided to take a little self inventory. This was a big mistake. While I had all the gear I was supposed to have, my physical state was a distinct shock. I was far beyond filthy. I had a beard, and both my new beard and head of hair were a matted mixture of grease, sweat, and Khe Sanh's red dirt. A noticeable layer of this filth had also coated all my exposed skin. My clothing was worse. They looked like tattered rags, covered with that same crusty red dirt. My utility trousers were crusted with crud on both legs where I had been wiping my hands. And since my buddy had slit the pants legs the day before to check how badly I had been wounded, the trousers now looked like I was wearing a skirt. When I walked I wrinkled like an old piece of linoleum. Both my utility jacket and T-shirts were also about rotted away. Of course, the last of my underwear had rotted away back in late January, so every errant breeze produced a bit of a live sex show.

Some people might think the worst thing about this situation was the exposure of a larger portion of my skin to the predation of ravenous insects, they'd be dead wrong. Others might think the jibes and snide comments of my squad mates was the worst part of the appearance. Again, they would be way off the mark. The worst part about the entire situation was the reaction of the ARVN's we shared the trench with. They seemed to really enjoy the show. Altogether, not a great way to start a day, I'll admit I spent quite a bit of time mentally kicking myself in the butt for getting drunk, rather than doing something constructive, that last night I'd spent in Danang the only thing that ended my masochist mantra was the word echoing down the line, saddle up Choppers would soon be along to ferry us down to Quang Tri, we were back in the Corps.

In short order, Kilo Company was organized, and told to stand by for incoming choppers. In the true tradition of 'hurry up and wait" it seemed like an eternity before the choppers arrived. They landed and picked up Kilo Company Marines about every 45 minutes. It appeared we were going to be on the last chopper out. It seemed like forever before we finally got the signal to move out. Up and out of the trench we scrambled, hustling forward toward the chopper's loading ramp. I had a spot of trouble involving the blast from the rotors blowing my tattered clothes in my face. Once the last man boarded, he gave the crew chief a thumbs-up, the crew chief then shouted into his helmet mike, and the engine screamed up into full power. The chopper lifted up a foot or so and bounced back down. The bird hopped along a couple of more times, when the engine noise dropped. The crew chief turned and signaled the last two men on to get out, the ramp dropping for emphasis. They wasted no time debarking and the pilot tried another take-off. This time we did manage to lift off, slowly, but cleanly.

Our confidence level wasn't high, but we collectively willed that thing to stay in the air and climb. Climb it did and we all gazed rapidly as the ground fell away behind us. Up and Up we spiraled a last panoramic view of the Khe Sanh plateau. Long gone was the verdant riot of plant life I'd seen on my first flight in. What revolved below us now looked like the moon on a bad afternoon, cratered to the point of seeming sterility. Finally we were in the clouds, Khe Sanh faded away behind us, and we all seemed to melt back into our nylon seats, reveling in the release of tension and the cool and moving air. It seemed like only minutes before our Banana Boat began a downward path to what looked like green-fringed sand dunes. Moments later we were on the ground watching our chopper lift away. Looking around, we discovered we were in the middle of a big empty; a long black runway, with no people in sight, the only sign of civilization was a small shack perched next to a closed up hangar in the distance. Disgusted, severely disappointed, we began slowly making our way toward that distant shack a small gaggle of dispirited, raggedy-assed Marine grunts dragging their heavily laden bodies along with a complete lack of enthusiasm. When we finally arrived at the shack it appeared to be closed and deserted. Just as our mood was about to drop straight into despair, we spotted a drift of cigarette smoke around the far corner of the shack. Shuffling forward, we discovered a natty-looking Marine Gunnery Sergeant leaning against the wall. "you men with 3/26?" He asked with a smile. "Yeah Gunny!" we chorused back. "Well then, welcome to Quang Tri. Smiling broadly, he continued, "If y'all are interested, there's hot showers, clean clothes, a steak dinner, and cold beer waiting for you over in that direction!" jerking his thumb back over his left shoulder.

If that Gunny said anything else, we weren't there to hear it. Our mood seamlessly shifting into rollicking, we instantaneously galvanized into a full sprint, heading in the indicated direction. The sound of music further quickened our pace and we soon spotted a barbed-wire enclosure ahead of us. The 8-foot barbed-wire fence barely slowed us down. In too much of a hurry to bother looking for a gate, we swarmed over the barrier, then, whooping and hollering, pelted across the compound toward what we could now see was an outdoor shower set-up. Our way was suddenly blocked by Sgt. Christian. Attracted by the ruckus we were raising. He hurried over and physically inserted himself in front of us, shouting us to heel. "Whoa! Whoa! Whoa, God damm it! What do you think you are doing?

Start acting like Marines this instant. Christian was a big linebacker of a man, with not an ounce of fat on him. He also had a pretty good ring of command in his voice; the type whose very tone promised instant dismemberment if not obeyed. In short, we stopped. "Alright, that's better!" he continued, once we'd settled down, "Now listen up, line up and stack your gear and weapons in front of you, then empty your pockets! All, and I do Mean all of your clothes go in those burner barrels over there he concluded, pointing out some trash barrels by the shower entrance.

Obediently, we quickly formed ranks, shed and piled up our gear, yanked our boots off, emptied our pockets, and threw the stuff haphazardly on top of our gear. We snapped to and smiled eagerly at Sgt. Christian. He let us stew for a minute, and dismissed us with a nod. With a whoop and a holler, we ran towards the showers, ripping off our clothes and pitched them, into the fires as we ran past.

Right before the shower entrance, there was a small trailer packed with cans of beer and ice. Standing next to the trailer was our Battalion Commander, passing out cans of beer to everyone who came near him. Our Battalion Sergeant Major was pressing bars of soap into our hands as we entered the showers. Beer and soap in my hands, I was in the shower. Seconds later, swilling my beer and reveling in the feel of clean, hot water beating down on the top of my head. For quite a while I just scrubbed and lathered. About the time I started in on my third beer I stopped and took a few moments to take a good look at my surroundings. A completely insane spectacle. In the center of the scene several hundred Marines, wearing only dog tags were noisily cavorting under the showerheads. To one side was the 3rd Mar Div brass band, pumping out every march Sousa ever wrote! Between the band and a line of parked trucks, the entire command group seemed to be engaged in a drinking contest with the troops.

The entire scene was playing a few yards from what appeared to be the main drag into Quang-Tri City. We were in plain sight of all sorts of Vietnamese civilians flowing by in a steady stream. Men Women, Children of all ages enjoying the show. I had a bit of an epiphany right then and there. I realized that I was in the middle of an insane situation and wasn't very likely snapped back to reality anytime soon. The way I saw it, I had two choices. I could simply go nuts, go with the flow, or I could try to hold on to what I had always thought was sanity and end up completely insane. I decided to go nuts. Chugging the last of my beer I slung the empty can in the direction of the audience, screamed out a few choice words, and dove back under the showerheads. I remained there until the water ran out.

The next step consisted of us drawing fresh clothing from the back of the trucks. What a pleasure it was to have new, precious, clean socks, not stiff with accumulated sweat full of holes. T-shirts, utility trousers and jackets, even underwear, for the few who wanted them. I wasn't one of the men who drew underwear. Rotting out my underwear way back in early February had left me with a screaming case of crotch rot which matured into a case of jungle rot. Producing a misery so intense I have never worn underwear since.

Once dressed, we stuffed our pockets and filled our hands with cans of beer and cheerfully marched over to a mess hall tent, where we had a sit-down steak dinner. An hour's gorge later we picked up our gear and were led over to some fly tents, where we were told to billet ourselves. We happily installed ourselves in one of these, spread out our poncho liners on the soft, deep sand, then proceeded to while away the twilight while drinking ourselves even further into a stupor.

My next memory was of suddenly jerking awake to complete darkness, panicked, with no idea where I was and what had awakened me. A moment later a large and uncomfortably close explosion almost scared me out of my skin. Flopping over onto my stomach, I raised my head a bit and stared back toward the sound of the explosion just in time to see a large rocket round make a direct hit on a tent across and three tents down from ours. Horrified, I attempted to wiggle myself deeper into the sand like one of those desert lizards on Animal Planet. Two more rounds came in, walking past our tent, and then the barrage stopped. Four men were killed. It seemed the enemy was just trying to tell us there was no safe place in Vietnam, and they had not forgotten us.

MEMORIES OF CAM VU

Tom:

That day in April, so many years ago, still haunts many of us who survived the battle outside Cam Vu because it changed most of us forever. But, "it is what it is" and we can't live in the past or so I tell myself. But, I cannot forget it either. Those dear Marines and Corpsman who lost their lives that day will live on in our memories for as long as we do...and I hope for many more carried on by our descendents. They will be forever young in our minds as we age and eventually pass on to our eternal reward. I pray we will see them again one day and all will be revealed to us.

There are some days when I feel like Lt Dan in Forrest Gump...that my name should have been on that Wall too! Then I would have been forever young too! That only seems to happen around this time of year for some darn reason. But that was not to be our fate...instead, we are responsible for carrying on the memories of our "Brothers in Arms".
As always your brother.

NEWS YOU CAN USE

S2617,the Veterans Compensation Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act of 2008, was signed into law by President George W. Bush today; Wednesday, September 24, 2008. S2617, will provide for a cost-of-living increase in disability compensation for disabled veterans and their families, effective December 1, 2008--you'll see it in your January 1, 2009 compensation--so as to protect the benefits from the impact of rising inflation.

This year's cost-of-living increase, which will be equal to the annual Social Security increase, has yet to be determined; but will most likely be in the 6% range, which is twice the normal VA COLA increase.

Mack

The COLA increases provided by the VA or SS are not "normal" or predetermined. These increases are also "not automatic." They are tied to the Consumer Price Index (CPI) as determined by the US Department of Labor. This index is determined based of surveys on the "cost of living." Increases is SS are "hard coded" into law whereas the increases for VA compensation has to be voted on by Congress and signed into law by the President. Although COLA increases have always been granted to recipients of VA payments, it is conceivable this legislation and approval by the President may not occur in the future, Just a thought .

Leland Upshaw

As far as I'm concerned it's election year politics. So I totally agree with Leland's comment, ". . . it is conceivable this legislation and approval by the President may not occur in the future." The Long and the short of it is that this is what disabled veterans and their families will get THIS year. Will worry 'bout next year if/when it comes.

MEMORIAL DAY MEMORIES

A previous written story, one published in Red Clay, but I think it still speaks for the moment.

FLAGS

By Craig Tourte

I always fly my flags during the Memorial Day (3 day) holiday. I have a fairly bright American flag and a rather old faded Marine Corps flag. Of course Memorial Day is not the only time I erect the flags outside of my home. I also put them out on January 21st and on the Marine Corps Birthday. I was driving around town yesterday and I noted a rather lack of flags flying from the neighborhood houses and businesses. I don't think it is a lack of patriotism but rather an exhibition new generations have not yet recognized. We all know there is a war going on, but to be perfectly honest the war seems to only touch those who have a hand in the conflict. For the most part, Americans continue to just go about their business and only slightly follow the sacrifices made by so many, a familiar experience I might add.

Years ago I had a small California flag I flew from a pole over our bunker at Khe Sanh before we moved into the trenches. We soon realized that what we thought of at the time as a bunker was really no more than some barrels filled with dirt and a few sand bags over the top of the above ground target, which proved inadequate. Somehow, in all of the confusion and craziness, that little red clay stained, faded and tattered California flag made its way back home with me. I kept it in the sea bag I had with all of my other Marine Corps memorabilia, too small uniforms, covers and other assorted odd and ends. For some reason I liked keeping the stuff around, but at the time I wasn't sure why. As much as that poor little flag went through; the Vietnam War, the Siege at Khe Sanh, Okinawa, El Toro and back to MCRD San Diego, it somehow managed to survive all the moves I made as a young man finding his way after the war.

Unfortunately, my little flag didn't survive my biggest struggle and greatest failure of all, my first marriage. There was something about "why are you keeping this old junk around the house? You know, wives can sometimes just drive one crazy, and I am afraid my little flag didn't survive the marriage either. I don't know why, but I find myself wishing I still had that little flag, something to remember and look back on, a very personal time for me and for so many others. Now when I fly my American and Marine Corps flags, I know deep down and see in

BY CHAPLAIN RAY WILLIAM STUBBE

By Sunday, 28 January 1968, the Khe Sanh siege battle had raged exactly one week. Once a lush area, full of life, Khe Sanh no longer appeared "a thing of beauty, a joy forever."[1] Friends died. Friends were wounded.[2] Suddenly, all was transformed into a moonscape, a wasteland, as all above-ground structures, now piles of rubble, reminded some of World War I trench warfare, Ezekiel's vision of the battlefield valley of dry bones,[3] or one of those ghost towns of the wild West, except that this place teemed with life. Khe Sanh was alive with death, with the force of death which, with a spiritual power of super-human force devouring all life to feed its ravenous, ravaging raptor appetite. "The earth is broken, broken down. The earth crumbled to pieces. The earth trembled and tottered. The earth reeled to and fro like a drunken man."[4]

Everyone, now emotionally numb, faced the jaws of the dragon of death, went through it (like Jonah devoured by the monster),[5] and emerged enabled to live—to live on a different dimension of existence: dashing out to drag a wounded man to safety while mortars and screeching rockets still exploded, oblivious to danger, giving a last drop of precious water, a last morsel of C-ration food to another, thirsty, hungry soul—giving to Jesus Himself,[6] maintaining a sense of humor bravely living free of fear, giving and sharing, affirming humanity in a "courage to be"[7] in the face of the abyss of death and negation, as spectacular plums of yellow napalm's billowing fire balls, as sudden spikes of white phosphorus fireworks exploding right in front of us on the ground, and clumps of earth flung skyward then plunging to the earth to break the leg of a Marine,[8] endlessly played symphonic battle music resonating within our soul. An army of rats increased proportionally with an army of reporters and an army of enemy surrounding us. Everyone dug, deeper, deeper.

We learned that life is short, precious, and fragile. We learned that life lives as it is connected to other life. We learned we could never again depend on the probability of another day, another moment, as life moves through a minefield. We learned who we were. Many learned that God is always present; and ministers, attributing their calling to experiences of God's presence in this horror, within this devastation, on the cross, or as James Russell Lowell put it, "truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne / yet that scaffold sways the future / and beyond the dim unknown / standeth God within the shadows, keeping watch above His own."[10]

A wounded man on a stretcher asks for the words of the 91st Psalm, words which resonated our life experience at that time, in that place: "He will deliver you from the snare of the fowler [the one who catches birds in a cage, like the NVA encircling, caging us] and from the deadly pestilence [of ever-present death, illness, wounding]... You shall not fear the terror of the night [in the form of 40,000 NVA creeping closer, closer, attacking] nor the arrow that flies by day [rockets, artillery, mortar shells, sniper bullets], nor the pestilence that stalks in darkness, nor the destruction that wastes at noonday. A thousand may fall at your side [friendly casualties],[11] ten thousand at your right hand ["right hand" referring to our power: the NVA casualties] [12]...He will command his angels concerning you to guard you in all your ways.. I will be with him in trouble, I will rescue him.. "[13]

Colonel Wilkinson informed me that gatherings of more than half a dozen or so were prohibited: "One mortar round could get all of you," he said. Worship now became a matter of going from trench to trench, bunker to bunker, throughout the combat base, with numerous small congregations and a worship service not more than ten minutes long—a prayer, a Bible reading, a two or three-sentence sermon, distributing Communion, the Lord's Prayer, and blessing, followed by listening, conversation, and perhaps if the shelling were too intense, simply a few hugs.

Everything about Saturday, 27 January 1968, and Sunday, 28 January 1968 was to have lasting impact on my life.[14] My diary entries:

> SATURDAY, 27 January 1968: I woke up extremely sick—nausea, headache, diarrhea, etc., and walked over to the COC, providentially in time for the morning briefing. I didn't know whether I could take it, feeling I might have to vomit at any minute, but managed to remain. Lt/Col Wilkinson mentioned we have dropped 500-pound bombs with 3, 6, and 9-hour delays, and many "bomblets" to prevent the enemy from coming into our position. The Air Force can give us 1,000 sorties a day. Last night, Co Roc, the mountain range in Laos, was Arc Lighted at midnight, and the fires kept burning until 0300... Returned to my bunker about 1000 and slept, exhausted, until 1500! At that time I decided to visit our BAS. Dr. Feldman examined me and said I had some swollen lymph glands in back of my neck and gave me some pills for the nausea and some orangeade. Hit the pad early.*
> SUNDAY, 28 January 1968: I got up and walked past the regimental S-4 where two reporters, camera dangling, asked if I could help them with some good pictures. I told them to walk with me as I planned to move about the base. I carried a brass cross and a wad of "A Message for the Day." My plan was to have a short opening prayer, read the appointed scripture lesson, distribute Communion, lead the Lord's Prayer, and conclude with a blessing. We started out, walking across the airstrip to arrive at the C Company, 1/26, lines in the Blue Sector on the north side of the base. It's always an emotional challenge to cross this wide-open space of aluminum metal with no place for cover should a barrage of incoming suddenly erupt. The first worship service was attended by five from the 2nd squad, 3rd platoon, which was clearing new lines east of the other positions where two ARVN Ranger battalions would set in today. I walked west to the first regular bunker. We had a fairly large gathering that got larger until some mortars came and we all scattered, one landing only about 25 feet away. So we waited and then I held a service for the 81mm mortar people (2nd squad, weapons platoon, C Co.), attended by 3. Half-way through the Lord's Prayer I felt the blood drain out* of my head. I was about to faint, but struggled until after the benediction, and then collapsed. After a short rest, I conducted another worship service a few feet away for others (consisting of C and B Co., 1/26, Marines and "flashlight" section), attended by 5. We came under sniper automatic fire. After that, the two reporters and I walked to our 1/26 COC. I went in and told Lt/Col Wilkinson I couldn't continue today. I had hoped to be able to get everyone, holding over a hundred worship services today. I must have looked sick and pale because he rushed me to the 1/26 BAS; he wouldn't let me walk there. My temperature was 101.6. (My "normal" temperature is 97). I was completely exhausted. Reporters of all agencies—UPI, Time, NY Times, Washington Post, Chicago, and even a lady from Germany, were living in the 1/26 BAS and mentioned to me that refugees from the 33rd Laotian Battalion, located just inside Laos, came for refuge to Lang Vei village. They were butchered by NVA units.

The photo appeared in various publications in sub sequent years, jolting me back to those days and those experiences and to feelings not then consciously felt but felt now with jarring intensity. It was only about three decades after the photograph was first published that I first "saw" it. The famous author, G.K. Chesterton, once wrote (something like), "Stare at something long enough until it becomes strange; you are seeing it for the first time." Suddenly, a horror bristled hairs at the back of my neck as I noticed I wasn't wearing a helmet, despite orders from Colonel Lownds three weeks earlier to wear one[18] and despite the obvious danger of which I was oblivious! Even more shocking, neither were any of the Marines wearing theirs! They obviously followed my example of remaining uncovered during prayer and worship! I had done this unconsciously and by habit , and now, as I saw the photo, with great gratitude, thanked the Lord none of us were wounded! Gunny George Bailey, NCOIC of the small Detachment, 1st Radio Company of III MAF, later remarked: "I saw you leading a small group of Marines near C Med. None of you were wearing helmets! I thought to myself, the audacity! I came to see what was going on. I joined the group and felt a peace in the midst of the chaos and battle, like being in the eye of a hurricane, while all around destruction raged." The true meaning of "peace" involves not the absence of conflict, war, noise, or disturbance, but the presence of strength in these conditions.

Those appearing in the photograph are:[19] LCPL Huey Lee ("Ray") Ishman[20] (KIA 19 Nov 1969), PFC Daniel L. Hobart,[21] PFC Kenneth Pae[22] (who has "Chicago Ill The Best Place is Home" on his flak jacket, WIA 02 Feb and 18 Mar 1968), and LCPL Charles H. Fox.[23] (Next to Ken Pae is a man Dan Hobart identified as PFC James A. Loesch[24]but whom Charlie Fox felt to be too small, and identified him as PFC James D. Heath[25] (WIA 02 Apr 1968), but Heath denies being in this picture.[26] According to Charles Fox, Ishman was medevaced shortly after the photo was taken with a "sleeping sickess," and Ken Pae was "a tough street kid from Chicago."[27]

appeared in numerous military newspapers noting the 193rd anniversary of the U.S. Navy Chaplain Corps in 1968, and many others.[29] (Back Cover Issue 71)

The Reid photograph, in the form of a line drawing by Sgt Henry Casselli[30] depicting a Marine with a M60 machinegun superimposed on the top appeared on the front cover of the December, 1969, issue of Leatherneck (Page 44A) (with a green background) and the December, 1976, issue of the Marine Corps Gazette[31] (Page 44 B) (in dark blue). The original, titled Christmas Vietnam, is an orange-toned tissue paper overlay highlighted with cream acrylic. "He painted it on the scene while serving a regular Vietnam tour as a Marine sergeant and combat artist where he won the Bronze Star with Combat "V".[32]

Maria Raffaele, an artist living in Oregon, painted a large version of the Swanson photo she saw in the Life magazine for the National Cemetery in Willamette, Oregon.[34] (Back Cover Issue 71) She looked with deep sadness at flatbed truck after flatbed truck carried lone caskets up the road to the cemetery with no cars following them, and wanted to do something "for the boys." The large painting, in the small reception room of the cemetery, was painted in 90 days and donated to the cemetery. She altered the sky: "It's all kinds of warm browns and then you can see the sun beams breaking through. I wanted to give a vision of hope."[35] A newspaper article noted: "The Vietnam War trudged past her doorstep, and she felt helpless, until she fought back with her tools: a brush, a canvas and tubes of oil paint. She painted soldiers [sic., Marines!] bowing on their knees with a chaplain leading them in prayer. A shaft of light hovered overhead, illuminating her vision of hope. She gave the 4-by-8-foot painting to the cemetery... It's a metaphor for what matters to this artist: the needs of others. Making a difference."[36] Vergori had studied in Florence, Italy, and for more than half a century has painted character studies and landscapes.

Mr. Ken Burnett, a Marine who served with the reinforcing platoon from Delta Company, 3rd Reconnaissance Co., augmenting the lines of Bravo Company, 3rd Recon Bn, at Khe Sanh during the siege battle, returned to Vietnam in 2002 and saw an enlargement of "the photo" in a Vietnamese War Museum[37] with a caption that read: "Marines pray for their lives at Khe Sanh, but all were eventually killed."[38] (Page 46B)

One evening, while leisurely watching a DVD of the last episode , "The Root of all Evil," of the TV series, Profiler, second season series, I suddenly was jolted back to the siege battle at Khe Sanh by the sudden (and totally unexpected!) flash of the Swanson photo! It appeared five times in the program which focused on "pictures of pain!"[39] Sudden PTSD!

Then, during an evening drive down one of our local Milwaukee streets one dark December, thoroughly drained of all energy after an intense workout boxing , suddenly a cut-out, enlarged reproduction of the Reid photo filled my vision like some billboard! The property was occupied by Mr. Joel Paplham, a man I had never previously met who, although not a veteran himself, devotes much of his time and energy to assist veterans. Mr. Paplham had also erected a "larger-than-life" cut-out depicting the photo on the Veterans Park at the lakeside of Lake Michigan in downtown Milwaukee, (Page 46A) but was later forced to remove it. He was also forced to remove it from his front yard display by his alderman, Marty Weigel.[40]

Another enlargement, based on the Swanson photo, of multi-layered cut-outs, formed a large portion of a special exhibit in the Wisconsin State Veterans Museum, Madison, Wisconsin, a first-class museum visited by over 30,000 a year, mainly students. The exhibit, "In the Belly of the Dragon," was on display 23 September 2006—18 April 2008. (Page 45B) A similar enlargement forms part of the Chaplain Corps display at the National Marine Corps Museum, Quantico, Virginia. (Page 44C)

[12]NVA casualties were estimated to 10,000—20,000 KIA. "Bru villagers south and west of Khe Sanh reported at least 2,000 and possibly 10,000 were killed by bombing. Casualties due to secondary explosions and fires from destruction and damage to guns, bunkers, supply dumps, headquarters, and structures, although not capable of being accurately counted, must have been high. Assuming 2 NVA soldiers per secondary explosion, with over 6,000 secondary explosions and fires, 12,000 may be conservatively estimated. Some of these explosions continued several hours. Approximately 900 bunkers were destroyed, some of which must have been occupied. 300 gun positions were destroyed. A Navy doctor (Dr. Stan Jurgenson, Naval Hospital, Beaufort, SC.) asked me, "Do you want to stay in the Navy? We can give you a medical board. This disease will return within twenty years and kill you." On this basis, knowing that at any time I may die, I made a decision to remain in the Navy, avoid a civilian parish, and avoid marriage and children, for I thought it would not be loving to enter marriage and fatherhood when, at any time, I might die. Of course, as I write this in 2008, I'm still very much alive and give the Lord the glory "who heals all your diseases." (Psalm 103.3). Another lasting result of these days was Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) which caused, among other effects, decreased short-term memory loss due to shrinkage of the hippocampus in the brain, a malady suffered by exposure to intense and sustained combat, and also such debilitating effects as inability to develop intimacy and closeness to others, a devastating effect for pastors!

MEDICAL NEWS UPDATE

By Michael Fishbaugh

ALS AS A PRESUMPTIVE COMPENSABLE ILLNESS

VA Secretary Establishes ALS as a Presumptive Compensable Illness September 23, 2008 Cites Association between Military Service and Later Development of ALS WASHINGTON Veterans with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) may receive badly-needed support for themselves and their families after the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) announced today that ALS will become a presumptively compensable illness for all veterans with 90 days or more of continuously active service in the military. Veterans are developing ALS in rates higher than the general population, and it was appropriate to take action, Secretary of Veterans Affairs Dr. James B. Peake said. Secretary Peake based his decision primarily on a November 2006 report by the National Academy of Sciences Institute of Medicine (IOM) on the association between active-duty service and ALS. We are extremely grateful to Secretary Peake, Congressman Henry Brown and Senator Lindsey Graham for standing on the side of veterans with ALS across the country, said Gary Leo, president and CEO of The ALS Association. Thanks to their leadership, veterans with ALS will receive the benefits and care they need, when they need them. Thanks to their efforts, no veteran with ALS will ever be left behind

The report, titled Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis in Veterans: Review of the Scientific Literature, analyzed numerous previous studies on the issue and concluded that there is limited and suggestive evidence of an association between military service and later development of ALS.

ALS is a disease that progresses rapidly, once it is diagnosed, the Secretary explained. There simply isn't time to develop the evidence needed to support compensation claims before many veterans become seriously ill. My decision will make those claims much easier to process, and for them and their families to receive the compensation they have earned through their service to our nation.

ALS, also called Lou Gehrig s disease, is a neuromuscular disease that affects about 20,000 to 30,000 people of all races and ethnicities in the United States, is often relentlessly progressive, and is almost always fatal.

ALS causes degeneration of nerve cells in the brain and spinal cord that leads to muscle weakness, muscle atrophy, and spontaneous muscle activity. Currently, the cause of ALS is unknown, and there is no effective treatment.

The new interim final regulation applies to all applications for benefits received by VA on or after September 23, 2008, or that are pending before VA, the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, or the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit on that date.

VA will work to identify and contact veterans with ALS, including those whose claims for ALS were previously denied, through direct mailings and other outreach programs.

To a large degree, "thought stopping" will control our behavior. For example, if we find ourselves thinking negative thoughts, we can replace the thoughts with something that we know will stir our emotions in a positive way. It may be listening to your favorite song, it may be a love letter from your spouse, a card from your child, a beautiful poem, or a passage from your favorite book."

"Thought stopping" has saved my life and family relationships on numerous occasions. Just learning this simple technique to change the direction of your thoughts could make the difference between a long marriage and divorce, or suicide and life.

I believe the following scripture addresses some of the issues I have mentioned. I believe God gives mental health professionals their skills.

"Today I give you the choice between life and death, between blessings and curses. I call on heaven and earth to witness the choice you make. Oh, that you and your descendants might live! Choose to love the Lord your God and to obey him, for he is your life. Then you will live long in the land... Deuteronomy 30:19-20
New Living Testament

"Others died that you might live. I traded their lives for yours because you are precious to me. You are honored, and I love you."

Isaiah 43:4
New Living Testament

There have been over one million men and women who have sacrificed their lives serving the United States of America. What the rest of us owe these individuals is to live a happy, healthy, and purposeful life so that they have not died in vain. If there is a possibility that the problems in your life are caused by PTSD, do yourself and your loved ones a favor and please seek professional mental health care. PTSD is treatable. As hard headed as I am, I did it and it is well worth it. My daily goal is for my grandchildren to know a better person than the one my wife and children have had to endure.

DAV ANNOUNCES NEW PRO BONO PROGRAM AT VETERANS COURT

By Mack

Before you hire a lawyer to fight your claim with the VA, try looking into this. I've been fortunate, I've had pretty good luck with the VA thanks to the DAV; however I readily recognize that not everybody has been so fortunate. It all boils down to the effectiveness of the individual Veterans Service Officer (VSO). We at the Khe Sanh Veterans Association are fortunate in that we have one of the very best VSOs, David Lord. So use every asset available to you to fight for what you've earned before spending any money.

DAV Announces New Pro Bono Program at Veterans' Court Disabled American Veterans 807 Maine Avenue, SW Washington, D. C. 20024 Phone (202) 554-3501Fax (202) 863-0233
Washington, D. C.

The Disabled American Veterans has accepted a proposal from Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett and Dunner, one of the nation's leading law firms, to offer free representation at the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims to certain veterans referred by DAV.

"This new arrangement will provide even more resources to disabled veterans seeking to obtain benefits from the Department of Veterans Affairs," said DAV National Adjutant Arthur H. Wilson. "In a number of cases, they will now be able to access the resources of Finnegan and its very talented lawyers in exercising their right to independent judicial review of benefit decisions."

Under the agreement, Finnegan will offer pro bono representation at the U. S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims to certain veterans referred by DAV. All in all, Finnegan will likely handle between 100 and 200 cases each year at the court, all of which will be selected from the thousands that DAV handles and will continue to handle at VA's Board of Veterans' Appeals.

"The DAV's foremost concern continues to be ensuring that disabled veterans have the very best representation possible as they pursue their claims for disability compensation and other earned benefits from the VA," said Wilson. "We are very pleased that a prestigious firm such as Finnegan has volunteered to provide pro bono services to our nation's veterans and their families, services that will complement our cast program of representation by National Appeals Officers, National Service Officers, Transition Service Officers, Department Service Officers and Chapter Service Officers."

The DAV was the first veterans service organization to submit an appellate brief to the veterans court after it was established in 1988 and was the first organization to present oral argument by a non-attorney practitioner. The DAV also won the first fact-based decision handed down by the court. The DAV also has long been a leader in developing programs to provide pro bono representation to veteran claimants. For example, in 1992, that DAV partnered with the Veterans Consortium to establish a pro bono program that continues to this day.

The 1.4 million-member Disabled American Veterans, a non-profit organization founded in 1920 and chartered by the U. S. Congress in 1932, represents this nation's disabled veterans. It is dedicated to a single purpose; building better lives for our nation's disabled veterans and their families.

I GET LETTERS

Gerald Bickford, SSgt, USAF, 8th Aerial Port Squadron

I want to personally thank the association for publishing the article in the Spring 2008 edition of "Red Clay" concerning the Air Force Aerial Port mobility teams and their efforts. Most gratifying was the story of one person in particular, SSgt Gerald Bickford shown in two separate photographs. The man was a legend among Air Force Aerial Port personnel. On one hand he was as mean as a striped snake and on the other he was as gentle as a lamb. I know that Gerald stayed in Vietnam for at least five years (1966-1971). I have been told that he was there in 1972, but I'm not sure of that. He extended his tour time after time and simply wouldn't go home as long as our boys are in the bush. That was his philosophy. He would say "they need me out there", and that's where he stayed most of the time.

I don't know if it is true but legend has it that he once fell out of a Chinook about forty feet to the ground and when the dust cleared he could be seen standing there without a scratch motioning the chopper to sit back down to pick him up. I did not witness that so I cannot attest to the authenticity of the story. One thing I did witness first hand was him opening a tin of c-rations with his teeth and did just as good a job as a P38. He was the strongest and toughest man I ever knew.

About 2-3 days before Christmas of 1970, someone told me that he was out of the bush and was cooking on a barrel out behind the MOB hut at Tan Son Nhut. I was within just a few days of DEROS and knew this would probably be the last time I would get to see him. I rushed over there and I've always been glad that I did because it was indeed the last time I ever saw the man. Gerald is gone now. He died of cancer in 1995, at age 55, a terrible loss. Like many Vietnam veterans, time seems to erase my memories of certain places, events and people, but there's always a person or two that will stick with you all the way to the grave and Gerald Bickford is one of those. The man would make any sacrifice and bear any burden to get supplies to the Army Special Forces and to the Marines. He loved them all like brothers. Maybe Gerald should have been a Marine because he certainly lived Semper Fi every day of his life.

It is tough getting old; alright I know you have heard this before and most of us are just lucky to be here. I'm certainly not ungrateful to have made it this far, but as I scan the obituaries, I realize we are next. I pull into the parking lot of the grocery store, struggle on old tired knees and sore back to get out of the car, slowly rise into an upright position, and on wobbly legs stumble a little hunched over, towards the store entrance. To my left I notice an unusual number of folks standing behind another vehicle. I don't know what has drawn my attention to them, it is certainly not unusual to see people in the parking lot of a grocery store, but there was something going on out of the norm which I couldn't quite make out.

I walked into the store, took a grocery cart and stopped at the window as I once again glanced in the direction of the group of folks who grabbed my attention. There was a man and woman about my age, a couple of teenage girls and four or five young men in their late teens or early twenties. Nothing unusual about that except one of the young men had a real short hair cut. I noticed that he seemed to be receiving a great deal of attention from the others. I watched as the older lady reached up and rubbed the hair of this young man. I could not hear what they were saying but I did notice all were looking at him with what appeared to be great admiration.

I observed the other young men were wearing their hair a little longer than the one receiving all the attention and I seemed to notice a certain amount of respect in their faces as they looked at their friend standing in the middle of this little group. As they said their goodbyes and started to break up and get into their cars I was able to see the young man who was the center of everyone's attention. Besides his short hair he was wearing a dark shirt that had gold and red letters USMC on the front. It all made sense to me, all the admiration, attention and smiles of approval.

I thought back when I graduated from boot camp in 1966. A half dozen or so relatives showed up at the MCRD San Diego Recruit Depots. I remember the photograph of them all around me as we stood just outside the doors of the theater. I must have been very proud of myself. Of course those folks are all gone, and I am older now than everyone in that photograph was then. My uncle was there, he served on submarines during the 2nd World War. You remember that one, the war to end all wars; just a little over twenty some years prior to my graduation in 1966, that war seemed so long ago to me then.

I stumble and complain as my body parts slowly fail and I am reminded once again of my mortality. As I paused and glance at the gathering in the parking lot, I see a little of myself those many years ago, so full of hopes and dreams and looking forward to a great adventure in the Marine Corps. I take a moment to reflect and I'm appreciative of those who went before me and for those whom I served with. I wonder if years from now that young Marine will take the time to reflect back to this moment and remember how proud he was and how he was so admired. He'll never know an old man was watching his little group, wondering about all of this. Just as well I suppose.

GOING BACK

By Craig Tourte

I was watching television the other night viewing the story about a Marine Corps Sergeant who had lost his leg in Iraq. The focus of the story was that the Sergeant now with a prosthesis, trained really hard and was now back in Iraq doing what he loved, once again participating in combat operations.

Steve Wiese (B/1/26) was on his eight month extended tour while he served at Khe Sanh during the horrific 77 day Siege of the combat base and was one of the few survivors of the Ghost Patrol and then volunteered for the savage Revenge Patrol some weeks later. I asked Steve why he extended, why he pushed his luck so to speak, after engaging in so many combat operations during his regular tour. I'm not sure I received an adequate answer from him, perhaps he didn't have one, perhaps he didn't really know himself. It was just something he did, no that may not be strong enough; it may have been something he just had to do.

I went all through the 77 day grind of the Siege with Fred Louis Thomas, Jr. only to find out years later he had extended his tour and was KIA. I have asked myself why he extended. It was not like Fred was unaware of the danger and deprivation. He certainly was experienced and knowledgeable of the possible consequences of battle. I guess it was something he had to do, the answer died with him but I'm sure the question with his family remains.

I was very proud to have had the honor of meeting Jeremiah W. Workman at our last Khe Sanh Reunion in Washington D.C. Corporal Workman received the Navy Cross for heroic action in support of Iraqi Freedom. Although injured, he led a third assault into the building, rallying his team one last time to extract isolated Marines. Corporal Workman was kind enough to give me a private tour of the Pentagon. We walked down the long hollowed hallways and into the office of the Commandant of the Marine Corps. I was very impressed with his spirit and love of the Corps and so were the Marine Officers who stood up when he (we) entered. During our conversations I asked Corporal Workman about his current assignment, which seemed like a dream to any enlisted Marine. At the end of one of his sentences he said to me, I want to go back. What I asked, you want to go back to Iraq? As I looked at the expression on his face I saw the same expression Steve Wiese had when I asked him about why he extended his tour. It's just one of those things that doesn't make any sense to some people, but of course to others, it makes all the sense in the world. One could say it's all about being a Marine, but of course it's much more complicated than that.

When Tom Horchler drove us off the plateau after the Siege, I knew it was over for me. I did not feel I could have survived another tour in Vietnam. Going back to Vietnam to serve another tour never made sense to me; I guess I never had that expression on my face, the same expression I have seen in so many others. I was never asked, nor did I have to try to find an answer to explain the unexplainable. Explaining and describing my first and only tour, is difficult enough.

MEMORIES ARE ALL WE HAVE

By Craig Tourte

It seems that some folks just want and need to be seen as somebody. As I scan the television programs of today, most of the military situation stories are related to the current involvement in the Middle East. Vietnam, well that's old tired news I'm afraid. I've tried to get over this Vietnam thing, certainly I have read more books about that conflict than I can remember and I have tried to see and judge people as individuals. Come on, it's been forty years since I was involved in that historical event; certainly my heart is healed at this advanced stage in my life. I was watching the news yesterday and the story was about a Vietnamese born man who is now a Captain in the Local Sheriff's Department. Speaking in a heavy accent he told how he was born in Vietnam but came over to the United States for a better education. I thought back, looking for a positive and found that the man and his family would never have come here - for that better education - had it not been for men like you and I who sacrificed so dearly for him - and his countrymen - to have been granted that privilege. I have to confess my heart skipped a few beats and my stomach turned as I saw the guy wearing the same uniform I once wore and I am at a complete loss as to why I would have such a reaction.

Memories are all we have, and as we slowly die off as a result of various age and exposure related illnesses, I sense an increase in the squabbling, threats, verbal attempts at intimidation and disagreements we are having. In short, in our advanced years we're just darn hard to get along with, even amongst ourselves. And I'm quite sure I fit all of the above. Seems I'm mostly in a rotten mood; of course it's not my fault.

I have a Khe Sanh sticker on the back of my truck; a few years ago I'd get some honks and waves from people in other cars. Occasionally one would pass and I'd see a Marine Corps sticker on their vehicle and I'd wave back. But I don't get waves anymore; no one honks or acknowledges the words Khe Sanh. The sad truth is, the world has turned over many times since our gallant stance against overwhelming odds, and for the most part, our time of recognition has passed as more recent battles, conflicts, losses and tragedies have occurred.

That said - I am still amazed at the number of those who claim to be Vietnam Veterans and in particular having served at Khe Sanh. So there must be something about us - something special - that draws those our age to our experience, who so want to be associated with that experience that they risk arrest and ridicule for their misstatements about their participation. I'm occasionally shocked that some claim not only to have served at Khe Sanh but to have been involved in heroic action and formally recognized with awards, ribbons and medals, making the claim they were heroes.

My once proudly worn uniform is way too small, hanging in the closet gathering dust, a sad reminder of my own deterioration. My REMF/I was there, ribbons and medals have long been stored away. I was not a hero nor was I recognized for any heroic deeds. I have few stories of any real combat experiences to share with anyone, mostly digging and trying to survive. The Khe Sanh sticker on my old truck is peeling away, looking like I often feel. I'm afraid memories are all I have left, along with a few darn good friends I have had the privilege of serving with.

MEMORIAL DAY A PERSONAL ACCOUNT

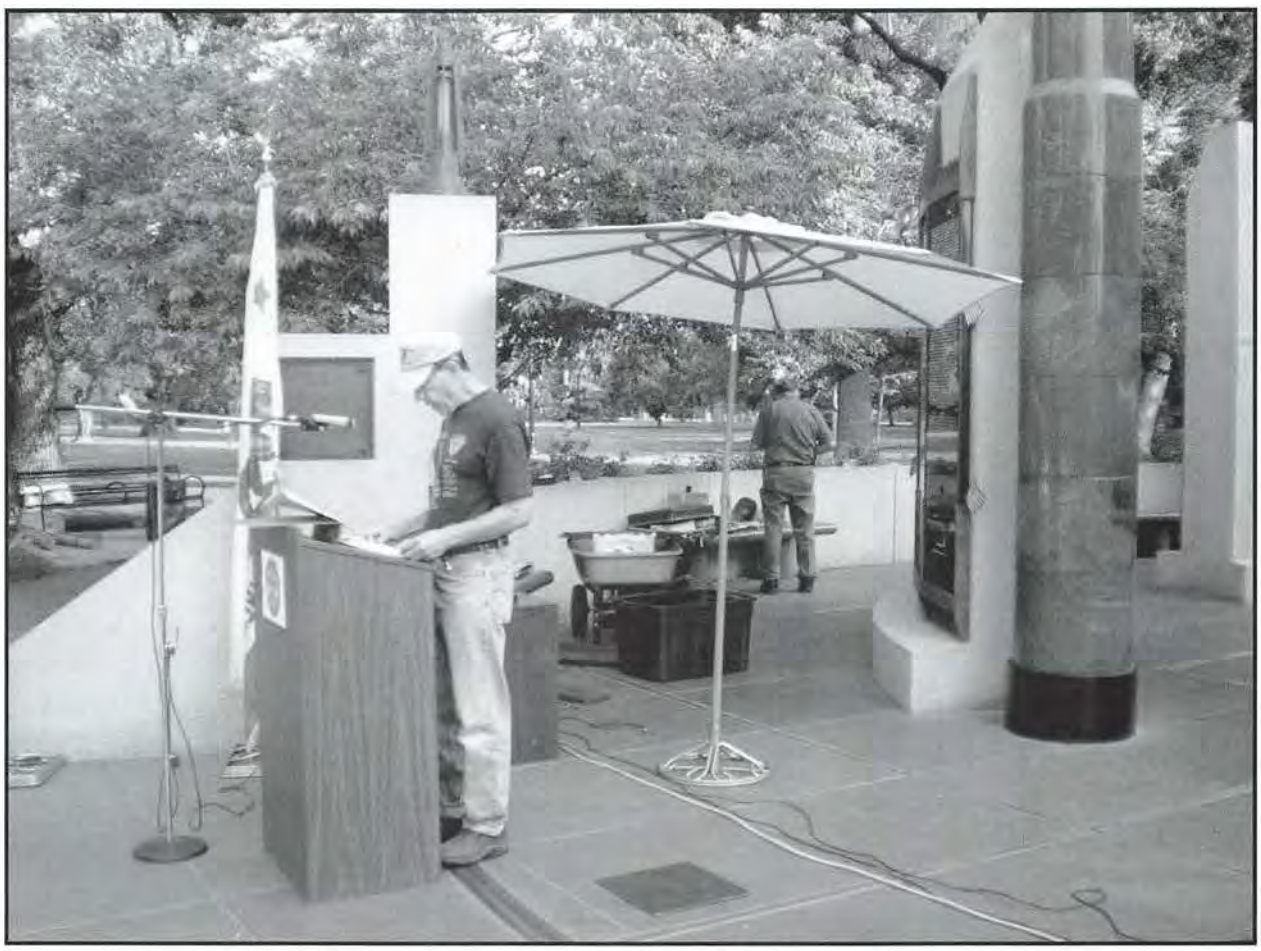
By Craig W. Tourte

Memorial Day in Sacramento

I have been thinking about this all night, And was just going to let it pass because there has been so much acknowledgement of the Memorial Day of recognition. Some attended parades; many wrote on the board, some made reference to articles and events. There was attention drawn to individuals, units and battles and the memory of those lost. I'm sure each in their own way paid tribute to their fallen brothers.

The state of California paid a high price in lost heroes to the War in Vietnam. Around 10 percent of the total casuality figure, over 5,800 brave Californians lost their lives in Vietnam. Countless were wounded and many retain the physical and emotional scars of that brutal conflict. But regardless of the state they were from, each of those lost in that distant and now long ago war, is just as important as the other, and especially on Memorial Day, do we remember them all.



ERNIE SPENCER FROM DELTA CO 1/26 READING NAMES OF THOSE ON MEMORIAL WALL

Like most states, California has a Memorial dedicated to Vietnam Veterans and the names of those killed are inscribed on large copper plates. Each Memorial Day the local chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America gathers volunteers to read each name at the Memorial which takes approximately twelve hours. Each name is read slowly with the rank and military service the deceased served with.

Ernie Spencer who is the former Commanding Officer of Delta Company, 1st Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment invited us to attend the reading of the names. This is a public event and I don't know why I have never attended before. I took my "Khe Sanh Veterans, Home Is Where Dig It" banner you have seen at the reunions, and set it up near the garden in full view. Steve Wiese (B/1/26) drove over to the Memorial with me. Pete Torres (G/2/26) was there with his wife, as was Marco Soto (A/1/26) and Robert Leon, a former Marine friend of Ernie's. Ernie very reverently read the names for half an hour, we realizing it took an emotional toll on him, as it also affected the rest of us.

Carrie Pepper was kind enough to join our small group of Khe Sanh Veterans. As a reminder, Carrie's brother Anthony John "Tony" Pepper was a member of G/2/26. "On April 6, 1968, G Company engaged a large communist force in heavy combat on a grassy hillside (861) overlooking and in view of the Khe Sanh Combat Base." Tony was killed and unfortunately his body was never recovered. I had never met Carrie before this day but of course I knew her immediately as she approached and introduced herself. You know, we say when we first meet another Khe Sanh Veteran that it seems like we have known each other for years (a conversation I had with Marco Soto who I also had met for the first time.) A few minutes talking to Carrie and I knew she was one of us. I was deeply moved observing that she had placed a photograph of her brother on the Memorial wall. Carrie was kind enough to sign the banner in remembrance of her brother. He too was with us that day.

Steve and I only remained a couple of hours, but returned later that evening. I think the second visit was a bit more personal for us. Perhaps a little quieter, giving the both us the opportunity to reflect and remember. A Memorial Day that was difficult but fulfilling for all of us, a Memorial Day that I am sure each of us will always remember.

ASSUALT AGAINST KHE SANH TOPS
APRIL MARINE ACTION
By Gy/Sgt Ron Harwood

Until the last six days of the month, April had few significant contacts between Marines in I Corps and enemy forces.

From the 24th on, however, the action was furious as elements of the Third and Ninth Marine Regiments foiled the North Vietnamese Army's planned assault and take over of the Khe Sanh Area.

In the action at Khe Sanh, the artilleryman and jet pilots were a prime element in dislodging the North Vietnamese from their bunkers on Hills 861, 881North and South. The guns fired more than 11,000 rounds at the enemy positions while Marine air was dropping more than 1,000 tons of ordnance in five days.

Other enemy attempts in the northern most province of South Vietnam to silence Marine and Army artillery came almost nightly as they poured mortar shells and rockets into Gia Linh and other points south of the demilitarized zone. Their efforts failed, however, and the big guns continued their accurate support of ground units throughout the month.

Enemy mortars and rockets also struck at Chu Lai, Dong Ha, Phu Bai and Khe Sanh during the month. Little damage was caused by any of the attacks.

In all, the Marine air-ground team killed 1,649 enemy soldiers during April. Also 248 individual and 11 crew served weapons were captured by Leathernecks.

To the south, Task Force Oregon, a multi brigade U.S. Army force commanded by Maj/Gen William B. Rosson, started operating in Quang Ngal and Quang Tin province.

Four days later, Chu Lai based Task Force X-Ray, 1st Marine Division, was dissolved, and its operating elements moved northward to bolster other Marine units in the northern three provinces of South Vietnam.

In significant small unit action, a company of the 1st Marine Regiment made contact with a large enemy force 20 miles south of Danang on 22 April. Two other companies of the 1st Marines were lifted in to help as were elements of the Fifth Marine Regiment. With the arrival of reinforcements, the enemy broke contact.

In the air, Marine Jet pilots flew 369 missions north of the DMZ, and 6,860 sorties in South Vietnam. There were 38,348 helicopter sorties flown by Marine aircraft, and Leatherneck C-130's.

ENEMY FOUGHT REAL HARD

"The enemy fought real hard, was well coordinated, well armed and a pro," Lt/Col W. J. Masterpool (Solway, NY.) operation officer for Marine operations west of here," said as he summed up the capabilities of North Vietnamese troops in the area. He compared the enemy's fighting qualities with those of the NVA that Marines opposed during operation Hastings.

In 10 Days of action Marines killed a total of 551 North Vietnamese near here.

"The enemy used every weapon available said Lt/Col E.R. Delong, commander of the 2nd Bn. Third Marine Regiment, following the assault against 881North.

Captain R. W. Swigart, company commander of M Co , 3rd Bn. Ninth Marines, who took part in the assault on 881South, described the enemy as "hard, hard core."

"they had staying power that was unbelievable , they were good."

Major W.E. Fogo, operations officer at Khe Sanh said aerial observers had spotted well fortified bunkers on almost every ridge line in the area.

KHE SANH MARINES SUPPLIED; SUPPORT GROUP DOUBLES EFFORT

Since the intense enemy action began against Marine forces in the Khe Sanh area April 24 a Logistic Support Unit has been support the "In Action" Leathernecks with over 60,000 Lbs of supplies daily.

The Khe Sanh LSU, an extension of Force Logistic Support Group "Alpha" at Phu Bai has been doubling their supply efforts to effectively support the battalions in addition to artillery batteries.

Originally the LSU established in December, 1966, and designed to support one battalion, the LSU specialist, some 60 Marines, are meeting the needs of the Marines engaging the enemy forces in the northwest section of I corps.

"The Marines were never out of anything," said Major John Weeks of Willard, Ohio, and officer in charge of the LSU, "and they were probably better supplied than any other previous operation," he added.

The initial supply and resupply operations to some 3,000 Marines in the field, was completely airlifted by Marine helicopter units operating from the Khe Sanh Airstrip.

In addition to supplying the troops in the field, the LSU provides enough class "A": food to feed over a thousand people housed at the Khe Sanh compound.

Most of the supplies received at the airstrip staging area were flown into Khe Sanh on a "round the clock" schedule by Marine and Air Force transport aircraft. The major portion of cargo came from the Force Logistic Command units at Danang."The single mode of resupply by helicopter was not the first time an operations was not provided additional means of resupply transportation," stated Major Weeks, "since the action was some 5,000 meters from our supply staging area, no vehicle convoys or surface ships could gain access to the troops in the field," he added.

We could fully load a helicopter with "C" rations, water, individual equipment and ammunition and get it out to the action sites within 15 to 25 minutes," said Lt. Robert E. Johnson of Northfield, Minn., assistant office in charge of LSU. "When the operation began, we had some problems trying to make stable LZ's for cargo deliveries,: Johnson said. "The troops were moving at such a rapid pace the LZ's were changing constantly, stretching the supply route and requiring immediate supply needs as they moved ahead."

"We frequently had to pace our resupply runs in between artillery firing missions and helicopter medevac flights, "stated Johnson.," but we managed to meet all the demands from the field."

Captain James Ross of Seattle Washington, an artillery battery commander for the Twelfth Marines, is a firm believer in the supply efforts made by the LSU Marines.

"My artillery batteries has been firing an average of 1,500 rounds a day and there seems to be an endless stockpile of ammo," he said. "It's a dam good feeling."

Although the primary mission of the LSU was resupplying the troops in the field, another task equally important was the repair and maintenance of battle damaged equipment.

Increased combat activity dictated the increased need for rapid repair of weapons, communication equipment and disposing of captured enemy ordinance.

Contact teams trained in the repair of artillery tubes burned out from constant use, arrived to "beef-up" the LSU's increasing commitments. After the equipment was repaired, it was immediately airlifted to

Bronx, N.Y. "We keep the gear moving as long as our guys on the hills need the stuff. If we can't get it done in 24 hours, we'll do it in 25."

"This Kid Was Fantastic"

SEVEN MAN RECON PATROL FIGHTS OFF NVA COMPANY

By Cpl. Ray Wilkinson

KHE SANH... A seven man Marine reconnaissance patrol aided by an armada of gunships, fixed wing fighter bombers, and heavy artillery fought off an estimated North Vietnamese Army reinforced company for 12 hours in the heavy jungle west of here.

The NVA, operating from well-concealed bunkers, at times within two feet of the marines, were constantly driven back by the ring of fire.

After three unsuccessful attempts the beleaguered patrol was lifted out by a Huey helicopter.

Four members of the patrol were killed, and three seriously wounded. A CH-46 pilot tried to extract the team and was also killed. Several crew members of other helicopter were wounded.

Although wounded four times, first time at the beginning of the firefight, 18 year old PFC, Steve P. Lopez, of Silver Springs, MD., maintained unbroken radio contact with his parent unit of the 3Rd Force Recon Bn. And also directed air and artillery strikes.

"This kid was fantastic," said Captain A.B. Crosby of Annapolis, MD.

"He was the coolest individual I have ever seen. He kept calling in artillery closer and closer to his position. Back here they were actually scared to drop them closer. But he kept repeating "drop it closer, drop it closer."

Throughout the firefight Lopez never once mentioned that he had been hit. He kept saying, I'm alright."

"The first thing he said when he arrived back here was " check my camera I took some good flicks out there, and want to get them developed." It was amazing Lt. C.A. Mumford, Francesville, Indiana, pilot of the Huey gunship who patrolled the skies over the besieged Marines constantly for 12 hours, except for refueling, said, " Lopez was unbelievable. For 12 hours he was cool, calm, and never got exited. He told us where to shoot and passed on valuable information. The whole mission would have been impossible without him. He was the only one who could fight down there for several hours.

"He kept telling us he was alright and would not admit he had been hit in the head. He coordinated the whole mission."

The patrol was inserted about 5: 50 p.m. on May 9, eight miles from Khe Sanh to check out trails in the area. The Marines found several NVA bunkers then returned to a nearby hill to look for the enemy. The patrol came under heavy small arms fire for the first time around midnight.

At first they estimated the enemy strength at 30 to 50, but later increased their estimate to a reinforced company. Lopez on his fifth patrol, said he was hit in the head as soon as the action began.

"I then received wounds in the chest, leg and head again,"
He said. "The enemy was about two feet from us at all times. There was at least a company out there. They walked right up to us."

I shot the first NVA and the last one. One of the ones I shot looked very young, like in his teens. He walked right up to me. I looked at him and knew if I did not shoot him he would shoot me.

"I was laying down on the ground and he did not see me until he was right on top of me."

"They were all over the place, I saw at least 15 dead NVA in front of our positions. A lot of credit goes to my M-16, it worked fine and never jammed once, "he said..

Crosby said at one time Lopez thought all his buddies were dead, but checked and found 4 of them still breathing.

For several hours Lopez was the only member of the patrol able to fire his rifle. At about 2:30 A. M. the patrol ran out of ammunition. Gunships had to drop bandoliers of ammo to the fighting Marines.

The first gunship to arrive over the area was piloted by Mumford who pounded the hill with machinegun and rocket fire. At 2:45 a.m., a CH-46 made an unsuccessful attempt to recover the trapped Marines.

"But the ship took a tremendous battering," according to Mumford. "Several crew members received shrapnel wounds. Every time we stopped firing, the enemy would start moving up on the Marines."

" When we opened up again they would retreat back to their bunkers. They were underground all over that hill. All they had to do was retreat into those bunkers. We could not kill anyone there.

Several hours after the first rescue attempt, a second CH-46 tried to pick up the Marines. It was waved off, but still took numerous rounds flying away, and the pilot was killed. The two crew members were wounded but the co-pilot managed to bring the crippled chopper back to Khe Sanh.

When daylight came, fixed wing fighters were called in and they plastered the hill with ordinance.

At midday, as several Huey gunships continued to hit the hill with rockets and machinegun fire, another Huey landed beside the Marines and extracted them.

NEW LIEUTENANT PLAYS MAJOR ROLL IN THE BATTLE FOR HILL 861

By Sgt. Roger Ynostroza

KHE SANH.. 2nd Lt. James D. Carter, Jr. arrived in South Vietnam, April 21 and assumed duties as platoon commander with a company of the Ninth Marine Regiment April 23.

In the next four days, Lt. Carter was to play a major role in the battle for Hill 861, fast becoming the heaviest enemy contact to date in this far northwest ern corner of South Vietnam.

Carter received his baptism of fire April 24, his first full day with his 57 man unit.

"We were part of a two platoon sweep of a North Vietnamese Army cave complex about 1,500 yards from Hill 861," said the Lieutenant. "En route there we spotted about NVA in Khakis. We opened fire and they ran from us, so we called in 81mm mortars and hit them with our own 60 mortars."

" My squad leader took a Fire team around to try to block the NVA escape, but he was hit with a white phosphorous grenade and killed, and the smoke covered the enemy escape." said Lt. Carter. " we rigged up a stretcher and started for Hill 700, where our command group was located."

En route, the unit was hit by fierce enemy fire and was pinned down.

" My men reacted quickly and my M-79 man killed several with his accurate shots and another man hand held a 60mm mortar tube and put rounds on the enemy," said Lt. Carter.

An OE1 spotter plane circling overhead marked the enemy positions for fixed wing air strikes. High explosives battered the NVA positions while the Marines found better defensive positions.

"They have really been dug in because the air strikes passed and they began firing at us again," said Lt. Carter.

The platoon moved to a landing zone and were able to evacuate four wounded before the helicopters were driven off by heavy enemy fire. The unit moved to a new LZ and another chopper evacuated more wounded before it, too, was driven off.

"We had no entrenching tools with us, so we dug in as best we could for the night, using canteen cups and whatever else we could find to dig holes," said Lt. Carter.

Surprisingly we were not assaulted that night. Air strikes and artillery pounded the areas around us on 861 for most of the night."

Shortly after midnight, the platoon observed NVA mortar tube and rocket flashes. Effective artillery fire was called in from "F" battery, Twelfth Marines, based here.

WE set out the next morning on NVA trails toward 861 again and made sound contact with the other company," said Lt. Carter. " But when we moved toward their positions, we received heavy barrages of enemy mortar and automatic weapons fire from the top of 861. That is when I was hit by shrapnel in the left arm," he said. Thirteen of us were separated from the rest of the unit. We tried to get four more wounded out of the impact area but we could not reach them. They were later recovered safely by the rest of the unit. Meanwhile, we finally linked up with the rest of the platoon. While gunships pounded 861, we called for medevac choppers."

A C-46 chopper came in but was driven off by ground fire before it could take on wounded. One wounded Marine gained evacuation by hanging onto a strut of the chopper as it hovered over the LZ.

Then, NVA mortar fire began raking the Marine LZ. The Marines left the LZ crossing fields of elephant grass which afforded little cover from enemy machinegun and automatic weapons fire.

OUR OWN VIETNAM "RED BALL" EXPRESS

CONVOYS PASS OVER 110 MILES OF DANGER
By Gy/Sgt. Jim Northrop

Marine truck drivers of the 3rd Divisions 3rd Motor Transport Bn.. Faced possible death so that needed supplies may be trucked to fighting Marines.

The mission on which only volunteer Marine are accepted is that of driving the mine truck at the head of the armed truck convoy hauling supplies from the huge Marine supply depot at Danang to the fighting Marines.

To meet the problem of mines placed by the VC over the 110 miles of highway 1, the longest convoy route in Vietnam, the solution is a simple one– sandbag the floorboards fenders and the rear bed of a 2-1/2 ton truck and start driving to clear the way for the rest of the convoy.

The lead driver is trained to detect suspicious looking mounds of dirt on the pot-marked blacktop, freshly filled chuck holes, wires across the road blocks. In addition, he is alert for snipers and possible enemy ambushes.

Enemy troops have passed out leaflets to village and hamlets along highway 1, warning civilians to stay off the road. Saying they were going to mine the highway to destroy the American truck convoys.

When told of this development just before starting on a trip, PFC Robert L. Franklin, driver of the mine truck, stated, "This is a job that has to be done and I am ready."

SANDBANGER— Marine PFC Robert L. Franklin, (Woodbury NJ.) stacks sandbags on his lead truck before starting on a Marine convoy. Franklin is a volunteer mine truck driver with Marine 3rd Motor Transport Bn.. The mine truck is sandbagged heavily to ward off injuries in the event a mine is detonated on the convoy route.

With that statement Franklin started hi struck and launched a convoy of more than 80 trucks.

Convoy commander, 1st Lt. William E. Thompson, checked his radio and gave the signal to start the trucks rolling.

Following the mine truck in a jeep the convoy commander led a U.S. Army 2-1/2 ton truck carrying bed mounted quad .50 cal machineguns crew served by U.S. Army troops, one of several in the convoy.

Scattered on trucks throughout the convoy were Marine riflemen, on the alert in case of enemy ambush by snipers or any other trouble en-route.

Once of the road, the mine truck sets the pace for the convoy.

At designated points along the route, radio checks were made with Marine headquarters, giving progress reports on the convoy. Overhead, Marine helicopter and observation planes kept a look-out on both sides of the route for enemy activity.

The light aircraft also serve as spotters for Marine artillery batteries, standing by in case of attack. In addition, U.S. Navy ships are standing off shore, their guns ready, to assist the Marine truck unit. Huey gunships buzz overhead, giving assurance that quick, devastating fire power is also available as the trucks enter " Enemy Territory."

Another village and another checkpoint, this time Marines are at the check point. The Marines are members of one of the Combined Action Companies CAC, that served with Popular Forces troops (PF's), throughout I Corps, guarding strategic hamlets, villages and points along the highway.

Franklin has been in Vietnam for four months and said this was his first time to drive a mine truck on a convoy. He has been in Motor Transport since arriving in Vietnam and finds his job very interesting. At home he worked on cars and has a "souped up" '50 Chevrolet for drag racing.

The convoy cautiously approached the village of Phou Loc, one of the danger areas. Just the day before, an ARVN truck was mined and a bridge blown up. Marine Engineers were there to repair the bridge and they also lost a truck that hit a mine. And wounded three Marines.

The enemy have started to plant plastic mines that escape detection from the held hand mine detectors. Marine engineers made a sweep of the bypass around the blown bridge and said the road was clear ahead.

The trucks drove through with no incidents. Franklin., commenting on the hazards of driving in wartime, said "I feel motor transport plays a very important part in supplying troops in the 3rd Division. I like the job of driving and feel I am contributing something to the war in effort in Vietnam.

He expertly drove his truck around to mine craters in the road, evidence that other mines had been detonated within the last couple of days either by civilians or military vehicles.

Further along Franklin shifted down for the long hard climb up through Hai Van pass. The road narrowed, the curves were sharper as the long line of trucks made their way up the 3,500 elevation.

Keeping in radio communication at all times, the lead truck made the summit and pulled over to stop. The ARVN interpreter checked with the Vietnamese and Marine security forces to see if the road was clear of traffic coming up the other side. Loads were checked, ropes tightened and tires checked before the downward leg of the journey.

One way traffic now descending the high mountain. Drivers were busy now braking their trucks going down the steep mountain road until the flatlands are in sight.

A representative of the supply depot met the lead truck to guide the convoy into the huge depot.

The trucks are unloaded, serviced and checked prior to being loaded with critically needed supplies. More trucks are added until the convoy totals more than 100 for the return trip.

The drivers grab a hot meal and a few hours sleep and are ready for an early morning start on their "Beans, Bullets and Bandages," run.

INFANTRYMEN PRAISE JET SUPPORT ON 861

By L/Cpl Woody Price

"When you're pinned down by heavy enemy fire, with wounded Marines who need medical help, there's nothing in this world that looks as good as a couple of Marine jets screaming out of the sun to tear up the enemy," Says Cpl Arnett Lewis Jr.

The 23 year old from Lexington Mississippi was on Hill 861 near the demilitarized zone when F-4 Phantom jets arrived to provide close air support for the besieged Marines.

"We were sent up the Hill to reinforce a unit that had suffered casualties and were pinned down by enemy fire," said Lewis, a fire team leader with the 3rd Battalion Ninth Marine Regiment.

"We got part of the wounded out during the night but when daylight came we still had a long way to go and the enemy was making it hot for us. We had wounded Marines who really needed help, but we could not get down the hill.

" Then we heard a helluva roar and looked up to see jets swooping down toward the hilltop, said Lewis. "Once they started on that hill they didn't stop until it was just a mass of rubble.

" We got out okay, and for nearly two days, Marine jets just kept coming in to pound that hill. When they were finished it looked entirely different that when we first went up.
" When we went back up the hill, the top was practically bare and the enemy was gone. I guess we owe our lives to those jets," Lewis said.

Since I've been in Vietnam I've heard a lot of guys say the same thing," said Lewis. When you're pinned down those jets are a beautiful sight, and when you are wounded a helicopter looks like an angel."

BATTLE PRESSURES FELT BY FLIGHT LINE CREWS

By Sgt Bob Pitner

The action was miles north, but ordnance and flight line crews of Marine All Weather Fighter Squadrons 232& 235 felt the pressure along with the infantrymen battling North Vietnamese near Khe Sanh, just south of the demilitarized zone.

As the infantry units called for more and more close air support by F-8E Crusader jets of the two 1st Marine Aircraft Wing Squadrons, the demand on ground crews who arm, refuel, and check each plane before it can return to action increased.

Sorties flown by VMF (AW) 232 on May 1, rose from an average of 24 per day to 38, while tonnage of bombs dropped on the enemy almost doubled.

The battle "up north" gave the aviation Marines the " busiest day we have had since we got to Vietnam," according to Gy/Sgt J.H. Howard, Middleburg, FL., and VMF(AW) 232 ordnance chief.

It was the kind of day when L/Cpl Kenneth I. Heist, of Deland, Fl., "only had time to smoke a quarter of a cigarette at a time," between readying the jets for their next mission.

The effort paid off. Throughout the period of the battle for Hill 861 and the twin peaks of 881, aviation and artillery units were credited with 75% of the enemy confirmed killed from April 24 to May 5th. In all Marine Jets from the 1st Marine Aircraft Wing Squadrons flew more than 790 sorties and expended more than 1,150 tons of ordnance in the twelve days.

TWINS POSE NAME PROBLEM FOR MARINE

KHE SANH- Marine Corporal Daniel A Wisley (Northfield, MA.) has a problem.

When he left the states he asked his wife to name their expected child after him-she had twins.

Wisley had just been evacuated, after being wounded in the savage fighting on Hill 881, when she found out.

A squad leader in the 3rd Marine Regiment was waiting for a medavac helicopter when a Marine from his unit broke the news.

" You're wife just gave birth to twins and she is doing fine," the Marine said.

"How about that,: said Wisley. "I'm a daddy, I have been expecting news like this but... two boys.... Twins!"

DOD DEVELOPS COMPENSATION & BENEFITS HANDBOOK

By Charlie Taliaferro

DOD announced today it has developed a comprehensive handbook describing compensation and other benefits service members and their families would be entitled to upon separation or retirement as a result of serious injury or illness.

"The Compensation and Benefits Handbook is the one source of information that covers everything a seriously ill and injured service member will need during his or her recovery, rehabilitation and reintegration," said Ronald A. Winter, principal deputy assistant secretary of the Air Force for manpower and reserve affairs.

The handbook was compiled in cooperation with the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and the Social Security Administration. Additionally; there are references to assistance provided by other governmental and non-governmental agencies and organizations.

"The handbook describes the disability eligibility process, various program qualifications, application procedures, and numerous resources with associated contact information," said Sharon Gunselman, policy and resource analyst for the Department of Defense.

Web sites and toll-free numbers are provided, and the electronic version includes hyperlinks. The electronic version of the handbook will be updated frequently and the hard copy of the compensation and benefits handbook will be updated annually. You can download the handbook here...

THE KHE SANH VETERANS 2008 REUNION RENO NEVADA

GATEWAY TO RENO

By Tom Eichler

The reunion in Reno was a great success. It was attend by 325 people. For many of them it was their first reunion. I think everybody had a great time. The hotel was great and we were treated with the utmost respect. Many members joined forces, rented some vans and took in all the sites in neighboring cities.

At the general membership meeting the vote was taken for the 2010 reunion and the city of San Antonio, Texas was chosen. We were already committed to Denver for 2009 from the 2007 vote by the general membership. Our chaplain Owen Matthews, held a special memorial service for Phil Mineer and several others that was quite moving and brought tears to many members.

Chaplain Matthews, invited Dennis Puleo, a motivational speaker and former combat Marine, as a quest speaker. The son of a machinist and hotel housekeeper, Dennis joined the Marines to fight in Vietnam. During his last engagement as a machine gunner, he took a direct hit by a hand grenade, was shot twice, and then torn apart by a mortar. After being awarded 3 Purple Hearts, Dennis spent a year recuperating in a VA hospital.

He left the hospital determined that hard work and a positive attitude would make him rich. An aggressive entrepreneur, he turned a home-based business into a multimillion dollar franchise. Yet all his success couldn't remove the emptiness that plagued him deep inside.

Today, Dennis shares how he discovered success that really matters through Jesus Christ. Dennis is not a theologian or seminary graduate ... he draws from his experiences in the foxholes of war and business to encourage others toward a life of hope and purpose.

Dennis and his wife Joanne reside in Orlando, Florida where he is both the director of the Chairman's advisory Council and a Faculty Member for "Man In The Mirror" (Author Patrick Morley) presenting Success that Matters, a seminar for Men.

Owen also had 300 of Patrick's books delivered and presented to the membership at his own cost.

Dennis was well received by the membership and we want to thank him from the bottom of our hearts, for his valuable time to inspire our membership.

Chaplain Owen Matthews sadly announced he had to step down from his position as Khe Sanh Chaplain due to family commitments. He has performed well above expectations in his position, and did an outstanding job. He will be missed by all and we wish him the best. He leaves with our heartfelt thanks. He recommended another outstanding member of the Khe Sanh Veterans, Ron Rayner (Whose column appears on page two) to be our new chaplain and I quickly moved to appoint him.

Ron Korkow B Co 1/26, who was responsible for sending the Khe Sanh Veterans membership the "Peace For The Vietnam Vet Bibles" at his own expense. He also brought with him the original painting for the cover of the 2nd Edition, which will represent all veterans and all wars. It will be titled "Peace For The Veteran" The cover is focused on Khe Sanh and makes a direct reference to the Marine Corps. (Color Picture Inside Back Cover)

Ron unveiled the new cover and also brought with him over 200 of the large (Expensive) numbered paintings signed by the artist prints (free) to all Khe Sanh Members. Many members in attendance signed a copy of the framed print and I personally presented it to our founder Reverend Ray Stubbe, at his home in Wauwatosa, WI.

The banquet was outstanding, with our being treated to a banquet fit for a king. (The Hotel really outdid itself). The DJ was great and had the membership doing Karaoke. We really have some talented members. The Dance floor was packed and everyone young and old kicked up their heels (see pictures on following pages).

At the banquet we also presented a plaque to Sid Patricio for his outstanding contributions to the Khe Sanh Veterans. It was a long overdue tribute and it could not have been given to a more deserving member. It was presented by his good friend and Vice President of the Khe Sanh Veterans, John Pessoni, and myself.

We also appointed David Lord as the Khe Sanh Veterans Service Officer. David Lord served with 1/26 and was wounded at Khe Sanh. He is currently serving as a representative of all veterans south of the U.S. border before the V.A. and the Board of Veterans Appeals.

David will be writing a column for the Red Clay and he can be reached at:

You know the old saying, "it is a small world." It really came to pass at the reunion. While we were enjoying ourselves in the hospitality room, in walked a police Officer from Reno, NV. I said, "what did we do now." Turns out the Police Officer Sergeant Michael Lessman, (Former USMC) is the brother of Eugene P. Lessman Jr. a KSV and member of the Khe Sanh Veterans from FLSG-A, FLC-FLSU-2. Eugene, you have a great brother who made a lot of friends.

"NOW SUPPLEMENT"
69 YEAR–OLD BOXER TRADES PRAYERS FOR PUNCHES

By Tom "Sky" Skibash

Considering Wauwatosa resident Ray Stubbe earned a bronze star after serving as chaplain In the Vietnam War, it was not sur-prising that he wasn't afraid to step into a boxing ring at the ripe, young age of 69. Stubbe, who spent most of his Vietnam tour with the First Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment from July 1967 to March 1968, has been a boxing enthusiast for a while.

So when local attorney Mike Tarnoff, a year younger and Stubbe's occasional sparring partner, called Stubbe three months ago and asked if he would be interested in boxing in a charity exhibition, the punching pastor jumped at the chance.

"I quickly said yes,'" the soft-spoken Stubbe said. "It's difficult for both of us to box because of the national amateur rules. You must be within 10 years of each other to box." Stubbe quickly began to prepare for his match, held at the Italian Community Center on March 28 to raise funds to restore artwork that had been donated to Our Lady of Pompeii and St. Rita churches.

More than 400 people at $125 a head attended the event.

"I always was interested m boxing;" said Stubbe, who moved to Wauwatosa in 1986. "When I was in the navy at Great Lakes, I worked out on a heavy bag. I want to box; I have a passion for it.

Stubbe had an opportunity to make his dream come true when he discovered the Duke Rofus Gym in 2001 and started taking classes. He survived the pushups and situps and made it through the first session, and stayed with it four to five times a week.

"It was excellent conditioning;' Stubbe said, "and I had a chance to meet good people:"

When the big night arrived last Friday, Stubbe and two of his friends, Joe Campbell and Peter Tycz, showed up at the center filled with anticipation.

"When I went to weigh in and see the doctors, I was wearing my minister's outfit because there was a formal dinner. Several of the young boxers were wondering what's going on and were taken aback".

Stubbe was eating his pre-match bowl of soup seated next to Tarnoff, when they were approached by the promoters and asked to move their match from eighth on the card to third.

"Though the place was filling with smoke and getting worse, and neither Mike nor I were nighthawks, we agreed," Stubbe said.

Stubbe who wore camouflage trunks, was given a corner man, who wrapped his hands and helped him get into his gear.

"I felt like I was going to war," Stubbe said. "With all the people watching us while we ate, I knew how Roman gladiators felt (fighting each other), while the audience dined. My adrenaline was really going."

As Stubbe was awaiting his match, which was billed as the main event, he said a little prayer.

"I asked myself, "Am I really doing this?" I didn't pray for a win he said. I prayed that no one would get injured and we would do our best. I didn't want to let all these people down."

Stubbe's corner man, told him to keep to the basic-left, left right, and Stubbe felt he landed quite a few jabs and some good left crosses in the second and third round.

I was pumping adrenaline but I took too many body punches," Stubbe said. " one of my mistakes was to get too close to him, I lowered my right hand in excitement; that's when he got me."

When the three round match ended, Stubbe lost by a close decision.

I thought I actually won, but I was not disappointed," Stubbe said. "It was an odd sensation. I was greatly relieved, since it was my first boxing bout, I was filled with enthusiasm."

And Stubbe, at age 69, earned his first boxing trophy.

"I lost the battle, but not the war," he said. " I did a very credible job. I'm looking forward to my next bout."

FIRST FIGHT

By Ray W.Stubbe

My hands have been carefully wrapped in gauze and adhesive tape by John Stayton, a trainer from another gym, to prevent injury. Vaseline had been applied to my headgear, and to my lips, nose, and eye-lashes, to prevent cuts. My teeth bit down on my mouthpiece. I'm wearing old school boxing boots and a steel cup. Camouflaged trunks proclaim my combat past (which is always present). Brand new gloves are slipped over my hands. I am ready to do battle. I smash the gloves together a few times to break them in-and to discharge a surge of adrenalin rushing through my blood. "Hot hearts for chilling deeds," a line from the ancient Greek play, Anti-gone by Sophocles, comes to mind. Dane Ashley, a young boxer from the Medina Boxing Club gym where I now work out, slips on flat focus pads and invites me to throw a few left jabs, right crosses, and left hooks. It's time. I walk into a very large room, now filled with smoke, with a feeling I'm advancing to the FEBA (forward edge of the battle area) to engage in war!

Four hundred people in attendance, each of which has paid $125.00 to attend, fix their eyes on me as I climb into the boxing ring. It's my first fight. I've sparred at various boxing gyms over the past five years, but this is the real thing. I feel a strangeness; how did I get to this point?

That it's all for a good cause, even a religious one, somehow seems to be in congruency with being a "man of the cloth, gentle and kindly in demeanor.' A fund-raiser to restore a dozen paintings formerly of the Pompeii Catholic Church which were donated to the Milwaukee County Historical Society. The printed program bears the slogan, "We Fight to Preserve our Past."

I sometimes have mused that St. Paul must have been a boxer too. He Writes; "I do not run aimlessly; I do not box as one beating the air. (1Cor.9.26). Given his robust health (surviving shipwrecks, beatings, and extensive travels) and also the impact of Greek culture in his society leads one to conclude this. Furthermore, he doesn't write, "it's as if I were a boxer," but, "I box." Only a few hours earlier, I ate two hard-boiled eggs for protein, knowing I wouldn't be eating the supper at the event.

Two of my very good ,Vietnam vet friends, Joe Campbell and Peter Tycz, arrived and we drove to the Italian Community Center in downtown Milwaukee. Arriving a bit early, we saw men from la societal' dl san Giuseppe were all wearing black suits, are setting things up. Some kiss each other in European style camaraderie. Am I among Mafia? In a way I fit in also wearing a black suit and my minister's collar.

After awhile, a few young men is sweat shirts, T-Shirts, jeans, and other such treads, filter through to another area. I follow them and find myself in the area with boxers. I'm directed to a man named "Angel" who takes me under his wing to weigh in and see the doctor. I weigh in at 174. My blood pressure, normally 110/68, now read 130 something over 80 something! Several young men also weigh in and have their BPs taken. Some gaze at me rather strangely, like, why is this old man in a minister's outfit here? A few ask, "Are you going to box?" They're flabbergasted when I tell them I am.

I then walk to the table where we'll be eating dinner. My opponent and friend, Mike Tarnott, a respected local lawyer, arrives with a couple of his friends. They're assigned to eat at the same table! Mike turned 70 in September.

We are close in age and weight. He's a southpaw; I recall the Latin word for left-handed is "sinister,'" and wonder if this isn't an omen? He is a rather formidable foe possessing athletic prowess. He recently won a race in a Senior Olympic competition. Not only is he a southpaw, but, as the evening's program indicates, he has a dozen fights under his belt. He has fought in Chicago, New York, and London!

I know from the times we sparred together a year or so ago at the Duke Roufus Gym that he also attended boxing camps in New York, working with world class boxers, and that he has an athletic background spanning decades. Perhaps I'm a fool even to imagine fighting him. Yet, sparring sessions with him did not intimidate me. Furthermore, due to amateur boxing rules, boxers must be within ten years of each other, as we are.

Who else is there to box? With years so swiftly passing, I might never again have the opportunity to experience a real boxing fight in the ring!

Mom always voiced disparaging, innuendoes at boxing, which she saw as two men attempting to knock each other out, as a stupid, brutish and senseless enterprise, she'd remark the same, as her dad, grandpa Mueller, watched Friday night boxing from Madison Square Garden on the old black and white TVs in the 50s.

Amateur boxing, although it validly and medically presents caution of possible brain injury, does not aim at knockouts, but scores on the basis of contacts. The skill of the sport involves effective punches with the ability to parry, block, or slip the opponent's punches, scores based on technique and skill. The sport, and training for it, develops strong aerobic ability along with quick reaction, abdominal and core strengthening, along with intense exercise of arm, shoulders, and legs. Excess fat in the blood, any fog of depression, or fires of smoldering rage, all are exorcized in intense exercise.

Our County Executive, Scott Walker, walks to our table to chat. I've seen him at various veterans events where I've shook his hand and talked with him. Dinner begins after everyone stands and says the "Pledge of Allegiance." A thought intrudes that all of this is a déjà vu of an ancient Roman circus in which gladiators fought and killed each other while others reclined on their sides, gorging themselves in a sumptuous feast! I'm reminded that I need to have an element of anger, yet relaxation and meditation. Someone appears with a listing of the bouts, and asks if it would be OK to have us as the third bout instead of the originally planned seventh. Both Mike and I agree. We leave the table to go to the area to prepare to box.

BACKGROUND

As I walk back to change out of my minister's garb into fighting garb thoughts race back to 2001 when this boxing journey began. During the previous year, while caring for my dad in the last months of his life with "home-hospice" I had eventually "ballooned-out" to 220.

I learned of the Duke Roufus Boxing Gym and met there a young man Jason Strout, and asked him if it might be possible to train there since I had been attracted to boxing for many years. .

The first session, 21 May 2002, reminded me of the grueling training I experienced at the U.S. Army Airborne Jump School at Fort Benning, Georgia, in 1973. A deep surge of pride and satisfaction filled me as I completed the hour session of that first boxing session. Verse 5 from Psalm 103, the Psalm that begins with "Bless the Lord, 0 my soul:" "who satisfies you with good so that your youth is renewed like the eagle's," immediately arose in my mind and I deeply thanked the Lord for being able to do this. Intense joy fitted my soul!

Like some Medieval pilgrimage in which people bond together, like small units in intense and prolonged combat, a deep friendship developed with other boxers as we engaged in very intense physical exercise, and I came to "know" boxing through emotional commitment, experience, and life. Not knowledge "about" boxing, but knowledge "of" boxing, the kind of "knowledge" one attains in war, relationship with God, and sexually. Knowledge of horror, terror, helplessness, and fear learned in combat, already ameliorated by knowledge of God's Presence, strength, love, forgiveness and mercy, now lost additional impact in a new passion for boxing. The emotional and physical benefits of boxing created a chiastic slogan that emerged from my psyche: "Fighting to live by living to fight." My total cholesterol had been 238 with triglycerides; as high as 279 and LDL of 163. After boxing training, as of October 2007, total cholesterol was 151 with HDL at 58 and LDL at 60 and triglycerides at 151. My weight also dramatically dropped, and my doctor enthusiastically endorsed boxing because of its obvious health benefits to me.

As I walked to the changing area, I recalled the many good people I met at the boxing gym: Don Arneson, Marvin Cohen, Jonathan Costello, Jan Pierce, Tony Randazzo, Michael Hermann, Ceva Katz, Todd Lynch, Casey Garza, AI Rozanski, Joe 'Nicols, Michael Regione, Sean and Rebecca Mahin, Julie Vance, John Murray, Russel Ledvina, Derek Drellos, Craig Dilley, Kelly Kuschel, Maciej Gulinski ("Machie"), Froiland, Adam Tellier, Guy, Rico, and many more.

About a year ago, in January, 2007, some physical symptoms pressed a fear of stroke. intra-cranial bleeding, or other nefarious pathology. Thus I ceased boxing training on 30 June 2007, and joined the Wisconsin Athletic Club. I embarked on a rigorous regimen of weights and machines three times a week and cardio six days a week. Following a thorough check up at the VA hospital which disclosed no serious problems, I again started boxing 24 November 2007. Unfortunately, the gym ceased its boxing program on 05 January, but I began individual sessions with Dan Downes, a Marquette senior, in preparation to box Mike Tarnoff.

Quite by accident, I learned of the Medina Boxing Club. There was a news story in the local newspaper of a coach from the Medina Boxing Club who was shot and killed at a gas station. A visit to that gym and with "Benito" convinced me to join. On 19 February, I visited the VA hospital due to a very painful back, and loss of flexibility. It had become extremely difficult to bend to put on socks or tie my shoe laces! X-rays disclosed scoliosis, or a curvature of the spine (which I attribute to impacts from parachute jumps), arthritic changes in the lower spine, and a stenosis (narrowing) of the nerve passage. I was put on arthritis medication. Within a few days, normal flexibility returned without pain. I did my first session at the Medina Boxing Club 25 February. I learned something about myself: I'm persistent and cling to life and will not admit defeat. I immediately liked the gym and joined for six months. I arrive at the changing place. John Stayton prepares me, and Dane Ashley discharges my anxieties with the punch pad drills. I walk to the ring, following John. There's no flashy music or announcement as in some other amateur bouts, and I climb into the ring. I've arrived!

THE FIGHT

John is my corner man. Dane is also there. John tells me to relax, to jab, jab, cross. Someone blurts out the short biography of Mike Tarnoff and then mine from the printed program which lists us as "Our Special Event, Attorney Michael Tarnoff vs. Chaplain Ray Stubbe." The referee comes to me to look at my headgear, see that I have a mouthpiece, and asks if I'm wearing a cup. Mike and I go to the center where he says something that I no longer recall . We return to our corners. The bell chimes. We advance towards each other. We box.

During round, I feel I'm landing quite a few effective punches on Mike's forehead, mainly left jabs. Attempts to hook or deliver body punches are effectively blocked. I keep thinking: cross hook, right uppercut-hook, move to my left. I'm getting exhausted, but know from previous workouts that initial weakness passes after a few moments, and I'm then aerobically able to sustain extended and severe exertion. We exchange a few blows, nothing serious. We're actively engaged, no "pitty-pat" or waltzing around, providing entertainment for those there, I surmise. At the end of the round, I return to my red corner and sit. John waves a towel to cool my face while Dane gives me water to swish in the mouth and spit into a pail. John tells me that he thinks I've got him, that I'm winning, and to keep to the simple jab-jab-cross routine, nothing fancy, no hooks.

During rounds 2 and 3 I regain my wind. Mike lands a couple of hard left hooks. In my super-energized state, I've forgotten to maintain a proper distance. My advantage in arm reach is negated by getting too close to Mike. I do remember, to move slowly to my left to avoid his "power," his left. Neither of us gets pinned against the ropes or corner, or falls down during the three rounds. Both of us continue to deliver "bunches of punches." There is no dancing around, no time spent feeling out each other's timing. I'm not focusing as much as I should on his movements, eyes, face, and I pay the price. I'm still landing effective blows to his face, however.

At the end of the bout, I notice there are two trophies in the center of the ring. John, my corner man, says I did a very good fight, and Dane congratulates me. They unbuckle and remove my headgear and gloves. As both Mike and I approach the center, I feel I might just have won the fight. The referee grasps our wrists. Then the announcement: the winner is Mike Tarnoff in the blue corner. Unexpectedly, I feel no disappointment or anything negative to dampen a feeling of great accomplishment. Actually, I'm elated, happy that I actually had the opportunity to box in a real competitive bout. that I'm am able to box, which is a very strenuous activity, and that neither of us were injured-an answer to my prior prayer. Perhaps I should also have prayed to win, but somehow felt that most inappropriate.

As I walk down the stairs from the ring, the doctor asks if I'm OK. I tell him I feel great! I continue walking through the crowd to the dressing area. At least a dozen people shake my hands and say things like, "I thought you had won," "Thank you for a good fight," "You did real well," and so on. Some of this, I realize, might be just a polite way of making me feel better, but when so many voice similar thoughts, I realize that there must be some truth to it.

There are no showers; so I use the towel to wipe off perspiration, remove my boxing boots, camouflaged trunks, steel cup, and then put on my black suit, clerical shirt and collar. I return to the table with Joe and Peter, a little ashamed that I may have let them down. Not so! They say they are real proud of me! My hands remain bound in gauze and adhesive tape as I tell them, "See, I'm still a man of the cloth!"

In the hours and days that follow, I'm consumed with a passion to box as frequently as weekly. The spirit of boxing infuses my blood. I fear I may have to see the psychologist at the VA for aggressive tendencies, enjoying fighting other people! I may have lost this particular fight, but only increased my zeal to box. I may have lost the battle, but not the war! Now my only concern is how to find opportunities to box since any opponent would have to be under 59 years old-and there are so few boxers at that age to box!

SEQUEL

When I returned to the gym on Monday, 31 March, I encountered only very positive reception, despite losing the bout as everyone said I did real well and should have won. Even my coach, Oscar Medina, was pleased.

I wrote and thanked everyone who put the event together. Mike Tarnoff called me, thanking for the letter, noting that I kept up the pressure instead of some boxers he has boxed who "danced around," and mentioned a possibility of a future fight in Chicago.

FROM THE PRESIDENT

This issue will be the last you will receive prior to the July reunion. Enclosed you will find another registration form. Please get these sent to Russ Turner ASAP. We have two trips planned and need to provide the tour company with an estimate of attending members who signed up for the tours. If you are not sure if you can attend the reunion, book your rooms and send in your reservations, you can always cancel.

I also printed the forms for applying for funds from the newly established KSV Scholarship fund. The chairman Dan Fisher, and his committee, did a superb job of putting it together in a very short period of time. However, we are still open for any suggestions prior to implementing the fund at the reunion in Denver. By then, hopefully, family members of our members will have already applied for assistance. Through the generosity of the membership we hope to quickly expand the amount of funds now available from the scholarship fund.

With the resignation of our treasurer, James Wodecki, I have temporarily assumed the position. We will also hold an election for openings on the KSV BOD. Those wishing to run for any of the following positions: President, Vice President, Secretary, and five Members at Large positions, let me know prior to the reunion. I want to also thank the membership, especially those Life members who so generously contributed to the RED CLAY magazine.

FROM THE VICE PRESIDENT

I want to again thank the membership for their outstanding support of the KSV PX. It has enabled me to purchase many new items and greatly expand the inventory. It looks like we are going to have another great reunion in Denver and I am looking foreword to seeing a lot of new faces as well. Denver is a beautiful City with majestic scenery. We have two great trips planned and hope the membership takes advantage of them.

FROM DESK OF THE SECRETARY

Just a reminder that we are always in need of items for the silent auction. If you cannot attend the reunion and still wish to donate, mail your donated items directly to me.

OBIT

Colonel John W. Ripley, U.S. Marine Corps, Retired

John Walter Ripley was born June 29th, 1939 in Radford, Virginia. Colonel Ripley served 35 years active duty in the Marines. Graduating June 1957 from Radford High School, Ripley served one year of enlisted service in the Marine Corps before entering the United States Naval Academy upon obtaining an appointment from the Secretary of the Navy. In June of 1962, Ripley graduated with a Bachelor's of Science degree in electrical engineering and was commissioned a 2nd Lieutenant of Marines.

Upon completion of The Basic School for Infantry Officers, Lt. Ripley was assigned Sea Duty with Marine Detachment, USS Independence. Lt. Ripley was next assigned to 2nd Battalion, 2nd Marines, commanding a Rifle Platoon, then Weapons platoon. In May 1965 Lt. Ripley was transferred to 2nd Force Reconnaissance where he completed the US Army Airborne Course, Jumpmaster course and US Navy SCUBA School. Ripley next attended the US Army Ranger Course as a part of Class 05-65. Successfully completing Ranger training, now Ranger Ripley was recognized as the Distinguished Officer Graduate and awarded the coveted RANGER Tab. Upon completion of his Special Operation training, Ranger Ripley deployed overseas with his Force Reconnaissance platoon.

Captain Ripley arrived in Vietnam in October 1966 and took command of Lima Company, 3rd Battalion, 3rd Marine Regiment (L 3/3) just below the demilitarized zone (DMZ) in the northern sector of South Vietnam's I Corps. Ranger Ripley's Lima Company saw extensive combat action in the famous "Leatherneck Square" area of Dong Ha, Con Tien, Khe Sanh and the "Rock Pile". Because of Ranger Ripley's exceptional leadership and command capabilities, commanders constantly committed Lima Company to active battle sites all along I Corps's DMZ. Ranger Ripley was wounded in action on four separate occasions, finally being forced to medically evacuate and recover from his wounds. Each event qualified for the Purple Heart, but Ranger Ripley skillfully avoided the paperwork and settled for a single award of the medal. According to Ranger Ripley, "Three Purple Hearts on three occasions would mean mandatory removal from the field, and worse, command!" Ranger Ripley insisted on returning to command his Company and did so providing experience and leadership until end of tour.

Ranger Ripley next attended the Amphibious Warfare School and on completion of the course became the Infantry Officers Monitor, Headquarters, US Marine Corps. In October 1969 he was selected to serve as the Exchange Officer to the British Royal Marines. He attended the Marine Commando Course at Lympstone, England, then served in Singapore with the 3rd Commando Brigade and with 40 Commando in northern Malaya, campaigning for several months with the famous Gurkhas, the 1st of the 2nd Gurkha Rifles. Ranger Ripley also served with the Special Boat Service (3rd SBS) and with "Zulu" Company Group in Norway. Ripley then commanded "Yankee" Commando, a light infantry company, as they deployed throughout England, Scotland, and Wales. Ranger Ripley returned to Norway for his second winter to complete the Mountain and Arctic Warfare Course at Elvergardsmoen. He also completed the Joint Warfare Course at Old Sarum, England.

Ranger Ripley returned to Vietnam in 1971 and served as Senior Advisor to the 3rd Vietnamese Marine Battalion, which operated along the DMZ. Ripley was at Dong Ha with his battalion during the 1972 North Vietnamese Easter Invasion. It was during this invasion that Ranger Ripley heroically performed the action at the Dong Ha Bridge, for which he was awarded the nation's second highest honor, the Navy Cross. John G. Miller's book, The Bridge at Dong Ha, documents this action.

Returning from Vietnam in 1972, Ranger Ripley became the Marine Officer Instructor at Oregon State University. In 1975 he attended American University in the Advanced Degree program. Upon earning a Master of Science, Ripley was assigned to the Office of the Chief of Staff, Headquarters Marine Corps, serving in Special Projects Directorate then later as the Administrative Assistant/Aide to the Chief of Staff.

Ranger Ripley next commanded 1st Battalion, 2nd Marines from July 1979 to May 1981. During this time they deployed for Combined Arms Exercise 2-80, then to Mountain Warfare Training Center and winter operations.

Upon completion of his tour with the 2nd Marines in 1982, Ranger Ripley attended the Naval War College. Upon graduation he reported to the Joint Staff, Joint Chiefs of Staff, serving as Political-Military Planner and Branch Chief, European Division, J-5. Ranger Ripley was next assigned to his Alma Mater, the U.S. Naval Academy where he served as Senior Marine and Director, Division of English and History from 1984-1987. During this period he established a record of commissioning more than 500 Academy midshipmen into the Marine Corps. Ranger Ripley next spent a year as Assistant Chief of Staff, G-3 with 3rd Marine Expeditionary Force in Japan.

In July 1988, Ranger Ripley assumed command of the 2nd Marines and twice deployed the Regiment to Norway. Ranger Ripley also commanded Regimental Landing Team 2 (RTL 2), a combined reinforced infantry regiment, with armor, artillery and Marine Air, deploying over 10,000 Marines to the Arctic Circle, the first Marine unit ever to do so. Upon leaving the Regiment, he commanded the Navy-Marine Corps ROTC Unit at Virginia Military Institute. During his time at VMI, Ranger Ripley created the largest, most productive NROTC unit in the country.

Ranger Ripley has earned six valorous and fourteen personal decorations including the Navy Cross, the Silver Star, two awards of the Legion of Merit, two awards of the Bronze Star with Combat "V", the Purpose Heart, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the President Unit Citation, the Navy Unit Citation, the Combat Action Ribbon, the Vietnamese Distinguished Service Order and the Cross of Gallantry with Gold Star.

Ranger Ripley's heroic action at the Dong Ha was selected as a single act to memorialize all Naval Academy graduates during the Vietnam War. In Memorial Hall at The Academy, a large diorama titled "Ripley at The Bridge" represents the noble and gallant actions of all Naval Academy men who fought there.

Following his retirement in June 1992, Col. Ripley became president of Southern Virginia College in Buena Vista, VA. While there he was credited with saving the financially-troubled college. After turning the College over to new management, Col. Ripley was asked to remain as Chancellor where he received resolutions and citations from the Trustees, the City of Buena Vista, and the Office of the Governor.

In 1997, Col. Ripley assumed the responsibilities as President, Hargrave Military Academy in Chatham, VA. While serving in this capacity, he shored up parental confidence in the program of instruction, refocused the financial plan on infrastructure improvement, dormitory and classroom modernization, updated curricula to include additional offerings thereby enhancing the overall program and established innovative sources of revenue through positive change and sound management practices.

In June 1999, Col. Ripley was selected by the Commandant to serve as the Director of Marine Corps History and Museums and Director of the Marine Corps Historical Center, a position he held until his final retirement from the Corps in 2006.

Col. Ripley has been elected to Phi Alpha Theta, a history honorary, and to Who's Who Worldwide. He also holds the distinction of having commissioned more officers in the Marine Corps than anyone on record. During his years of Vietnam service he participated in 26 major operations which included numerous battles at the Rifle Company, Battalion and Division level. He has the distinction of more direct combat command experience at the rifle company and battalion level than any other Marine. He is the subject dozens of books and film documentaries and has lectured widely on combat leadership, performance in adversity and the value of humanities, classics, and liberal arts. He was in high demand as a motivational speaker and participates in numerous national seminars. His testimony before Congress as part of a Presidential Commission on the role of women in combat, and numerous writings, has been entered into the Congressional Record.

As a result of combat action, Ranger Ripley contracted a disease that would require a liver transplant in the summer of 2002. On his death bed with little life left and having twice received Last Rites, one of the Marine Corps' greatest living heroes lie dying. Once a liver had been located in Philadelphia, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, calling Col. Ripley a living symbol of pride, dispatched helicopters from the MARINE ONE squadron, the Presidential Fleet, to ferry the transplant team to the University of Pennsylvania hospital to remove the donor liver and then transport the doctors back to Washington for what became a successful operation.

In October 2006 Col. Ripley returned to the site of the Dong Ha Bridge to film a documentary of his exploits. The documentary was hosted by Oliver North and featured on an episode of Lt/Col. North's 'War Stories" on FOX.

Colonel and Mrs. Ripley resided in Annapolis, Maryland. They have four children. Two sons are graduates of VMI and each served as Captains of Marines.

CITATION

RANGER JOHN W. RIPLEY
Colonel, U.S. Marine Corps (Ret.)

Colonel Ripley is inducted into the Ranger Hall for Fame in recognition of his extraordinary and illustrious military career both in combat and command. During 35 years of military service, Ranger Ripley lead troops with distinction at every unit level from Rifle Platoon through Regimental Commander. As a Reconnaissance Officer with the 2nd Force Reconnaissance Co., Ranger Ripley attended the Ranger Course as member of Class 5-65 and was recognized as the Distinguished Honor Graduate.

Commanding a Rifle Company with 3rd Marines in "I" Corps just below the DMZ, Ripley saw extensive combat from the famous "Leatherneck Square" area of Dong Ha to the 'Rockpile'. He was involved in warfare at every DMZ Fire Base from Laos to Khe Sanh. Wounded four separate occasions, Ripley refused evacuation on the first three events while managing to avoid the paperwork and 3 Purple Hearts which would have mandated his removal from the fight. Seriously wounded a fourth time, Ripley was forced to evacuate and upon recovery insisted he be returned to his Company to complete the mission of leadership to his men. In addition to the Purple Heart, Ripley was awarded the Silver Star Medal and Bronze Star Medal with Combat "V" for Valor.

Ranger Ripley next served as an Exchange Officer with Royal Marine Commandos and saw action in Singapore with the 3rd Commando Brigade; in Northern Malaya with 40 Commando and campaigned with the famous Gurkha rifles. Ripley was privileged to command the RM's Recce Troop (Reconnaissance) in the Artic and Malaya as well as 'Yankee' Commando, Royal Marines, a light infantry company deployed throughout Great Britain and Norway.

Ripley's most famous tour of combat duty was as a Senior Military Advisor during the 1972 North Vietnamese Easter Invasion. NVA troops and Soviet T-54 tanks had crossed the DMZ and were approaching a strategic bridge over the Cam Lo River. For over two hours and under withering small arms fire, Ripley swung hand-over-hand out to the spans and stringers under the bridge setting over 40 pounds of explosives. Exhausted and with enemy troops and equipment on the bridge, Ripley blew the bridge. It is written that, "What Ripley did was simply impossible". Ripley was awarded the Navy Cross for heroism.

During his two years of Vietnam service, Ranger Ripley participated in 26 major operations and holds the distinction of more field combat command experience than any other Marine commander of that era.

In retirement Col. Ripley was President and Chancellor of Southern Virginia University and served as President of Hargrave Military Academy in Chatham, Virginia. In 1999 Col. Ripley became the Director of Marine Corps History and Museums, Navy Yard, Washington, D.C. Col. Ripley's exploits have been chronicled in the book The Bridge at Dong Ha; His action is forever memorialized at the US Naval Academy with a diorama titled "Ripley at the Bridge"; Col. Ripley was the first Marine officer to be honored with the Naval Academy's Distinguished Graduate Award; The Naval Academy Prep School dedicated a dormitory as "RIPLEY HALL" in perpetual honor of their former graduate; Ranger Ripley's heroic actions in Vietnam are a subject of Oliver North's "War Stories" titled "The Furious Fight for Dong Ha"; "Ripley's March" was written honoring Col. Ripley for his military service, valor in combat and contributions to the United States; "FOB Ripley" is a Firebase located in south central Afghanistan named in honor of Ranger Ripley.

John Ripley died last week. It's hard to find the words to express emotions upon hearing of his death - "devastated," "empty," "like a kick in the solar plexus." He had a brilliant Marine Corps career. He loved being a Marine. From an enlisted man to a Naval Academy graduate, to Recon Training to battle planning, to company commander to brilliant advisor to the South Vietnamese forces during Vietnamization, and numerous outstanding posts, including retiring as a senior Marine officer at Annapolis along with his work at the Marine Corps museum. Despite all of that for us, he was our company commander, the leader of "Ripley's Raiders" with a well prepared, quiet, but exceedingly effective leadership style. For most of us, what we feared more than anything was disappointing John W. Ripley.

In the CP, the gunny, the XO, and his platoon commanders affectionately referred to him as "Rip the Skip." Someone even wrote that on the heel of his shower shoes when we were in Payable and we walked down to the river to take a bath or to the showers. Unlike other units, he required us to wear helmets and flak jackets. The helmets had to have the chinstrap fastened at all times. We had to shave everyday whether we needed it or not. We often came across other Marine units in the field, chinstraps flapping back and forth in the wind, three to eight days growth of beard. We secretly wished that we could look so salty, but these disciplinary rules had a purpose in a coherent, whole leadership theory that kept us together and made us effective.

There was grumbling sometimes that Ripley seemed ready and willing to lead us into harm's way at the drop of a hat. He often lobbied for the most dangerous missions and more than sometimes got them. We learned over time that when he lead us into harm's way (and often it was much bigger harm than we were battalion, even regimental size harm), harm usually got the shit kicked out of it if it didn't turn tail and run like a rabbit.

Ripley could take risks because of his confidence, because of his competence, because of his preparedness, because of his knowledge of what his officers and men could do, what the weapons systems could do that were available to him and what North Vietnamese units that we ran into could do. Those NVA, in time, learned of Ripley's skills and Ripley had a reputation among them. They didn't like going up against him.

He is mentioned almost parenthetically in the book The Nightingale Song as one of the young Marine (Naval Academy graduates) officers, who served as platoon or company commanders in Vietnam, who it is intimated were of higher quality or among the best, than perhaps the subjects of the book, including McFarlane, Oliver North, John McCain, et. al. Of course, we knew the high quality of our company commander first hand.

I first arrived in Vietnam in January. We were at the Punch Bowl (Lima Hill). We got hit up on the Razorback. There was small arms fire that came zipping and popping over our heads during the engagement. Don Shipley happened to be at CP when this was going on and came back to us and told us what he observed, that Ripley coolly, calmly managed the situation. He had three or four radios going at the same time, talking to artillery, close air support, the unit on the Razorback, the unit on the Rock Pile, and his platoon commanders. Shipley said that a calm came over Ripley in this crisis situation as he managed it. Shipley was amazed at the obviously apparent competence and professional abilities of this Marine, who had only recently come to command Lima company. Perhaps he was not the "perfect" company commander in Vietnam, but in leading us and with us at his back he was damn close.

I once sent him a photograph taken at Camp Carroll probably 35 years earlier. He was in the photograph along with Sgt. Chancey and Sgt. Jarvis. There were four or five others that I tried to identify. He responded by pointing out to me who the others were and that I'd been mistaken in my identification of them. "I remember them all," he said, "I remember them all." Many of us, perhaps all of us at times had wondered if we'd lived up to his expectations. He addressed that issue at a public speech before a hall of Marines in Washington, D.C., one year when speaking about Lima Company in 1967. "My Marines never disappointed me," he said. "Never! Not once!"

I wish we had more time with him. I wish I had written to him more often. I wish that I'd spent more time sitting with him at the reunions. I wish that he, as he was planning to do, could have made the trip back to Vietnam that Al Niece has worked with him to put together. But he has cheated death many times. His wonderful family and his Marines and his Marine Corps and his country had him a lot longer than perhaps we had any right to expect.
He was incredibly lucky, but to a great extent he made his own luck through hard work, preparedness, honing his skills, and professionalism.

We have the memories of him walking among us, defending us, supporting us, still leading by example. God knows that we appreciate it.

John Ripley never became a general, but his example of leadership and personal and professional courage will serve the Marine Corps down through the generations, keep alive the finest military leadership arts honed by the Spartans, lived by the Marines, and very well may have a larger effect on the future Marine Corps than that of many who made it into the general ranks. He was never awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor although many have felt that his actions in 1972 during the Easter Offensive at Dong Ha Bridge, clearly deserved it. I asked him about it one time. He said, "No. That's been settled." Had he been killed at the Bridge of Dong Ha, he probably would have gotten the Medal of Honor, but we're glad we had him alive instead.

He was humble about his many high personal decorations, lamenting the fact that others, who were just as deserving in his words did not receive the recognition, but he wore those personal decorations well and he honored all of us in doing so.

Thank you, John Ripley, for the leadership you gave us, for the legend you made, for the honor given to all of us and those who gave their lives in your command by the exemplary life and Marine Corps career that you've lived and made. Thank you for being Always Faithful.
Semper Fi,
John M. Solbach

WARRIOR AT REST
GENERAL ROBERT H. BARROW
27TH COMMANDANT OF
THE MARINE CORPS
05 Feb 1922 to 30 Oct 2008

Reprinted With Permission Leatherneck Magazine January 2009

General Robert Hilliard Barrow passed away 30 Oct. 2008. Another giant of the Corps is gone but will never be forgotten. He was buried, alongside his wife, Patty Ann (Pulliam) Barrow, with full Marine honors at Grace Episcopal Church Cemetery, St. Francisville, La., 3 Nov. 2008

1st/Lt Robert H. Barrow spent six months with the Sino-American Cooperative Organization fighting alongside Chinese soldiers and guerrillas against the Japanese in China during WWII

In his eulogy delivered at the funeral, General Carl E. Mundy Jr., 30th Commandant of the Marine Corps, noted that although Gen Barrow was widely respected as a three-war Marine, his favorite assignment was at MCRD Parris Island, S.C.., shaping the Corps of the future. Gen Mundy said:

"From his earliest days in the Corps, he gained the firm and oft articulated belief that it is people who make the difference. Tanks, ships, airplanes and rifles are all important tools-but without the right people, they're useless.

"Even numbers didn't count with him. A favorite saying was, 'In battle, it's not how many show up ... it's who they are.'

"He believed that fairly ordinary young Americans-properly molded by the Corps into Marines-are different, and in times of trial make the difference. He put a sign over the entrance to Parris Island that stated, simply: 'Where the Difference Begins.'

"His focus on people would continue throughout his remaining important as-signments in the Corps, and he would say, on more than a few occasions, that if he had it to do again, he would forego the additional stars that would come to him in favor of remaining at Parris Island as long as he could. It was his favorite post, and appropriately, its headquarters today is named for him: Barrow Hall.

"He became Commandant of our Corps in 1979 and would continue until retirement four years later to shape his Corps, and to perpetuate the unique culture and character that comes with being a Marine.

"History has already measured Bob Barrow and marked him as one of the finest ever to have worn the uniform he wears in his casket today. Among the 34 men over the history of our nation who have been privileged to lead the Marine Corps, he most assuredly stands near the pinnacle.

"So, as we bid farewell to this magnificent American ... devoted and loving husband ... father ... grandfather ... friend ... and above all, Marine ... let us do so with gratitude that our nation produces men the stature of Robert Hilliard Bar-row; that he chose to become a Marine; and that we have been privileged to know him.

"His likes do not often pass our way. "Semper Fidelis, General."

LT GENERAL VICTOR "BRUTE" H. KRULAK DIES AT AGE 95

Jan 1913– 30 Dec 2008
UNION-TRIBUNE STAFF
December 30, 2008

Lt. Gen. Victor H. Krulak, who entered the U.S. Naval Academy as an undersized 16-year-old and rose to commander of all Marine Corps forces in the Pacific, died Monday night at the Wesley Palms Retirement Community in San Diego. He was 95.

Rising barely 5 feet, 5 inches, Gen. Krulak was jokingly nicknamed Brute by his academy classmates. The moniker stuck, reinforced by his direct, no-nonsense style. And, as Time magazine later said, "There was nothing undersized about his brain." A sign in his Honolulu office while he commanded Pacific forces expressed Gen. Krulak's disciplined leadership: "The harder I work, the luckier I get."

While commanding more than 100,000 Marines in the Pacific from 1964 to 1968, Gen. Krulak took part in a critical stage of America's buildup of forces and involvement in Vietnam. Before his retirement from the military after 34 years in 1968, he was considered a strong candidate for commandant, the top Marine post that his oldest son, Charles, attained in 1995. Gen. Krulak became, at 43, the youngest brigadier general in Marine Corps history up to that time. By then, he was a decorated veteran of World War II and the Korean War and had been wounded while directing a Marine parachute battalion in the South Pacific against overwhelming odds.

When Gen. Krulak retired from the military, he received the second of two Distinguished Service Medals. For the next nine years, he was employed by Copley Newspapers, serving at various times as director of editorial and news policy and news media president of Copley News Service. He retired as vice president of The Copley Press Inc. in 1977 and contributed columns on international affairs and military matters for Copley News Service. He also wrote the book "First to Fight," an insider's view of the Marine Corps. A tenacious critic of the government's handling of the Vietnam War, he wrote that the war could have been won only if the Vietnamese people had been protected and befriended and if enemy supplies from North Vietnam were cut off.

"The destruction of the port of Haiphong would have changed the whole character of the war," he said two decades after the fall of Saigon. Gen. Krulak once summed up the U.S. dilemma in Vietnam by saying, "It has no front lines. The battlefield is in the minds of 16 or 17 million people." His first-hand knowledge of the U.S. involvement in Vietnam was enhanced by his 54 visits there during the 1960s. Before assuming command of Fleet Marine Force Pacific in 1964, Gen. Krulak served as principal adviser on counterinsurgency warfare to then-Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. "I never got enthusiasm out of war, and I'm convinced that the true pacifists are the professional soldiers who have actually seen it," he said many years later.

Gen. Krulak, a native of Denver, received his appointment to the Naval Academy before finishing high school. "I was underweight and little – so they called me 'Brute,' " he said. Gen. Krulak received a waiver to bypass the Marine Corps height requirement of 5 feet, 6 inches. He was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps after graduating from the Naval Academy in 1934. All three of Gen. Krulak's sons followed him to the Naval Academy. Each served in Vietnam while Gen. Krulak was commanding the Hawaii-based Fleet Marine Force. The leadership Gen. Krulak exhibited in combat during World War II marked him as star on the rise. On the island of Choiseul, he led his outnumbered battalion during an eight-day raid on Japanese forces, diverting the enemy's attention from the U.S. invasion of Bougainville. Gen. Krulak's troops destroyed hundreds of tons of supplies, burning both camps and landing barges. He was wounded on Oct. 13, 1943, and later received the Navy Cross for heroism along with the Purple Heart. The PT boat that transported Gen. Krulak off Choiseul was skippered by a young Navy lieutenant, John F. Kennedy. Years later, then-President Kennedy chose Gen. Krulak as a special adviser on guerrilla warfare in Vietnam. Gen. Krulak's distinguished service in World War II as assistant chief of staff of the newly formed 6th Marine Division earned him a Legion of Merit with a combat V. He received a Bronze Star at the end of the war for his role in negotiating the surrender of Japanese forces in the area of Tsingtao, China. In May 1998, Gen. Krulak was inducted into the Navy Department's Acquisition Hall of Fame for his work in developing landing boats that were crucial to the success of scores of amphibious landings in World War II.

Gen. Krulak worked with Andrew Higgins, a New Orleans boat builder, to produce a model of what became the Landing Craft, Vehicles and Personnel. More than 2,000 of the craft were built for the U.S. military and its allies. As chief of staff with the 1st Marine Division during the Korean War, Gen. Krulak earned a second Legion of Merit with a combat V. He also received an Air Medal for reconnaissance and other flights in Korea between Aug. 1950 and July 1951.

In December 1959, Gen. Krulak, then a two-star general, assumed command of the Marine Corps Recruit Depot in San Diego, a position he held until his appointment in 1962 as an adviser in the Kennedy Administration. In 1963, he was described by his World War II commander, Gen. Holland M. "Howling Mad" Smith, as "the most brilliant officer I've known in my 58 years in the Marine Corps." A longtime Point Loma resident, Gen. Krulak was honored in 1968 as San Diego's "Citizen of the Year" by San Diego Uplifters, a group of 400 professional and business leaders. Gen. Krulak was known for writing his own military speeches and was a popular speaker before civic organizations. He received several national awards for his patriotic writing and speaking, including one in 1978 from the Freedoms Foundation. He was active in many community organizations and was a former president and trustee of the Zoological Society of San Diego. He received honorary degrees from the University of San Diego and Loyola University.

Honoring a Fallen Hero
Sgt. Michael A. Marzano, USMC

May 18, 1976 — May 7, 2005
By Doc Cahill Delta Co 1/26

November 1, 2008 was a beautiful autumn day, as my wife and I drove into the Shenango Valley of Western Pennsylvania. We headed towards the small city of Hermitage, over the rolling hills and scenic countryside to attend the dedication of Mercer County VA Outpatient Clinic. The sun was shining and the temperature in the mid 60's. I thought to myself, what a gorgeous day to be honoring one of our fallen Heroes from the Iraqi War. The honor was to name the clinic after Sgt. Michael A. Marzano. Sgt. Marzano was killed in action by a vehicle borne improvised explosive device, while conducting combat operations in Haditha, Iraq on May 7, 2005. According to central command the combat operation was to retake a civilian hospital, held by insurgents.

We met up with Al Marzano at Denny's Restaurant for a breakfast at 9:00 am. Al is the father of Michael Marzano and served with Delta Company, 1st Battalion 26th Marines in Vietnam. In attendance were Al's Delta Co. Brothers and sisters; Doc Cahill and wife Joyce, Bill Purdy and wife Kim, and Chuck Tomer and wife Gloria; along with Al's niece, 2nd Class Petty Officer Denise Darling.

After an enjoyable breakfast, we headed for the VA clinic in Hermitage where the ceremony was to begin at 11:00 am. We arrived a bit early, but you couldn't tell by the crowd of people grouped together planning to attend the ceremony. It was humbling to see the many young and old wearing T-shirts, buttons and lapel pins with Michael Marzano's picture on the front, some saying "My hero and cousin, My hero and nephew, My hero and friend". Also in the crowd were many family, friends, towns' people, clinic personnel, members of military organizations, and Congressmen Phil English and Jason Altmire to celebrate this young Hero.

The Patriot Guard Riders were arriving on their motorcycles from which they dismounted and began to line the perimeter, holding American Flags near the main street passing the clinic. It was a pretty awesome sight for me…I was feeling so proud to be in attendance with the crowd of over 200-300 people. Before long, the Ceremony of Dedication to Michael Marzano began with a prayer and the playing of the National Anthem. I noticed quite easily that Patriotism was evident with most joining in and singing the National Anthem, how exhilarating. Words were spoken about Michael by the Master of Ceremony and the Congressman in attendance. Flowers were bestowed to Michael's father, Al Marzano and mother, Margy Bons; as tears streamed down their faces during this bitter-sweet moment. Most in the crowd were wiping tears and grabbing for their handkerchiefs and tissues; a very moving moment, indeed. After some words by the two Congressmen, a beautiful gold framed portrait of Michael was unveiled; to be hung in the clinic for all to see as they enter the clinic reception room. A Benediction was said followed by Taps, bringing all to tears. It was a very well organized Dedication fitting of one of this country's fallen warriors, Michael A. Marzano. A tour of the state of the art clinic soon followed.

After the Ceremony and tour of the Michael A. Marzano VA Outpatient Clinic, a small group of family and friends, along with Al Marzano, went to the local VFW. We then proceeded to the cemetery in Greenville, beautifully set on a rural low incline; to pay our respects at the grave site of this young Marine hero. I was amazed, as were others, to see such a gorgeous site. It was a black granite bench with Michael's picture engraved, also engraved were a pair of boxing gloves along with Michael's name, date of birth, date of death and "Sgt. US Marine Corps, KIA Operation Iraqi Freedom, Our Son, Our Friend, Our Hero". There is also a Marine NCO sword etched between Michael and Al's names. A fitting site for this brave young Marine, the first casualty from Mercer County. From there, we traveled to a local restaurant for an honorary dinner with many of Michael's family and friends. It was a great closing to a memorable day. (See Back Cover For Photos)

I learned a lot about this young American Hero by talking with family and friends. I asked Al: "Did your son always want to be a Marine." With a smile, that many of his comrades know, he answered; "Not always, I think he was about two when he decided." Al also commented; "I miss him every day and I am sure he was a much better Marine than I was." I also learned Michael would dress in his Dad's uniform when he was a youngster, pretending to be a Marine as his Dad was. From many relatives and friends I learned Michael was well liked in high school, he was described as polite, fun to be with and a great high school athlete in football, wrestling and boxing. Michael was a very good boxer winning several Golden Gloves tournaments in Youngstown and Cleveland, Ohio and Erie, Pa., including the Ohio Regional Championship Title. Michael had tried to join the Marine Corp after high school, but was not accepted due to a torn Anterior Cruciate Ligament (ACL) of his knee, from his participation in high school sports. Michael was determined to be a Marine, working tirelessly for 4 years to rehab the knee, which included replacement of the torn ligament. In 1999 he tried again to join and passed the physical to be on his way to becoming a United States Marine. His dream had come through. Michael served his four years and was discharged from active duty. After his discharge he attended college in Arizona. He then joined the Marine Reserves, and volunteered for duty in Iraq. Michael is the true meaning of Hero, and his love for his country is evident by the life he lived.

I am so grateful to feel a part of the Marzano family and to call Michael's Dad, a Delta Brother for life. Please join me in a prayer for Michael and his family and give thanks to Michael and brave young men like him who are willing to give up life defending America. May God bless them all and Godspeed to the Marzano family and friends.
Submitted with great respect and humility,
Doc Cahill

Memorializing a Fallen Hero:

VA clinic renamed for
Sgt. Michael A. Marzano USMC
Son Of Al Marzano
By Joe Pinchot
Herald Staff Writer

To Margy E. Bons, it seemed that her son, Michael A. Marzano, had wanted to be in the military since he was a baby.

His father, Albert B. Marzano, was a Marine, and young Michael, who could barely walk, would put on his dad's uniform and trip over the too-large clothes, she said."He always talked about being a Marine," Ms. Bons said. To know that their son lived out his dream was only partially comforting for Ms. Bons of Desert Hills, Ariz., and Albert Marzano of Greenville, who attended Saturday's dedication of the renaming of the Mercer County Veterans Administration Outpatient Clinic in Hermitage in honor of their son, a Marine sergeant.

"I would rather have him here than be here for this," Albert Marzano said. But, both parents said they were honored that their son was being memorialized for his service.

"It helps to keep talking about him," Ms. Bons said. "It keeps his legacy alive." "I know he would be proud of this," Albert Marzano said.

Marzano, 28, a Greenville native and 1995 graduate of Sharon High School, was killed in a suicide bomber attack May 7, 2005, in Haditha, Iraq.

Marzano was the first soldier from Mercer County to die in the war on terror."I have read the report of his commanding officer," said U.S. Rep. Phil English, Erie, R-3rd District, who introduced the renaming bill in the House. "His heroism saved the lives of a number of people in his company."

The renaming was a lengthy process bogged down in congressional politics, but English and Jason Altmire, Wexford, D-4th District, said the unanimous support of Mercer County veterans advocates led to the passage.

"Thank you for keeping the faith and helping us to make this dream a reality," English said.

English presented Marzano's parents copies of the renaming legislation and pens that President Bush used to sign it.

We're here because Michael earned the right to have his name on this building," Altmire said. Two Marines escorted Marzano's parents to a place below the American, military, state and prisoner of war flags, where his portrait was unveiled, and then taken inside the clinic to be hung.

"We are gathered here to honor a young man who honored us with his life and his service," said Gary G. Solander, Mercer County director of veterans affairs. "Michael Marzano gave his life for his country in the service of freedom, which is the very highest payment any human being can make."

The event was attended by 200 to 300 people, including members of Veterans of Foreign Wars posts from all over Mercer County, members of the Yellow Ribbon Families support group, and local, county, state and federal elected officials.

Albert Marzano, a Vietnam War veteran who gets medical care at the clinic, said Vietnam War-era friends and acquaintances came from as far away as Texas for the dedication.

Speaking of the VFW attendees, he said: "I expected maybe the local one. I didn't expect all of them. That was very nice."

OBIT

Former Marine Corporal William A. Roble, USMC, 44-years-old, of Costa Mesa, California, an associate member of the Khe Sanh Veterans Association, died while he was on vacation in Peru, when he apparently suffered a brain aneurysm while hiking. Bill is the brother of Lance Corporal Joseph E. Roble, USMC; a member of Echo Company on Hill 861-A during the 1968 Tet Offensive who was KIA at LZ Margo on September 16, 1968. Many Khe Sanh veterans knew Bill through his attendance at several reunions as well as the book he wrote about his brother, "Just One", an attempt to learn of the brother he barely knew since he was only 3 1/2 years old when Joe left for Vietnam in the Fall of 1967.

Bill was the one who arranged the award ceremony for his brother at Arlington National Cemetery during the 1998 reunion when the Bronze Star Medal with Combat Distinguishing "V" Device was awarded to Joe for his heroism the day before he died.

Bill is still in Peru, services are pending. The family plans to hold services and inter him with his father and brother in Latrobe, Pennsylvania, approximately fifty (50) miles east of Pittsburgh, after arrangements can be made to return him to the United States.

I always had a special feeling for Bill; because Joe was so good to me in 1967 and 1968, taking a "boot" under his wing as he did, and since I have a brother Bill's age; so I always thought of how it would have affected my brother had I not returned from Vietnam.

I spoke with Mrs. Roble, "Mickey Mom", earlier today and she is doing as well as can be expected. My heart goes out to the Roble Family. Rest in Peace Marine. Semper Fidelis!!!

Marines Missing From Vietnam War Are Identified

The Department of Defense POW/Missing Personnel Office (DPMO) announced that the remains of four U.S. servicemen, missing from the Vietnam War, have been identified and will be returned to their families for burial with full military honors.

They are Lance Cpl. Kurt E. La Plant, of Lenexa, Kan., and Lance Cpl. Luis F. Palacios, of Los Angeles, Calif. Remains that could not be individually identified are included in a group. Among the group remains are Lance Cpl. Ralph L. Harper, of Indianapolis, Ind., and Pfc. Jose R. Sanchez, of Brooklyn, N.Y. All men were U.S. Marine Corps. Palacios will be buried Friday in Bellflower, Calif., and the other Marines will be buried as a group in the spring in Arlington National Cemetery near Washington, D.C.

On June 6, 1968, these men were aboard a CH-46A Sea Knight helicopter that was attempting an emergency extraction of elements of the 1st Battalion, 4th Regiment, 3rd Marine Division then engaged against hostile forces in the mountains southwest of Khe Sanh, Quang Tri Province, South Vietnam. The helicopter was struck by enemy ground fire and crashed, killing 12 of the 23 crewmen and passengers on board. All but four of the men who died were subsequently recovered and identified.

Between 1993 and 2005, joint U.S./Socialist Republic of Vietnam (S.R.V.) teams, led by the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command (JPAC), investigated the incident in Quang Tri Province, interviewed witnesses and surveyed the crash site three times. The team found a U.S. military boot fragment and wreckage consistent with that of a CH-46 helicopter.

In 2006, a team began excavating the site and recovered human remains and non-biological material evidence including La Plant's identification tag. While at the site, a Vietnamese citizen turned over to the team human remains the he claimed to have found amid the wreckage. In 2007, another team completed the excavation and recovered additional human remains, life support material and aircraft wreckage.

Among other forensic identification tools and circumstantial evidence, scientists from JPAC and the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory also used mitochondrial DNA and dental comparisons in the identification of the remains.

WHO WERE YOU WITH

By William R. Miller

A few years ago I was strolling with my wife through a fall festival in a small Kansas town. I was wearing a red ball cap with an eagle, globe, and anchor logo on the front. I noticed another man with a similar hat as he passed us in the crowd. He stopped, turned to me, and said, "Who were you with?"

"1st Marine Aircraft Wing, MASS Duce [Marine Air Support Squadron 2], Dong Ha on the DMZ '68–'69. You?" I answered without thinking.

"2/5 , Hue City, Tet '68, Semper fi," he said and walked on.

"Who was that?" my wife asked.

"Just another Marine," I said. Just another Marine, what an understatement I thought. At other times that day, I saw a cruise jacket, a sweatshirt, and two more ball caps all representing the Marine Corps. I saw the emblems of no other Service. Since then I have become more aware, and I have noted that I see Marine Corps bumper stickers and rear window decals, not Army.

I see Marine Corps flags outside homes, not Air Force. And I see Marine caps and jackets, seldom Navy. I started counting, and I actually see about 20 Marine symbols to each display of the other Armed Forces. Yet, the Marine Corps is still the smallest of the Services. Could it be that "once a Marine, always a Marine" is true? Could it be that there is a greater pride in having been one of the few?

For the last 5 years I, too, have asked the question, "Who were you with?" I have always gotten an answer; no one has ever asked, "What do you mean?" Marines understand the question. A few times the ball cap has represented a son or daughter. But even their parents know the units with whom their children are serving. The pride of their being with the Marines is also in the parents.

This year, at the same festival, I met four Marines. One young man said he spent the Marine Corps birthday, 10 November 2004, in Fallujah with 1/3; the second had helped the 2d Marine Division take Kuwait City in 1991; and the third served with me in Vietnam, only farther south at Chu Lai in 1970. But the one that I remember the most was the man in a worn, faded cruise jacket, walking slowly with a cane, and being passed by the crowd.

I walked to his side, slowed to his pace, and asked, "Who were you with?" He stopped, turned, stood up straight, and looked me in the eye. "5th Marine Division, Iwo Jima, 1945," he said. A chill went through me and I knew I was in the presence of a history maker. "Thank you," I said. He smiled and said, "You?" As we talked I told him that I had been an air control officer in Vietnam and that my son had just completed three tours in Iraq with Marine Unmanned Aerial Vehicle Squadron 2. Before I knew it, he was thanking me. He continued to tell me how much harder it is today to tell who the enemy is and how much he admires our young Marines.

Today I teach biology at Baker University in Kansas, and I often tell my students that they have not yet had history happen to them. They do not remember Pearl Harbor or know what happened at the Chosin Reservoir or even where to find Con Thien on a map. At times I get to tell them about Marines whom I have met and the history they helped make. But still it is hard for them to understand what an injured Army captain I met on China Beach meant when he told me, "The most beautiful sight in the world is a Marine F–4 rolling in hot with snake and nape."

These events are not just part of history; they are history. Had their results been different, the world would be different. "Who were you with?" says more than "Where were you when . . . ?" or "What were you doing when . . . ?" It says participant not spectator. It says Marine.

So the next time you see an eagle, globe, and anchor on a hat or shirt pocket ask the simple question, "Who were you with?" Listen to the answer of a unit, a place, and a time and think about that moment in history. But more than that, listen to the pride saying, "I am a Marine."

Dr. Miller served with the 1st MAW, Marine Air Control Group 18, MASS–2 in Vietnam from 1968–69. He is currently working in the Department of Biology, Baker University, Baldwin City, KS

RARE REUNION

The Daily Progress

Matthew Rosenberg In the pilot's seat of his Huey for the first time in 40 years, Bob Ford recalls memories good and bad.

By David Maurer

Published: November 8, 2008

For just a moment Bob Ford paused in mid stride, stock-still, as if he had felt a trip-wire touch the lace of his jungle boot. Not 40 feet away was the UH-1 Iroquois "Huey" helicopter he had flown on hundreds of combat missions during the Vietnam War. The very ship that had once been so full of wounded Marines that their blood had run under his seat, into the cockpit and coagulated in a rust-colored smear beneath his feet.

The same magnificent machine that had behaved so admirably while being torn and slammed by shockwave concussions from mortar rounds exploding just yards away. The exact chopper he had affectionately called the "Bell Hotel," in reference to the company that manufactured it. Ford would later say seeing his old ship after 40 years was, "Just like seeing home." But in the first radiant flush of reunion the man from Okeene, Ok., expressed the inexpressible with a singular, "I'll be doggone."

On a recent Friday morning, in the silence of a Greene County warehouse, a helicopter pilot who became a miller, and a flying machine that became much more than the sum of its parts, reunited. "It's not even a machine," Ford said as he stood back to admire it. "It was really something you strapped onto your body. "Every part of that machine was as close to you as anything you've ever been around in your life. I can still remember the smell of the fuel when you hit those igniters.

"That machine was so wonderful to me, it really was. I loved everything about it. I loved the sound of the turbine when we'd start it. Everything about that aircraft just encompassed my whole being."

Owen R. "Dick" Thompson was also a Huey pilot in Vietnam. He made the trip from his Gordonsville home to witness the get-together. "I think this is a first," Thompson said. "There's a number of organizations that are Vietnam related and people get aircraft, pull them out of bone yards and fly them. "But to get into the aircraft with the same tail number as the one you flew in combat — the odds of that are astronomical. At one time there were 6,000 Hueys flying during that era. "This one was on the way to the bone yard when Craig found it. To be able to pull it out, and then find the actual pilot who flew it."

Craig LaMountain saved the Huey in 1996 from the jaws of a junkyard crusher. The government gave it to him with the understanding that he would use it as a historical teaching aid. The Huey is now the centerpiece of a museum exhibit that LaMountain has created on his property to honor Vietnam veterans. School children and veterans alike have seen the displays of artifacts and machines from the Vietnam War, but Ford's recent visit was unprecedented.

"Just to see Bob's reactions when he walked in and saw the helicopter," said LaMountain who also served in Vietnam with the Army. "He saved lives with this ship. He was one of the cowboys of Vietnam.

"His daughter said all he talked about this last week was about coming here and being reunited with his ship." A flying workhorse The Huey had been an all -purpose workhorse. It attacked enemy positions, evacuated wounded from battlefields, ferried troops into combat and delivered supplies. As Ford approached No. 754 for the first time in decades, he was drawn to two framed photographs in its cargo area. The 64-year-old former aircraft commander picked up the one that showed him standing at the front of the helicopter in 1968.

"That's me," Ford said quietly as he looked at the younger version of himself staring back at him. "Can you believe it? "We had flown several missions that day, and we had just come back from a really tough one. After I got out I walked to the front and said, 'You big son of a bitch, you got me back again.' "My copilot said, 'Hey boss, let me take your picture.' I'm wearing the same uniform today as I was wearing then."

Ford picked up the other photograph showing a gathering of eight young men, himself included. Inked across the front of their flight suits and T-shirts were their names and fate — five of the eight were either wounded or killed in action. "A radio kid had come in with a Polaroid camera and took a few pictures," Ford recalled. "I asked him if I could have this one, because I realized I might never be able to get all the guys together like that again.

"This guy here, Jerry McKinsey, was a great guy. During the siege of Khe Sanh he was trying to get some guys out when he was shot down and killed. His dad was the chief of police of Modesto, Calif." Ford had sent the photographs to LaMountain after reading a story about the helicopter that appeared in The Daily Progress in January. He felt they should be with the ship. Toine Wyckoff, a Charlottesville resident, read the story first and sent it to her daughter-in-law, Amy Ford Bradley, who lives in Alexandria.

When Ford's daughter saw the photograph of the helicopter and the numbers 282 on its side she knew it was from her father's unit. The Black Cats Ford had flown with the 282nd Assault Helicopter Company based in Da Nang, South Vietnam. He had become the commander of the unit's detachment stationed in Hue. The outfit's nickname was the Black Cats. Serial numbers, log books and maintenance records verified that this was the actual helicopter Ford flew in Vietnam.

"I grew up knowing the Black Cats," Bradley said as she watched her dad go over the machine with the careful scrutiny of a preflight check. "Even today when I hear a helicopter flying over I have to stop, look up and see it. "It's that connection to my dad. We went to see the Huey at the Smithsonian and that was a real moment. But I had never seen him in the cockpit of one before. "So to see him in the helicopter he flew in Vietnam is hard to put into words.

It really is. The thing that resonates with me is that he never questioned serving in that war. It's something I don't want my kids to ever forget. I'm so proud of him. " Without straining a button on his vintage uniform, Ford climbed into the left seat where the commander sits. He reached under it, pulled a lever and slid the seat all the way forward.

"People asked me why I'd always have my seat so far forward and down," Ford said as a smile spread across his face. "I'd tell them I made a smaller target that way."

Ford started through the start-up sequence, explaining what he was doing as his daughter looked on from the copilot's right seat. When he did something that made the main rotor blades waggle for the first time in how long, they beamed at each other.
"The first thing I would do after getting in a helicopter was pull this circuit breaker right here to make sure nobody accidentally turned on the windshield wipers," Ford said. "If you wanted to make a crew chief mad, turn your windshield wipers on and scratch the Plexiglas. "When the sun is out you can't see through it when it's scratched. But if bullets hit it, it wouldn't shatter. The bullets would just make clean holes."

Thompson smiled as he watched and listened to Ford talk to his daughter about what it was like to fly Hueys in war. He later reflected on it. "I loved watching Bob go through the start-up sequence," said Thompson who retired from the Army as a lieutenant colonel. "It's good for his family, too. "You don't understand what people have gone through unless you hear someone talking about it. Then seeing him in the actual aircraft he flew, that really makes a big difference.

"That's why I brought my grandkids here. They're too young to know anything, but just to have them sit in the seat of a Huey and see the flight helmet I donated here with my name on the back of it. They'll remember a little of it."

CLOSE CALLS IN COMBAT

As Ford looked through the scratch-free windshield of No. 754, his memory served up one of the most vivid images he came away from that war with. It occurred while he was picking up a small Army Special Forces reconnaissance team off a mountainside in Laos. "We had two Cobra gunships supporting us," Ford said. "The team was completely surrounded, and the incoming gunfire was just God awful. "The last two guys got on and I lifted off, putting all the power to her. I was just starting to get some altitude when all of a sudden right in front of us a Cobra went diving straight down just shooting the sh— out of everything. "Honest to God he was so close I winced in my seat, because I though his blades were going to hit us. He couldn't have missed us by more than a few feet. It was absolutely unbelievable."

The Huey was remarkably resilient and capable of enduring tremendous punishment. At different times Ford had limped them back to friendly territory with holes through the main rotor blades, through the rear rotor blade, in the fuel tank and throughout the fuselage. "Unless you got hit in a real vital place, that thing would keep on flying," Ford said. "One critical place I got shot was right through the 42-degree gear box. "I was at about 500 feet, and the second I got hit the ship started shuddering and I lost about 300 feet almost instantly. It shook so violently I couldn't read the instruments. "I thought, 'This is it.' But then it smoothed out and we went on to complete the mission." Just a bump in the road for a Huey helicopter pilot in Vietnam. They, along with their crew chiefs and door gunners, were revered by the combat ground troops they supported. Untold numbers of Vietnam veterans are alive today because of their heroics.

CONFRONTING TET

Courage doesn't mean not being scared. Ford's year-long tour of duty was from July 1967 to July 1968. Some of his most dangerous missions were conducted during the Tet Offensive in support of Marines engaged in fierce fighting for the city of Hue.
"During the Tet Offensive I would have to go back into Hue time and again," Ford said. "I had made it through a dozen or so missions without a break, and I was sitting on my bunk when this private comes in. "He said, 'Lt. Ford, you have to go back, you're the only one who can do this mission.' I remember getting so scared that I could hardly walk to the aircraft.

"Honest to God, I thought I was either going to pass out, cry or throw up. The only way I got over it was I diverted from the aircraft and walked over to the platoon hooch. "I walked in and those guys looked at me like death had arrived. I said I wanted another aircraft commander to go with me on the mission. Are there any volunteers? Colburn? I liked Bart Colburn. "He said, 'I'll go with you boss.' We did the mission, and when we got back I thanked him for going. He said, 'You did all the flying.' I said, 'I know, but I couldn't have done it without you.' "

Joe Sumner was Ford's crew chief on many missions flown in No. 754. The pilots flew the Hueys, but they belonged to the crew chiefs. "Many times after a day of flight operations we'd have to work into the night to get the ship ready for the next day," said Sumner, who lives in Georgia and works for Delta Airlines as a technical manager on the 737 aircraft. "We got real skinny over there. "Bob Ford was a very good pilot, and he took care of the guys who worked for him. He couldn't have been better. And that helicopter means a lot to me, too. "I spent a year taking care of that thing, and it took care of me. We picked up a lot of wounded soldiers in it and carried them to the hospital in Da Nang or out to the hospital ships in the gulf. It saved the lives of a lot of people."

Sumner plans to reunite with his old helicopter as well. He still has the bullet that nearly took them both out during a mission 10 miles south of Da Nang. "We started taking fire from some sampans on a river, and I could see the green tracers coming up at us," Sumner said. "One went right by the left side of my head. "I heard a big bang and felt something hot on my neck. I looked to my left and there was a big hole in the side wall where the bullet went through. After we got back to Da Nang I found the bullet up by the engine."

AFTER THE ARMY

Ford never bothered to count the day and night missions he flew in Vietnam, but said it was no less than 1,200. He didn't bother about medals either, and the Air Medal for valor he was awarded came as something of a fluke. "The only reason I got the medal was because a major wanted to fly on a mission into Hue, and he wrote me up," Ford said. "He actually went a little crazy on me. "I had to turn his radio off, because he kept screaming, 'We're getting hit, we're getting hit.' It was a terrible situation, but it was only about a fifth as tough as most of the missions were." After serving three years in the Army, Ford left with the rank of captain.

Within five days of being discharged he went to work for the flour milling business his grandfather, J. Lloyd Ford, started in 1906. The former helicopter pilot was as successful in civilian life as he was in the military. He and his older brother, Bill, continue to run the family business that grinds about 20,000 bushels of wheat a day. And like their grandfather before them, the brothers continue the family legacy of giving back to the community whenever they can. As much good as Ford has done as a civilian, he said he has never stood as proud or accomplished as much as when he was serving his country in Vietnam.

After spending a couple hours with his old warhorse, Ford said goodbye again. Outside in the sunlight he tried to sum up what he had just experienced. "I didn't think I would ever sit in a Huey ever, ever again," said the executive vice president of the Shawnee Milling Company. "I never even thought about it until I read the newspaper article. "Then it just consumed me to get back here, and look at this aircraft that meant so much to me. It represents a part of my life that was by far the most profound, and by far the most rewarding. "Being part of a team, a crew, that flew these day in and day out for more than a thousand combat missions. It means everything. It really does."

THE STORY OF THE UNKNOWN BOOTS

The Army boots appeared at the entrance to Stanislaus the week before Veterans Day, just as they have every November for the past 10 years.

They were placed on top of a monument, with a small American flag inside the leather, canvas and laces. The boots were there to both honor and remember, standing guard at one of Macon's busiest intersections (Vineville and Pio Nono) and fronting one of its loveliest neighborhoods.

By today, the boots will be gone. They will reappear around Memorial Day, then report for duty again next Veterans Day.

Tuesday was a day marked by 21-gun salutes and moving refrains of taps across the city. But, for every public recognition of those who serve and have served our country in the armed forces, there were hundreds of other silent, yet powerful, tributes like this one.

For years, nobody was sure who left the boots there every May and November. They would arrive on top of the granite marker under the cloak of darkness. Eventually, the neighbors figured out those shoes had Jack Cartwright's fingerprints all over them. He could never deny his feet would fit inside those size 8.5 C-width jungle boots.

He continued placing them there twice a year, along with the flag, maintaining the tradition even after he moved from the neighborhood. At first, the thought of Jack having anything to do with the large marker at the Stanislaus entrance was somewhat amusing. The marker had been moved there from the property near Bonita Place sometimes known as the Grotto, a rocky area once used as a retreat for the monks at St. Stanislaus College.

The Jesuit school and its 40-acre campus was once located where the Stanislaus neighborhood is now. A fire destroyed the college in 1921, and the property was sold to developers five years later.

The marker was inscribed with a sword and Bible. Jack first thought it looked like a tombstone. Of the 55 votes cast by the neighborhood association, he was the only one to vote against it. He called himself the lone "contrarian."

Maybe it does look like a tombstone, but Jack would later transform it into the tombstone of the unknown boots. Only a few folks have ever known the real story behind them, about how Jack has always written the names of some of his buddies who were killed in Vietnam and tucked them deep inside the soles. It didn't matter that he was the only person for almost 275 miles who even knew his five high school classmates from the coal mines and tobacco fields of Bristol, Va.

Jack spent some time in the Army after college at Washington and Lee, but missed serving in Vietnam because of circumstance and timing.

His family wasn't at all rich, but they had greater financial means than many others in the community. Jack was able to go to college.

Like others of his generation, "there is also some guilt there, too," he said. "Some of my friends were drafted. I received a student deferment."

Jimmy Farmer sat behind him in algebra class. Jack would lean to his left and let him copy the answers over his shoulder. Jimmy was a good athlete, a gap-toothed poster boy for the Marines. He was killed in March 1968. Jimmy's father went out to the plane when it returned home with his son's body and saluted the flag-draped casket.

The others were Lonnie Burchett, Charles Duty and Charles Buchanan, also Marines from Bristol. Jack remembers hearing about how Buchanan's sister began screaming when she looked out the window and saw the notification officers coming up the long, winding driveway with the sad news.

And there was Michael Charles. He was one of the first black students at Jack's high school. He was in Jack's home room, but he dropped out of school, and the Marines shipped him from southwest Virginia to Southeast Asia.

He was killed less than a year from the spring he would have graduated from high school, during some of the heaviest fighting of the war at the siege at Khe Sanh.

We never knew them. They never knew us. But the boots provide a powerful reminder of their sacrifice, a silent epitaph to make sure they will never be forgotten.

HUMILITY, HEARTBREAK MAKE VETERANS DAY

John Kass
Chicago Tribune
November 12, 2008

The old Marine stood alone outside at the Veterans Memorial in Orland Park on Veterans Day, waiting for the service to begin. He wore a brown jacket and a brown Marine cap, and there was a tiny medal on his jacket. As he waited, he squinted at the low black granite walls of the memorial, reading the names carved into it, the names of the living and the dead.

"I know some of these," said Timothy Cash, 75, who said he served in the 1st Marine Division. "Some are alive. Some aren't."I asked: Are you going to have your name carved into the wall? "No," said Cash. "Hell, no. No offense to those with their names up there. That's fine if they want their names on the wall. That's great. But I don't need my name on the wall to tell me where I was. I know where I was."

Where were you?
"Korea. God was it cold."

The November rains were beginning to slant and crowds gathered, veterans and their families. A little boy and his mother showed up, Jennifer Carroll and her toddler, Daniel, and she, too, read the wall, looking for a special name.

When she found it, she pointed it out to the boy and he crouched and touched the stone. The child, open-mouthed, was excited at the feel of it on his palm, the way toddlers are constantly astonished at tactile sensations, the touch of leaves or puffy wool, of sandpaper, silk. His tiny hands marveled at the touch of cold black granite at the memorial that is called the Place of Peace.

"Phillip J. Brodnick was my cousin," Jennifer Carroll said. "He was killed on Aug. 22, 2007, in Iraq. They said it was a helicopter malfunction. There were 13 other soldiers. They all died."

Cpl. Brodnick was a graduate of Lincoln-Way High School. He was a wrestler and a musician who was on his second enlistment when he was killed. He had joined the Army in 2000, hoping to use the service to get a better education. He'd served in Kosovo. He died in northern Iraq.

"He was a good boy," Carroll said. "I just wanted to take Daniel, so Daniel could see."

She fought back tears and took Daniel up into her arms and carried him inside the Orland Park Civic Center, for the Veterans Day memorial service that was being held indoors on account of the weather.

The service was simple and good. Like Veterans Day services across our nation Tuesday, this one was crowded with military service families, with old soldiers and young ones, and mothers, wives and children.

Folks put their hands over their hearts when they sang the national anthem. The young woman who sang it didn't involve herself in jazzy histrionics. There was no ostentatious look-at-me singing. Rather, she sang it clearly, enunciating each word, then letting each word fall, and most everyone joined in.

"I sang it that way because it's not about me," she told me later. (I'm sorry that I forgot to write down her name.) "It's about the words."

There were bagpipers and the elderly gentlemen of the American Legion and of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and their wives. There were also about 200 students from the nearby Orland (Park) Junior High School. The students live in a country of unlimited choices. It was nice that they were taught who paid for all the choices they can make.

There were prayers, and letters were read and a list of new names on the wall, including young Brodnick's. For a donation of $250, a veteran's name can be added to that wall.

And I wanted to talk to that old Marine I'd met outside, Timothy Cash. That's part of Veterans Day, too, the remembering and the listening.

"What do you want to hear? How cold it was in Korea?" Cash said. Sure, I said.

"Every winter morning, I have my coffee and look outside and think about how gosh darn cold it was then," Cash said. "Fifty-two below zero, and we put snow around our sleeping bags and you'd sleep with your rifle so it wouldn't freeze. It was so cold that, well, there are a lot of jokes about how cold it was."

As he spoke, he pointed to a service medal pinned to his jacket. "They sent it to us. After 50 years, they sent us a medal that we were in Korea. Some Korean people run the cleaner where I take my shirts, and their girls, young girls, they thanked me. They said they appreciated what we did there. I guess that was OK. It was OK to hear it from them."

I asked about his family, and he was quiet for a moment. Cash's son, Timothy, died last year, at age 40. Cash's two daughters are also dead; Pamela in a car accident at 23 in 1978, and Tracy, a nurse, of hypoglycemic shock in 1985. His wife, Carole, died in 2006.

"She was the best. So she's gone, and they're all gone. And I'm by myself now, and it sucks," Cash said.

He wasn't whining. I asked and he told me. He was merely stating facts, and the facts were terrible.

"So I don't need my name up there on the wall," the old Marine said. "Who'd read it anyway? There's nobody to stand there and touch my name. All of mine are gone. What I've got left is this great country of ours. That's what I've got now."

AGAINST THE ODDS

By David Lord

My story started a few days ago, I received a simple email with the heading "41 years ago", it was something I nearly didn't open, thinking it some past event or old news item from a stranger. The contact was made by the wife of the most important combat Marine I had ever known, a Marine who showed courage under fire, in a war that had no glory.

The Marine Corps gave a twenty day leave to enlisted men to say our goodbyes to friends and families in 1968, it was then that "the culture of Peace and Love" being made up our peers, made sure we "the enlisted" were held apart, ostracized for merely wearing our military uniform in public. We learned about the protesters on this leave, they marched against the war as we headed over to S.E. Asia. If you thought the suspensions were one sided by the protesters it wasn't, because in transit aboard chartered aircraft, wearing our combat gear, (except for weapons) we were watched by armed Military Police, preventing any Marine from leaving the terminal at Anchorage, Alaska. The civil unrest grew and was boiling over after the assassination of Dr. King, we were forgotten by America during the civil riots at home, despised by some. In this war we Marines were alone, Americans had not yet separated us from the Politicians that ordered us there, support the troops was yet to come.

Uncommon valor amongst the Marines of Charlie Company,1st Battalion, 26th Marines of the 5th Division went unnoticed as we struggled during the Siege. The Fifth Marines had fought at Iwo Jima in the Pacific, now twenty five years later, the 5th Marines manned the combat base at " Khe Sanh". Under this Siege we endured more incoming than all the munitions fired in all the battles of the Pacific, by all forces during W.W. II. The tonnage of bombs dropped, rockets impacting, mortar rounds incoming, projectiles fired was compressed into 77 days and nights of mind numbing hell. This Siege by forty thousand hard and battle tested North Vietnamese Troops were General Giap Divisions, they had us surrounded, in a ever tightening noose, we must hold or be overrun. Two young Marine's, who had entered boot camp together, trained side by side while preparing for the Viet Nam War, were going to live or die in each others company. Bill Meade and I are now 40 years past that longest battle of the war, I searched for him for decades, turns out we both made it home, were both wounded and disabled from gunshot and both surviving against the odds, this is our reunion as it happened.

Dear David,

A friend of ours (Bill Buford) sent us a link with your website. What a surprise! Do you remember my husband, Bill Meade? He was with you when you were shot in Viet Nam. I had met you before your trip to Viet Nam. Bill & I will celebrate our 40th wedding anniversary in Feb. We are in Oklahoma, have two children and two grandchildren. I am still working, but Bill is retired! A couple of years ago he was awarded 100% disability from the VA.

Bill was shot a short time after you were. Occasionally he will tell "stories" about the two of you.

I wrote.
Bill, I have thought of you a million times, thank God your o.k., and please keep in contact, I have looked for you for so long, you were the only one to have the guts to come pull me out after getting hit. Jesus, how long I have worried if you were o.k.. I am so happy to hear from you. (I then gave details of my family.)
Semper Fi Brother
David

Dear David,

It's great to hear from you. I'm sorry that I haven't replied sooner. It's taken some time for me to adjust to this. I've lived in a world with nothing but memories for 40 years. Then all of a sudden I find the real deal, my friend. It's kind of like a new world. Now I've got to learn how to live in it. I'm glad that you've got your legs. Viet Nam has played through my head like movie reels, night and day. I've dreamed about it at night and wake up looking at a world obscured by barbed wire. I only say this, because after all this time I have forgotten more than I know. Sometimes, I don't know if things really happened, or if I dreamed them. So if I get something wrong, forgive me. It's not intentional; I'm sorry but I don't remember Simms. I know I should since he was right there with us. I guess it's one of those blanks. Do you remember Adolphus? He was the new guy that had only been there a couple of weeks. He was the one that told us he wasn't going to make it. Well, he didn't. He went in about 20 feet to the right of us and straddled a spider hole. Charlie shot him up through the groin and blew him away. Do you remember when we got caught on top of that mountain by an incoming barrage. We both dove for the same hole and barely made it. You had your M-16 by the sling but couldn't get it in the hole. It blew everything away except the end of the butt stock, swivel, and part of the sling. The new Marine with the Mohawk haircut was 5 or 10 feet in front of us and was killed. The last memory that I have of you was when I glanced over my shoulder as I went back in. You were lying hurt below the drop off, and had a 1911 A-1 45; pointed dead on at some Marine or corpsman (telling them to help you). I couldn't hear the words but I got the message. That's the man! A Marine's Marine! Somehow, I knew you'd make it. David, you said you owed me. You got that all wrong. If you ever owed me anything, you paid it back a long time ago, and many times over. I'm proud to have served with you, and would do it again. To live or to die

KHE SANH VETERANS IN THE NEWS

Dan Pultz doesn't want this column to be about him, and it won't be, but more than 400 people are sitting down this morning for a Veterans Day breakfast to support Friends of Danang, and the story must begin somewhere.
We'll start with my neighbor.

Mr. Pultz graduated from Lehigh University in 1966, enlisted in the Marines, became an officer after training in Quantico, Va., and had a 13-month tour of combat duty in Vietnam that lasted from late 1966 into early 1968.

He married Holly on a rest-and-recreation pass to Hawaii in August 1967 and remembers leaving her in that hotel bed, "so beautiful,'' then being back in the jungle of Vietnam less than 24 hours later, thinking, "This is crazy."

He was in some of the bloodier battles of the war. He fought in Khe Sanh not long before he returned home.

For Dan and many more Americans at home, the fierce fighting of 1968 wiped away any previous notions that the war might end soon. With the Tet Offensive, the enemy "didn't win any single battles but they clearly demonstrated they could wage a war for a long time," he said.

Mr. Pultz came home. He and Holly had children. He became a successful businessman. He and Holly became grandparents.

Saigon fell to the communists in April 1975, but some American veterans never forgot their mission to help the Vietnamese people. Lewis B. Puller Jr., a Marine officer who lost both legs and most use of his hands to a land mine in 1968, founded the Vietnam Children's Fund in 1993.

By then Mr. Puller had won the Pulitzer Prize for his autobiography "Fortunate Son," but he would take his own life in 1994, the same year the first school, in Quang Tri province, was dedicated in his name.

For Tony Accamando Jr., 64, an Army lieutenant in Vietnam and now a resident of Eighty Four, the mission is what it was 40 years ago: "helping the Vietnamese people." He and his old friend George D'Angelo, an Air Force captain and pilot in Vietnam, joined with others to form the Friends of Danang after they visited Vietnam together in 1997. They partnered with the Vietnam Children's Fund and, 10 years ago today, began a drive to raise $50,000 to build a school in Danang. There weren't three dozen people at that first Veterans Day breakfast but within a year they'd raised $50,000. They returned to Vietnam to dedicate the school in 1999. "That's all George and I wanted to do." But others on the trip -- Shirley Hruby, Deb Tulak and T.J. McGarvey among them -- were so moved they asked, "What can we do next?"

"That's why we formed Friends of Danang," Mr. Accamando said.

They've since built a medical clinic and helped more than 1,000 disabled children. Dan Pultz told me over coffee in his kitchen that he'd been hesitant to bring up his work with this group to his fellow Marines at the biennial reunions of his unit, India Company, 3rd Battalion, Ninth Marines, the "I-Three-Niners." Men who served in this unit in various wars and generations convene because "those risk-and-trust relationships formed intensely in battle" aren't everywhere to be found.

This past August, Dan Pultz brought Mr. Accamando to his reunion in Northern Virginia and they showed a video of the school-building trip to Vietnam. Mr. Pultz told his fellow Marines that the Vietnam Children's Fund in Washington and Friends of Danang would cover two-thirds of a new school's $150,000 cost, and wondered if his old unit might cover the last $50,000.

Lon Getlin, who lost his brother in Vietnam, stood up and said, "If my brother Mike was here, he would want us to do this." A former corpsman, Dr. Jerry Behrens, made a contribution in the names of five corpsmen who lost their lives.

"This is about kids" was the prevailing sentiment. Before he left, Mr. Pultz said, he knew "we're going to build a school."

If he returns to Vietnam next year when the school is dedicated, Mr. Pultz doesn't care to retrace his steps in battle, but he'd love to see Saigon, now Ho Chi Minh City, because he never got there the first time. He wants "to be a tourist."

The late Mr. Puller's dream was to build to educate enough Vietnamese children to account for the more than 58,000 Americans who lost their lives in Vietnam. There are now 43 schools, each with as many as 600 children, Mr. Pultz said, "so we're getting close."

The money has been raised through spaghetti dinners, jewelry and hoagie sales and breakfasts, but donations in the form of checks to the Vietnam Children's Fund may be sent to Friends of Danang, 4017 Washington Road, No. 152, McMurray, PA 15317-2520. Or visit friendsofdanang.org to see more about their work.

CHRISTMAS AT KHE SANH
November 11th, 2008
Marion Star
Sgt. James C. Oyster

During my time in Vietnam I kept a diary and would write in it at the end of each day. I would write down not only what happened that day but also just how I felt physically, but more importantly how I felt emotionally. Sgt. James C Oyster, Christmas at Khe Sanh Combat Base 1967.

Vietnam was a tough place but even tougher on holidays, especially Christmas. I was wounded twice while in Vietnam and received a Bronze Star for just doing what all Marines do. Here is the page from the diary dated Dec. 25 and just how I felt that day. Since Vietnam I have done pretty well working in education for 36 years. I just retired this past July 31.

Dec. 25 It's a beautiful day here. We had our Christmas Day and it was really something special. First thing is the morning, Sharp, Moe and Lanny left. That was kind of sad, but they are on their way back to the world. They left on one of the choppers that brought up hot chow. The choppers that brought the chow had Santa Claus posters on the front of them. One had "Merry Christmas from the Ugly Angels" on its side. It was neat to see. It's not raining, the sun's shining and you can just see forever. It's just beautiful.

We've been outside all day just kind of messing around and we had a spotter plane fly over playing Christmas carols. Sitting there listening to that was kind of sad; kind of melancholy I think. You know that back home the family is opening the Christmas presents and I hope they are thinking of me. But it is just not the same. This is not the first Christmas I have spent away from home. This is the first Christmas that I was in a position I couldn't at least get on the phone and call them. But I'm sure they are thinking of me. I hope that they are praying for me, too.

There is nothing like being home for Christmas. When they flew overhead playing that Christmas song, "I'll be home for Christmas," it made us all feel pretty crummy. A couple of the guys said something about trying to shoot it down. I don't think anybody really would. It was nice to hear the Christmas songs anyway. If you have to spend a Christmas in Vietnam, I guess this was as good a place as any.

We got the word late this afternoon that we should be heading back down to the Khe Sanh tomorrow. We are going to hump back down. I am looking forward to it. I won't miss this hill very much. It does look better than when we came up and a little safer, too, but I'm glad to be leaving.

I feel really sad right now. I wish I could do something about it, but I know I can't. Hopefully, it will be gone tomorrow when I won't be thinking of Christmas so much. The only thing I can do about it now is lay down on this cot and quietly cry myself to sleep.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY REMEMBERS ITS VETERANS

Thousands Across San Diego County gather to Honor Veterans
San Diego Union Tribune

Thousands of people across the county gathered at events large and small to honor the legions of veterans who have served their country. In downtown San Diego, huge crowds turned out for the annual Veterans Day parade on Pacific Highway. Police were unable to provide a crowd estimate, but parade co-chairman Joe Brunner pegged the number in excess of 35,000.

"We had probably as many as we've had at the last five parades put together," Brunner said. "It was just amazing."

In Fallbrook, Marines led a procession down Main Avenue in an old-fashioned celebration in a town closely tied to neighboring Camp Pendleton .

Retired Marine Lt. Col. Ken Pipes chokes up while serving as featured speaker at a Veterans Day parade in Fallbrook. Pipes, who retired from Camp Pendleton in 1982 after 25 years of service, was awarded (among others) the Silver Star, Bronze Star with Combat V, Purple Heart, Combat Action Ribbon and three presidential citations for combat.

From Colonel Ken Pipes

"Thank each of you for the honor of serving along side you all those years ago. Prayers and Remembrance to you and to those that did not make it back with us–and too their families. With some editing, I would like to send you my closing comments from the Veterans Day Event in Fallbrook, Ca. for it is YOU! The poem is by Australian Gunner George L. Skypeck, as follows:"

A MARINE

We were that which others did not want to be.
We went where others feared to go and did what others failed to do!
We asked NOTHING from those who gave NOTHING!
We reluctantly accepted the thought of eternal loneliness should we fail.
We have seen the face of terror,
Felt the sting of cold fear and enjoyed the sweet taste of love.
We have cried, felt pain and hoped–But, most of all,
We have lived times that others would say are best forgotten!
At least someday we will be able to say that we were Proud of what we were–
A MARINE

To each of you, I am Honored to say that I served with the finest Men and Marines–THOSE WHO WERE AT KHE SANH, that I have ever known! Thanks again and God Bless each of you and your families–now and through all eternity!

MISSING DENVER PILOT HONORED FOR BRAVERY IN VIETNAM

It's Feb 27, 1968 in North Vietnam. It's the height of the Vietnam War and Navy Commander and Pilot Paul L. Milius of Denver and his U.S. Navy Observation Squad 67 (VO-67) crew of eight are gearing up for a highly classified mission to penetrate hostile enemy territory in Laos.

Their job, along with a 12 man plane crew, is to drop sensors over the Ho Chi Minh trail, a 400 mile stretch of the enemy's main supply line for war. The sensors would detect truck movements so the U.S. could attack and cut weapon supply into the country.

Their OP-2E plane is loaded and the flight crew's journey begins. Looking below at the dense canopy of the jungle, the crew knows the mission is dangerous, as two planes in the VO-67 had already been shot down by the heavy artillery scattered along the trail and highly camouflaged by the heavy foliage.

At 5,000 feet, 18 year veteran pilot Milius and his crew are nearing their drop zone. In a matter of seconds, the plane takes a direct hit to its radar, killing crewman John Hartzheim immediately.

With his hydraulic and electrical systems severely damaged, Milius struggles to keep the plane in the sky. He knew flight crews were in jeopardy of being captured if their planes were shot down.

USS MILIUS DDG69

As the aircraft fills with smoke, Milius orders his crew to bail out on parachute. He remains at the helm of the controls until he believes all seven men successfully make it out. Then he jumps.

It Isn't long until each downed man's location device is activated and the Jolly Greens (rescue helicopters) are in sight. They rescue all the crewmembers, but are unable to find and reach Milius. A beeper is heard and believed to be Mi location device. A team is ordered to go on a rescue mission to extract him, but approval from the U.S. ambassador in Laos could not be obtained for 24 hours. The next day, the team goes in but are met by strong opposition and the aborted. Milius is never found.

A week after the incident, a Navy captain arrived at the Waverly doorstep of Christine Milius, Paul's mother, to deliver the heart-breaking news. With her husband passing away only two years prior, the news was an even harder blow.

Paul was declared missing in action (MIA), a status he shared with 1,836 Vietnam soldiers for nearly two decades until the government declared them killed in action (KIA).

For years, Christine and Paul's wife, Darlene, his two children and family in Bremer County held out hope for a miracle that would bring Paul home. Paul's nephew Lauren -Butch" Milius of Denver recalls that in 1970, Darlene and the kids were watching a newscast that included clips from the war.

It was a mess there in Vietnam," explains Butch. - And they wanted to show Americans how supposedly well they were treating captured soldiers ... guys were in shackles on their way to a Christmas program. They swore they saw Paul. Darlene immediately contacted Christine. They went to the news station in Waterloo, where they took a closer look at the clip.

I guess it really looked like him," says Butch. "But they were unable to tell for sure." Even if they had identified the man as Paul, Butch wonders what the family could have done.

He probably got captured, and the higher up the rank, the worse they were treated over there," says Butch. They probably figured he knew some important stuff ... but he would have never talked." Butch often thinks about the groups the federal government sends to Vietnam to search the area for missing people.

They will send a mountaineer, a doctor and what not," says Butch. they keep finding people. With new DNA testing, they just might find him someday.

Christine died in 1973, never fully realizing the vital impact her son had on the Vietnam conflict. She knew he risked his life to save seven of his comrades, but knew nothing of his mission's priorities or the significance of his job that day. The squadron's heroic acts in preventing weapons from reaching the enemy's hands saved countless soldiers.

That information was classified for nearly three decades. The story was told for the first time in 1989, in the book Wings of Gold Over the Ho Chi Minh Trail.

As an Army veteran, Butch spent many weekends with Paul while they both were stationed on the East Coast around 1966.

He used to take me around Philadelphia and show me the sights, says Butch. "We had a lot of fun." Butch describes his uncle Paul as a very serious man who was highly dedicated to his Navy career, and that It was his whole life, which is why he didn't get home that often. But that was part of why he was so loved and respected by the family.

With no one to bury and no headstone to visit, Butch and Paul's sister, Mildred Beisner, wanted to do something to commemorate the fallen hero at home. In 1989, Butch spent over six months corresponding with the government to get a memorial plaque he could place in Harlington Cemetery.

It took a lot of paperwork to get that plaque, because until then everything was classified and he was MIA for so long: The bronze plaque was placed between the grave markers of Paul's parents. In their resting place, Christine and Paul's father Christopher who lay alongside Paul, had watched from above, alongside Paul as his name became legendary over the years. Wings of Gold describes Paul as a hero. The government agreed when they awarded him the Purple Heart and the Navy Cross.

In 1995, a U.S. Guided Missile Destroyer was named the USS Milius in honor of Paul.

And most recently, in May, the members of the VO -67 Association were given the Presidential Unit Citation. Presented by the President in Washington D.C., this award is the highest unit distinction a military organization can receive. It is the personal Navy Cross award, and no aircraft squadron has ever received it until 2008.

Every couple of years, the members and extended family of the VO-67 have a reunion to honor its members and commemorate its lost comrades. At the last reunion in 2005, Butch brought his wife, daughter and granddaughter to meet with families of his uncle's squadron. While there, they visited the USS Milius, an experience Butch says he will never forget. In the mess hall where everyone meets, a table set for one sits with a candle in memory of Paul.

It was really touching to know that everyone, when they go to eat, understands who the ship is named after and that the table stands for him, Butch said. He was very impressed.

One particular part of the ship still chokes him up every time he pictures it. In the captain's quarters hangs a large photo of Paul. Underneath it, a motto reads in Latin, "Others before me."

WAR VETS KEPT IN THE DARK ON AGENT ORANGE

By Sam Cook

Submitted By Mike Fishbaugh

Audrea Anderson has been a spokeswoman much of her career in higher education, yet she hasn't brought a message more important than now. "My husband died as a result of Agent Orange," she says. "The government is not doing a good job of telling Vietnam War veterans about the dangers they will face in their later years."

Isaac Anderson, 61, a Fort Myers native who served as county and circuit judge for 26 years, died Dec. 15, 2007, after battling prostate cancer.

"It makes me so sad to know that Isaac did not know what caused his condition," says Anderson, 61, associate vice president for community relations and marketing at Florida Gulf Coast University. "It was all a puzzle to him."

The judge served in the U.S. Air Force from June 8, 1965, to Sept. 10, 1968. He entered at 19 and served as a communications specialist in Vietnam. "Any ground personnel during those years when Agent Orange was sprayed were exposed from 1962 to 1971," Anderson says. "Our Vietnam veterans need to get screened and see if they are in danger.

"They are eligible for treatment and benefits."

The military developed herbicide Agent Orange to deny enemy cover by stripping trees and shrubbery in Southeast Asia. A research paper published in 1970 detailed the dangers of Agent Orange. Its use was discontinued in 1971, but it was too late for many of 1.5 million American soldiers exposed to cancers and diabetes.

Dr. Robert A. Wascher, director of surgical oncology at Newark (N.J.) Beth Israel Medical Center, writes the link between Agent Orange and prostate cancer is strong.

"Agent Orange contains chemical contaminants known as dioxins, which are organic chemicals that tend to persist in the environment, and within exposed humans and animals, for many years."

These dioxins, Wascher writes, are referred to as "persistent organic pollutants."

Anderson says the judge was diagnosed with prostate cancer in 2000 at age 54. He underwent radioactive seed implantation, a treatment where tiny pellets containing radioactive material are implanted into the tumor-containing organ, according to Cancer News.

"Isaac was fine until March of 2007, when prostate cancer came back," she says. "The doctor said the malignant strand was a very different kind of cancer - highly aggressive and highly resistant to treatment. "It was different from the original cancer."

Researchers found veterans exposed to Agent Orange have a 48 percent increased risk of prostate cancer recurrence following surgery than their unexposed peers, according to a May 2007 report on the Medical News Today Web site.

Anderson says the judge received treatment at the Moffitt Cancer Center in Tampa and M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston. Neither arrested the disease. His fight lasted nine months.

VA SOLVES PUZZLE

The puzzle continued until David Lockhart, veterans service counselor for the Department of Veterans Affairs in Fort Myers, saw that the judge had died. "I was a juror in Judge Anderson's court in the early 1990s," says Lockhart, 62."The obituary mentioned he was Vietnam veteran and died of prostate cancer." Lockhart put one and one together and got Agent Orange.

He contacted Judge James Adams, a friend of the Andersons, and asked him to contact the judge's widow. "I was totally shocked when I got the phone call," Anderson says. "I had no idea his disease could be service-related."

Lockhart, who served three tours of Vietnam and has Type 2 Diabetes, told Anderson she was probably eligible for death benefits from the government. Anderson filed a claim for Dependency and Indemnity Compensation in January. The VA granted it in October, retroactive to her husband's death. She also is eligible for Dependents' Educational Assistance, a health-benefits program, Armed Forces Commissary and Exchange privileges.

"As you can see, I learned about the government's responsibility by accident," she says. "If Isaac had not been a high-profile person of this community, chances are that I would not have learned about this at all." Anderson says the government's method of disseminating Agent Orange information is archaic and inadequate.

"I understand that the government sent notices to the American Legions and other veteran haunts," she says, "but many veterans do not frequent those places." A document Anderson received from the VA in St. Petersburg confirms her theory.

"We sent a copy of this letter to your representative, American Legion, whom you can also contact if you have any questions or need assistance," writes B.C. Gibbard, veterans service center manager.

"Vietnam veterans are not joiners like soldiers were from World War II and the Korean War," Lockhart says. "When we came back, participation was not as widespread in Veterans service clubs."

STOLEN MEMORIAL PLAQUE HONORING LANG VEI MIA SFC. JAMES L. MORELAND REPLACED.

HACIENDA HEIGHTS - Army Medic James L. Moreland grew up in Anaheim and died fighting far from home.

While no one is sure why the Special Forces soldier's memorial plaque was placed in Hacienda Heights, the community's Improvement Association board knew what to do when it was stolen several months ago. With a grant from L.A. County Supervisor Don Knabe, the HHIA had the plaque replaced and remounted last week. "When a kid gives his life for this country you don't just forget," said Hacienda Heights Improvement Association president Mike Hughes.

James Leslie Moreland was 20 when he joined the Army in 1965. He landed in Vietnam in October 1967 and was killed only a few months later in Khe Sanh after North Vietnamese troops overran his base at Lang Vei. HHIA officials said their attempts to find Moreland's family and friends have been fruitless so far, but they hope someone will come forward to tell the rest of the young man's story.

Hughes said all that is known is the plaque was installed in the southeast corner of Hacienda Boulevard and Halliburton Road in 1973, where a shopping center now stands. "We have no idea who made it or why he was of consequence to the people of Hacienda Heights," Hughes said. "Somebody went out of their way to put it in, we just don't know who."

In 2002, the plaque was taken from its stand and lost in the bushes during construction. It was found and replaced, but then stolen several months ago. Supervisor Knabe provided a $300 grant to replace the plaque and secure it. "He was a soldier and the community out there felt it was necessary not to forget his service and we agreed," said David Sommers, spokesman for Knabe. "The supervisor was happy to give the grant to replace the plaque."

Troy Goodspeed, a retired Marine and HHIA board member, put the plaque in so that it can't easily be chiseled out again. "This time," he said, "I bolted it down with stainless steel bolts.

By Lisa Newlander

I am the neice of Jim Moreland known to his family as Les. I am very hurt that someone would even think of destroying a memorial of such a great man who died fighting for his country. I would like to thank the people who replaced his plaque and hope that others still remember all those lost and who have not returned home.

PROFESSIONAL VETERAN

By Craig W Tourte

I try not to been seen as a professional Vietnam Veteran looking for some type of special recognition. A few years ago I placed the older blue Khe Sanh window sticker on the rear of my truck along with a Marine Corps sticker. I did receive a few waves along the way and I appreciated those. That said, my old truck now carries not only the old blue sticker and the Marine Corps window sticker but additionally has the new red Khe Sanh "Home is where you dig it" sticker and the egg shaped Vietnam Ribbon window sticker (purchased from our PX).

To top that off, I have the new Khe Sanh license plate cover on the front of my truck which I find myself calling the "Vet-mobile." I have observed that many Vietnam Veterans I have known are now exhibiting various unit and branch of service identities on their vehicles.

For years we seldom mentioned Vietnam to anyone else, occasional one of us might say something under our breath but there was little discussion that I can recall about our experience in that conflict. Now, all seem to have various stickers and devices that show their contribution to that effort. I have found that since I have placed the "Home is where you dig it" sticker on my truck, I am often spoken to by middle aged men (and others), asking if I was there. We engage in small talk, none tell me they were at Khe Sanh (wonder why) and most show a type of unspoken admiration and respect.

To top that off, I find myself wearing a Khe Sanh shirt and various beads and other paraphernalia identifying myself as a Vietnam Veteran. Sometimes the unknowing will ask, often with a little crooked mocking smile and when they can be heard by others, what the beads are for and if I thought I was a hippy. No I respond, "it's a Vietnam thing." I enjoy watching their little smile disappear and their face flush with embarrassment as they just admitted to everyone, they did not serve.

As I take time to look at the facts here - compensation for various issues, identifying veteran paraphernalia on the "Vet-mobile," shirts, beads and trinkets worn. Personal associations with mostly other veterans, I must conclude that my identity now is that of a Professional Vietnam Veteran, which I think at this stage of my life, is not necessarily a bad thing.

Brother Craig,

I have to disagree with you as to your terminology of being a "Professional Vietnam Veteran"

I would most definitely refer to you as a very 'Proud and Honorable Veteran'; but alas never a professional veteran'.

Why? You may ask.
Allow me to expound Here on the right coast there are many, many fellows who adorn themselves with every pin, medal, patch, and thrift store camouflage garment that they can scrounge up. Quite often they will mix and match items from various branches of the service. Always the mismatched items would reflect something of the sort such as : Force Recon, Seal, Ranger, etc.

They are always the elite and never the ordinary and mundane. You would think, that regardless of the job that they performed while in the service, they would be proud of that service. These buffoons are most likely spotted in the street disheveled and even appearing homeless. At other times they can be spotted at the nearest VA or Military facility espousing useless information or regaling those inclined to listen with their heroic misadventures while on some as still classified operation.

The Professional Veteran is not quite unlike the Wannabe - save the fact that more then likely they did some actual military service. So... You are my Friend and a Great Marine & a True Nam Veteran. In essence a 'Warrior'.

I would never refer to you as a 'professional veteran.' I would guess that we just have different takes on the use of the words. Isn't that how it always is? Same word = two or more polar opposites in the meaning and understanding of same. LOL

One last thing. Mike I really disagree with your assessment. I was and have always been proud of my time in the Corps and my service in Nam. It has always been the Honorable thing.

Assholes like William Ayers are still now trying to justify their insignificant existence by disparaging those who served in that most difficult of wars and times.
Be Proud, Stay Proud, Now and Forever.
Semper Fidelis,
Neil Kenny

Craig,
What's with the beads? I never was issued any--is it a west coast deal?.
Terry Charbonneau

Terry, the beads are kind of a new thing. Ron Shouse made a bunch of them up and handed them out at one of the reunions. He was kind enough to send me a number of them. One can wear them as a necklace or bracelet.

The bead colors are yellow and red for the South Vietnamese flag, black and white for the MIA and red, white and blue. Some have all the colors mentioned and some are just yellow and red. Others are just red, white and blue and black and white for those who are not veterans but wish to show their support for Vietnam Veterans.

I am asked all of the time where I got them and if I could get some more. They're a real big hit with all the vets I have come into contact with. I've tried to get the same color beads in California but so far have been unsuccessful. Not sure I could string them together anyway.

Craig

Craig,

I think it was matter of bad timing for the Vietnam Vet. The 60's were a very unique time for this country, kinda like growing pains. Everything in the country was changing, music, race relations, idea's and culture. We came back from fighting a war in the jungle and rice paddy's to fighting a war in our own living room with family members and friends. Defending what we did as honorable and for the good of the country. We had everything figured out, it took this country 40 years plus to figure everything out. Lessons should have been learned. You don't send young people off to war and when they return from battle, the country turns their back on its warriors.

EXCELLENT ARTICLE ON DOC TOPMILLER

By Bruce Geiger

Having been stunned by the news of his passing after the Reno reunion, I just want to thank Mike Archer for his eloquent tribute to Doc Topmiller in the latest issue of Red Clay. I am honored to have known Doc Topmiller and will always remember him as a courageous and compassionate gentleman.

By Brother Wes

I read the article, the Eulogy, and now I'm rereading Doc Topmiller's book and finding new meaning in his chapters.

It's known how I've been over the past years. Things are getting better in some areas of my life, and in other areas it's going to you-know-where. A friend of mine said last night in our AA meeting here in WV..."Rule number # 1: Don't sweat the small stuff. Rule # 2: The rest is small stuff...take care of number # 1..Your self !!

After reading the Doc Topmiller article, I wept like a baby from pent up emotions and it isn't easy to admit that here with all these macho men who read this message board. But I am who I am and I'm never going to be too proud to admit that I have feelings..some held back for way too long.

I would love to read what Doc Topmiller wrote about the V.A.

Good job, Red Clay Staff! Excellent issue!

I wanted to add to Wes's post by saying that Mike Archer wrote the article relating to Doc Topmiller in the issue of Red Clay. As usual, Mike wrote an eloquent tribute. I know he was very close to Doc and his loss has touched us all.

Craig Tourte

By Tom Vosnick G/2/26

I purchased a Red Clay book written by Doc Topmiller. He signed it for me. I put it away and several months ago I picked up and read it. The first part was about Khe Sanh, the blood and guts. Second part about the political aspects of the war and of Vietnam itself. Third portion about what we left behind. I could feel Doc Topmiller's pain of what we left. After reading the book you will feel like you have known Doc for years. We are lucky to have had a brother like him.

By Mike Archer

Gentlemen,

I appreciate you sharing your poignant recollections of Doc Topmiller. I'd like to pass along something I mentioned to Craig Tourte in an email. It was tough for both Rick Noyes and myself being at the podium in Lexington that morning. Yet, we managed to fight through our tears and constricting throats long enough to get said what needed to be said. In truth though, there are no words with which to convey the acuteness of this loss in both the U.S. and Vietnam. I still receive messages each week from Vietnam, including professors, monks, nuns, social workers, guides, and sundry admirers of Doc.

In fact, just yesterday I received a holiday card from, Mr. Chieu Ho an octogenarian former-history -professor and author who spent 8 years in a communist "reeducation camp" after the war. While there, Ho learned he had lost 2 daughters who drowned in the South China Sea trying to escape the country. Ho, who Doc visited in the Saigon suburb of HCMC two years ago, was deeply saddened by Doc's passing and asked if he could use the eulogy to instruct "the young" about suicide. After the torment Ho, endured and in many respects Doc endured, as a result of their commitment to truth, you can imagine how humbling such a request was for me.

When Steve Orr and I traveled through Vietnam with Doc last December, many of these folks referred to him as "a buddha" -- which I thought at the time was just a grand expression of respect. However, the tenor of these messages — shock, disbelief and despair -- now make me think some of them believed, (perhaps in "their heart-of-hearts"), that he was truly a living buddha. If anyone ever deserved the somewhat mawkish title of "universally beloved", it was Topmiller. Boy, do I miss that guy.

A few years ago, I struck up an acquaintance with gifted novelist and editor Wayne Karlin. Wayne served in Vietnam as a Marine helicopter door gunner in 1967-68. One of his books was glowingly blurbed by Tim O'Brien, who I consider to be the finest writer produced by the Vietnam War.

I recently received a message from Wayne. Though he had never met Doc Topmiller, he felt a kinship with him through Doc's reputation as a passionate advocate for peace and his intellectual approach to resolving the lingering problems from the Vietnam War. Moreover, I'm sure my unconcealed admiration for Topmiller spilled over in every email I sent to Wayne.

Anyway, I'd like to share with you Wayne's eloquent (and heartrending) observations:

"I was shocked and saddened to get your email describing how Doc Topmiller died. Shocked, because I would have thought if there was ever a case of someone who seemed to have pulled through the memories in a positive way, he was that person, with the work he did, the way he dedicated himself to examining and extracting the significance of that terrible past and using what he learned to promote peace and healing. We always saw the corpsmen (and that was what he remained as a scholar so passionate to communicate the complex humanity of the Vietnamese: still a healer) as the strongest, the ones you could turn to, and there is some kind of sickening shift in the heart when you realize how each wound they touched, physical or not, became their own. I have always felt--and maintained to others--that the way to truly heal is not to forget, but to bring out the memories, articulate them, examine them, put them into your life in a constructive way. It's disheartening, but necessarily realistic, a needed but hated slap in the face, to realize that there are no pat formulas, not even that one, that the war still has that power to reach over the stretch of 40 years and snatch such a good person back. I didn't know him but I mourn him."

Again: My thanks to Wes, Craig, Tom, Bruce, Mike and all the rest of you who esteemed Doc Topmiller and invite you to visit

VIETNAM VET WITH PTSD GOES TO WAR IN IRAQ:

'It made me worse' Story Highlights

By Wayne Drash CNN

Army veteran went to Iraq hoping to expunge "Vietnam demons"

Bob Konrardy spent four days on patrol in March 2007 as an embedded journalist "I couldn't sleep before, but now it's worse. I hate to see it get dark," he says.

DAVENPORT, Iowa (CNN) -- Bob Konrardy carried the guilt with him for more than 40 years. A platoon commander in Vietnam, Konrardy was wounded when shrapnel tore through his body. Four comrades carried him to safety in a poncho for more than an hour while the firefight raged.

Bob Konrardy says the fallen soldier monument outside his home honors soldiers killed in Iraq like Dave Behrle. 1 of 4 "These four guys went back to help the platoon because they were still fighting, and all four of those guys got killed," Konrardy says. "I felt guilty for 40-something years."

Two years ago, Konrardy got to thinking: He'd be a Santa of sorts for soldiers in Iraq as a way to help him deal with his conscience. He would collect autographed college and pro footballs, letters from local kids and other mementoes from home to help inspire the troops in Iraq. Then, he would have the goods delivered to his old platoon serving in Iraq, the First Cavalry Division.

He initially thought he'd have the material shipped. But his plan changed when the military signed off for Konrardy to deliver the goods in person and work as an embedded journalist for a local paper. The 65-year-old grandpa was about to head to one of the world's most dangerous places. "I could have been killed" "I wanted to maybe bury some Vietnam demons and just make a difference with this platoon and maybe make up for what I didn't do with my old platoon," he says. "I thought it was going to go one way. It went the other. It made me worse."

He adds, "I couldn't sleep before, but now it's worse. I hate to see it get dark. I get extremely nervous. I get uptight. I just don't like to see it get dark. And once it is dark, I'm on edge until it gets dawn." Konrardy's story is one of patriotism, heroism and torment -- a war veteran unable to escape what happened in 1965, when he was just 23.

"Here's a guy who is a true American hero in his own right. He was wounded in action in the Idrang Valley, and he comes into a combat zone 40 years later," says Major Chris Rogers, the operations officer of the 1st Battalion, 5th Cavalry, when Konrardy embedded with them."In my opinion, he's a guy who has done it all -- bled for his own country - and he's more interested in telling the story of today's generation of young heroes than trumpeting his own horn."

Konrardy was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder shortly after he retired from John Deere in 2002, when he says his disorder really kicked in. He Once in his sleep, drove to a Wal-Mart about 20 minutes from his home at 3 a.m. He doesn't recall how he got there or how he got home. He only remembers a guy mopping the floor asking if he could be helped.

Other times, he'd patrol the neighborhood in the wee hours of the night with his loaded 9-mm pistol on his hip. His counselor with the Department of Veterans Affairs once asked what he would do if the police ever stopped him.

"I said, 'I'll just shoot out his windows and escape and evade back to the house. I think it'd be fun.' She didn't like that answer," he says with a laugh. "So I'm lucky because that's probably what I would've tried to do."

Konrardy checked himself into a VA facility in Des Moines, Iowa, to get help for his PTSD. He explains more when he recounts trying to escape from the place and police approached him. "I rolled down a hill and started running so they couldn't catch me. They said that was the wrong thing to do." We learn about PTSD and how to get help .

He says he was then put in an isolation ward for 11 days and nights, and eventually released. In August 2005. Fast forward to the fall of 2006. That's when Konrardy spoke to his grandson's eighth-grade class about his war experience. They thanked him for serving his country. He started e-mailing members of the Army's First Cavalry Division as part of his grandson's "adopt a platoon" project. He got autographed footballs from the Green Bay Packers and Indianapolis Colts, as well as from the University of Tennessee and University of Georgia.

Even the players at local St. Ambrose University chipped in with a football of their own: the game ball from their championship game. "I just wanted to do something and make up for what I didn't do for my guys," Konrardy says. His family gathered for Christmas that year and he told of his plans to travel to Iraq. "Everybody cried," he says. "I said, 'Hey, this is a chance of a lifetime. I have to go.' "Quizzed about why a man who was held in a VA facility a couple years earlier was cleared to travel to Iraq, was first asked by CNN.

But he adds the original plan was for him to not go into combat. "On the way over, I didn't think I'd be going out."By March 2007, the old warrior's boots were on the ground in Baghdad. His plan was to hand out the 95 pounds of goods and kick back with the soldiers at base camp, collecting their stories and gathering video to give to their families back home. Konrardy handed the St. Ambrose football to a soldier named David W. Behrle, a 20-year-old from Tipton, Iowa. He scooped it up and cherished it.

Konrardy was officially in Iraq as an embedded journalist to file blog posts for "The Quad-City Times." He had not intended to go into combat, but that quickly changed. He says the commander said if he wanted to get to know the troops "you've got to be proactive."

Konrardy says he hopped into a Humvee and began patrolling the tight streets of Baghdad with the unit. He was assigned the back right seat for four days. His Humvee once struck a dud of a roadside bomb that blew the tire out underneath where he was sitting. Gunfire erupted. "Looking back, I'm thinking, 'Wow, I could have been killed,' " he says. He's still haunted by another time in Iraq -- not because of what happened, but because of what he didn't do. "I'm going to the bathroom and I hear somebody crying. My first instinct was to be a grandpa: I'm going to go in and I'm going to hold this young kid whoever it is and just say, 'I know where you're coming from. I've been there. Let's just talk,' but he didn't do that. Now, he wishes he would have.

A few weeks after he left Iraq, soldiers he befriended were riding in a Bradley Fighting Vehicle on patrol around Baghdad. He says the soldiers had recently saved a young Iraqi girl who had been shot in the head from insurgent crossfire. But on this day, May 19, 2007, a roadside bomb went off, killing all six soldiers inside. One of those killed was Spc. David Behrle, the soldier who loved the football hand-delivered by Konrardy.

"I took that hard. It still bothers me," Konrardy says.

Outside his Iowa home, a flagpole stands on Konrardy's lawn. A fallen soldier monument sits at its base with a pair of boots, rifle facing down and helmet with the name "Behrle" on it. Behrle's family was so moved by Konrardy they had it built for him. Kneeling next to the monument, Konrardy said, "It reminds me of Dave. But it also reminds me of the Behrle family and how close we've gotten with them and how great they've been in my grieving for Dave and trying to readjust.

Konrardy, who is still getting PTSD treatment, wishes the rest of the nation could better understand what it's like.

"I just want them to realize the life of a soldier could change the rest of your life."

NEW MARINE

By Tom Hennelly

Gentlemen,
I am proud to announce that, Brendan Hennelly, the grandson of the late Lt/Col. Jack Hennelly was awarded his Eagle, Globe, and Anchor last Thursday at Camp Pendleton, making him an official 3rd generation Marine. He Graduates from MCRD San Diego this Friday. We had the privilege of meeting many of you at the reunion in Reno. Neil Kenny gave me one of the Khe Sanh coins to hold onto until Brendan had "earned" the right to carry it. I FedEx'd that coin to his Senior Drill Instructor last week. S/Sgt Harry Milbin was kind enough to present it to Brendan this past weekend. I cannot tell you guys how inspired and grateful both Brendan and I are for having the privilege to meet you all. Thank you and Semper Fi.

OLD ODD FEELINGS

By Joe Beebe

I was a member of a large group of wounded, healthy enough to move from the hospital on Guam. Our vacancies were quickly filled. The Vietnam War provided an endless supply of victims. We were strapped tightly to stretchers and stacked on a plane en-route for the continental United States.

Every two hours, during the sixteen-hour flight, a nurse would untie our restraints and roll us from back to stomach or vice versa. Some of the men took advantage of the rotation system by trying to get better acquainted with the female caretakers, but to no avail.

My mind wrestled with what I was leaving behind. The war held me tight. Maybe steeping foot on the home turf would sever my attachment to Vietnam.

I grappled with what to expect when landing in the U.S. After all, I was coming home from war and, according to my country, I had been defending her and protecting her citizens against aggression. It should be worth at least some flag waving and a hearty "welcome home." I could hear some of the men above the drone of the propellers, excitedly sharing thoughts, entertaining ideas about being carried off the plane to a chorus of cheers.

As the airplane descended and prepared for landing at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey, I grew anxious. However, nothing happened. I was carried off the plane to an empty airstrip, answered "here" when my name was called, and was immediately assigned a bed.

"Visitors must be out of the hospital and off the base by 9 PM," the nurse informed us. "There are telephones down the hall, if you boys want to make a call." The subtle atmosphere suggested we were top secret and no one was suppose to know we were here.

I hesitated before calling home, then gave it a ring. After a few carefully chosen words with my mom and my older brother, they decided to come and see me. My visitors arrived a little before nine. I hugged them loosely, then idly stood before them, not knowing what to say, swamped with uncomfortable feelings.

"How are you, Skeeter?" my mom asked calling me by my childhood nickname. I truly wanted to blurt everything out, however I was too removed. "Okay," I said restricting my answer and unknowingly covering my emotions with another layer of cement. I really wasn't "okay."

The Cardinals won the World Series," my brother informed, knowing my taste for baseball. Then he quickly fell back, resuming his unsure position. The three of us stared at one another. They wondered at me and I returned their amazement with a vacant stare. Neither of them asked what it was like to be in Vietnam. Maybe that was for the best. We all seemed to be experiencing a similar numbness.

After a short and disquieting period, the hospital dimmed and began to grow dark as the light switches were flicked off. We shared good-byes at a distance and they quietly left.

As I watched them walk away, my body ached to yell out and tell my story, but something held me back. For now, it would remain hidden.

Thanks for listening Joe

OLD ODD FEELINGS

By Gene Weresow

Nicely put Joe, it seems that many of us who came home during those times, wounded or not, came home anonymously. I remember wanting to tell my story to someone but no one was interested. Even the VFW wanted nothing to do with me. No one seemed to be truly interested in what a VN vet was all about back then. We made do and most , not all, got on with life and made further contributions to this country. But the resentment remains just below the surface.

Old, odd feelings, we all get them, but I think most of us have learned how to cope. It seems that these days the VN vets are all hero's at last, but somehow to me at least, it's not enough, the public has no clue, but we band of warriors know who we are. Continue the good fight Joe and we'll get our just due in the end.
God Bless,

Gene W

THE CORPSMAN'S CHRISTMAS POEM

'"Twas the night before Christmas as I flew o'er the Marine Base, when I spied a young man who seemed out of place.

His eyes showed compassion, his hair a bit long, but his head was held high and his body was strong.

His air was confident, his uniform smart, but what impressed me most was the size of his heart.

For he embodied honor, one of this country's best, and the words U.S. NAVY showed large on his chest.
As I stood there in wonder and gazed into his eyes, the words that he spoke took me quite by surprise.

"What's wrong Santa, haven't you ever seen a sailor before?" I sensed something special and longed to know more.

"To be honest, this field thing wasn't part of my plan, but God didn't give me a boat or tin can."

The words he spoke next surprised me all the more, "But I'm as proud of my Navy as I am of the Corps!"

"Don't worry Santa, that I'm a sailor you see, for when a Marine goes down they will still call on me.

They'll forget I'm a sailor, they'll call in my stock. At the top of their lungs they'll yell ,"Get me the doc!"

"And I'll answer that call, anytime, anywhere. Though I know I'm a target I really don't care.

I'll face incoming fire as I race cross the land, and use my very own body to shield a downed man."

"Working long hours and into the night, my unit's battle is over, but I'm just starting to fight.

For the life of every Marine is sacred to me. I refuse to surrender them to death, and in that I'll find victory."

"And yet I'll take the time to comfort a dying man, to sit down by his side, to reach out and hold his hand.

For it takes as much courage to care as to fight. For just as the poem says, many don't "go gently into that night."

"Santa, it's not any one uniform that makes you a man, but rather it's those ideals for which you choose to stand.

I draw my line here, it's long and it's plain. For pain, hurt and suffering are the things I disdain."

I know very well that I may lose my life, so that a Marine may see an unmet child and young wife.
So Santa, it really doesn't matter if they don't like my hair. I'm a Navy Corpsman, their Doc, and I'll always be there."

"I follow the brave docs who have come long before, from Belleau Wood, Iwo, and Lebanon's shore.
As history proudly shows, they all gave their best, and for those who have died, surely they're blessed."

"At Inchon, the gulf and times during Tet, our brothers have fallen, but we carry on yet."

For we carry their honor and legacy still." As I held back my tears it took all of my will.

I had to leave him there for I had other plans, but I knew in my heart that the Corps is in good hands.

As I flew away I heard his laughter, it rang so loud and clear. Hey Santa, how 'bout a nice pair of boots for the 26 miler next year

THE PILOT FOR A NEW, JOINTLY DEVELOPED DOD-VA DISABILITY EVALUATION SYSTEM

By Sam Messer

Doesn't help the millions waiting over past 20 years or those that died waiting! It's a start.

Disability reforms bring higher ratings, faster pay http://www.stripes.com/article.asp?section=104&article=59357 By Tom Philpott, Special to Stars and Stripes
Pacific edition, Saturday, December 13, 2008

The pilot for a new, jointly-developed DOD-VA disability evaluation system (DES), set to expand from five to 22 military bases by May, does much of what proponents hoped it would.

It allows more injured or ill service members to win higher disability ratings, to see VA payments start faster and, through greater transparency in the process, to feel they have been treated more fairly by government.

But there have been enough kinks and challenges uncovered by the pilot to persuade designers in the departments of Defense and Veterans Affairs not to expand so quickly that the program outpaces the additional staff that needs to be hired and trained, particularly at the largest military bases.

Sam Retherford, director of officer and enlisted personnel management in DOD, has overseen phase-in of this landmark disability reform, starting in November 2007 in the Washington D.C. area, including Walter Reed Army Medical Center and Bethesda Naval Medical Center. He said nearly 900 disabled service members have been through the improved DES. As many as 700 a month will process through the expanded pilot.

The centerpiece of the reformed DES, reflecting recommendations of last year's various wounded warrior studies, is the partnering of the two departments for diagnosing, rating and compensating disabled members.

The aim is to end the wasteful, time-consuming and confusing practice of DOD and VA both conducting their own disability evaluations, one before and one after discharge or retirement. Under the pilot, VA conducts the single, comprehensive physical examination while members are on active duty, and prepares a single disability evaluation used by each department.

The military service uses the findings to determine fitness for duty. Those members found unfit are separated or retired. But the service continues to base its decision and disability rating only on medical conditions that make the member unfit for duty. A rating for unfitting conditions of 20 percent or less qualifies for a lump sum severance payment. A rating of 30 percent or higher on those conditions qualifies a member for military disability retirement, which means a lifetime annuity, access to military health care and base stores and facilities.

The VA simultaneously awards an overall rating based on all service-related conditions to set its compensation payment. The member then can choose, before leaving service, between the DOD or VA outcomes. In a report to Congress on the pilot, DOD and VA officials last month said the "initial reviews...are favorable,"citing improved "outcomes" on level of ratings, timeliness and the transparency of the process.

With VA doctors using VA protocols to evaluate and rate disabilities, pre-discharge rating have risen 10 to 20 percent, Retherford said. VA doctors, he said, are trained to document conditions more thoroughly with an eye toward long-term effect. Military doctors, by contrast, focus their evaluations on diagnosis and treatment.

The pilot will expand to 17 bases outside the D.C. area over the next five months. They are: for Army, Fort Carson, Colo., Fort Drum, N.Y., Fort Stewart, Ga., Fort Richardson, Alaska, Fort Wainwright, Alaska, Brooke Army Medical Center, Texas, and Fort Polk, La; for Navy: Naval Medical Center (NMC) San Diego and Camp Pendleton, Calif., NMC Bremerton, Wash., NMC Jacksonville, Fla., and Camp Lejeune, N.C.; for Air Force: Vance Air Force Base, Okla., Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., Elmendorf Air Force Base, Alaska., and Travis Air Force Base, Calif.

Retherford said these bases will provide more diverse data to better judge the effect of the new DES. The D.C. area processes a high number of severely wounded members leaving service from Walter Reed or Bethesda.

The pilot imposes a heavy document workload on facilities and on Physical Evaluation Board Liaison Officers (PEBLOs) or case managers. But a consensus among all involved affirms "this is a good thing," Retherford said.

Randy Reese, national service director for Disabled American Veterans, both praised and criticized the DES pilot. To have VA conduct physicals and awarding ratings for DOD is "a marriage made in heaven," he said. "The results of the decisions are better. They are definitely more consistent," Reese said, and ratings awards before discharge have "definitely improved."

Also VA compensation begins immediately after discharge, eliminating a huge hassle and long waits for disabled veterans to receive first payments.

The pilot doesn't address a need that disabled members have for advocacy counseling, either by trained JAG officers or by veteran organization representatives, from the start of the DES, Reese said.

The PEBLO will provide information but they are not an advocate."

Army SFC James F. Babin of Arlington, Va., went through the pilot after recovering from surgery last February for a deteriorated leg injury first sustain in combat in 2003. Babin said he didn't get his ratings -- a combined 30 percent for leg and head injuries from VA or 20 percent from Army – until late October. Babin, 31, said he was surprised that it took eight months.

He was more disappointed that his PEBLO had left documents out of the packet evaluated by VA which likely resulted in a lower rating. The mistake was caught by a DAV advisor at Walter Reed, and the PEBLO was reprimanded. Babin didn't find her "very knowledgeable or very useful in this process," reinforcing Reese's worry of a counseling gap in the pilot DES.

The issue of lost compensation by administrative error was voided in Babin's case when the Army approved his request to stay on activity duty. A medic, he will retrain to a more sedentary specialty like intelligence analyst.

"DOC" COMES HOME AS A USMC CORPORAL IN 1968

By "DOC" Dave

Got back to Camp Hansen, OK in the late evening.....they gathered the Marines and frisked them and marched them off to get sleep somewhere so they could get haircuts and fall in for ranks for reorientation to the world. How those Okinawa Marines could yell at those that were 0311 field Grunts going home was beyond me. I yelled at them to stop harassing these heroes. They then proceeded to ban the "DOC"S from the area. I guess the Grunts would put up with any kind of "Mickey Mouse" to get travel orders back to the world. When we got back to the world they did not want us and we no longer fit in.

As an E-5, I said to the other "DOC"S, upon arrival, lets sneak of to the GEDUNK where we chowed down on Burger after Burger.....darn they were good.

Spent the next day trying to get rid of the $10 red MPC I found in my pocket...the FNG's thought I was messing with them. Finally a Sgt on his 2nd tour took the 10 spot in exchange for greenbacks.

AT THIS TIME I WOULD LIKE TO THANK THE MARINES THAT DRAGGED ME OUT OF A DRINKING CLUB NEAR THE BASE....THEY TOLD ME THAT I JUST ASKED AN UGLY, TOOTHLESS GAL TO MARRY ME!

Anyways, we threw away our green dress Marine hard cover (wore the piss cutter home and did not have room anymore in our sea bags), bought 2 suits from the Chinese Tailor for shipment home that never fit because I was well fed at home. Dropped my Khaki's shirt off to the dry cleaner to have my new Marine colored Navy rank sewed on.

Refused to cut our hair....they started to cut us from flights to EL TORO and we shaved each others heads.

Got scheduled on an earlier flight and ran to the dry cleaner. She said so sorry....khaki shirt not cleaned yet...I reached over the counter and grabbed the first shirt I could reach....that us how this "DOC" came home as a USMC Corporal....REGRETS to the Marine Corporal who never did get his shirt. Xin Loi!

Four of us bribed a cabbie to get us out of El Toro and he whisked us off to LAX where we got a flight to Chicago. I saw my gal the next morning and we eloped. 40 years of her suffering with my PTSD. A real winner who gave the Marine Guards at the Naval Hospital Gate the finger every morning since she felt I deserved a full salute like the officers. After a year and a half of it...the Marines surrounded my car and threatened to detain her....she gave them the finger!

COMING HOME
" Hansen Decontamination "

By Ron Main

In late July 68 at Camp Hansen on the way back to The World, they had a formation in the street and told us if we didn't change out of our filthy, stinking Nam utilities and boots they were going to have the base Okinawan fire crew hose us down. We ignored them, and wandered away. I remember the tall thin black marine standing in front of me. He didn't even have a utility jacket; only a torn white T shirt that was so yellow and orange you'd have never known it was once white. Another marine had comm wire for boot laces. My left knee was hanging out of my trousers, and I looked better than most of those standing around me. So they made us toss our old utilities and boots into a storage room in the barracks.

I'll never forget the thin suffocating cloud of putrid pale red dust coming out of that little room piled high with our no longer proper uniform of the day. They told us this was all part of something called, " Decontamination. "Felt like humiliation. Felt like what was waiting for some of us on the other end of that long flight home. Sure didn't feel like" victory.. " for any of us.

Maybe "Decontamination" was about getting us ready for the disappointment and confusion that awaited us back in The World; not the thing we'd hoped, and be searching for the rest of our lives, only finding it in ourselves, each other, thoughts of those we served with; those we love, love us, and call us friend; accepting that this "Marine thing" is a blood thing, a family thing, a brotherhood thing, and will always be the defining thing in our lives, because far too many "of us" didn't make that long ago return trip through the BS of Hansen, and our memories of them, will always remain uncontaminated, and connected to ours..

COMING HOME

By Chuck Gerrior
USAF Retired
Team 83-66, 1st Mob Comm Group

Was reading about guys heading home getting haircuts for getting ready to back to the World. I'm sure I and a lot others who got off at El Toro MCAS had a little different experience. I was sent to some barracks showered, and went to sick bay. I thought it was for a physical before going home, instead a Corpsman took my blood pressure. And sent me to end of line and picked up malaria pills. Went to Dispersing for pay and back to some HQ where we got our travel orders. Told us the bus would take us to town to further go on our way. Most of us just looked dumbfounded as we looked at each other on the bus to town. After arriving, everyone went their own way. I grabbed another bus to LA then a Shuttle to LAX. Flew to Boston in Khakis. They said they could not locate our Sea bags in Okinawa and if they were found they would send them to us. Still waiting ... Welcome Home

GOOD TIME IN DALLAS

Chuck Gerrior

Wednesday this week my wife wanted to go to Dallas to visit the family grave sites. Before leaving Lubbock, I wore my new white with red letters ball cap that says Khe Sanh Combat Vet. On the back I have stitched the letters USAF and my call sign "Charlie Tuna".

On Thursday evening my wife and I were walking through a mall full of shoppers when three young Marines in Greens came walking towards us. The Staff SGT very loudly said Semper Fi and I returned it back. This caused a crowd of shoppers to stop and just look as we trade words for about a minute.

The Staff Sgt told the other two younger Marines what Khe Sanh was all about. They both stated they knew a little about Khe Sanh. The younger Marines still had a funny looks on their face when I told the three I was retired USAF, and the USAF had also went through the siege.

My wife commented as we walked away that the USMC takes history very seriously. When you wear any of the K/S Veterans gear, you will always get a second look.

In "These Hills Called Khe Sanh," Jurate Kazickas writes about being a freelance reporter covering some of the most dangerous battles -- marching on long-range patrol in the hills controlled by the North Vietnamese, her disturbing visit to Con Thien ("Con Thien was my first encounter with war at its most obscene. What shook me to the core was the devastating sight of so many dead Marines who had been lying in the sun for three days – their bodies bloated, their faces black as if charred by fire."), taking action to help the wounded near Dak To and being wounded herself at Khe Sanh. "Even during the months of covering battles and witnessing the carnage of war, I had avoided tears. I had convinced myself that if I broke down, it would prove that women didn't belong in war. Now, however, I reached the limit of my emotions....The repressed sadness and weariness that had filled my soul for the last year in Vietnam suddenly surfaced in a painful flow of vivid memories."

These Hills Called Khe Sanh
By Jurate Kazickas

From their base at Khe Sanh, the [Marines from the two-hundred man Lima Company of the 3rd Battalion, 26th Regiment, based in South Vietnam's I Corps] were planning a secret foray to the Laotian border, where they hoped to engage the enemy and intercept a suspected North Vietnamese supply route. As a properly accredited journalist, I was entitled to cover any military mission in Vietnam. However, securing permission to join this long-range patrol had not been easy. While male correspondents sometimes went into the field unaccompanied, there was no way the Marines were going to let a woman move around on her own, as I had been used to doing with army units. The military brass insisted I have an official escort.

I tried to object, but eventually there was no choice. To my chagrin, the man assigned to watch over me,

Staff Sgt. Les Johnson, an overweight, out-of-shape desk clerk, looked woefully inept. He seemed nervous at the prospect of going out on patrol as we flew by helicopter from Dong Ha to a small landing zone hacked out in the wooded staging area by Captain [Franklin Delano] Bynum's men.

We woke early, and before the sun had risen far into the sky that morning, Captain Bynum had his patrol on the move. He set a hard pace, insisting we hike for hours without a break in the oppressive heat, which was reaching 110 scorching degrees. Several men complained of dehydration. But they pushed on, hacking their way with machetes through clumps of bamboo and ten-foot-high elephant grass. Sometimes the only way the lead men could get through was by hurling themselves forward and falling against the stalks of grass. The sharp edges slashed at our skin like a million paper cuts as we stumbled up the steep hills. Coming down the treacherous slopes, encumbered by packs weighing as much as one hundred pounds and filled with weaponry such as mortar rounds, grenades, and machine guns, the men slid and fell, shredding their fatigues on the sharp rocks. I got an eyeful of hairy bare bottoms that day.

My escort was beginning to fade. Panting for breath and barely capable of putting one foot in front of the other, Johnson was clearly suffering. Soaked with sweat, he lagged far behind and slumped in an exhausted heap every chance he got.

As we slogged on, I concentrated on staying focused and keeping up without complaining. But I could not stop worrying about my lagging escort. Then, late in the afternoon, after more grueling hours of scaling impossible ridges, Johnson pulled a muscle in his groin and collapsed. Writhing in pain, he said he could no longer walk. A burly Marine offered to carry him up the hill. Johnson looked miserable.

Clearly exasperated, Captain Bynum checked on the crippled sergeant. "We'll have to call a chopper to get him out of here," he said. Then he added that I too would have to leave the patrol.
"I was promised a five-day patrol," I argued.

Bynum, however, was insistent. "No escort, no reporter."

The last image I had of the men of Lima Company that evening was of several Marines turning their heads away from the dusty downdraft of the chopper.

Watching the darkening hills of Khe Sanh recede in the distance, I became so angry that I could hardly look at Johnson. I resented having to leave that patrol. I was sure that a firefight would erupt before the mission was finished. Intelligence reports had indicated that several battalions of NVA were massing in Laos to assault the area near the demilitarized zone.

Now I would miss the action that I might have photographed and reported with an exclusive byline that could have been flashed across the world. Instead, I was heading back to Da Nang with nothing but sore muscles and bloodsucker bruises, all because of my hapless escort.

A few days later, back at the press center, I was studying a map to figure out where to go next, when a fellow reporter called out to me.

Weren't you on a patrol near Khe Sanh?" he asked. "Lima got hit. Company commander was killed.""What?" I was stunned. "I can't believe it."As soon as I confirmed it was Captain Bynum, I was overcome with anxiety. I wondered if the company had been discovered by the NVA because the resupply chopper had appeared to extract me and my ailing escort.

I had typed up my notes from the operation, but I couldn't complete the story. Fear and grief prevented me from further checking out the details of the Marine officer's demise. It was a story I didn't want to write. Nor did I want to open a Pandora's box of my own mixed emotions concerning the events of that hot June day in the jungle near the border of Laos.

LAST VISIT TO KHE SANH

By Gary W. Foster
26 October 2008

Everything is different. Khe Sanh is no longer that sleepy little town at the western end of Highway 9 that I first encountered in 2000. No, it's different. It has become a different place. Oh. I still remember the little muddy side streets, the Khe Sanh market, the bumpy road to the Combat Base, the surrounding hills, the restaurant with the dirt floor where I drank a few beers while waiting for a huge rain storm to pass, the scrap metal dealer with fingers missing from each hand and whose yard, even today, is full of bombs, shells, and shrapnel and other junk of war, the horseshoe bend over the Rao Quan River and the restaurant east of town overlooking a cliff that falls away steeply to the Rao Quan River. These and other landmarks that pertain to me and my visits are still there.

But Khe Sanh has changed, and I have changed too, moved on. The construction of Highway 9 is finished. In fact, construction finished two years ago. I was unable to visit the road or the official opening at that time. I felt a definite lack of closure, a slight sense of melancholy, perhaps even a loss. I hoped I could visit this little corner of Quang Tri Province again one day. That one day came on July 9th, 2008.

Having visited Khe Sanh so many times, I didn't have any expectations of the weather this trip. Why worry about it? This was the only chance I had to visit the road, to see it in its finished state. The weather, horrible during most of my many visits yet so perfect at other times, is unpredictably variable. It is what it is.

When I left Vinh headed south for the DMZ, I felt a tinge of sadness. I wasn't gripped by depression, certainly not, but I was reflective on all I had learned, all I had experienced since my first visit to Vietnam and my first travels along Vietnam's narrow highways. I thought back to all the people I had met since my first visit. When I made the drive for the first time, Highway 1 was a disaster. Highway 1 was characterized by washed out pavement and shoulders. It was falling apart. Narrow road width, potholes, long stretches of muddy, unpaved road, detours and accidents all made up the main north-south transportation artery. At the same time, the road was also under construction, over practically its full length from Hanoi to the Ben Hai River. I knew that within a year or two, Highway 1 would be vastly improved. This came to pass but briefly.

Now, driving on the same road, I noticed a sharp deterioration in the finished product. Again bridges were under major repair, the road pavement has vanished in places. It was being paved again. Concrete sections were cracking. Guardrails were missing. I noticed that the embankment had eroded or subsided. The road surface undulated. In such a short time, about 6 years, the investment in a new road as well as the new road itself was in jeopardy. It was reverting to its old self: a decrepit highway in continuous need of repair. In less than an additional ten years it will be consumed by age, over use, and lack of maintenance. So this is what happens to investments in infrastructure in Vietnam, I thought. I wondered.

Construction is everywhere in Vietnam. But I can never tell, still, if something is under construction or destruction. Everywhere one looks there are piles of sand, dirt, rubble, gravel, abandoned equipment, bricks and concrete blocks, wood, metal; you name it. The place is as untidy as it can get. I have never understood this about certain parts of Asia. Bangkok's not like that. Singapore is vastly better, Hong Kong perfect. So why are places like India – and India takes the cake and will never change – and Vietnam, a close second - so unruly, so untidy, so, well, messy? I'm perplexed. Vietnam exudes exoticness. It is mysterious, intangible, a place of deep, convoluted history that evolved over thousands of years, influenced only recently by the French, a history that involves the interactions of its people with many outsiders, Americans not least of all. It has a history that is not easily revealed, not easily given up.

Piles of clutter and debris notwithstanding, Vietnam is moving fast into the new millennium. The economy is booming, large corporations are moving into Vietnam, its infrastructure is undergoing improvement. Vietnam is a big tourist attraction. Tourists, mostly from Korea, Japan and Taiwan, are flocking to Vietnam. So why cannot inhabitants of large towns and neighborhoods dispose of their rubbish and debris without throwing everything into the gutters or along the roadsides? There must be an answer of course, probably many. For one thing, Vietnamese can own property but the parcels allotted are small. Hence, a home also serves as a restaurant or a store or it supports a repair shop or small manufacturing facility. The debris and clutter generated by that business finds its way on the verge of the roadway. The front of each shop is the repository of debris and clutter generated by that business (or home). Interestingly, if one ventures behind the roadside shops, there is very little in the way of de bris. This is a curious trait of roadside Vietnam.

AUTHOR GARY FOSTER

I stayed the night in Vinh. Like the Phoenix, it has completely risen from its ashes of the Vietnam War. Aside from the war museum that is there – a nice museum I might add – there is nothing to suggest that a war or, more appropriately, the aerial bombardment ever took place there. Vinh was rainy and the highway through town covered with mud. The hotel rooms at the Saigon Kim Lien Hotel looked and felt the same: small bed and chairs, dim lights, noisy air conditioner, small bath towels, smaller bars of soap, a fuzzy TV. The room smelled the same too with the tropical dampness and the resulting mold.

Next day, I continued south. The drive was pleasant. Hoang Tran Dung, my ever-present Vietnamese companion and I shared stories. I am always interested to hear about the war from his perspective. He tells me many stories. He never saw an American soldier or Marine during the war but he heard them.

"American soldiers make too much noise," he said. "Sound same like cows. "Moo."

"Moo," I say right back, making an indecent gesture with my middle finger.

Hoang throws his cigarette out the window. We drive on south past the hand-dug tunnels and caves of Vinh Loc.

We arrived at the Ben Hai River, the Seventeenth parallel. The tall flag pole with the large North Vietnamese flag sporting a single yellow star on a sea of red has been moved to the south bank of the river. A large war memorial has been constructed there. We didn't stop.

We headed now for Dong Ha arriving there about dusk. I gave Hoang instructions to the hotel thinking I remembered the way perfectly. Hoang asked me if I remembered where the hotel was. "Of course I do."

We crossed over the Cua Viet River and entered the city. I told Hoang to turn right at the market and then left at the tall red and white communication tower and then proceed straight and then turn...uh oh...I didn't know where I was. Hoang began to laugh. "You talk like cow soldier but not know where are." Just then Hoang turned back in the opposite direction. In front of me there was a landmark that I recognized: The Tank Restaurant, so called – at least that's what I called it - because when I arrived there in 2000, there was an M-41 and an M-48 tank parked next to it alongside the railroad tracks. The tanks had been moved. What? I mean, they moved those tanks? To where? How?

I met Yen, one of the daughters of the owners of the restaurant. She remembered me and gave me a hug. Her English had vastly improved. The rest of her family; sisters, parents, aunts, uncles, cousins, nieces and nephews all sat and stared at me.
"Yen, where's David?"

"He's in Morocco. I am going there next month to be with him."

David Hetherington was my project manager on the Highway 9 project. He took his meals in the Tank Restaurant everyday. He met Yen, fell in love with her, and guess what?

"No!" I said, shocked. "You're married? Morocco? You're going to Morocco?" I could not believe my ears. A little country girl from rural central Vietnam is going to Morocco, North Africa? Really? Married to an Englishman? Really? But it was true.

All the memories came back: Dave and I traveling along the highway, Yen sitting in the car next to him talking non-stop, us stopping at Lao Bao and having a few Huda beers, visiting Khe Sanh, visiting Lang Vei and stepping down into deep bomb craters, finding mortar shells, a 2000 pound bomb that we tried to remove only to be told by the villagers that the bomb belonged to the village, stopping at the Rao Quan River where decades ago Marines used to swim and bathe, climbing Hill 861 while Dave waited patiently in the car at the base of the hill - all the time Yen talking with Dave and Dave teaching her English. Now she was almost fluent with an English accent.

There is a subtle irony in Vietnam. The younger Vietnamese living in the north want to learn English. They don't want to speak Russian or French. They want to speak English. They are jealous of their southern counterparts because as a result of the war, many Vietnamese in the south learned English and passed it on to the next generation. Young street kids in Saigon sound like they're from California. "Hey mister, why not buy this cool t-shirt? You'll like look good in it, man. Awesome"

I continued to visit with Yen while Hoang ate some kind of boiled animal with a side plate of white rice. I had my usual plate of green onions and French fries. I have often wondered if I am being exposed to Agent Orange when I eat the local vegetables. Could it be that trace or residual chemicals can still be found in the soil after all these years? Hoang ordered some tea and smoked a Vinataba cigarette – "Not like NVA officer's cigarettes in war. Different," he once commented.

"Not like Marlboros either, Hoang."

Dinner finished, we said good bye to Yen, wished her well in Morocco – congrats on being married, a kiss on each cheek - and left for the hotel.

Now with my bearings back on course, we arrived at the same hotel I stayed at eight years ago. It was under re-construction – the usual pile of debris recklessly strewn around everywhere. I am not sure the reason for this great expansion in Dong Ha. Dong Ha is experiencing urbanization, yes - that's happening everywhere around the world - but there is really no growing commerce in the city. None that I could see, anyway. It's not exactly a great tourist destination. American vets are returning to "Eye Corp" but they are returning in less numbers. The majority stay the night in Hue or Danang and not in Dong Ha.

When we pulled into the hotel parking lot, the tea shop in front of the hotel on the street where I used to take morning tea was empty, Ha, the young owner, gone. We checked in. The people behind the desk remembered me. I got a room on the third floor overlooking a residential part of the city. I knew the chickens in people's yards would wake me at five the next morning with their crowing. Next morning, they didn't fail.

Next stop: Khe Sanh via Highway 9. I remembered the first time I made my way west on Quac Loang 9. It was very mysterious. We had left Dong Ha before dusk, or maybe just at dusk. It seemed the world was swallowing me. I remembered thinking that the landscape was so uninviting and daunting, that we could never build the road. Construction took longer than we anticipated, but we did succeed. However, at the time of my first visit, it was not lost on, me as I was accompanied by two complete strangers, two people who had been and were now ex-NVA.

Now, I was impressed with the new, improved road. The quality was excellent, the riding smooth. The bridges, over-designed I've always thought, were nicely constructed. The sweeping bridge over the Rao Quan was magnificent. The ascent to and later, the descent from the Khe Sanh plateau was effortless. We cruised at 50 miles per hour. Driving time to Khe Sanh: not quite 50 minutes.

The smugglers from Laos are still operating on the road. I'm not sure they're not more prolific. They're so nonchalant – no - blatant about their smuggling activities. Bundles containing cartons of cigarettes, hair dryers, liquor, electronic goods, even an occasional small Samsung refrigerator or microwave or air conditioner are carried along the road each day by motorbike.

You can get anything from the smugglers. It's an amazing phenomenon. They work in pairs. The driver is male and his companion, carrying all the goodies, is female. It must be a niche culture because what's interesting is that the female passenger who manages all the bags and boxes of consumables is always knock-down, lights-out, fantastically gorgeous. They dress in tight fitting, sometimes revealing designer clothes, heels, Chanel makeup, Calvin Klein sunglasses and all kinds of gold jewelry. They've got the chic bling thing going, that's for sure. Ever see a race car driver with an unattractive woman? The same is at work here: a fashion cult sub-genre - status among smugglers.

I wanted to see Hills 861, 881S, 537, 950 and 1015 but couldn't. Low clouds.

I visited the Combat Base. It looks about the same. The museum area is overgrown with weeds, a blade on the Chinook helicopter placed there years ago has been torn from its mounting and hangs down to the ground, the 155mm cannon is there and the M-41 tank hull continues to rust away. Hoang and I sat beneath the A-frame museum. He had tea and I drank a cold beer, made colder with the addition of chunks of ice in a glass. The pyramidal Vietnamese monument is still there. The coffee plants have grown to about seven feet tall. The area is falling into disrepair. The place seems drab to me. It is too quiet, even too lonely. I took some photos and left.

We made our way back through Khe Sanh ville to the old reservoir west of town built just after the war. And within a short time, we are outside of the ville.

"How's Donna?" I was surprised by Hoang's question. He recalled Donna Elliott. He remembered the time he and I stopped beneath a tower to examine some MIA excavations. He remembered that Donna's brother was MIA during the siege; "mea," he says, not knowing how to say "Em Eye A."

"She's fine, Hoang. Still working on her book about her brother's case."

We arrived at Lang Vei. The Russian tank monument has been moved about 50 feet from where it was and upgraded. The monument is impressive but the area is littered with shards of broken, discarded pieces of marble used for the facade. The highway now passes behind the monument. I looked around because now with the new highway there, it was difficult to gain one's bearings. The landscape had changed noticeably. I looked at the area of where I believed the Special Forces bunker was and I recognized the rise in the land. I saw a piece of a concrete slab just off the roadside jutting out from the embankment. I realized it was a remnant of the Special Forces bunker. There was no other reason for that concrete to be there. Other than that, there was nothing there to suggest any kind of camp ever existed there.

Off to the west, I saw a small hut. People were clearing the brush. I walked over to them and said hello. They pointed out several large bomb craters. They were overgrown of course but I could still see the depth of each crater. I learned my lesson years ago. I stayed out of them.

Hoang and I continued all the way to the Laotian border. We saw the new customs post. Impressive. We stopped in Lao Bao for refreshment. So many times I had stopped there with Dave for refreshment in a very breezy restaurant. Lao Bao is the same but the free economic zone is thriving. We returned to Khe Sanh.

Back through Lang Vei we drove. Past the reservoir and, along the main street of Khe Sanh, we continued past the Khe Sanh market. I noticed the mamas are still bringing scrap iron to the junk metal dealer. He had his scales on the left side of the street weighing out the baskets of shrapnel and other metallic scraps the local women had dug up or collected. We stopped at the intersection of the road that leads to the Combat Base with Highway 9 to see the new large granite-looking monument memorializing the Khe Sanh battles. The reliefs are almost comical: Glorious NVA soldiers juxtaposed against depictions of forlorn-looking American soldiers and crashing American airplanes. How'd they bring this huge megalithic monument here?

The clouds had lifted a bit so we drove towards Hill 861. I still could not see it but what I did see was the dam. My God! Construction of the dam is finished. The backside of Hill 537 was turned into a quarry and a construction camp. The whole area has changed. The labyrinth of construction roads was disorienting.

We passed a small restaurant situated atop the embankment. I recalled the time I witnessed an assembly of mostly men there. About 25 aging Vietnamese men wearing their uniforms, replete with hats and medals, were having a reunion. I recall Hoang was worried that I may find myself in a precarious position if I visited with them. I did anyway. To my astonishment and Hoang's, I was welcomed and we shared some tea.

Hills 950 and 1015 finally became barely visible through the obscuring but lifting clouds. Only the bases of Hill 861 and others could be seen. I would not see the top of Hill 861 that day, maybe never again.

We left the hills and the Combat Base behind us. Hoang and I drove east off the Khe Sanh plateau. I had to stop at the roadside restaurant to see the effects of the dam in the valley below. I walked through the open restaurant to the back. In so doing, I left a trail of mud on the freshly-mopped floor. The owner was not pleased. Hoang walked around the tiny building to the back and laughed at me. "You same like cow. Make mud in store. Moo!"

I looked behind me and the owner was busy mopping the floor again. "Yeah, but you have mud on your shoes and now make mud in car." Hoang laughed.

We drove towards Dong Ha. I passed through the Montagnard huts in the Valley of Blue Light. I remembered the hue of a blue light at night emanating from each hut as its occupants watched TV. I was reminded of the sudden appearance and just as sudden disappearance – like an apparition - of the young girl on the Combat Base just prior to a rain storm in 2003. Later on, we passed through Da Krong and Cam Lo. We drove through Dong Ha, past the Tank Restaurant. I saw Yen in the doorway. Still, I could not believe she was on her way to Morocco.

Now headed south on Highway 1, we would later drive through Hue and much farther on through the new tunnel at the Hai Van pass. We would spend the night in Danang before returning to Hanoi.

Khe Sanh, a lonesome place full of heartbreak, intense conflict between two determined opposing forces and resulting devastation forty years ago – in an area referred to by one antagonist as Leatherneck Square and by the other as the Meat Grinder - was now recovering. Darkly mysterious, at times foreboding, a lonely, rural place in an obscure, odd corner of Vietnam. A place of soft, opaque verdant hills, of ominous clouds. A place that speaks silently exhorting one to come; ever beckoning.

History teaches us that the final outcome of military engagements results in short term gains or losses but overall, through time, there is little change. The Crusades changed nothing. The boundaries of the countries in Europe have not been altered as the result of the Napoleon campaigns or two great world wars. Japan is confined once again to its islands. The Israelis gave back Sinai. So much suffering and for what? It is good to visit such places as Khe Sanh. If nothing else, they serve as reminders.

In addition to meeting my friend Hoang (who once told me that "…40 years ago, we kill each other, now we drive in same car and laugh"), through my first visit to Khe Sanh, I have met Dennis Mannion, Ernie Spencer, Donna Elliott, Big John Pessoni, Ray Stubbe, Bulldog, Mike Archer, Tommy Eichler and so many others. Khe Sanh is now a part of me. My visits to Khe Sanh are timeless. Khe Sanh entered my consciousness, never to leave, becoming a remnant in the recesses of my memory, to be recalled at various times when I want to mentally revisit a small part of my own history that took place in a tiny crook of Quang Tri Province, Vietnam; or as Mike Archer referred to it, a place that was nothing more than a patch of ground.

Au revoir, Khe Sanh.

I GET LETTERS

Tom:

I thought I would take advantage of this data update to contribute to the General Fund and drop you a line.

I was the OIC of the Marine O-1 Det. Of Mag-16 flying 0-1 Cessna "Bird Dogs" out of Dong Ha and then Quang Tri for most of the battle. My call sign was Fingerprint 23. I was the pilot that first located the trenches South of the base. We flew every day from one to three flights and were engaged fighting the NVA running air-strikes and directing artillery all around the AO until the end. You may remember we lost two airplanes, one crashing just off the North end of the runway.

I have read many stories and personal experiences but none about our detachment and the many NVA we killed as we administered air power and reported intel through the air observers who were riding with us. Throughout we did our best to protect the base and our brother Marines there. We did our best to search for and destroy any NVA as they drew closer to the base. We also observed and reported to the base commander and the Division Commander as our sightings began to wind down as the NVA gave up the fight.

I stayed in the Corps for 28 years and flew many kinds of aircraft from fighters to helos, but, nothing could compare with the little "Bird Dog" flying at 600 feet running air-strikes on NVA who were doing their best to kill my Marines and getting us out of their sky. I haven't been to a reunion yet but hope to soon. I appreciate everything you have done to keep our story alive.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT FOR FIFTY

ALL,
THE FOLLOWING IS AN EMAIL FROM THE COMMANDER OF MARINE FORCES, IN IRAQ, MAJ GEN JOHN F. KELLY. THIS IS HIS THIRD TOUR OF DUTY IN THAT COUNTRY.

VIC

I thought you might want to hear the rest of the story of the two Marines who earned the Navy Cross out here last April. I believe it will be awarded in a joint ceremony early in 09. This went to a reporter friend who is writing their story. I really do think it's a Rockwell image. Not the killing part, Rockwell was better than that. It's the picture of the two of them in the early morning heat getting settled into their watch with the 21 year old "veteran" Corporal Yale showing the "new kid" the ropes and encouraging him that he'd be OK when his first action came and how to stay alive in Iraq - seven seconds before they died.

When I dug into the deaths of these young men, as I always do, it became obvious to me that there was something more here than just the "normal" bravery of a couple of young Grunts out on the streets of Ramadi doing what they are trained to do, what they are paid a measly amount of money to do, but infinitely more importantly what they join the Marines to do. Their unit commander knew their deaths were something different, but was in a quandary as there were no eye witnesses. Everything pointed to great bravery and an irrational disregard for their own lives. Then we thought of our allies the Iraqis. Surely Iraqi policemen must have seen something as it was a Joint Security Station (JSS). We had to try.

As you well know incredible bravery is routine among these guys and much of it goes unrecognized because it is so routine. It's everywhere. They do it naturally and without thought, but this just sounded different.

I drove down to the JSS from Fallujah two days after the blast and spoke to a number of police officers and we were right, there were some eye witnesses. They were actually survivors who were only alive to tell their stories because of these two Grunt Marines who would not save themselves. I interviewed six or seven cops, but three were most important and among those who barely survived. A summary of their statements is below written and signed by me. At the time of submission for Navy Crosses it was the only "justification" for decorating these men. Subsequently my computer techs were able to download the entire event from a security camera that was all but destroyed in the blast. It documents the event clearly.

This is in many ways a Norman Rockwell story, and I think can only happen today in our Armed Forces. These men were from different battalions (1/9 and 2/8) doing their "right seat - left seat" turnovers, and from different worlds. Yale was a very poor country kid from western Virginia, Haerter from Long Island. They didn't know each other, they'd probably only met a few minutes before they were put on post but they were closer than brothers because they were Marines. Yale was a few days from going home, Haerter just a few days in country. As civilians they had very-very little in common. As Marines they were DNA close and viewed the world through exactly the same lens. Parris Island and the School of Infantry were their common experiences. What made them different from everyone in their families and from everyone they'd grown up with was their desire to serve as Marines even to their death. As my three condolence letters below the statement point out (father of one, mother of the other, sister of one) they were different than all the rest, because they stepped forward when they didn't have to.

If they were still with us they would not think of themselves as heroes. They would tell you they were doing their job, that their lieutenant told them to stand the post they were assigned and let nothing pass. They wouldn't elaborate much about the event but would only say that "someone tried to pass...he wasn't authorized to pass by their lieutenant's order...so we killed him." They had no time to think about heroics. The truck turned down the alley way (~60 meters in length) from the main street and accelerated through the jersey wall serpentine. They knew exactly what was going on. They had it drilled into them that my greatest fear out here, the biggest threat against us, the only thing that keeps me awake at night, was a Beirut type suicide-truck bomb. I lost my best friend in that blast back in 1983, and it was seared into my soul that this was the only means they (terrorists) had left to really hurt us here in Iraq in a way that would change everything. The entire event as it appears on the tape was perhaps six seconds. Six seconds to see the truck, make their calculation as to what was going on, then decide what was going on, then make their individual decisions at exactly the same time while flipping their M-16s off safe and opening up. Six seconds. No time to talk it over. No time to call the lieutenant. No time to think about their own lives or even the lives of the American and Iraqi lives they were protecting. More than enough time, however, to do their duty. They never hesitated or tried to escape. They never stopped firing until the tape goes black. We know they are heroes, Tony, but they would not see it that way.

You ask if you can teach this kind of bravery. The answer to that is a resounding no. To those of us in uniform who do these kinds of things, or are expected to do these kinds of things, it's not bravery, but duty. What you can teach, or better instill, is a sense of esprit, a sense of commitment to Corps and country, a sense of belonging to something bigger and more important than any one of us are individually. It's what the Greek citizens had. What the Roman legionnaires had. What General Washington's boys had. What the Greatest Generation had, and what a few of this generation still have. If you can successfully instill these traits, and the Marine Corps does it better than anyone else, then what you have is men and women of character that think in terms of courage, honor and commitment...about selfless devotion to duty. They don't say it that way, or express it that way, but they live it in their hearts.

As you know the arithmetic commanders deal with in war, from the second lieutenant to the commanding general, is not zero deaths and zero wounded, but how many is too many. Every time you see a convoy move, or the Marines and our precious Docs at an entry control point, or clearing a house in Fallujah, it's the same. Commanders do the mental math and make the deadly calculation. Is five "acceptable"? Perhaps. Depending on the stakes. Is six too many? Same calculation. In this case two was what the mission required, and thank God they knew what they were about. Little consolation for their families I know, and it's the terrible burden commanders who make these calls carry in their hearts forever. In the tape an Iraqi policeman can be seen standing about 20 feet from where the two Marines were firing from inside a little enclosure. He scrambled like hell and got out of the way before the huge metal gate, jersey walls, mosque and several houses were all but consumed--but he survived. "No sane man would have stood there," they said. Afterwards my interpreter (30ish, an Iraqi born Kurd but has lived in the States since he was 13) asked me if I thought they were crazy. They were not crazy was my response, because not even a crazy man would have stood his ground like they did. They were nothing more than a couple of ordinary Marines doing an extraordinary act of selflessness. They were doing what their lieutenant told them to do and they were doing their duty, and 50 American families are tonight spending Christmas Eve with their sons who didn't die that day in Ramadi.

Semper Fidelis, and Merry Christmas.

Former Marine Corps track star of Danville to be honored

A Danville man is one of two former New York track and field stars who excelled as collegians and in the U.S. Marines to be honored at a Marine Corps meet Saturday.

Frank Tomeo, who grew up in Queens, N.Y., and now lives in Danville, will be recognized in ceremonies during the Marine Corps Holiday Classic in New York.

Tomeo ran for Fordham University and later represented the Marines as part of a 1965 national team that ran the second-fastest indoor time in the 800 meters.

He was an Armed Forces champion and an NCAA All-American in the 800, a member of the Armed Forces-champion 400 relay team and an all-Marine champion at 400 and 800 meters. He was also a four time relay champion in the Millrose Games and a Marine Corps record holder in the 2-mile and sprint relays.

He was twice named Fordham's athlete of the year. He was the national indoor champion at 1,000 meters, ran on a national championship two-mile relay team, an Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America mile relay championship team and mile and two-mile relay champions in the Penn Relays. He is a member of the school's hall of fame.

Tomeo was commissioned a second lieutenant in 1963. He attended graduate school at the University of Bonn and became platoon commander at the school's demonstration troops at Quantico, Va. He was promoted to first lieutenant, served as regimental intelligence officer for the 26th Marines, promoted to Captain at Okinawa and served as regimental intelligence officer at Khe Sanh, Vietnam.

He will be honored along with Charlie Buchta, who competed for Holy Cross. Both are graduates of the same high school, Brooklyn Prep. Copyright:The Advocate-Messenger 2008

A Marine Hero's Legacy

S/Sgt. Karl Gorman Taylor
Medal Of Honor
INDIA CO 3/26

The low, rolling hills and wooded valleys of western Pennsylvania present a picturesque view for visitors any time of the year. Proud and patriotic, the folks of tiny Avella, Pa., are descendants of hardworking coal miners, whose livelihood meant enduring years of sweat, dirt, darkness and danger to keep America's industries running. There are no coal mines now. There are no expensive homes, no shopping centers, no signs of wealth. Instead, there is peace and tranquility.

Avella also is the home of a Marine hero's widow and children.

During December 2008, 40 years will have passed since one of Avella's finest was mortally wounded on one of Vietnam's many battlefields. Webster's New World Dictionary defines a hero as "a man of great strength and courage, favored by the gods and in part descended from them." Staff Sergeant Karl Gorman Taylor Sr. embodied these words. As the only member of the 26th Marine Regiment to be awarded the Medal of Honor during the Vietnam War, SSgt Taylor's conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity has never been forgotten.

On a lovely spring day, two members of SSgt Taylor's Marine Corps family journeyed to Avella to meet the Taylor family and to remember their brother in arms. Retired Captain Ron Hoover had been commanding officer of "India" Company, 3d Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment during the early days of December 1968. Richard Townsend, then a private first class, had been one of the company's radio operators.

Sitting among a group of modest houses on a ridge overlooking scenic valleys, the Taylor home, like others in Avella, had an American flag flying in the yard. Shirley Ann Taylor warmly greeted her guests and invited them into her small but homey kitchen. The Taylor family consists of two sons and a daughter. Karl Taylor Jr., the oldest of the boys; his wife, Diane; and son, Steven, were there. Powerfully built and square-jawed like his dad, Karl proudly pointed out the framed Medal of Honor and pictures of the Taylor kids and grandkids that are displayed in the living room. Sheryl is the oldest and then Karl. Kevin, the youngest, followed in his dad's footsteps and became a Marine.

On one corner of a wall, a large, beautiful portrait of SSgt Karl Taylor in his dress blues and wearing the Medal of Honor is displayed prominently. The painting shows his rugged determination, indomitable spirit and modest pride. "From a picture of Dad in his blues, a friend did the painting," Karl Jr. explained.

To the two members of her husband's Marine family, Shirley Taylor began to describe the Marine she'd married and lost to war. Born 14 July 1939, in Laurel, Md., SSgt Taylor dropped out of high school after three years. "His family needed the money," Shirley admitted. "Later, he saw the value of education and received a high-school equivalency diploma."

Because service to country was considered a duty in the Taylor family, Karl Sr. and his brother enlisted in the Marine Corps on 15 Jan. 1959. They were promptly sent to Parris Island, S.C., for boot camp. Following recruit training at Camp Lejeune, N.C., Taylor was assigned to Alpha Co, 1st Bn, 6th Marines. He participated in Mediterranean and Caribbean cruises, performing various infantry duties.

During his stint with the Second Marine Division, he met and soon married Shirley Ann Piatt from Avella. Haltingly, Shirley said: "Karl loved the Corps, but he found time for his family. He was considerate, a disciplinarian, a very good father."
Because he realized that Marine drill instructors personify the best of the Corps, he asked for and was accepted to DI School at Parris Island in 1961. He was a corporal. "Being a DI's wife was stressful duty," Shirley recalled. "Hours were terribly long for Karl, and he had duty every other day. Marine wives don't complain, and I didn't."

His core values were apparent on the drill field. Retired Sergeant Major Pete Seagriff remembers Cpl Taylor as extremely fair but firm and revered by every recruit.

Cpl Taylor and Sergeant John J. McGinty III were junior DIs of Platoon 258 in the 2d Recruit Training Bn. Sgt McGinty won the Medal of Honor in 1966, while serving with the 3d Bn, 4th Marines. He later was commissioned. Sgt Ron Hoover was a DI in the 1st Bn. He, too, was commissioned from the enlisted ranks. In their wildest dreams, Sgt Hoover and Cpl Taylor never could have imagined being linked together in Vietnam in 1968.

During August 1964, SSgt Taylor began a tour on Okinawa with Golf Co, 2d Bn, 3d Marines. After the decision was made to send Marine ground forces to Vietnam, the battalion was one of the first to land at Da Nang in early 1965.

Upon his return to the States, Taylor was sent to Marine Corps Base Quantico, Va. Assigned to Officer Candidates School, his exemplary leadership skills and combat experience helped in training future officers for Vietnam. Like all career Marines at the time, he knew another Vietnam tour was inevitable.

"Karl's orders to Vietnam arrived in late 1967," Shirley said. "We made a decision to buy this house. He often said of Avella, 'This is God's country. We'll retire here.' "

Young Karl recalled those days. "Dad called me the skipper of the ship. The day he left, he instructed, 'OK, Skipper, you're the man of the house now.' Maybe he had a premonition."

Shirley's eyes glistened, as she described that cold January morning when Karl left for war. "We hugged, kissed and said good-bye ... and he left. There was a snowstorm. His dad and brother drove him to the airport. Karl wouldn't let them go to the departure gate.

He really believed we were fighting in Vietnam for all the right reasons."

On 21 Jan. 1968, the Marine base at Khe Sanh was plastered by enemy rockets and mortars. SSgt Taylor joined India Co, 3/26 on that day. Capt William "Bill" Dabney, Lieutenant General Lewis B. "Chesty" Puller's son-in-law, was the commander. The North Vietnamese Army (NVA) had encircled the base; the Marines at Khe Sanh were in for weeks of tough fighting. While performing duties as platoon sergeant and platoon leader, Taylor participated in the defense of Hill 881 South.

After the siege at Khe Sanh had been broken, 3/26 moved to the Da Nang area and was involved in several combat operations. SSgt Taylor had experienced many intense battles and close calls, but the worst was yet to come. His DI friend, now-First Lieutenant Ron Hoover, was India Co's commander in October 1968. "I needed a good 'gunny,' " Hoover recalled. "Karl was all of that and more."

Idolized by his Marines, Taylor was called "Gunny T." Second Lieutenant Chris Tibbs, India Co's 2d Platoon leader, said, "Gunny was always helping, guiding and teaching. He was what every staff NCO [noncommissioned officer] should aspire to be.

"Gunny taught us infantry leaders the tricks of fighting the elusive NVA and VC [Viet Cong]. In both tactics and weapons, he was the perfect teacher," 2dLt Tibbs added.

In late November 1968, 3/26 participated in Operation Meade River. Launched during the monsoon season and in the mud and weeds southwest of Da Nang, the multi-battalion operation was considered the largest helicopter assault in Marine Corps history at that time.

Intelligence sources had indicated that four battalions of the NVA's 38th Regiment would be trapped inside a Meade River cordon.

As the massive encirclement gradually tightened, the fighting became increasingly intense and casualties mounted on both sides. The enemy desperately tried to break out of the trap. Late in the day on 8 Dec., India Co was ordered to attack what was a series of in-depth bunker positions. The company fought to within a few meters of the bunkers. From these hidden positions came a torrent of unexpected accurate and deadly automatic-weapons fire.

Second Lt Brian Webber, 3d Platoon leader, was mortally wounded; his Marines were pinned down and taking casualties. Many of India Co's Marines vividly recall SSgt Taylor's indomitable courage, inspiring leadership and selfless dedication. Cpl Felipe Torres, the platoon sergeant for 2d Plt who later would receive a commission and retire as a colonel, said: "Gunny T didn't hesitate. He said, 'My Marines are in trouble!' He grabbed his M79 [grenade launcher] and extra rounds, and he crawled through the hail of fire to the beleaguered platoon."

With a companion, SSgt Taylor repeatedly maneuvered across an open area to rescue Marines who were too seriously wounded to move themselves. Learning that there were other wounded Marines lying in an exposed area, he led four other Marines forward across the fire-swept terrain in an attempt to rescue the wounded.

When his group was halted by the devastating fire, he directed his companions to return to the company command post, whereupon he took his M79 and, in full view of the enemy, charged across the rice paddy toward the enemy position, firing his weapon as he ran. Although wounded several times, he succeeded in reaching the enemy bunker and silenced the fire from the sector, moments before he was mortally wounded.

Operation Meade River was terminated the next morning. On that day in Avella, the Taylor family was beginning to think about Christmas and anticipating the return of their loved one in only 42 days.

Karl Jr., called "Skipper," was 5 years old, but the memory of the soft knocking on the Taylor door forever will be embedded in his mind. He explained: "Sheryl was at school. The light tapping came from the back door. That was unusual because in these parts folks go to the front door. There were two solemn-faced Marines and a chaplain standing there. I knew something was terribly wrong. Mom called Grand pappy at the mill and told him the bad news."

Tears filled Shirley's eyes at the memory of those difficult days and nights. Her voice, unsteady but clear, she said: "This whole community was and still is family. We don't lock our doors. We take care of our own. We band together."

Skipper described growing up without a father: "Grand pappy Piatt became the father figure. He didn't make it far in school, but he was smart. When us kids got in trouble, he'd whip our behinds real good. Grandma was the mediator."

A proud smile appears on Shirley Taylor's face. She said: "All the kids grew up in this home, and they all graduated from high school. That would have delighted Karl. But there's something else I want told in this story. The Marine Corps, Karl's other family, took care of us too. When we needed something, his band of brothers cared for us. Everywhere we went in Washington, his Marines did the escorting."

The Medal of Honor was awarded posthumously to SSgt Taylor on 17 Feb. 1971. His wife, children and parents were invited to the White House for the ceremony.

Laughing, Skipper remarked: "Kevin was 4 years old, and he figured he'd be the life of the party. A Marine sergeant was given the job of babysitting us kids. Kevin decided to go swimming in the hotel's water fountain in his clothes. Then, he tested the sergeant's patience by climbing in and out of the barrels of some big cannons. One morning he turned up missing. After looking high and low for him, we found Kevin on the Marine driver's bed watching cartoons."

During the award ceremony, Kevin decided to liven up the proud but solemn occasion. Grinning, Shirley Taylor described the story: "Skipper shook President Nixon's hand, but Kevin had his own idea. He popped to attention and saluted, causing people, including the President, to chuckle."

While presenting a nationwide address a few months later, President Nixon mentioned both SSgt Taylor's gallantry and Kevin's sharp salute. The President also said in the address that "he wanted the war to end in a way that would be worthy of Staff Sergeant Taylor's sacrifice."

Kevin enlisted in the Marine Corps in late 1983 and graduated from Parris Island in early 1984. "Our Marine family invited us to the graduation," Shirley acknowledged. "I guess they thought it was a big deal. We're proud but private folks, and we declined the offer. Karl would have wanted Kevin to make it on his own. And he has." Kevin retired as a gunnery sergeant in 2004. He has a daughter, Rylee.

Sheryl lives in Alexandria, Va. She and her husband, Kenneth, have two children, Jacqueline and Wendy. The nieces all call their Uncle Karl "Skip."

Skipper, his wife, Diane, and son, Steven live near Avella. On 2 Sept. 1992, they lost an infant son and brother, Jason Mathew. He is buried next to Grandfather Karl Gorman Taylor Sr.

Before Capt Hoover and Richard Townsend began the long drive home, they had one more duty to perform. Even though a memorial service for their fallen brother in arms had been held in Vietnam in December 1968, the two went to Avella to perform a more fitting farewell. And so, SSgt Taylor's Avella family and two members of his Marine family drove to the cemetery.

Matching the modest nature of the Marine who rests there, the small cemetery is located on a hill off a quiet, country road. The Taylor family often visits there to ensure the place is kept in Marine shape. An engraved gray stone at the cemetery's entrance reads: "Buried In This Cemetery Is Congressional Medal Of Honor Recipient Karl Gorman Taylor, Sr." His grave site is a short distance up the gravel road. The grave is marked by a plain government-issue marker for a Marine who was anything but ordinary.

Because the two members of SSgt Taylor's Marine family were with him in those final days and hours before he sacrificed his life for others, their moments at the grave were especially emotional. No one wanted to leave. Finally, Capt Hoover stood at attention, saluted the Marine hero who rests there and said, "Farewell, my brother.
Semper Fidelis."

Editor's note: Capt Hoover and the author served together in 3/26. While Hoover was skipper of India Co, Duane Crawford commanded Mike Co.

Marine Hero's Legacy A Veteran And a Refugee Remember The Horror

By Andy Bromage
New Haven Register New Haven CT.

Memories of a blood stained battlefield near Khe Sanh, Vietnam, have shadowed Dennis Mannion for the last 36 years.

Scenes from the four months he spent defending Hill 861 near the Laos border, and the nightly mortar attacks his company of marines endured, follow Mannion on every trek through Sleeping Giant State Park, and to every high school football game.

"It's a sound track that keeps running through my head all the time," said Mannion, 59, of Cheshire, a retired English teacher and football coach.

Eight miles away, in a tree-lined Hamden neighborhood, Khanh Tran is coping with his own visions of Vietnam— the homeland he fled at age 15 just hours before the country fell to the North Vietnamese communist troops Mannion was fighting. Tran says his family still gets harassing messages left on his answering machine. He assumes the voices are angry veterans scanning the phone book for Vietnamese last names. Tran says he fully understands the soldiers' pain.

"I feel like I owe the American people something," said Tran, 44, an architect. "It's a guilt you always carry. I keep myself busy all the time. That's my way of coping with it."

Saturday marked the 30th anniversary of the fall of Saigon and the end of the Vietnam War. More than 2 million people, including 58,000 Americans, died over the course of the 20-year conflict, half of them civilians. For Mannion, Tran and countless others, time has only scarred the wounds of Vietnam, it has not fully healed them. Memories are never far out of reach, but anniversaries bring them into clearer focus. The pain each has endured for the last three decades is a testament to the chaos of the war and the complex imprint it has made on the American psyche.

"NOT A DAY GOES BY ..." Mannion has been a leader in his community since returning from combat.

For 30 years, Mannion coached football and taught English at Sheehan High School in Wallingford, and now travels to area schools to share his wartime experience with students. Mannion did a 13-month tour from September 1967 to October 1968 as an artillery forward observer with Kilo Company, 3rd Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment. He was 21 at the time.
The company was sent to Hill 861, outside Khe Sanh, in northwest South Vietnam near the North-South demilitarized zone. For four months, Mannion's company withstood heavy mortar and sniper fire protecting the post from communist assault. Mannion's job was to spot artillery shells, a dangerous assignment that required emerging from his hillside bunker under heavy fire.

Mannion was wounded twice, received two Purple Hearts and was among 26 Marines in his company honored with the Presidential Unit Citation. I've gotten away from the bad parts," Mannion said. "Some guys might have used alcohol or drugs to mask that. I try to deal with it up front and honestly."

But the horrors of Hill 861 weren't easily set aside. Mannion keeps a trunk full of items from the war and each conjures a vivid memory. There's the army green wash towel, shredded by shrapnel from a mortar round that exploded just a few feet from where he hunkered down in a foxhole. His topographical map is a maze of squiggly lines and numbers, but Mannion looks at it and sees peaks, valleys and enemy soldiers.

Mannion knew he had to confront his past firsthand, so in 2000, he boarded a plane for Vietnam to revisit Hill 861."It shrunk the experience for me, and made it slightly more manageable," Mannion said.

"Having been back once, it's not as bitter 30 years later," he said.
"The feeling is tempered by the fact that I went back, and never once did I see an unfriendly face."

Anniversaries like this one dredge up pictures and sound clips in the media, but Mannion said Vietnam is never far from his thoughts. "The 30th anniversary will be a block of time to look back, but by 1975, I had left Vietnam five years earlier. My war was already over by then."

"IT'S ABOUT THE SOLDIERS"

Khanh Tran was playing with friends on the streets of Saigon when his parents scooped him up, brought him to a military base and hustled him on to a Chinook helicopter fleeing Vietnam. The date was April 29, 1975, just hours before Saigon fell to the North Vietnamese.

Tran's father, a South Vietnamese Air Force intelligence officer, rushed his family onto the escape craft, but he was forced to stay behind."I was sitting there playing and my mother said we had to go and to say goodbye to my friends," said Tran."We drove right onto the tarmac, there were armed soldiers everywhere, just lined up there with machine guns. They didn't care if you were young or old, they just pushed you into the helicopter."

The chopper ferried them to the Philippines, and then to Guam, where they spent a month waiting for word from their father."Every day we would go to the main office to look for my father's name on a newcomers' list," Tran said. "I thought he was dead. Then one day, he shows up. He is shot in the leg and the arm. I was just jumping for joy. It was the happiest time of our lives."

Tran's family and other refugees were brought to an Arkansas Army base before the family relocated to Dumas, Texas. Ironically, Tran's first daughter was born April 29, 1985, the 10th anniversary of his flight from Vietnam. The next year, in 1986, Tran moved to Hamden.

Tran has spent the last 30 years trying to repay the debt of gratitude he says he owes American veterans. He volunteers with Vietnam veterans' groups and helped design the home of a doctor who treats Vietnam vets. "I want to dedicate my thoughts to the Vietnam vet," Tran said. "I want to tell them how much I appreciate what they gave up for my country.

"For me, it's just a way of reminding me that I need to be grateful and humble and understanding the deep meaning of freedom," he said.

Tran has not returned to Vietnam since leaving. The 30th anniversary is making Tran reconsider."I planned to go back two years ago," he said. "Maybe now I can. Maybe 30 years is closure for me. I don't know. I feel I have to be at peace with myself."

"A Christmas POST from 2007"

OK so I'm not going to post my Christmas at Khe Sanh story this year. You know the one where Ann Margaret shows up on the well lighted stage placed over the ammo dump...yea, that one. Although I still think that story is one of my better BS pieces, I guess because I see such hilarious absurdity in the possibility or probability. I still can't get over the number of people who believed it could have actually occurred. One even said that he must have been up in the hills because he missed it.....Oh please. Still others demanded that I no longer write fiction on this web site, so that was the end of my fiction novel period.

Anyway, I was out driving around this evening in the dark (no not aimlessly) and the rain was really coming down. Now I realize California rain is not the same rain you folks get in other climate locations, I mean I played golf on Tuesday, but please try to follow the story here. Anyway it's cold and wet and the wind is blowing and I'm trying to remember how miserable I was 40 years ago at about this time. Now because of personal issues I had with my now deceased mother and step-father, Christmas was never much of a thrill, so I can't look back and remember how wonderful it was sitting around the old living room with the folks and grandma, you know the warm and fuzzy Christmas feeling, but I really envy those who can.

I do have some pretty vivid memories of a number of years ago spending Christmas with a few other lonely and bitter drinking buddies hanging out and complaining about this time of year, seems everyone else was so darn happy and filled with the Christmas spirit, which of course I never had, and to tell you the truth, I'm not so sure to this day I know what it is.

Now getting back to my story. I guess for Christmas our mess must have put out a pretty decent meal because if we didn't I am confident that Tom Horchler, Paul Turnbull and a few others, who had the privilege of eating in our mess, would even to this day, tell me about it. Tom always relates how good he thought the food was (he even kept a few of the menus) however others were not so complementary.

Anyway you look at it, Christmas at Khe Sanh was lousy (for me), the food was rotten, the weather cold and wet with that damp fog rolling in and staying all night. No heaters, no lights, no blankets, wet clothes, socks and boots. no radios or televisions or Christmas carols. The red clay mud stuck to your boots making them 5 pounds heavier and you 3 inches taller. I didn't think about Christmas at home, I didn't think about mom because I knew that she was not thinking about me and I'm sure Christmas was just a little more enjoyable for her knowing that I wouldn't be hanging around. But worst of all, worst of all about Christmas at Khe Sanh, was that tall, leggy Ann Margaret with the dancing girls from the USO show, never showed up on the stage that was never built over the ammo dump.

"Hospital Corpsman Prayer" by Sam Messer

"Hospital Corpsman Prayer"

Grant me, oh Lord, for the coming events; Enough knowledge to cope and some plain common sense.

Be at our side on those nightly patrols; And be merciful judging our vulnerable souls.
Make my hands steady and as sure as a rock; when the others go down with a wound or in shock.

Let me be close, when they bleed in the mud; With a tourniquet handy to save precious blood.
Here in the jungle, the enemy near; Even the corpsman can't offer much lightness and cheer.

Just help me, oh Lord, to save lives when I can; Because even out there is merit in man.

If It's Your will, make casualties light; And don't let any die in the murderous night.

These are my friends I'm trying to save; They are frightened at times, but You know they are brave.

Let me not fail when they need so much; But to help me serve with a compassionate touch.
Lord, I'm no hero -- my job is to heal; And I want You to know Just how helpless I feel.

Bring us back safely to camp with dawn; For too many of us are already gone.

Lord bless my friends If that's part of your plan; And go with us tonight, when we go out again."

QUALIFIED

By Craig W. Tourte

It didn't take much to be qualified for military service during the war in Vietnam. The right age, no dependents, not currently in school, a trigger finger and you were good to go, of course qualifications have changed since that time. A number of years ago, before the current conflict, on business it was necessary for me to visit one of the local Marine Corps Recruiters. As I waited for the recruiter I could not help but over hear him discussing an enlistment with a young man who was seated at his table. The recruiter told the prospect that he needed to finish high school before he came back. The recruiter said, "If you quit high school you might quit us and the Marine Corps does not take quitters." I was duly impressed.

I happened to be attending a rather large gathering of various friends and acquaintances the other evening when I observed a Marine dressed in uniform. The Marine wore the stripes of a Sergeant E5, three rather impressive long rows of colorful ribbons - which included the combat action ribbon - adorned his uniform. I walked over and introduced myself, he of course just happened to be a Marine Corps recruiter. I was wearing my new black Khe Sanh Survivor shirt so he knew we had a connection. We shared a few stories and I found that Sergeant Mike Green had been in the Marine Corps for six years and had served two tours of duty in Iraq, one of those tours with the Third Battalion, First Marine Corps Regiment. In addition, Sergeant Green had served at the Navy base of Guantanamo Bay and in various assignments in South and Central America. He was accompanied by Gunnery Sergeant David Hudson, who although not in uniform, was never-the-less easy to spot as a Marine. I told them how difficult the Marine Corps was in "my day" and that my impression was that "we" were a bit "tougher" than today's youth. I just needed to throw that in, because I had heard it from so many others who had gone before me. I'm sure he smiled inside and thought "here we go again." As a Marine in uniform, I thought it was kind of his job to have to listen to another old guy.

The following day I asked Steve Wiese (B/1/26) if he would like to take a short drive over to the Marine Corps Recruiting station located not far from our homes. Steve hesitated somewhat, told me that he'd have to lose a little weight, that his back was really hurting him, and he could not run like he once did. I assured Steve that the Marine Corps was not interested in his return to duty.

I picked up the Fall/Winter issue 69 of our Red Clay magazine, printed a small label that read, "Donated by Vietnam Veterans of the 77 day siege of the Marine Corps Combat Base at Khe Sanh" a couple of coins, and then Steve and I headed for the Marine Corps Recruiting office.

Sergeant Green and I talked for about an hour. Ramrod straight, committed to the principles of the Marine Corps and interested in only recruiting those who were qualified to wear the uniform of the Marine Corps, Sergeant Green and Gunnery Sergeant Hudson were gracious with the time they took to talk to a couple of old jarheads. I mentioned the siege at Khe Sanh and Steve's participation and survival of the Ghost Patrol. Sergeant Green acknowledged our service and thanked us for "paving the way." I told Sergeant Green my little story about the recruiter telling the prospect to finish high school because the Marine Corps did not take quitters, he related that it was at times difficult to tell young men they were just not qualified.

Sergeant Green and Gunnery Sergeant Green were kind enough to have their photographs taken with us as we presented them with the copy of "Red Clay." I also was able to get them to stand with my "Khe Sanh Veterans - Northern California" banner.

We were both quiet and a little depressed on the ride home. Steve spoke first and mentioned what we were both thinking, as painful as it was, we realized years ago, that we were old and no longer qualified.

MEMORIES OF THE HILL BATTLES

for Lt. James Epps

02 July 1944-18 Jan 2000

As we draw near the 30th anniversary of the major operations in Khe Sanh, my memory is of my first operation as a brand new Second Lieutenant in Vietnam...the Hill Fights in the Spring of 1967.Because of the potential danger of the siege and its high media profile, the battles of the previous Spring have not yet received their due recognition. Being an eyewitness to the final phases of the battle and its aftermath, I have known that ever since. Just as the Vietnam Veterans built their own monument, now is the time to illuminate this battle, for us to tell our own story.

The official Marine Corps history, as recounted in "Marines in Vietnam 1967," describes the battle as "...First Battle of Khe Sanh, one of the bloodiest battles and hardest fought battles of the Vietnam War." Lt. Gen. Victor H. Krulak, USMC (Ret.), speaks of the initial engagement: "The results were the bitterest fighting of the entire war for the Marines."

First, the hills. These are ancient hills, formed by volcano, rounded by time, overgrown by triple canopy jungle, overspread by vast acreage of dense elephant grass, stands of bamboo scattered at random. Here and there are footpaths made by generations of Montagnards that wind over ridges and valleys, only wide enough for small people in single file. In some areas, the terrain is impassible; in other areas, the terrain and the vegetation deny passage.

Now my story. When I arrived in country, I was assigned to 1/26 which had been located at Hill 55 for some months. From the time I joined, there were rumors that we were due to be rotated and would be moving. About 10 days after I joined Charlie Co., we received move-out orders, wound up in Phu Bai, and were being briefed to move to the rim of the Ashau Valley as escort for 175s (Howitzers).

The operation was to be called CUMBERLAND. Without any prior warning, we received a warning order to move out and were sent to the air strip. After hanging out in the blazing sun, C130s showed up; and we loaded up where we were going. When we landed, the pilot reversed the thrust of his engines and braked so hard that it threw us around the cargo bay. As the high-pitched whine if the motor lowered the ramp, the first thing that greeted us was the air full of artillery smoke and the turn-out at the west end of the strip was lined up with litters.

While we were milling around, my second squad leader recognized someone on one of the litters; and that is how we found out there was a tremendous battle going on in the hills, and the casualties were terrible. Shortly, we were assigned the western sector of the base to defend, the area that became known as the Ponderosa. The original road to the base from Highway 9 entered there, and young Montagnard boys were selling crossbows and bracelets.

On the other side of the road, the jungle began. For the next few days, we ran patrols during the day and were base security at night. On Charlie Company's second day in Khe Sanh, the third platoon was detailed to escort an artillery battery with an added section of 155s (Howitzers) about two kilometers outside the base to a location near what became known as the Rock Quarry. The 105s were nearly at maximum range firing out beyond 881N; displacing the battery allowed better coverage.

The first night we were just kind of set in a loose perimeter around the battery with hasty fighting holes. It was that night that is remembered by everyone in the Hill Fights as the night of the rainstorm. I was new to Vietnam, and this was my first thunderstorm; and, naturally, it overwhelmed me. It also made a lasting impression on seasoned grunts. My hasty fighting hole was three feet deep and the rain filled it up in less than ten minutes. Water poured out of the sky.

For the next 5 days we patrolled all around Khe Sanh Combat Base.

There were times, during lulls in the battle, between helicopter flights or resupply and medevac, between prolonged barrages by the artillery, in the quiet, away from the Combat Base, that the beauty of the Khe Sanh Valley emerged to touch us — a lush tropical paradise with birds and monkeys...and swirling cones of circling buzzards. From a distance, the hills look smooth as California foothills: fields of grass scattered with clumps of trees and interspersed with stands of forest.

On the 10th of May the artillery battery struck its position, and we returned to the Combat Base. Rumors flew. We were broken down into helo teams and dropped off on the ridgeline to the east of the crest of Hill 881N. The hilltop was confusion, as there was a reinforced battalion lifting off after patrolling and pursuing the enemy after the fall of Hill 881N five days earlier. We were replacing them.

The next impression, after all the milling around, was the smell of death. Everywhere Overpowering everything. Everything was shredded. Big trees had been splintered by big bombs. The ground was pulverized. Big trees had been splintered by big bombs. The foliage was finely sliced by all the shrapnel of a big battle. There seemed to be a fine powdery dust scattered over everything. While we were checking out the LZ, which really was a rounded ridgeline across a draw from 881N, I ran into two classmates from the Basic School. We had graduated just 3 months before. They told me their story of the Hill Fights. A fellow classmate had tripped off the battle some 3 weeks earlier when he had climbed Hill 861 from the backside, up the ridgeline that went across Hill 861-Alpha.

He and I had been to recon school at Camp Pendleton just before leaving the States and had learned not to use the easy route of approach to any terrain feature. Apparently, his little FO team had scaled Hill 861 turned into a ridgeline that ran west to 881N&S. He had caught them by surprise, and they reacted with fury. His Marines had pulled him back severely wounded. There were Marines missing. This became characteristic of the phases of the Hill Fights. Units who took over from the initial assault units were charged with recovering the missing.

My basic-school classmates continued to tell me their story. They took 861. Then fought their way along the backbone ridge that runs from 861 to 881N&S. The crest of the ridge runs in a line from east to west. Sloping away from the backbone are intersecting ridgelines that are steep up and down and broad on their tops. Some were forested. The main ridgeline was so steep and thickly overgrown at it was impassible; therefore, any route of approach from east to west had to follow the military crest of the ridgeline, across the secondary ridges that ran perpendicular to it. The Lieutenants told of taking these ridge lines one by one, only to have to back off each one in turn so artillery and air could bombard the next ridge. There were five of these secondary ridgelines. It took days.

The conversations I am recounting took only a few minutes and for 30 years has stayed clearly in my mind. My fellow Lieutenants told me about how the NVA they fought were much bigger than the South Vietnamese and how some of the dead did not look like Vietnamese — maybe Cubans. They talked about snipers tying themselves in trees and fighting to the death. And how some of them appeared to be drugged on something because, in the final counter-attack, they charged out of their bunkers at the attacking Marines in a agitated delirium, seeming to foam at the mouth, with their weapons at high port. They had excellent weapons, good uniforms and web gear and even some wore steel helmets.

For the last 5 days, they had been patrolling to the west and northwest — out to the Laotian border — and had occasional, but serious contacts. The NVA had not completely quit the field of battle; they had only changed the tempo of their operations. Then it was their turn to take the CH-46s. The reinforced battalion was gone. A rifle company, C/1/26, was alone on 881N. We left the LZ and marched single file to the actual hilltop of 881N and set in for the night among the jumble of trees blown off at knee level by one and two thousand pound bombs during the taking of the Hill.

We were on our own. Here and there, some intact NVA bunkers offered protection. We also used fighting holes vacated by the assault companies. During our assumption of the battlefield, and for weeks after, details emerged which illuminated the nature and disposition of the fighting units and the ferocity of the battle, not just giant trees strewn around like matchsticks, not just the dirt and lesser vegetation shredded but the detritus and debris of big military units in a desperate battle; ammunition wrapping, cardboard rocket and mortar shipping tubes, piles of spent brass mixed with machine gun links, ragged battle dressings, food garbage, dead batteries, ragged web gear and shards of uniforms, tattered ponchos, a NVA bush hat in the low branches of a denuded tree, burned out smoke grenades, loose rounds, charging clips, empty wooden ammo boxes.

As the companies of 1/26 replaced the assault companies, we patrolled and swept and searched the entire area around the hilltops and much of their slopes. This process commenced immediately and continued for months. During this time, we continued to make contact with the NVA, at first regularly and seriously, then more sporadically as time continued. This was one of our missions, as well as occupying the hilltops, denying easy access and maneuver to the NVA and continuing to search the battlefield because, a number of times during the Hill Fights, dead Marines had to be left behind while assaulting units regrouped. They were missing. Any time we discovered previously uncharted remains, we shut down the patrol, set up security, and Graves Registration people choppered out from Khe Sanh in CH-34s to inspect and remove the bones.

This description of our mission commenced during the consolidation phase of the attack on the Hills. In our narrative, C/1/26 is in its first 24 hrs. on Hill 881N. The next morning, during resupply, a CH-34 lost power on lift off and crashed. While two platoons of C Company climbed off 881N to 881S, the Third Platoon was detailed to guard the 34. This was on the intermediate crest of 881N, just to the south of the geographical crest. On the terrain maps, it looked like a starfish with a rounded body from which four or five ridges emanated like the legs of a starfish. They sloped away into ravines. This had been the scene of the NVA counterattack just before the final assault of 881N. It was to figure prominently in the opening battles of the siege. It was a natural stepping stone from 881S to the north and from any approach from the east.

The ridgelines that runs from 861 to 881N&S does not lift up gradually to those hilltops. It ends in almost a "T," and the ground falls off steeply to a large low area at the base of Hill 881N&S terrain complex. There is a low saddle that runs over to the starfish hilltop. It is in the vicinity of the cross bar of the "T" of the east-west ridge where we had landed the day before. We had walked across the saddle to the starfish before turning north to go up Hill 881N. The actual crest of 881 was too heavily forested to land a helicopter. Now we are guarding a helicopter in a ravine of the starfish-shaped hillock, one platoon where there had been three companies. A long night.

We waited all next day for a CH-53 to lift out the CH-34. We ran local security around the hilltop. We discovered that wherever there weren't bomb craters, there were bunkers. The night the NVA had counterattacked the assault companies, they had reoccupied some of these very bunkers and had rooted out again in an 8-hr fight. Many of them were filled with dead (now putrefy) NVA and their gear. This area was still littered. Huge areas of all the surrounding terrain had been burned off by napalm and white phosphorus. By 1915 the chopper was lifted out, and we received water and chow resupply. We thought we were going to spend another night there, but the company on 881S radioed over to us; and we had to secure chow call, saddle up, and hump the 5-gallon water cans that had just been delivered. It was now dusk.

When we got to the bottom of the steep ravine that separates 881N&S, we were nearly overpowered by the stench of death. This must have been why the NVA had been burying their dead during the initial assault of Hill 881S. It took an hour and a half in the deepening dusk to reach the friendly positions on 881S. We stayed inside the lines of the company on 881S. Their CP group occupied some of the NVA bunkers. Marine fighting holes and bunkers tend to be ragged holes torn in the earth. These were dug plumb and straight, lined with matting, and deep. By this time, almost all of the log and dirt roofs had been blown off by engineers as the mop-up continued The next day, we walked to 861 with the assaulting units which had been occupying 881S since its fall on May 1st, 1967. A/1/26 on 881S and C/1/26 on 861 then settled into a week's long program of occupying our hills and daily patrolling the terrain complex of hilltops, denying to the NVA the reoccupation of the hilltops and sweeping the area for fresh activity and still looking for residual material from the battles, especially for any trace of the missing.

C/1/26 began to clean up, then fortify Hill 861. The entire top was buried in loose soil the air campaign had blown over 20 feet of the crest, and that soil was strewn all over. The entire topographical crest was pocked with craters from big bombs. Some of those craters were big enough to hold a 2-story building.

As we dug in, monsoon rains began to wash away all the loose dirt; and NVA remains began to appear. Digging fighting holes often resulted in unearthing the bones of dead NVA and their gear. Our routine in the weeks following was to run a company minus patrol every day out to 881N. On a 3-platoon rotation, that meant two days out and one day in. These were day patrols; we returned to our hilltop each night. We walked the original axis of attack over and over for weeks. Every time we varied our route, we found new bunkers and more debris. Slowly, we were able to reconstruct the original fights, including the rally and chow points, medevac landing zones, and firing positions of crew-served weapons. We went over and around the 5 ridges that were perpendicular to our route. We even found at least two rusty M-16s that had been thrown away. One still had a cleaning rod in it. Over the weeks, it became apparent how well the NVA had prepared the battlefield and how merciless the Hill Fights had been. Had the NVA not been discovered prematurely, it would have taken untold men and casualties to take those hills.

POETRY

The Ground

They appeared out of no where,
they looked dirty, weathered and worn.
No one knew where they came from,
there clothes where stained and torn.
They walked slowly, deliberately and with purpose,
they stopped in front of a dirt mound.
There eyes looked hollow and sad,
not one of them made a sound.
One took a rifle and fixed the bayonet,
he stuck it on-top of that dirt mound.
Another put a helmet on the butt of that gun,
still another went down on one knee.
Strangers stopped what they were doing and watched, soon every one stopped everything so they could see.
The one on his knee put his head in his hand, some who were watching started to cry.
No one knew who they where, but everyone knew that was hallowed ground.
Suddenly I recognized them, it brought a tear to my eye.
You see I realized they were us, it's true we were them.

MY SIX MONTHS WITH THE BRUTE
A Memoir by Major Sam Moyer, USMC (Ret)

Submitted By Lt/Col Tony

This memory by Major Moyer was written into a response from someone who was going to write a book on General Krulak. The book has not been published but in view of the General's death, Major Moyer thought it appropriate to allow people to read about his memories now. The General's funeral was held at the MCAS Miramar Chapel. I believe the service was held there rather than the MCRD Chapel because of size. There was an overflow crowd.

Tony A

"Okay, Moyer. You can stop begging. I just got the word that Red Greene is done with his school boondoggle, and should be here in less than a month. You'll be free. Where do you want to go?"

It was the summer of 1960, and so ended my six months as then, M/Gen Victor H. (Brute) Krulak's driver at MCRD, San Diego.

I think the whole thing can be blamed on my special drill platoon. As an instructor at the Sea School, I had created and trained a special (silent) drill platoon from what was at that time an extremely large pool of school graduates who had no ship's detachment to go to. We had them on burial details at the national cemetery at Ft. Rosecrans (six or eight funerals a day), we had them on flag-raisings, we had them in parades – anything to keep them occupied and out of trouble.

So I came up with the grand idea of creating a "special drill platoon" from the sea pool. I floated the idea to the boss, he approved it, and then gave me a free hand in selecting and training. I chose only men who were at least six feet tall, eliminated those with two left feet or no sense of rhythm, and began training. We drilled about five hours a day. Five days a week. And eventually I had a platoon of tall, sharp, young, good-looking Marines in their dress blues who could – following a single command from me – perform nearly 20 minutes of silent drill including several different Queen Ann salutes, rifle tosses, separation into squares, marching "to the winds" and return, and so on.

This led eventually to no small amount of publicity, and performances not only for the Depot commander and his staff, but also at events throughout the greater San Diego area. Which meant, as the trainer and NCOIC, I also received a certain level of exposure.

So it was that around December of 1959, I was anticipating a summer return to infantry duty at Camp Pendleton after my four years at MCRD (two on the grinder, two at Sea School). My thoughts were interrupted when the OIC called me into his office and directed me to proceed post haste to the headquarters building, and to report to the chief of staff. Since I didn't know the chief of staff, and to the best of my knowledge he didn't know me, my first thought was "what have I done wrong lately?" (This was a common reaction for someone who had survived two years on the grinder during the mid-50s, following the drowning tragedy at Ribbon Creek. Drill instructors fell like flies during that period....)

After checking myself in the mirror, straightening my uniform, dusting my shoes, etc. (this was, after all, Sea School), I presented myself to the staff secretary. He looked me up and down, told me to take a seat. Within a few minutes a staff sergeant I didn't know emerged from the chief's office. The staff secretary told him he was free to return to his unit, and that someone would be in touch with him. Then he turned to me.

He said, "Do you know why you're here, sergeant?" I told him I didn't. He said, "A new commanding general will be arriving next month, and he needs a driver. His regular driver apparently has gone off to some school somewhere, and the general needs a temporary driver until the regular driver can get here. Probably some time this summer." Hmmm. Okay. I remained silent.

"The word was sent to commands on the base to nominate suitable candidates for the job. You, in particular, were identified as a volunteer. Apparently the chief of staff noticed you at some kind of drill performance." (Apparently also, the staff secretary had not seen the brilliant performance of my platoon.) "One of the general's absolute requirements is that his temp driver must have successfully completed a tour as a drill instructor, and it must have been recent. I understand that you completed your tour last year. Is that correct?" (Yes sir) "Were you subject to any disciplinary action while you were on the grinder?"

Hmmm. Like all drill instructors of that era, I'd been relieved for investigation of alleged maltreatment two or three times, but had always been exonerated, and was never charged. "No sir!"

He leaned toward his intercom, depressed a lever, and told the chief that Sergeant Moyer was there. Then told me to go in.

After my chat with the chief, I left his office. I didn't want the job, but of course I wasn't going to dog the interview, either, so I'd done the best I could. The staff secretary told me to return to my unit, and that someone would be in touch with me. I noticed another staff sergeant was waiting to go in.

I should have dogged it.

A few days later I was told to go back over to the headquarters building and report to the staff secretary. This couldn't be good news. By that time I'd learned that the name of the new commanding general was Krulak. I sensed, vaguely and uncomfortably, that my 0369 MOS couldn't possibly have prepared me for the next six months. The hills of Camp Pendleton began to take on a luster and attractiveness that I'd never assigned to them before.

There was no Internet, no worldwide web for me to go to. About the only thing I could learn about General Krulak was that he was an Academy graduate, had earned a Navy Cross in WWII as the commander of a parachute battalion, and that his nickname was "Brute." ("Brute?") What kind of Marine general is called Brute? More importantly.... Why is a Marine general called Brute?

No one felt it worthwhile to tell the Brute's new driver that the Brute was five feet, four inches tall, which may account for my gaping mouth the first day I was ushered into his office.

Although the chief of staff had made it clear that personal chemistry would also be a factor in this job, and therefore if General Krulak wasn't comfortable with me as his driver I could still be replaced, it seems that the Brute found me at least tolerable. He kept me.

In the process of creating his own "team," General Krulak also hired a new aide and brought in his own chief of staff (Colonel Merrill M. Day). The aide had been a series officer in one of the recruit battalions, and I believe that experience was also a credential that could not be waived. After interviews with likely candidates, he chose Captain Louis H. Buehl III. Captain Buehl and I were very close to the same age, and we were both feeling our way into a job we knew nothing about. Our relationship was occasionally prickly (which was not a good thing for me, but didn't seem to affect his career at all, since he eventually achieved the rank of lieutenant general).

And thus began one of the most interesting, most educational, and most exasperating six months of my Marine Corps career.

I had no one to teach me. No one to coach me. No one to advise me on protocol (who gets in the damn car first, who gets in last, who gets out first, what to do when the get-out-first person will be on the traffic side of the street instead of the curb-side when you arrive at your destination, what to do with ladies, do I shake hands first or salute first (or do I EVER shake hands?), do I also hold the door for the aide when he's going to ride in the front seat, or should I hustle to the driver's seat so I can take off as soon as the aide closes his door, etc.) Then there were the two-star plates on front and rear, and when to display them, when to remove them altogether and put them in the trunk, when to just cover them. When to wash the car (an every day chore, but always subject to interruption half-way through the job when the orderly came rushing down from the office telling me the general wants the car in front of the building in two minutes!).

Still. What interesting things I learned about the Marine Corps, and about the interactions between flag and general officers, and about the protocol they had to observe. The aide was constantly leafing through the Blue Book and its Navy counterpart, checking dates of rank. Which general officer would pick up his phone first? Which aide would tell the other aide, "General XXX is on the line – please inform General YYY." And with rear admirals having a lower half (one star equivalent) and upper half (two stars), constantly having to check their book to see who was what, and what military protocol dictated for that particular event.

General Krulak was an absolute hands-on guy. He wanted to know what was happening on his base at all hours of the day and night. It wasn't uncommon for him to tell me at the end of the day, "Moyer, pick me up at my quarters at 0500." (He usually spared the aide these early morning jaunts.) With three rug-rats under six years old in my house and only one car, that meant I'd have to get my family up at 0400, get the little ones all bundled up and moved to the car, and head for the base by 0415 or so. My wife would drop me off at the motor pool, I'd kiss everyone goodbye (not really – didn't want to wake up the kids, but did need to wake up my wife), go in, get the car, wipe it down inside, and get to the general's quarters by about ten 'til five.

He'd come bounding out (never saw anyone so constantly in motion, so full of energy, always, under all circumstances and all conditions), jump in the back seat, and say, "Let's start at the bakery!" And at 0500 the two of us would walk in the back door of the depot bakery. Most of the bakers didn't know what General Krulak looked like, and he usually wore a field jacket on these early morning jaunts, so I got to observe (and enjoy the hell out of) a wide variety of reactions when we strolled in.

The first guy to see us would invariably (and predictably) see this six foot tall Marine, and this five-foot-four Marine coming down the dim passageway from the back door, and snarl, "What the xxxx are you doing here? Who the hell are you? Get the hell out!" Just as the last phrase ended, we'd be close enough for him to see the two stars on the field jacket and the scrambled eggs on the cap visor. First, he'd do a double-take. Classic. Like he couldn't believe what he was seeing. Of course, he had no rank insignia on his white baker's clothes, so we didn't know what his rank was, but General Krulak would usually say something like, "Good morning, sergeant. Is the chief baker in this morning?" By now the baker is believing what he's seeing. He pops to attention and screams, "Attention on deck!" It's noisy in there, of course, and the other early-morning bakers are scattered throughout the bakery and don't hear him, so he screams it again. "ATTENTION ON DECK!!"

This usually got everyone's notice, but they weren't sure why they would be coming to attention at 0500 while they were in the midst of baking bread and rolls and pies and such for the entire depot, so they usually wandered over to where we were standing, mostly out of curiosity. The casual postures gave way immediately to rigid attention.

General Krulak usually observed all this silently, and before anyone could go into a complete state of shock he calmed them with a few friendly words, a casual attitude, told them to relax, and assured them that he didn't want anyone to change his morning routine. Before we walked out of there a half hour later, all the bakers were eating out of his hand, telling him what was good and what was bad about their jobs, what equipment needed replacing, what frustrations they had. (I was the note-taker.) Before leaving, the general and I and the chief baker would invariably sit down, tear apart a hot, steaming loaf of bread, slather pieces of it with butter, and drink a cup of coffee. It almost made the early-morning disruption in my young family's life worthwhile.

Then the general would jump up, thank everyone, promise them he'd look into their grievances (if there were any), and head for the door. I'd dart ahead of him so I could open the back door, and then run to the car so I could open the rear door. He'd look at me and say, "Let's go to the grinder. Stop by the flagpole. I want to watch the morning PT." So we'd do that.

He'd constantly ask me questions about life as a drill instructor, and life as a recruit. They were penetrating, important questions, not superficial. He asked about duty hours. I explained that for most of my tour I worked platoons with only two drill instructors (due almost entirely to the extreme attrition). And that one time (due to my junior drill instructor being relieved for investigation of maltreatment), I was the only DI with my platoon for five days. There simply were no spare drill instructors in the battalion, and I had to be with the platoon 24 hours a day for five days before they could get me someone. He asked about duty hours when there were only two DIs for a platoon. I explained that in such circumstances married drill instructors were actually with their families only about four waking hours out of every two days.

He asked how this could be so. So I explained. I go to work Monday morning after having the weekend off. I'm there by 0700. I work all day with the other DI following the training schedule. This is my duty day, so the other DI goes home about 1700, maybe 1730. I get them fed, do counseling and coaching and training, supervise their evening head call, hold final formation, get them bedded down. I return to the duty hut, shine my brass, shine my shoes, break out a clean uniform, get the ribbons and badges mounted, and get to bed by 2300. I'm up at 0430, get dressed, and am on the platoon street at 0500 shouting for the platoon to fall in. We march to the grinder where we do PT for 30 minutes. Return. Squad leaders report everyone present, I dismiss the platoon to shower, shave, use the head, return, make up their bunks, get dressed, and fall back in on the platoon street. March them to chow. Return from chow, do morning police and maintenance details. Inspect. By 0730 the training schedule resumes, the other DI is there, and we go through our day.

I go home at the end of the day, Tuesday. I arrive home by 1800. I'm tired, worn out, annoyed. I try to play with the kids while my wife fixes dinner and tries to talk with me about the kids or about her day or about her problems. I'm distracted. After dinner, I begin working again on my shoes and brass, and get two clean uniforms put together to take with me the next morning, which will be my duty day again. This is my non-duty day. By ten o'clock I'm ready for bed. I've actually "been with" my family for four hours. I've tried to be good to the kids and my wife, got my uniforms ready, and at 0630 the next morning I'm on my way to the base again. I won't see my family again until the following day, Thursday, about 1800, at which time I might spend four waking hours with them again before going to bed. Then back to the base again the next morning, Friday. This time I'll be there for three days – Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and won't get home until Monday at 1800. That's my off-duty day again, and again – I'll "be with" my family for four hours..

I don't believe General Krulak really understood the stress DIs were under until he asked me to explain that sequence. And then you add onto that, the intense competition to produce the best platoon in your four-platoon series – since your fitness reports are a direct reflection of the performance of your platoons – and one can see that there's a lot of potential for DI burnout and bad behavior.

But back to watching hundreds of recruits doing morning PT on the grinder with the Brute. It's completely dark out, of course, so no one can see the general and me standing beside his black staff car near the flagpole, which is centered on the huge macadam parade deck (grinder), off to one side. Again, he asks questions about life as a drill instructor. And about the life recruits lead. I answer as honestly as I can, trying to sidestep sensitive issues in order to avoid telling outright lies. (E.g., how DIs really feel about not being allowed to lay hands on a recruit, how they feel about profanity being proscribed, how they feel about being "spied on" by lieutenants and captains from what was euphemistically called the "Monitor Section" at the recruit training command.)

And after observing morning PT, once or twice he even told me to drive around closer to the recruit Quonset huts, where he wanted to get out and walk through the area, observing recruits running frantically to the heads and back to their huts. I thought this was a bad idea, and told him so. Only drill instructors in the recruit area walk – everyone else runs, pell-mell and recklessly. I was sure we would get knocked down by running recruits. And that would be a bad thing. I also told him I thought this would be too close to "spying" on drill instructors. The recruit areas were their sanctum. They felt protected. They felt secure. They "owned" the recruit areas. If a drill instructor wanted to stop a recruit and get nose-to-nose and scream at him, he should be able to do it without finding his commanding general standing in the dark ten feet away.

General Krulak pondered that for a few moments. In the end, he decided to make the walk anyway. I believe we did that twice. But after observing the complete pandemonium of early morning recruit routine, he decided not to go there any more. I felt a bullet had been dodged, and it was probably by one of the drill instructors whose area we had been in, and on whom good fortune had smiled those mornings.

In my driver duties I also spent a good deal of time at the general's quarters, which at MCRD San Diego were (to my eyes) quite magnificent. I got to know his cook, I got to know his steward, and best of all, I got to know Mrs. Krulak. A more gracious, personable and genuinely friendly woman would be hard to find. Everyone on the general's personal staff fell all over themselves trying to please her. She treated them (and me) like family. She was solicitous, caring, considerate and thoughtful. Compared to General Krulak's brisk, energetic and direct personality, Mrs. Krulak presented exactly the opposite side – relaxed, amiable, conversational.

Yet, General Krulak wasn't without his own considerate side, either. I recall a large parade we once had. Lots of local dignitaries and flag officers and their ladies. Following the parade, General and Mrs. Krulak were hosting a large reception and cocktail party at their quarters. It was late spring of 1960, and the weather was gorgeous. Officers wore their whites.

I was standing near the reviewing stand as the troops passed in review. One of the officers, a major leading a formation, unfortunately hit the bill of his white cap with his sword as he approached the reviewing stand and rendered the sword salute. In front of this large group of VIPs and their ladies, he knocked his cover completely off his head. It was stomped and kicked to and fro as hundreds of Marines continued to pass in review. Everyone felt bad for the major. There was no laughing, no joking, no glee.

Later, during the reception at the quarters, I found myself in the kitchen sampling all the goodies that were being enjoyed by the attendees. (No "fish-house punch" for me though, which was a special rum drink that was famous at Krulak parties.) While standing there talking to the cook and the steward and munching goodies, General Krulak appeared. He was carrying a very dirty, mauled white field grade officer's cap. He walked over to me.

He said, "Moyer, Major XXXXXXX didn't come to the reception, even though he and his wife were invited. I'm sure he's embarrassed. Please find out where he lives, and deliver these to him. Right away." He handed me the cap, and a small envelope with the major's name on it.

I learned where the major lived (a civilian community about 30 minutes from the base). When I arrived about 45 minutes later, I parked in front of the house. Got out, walked to the front door, rang the bell. A woman opened the door. Saw me. Saw the hat. Turned away, called to her husband. This tall, thin major came to the door, a drink in his hand, looking like someone had beat him with a stick. It was clear that this wasn't his first drink since getting home from his disaster. He was still in his whites, although they were unbuttoned and his tee shirt was visible. He looked miserable.

He opened the screen door. Said, "Yes, sergeant?" I handed him his hat. He looked at it, and its condition, and I'm sure I could see him re-living the entire incident. He finally reached out and took the hat. I said, "With General Krulak's compliments, sir." He thanked me. I then handed him the envelope. I said, "Also with General Krulak's compliments, sir."

I think he might have thought it was a reprimand for blowing off the reception, because he was reluctant to open it. I hadn't received any instructions for what I should do after I delivered the note, so I told the major that I'd wait to see if there would be a reply.

He nodded. Slowly, reluctantly, he lifted the flap and removed the note. As he did so, I saw relief flood his face. Tension literally drained out of him. He looked at me. He said, "Sergeant, have you seen this note?" I said, "No sir." He handed it to me. It was two sentences, and I remember exactly what it said.

"Dear Major XXXXX:
In 1934 a young Marine second lieutenant knocked off his cap when passing in review in front of President Roosevelt. I don't think it seriously affected my career.
Semper Fidelis,
VHK"

I thanked the major for sharing the note with me. As I walked back to the car, I could hear him excitedly telling his wife to come read the note. He was transformed. He was a happy man. And it showed me a side of my boss that I'd not seen. This is not to say he was cruel or harsh with people. While he didn't suffer fools gladly, and I observed a few fools learn that the hard way, I'd still describe him as energetic, quick and direct. And also curious. I believe his intense curiosity may have been his most important character trait. He asked questions endlessly. He wanted to know every detail about everybody's job. He wanted to know how this piece of machinery worked, why we couldn't use this cheaper item instead of that more expensive item. When he ran across officers-in-charge of a section or of a unit, and asked functional questions about that unit's operations, woe be unto the OIC who didn't know the details of what his men were doing.

One of his favorite stories – well, at least one I heard him tell more than once or twice – was about his height. If the subject of his height came up, he was known to tell the story about taking his physical for entry into the Naval Academy. The minimum height was five feet, four inches. He always told the story with humor so his listeners were never uncomfortable. It seems the corpsman or nurse or doctor – whoever was measuring his height – simply couldn't quite stretch it to the five feet, four inch mark. When he asked the person how much he was missing, this person replied that it was a quarter of an inch. So then-candidate Krulak arranged to return at a specific time the next day to be measured again.

Just before going in for that measurement (as he told the story), he identified the exact spot on the top of his head where the measuring stick touched, smacked himself on that exact spot with a baseball bat – nearly knocking himself unconscious – waited for the knot on his head to form, then marched to the dispensary to complete his physical qualification for entry into the United States Naval Academy.

General Krulak and I were in the car together often – which is to say, without the aide – and as spring turned toward summer, I took those opportunities to continue to implore the general to let me return to the infantry, where I belonged. I couldn't raise the subject when Captain Buehl was in the car, because the one time I did it when he was there, he snapped me off and told me not to bring it up again. At any rate, it was not uncommon for General Krulak and I to chat if it was just we two in the car, and he knew how badly I wanted to return to what I considered a more "normal" Marine Corps life.

One day around May or June I was taking him to a golf course. It may have been a Saturday. And that's when he said, half-jokingly, "Okay, Moyer. I'm tired of hearing your complaints. I just got the word that Red Greene (a tech sergeant, his long-time driver) is done with his school boondoggle, and should be here in less than a month. Where do you want to go?"

I was a happy boy. I had always assumed that when he was done with me, he'd just send me up the road to 1stMarDiv. Cheaper, less trouble, all that. So I wondered if he really meant it when he asked me where I wanted to go. I said, "Well, that's good news, sir. Do you mean it? Do you really mean, 'where do I want to go'?" He said, yes – where do you want to go?

Well, hell. I knew I had to get back to the FMF, but did he really, really mean it? Seemed like it. So I decided to take a flyer. I said, "Well, general – I'd like to go to the Brigade in Hawaii."

Long pause. Then I heard him chuckle from the back seat. I figured I had over-reached, and that I would soon be at Camp Joseph H. Then he said, "Yeah. I bet you would." And he chuckled again.

I dropped him off at the golf course. He told me Mrs. Krulak would pick him up, and that I could secure for the day.

The following Monday morning I was sitting next to the aide when General Krulak's voice came over the intercom. "Lou? Get me Gus Larson on the phone." I knew General Larson was the head of personnel at HQMC – I suppose at the time he was still called the AC/S, G-1 – but didn't think anything further about it. After a few conversations I watched the aide depress his lever and tell General Krulak that General Larsen was on the phone.

Ten minute's later the intercom sounded off again, and General Krulak told the aide to send me in. I went in, centered myself in front of his desk, said, "Yes sir?" He said, "I just got off the phone with General Larson. You'll be getting orders to the 1st Marine Brigade in Hawaii. Plan on leaving next month."

And that was that. A couple of months later I was a rifle platoon sergeant in A/1/4, my life was back to normal, and I was running up and down hills, making amphibious landings, and remembering how to be a grunt again.

The things I learned while driving for Brute Krulak aren't things you can write down. They aren't things you learn from a book. They're things you absorb. By watching. By listening. By observing. By seeing the reactions of others. By overhearing the comments of others. These small, disparate pieces all fuse into a whole body of learning. I'm a much better man for my experience as General Krulak's driver. I believe I became a much better Marine as a result of spending six months with him. He never set out to "teach" me anything. He never "counseled" me, he never mentored me. I was just his young temporary driver, not particularly happy doing it, yet my exposure to him changed me for the better in nearly all aspects of my life, both personal and professional.

And I suspect that – I'm not the only one whose life or career gained significant traction as a result of spending time with "The Brute."

THE CORPS TAKES CARE OF ITS OWN(AND AT TIMES DESERVING OTHERS) GREAT POP-POP GETS HIS MEDAL

([a true story dedicated to my great wife)

In 1986, one week after the birth of our first born child, a special ceremony took place on the grounds of the Marine Corps Base at Quantico, Virginia. This was a unique ceremony, but not un-similar to others, I'm sure, that have occurred before -- and since. This particular ceremony the Marine Corps conducted was in honor of an enlisted U.S. Army soldier who had performed honorable service to his country during World War I. Now this individual wasn't a great war hero of any sorts in the military sense. He saw combat and did his duty to the best of his ability. He bravely fought America's fight, before returning home to become a chemist with the DuPont Company for the majority of his life. He was just one of many citizen soldiers who answered his country's call to arms in "The war to end all wars" -- The Great War.

Now a little more background on this is probably in order. During 1986 I was completing a tour as an instructor at the Marine Corps' Amphibious Warfare School at Quantico. I had been married a year and we had just welcomed the arrival of our first child. My wife's grandfather, Albert D. Reidinger, had served in the U.S. Army as a private during World War I. He had fought with the 78th Division (The Fighting Demons) as part of the American Expeditionary Force (AEF). He saw action at St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne, and the Defensive Sector. 'Great Pop-Pop', as he was called within the family, did not return to the states with his unit when the war ended. A Princeton man, he was given an opportunity to stay behind for a few months to take some academic courses at a prominent university in Paris.

[Fast forward to 1985....]

One weekend, while visiting Great Pop-Pop at his home in Wilmington, Delaware, I was helping sort through some of his belongings. Great Pop-Pop, a widow, and now 89, was beginning to get a little forgetful. It was time to move him into a place where he could get better attention and care. My duty assignment that weekend was to take care of the attic. There were a lot of old newspapers lying around that I began gathering and stuffing into plastic trash bags. After working intently for several minutes I was about to throw another piece of paper into the bag. But there was something about it that caught my attention. I stopped and unfolded it. It was a military map of the Argonne dated 1918 with a penciled FEBA (forward edge battle area) line annotated, along with observation points and other position information. The 68-year old map looked practically new despite the fact it had been laying exposed to the elements in a humid attic for at least 58 years. Also, among the clutter in the attic, was Great Pop-Pop's World War I 'Dough Boy' helmet, and a German bayonet he had secured as a souvenir -- items which remain two of my most prized possessions today.

Coming down from the attic, I began quizzing Great Pop-Pop on his military service. Fortunately, Great Pop-Pop's long-term memory was still good. In fact, it was great. He recalled in great detail events of a war long ago. (Combat seems to leave an indelible imprint in the minds of those who have experienced it.) Great Pop-Pop showed me his dog tags and some medals the state of New Jersey and his hometown of Morris Plains had conferred on him when he did eventually return from France. When asked where his U.S. World War I Victory Medal was, he stated that he had never received one. Since he did not come back with his division, I guess the processing of his medal fell through the proverbial crack.

A few day after returning home from the Delaware visit, I set to work contacting the U.S. Army about getting Great Pop-Pop his medal. Within about three weeks, the medal arrived. We were close to the delivery date of our child and knew that a Christening would take place the first Sunday in April. Great Pop-Pop would be coming down for that. And that, I thought, would be a good time to give him his medal! But in thinking it over, it came to mind that perhaps a little more pomp and circumstance would be in order. After all, a veteran of World War I who has waited more than 67 years for it should be entitled to have someone certainly more distinguished than myself present it!

Now during the course of my instructor tour at Quantico, the Commanding General, Lieutenant General David Twomey, had taken an interest in my dating habits. He was noted for that, according to friends of mine who had previously served under any number of his various commands. In the course of wooing my future wife, I'd take her to the numerous receptions, presentations, and other social get-togethers that come with the territory. Considering the numerous events we attended, it was only a matter of time before the general got to know Madeline well. And before too long, my boss, Colonel J.J. Carroll, would call me into his office periodically and tell me the general had told him to tell me to "...not let that girl get away!" Of course, being the dutiful officer I was, I soon complied.

Now those particular sojourns into Colonel Carroll's office (relative to the general's interest) were in stark contrast to the usual ass-chewings I'd normally get when invited "to see the colonel." Those "bonding sessions" Colonel Carroll and I had were special, to say the least -- especially the one I got the day they raised the garrison flag UPSIDE DOWN at the headquarters building, when I was the command duty officer (CDO). (Fortunately, General Twomey was out of town that day.) Calling colors in the morning was one of the CDO's tasks. But that's another story...

One morning, during early-March, I got the courage up to visit Lt/Gen Twomey's office. I asked if I might have a moment of the general's time. My request was granted. But to my chagrin, most of the staff's senior colonels were in the general's office when I entered. The general asked me what I wanted. I explained the story about my wife's grandfather and asked if the general might be so kind as to let us bring Great Pop-Pop into his office so that he could be presented with his medal by a real live Marine Corps general.

"No, Major!" the general replied abruptly.

Snapping quickly to attention I replied: "Aye, aye sir. Thank you for your time." I was about to turn and exit the general's office when he cleared his voice and said "No Major, we'll have a parade!" Stunned, I looked at the colonels in the office and could see them looking at each other with raised eyebrows.

[Another note in order here... It might be interesting to note, at this point, that the Chief of Staff who reamed my you-know-what out the day of the flag raising incident, was among those colonels present. I could tell he was trying to figure out where he knew me from. Perhaps, I thought, I wasn't the only Marine major aviator-type who had been perceived to have "screwed up" as CDO. Needless to say I avoided all eye contact with him. But back to the general's office scene....]

"Oh no," I thought to myself, "what can of worms have I opened here?"

"Sir," I stammered with some hesitation, "that REALLY isn't necessary. A simple office..."

Sternly, the general cut me off and replied: "Major, we'll have a parade. That is all. You are dismissed."

"Aye aye sir" I answered, and then departed. (Let it be said, let it be done!) The general and his staff went back to working on whatever it was they were doing when I originally entered his office.

So, on one fine, beautiful cool Spring Friday morning at Quantico Marine Corps Base (not far from the Chapel where my wife and I had our wedding ceremony), immediately following the posting of the colors, a special ceremony took place in front of the Commanding General's headquarters building. A compliment of two companies of Marines, staff, guests, curious onlookers, and the Quantico Marine Corps Band assembled by the flag pole to pay tribute. (I should probably add that the colors did go up correctly that morning. Well done CDO!)

A white haired, dapper, gentleman (in every sense of the word), Albert D. Reidinger, Private, U.S.

Army, emerged from the crowd (when summoned) to be recognized by the United States Marine Corps for service and dedication to country -- albeit 68 years after the fact. A citation, written by the staff, was read and presented. General Twomey pinned on Great Pop-Pop's medal adding that this was a special honor for him to bestow, particularly since his own father was also a recipient of the victory medal for services set forth in "The Great War". Private Reidinger, to his family's delighted surprise, then popped the general a sharp salute which General Twomey, matter-of-factly, returned. Following the presentation, General Twomey directed Private Reidinger to 'bout face before stepping into position next to him. A special serenade of World War I songs, performed by the band, followed. At the conclusion of "Over There" the band transitioned into a rendition of "Happy Birthday," in honor of Albert Dudley Reidinger's 90th birthday -- that same 30th day of March 1986. It was a great morning to be an American!

Now I really felt bad about the imposition being laid on the Headquarters staff and its Marines that day -- having to participate in the extended morning formation-standing activity. But I must have been the only one that felt that way! After the ceremony concluded, the Marines didn't leave. One by one, a significant number of them formed a line in order to file by and shake Private Reidinger's hand. And this wasn't orchestrated in advance! They did it because they wanted to. Now you'd think it couldn't get any better than that -- but it did! Not only did the young Marines file by to shake his hands; several took the time to say wonderful things to Private Reidinger. I was suitably impressed. Where were we getting such Marines I asked myself? (Our recruiters were obviously doing one heck of a job!) There were no dry eyes among the Reidinger clan that day. Nor, might I add, a certain Marine major named Johnson. Both twin sons of Albert Reidinger (one a World War II Marine Corps lieutenant; the other a World War II naval officer) witnessed the event with great pride, passion, and pleasure. Additionally, one brand new week-old great grandson, a little confused about the whole procession, also looked on. [I might add here that that great grandson is now an Army lieutenant currently attending Army Ranger School.]

Following the ceremony, we hosted a reception in our home to any and all interested. Great Pop-Pop, as I mentioned, was becoming a little forgetful. But the gravity of the ceremony he had just participated in was still with him. He knew this was a special day, not just because it was his birthday. My close friend, Curt Rastetter, was stationed at Quantico at that time and also attended the ceremony. A World War I buff, Curt asked if he might have some time later in the day for an interview with the grand old man. Prior to Curt and I going down into the basement to tape the interview, Great Pop-Pop and I were sitting in our living room talking. At the time, I was holding my new born son -- his third great grandchild. The conversation was going nicely when he paused and noted: "You seem like a nice young lad, do you live around here?" Well, that kind of caught me by surprise. But I smiled and told him, yes, I did live nearby. I began wondering if the interview Curt would be having would be fruitful. Amazingly, Great Pop-Pop's long term memory was still fine (at that point). We heard some interesting stories and enjoyed talking "to history."

Prologue...

Albert Reidinger would live close to another four years, dying peacefully, and with typical grace, at age 93. At his memorial service on a rainy, but chilly, July morning in Wilmington, three fragile, stooped World War I veterans appeared. Their arrival was quite conspicuous. Proudly sporting their blue VFW caps, which denoted World War I service, they arrived together in the biggest, darkest, non-black sedan I had seen in quite awhile. These gentlemen arrived with no assistance, although they probably could have used some. Instead, they roared up in that big sedan. The coke bottle-bespectacled driver was barely able to peer over the steering wheel. Parallel parking that monster-of-a-car into the premium space they had staked out was a sight to behold. Missing the fore and aft parked cars, which bracketed their space, by mere nano-inches, the lurching vehicle finally came to a rest -- perfectly centered I might add! Helping each other out of the car like the Three Musketeers they were, it was clear these men had developed friendships many years earlier. Each seemed to know the other's limits, capabilities, and challenges. As we looked on in awe, the gents hustled themselves past us and into the warmth of the church. After the service was over, the Three Musketeers paid their respects to the Reidinger family, climbed back into their sedan and then roared off in reckless abandon! Where were they going? We didn't know. But it was a departure to behold -- a hell-bent-for-leather departure that left us gasping, not only in fear for their safety, but also in just plain amazement. They seemed in a hurry. But maybe, when you're their age, you look at time as premium and make the most of every minute. But maybe they were just horrible drivers!

I think most of us there that day, who observed these men, realized that they were ultimately on a rendezvous with a destiny that has since surely claimed their souls. Indeed a sight to behold, these gents knew who they were, what they had done and, presumably, where they were going. They came to wish one of their brothers off to the Promised Land. These gentlemen; the ones that came before them; as well as all the others who continue to follow, will always represent America to me. God bless them all!

Our family will forever remember, with great pride, the special event that took place on that great Spring day during March of 1986. The Marine Corps looks after its own, but it seems there is always plenty of room for them to look after others also. But that's really one of its missions if you think about it. Just one more essence of a Corps that serves this nation splendidly.

Well that's my story and I'm sticking to it! Was fun to recant again. Think that will do it for another evening. Thanks for indulging me.

THE COP & THE MARINE

Last days for a Marine were truly Finest hours.
P.O. And P.B.A. Delegate Susan Porcello
Is: a real Heroine.

By Denis Hamill, The New York Daily News,
Tuesday, December 9th, 2008

NYPD officer Susan Porcello's big heart gave elderly Marine Gaspar Musso friends and care in his final days. Sometimes when old Marines die they do fade away into unmarked graves in Potter's Field.

Such might have been the case for Gaspar Musso, USMC 25050, who fought in the Battle of Tinian in the Marianas Islands in 1944, and who died Nov. 15, at age 84 in a Brooklyn nursing home.

Enter Police Officer Susan Porcello, a PBA delegate at the 68th Precinct in Bay Ridge, and one of those big-hearted New Yorkers who still make this the best city on Earth.

"No way was I going to let this brave old Marine who fought for his country in WWII get buried in Potter's Field," she says. Porcello first met Musso back in July when she responded to a 911 ambulance call to the retired insurance broker's one-bedroom apartment on, appropriately, Marine Ave.

"When my partner, Eddie Ennis, and I arrived at his apartment Gaspar seemed a little bit down about himself," Porcello says. "He said he felt alone in the world. We talked to him a bit and as I looked around his tidy apartment I noticed that he had served in the military - the Marines to be exact."
Porcello asked him about family and friends. "Look around you, what do you see?" Musso said. "I have no family or friends."To which Porcello said, "Well, I'm your friend. "Right there, with those four beautiful words, Gaspar Musso was destined to die with the dignity he'd earned with a rifle in his hands, fighting in a USMC uniform, in a war that saved civilization.

If she didn't already wear a badge, you'd want to pin a star on Susan Porcello. Musso, a diabetic with a host of other age-related maladies, had accidentally overdosed on his prescription medications. Porcello accompanied him to Lutheran Medical Center."I told him I'd be back to visit him and take him to a senior center where he could make some friends," said Porcello, who comes from a big Italian family with a mom, dad, three sisters and a brother."I told him I was making him my 'Grandpa,' and if he liked, he could spend Thanksgiving with my family.

Eddie and I discussed alternating holidays with Gaspar so he wouldn't be alone for any of them."Two days later Musso was placed in critical care. Porcello asked hospital staff where he'd be buried if he didn't make it. "Potter's Field," said one administrator."This infuriated me," said Porcello. "There was no way I was going to let a man who fought for our country be buried in Potter's Field. Not on my watch.

Porcello told the hospital to keep her apprised of Musso's condition.

she had a local priest visit him. Porcello even asked NYPD's Missing Person's Squad to search for next of kin. No luck. Musso had been an only child to Anthony and Marie Musso, both deceased. He had no other relatives. Musso's only friend, an upstairs neighbor, had died the year before.

After his health improved, Musso asked Porcello to become his official health proxy. She transferred him to Caton Park Nursing Home, where he was treated extremely well. She visited him often, learning that Musso was born May 7,1924, joined the USMC in December 1943, finished training at Camp Lejune in March 1944, and was fighting with the 2nd Marines on Tinian Island by July1944. "I visited Gaspar on Nov. 13, bringing him rosary beads, a Bible, and his reading glasses," she said.

The next day, Nov. 14, I returned and found Gaspar sitting up in a chair, dressed in his own clothes, looking great. "Porcello washed his hands and face, trimmed his nails and eyebrows and asked if he was coming to her house for Thanksgiving. "I'm trying!" he said. He also asked Porcello to bring him a Christmas wreath for his room.

The next morning Porcello received a phone call saying that Gaspar Musso had died peacefully in his sleep. No way was she going to let her good friend be toe-tagged and buried in Potter's Field. Porcello paid out of her own pocket for a wake at McLaughlin's on Third Ave. and a mass at St. Patrick's Church in Bay Ridge, where a crowd of good-hearted cops from the 68th Precinct filled the pews, six serving as pallbearers.

Sgt. Angel Rosa of the 68th, also a Marine, arranged for a USMC honor guard at Musso's funeral. Then taps blew over Gaspar Musso, United States Marine, as he was buried next to his mother at Resurrection Cemetery in Staten Island. With the dignity he deserved.

ED NOTE: I served as a Police Officer in the Chicago PD retiring as a Sergeant in 2003, after 35 years of service. I thought after all the negative police stories our liberal press seems to enjoy printing, one of the thousands of good stories that happen every day, throughout the country about Police Officers, would be a nice change.

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER CHANGE

By Chaplain Ron Rayner

Change was a big word in the November election. It has been my prayer that the 40th reunion helped to change and improve the lives of the reunion attendees and everyone that has been touched by the reunion's messages.

My article in Issue 71 of Red Clay talked about the possibility of combat participants and emergency responders having Post-Traumatic- Stress-Disorder. The symptoms could include: guilt over surviving where others did not; anxiety or nervousness; trouble sleeping; trouble concentrating; the need to calm down by using drugs or alcohol; and trouble getting close to other people. Not everyone has to get PTSD from a traumatic incident or incidents, but if you believe that you have to accept a less than abundant life because of your past experiences please consider this:

"If you don't change your beliefs, your life will be like this forever. Is that good news?"
Douglas Adams

"The first step toward change is acceptance. Once you accept yourself, you open the door to change. That's all you have to do. Change is not something you do, its' something you allow." Will Garcia

If you are living the perfect life that you always wanted, that is great. If you have self-destructive thoughts and can't seem to communicate well with family and friends, you may want to think about making things better.

Dennis Puleo, as noted in Tom Eichler's reunion article on page 63 of the last issue of Red Clay, relayed a great message to the attendees of the memorial service. Dennis volunteers his time to motivate and inspire men through the Man In The Mirror organization. Man In The Mirror www.maninthemirror.org) is a nonprofit corporation helping men find purpose in life.

"You yourselves are our letter, written on our hearts, known and read by everybody. You show that you are a letter from Christ, the result of our ministry, written not with ink but with the Spirit of the living God, not on tablets of stone but on tablets of human hearts."
II Corinthians 3:2-3 (NIV)

Dennis was a letter from Christ to THE KHE SANH VETERANS.

I am a non-denominational Christian chaplain. I believe Jesus has helped improve my life and leads me day by day to the answers I seek. Life is not perfect, but I am given strength to handle problems and enjoy life more. To improve your life you have to get out there and look.

"Ask and it will be given to you; seek and you will find; knock and the door will be opened to you. For everyone who asks receives; he who seeks finds; and to him who knocks, the door will be opened. Matthew 7:7-8 New International Version

For veterans, your county Veteran Services is a very good place to start finding secular help. Churches, synagogues, temples, mosques, medicine men, shamen, priests, and rabbis can help you according to your spiritual beliefs. My personal savior is Jesus Christ but I have performed funeral services for non -believers and a Jewish veteran. There is power in spiritual belief.

I visited Man In The Mirror headquarters in Orlando, Florida while visiting Disney World with my grandchildren. I recommend the following books that are distributed by Man In The Mirror.

The Treasure Principal by Randy Alcorn. This book suggests ways to profit from contributing your time and money to good causes.

Wild at Heart-Discovering the Secret of a Man's Soul by John Eldredge. Eldredge makes a very good scriptural case to explain the reasons men are the way they are. You don't have to be a wimp to be a Christian.

The Young Man in the Mirror by Patrick Morley.This book will help young men and their fathers (mentors) navigate the rite of passage into manhood.

The Dad in the Mirror by Patrick Morley & David Delk-Christian and moral responsibilities of the father.

Devotions For Couples by Patrick Morley. Opening up good communications for couples. Marriage rejuvenation.

Most people are looking to improve their life in some manner and these books from Man In The Mirror may have some of the answers you are looking for. All but The Young Man in the Mirror can be obtained through the Books for about a dollar program at www.maninthemirror.org. You can receive 48 books of the same title for $55 plus shipping.

"In human life there is a constant change of fortune; and it is unreasonable to expect an exemption from this common fate." Plutarch

For those of us that have been affected negatively by our life experiences, we have to search for a positive direction daily to enjoy the abundant life that our predecessors and friends died for.

"The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Jesus John 10:10 (KJV)
Jesus Christ also died that we might have an abundant life.

VET CENTER PTSD THERAPY GROUP

By Chaplain Ron Rayner

I attend a VA sponsored PTSD therapy group that is run by a Detroit, Michigan Vet Center therapist. The group is the most helpful portion of the treatment I receive from the VA, as I fellowship and can communicate with men that have had like experiences and similar problems.

Members of my therapy group are associated with various charitable organizations. The following quotes point out what we in the therapy group have found to be true.

"The generous prosper and are satisfied; those who refresh others will themselves be refreshed."
Proverbs 11:25 New Living Translation

"It is one of the most beautiful compensations in life … we can never help another without helping ourselves." Ralph Waldo Emerson

"Those who bring sunshine to the lives of others cannot keep it from themselves."
Sir James Barrie

A perfect example of this was members of the group helping out at a warming shelter for the homeless in Pontiac, Michigan. Group members worked in the kitchen, checked people in, and handed out blankets at the center. It was a very uplifting experience for a group of men who have PTSD problems with self-esteem and depression. It was very nice to help someone who needed it and hang out with friends who we're comfortable with.

Some of the group is also involved handing out food baskets and presents between Thanksgiving and Christmas and other charitable projects over the year. The bottom line here is avoiding isolation and having a feeling of purpose in your life.

"Share each other's troubles and problems and in this way you obey the law of Christ." Galatians 6:2 New Living Translation

KSV IN THE NEWS
Colonel Bruce Meyers
by Mike Fishbaugh

The U.S. military is most commonly associated with strict training and life-or-death combat. But for retired Marine Col. Bruce F. Meyers, the hallmark of his long and distinguished military career was the extensive education he received, preparing him for life in and out of service.

After 28 years in the Marines, Meyers retired from the service with a bachelor's degree and a law degree. He used his education to help innovate the Marines and his work ; as he put it, "save lives."

"The GI Bill is one of the best things that could have happened to give the opportunity of education to all these people who had busted their tails on behalf of the U.S.," Meyers said. "We had people who would have never had the opportunity to go to college had they never had the GI Bill."

He served briefly in the Pacific near the end of World War II and then in Korea as a leader for Korean line crossers and then as a rifle company commander. But it wasn't until after the Korean War that he would leave his lasting mark on the Marines.

On June 18, 1957, Meyers took command of the Marines first force reconnaissance team, the 1st Amphibious Reconnaissance Co. His team was tasked with delving deep into enemy territory to gather intelligence and positioning on the enemy for America's front-line troops. It was the first American military outfit of its kind.

"We were young, educated. We were the cream of the crop," Meyers said. "We wanted to be with an elite unit, and we were elite. The rest of the Marines got upset when we said we were the best of the best."

The unit still exists, under the name Marines Special Operations Command. Meyers did most of his deep reconnaissance work during the Vietnam War, where he took part in the Battle of Khe Sanh, one of the major offenses staged by the North Vietnamese during the war. Meyers spent 68 days under the jungle canopy nearby and commanded more than 6,000 troops during the engagement.

Marines defending Khe Sanh base were supported by an Air Force aerial strike, and Meyers' company was tasked with retrieving remains that may be used as intelligence from bombed out targets, putting themselves at risk to the bombings.

Other times, threats came from the jungle itself. While camping in enemy territory, half the unit slept while the other half stood guard, often for threat of tigers, who were known to snag sleeping soldiers and drag them into the jungle. Of course, there was also the People's Army of Vietnam to worry about.

"There were plenty of times when I thought I wouldn't have a wake up," Meyers said. "After awhile you figure, 'Well, they haven't gotten me yet,' but it's always in the back of your mind that you're going to get zapped one of these days doing the crazy things you're doing."

Back home, Meyers had a wife and three children. Jo Meyers, who met her husband, now of 61 years, on a blind date at the University of Washington, said she did her best to make the time pass while he was overseas in combat situations. She also had help from fellow military families experiencing the same situation.

"A military community is a very close community," she said. "We look after each other, so we don't dwell on stuff like that."

After retiring from the military in 1970, Meyers became an attorney and practiced law for the next 30 years. Being born in Seattle and raised in Bellevue, the Seattle area has always been Meyers' home when he hasn't been commissioned elsewhere for military service.

He said he is most proud of the innovations he brought to the Marines, which included a new type of jungle boot for use in Vietnam, a new way of ascending troops for reconnaissance from a submerged submarine, and parachuting the reconnaissance unit in, rather than using rubber boats, leading to the first force reconnaissance unit. "We were trying to do the best job we could to develop the tactics and techniques to save major unit lives," Meyers said.

In 2003, Meyers released his first book, "Fortune Favors the Brave," which details the beginnings of deep reconnaissance in the Marines. His second book, "Swift, Silent and Deadly: Marine Amphibious Reconnaissance in the Pacific, 1942-1945," came out a year later. He said he wrote the books so the lessons learned in those early years of reconnaissance would not be lost on current and future generations.

Even with all of his accomplishments, Meyers keeps his military memorabilia tucked away in the office, save for an officer's saber with an ivory hilt kept hanging over the living room fireplace.
"My wife won't let me have any of the 'I love me' stuff here," he said.

Still, he maintains much of the modesty himself, acknowledging his work as simply the result of 28 years of service in the U.S. military.

Lt Gen Victor H. Krulak

Rising barely 5 feet, 5 inches, Gen. Krulak was jokingly nicknamed "Brute" by his academy classmates. The moniker stuck, reinforced by his direct, no-nonsense style. And, as Time magazine later said, "There was nothing undersized about his brain."

Gen Robert H. Barrow

A true leatherneck legend, knew where he wanted to take the Corps as Commandant, and he moved quickly to increase readiness in all areas.

CORPORAL
THOMAS C. WHEELER
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

for service as set forth in the following

CITATION:

For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action against the enemy while serving as a Squad Leader with Company M, Third Battalion, Third Marines, Third Marine Division in connection with combat operations against the enemy in the Republic of Vietnam on 30 April 1967. Corporal Wheeler s company (-) was advancing to secure Hill 881 South in the first Battle of Khe Sanh when a numerically superior enemy force attacked and inflicted heavy casualties on his platoon. The Platoon Leader was killed and in the chaos of battle, Corporal Wheeler assumed command and rallied the remaining platoon members. He sustained a severe wound and was medevaced to a bomb crater for treatment and concealment. After refusing medical aid, Corporal Wheeler concluded that the wounded Marines in the crater were becoming a primary enemy target. Unable to walk, he crawled from the crater to a forward attack position, where he single-handedly killed six or more enemy soldiers and halted numerous enemy attacks against his wounded comrades. In the ensuing battle, Corporal Wheeler killed 15 to 20 more enemy personnel and ensured the safety of the Marines and Corpsmen in the crater. Repeatedly exposing himself to enemy fire, he relentlessly attacked the enemy from multiple sites, thus confusing them as to his position and the diminished capability of his platoon. Although the pain from his wound was intense, and despite substantial blood loss, Corporal Wheeler again refused medical aid. Seeing the ferocity with which he fought inspired his platoon to rally and repulse multiple attacks until the enemy force was defeated. By his steadfast resolve, courageous fighting spirit, aggressive and confident leadership, and unwavering dedication to duty, Corporal Wheeler reflected great credit upon himself and upheld the highest traditions of the Marine Corps and the United States Naval Service.

FROM THE PRESIDENT

Please complete your reunion registration form and get it sent to Russ Turner ASAP. We have two trips planned and need to provide the tour company with an estimate of attending members who signed up for the tours. If you are not sure if you can attend the reunion, book your rooms and send in your reservations, you can always cancel.

I also printed the forms for applying for funds from the newly established KSV Scholarship fund. The chairman Dan Fisher, and his committee, did a superb job of putting it together in a very short period of time. We had three applicants apply, and all were accepted, see Pages 44 & 45.Through the generosity of the membership we hope to quickly expand the amount of funds now available from the scholarship fund.

We will also hold an election for openings on the KSV BOD. Those wishing to run for any of the following positions: President, Vice President, Secretary, and five Members at Large positions, let me know prior to the reunion. I want to also thank the membership, especially those Life members who so generously contributed to the RED CLAY magazine.

FROM THE VICE PRESIDENT

I want to again thank the membership for their outstanding support of the KSV PX. It has enabled us to purchase many new items and greatly expand the inventory. It looks like we are going to have another great reunion in Denver and I am looking forword to seeing a lot of new faces as well. Denver is a beautiful City with majestic scenery. We have two great trips planned and hope the membership takes advantage of them.

FROM THE DESK OF THE SECRETARY

Just a reminder that we are always in need of items for the silent auction. If you cannot attend the reunion and still wish to donate, mail your donated items directly to me.

OBIT

William J. O'Connor, 68, of Dartmouth, died Friday, January 30, 2009 after a courageous battle with cancer. He is survived by his loving wife of 43 years, Marcella (Pease) O'Connor, his sons Kevin J. O'Connor of Kissimmee, FL, and Matthew J. O'Connor of New Bedford; his sisters, Joan Reicherter and her husband Charles of Tinton Falls, NJ, and Dorothy Mullen and her husband Edward of Wading River, NY; along with many nieces and nephews.

Born in the Bronx, NY, the son of the late Joseph V. and Katherine (Walpole) O'Connor, he graduated from St. John's University with a Bachelor of Business Administration degree. He also pursued graduate studies at George Washington University.

Mr. O'Connor worked for many years in the metallurgical industry. He and his family moved to Dartmouth in 1982 while he was employed at Teledyne Rodney Metals. For the past 10 years prior to his retirement in 2007, he was employed as a loan officer at Compass Bank and Sovereign Bank, and also a senior loan officer at First Horizon Home Loans.

William joined the U.S. Marine Corps in 1961 as a 2nd Lieutenant, serving in Vietnam as an Aerial Observer with the 12th Marines in Northern I Corps, and as the Commanding Officer of Charlie Battery, 1st Battalion 13th Marines during the historic siege of Khe Sanh. He left active duty in 1969 and was honorably discharged as a U.S. Marine Corps Major.

He received many military commendations for his distinguished service, including the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal with 3 Gold Stars, the Navy Commendation Medal with Combat "V", the Presidential Unit Citation with 1 Star, the Meritorious Unit Commendation Ribbon, the Combat Action Ribbon, the Vietnam Service Medal with 4 Stars, the National Defense Service Medal, the Republic of Vietnam Gallantry Cross with Palm, the Republic of Vietnam Meritorious Unit Citation with Palm, and the Republic of Vietnam Campaign Medal.

He enjoyed giving back to his community through various volunteer works, including Treasurer of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, Past Vice President of the Country Club of New Bedford, Commissioner of the Dartmouth Housing Authority, member of the Dartmouth Veterans Advisory Committee, and member of the Dartmouth Community PreseNation Committee. He also participated in many charitable fundraising organizations, including the Easter Seals.

In his spare time, Mr. O'Connor was an avid golfer. He also enjoyed spending time with family and friends and was a loving husband and devoted father.

Bill was also Honored as Veteran of the Day, during a flag retreat ceremony.

William J. O'Connor of Dartmouth, a Marine Corps veteran of the Vietnam War, was honored as Veteran of the Day during the flag retreat ceremony at Walt Disney World's Magic Kingdom in Florida. The ceremony began with a fanfare by Disney's Main Street Philharmonic Marching Band.

The ceremony continued with The Dapper Dans, Disney's strolling barbershop quartet, which led the crowd in singing "God Bless America." Disney's color guard security detail and Mr. O'Connor marched to the flag in the center of Town Square. The band played the National Anthem as the American flag was folded and presented to Mr. O'Connor. The whole detail, including Mr. O'Connor's family, marched down Main Street, where the veteran was presented with a commemorative certificate and limited-edition Veteran of the Day pin. Present were Mr. O'Connor's wife, Marcella, son Kevin O'Connor, sister Dorothy Mullen, brother in-law Edward Mullen, and Rhonda Mathews.

Mr. O'Connor, known as Bill to his friends and family, served in the Marines from August 1961 to May 1969. He was honorably discharged Oct. 9, 1974, as a major. He fought in Vietnam in Phu Bai from April to June 1967; in Dong Ha from July to November 1967; and in Khe Sanh from December 1967 to May 1968.

REMEMBERANCES
CAPTAIN BILL O'CONNOR

By Dennis Mannion
KCo 3/26 & C Btry 1/13

I know that when he left active duty in 1969 William O'Connor held the rank of Major, but to Glenn Prentice and myself -- and others in Charlie Battery 1/13 he was and still is Captain O'Connor. He was our CO during the siege and the name and the rank has remained that way four decades later.

I drove with Captain O'Connor from my house in CT to the 1998 reunion in Washington, and we were half way down the New Jersey Turnpike when he threatened to leave me at a rest stop if I wouldn't stop calling him by "rank and last name." So, it became Bill then and also at other reunions and in phone calls or emails, but it was never easy or natural for me, and when Glenn and I speak about him it's always "Captain O'Connor."

43 days ago, I left home just after dawn and drove to New Bedford, Mass for his funeral and burial service. I know that I could have written a different report of this immediately after my return to Connecticut, but in the days after, I struggled with what I wanted to say and how to say it, and then I decided to wait for a more appropriate time. So, it's no coincidence that this gets posted on March 17th a day when just about everyone has a bit of Irish in him or her. However, to Khe Sanh siege personnel, St. Patrick's Day will always be linked to this man; especially if you can trace your roots directly back to the Emerald Isle.

As I crossed from Connecticut into Rhode Island on February 8th it began to snow and by the time I arrived at the funeral home in New Bedford, the lines in the parking lot of the funeral home were almost impossible to distinguish. The forces of nature outside served as stark contrast to the setting within, and other than the funeral home staff I was the first person there. I had left CT very early for two reasons: the stormy weather forecast and my clothes.

Despite my disdain for getting dressed up, a tie and jacket in honor of this man was a given, and I needed time to change out of travel-mode jeans and a T-shirt.

Properly attired, it was just my former CO and me for almost an hour. I signed my name in the Guest Book thick with signatures from the wake the night before -- and added "Khe Sanh Vets" since I was there for all of us. Said my goodbyes to my Captain and moved to the back of the room and took a seat. Later, a few others began to enter the viewing area from the front hallway. One man stopped at the casket and then slowly made his way towards the back of the empty room. Had there been others around, I might not have said anything, but since it was just the two of us, it seemed appropriate to ask, "Excuse me, but how did you know him?"

Closing the distance between us, he replied, "He was my best friend for years and I am going to miss him terribly. You?" "He was my Commanding Officer at Khe Sanh."

He began to cry...me too...we shook hands and that was how I chanced to meet Adrien Aaube. Momentarily stunned when I told him that I had driven up from Connecticut for this day, he introduced me to his wife, other friends, and eventually Marcella O'Connor and her two sons -- Kevin and Matthew.

Many of them, upon hearing of my connection to Captain O'Connor -- and the fact that I drove from CT to be there -- got teary-eyed. It took concerted effort on my part to blink away my own at each introduction.

Minutes later, Adrien stood next to the coffin and beautifully spoke to the entire room about his friend and then it was out to our cars. The wind had really picked up by then and the snow consisted of frozen pellets more than flakes. Windshields needed to be scraped, cars were moved into line, and the procession to St. Julie Billiart Church in the town of Dartmouth (a few miles away) commenced. As I proceeded in line near the end of the column, I began to wonder about the upcoming drive from the church to the Massachusetts National Cemetery in Bourne on Cape Cod some 43 miles away. It wasn't going to be easy in this weather.

A beautiful mass and memorial service....fitting words from the priest, in addition to Kevin (who quoted Rudyard Kipling) and Matthew (who recited a poem of his own)...and all three mentioned Khe Sanh in their remarks.

At the conclusion of the service, the organist began to play the Marine Corps Hymn barely audible at first and then louder -- as the casket was moved towards the vestibule of the church.

Outside, the contrast with the colors of the American flag on the coffin and the wind-driven snow was remarkable and that same image repeated itself an hour later at the cemetery. It is the policy of this cemetery that final prayers and leave-takings occur in an outdoor Committal Shelter -- a roofed structure open on three sides -- and not at the actual burial site. That was a God-send as by now the ground was snow-covered, the temperature had dropped well below freezing and new snow was being driven sideways and even upwards by powerful gusts of wind. The extended family centered themselves around the coffin and the rest of us filled in as best we could...some of us just outside the protective roof. There was an honor guard of Marines too many to count and a priest. A short prayer service and then the Marines took over.

After a Present Arms the firing party left the shelter, marched across the roadway and almost disappeared in the swirling snow. Only the bright blue and solid reds of their uniforms stood out. A 3 volley salute and the NCO in charge of this formation then played Taps. The smell of cordite and the sounds from the bugle commingled in the air and despite the winds both were carried back to us. A Chosin scene in honor of this Siege Marine, it seemed to me. The firing party reemerged out of the snow, the flag was removed from the coffin and in movements that seemed to be in slow motion it was folded, inspected, saluted and presented to Marcella. Family and friends began the slow, emotional disconnect from the moment, but I held back.

One more thing to do on this day of memory and connection and shared experiences. I approached the coffin, said my goodbyes, and reached for my pocket and a small medicine bottle filled with Khe Sanh red clay from my return there in July 2000. The coffin had a groove around the top and in that narrow space I inserted a few nuggets of that historic dirt. The nuggets crumpled as I pressed them in and the wind took some of it away, but there was enough for him to have forever. I saluted once and headed for my car slowing only to thank as many of the Honor Guard Marines as I could. In the severe weather, it was not a day to linger.

Now, on this March day 6 weeks later --with the snows all gone and spring just around the corner -- March 17, 2009 -- this is my leprechaun wish:

Captain O'Connor, It is my sincerest hope that some tendrils of those green smoke rounds that you fired 41 years ago this day at Hill 881N were there to mark your way from this life to the next. You deserve no less. Happy St. Patrick's Day and Semper Fidelis.

Dear Dennis,

Once again my eyes are filled with tears on reading your tribute to my brother, Bill. It truly was a pleasure to have met you during the time of Bill's funeral. He certainly was a wonderful brother and a dedicated Marine. My husband Ed and I took the trip to MA last weekend to be with Marcella and Matt to attend Bill's favorite Friendly Sons of St. Patrick dinner, which he was the Treasurer and so proud to be a member of the "Friendly Sons." Once again, he was singled out not only at St. Julie's on Saturday morning, but also at the dinner. They dedicated a single page in Bill's honor as a "tribute to their dedicated friend and Treasurer." We are all so proud of him. Thank you for sharing your experiences with my brother. We cherish your friendship.

Dennis,

That was a beautiful tribute. I know Uncle Bill always loved his memory of the military and loved to tell us stories of his experiences. He will be missed, Dearly

By Ken Pipes

I am again deeply saddened. Phil Wright informed me one of Bravo Company's finest passed away, Brother John Crosby. John was wounded twice, the second time on March 30, 1968. His Courage that day was later recognized with the presentation of the Bronze Star Medal, with Combat "V". John and his wife, Sharon, live in Georgia. It is ironic that John's passing was on the day that Khe Sanh was mentioned by the incoming President. It is my prayer that our Lord holds this fine Man and Courageous Marine in the palms of His Loving hands, now and through all eternity. Please remember John's wife, Sharon and their family in your prayers.

Hand Salute and Semper Fidelis to one of Bravo's Brave Riflemen.

THE GENERAL

By Craig Tourte

This weekend I head down to San Diego - Wife has a business meeting, after, we'll visit our son and play a little golf. So we're on the National Car Rental Bus heading for the rental lot when a very distinguished looking gentleman accompanied by another male and a couple of ladies get on. Of course I have on my red Khe Sanh USMC hat. This gentleman sits across from me, notices my hat and asks if I had been at Khe Sanh. Yes I say, he asks if I had been with the 26th Marines, 13th I respond. After a few minutes I asked where he lives, he responds San Francisco, Noticing his Marine Corps lapel pin, I asked if he had ever been to the Marine Memorial Hotel. He tells me that he was the CEO.

Of course I know that the CEO of the Marine Memorial Hotel happens to be a general officer and I ask for his business card - which I cannot read because I don't have my glasses so I place it into my pocket. We engage in a little conversation and he introduces me to a movie director by the name of Norman Lloyd. Then the General hands me two items. The first is a DVD titled "Commitment & Sacrifice A True Story" and another DVD titled "Cover Me." I just got home this afternoon (Sunday) and have not yet viewed either. Anyway, the General asks me to stop by and see him the next time I'm in San Francisco. I say my thanks, then tell him I have a little gift for him and hand the general one of our Khe Sanh Coins.

I noted he looked it over pretty good before he placed it into his pocket. I did a little research via Google on the good general and was duly impressed. I asked him if he had known or had ever me Col. Lownds or knew Ken Pipes. He told me that he had met Lownds once and was not sure if he had ever met Col Pipes. When I get the new Red Clay I'll send him a magazine along with a letter addressing what a privilege it was to have met him and Mr. Lloyd and that I enjoyed the DVD's. I told the good general that I had provided the Marine Memorial Library with one of our magazine but that I'd send the next one directly to him.

VETERANS HELPING VETERANS

By Earl Clark A Co 1/26

Our Marine Corps League Detachment 1296 out of Chandler, AZ, had a surplus of funds from our Marine Corps Birthday Ball. We had a cart made up from this surplus, of two separate golf carts and inserted a wheel chair ramp in the center. Its purpose is to get our injured brothers and sisters to wherever they need to be at Camp Pendleton, including the NCO Club.

A few of us convoyed the cart over to Camp Pendleton and donated the cart to the Wounded Warrior Battalion at the Base. There was a presentation ceremony. The golf cart company did an excellent job with the vehicle. I extended an invitation to Col. Ken Pipes to attend the ceremonies, and he accepted. It was a privilege for me to have him present.

Some of the staff and wounded gathered around the vehicle for a photo. What a bunch of great young men and women we have in the Corps.

MARINES COME TO AID OF WOUNDED

By Marissa Belles

THE ARIZONA REPUBLIC

Once a Marine, always a Marine. That mantra inspired the East Valley Marines to work tirelessly on a project to help wounded veterans at Camp Pendleton, Calif.

ANDREA BLOOM/THE ARIZONA REPUBLIC

The Chandler-based group, which draws members from across the Valley, raised $14,000 for a specially built golf cart that will be used to, carry injured soldiers around the base.

On Wednesday, a 20-person convoy transported that cart to California as part of the Wounded Warrior Program, which provides assistance to combat victims throughout their recovery.

The convoy culminated a project that drew together Marines and several companies from across the Valley.

East Valley Marine member Will Oravetz of Maricopa said it's difficult for many wounded Marines to get from their barracks to treat-ment centers and other facilities on base.

"I would think that opportunity of mobility for someone wounded in action is one of the best things we can give," Oravetz said.

Richard Hippner, commandant of the East Valley Marines, said the outpouring of com-munity support has been uplifting.

"We have had assistance from allover the state, which was really nice to see," 'Hippner said.

"These young people do so much for our country and this organization wants to sup-port those who have given and lost for us."

Some of the money used to acquire the cart was left over from an East Valley Marines fund drive last fall to bring 60 Marine veter-ans of conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan to their annual ball.

Greg Holland, owner of Creative Works in Star Valley, helped build the golf cart by fusing two carts together.

"The vehicle can transport seven men," Holland said. 'We also installed a ramp to make it easier for the disabled."

James Rhodes, owner of Highways Custom Canvas and Upholstery in Apache Junction, which did all the fabric work on the golf cart, said, "After everything these soldiers do for our country, they should be taken care of and I' am happy to have contributed."

The construction of the transport cart was coordinated by Hippner and fellow Marine Chuck Crist, a driver for AI Golf Carts, a Chandler company that helped front the cost.

"I have not been close to being in the state that some of these young people are," said, Crist, a wounded Vietnam veteran.

"They deserve all the comfort and convenience we can possibly give them."

I GET MAIL

Dear Tom:

This letter is in response to the article regarding S/Sgt. Karl Gorman Taylor that appeared in the Spring 2009 issue of "Red Clay." I very rarely submit any written responses to articles; however, I was moved to do so in this particular instance.

My story begins on a cold March day in 1966 on the banks of the Potomac River in Quantico, VA. For the first time our OCS platoon (A Company, 2nd Platoon) was being formed, and we had our initial face to face with our Drill Instructors. One of these instructors happened to be S/Sgt. Taylor, who was, by an stretch of one's imagination, a very powerfully built and imposing physical specimen. After he made some very "colorful and memorable" comments, my journey began as a future Marine.

During the next 10 weeks S/Sgt. Taylor did a masterful job of breaking us down, weeding out the "unacceptable," and then restoring us to fully functioning individuals. From the hill trails, to the "O" course, to the squad bay, he was ever present, always professional, always leading by example. When I came down with an infection, he took me to sickbay. He pushed me to the max during our PT sessions. Finally, he chose me to lead our platoon during our last drill competition.

For our graduation ceremony in May, none of my family was able to attend. I asked S/Sgt. Taylor to pin on my new Lieutenant's bars. He accepted my invitation, stepped back, saluted smartly, and said words that I've never forgotten: "Lieutenant, I would be honored to serve in your command, anytime, anyplace." That day was the last time I saw him.

However, that day in May is not where this story ends. Since that time, I have come to find out just how connected we were and of the tremendous impact that he had on my life. We share the same birthday: July 14th. Both our wives are named Shirley.

Perhaps the most significant event happened on January 21, 1968 when S/Sgt. Taylor joined India Company 3/26 at Khe Sanh. Early that same morning, I was on duty inside the perimeter when the first round hit. See my article in issue #44, summer 1999 of "Red Clay." At that time I had no idea of the whereabouts of S/Sgt Taylor. In the following weeks I directed numerous aircraft bombing missions and expended tons of ordnance in support of 3/26 and sister units. (MASS-3, Air Support Radar Team, call sign "Carstairs Bravo.") I would like to think that in some small way I repaid some of the debt that I owed to my former DI. When I learned of his sacrifice and subsequent Medal of Honor, it was a very sad and emotional day for me.

It's been almost exactly 43 years since I first met S/Sgt. Taylor. In those years I've had the privilege of serving in various leadership roles. However, I never forgot those words he said to me at that OCS graduation ceremony. Hopefully, I never betrayed that confidence and trust in those whom I served.

Karl Taylor may have never realized the impact that he had on the many lives he touched. He simply led and gave his life by example, by modeling our core values of courage, honor, and commitment along with character and competence. And in so doing, perhaps, that was his greatest gift to those of us who knew him. I'm sure Ron Hoover and Richard Townsend would both agree.

In conclusion, I would like to express my deep appreciation to Karl Taylor's family, for your loyalty, dedication, and many sacrifices. He was a true American hero, and you were most fortunate to have him in your life. Thank you for carrying on his legacy.

Sincerely,
Bill McEwen

SYNOPSIS: The Lang Vei Special Forces camp in the northwestern corner of South Vietnam along Route 9, a mile and a half from the Laotian border. had been established in late December 1966 as a result of the Special Forces Detachment A101 having been moved out of its former Khe Sanh location. It seemed ill fated from the beginning.

In March 1967, one of the worst tragedies to befall the Special Forces CIDG program during the war occurred. U.S. Air Force released napalm ordnance on the nearby village which spewed exploding fire over the camp, landing zone, minefield and village. 135 CIDG and native civilians were killed, and 213 were horribly wounded, burned or disfigured.

Only two months later, on May 4, a Viet Cong night attack on the camp wiped out the Special Forces command group, all in one bunker, and killed the detachment commander and his executive officer, as well as seriously wounding the team sergeant. This attack was a prelude to the larger siege of Khe Sanh, and was a grim reminder of the dangerous neighborhood Special Forces had moved into.

By January 1968, several North Vietnamese Army divisions had encircled the Marine combat base at Khe Sanh, placing the more westerly Lang Vei Special Forces frontier surveillance camp in imminent danger. The camp was occupied by Detachment A101 commanded by Capt. Frank C. Willoughby. Willoughby was rebuilding and reinforcing the camp at the time, while soldiers and dependants from the Kha tribal 33rd Laotian Volunteer Battalion streamed into the camp after being overrun by NVA tanks across the border.

On the evening of January 24, the camp was pounded by mortars in conjunction with a heavy shelling of the Marine Khe Sanh base, which prevented any effective artillery support for Lang Vei. 1Lt. Paul R. Longgrear had only recently arrived with his Hre tribal 12th Mobile Strike Force Company to help shore up defensive firepower.

The influx of the Laotians caused some problems. For example, the Lao battalion commander refused to take orders from the American captain, forcing the Company C commander, Lt/Col. Daniel F. Schungel, to come to Lang Vei on his first Special Forces assignment on February 6 to provide an officer of equal rank. Camp strength on February 6 totaled 24 Special Forces, 14 LLDB, 161 mobile strike force, 282 CIDG (Bru and Vietnamese), 6 interpreters and 520 Laotian soldiers, plus a number of civilians.

Shortly after midnight on February 7, 1968, a combined NVA infantry-tank assault drove into Lang Vei. Two PT-76 tanks threatened the outer perimeter of the camp as infantry rushed behind them. SFC James W. Holt destroyed both tanks with shots from his 106mm recoilless rifle. More tanks came around the burning hulks of the first two tanks and began to roll over the 104th CIDG Company's defensive positions. S/Sgt. Peter Tiroch, the assistant intelligence sergeant, ran over to Holt's position and helped load the weapon. Holt quickly lined up a third tank in his sights and destroyed it with a direct hit. After a second shot at the tank, Holt and Tiroch left the weapons pit just before it was demolished by return cannon fire. Tiroch watched Holt run over to the ammunition bunker to look for some hand-held Light Anti-tank Weapons (LAWs). It was the last time Holt was ever seen. Lt/Col. Schungel, 1Lt. Longgrear, S/Sgt. Arthur Brooks, Sgt. Nikolas Fragos, SP4 William G. McMurry, Jr., and LLDB Lt. Quy desperately tried to stop the tanks with LAWs and grenades. They even climbed on the plated engine decks, trying to pry open hatches to blast out the crews. NVA infantrymen followed the vehicles closely, dusting their sides with automatic rifle fire. One tank was stopped by five direct hits, and the crew killed as they tried to abandon the vehicle. 1Lt. Miles R. Wilkins, the detachment executive officer, left the mortar pit with several LAWs and fought a running engagement with one tank beside the team house without much success.

Along the outer perimeters, the mobile strike force outpost was receiving fire. Both Kenneth Hanna, a heavy weapons specialist, and Charles W. Lindewald, 12th Mobile Strike Force platoon leader, were wounded. Hanna, wounded in the scalp, left shoulder and arm tried to administer first aid to Lindewald. The two were last seen just before their position was overrun. Harvey Brande spoke with them by radio and Hanna indicated that Lindewald was then dead, and that he himself was badly wounded. Daniel R. Phillips, a demolitions specialist, was wounded in the face and was last seen trying to evade North Vietnamese armor by going through the northern perimeter wire. NVA sappers armed with satchel charges, tear gas grenades and flamethrowers fought through the 101st, 102nd and 103rd CIDG perimeter trenches and captured both ends of the compound by 2:30 a.m. Spearheaded by tanks, they stormed the inner compound.

Lt/Col. Schungel and his tank-killer personnel moved back to the command bunker for more LAWs. They were pinned behind a row of dirt and rock filled drums by a tank that had just destroyed one of the mortar pits. A LAW was fired against the tank with no effect. The cannon swung around and blasted the barrels in front of the bunker entrance. The explosion temporarily blinded McMurry and mangled his hands, pitched a heavy drum on top of Lt. Wilkins and knocked Schungel flat. Lt. Quy managed to escape to another section of the camp, but the approach of yet another tank prevented

The tank, which was shooting at the camp observation post, was destroyed with a LAW. Schungel helped Wilkins over to the team house, where he left both doors ajar and watched for approaching NVA soldiers. Wilkins was incapacitated and weaponless, and Schungel had only two grenades and two magazines of ammunition left. He used one magazine to kill a closely huddled five-man sapper squad coming toward the building. He fed his last magazine into his rifle as the team house was rocked with explosions and bullets. The two limped over to the dispensary, which was occupied by NVA soldiers, and hid underneath it, behind a wall of sandbags.

At some point, Brande, Thompson and at least one Vietnamese interpreter were captured by the North Vietnamese. Thompson was uninjured, but Brande had taken shrapnel in his leg. Brande and Thompson were held separately for a week, then rejoined in Laos. Joined with them was McMurry, who had also been captured from the camp. The three were moved up the Ho Chi Minh trail to North Vietnam and held until 1973. The U.S. did not immediately realize they had been captured, and carried them in Missing in Action status throughout the rest of the war, although Brande's photo was positively identified by a defector in April 1969 as being a Prisoner of War. A Vietnamese interpreter captured from the camp told Brande later that he had seen both Lindewald and Hanna, and that they both were dead.

Several personnel, including Capt. Willoughby, SP4 James L. Moreland, the medic for the mobile strike force, and Lt. Quan, the LLDB camp commander, were trapped in the underground level of the command bunker. Lt. Longgrear had also retreated to the command bunker. Satchel charges, thermite grenades and gas grenades were shoved down the bunker air vents, and breathing was very difficult. Some soldiers had gas masks, but others had only handkerchiefs or gauze from their first aid packets. The NVA announced they were going to blow up the bunker, and the LLDB personnel walked up the stairs to surrender, and were summarily executed. At dawn, two large charges were put down the vent shaft and detonated, partially demolishing the north wall and creating a large hole through which grenades were pitched. The bunker defenders used upturned furniture and debris to shield themselves. Willoughby was badly wounded by grenade fragments and passed out at 8:30 a.m. Moreland had been wounded and became delirious after receiving a head injury in the final bunker explosion. Incredibly, the battle was still going on in other parts of the camp.

Aircraft had been strafing the ravines and roads since 1:00 a.m. Throughout the battle, the Laotians refused to participate, saying they would attack at first light. SFC Eugene Ashley, Jr., the intelligence sergeant, led two assistant medical specialists, Sgt. Richard H. Allen and SP4 Joel Johnson as they mustered 60 of the Laotian soldiers and counterattacked into Lang Vei. The Laotians bolted when a NVA machine gun crew opened fire on them, forcing the three Americans to withdraw.

Team SFC William T. Craig and S/Sgt. Tiroch had chased tanks throughout the night with everything from M-79 grenade launchers to a .50 caliber machine gun. After it had become apparent that the camp had been overrun, they escaped outside the wire and took temporary refuge in a creek bed. After daylight, they saw Ashley's counterattack force and joined him. The Special Forces sergeants persuaded more defenders fleeing down Route 9 to assist them and tried second, third and fourth assaults. Between each assault, Ashley directed airstrikes on the NVA defensive line, while the other Special Forces soldiers gathered tribal warriors for yet another attempt. On the fifth counterattack, Ashley was mortally wounded only thirty yards from the command bunker. Capt. Willoughby had regained consciousness in the bunker about 10:00 a.m. and established radio contact with the counterattacking Americans. The continual American airstrikes had forced the North Vietnamese to begin withdrawing from the camp. Col. Schungel and Lt. Wilkins emerged from under the dispensary after it was vacated by the North Vietnamese and hobbled out of the camp.

The personnel in the bunker also left in response to orders to immediately evacuate the camp. They carried Sgt. John D. Early, who had been badly wounded by shrapnel while manning the tower, but were forced to leave SP4 Moreland inside the bunker. 1Lt. Thomas D. Todd, an engineer officer in charge of upgrading Lang Vei's airstrip, held out in the medical bunker throughout the battle. That afternoon, he was the last American to pass through the ruined command bunker. He saw Moreland, who appeared to be dead, covered with debris. Maj. George Quamo gathered a few dozen Special Forces commando volunteers from the MACV-SOG base at Khe Sanh (FOB #3) and led a heroic reinforcing mission into Lang Vei. His arrival enabled the Lang Vei defenders to evacuate the area, many by Marine helicopters in the late afternoon.

Deadly struggle in the hills: the first battle of Khe Sanh: in the spring of 1967, elements of the 3rd and 9th Marines clashed with the North Vietnamese Army in the "Hill Fights."

VFW Magazine, Sept, 2004
by Al Hemingway

Khe Sanh, tucked away in the northwest section of South Vietnam, overlooked a major infiltration route during the war. In 1966, the Marines constructed a combat base in its vicinity to patrol Hills 861,881S and 881N. With no initial hostile contact, it seemed enemy activity had subsided. Early in 1967, however, Leathernecks would discover that the 325C North Vietnamese Army (NVA) Division had returned.

Opening Shots on 861

On April 24, a platoon from B Co., 1st Bn., 9th Marines, left Khe Sanh Combat Base (KSCB) and established an 81mm mortar position on Hill 700, just south of Hill 861. The mortars were to provide additional support to the remainder of the company searching for caves.

A five-man patrol climbed Hill 861 to establish an observation post. Nearing the top, the NVA ambushed the small party. Only one Marine survived. These were the opening shots of the first battle of Khe Sanh.

Mortars and 105mm howitzers from KSCB pounded NVA positions atop Hill 861. Capt. Michael W. Sayers ordered his remaining platoons to hit the enemy from the rear. As the riflemen moved forward, bullets tore into their right flank.

"My fire team proceeded up 861 when I heard a loud crack," Lance Cpl. Chris Harte said. "I saw the point man reach for his head and crumple to the ground."

Placing a mortar tube between his legs, Lance Cpl. Dana C. Darnell lobbed 60mm rounds at the NVA. On more than one occasion, he braved enemy fire to obtain more shells. He was killed two days later and was posthumously awarded a Navy Cross.

Ring of Steel

Casualties mounted as automatic weapons fire poured from cleverly concealed bunkers. As they tried to move forward, shrapnel from an 82mm mortar round wounded Harte and another Marine."My arm and leg were burning," Harte said. "The Marine to my right had blood pumping out of his mouth."The cannons of the 12th Marines (an artillery regiment) sent thousands of rounds crashing into the hills to support the infantry. "Artillery put a ring of steel around my defensive position that was so tight we were taking dirt from the impact," Sayers recalled. "No doubt it saved our lives."

Harte remembered, "Night fell and word was passed we were moving out. It was damp and very dark. The moans and cries of the wounded only made it more eerie. A light rain started to fall. We had no water, so I licked the raindrops off my rifle. It gave me some relief."

K Co., 3rd Bn., 9th Marines, arrived later and had the unenviable task of retrieving the casualties scattered on 861. "As gentle and as caring as we could, we helped bring Marines down the face of the hill," PFC Larry D. Stevanus wrote in a letter. "Some were in so much pain they screamed if we moved them the wrong way."

Choppers from Helicopter Marine Medium (HMM) 164 had a difficult time trying to evacuate the wounded and drop off supplies. "We were like magnets," Cpl. Sam Beamon said. "We only had so many seconds on the ground before their mortars would start coming in. They were really accurate, too. Some choppers were riddled with holes."

On April 28, the 2nd Bn., 3rd Marines, advanced on Hill 861. The mountain was saturated with 250- and 500-pound bombs. When the riflemen reached the crest, however, they discovered the elusive NVA had retreated. Amid the stench of decaying bodies, shattered trees and blackened earth, they found 25 mutually supporting bunkers and more than 400 fighting holes. They were virtually impenetrable to air and artillery strikes.

'They Were Killing Us' on 881S

Attention now shifted to Hill 881S. Shaped like a peanut and running east to west, the hill was "rough going" for the Leathernecks. Suddenly, "everything went off," and members of M Co., 3rd Bn., 3rd Marines, were fighting for their lives.

"Myself, 2nd Lt. Joe Mitchell and Lance Cpl. Lester Ray Calhoun were taking cover behind a log when an 82mm mortar landed near us," said PFC Don Hossack, the company radio operator. "The blast destroyed the radio and sent a 9-inch piece of shrapnel into my head and broke my arm in two places. Thank God for my helmet. It saved my life."

Hossack realized the NVA were attempting to flank his platoon. "They were closing with us," he said. "I heard whistles, and they emerged from their tighter bunkers. A Russian-made RPD machine gun had us pinned down. They were killing us."

Commandeering another radio, Hossack called KSCB for artillery support. "They were right on the money," he said. "The barrage wiped out 30 to 50 NVA."

A short distance away, K and M companies, 3rd Bn., 9th Marines, also were involved in heavy, combat. "We finally reached the top and began tossing hand grenades into bunkers," said Lance Cpl. Harry O'Dell of K Company. "Bullets were so close they sounded like cracking whips. A mortar round hit and blew me back into one of their bunkers. I was dazed, and my uniform was soaked in blood."

Lance Cpl. Joe O'Neill and PFC Leslie Wyeth of M Company were retrieving the body of a dead Marine when snipers cut them down. "Rounds struck Wyeth in his legs, and one got me in the shoulder and the throat," O'Neill said. "I was gasping for air, and I tried to yell to clear my passageway. Our corpsman, Mike House, came out of nowhere to assist me." House would receive a Silver Star for his gallantry and O'Neill a Bronze Star.

After four days of bloody fighting, Hill 881S was secured. The victory, however, was bittersweet. "You can't say we took the hill," O'Dell said. "They just left."

Bodies Everywhere on 881N

One hill remained in NVA hands--881N. Two companies from the 2nd Bn., 3rd Marines, assaulted it from the south and east. The enemy let loose with everything they had. Even experienced combat Marines had never known such heavy fire. Late in the afternoon, the Leathernecks consolidated their positions.

Early the next morning, hundreds of NVA soldiers struck E Company's lines. Fighting was hand-to-hand as the enemy breached a portion of the perimeter. A composite squad of combat engineers was quickly organized to bolster the weakened defenses. Artillery and 106mm recoilless rifle fire finally stopped their attack.

2nd Lt. James R. Cannon was stunned. In The Hill Fights: The First Battle of Khe Sanh, author Edward E Murphy quotes him: "'There were bodies everywhere, mostly NVA. About 80 enemy dead littered the ground in front of the 1st and 2nd squads' positions. No doubt others had been dragged away by their comrades. Dead Marines lay there, too. I couldn't tell a black from a white Marine. Four hours in the sun had already badly decomposed the bodies.'"

Cannon was extremely proud of his men. "The actions of Echo Company earned them two Navy Crosses, five Silver Stars, six Bronze Stars with Combat V and 150 Purple Hearts," he later recorded. "We killed 236 NVA."

On May 5, the embattled Marines finally seized Hill 881N. The Hill Fights officially ended on May 12. The NVA's plans to overrun KSCB failed. The Leathernecks and corpsmen sustained 168 dead and 443 wounded. An estimated 940 NVA soldiers were killed. "It was the toughest fight we had in Vietnam," Lt. Gen. Victor Krulak reckoned.

This seesaw action along the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) would continue throughout the war.

"Through months of bloody fighting between Route 9 and the DMZ, the Marines never conquered the North Vietnamese Army," historian Murphy wrote in The Hill Fights. "At best, they managed a stalemate."

THE LAST STAND OF KHE SANH AREA UNITED STATES ARMY

Mission: reconnaissance "prisoner-snatch" Awarded Medals : Army Medal of Honor, Distinguished Service Cross, three Silver Stars

The once bustling Khe Sanh Marine Base in South Vietnam's extreme northwest had been a ghost town for more than three years by the summer of 1971. It was, however, used briefly that February to support the South Vietnamese invasion of Laos. After that bloody debacle, they abandoned not just Khe Sanh, but the entire region, yielding immense areas to the NVA. Almost overnight, the North began extending the Ho Chi Minh Trail highways into South Vietnam.

In late July 1971, U.S. intelligence began tracking a large enemy force shifting across the DMZ a dozen miles east of Khe Sanh, threatening the coastal cities of Hue, Danang and Phu Bai where the last sizeable American ground units were based.

MISSION

It was essential to learn what was happening near Khe Sanh, the mission was assigned to a shadowy organization called "SOG". Created to conduct covert missions deep behind enemy lines in Laos, Cambodia and North Vietnam, the top secret Studies and Observations Group had shifted most of its operations incountry in 1971 to cover the continuing U.S. withdrawal.

From among its clandestine assembly of Army Green Berets, Navy SEALs and USAF Air Commandos, the Khe Sanh mission eventually became a prisoner-snatch assigned to Recon Team Kansas, an 11-man Special Forces-led element, which included eight Montagnard tribesmen.

But how do you grab a prisoner in the midst of 10,000 or more NVA? Headed by an easygoing, lanky Midwesterner, 1st Lt. Loren Hagen, along with Sergeants Tony Andersen and Bruce Berg, the RT Kansas men had brainstormed through several scenarios until settling upon the best option: They would land conspicuously on an abandoned firebase which obviously would draw some sort of NVA reaction, put up a short fight, then extract by helicopter.

Except half of Hagen's men would stay hidden on the hill. When the NVA sent a squad up to see if the Americans had left behind sensors or bombing beacons -- as SOG teams often did -- the hidden men would ambush the NVA, seize a prisoner and come out.

Date : August 1971
Company :Recon Team Kansas, Studies and Observations Group (SOG)
Group leader : 1st. Lt.Hagen (3rd from right)

In case a serious fight developed, Lt. Hagen reinforced his team with three more Green Beret volunteers, Staff Sgt. Oran Bingham and Sergeants Bill Queen and William Rimondi, eight Montagnard tribesmen and six U.S. Special Forces troops -- a total of 14 men.

DEPLOYMENT

Landing at last light on Aug. 6, 1971, Lt. Hagen surveyed the scrub brush and bomb craters below them and split his defense into three elements to cover three slopes. Immediately they went to work restoring the old firebase's two dilapidated bunkers and shallow trenches. The enemy must have seen them land, and Hagen reckoned to be ready.

Foreboding Night It was well after dark when the SOG men noticed campfires on two facing ridgelines: unusual because the NVA normally masked itself. By midnight, enemy probers were at the base of the hill, firing provocatively from the north, south, east and west.

At 1 a.m., a USAF AC-130 Spectre gunship arrived, walking 40mm and 20mm fire around the hill nearly all night. Never once did the team fire their weapons, staying blanketed in darkness. Then at 3 a.m., the SOG men heard trucks and tailgates dropping. This was odd, very odd.

Beneath the hill, dismounting NVA soldiers formed up into platoons and companies, which their leaders marched through the darkness to their assigned attack positions, to wait for dawn. Just before sunrise it became forebodingly quiet. Then Lt. Hagen heard more trucks arriving.

Fifty miles away at a coastal airbase, a USAF forward air controller (FAC) and a flight of helicopters was lifting away for the false extraction; they would be above RT Kansas in 30 minutes.

Encircled by the NVA as darkness gave way to light, Lt. Hagen detected glimpses of NVA on one slope; then on another slope pith helmets appeared, bobbing in the fog. When his men reported NVA on the third slope, too, Hagen realized the hill was completely encircled by NVA -- but that would require a whole regiment, at least a thousand men.

The NVA regimental commander understood he had to dispatch the Americans quickly. They'd inadvertently landed almost within sight of the Hanoi High Command's most critical new venture, the first six-inch fuel pipeline laid across the DMZ.

It would be absolutely essential in a few months when entire tank battalions rolled through there for the war's largest offensive. Already the 304th NVA Division was massing there. Moreover, a regiment of the 308th Division was preparing for the 1972 Easter Offensive.

A fourth battalion moved into place; then, concealed in the ground fog, a fifth battalion arrived. Later, SOG's commander, Col. John Sadler, would learn an entire regiment had stormed the hill, supported by a second regiment. It was a mass assault by approximately 2,000 enemy infantrymen.
As the clearing ground fog disclosed that terrible truth, Lt. Hagen had no time for inspiring words, just serious soldier work; in those final moments he repositioned weapons while his men readied grenades and stacked magazines. The Catholic Montagnards made the sign of the cross.

THEN THE NVA CAME

Four KIA in Four Minutes A well-aimed RPG rocket smashed into Bruce Berg's bunker, collapsing it and signaling the attack -- fire went from nothing to 10,000 rounds per second. Andersen could see dozens of NVA rushing in lines up his slope, meeting them with his M-60 machine gun.

Hagen hollered that he was going to check Berg. And then he ran directly into a ferocious maelstrom, bullets ricocheting and slamming the earth in front of, behind, and beneath his dashing feet. He made it a dozen yards when fire from the other slope cut him down, killing him.

Then Klaus Bingham left a bunker to reposition a claymore and a bullet struck him in the head, apparently killing him. One Montagnard in a trench below Andersen fired several bursts then jumped up to pull back and fell into Andersen's lap, dead. Four men had died in less than four minutes. It was up to Andersen, now the senior man.

Small arms fire rattled closer on all sides and grenades lobbed up from below the hillcrest where waves of NVA were scurrying behind small rises and rolling from bomb crater to bomb crater. Andersen dashed over the hill to look for Hagen, but couldn't see him anywhere -- just 100 khaki-clad NVA almost at the top.

He fired one M-60 belt at NVA advancing up his own slope, then sped to the other approach and ran belt after belt on the 100 assaulting enemy. By then, grenades started coming from behind him as NVA closed in from his rear. Just a dozen yards away, beyond the curvature of the hill, enemy heads popped up, cracked a few shots, then dropped back down.

Still a dozen minutes away, the approaching Cobra gunships went to full throttle, leaving the slower Hueys behind.

Meanwhile, RT Kansas had just run out of hand grenades when a North Vietnamese grenade exploded beside Andersen's M-60, rendering it useless. He spun his CAR-15 off his back and kept shooting, then he tossed back another grenade, but it went off in front of him, nearly blinding him, yet he kept shooting. More shrapnel tore into him, then an AK round slammed through his web gear and lodged in his elbow, knocking him down. He stumbled back to his knees and kept firing.

The perimeter was pinched almost in half when Andersen grabbed his last two living Montagnards, circled below the nearest NVA and somehow managed to reach the survivors on the opposite side. He found Bingham, started to lift him, and saw he, too, was dead from a head wound. All around him he heard, "zzssss, zzssss, zzssss," as bullets flashed past his ears.

LAST STAND

He dragged Bingham back to where Bill Queen lay, wounded. Only Rimondi wasn't yet hit and still fired furiously. Andersen put them in a back-to-back circle just off the hilltop where they would make their last stand. AK bullets had destroyed their team radio, another slug had shot Andersen's little survival radio out of his hand, so Rimondi tossed him another survival radio -- their last.

Now the NVA were streaming, rolling over the crest like a tidal wave, their rattling AKs blending together into one never-ending burst. Andersen's men were firing not at NVA, but at hands wielding AKs over parapets and around bunkers. There was no place left to fall back. Andersen was shooting NVA little farther away than the length of his CAR-15 muzzle. The time it took to speed-change a magazine meant life or death.

From the air it looked like an ant mound, with moving figures everywhere. Cobra lead rolled in and sprinkled 20mm cannon shells around the surviving SOG men, and at last fighters arrived, adding napalm and Vulcan cannons to the melee. Then at last the assault ebbed, turned, and the NVA fled for cover, just as the Hueys arrived.

Though wounded repeatedly, Andersen crawled out to fire his CAR-15 to cover the landing Hueys. With Rimondi's help, Andersen dragged as many teammates' bodies as he could to the first Huey, then helped the wounded Queen and others aboard the second.

ALLIED KIA COUNT: 64%

In one hellacious half-hour, nine of Recon Team Kansas' 14 men had been lost. Lt. Hagen had died, along with Bingham; Berg was presumed dead; six Montagnards had died. Rimondi and Queen both suffered multiple frag wounds, Andersen had been struck by both small arms fire and shrapnel, and their other Montagnards, too, all had been wounded.

"It's amazing that any of us came through it with the amount of incoming that we were getting," Tony Andersen says today, 25 years later. He attributes their survival to his deceased team leader, Lt. Loren Hagen. "He epitomized what a Special Forces officer should be -- attentive to detail, a lot of rehearsals, followed through on things," he explains. "We were ready. I think that was probably the only thing that kept us from being totally overrun. Everybody was alert and knew what was happening and was waiting."

As for Hagen's bravery, dashing into a wall of AK fire to try to save Bruce Berg, that didn't surprise Andersen, either. "Lt. Hagen was that kind of officer. He was a good man."

Against the loss of most of his teammates, Andersen learned, the USAF counted 185 NVA dead on that hill -- little RT Kansas had killed half a battalion and probably wounded twice that many NVA. But that gives Andersen little satisfaction compared to the loss of most of his team.

Perhaps Andersen's most difficult duty was carrying the bodies of his six Montagnard teammates -- his "family" he called them -- to their home village."As soon as they saw us driving up in the truck, they knew. Wailing and moaning started, and all the grieving." The villagers gathered in a circle around the headman's stilted longhouse. "Through one of the interpreters I tried to explain how proud we were of them, what good fighters they were, that they had died for a good cause."

That would be borne out a few months later when the intelligence generated by RT Kansas' spirited defense helped U.S. analysts read enemy intentions, enabling American airpower to counter the NVA's Easter Offensive.

And though details of this incredible fight would remain classified for decades, enough was disclosed that 1st Lt. Loren Hagen's family was presented the U.S. Army's final Vietnam War Medal of Honor. Tony Andersen, who held together what remained of RT Kansas through those final mass assaults, received the Distinguished Service Cross. Queen, Rimondi, Berg and Bingham were awarded Silver Stars. And now, today, with full disclosure, we can appreciate the significance of their noble stand.

Medal of Honor

HAGEN, LOREN D. 1Lt, US Army, Infantry US Army Training Advisory Group.

Action: Republic of Vietnam, 7 Aug 1971
Inducted: Fargo, N. Dakota
DOB 25 Feb 1946, Fargo, N. Dakota

Citation: 1st Lt. Hagen distinguished himself in action while serving as the team leader of a small reconnaissance team operating deep within enemy-held territory.

At approximately 0630 hours on the morning of 7 Aug 1971 the small team came under a fierce assault by a superior-sized enemy force using heavy small arms, automatic weapons, mortar, and rocket fire. 1st Lt. Hagen immediately began returning small-arms fire upon the attackers and successfully led this team in repelling the first enemy onslaught. He then quickly deployed his men into more strategic defense locations before the enemy struck again in an attempt to overrun and annihilate the beleaguered team's members. 1st Lt. Hagen repeatedly exposed himself to the enemy fire directed at him as he constantly moved about the team's perimeter, directing fire, rallying the members, and resupplying the team with ammunition, while courageously returning small arms and hand grenade fire in a valorous attempt to repel the advancing enemy force. The courageous actions and expert leadership abilities of 1st Lt. Hagen were a great source of inspiration and instilled confidence in the team members. After observing an enemy rocket make a direct hit on and destroy 1 of the team's bunkers, 1st Lt. Hagen moved toward the wrecked bunker in search for team members despite the fact that the enemy force now controlled the bunker area. With total disregard for his own personal safety, he crawled through the enemy fire while returning small-arms fire upon the enemy force. Undaunted by the enemy rockets and grenades impacting all around him, 1st Lt. Hagen desperately advanced upon the destroyed bunker until he was fatally wounded by enemy small arms and automatic weapons fire. With complete disregard for his personal safety, 1st Lt. Hagen's courageous gallantry, extraordinary heroism, and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty, at the cost of his own life, were in keeping with the highest traditions of the military service and reflect great credit upon him and the US Army.

SYMBOLS

By Craig W. Tourte

At the 2006 reunion held in Mobile Alabama, John Pessoni gave me several necklaces made by Ronald Shouse, consisting of colored beads representing service in Vietnam and Missing-In-Action. I wore mine proudly and was inundated by friends and acquaintances wanting their own beads to proudly show others their service in and support of - those who served and who were lost in Vietnam. (At the 2007 reunion, LeLand Upshaw was also kind enough to make and distribute similar necklaces to those who were interested).

I shared the few extras I had with close friends who were also Vietnam Veterans and wrote Ron a letter asking where I could purchase the beads so that I could make my own. Ron responded by sending me some more necklaces and bracelets. It's interesting that when I wear a shirt or cap indicating Khe Sanh I get few comments, but numerous recognitions in response to the beads.

One encounter of significance occurred in a little - off the main street - bar in downtown San Diego. I'll admit to being a bit under the influence that evening, experiencing one of those dark moods many of us find ourselves in. With few words exchanged, I gladly gave the necklace I wore to a Native American, who I observed was silently suffering that too often unexplainable depressive disorder so many of us are afflicted with.

From grocery clerk, waitress, strangers on the street and in the taverns, folks have recognized the very distinctive yellow, white and red beads. What is most surprising is that most seem to understanding the meaning. A couple of weeks ago I happened to once again find myself in one of those out of the way places in downtown Honolulu. A little place tucked away from the hustle and bustle of the main thoroughfare. As I walked in I noted that the only vacant stool happened to between a fairly attractive young lady and a couple of young, thin, clean cut men who I at first assumed were of a different political and sexual persuasion than myself.

I was surprised when one of the men looked at the yellow, white and red beaded bracket on my wrist and made the statement, "Vietnam." It took me a moment before I responded "Yes", wondering how these guys knew anything about Vietnam. Turns out both were in the Navy, one was married and they knew a great deal about Vietnam and the Siege at Khe Sanh.

I realize some are uncomfortable wearing these beads and necklaces, but it is something that I am proud to do. Many years ago, way before the Marine Corps and Vietnam I spent a summer at the Hoopa Valley Indian Tribe Reservation near the Klamath River in the far North Western corner of California. Although an outsider, I was treated with open arms and respect and had a great time. My mother had told me on several occasions that I had a "little Indian in me" but for some reason, I never asked her what that meant. My father had passed away shortly after I was born and his name was seldom mention.

At the 2007 Khe Sanh Reunion held in Washington D.C., Raymond Palmer, a proud Marine of Delta Company, First Battalion, 26th Marine Corps Regiment and Native American who resides in Fort Apache, Arizona, presented me with a wonderful hand made necklace. Ray told me that it was an Indian tradition to exchange gifts and that he had read the article I had written - which was published in the "Red Clay" Magazine about the necklace gift to a Native American when I was in San Diego - (Issue 66 FALL 2006 "The Necklace And The Indian").

The necklace is hand made with green, yellow and red beads. On one face, in stitched beads are the words, "Tourte Khe Sanh" on the other side in hand stitched beads are the words, "68 SIEGE USMC." The necklace is a beautiful work of art and a memento I'll always cherish.

I usually wear various necklaces and bracelets beads I have described. I have in fact, even wore the necklace that Ray presented to me to the 2008 reunion held in Reno Nevada. But usually that necklaces rests in a glass case high up on a book shelve where it is proudly displayed in my front room. For some indescribable reason I sense a certain power from that necklace as it watches over me from its lofty perch and it reminds me of the quiet and too often forgotten Native Americans who have given so much to this country during times of conflict and in particular, during the Vietnam War. To me, that necklace is a priceless symbol of their bravery and sacrifice. I can never repay Ray Palmer for this most cherished gift.

A DOG TAG FINDS ITS WAY HOME

HARPERS FERRY - Buried for more than 40 years amidst the rubble of an abandoned U.S. Marine Corps fire base in Vietnam, 61-year-old Sgt. Cecil Tucker's dog tag seemed lost forever to history.

A member of the 3rd Battalion, 12th Marines, 3rd Marine Division - an artillery battalion - Tucker lost the dog tag during the daily enemy artillery bombardment while he was stationed in Khe Sanh.

The lost dog tag was likely later buried along with the base itself, when the Marines left the installation and tried to wipe it off the map using 500-pound bombs. The thought of anyone ever finding, let alone recovering, the lost dog tag seemed impossible - or so Tucker thought.

Last month, Tucker received a phone call from halfway around the world. On the other line was 34-year-old Jon Nizan, an Israeli who had searched for Tucker for months.

"He called me one Sunday morning and he said 'I think I've got something that you might like to have'," Tucker said. "The first thing he asked me was 'were you on a fire base in Khe Sanh?' and I said 'yes sir, that was a long time ago'."

It was then that Tucker learned Nizan had found his dog tag while visiting Vietnam. Amazed at what he had just heard, Tucker asked the man on the other end of the phone if there was a service number engraved on the dog tag.

"2350267 - I memorized that ever since I came out of boot camp. ... I still never forgot it. It's remarkable," Tucker said.

The story of how Nizan, a native of Cleveland, found Tucker's long lost dog tag began last year. Nizan moved to Israel in 2000 and now lives in Ramat Gan, a suburb of Tel-Aviv. He and his wife traveled to Vietnam for a vacation in the summer of 2008. It had been Nizan's dream since he was a child to travel to Vietnam. When they first arrived, Nizan noticed dog tags were being sold at the War Remnants Museum in Saigon.

"I thought the whole thing was a bit disturbing - them selling dog tags of possibly fallen U.S. servicemen as tourist trinkets. At the same time I was a bit curious," he said.

He decided not to buy any dog tags in Saigon, but a few weeks later he visited Khe Sanh. The situation seemed less "touristy" there, Nizan said, because there were no other Westerners around. While he was there, he met a local man who was selling wartime relics that he had found with a metal detector. The artifacts included spent shell casings, uniform pins, bullets and a few rusty dog tags - some of them illegible.

"At that point I decided to help the guy out, and decided that maybe I could track down either the previous owner or, at least, the family of the previous owner and return it," Nizan said.

When Nizan returned to Israel he began searching for Tucker. It was a search that would take him more than two months, he said. He began surfing the Web, first looking to see if Tucker was killed in action. He then began scouring Web sites for Vietnam veterans and used general search sites.

"I posted a few notices on some sites asking if anyone knew a Cecil Tucker who served around Khe Sanh. I got no response, except for a guy who said that the tag was probably a fake," Nizan said.

The selling of fake dog tags to tourists had become a cottage industry in Vietnam, Nizan learned. He didn't let that deter him from his search and he continued on and off to search for Tucker. He tried cold -calling a few Cecil Tuckers spread out around the country, but got nowhere. With no leads, Nizan gave up his search for a while, when one day, out of the blue, he received an e-mail from a man who also bought a dog tag and managed to track down the owner.

"He had done some searches and found two Cecil Tuckers who he thought were good candidates," Nizan said.

Nizan called one of them and discovered the man was one of Tucker's relatives. He in turn gave Nizan the phone number to one of Tucker's good friends. That man then provided Nizan with Tucker's phone number.

"I had all but given up on the search when this guy e -mailed me. The whole idea that I could find a tag in the middle of the jungle in Asia, track down the guy who lost it 40 years ago from the other side of the world and return it to him is simply amazing," Nizan said. "You have to marvel at what the Internet is capable of."

Tucker offered to pay Nizan for the man's time and trouble, but Nizan refused, saying he wanted Tucker to have the dog tag back. It belonged to him, he said. Last week, nearly a month after Tucker received the phone call, a business-size envelope with postage from Tel-Aviv and the message "do not bend" written in two languages on the back arrived in Tucker's mailbox.

"Just as soon as I looked at it, I said 'I can't believe it. Here it is'," Tucker said.

Inside he found his long lost dog tag, slightly malformed with a little rust and small, black blotches like axle grease on old chrome. Tucker's name and service number are still clearly visible, as well as traces of the dark orange dirt of Khe Sanh. Just looking at the dirt and the faded color of the dog tag told Tucker it was authentic.

"There's nothing fake about it because of that old dirt. There's no dirt around here to describe that dirt. It was just that dark. I was just like orange, the dirt, because of being torn up so much over there," Tucker said.

The black scorch marks are from napalm dropped from U.S. planes, he said. Sometimes they dropped the napalm so close he could feel the immense heat from incendiary weapons on his skin, he added.

Simply gazing at the dog tag opened up a wellspring of memories from Tucker's two tours of duty in Vietnam, he said.

Tucker joined the Marine Corps at age 19 in November 1966. A member of Platoon 322, Tucker graduated from boot camp in February 1967. He arrived in Dan Nang on Aug. 13, 1967, and from there went to Camp Evans. During his two tours, he served in 48 operations. He spent nearly half a year at the Marine Corps fire base in Khe Sanh, were he was among the servicemen who operated 155 mm howitzer artillery cannons.

The immense guns weighed 26,000 pounds and had a range of about 13 miles - 19 if they were new. A full gun crew consisted of 13 men, though most of the time, Tucker said, they were just eight, sometimes six, men to each gun. Each artillery round fired from the guns weighed 98 pounds and took two men to load.

"Up there in Khe Sanh it was a hot fire base. We got hit every day up there. They'd wake us up in the morning and they'd put us to bed at night. There wasn't a day that went by that we didn't get hit," Tucker said.

Enemy units had entrenched artillery positions dug into tunnels in the nearby mountains, which were protected by 2-foot thick steel doors.

Nizan's determined search reminded Tucker of his own journey in tracking down servicemen he served with in Vietnam. One man used to live in Baltimore. They had reunited 25 years ago, but Tucker lost track of him. With the help of his son, who is also a veteran, Tucker managed to find the man last year via the Internet and has since met up with him four times.

It took Tucker 17 years to track down another good friend, John Bruce, who moved from Kansas to Colorado after the war. Tucker and his wife went on a road trip two years ago for a reunion with Bruce. "We've got a lot of good memories between us. I wouldn't trade them for nothing," Tucker said.

Now, thanks to Nizan's efforts, Tucker has something forever linking his memories to those he served with in Vietnam.

"It's just amazing, especially for him to take the time out to find me. He never gave up. I want to thank him for never giving up," Tucker said.

Today, Tucker is member of the Harpers Ferry-Bolivar District Veterans organization where he serves as chaplain. The group maintains veterans' cemeteries, provides military funeral services and other volunteer services for local veterans.

Nancy, his wife of nearly seven years, said it's amazing that after 40 years, her husband's dog tag still survived, and she thanked Nizan for devoting so much time to find her husband.

"He wanted him to have it back. It's very special to my husband and I just think it's absolutely amazing," she said. "I think it's a wonderful thing for a human being to do for another."

Nizan said it felt great to finally be able to return Tucker's dog tag back to him.

It allows him to reconnect with something from his past, giving him something to pass on to his kids and gives both of us a great story to tell," Nizan said. "The whole process was very fulfilling."

I GET MAIL

Dear Mr. Eichler,

First, let me thank you and your staff for the great job you do putting together every issue of Red Clay. I look forward to every issue.

Second, I would like to thank the Khe Sanh Veteran's Chaplain, Ron Rayner for his help with a very difficult situation here in New Jersey. For the record I am a career firefighter in Clifton, N.J. On 06 January, 2009, Elizabeth firefighter Gary Stephens was killed in the line of duty.

At times like these, all efforts are made to deal with the grief that follows. I contacted Ron to see if we could publish his article on PSTD that was published in issue 72 of Red Clay, in our February State newsletter.

Ron was more than helpful and his article appeared one month after firefighter Stephens death, it was greatly received. So to Ron, many thanks from the firefighters of New Jersey.

On page 92 of the same issue there was a terrific article about a New York Cop and a WWII Marine. What caught my attention was the writer Denis Hamill of the New York Daily News. Mr Hamill has written many articles about veterans in his career including one from my town honoring Bill Malcolm, a Clifton soldier who was killed in action during the Vietnam War. Denis Hamills brother also served in Vietnam with the 173rd Airborne.

I would appreciate it if Red Clay could remember Sgt. Bill Malcolm and publish the article written by Mr. Hamill. His mother still lives in Scranton, PA., and enjoys hearing or reading anything nice about him.

Denis Hamill still cares about our veterans and continues to write about their heroic actions. He deserves a little mention, whenever possible.

Yours Truly
Rich DeLotto

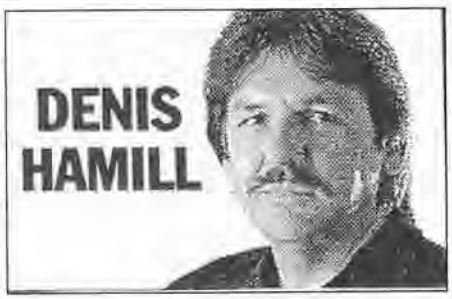
ED NOTE:

Rich, no problem, my pleasure. Although you requested not to be mentioned or given any credit for insuring our veterans are remembered in Clifton, NJ, you do deserve a shout out for all the time and energy you spend to insure their sacrifices are never forgotten.

LET'S GIVE THANKS FOR THE VETS, TOO

By Denis Hamill

Today is the 40th anniversary of the burial of John Fitzgerald Kennedy. More has been written about the murder of this legendary President in the last week than an average person could read in a lifetime.



So today, a few words are in order about another heroic American who was there the day John Fitzgerald Kennedy was lowered into the moist soil of Arlington National Cemetery. His name was Bill Malcolm and he was in charge of the 21-gun salute fired over President Kennedy's coffin that somber day of Nov. 25, 1963. To honor one of their native sons, the veterans of Clifton, N.J., VFW Post 7165 presented a plaque in Bill Malcolm's honor at Clifton High School.

Today, 40 years after JFK's burial, Malcolm is someone else we should remember. And on Thursday, he is another dead war hero for whom we should give thanks before we indulge in the bounty on the American table in a time of war. William Edward Malcolm Jr. was born on Sept.

4,1941, in Clifton, a small city of 78,000 across the Hudson not much different from a neighborhood in Brooklyn, Queens or Staten Island.

In 1960, the year John Fitzgerald Kennedy took office, Bill Malcolm graduated from Clifton High. A year later, as the new President's famous inaugural words still echoed from sea to shining sea, this patriotic young man asked not what his country could do for him but rather what he could do for his country.

He joined the Army, and within six months, Pvt. Bill Malcolm, an only child, began walking the honor guard detail of the 3rd Infantry Division at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Washington.

"Over the next three years, Bill participated in over 3,000 funerals, including Gen. Douglas MacArthur's," says Rich DeLotto, a Clifton firefighter who initiated the plaque ceremony.

WILLIAM EDWARD MALCOLM JR
SERGEANT, FIRST CLASS U.S. ARMY.

ED MALCOLM STANDING GUARD AT PRESIDENT JOHN F. KENNEDY'S GRAVE, ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETARY

On Nov. 22, 1963, Sgt. Bill Malcolm stood guard detail in the East Room of the White House after John Fitzgerald Kennedy's body was flown home from Dallas and lay in state as the nation mourned.

Two days later, Sgt. Bill Malcolm marched in front of the horse-drawn carriage carrying Kennedy's body from the White House to St. Matthew's Church for the Low Mass and then up Pennsylvania Ave. with dignitaries from 220 nations to the slow beat of muffled drums, passing" the weeping crowds. And then Bill Mal-colm led the honor guard through the 21-gun salute that still echoes in history.

"His contributions to the President's burial were recorded in William Manchester's book, '[The] Death of a President "says DeLotto." He was only 22 years old at the time."

But soon the war in Vietnam that Kennedy had started would escalate under newly sworn-in President Lyndon Johnson, and 1st Sgt. Bill Malcolm wound up in Vietnam with the 101st Airmobile Division, in a place called Thua Thien.

"Tragically, 6-1/2 years after JFK's funeral, Bill Malcolm was killed in action on May 5, 1970, in Vietnam," says DeLotto. "He was only 28 years old."

It was a time for other young honor guards to salute Bill Malcolm. The funeral was attended by his wife and three children. "He received the Silver Star posthumously," says DeLotto. "His mother, who is alive today, still grieves for her only son."

Sgt. 1st Class Malcolm is etched on panel 11 W line 103 of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington. Now he will be remembered on another wall, this one in his old high school.

"Six of us will be going down to the high school to present this plaque," says. Clifton VFW Post Commander Rich Eickhoff. "We don't forget our heroes in Clifton. Rich DeLotto, who works as a firefighter, makes sure of that. He is forever keeping the memories of the Vietnam vets alive in this city."

Often, lost in the headline frenzy are the unsung heroes who were a vital part of history. Brave young guys like Bill Malcolm who come from our small towns and cities and working-class neighborhoods, who graduate from fine little high schools and make it a part of their life's work to serve their country, sometimes become small but important parts of our historical milestones. And then sometimes they give their lives in our wars and are awarded medals and are buried with mournful taps and cracking rifles and then forgotten in the dust of time. Not Bill Malcolm.

Not in Clifton, where 40 years after he led the 21-gun salute over the coffin of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, Bill Malcolm is being remembered by the people from his hometown in Clifton High School, which helped prepare him for his short heroic life. "This ceremony will mark 40 years to the day - Nov. 25, 1963 - when an American soldier served his country," DeLotto says. Bill Malcolm - another one for whom to give thanks .

As a kid growing up in the Lakeview section of Clifton, Bill loved to fish, any time and anywhere he could. He participated in the Boy Scouts and attended St. Paul's Church. After graduating Clifton High School, class of 1960, Bill enlisted in the Army, took basic training in Fort Dix, NJ and advanced training in Fort Benning, Georgia. He applied for and received appointment to the "Old Guard" 3rd Infantry Regiment, Fort Meyers, Virginia. The 3rd Regiment performs funerals at Arlington National Cemetery and guards the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Bill Malcolm reported for new assignment in January 1961.

In 1964 Bill was transferred to Germany and served with the 2nd Armored Division until 1967 when he returned state side. He then became a drill instructor in Fort Campbell, Kentucky. During his time in Europe and Fort Campbell, Bill became an expert pistol shooter, competing in Army competition. He won a total of 9 trophies and 2 medals. In 1969, he asked and received transfer to active duty with the 101 st Airborne Division. He received his orders for Viet Nam and arrived on September 22, 1969. During his first 6 months Bill received the Combat Infantry's Badge and was awarded the Bronze Star. On May 5, 1970, Sergeant First Class William E. Malcolm while acting as field First Sergeant for Company "C", 502 BTN, 101st Airborne, was killed by hostile gun fire while assaulting an enemy position. He was awarded the Silver Star, posthumously for his actions. He left behind his parents, a wife and 3 children and a sister. On May 5th 1970. Sergeant Malcolm became the last Clifton man to sacrifice his life in Viet Nam.

MARINE SPREADS WORD OF BAD WATER

John Hartung unfurls a Marine Corps flag at his Waukesha home. A Marine stationed at Camp Lejeune, N.C., in the 1970s, Hartung attributes a number of ailments to exposure to toxic chemicals in the drinking water there.

FOR 30 YEARS, CAMP LEJEUNE EXPOSED TROOPS TO CHEMICALS

By Meg Jones
mjones@journalsentinel.com

Waukesha - John Hartung thought something was wrong with the water while he was stationed at Camp Lejeune.

The Milwaukee native joined the Marines in 1977 and spent six months at the Marine Corps base in North Carolina. He drank from the bubblers and the water tanks brought out to troops training in the field, brushed his teeth, ate in the chow halls and swam in the pool.

Unfortunately for Hartung, his suspicions would not be confirmed for decades.

"I said, 'This water tastes funny.' They said, 'That's how it tastes down here,'" said Hartung, who got cysts on his neck and was sent to the infirmary. "I saw others with boils and rashes, and they didn't know why."

Hartung, in the office of his Waukesha home, has started a Web site to spread the word about toxic chemicals at Camp Lejeune to others that were stationed there. The Marines say as many as 500,000 may have been exposed.

Something was very wrong with the drinking water at Camp Lejeune. Before wells were closed at the base in 1984 and 1985, tests showed drinking water was contaminated by toxic chemicals, in-cluding very high concentrations - more than 40 times the current EPA limit - of industrial solvents trichloroethylene and perchloroethylene.

Hartung didn't find out until a few years ago about the high incidence of canters in people who worked and lived at Camp Lejeune, and of birth defects and illnesses of children born at the base, Now he's trying to get the word out to Marines living in Wisconsin who spent time at Camp Lejeune from 1957 to 1987, the years the government has identified as the period when toxic chemicals tainted the drinking water.

Hartung, who now lives in Waukesha, has started a Web site www.lifeaftercamplejeune.com to alert others about the problem. "I want to see people get their benefits and to say, 'I was poisoned, but at least they took care of me and my family,' " said Hartung, 49, who, has chronic fatigue as well as other ailments and can no longer work.

Under a law signed last year by President George W. Bush, the Marines are required to notify those who may have been exposed to contaminated water at Camp Lejeune. The military says an off-base dry cleaning business, now closed, was to blame, as well as chemicals leaking from underground storage tanks and unsafe disposal practices at the base.

Tracking Toxic Exposure

The Marines encourage anyone who served at Lejeune or worked there during that time to participate in a registry. Studies are under way by the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry to determine if there's a link between the health problems of those who drank the tainted water.

Women who were in their first trimester of pregnancy when exposed seem to have been affected more than others, said Jeff Dimond, health communications specialist with the agency.

Tracking as many people as possible "is a task the complexity of 'which gets more and more difficult every day. Understand that problems with the dry cleaner dumping the (trichloroethylene and perchloroethylene) into the ground and contaminating the ground water happened at the height of the Vietnam War," . Dimond said. "The good thing, if there is such a thing, is that the Population was transient at the time, so they weren't exposed as much. But the bad thing was they were exposed."

Allen Menard got a letter from the military last year. It was the first he had heard of water problems at the base, where he spent three years in the early 1980s.

The Green Bay man was diagnosed in 2001 with mycosis fungoides, a rare skin cancer. And his wife suffered a miscarriage in 1984, losing their daughter's twin; while Menard was stationed at Lejeune and the couple lived near the base.

"I started looking at what the heck we were exposed to. I looked at the chemicals and I thought, 'Oh my God, that's where I got my skin cancer from.' It's very rare for someone my age," said Menard, 45.

Joe Alexander spent most of 1978 at Lejeune serving with the 6th Marines. He didn't suffer any health problems until 2000, when a cyst was discovered on his pancreas. He was hospitalized for a year, followed by several months in a nursing home to relearn how to Walk, swallow and talk.

CAMP RESIDENTS SOUGHT

People who think they might have been exposed to toxic drinking water at Camp Lejeune, the Marine base in North Carolina, between 1957 and 1987 should contact the Marines. The military is compiling a registry of people who worked. lived or visited the base during that time period and drank the water. For more information or to register. call or go to:
c1water@usmc.mil
(877) 261-9782;
or https://clnr.hqi.usmc.mil/clwater/.

Other Web sites dedicated to Camp Lejeune water are: www.lifeaftercamplejeune.com and www.tftptf.com.

Alexander 50, learned last year about the water he drank at Lejeune. "I Worked for Wisconsin .Electric for almost 17 years, and I'm familiar with trichloroethylene and I know how hazardous it can be," said Alexander, of Milwaukee. "It's used to. strip paint off metal. I can imagine what it will do to your insides."

It's unknown just how many people drank the tainted water, but a Marines spokeswomen said the military estimates it could be as many as a half million.

When finally finished Dimond said, the registry will be the largest in the history of the U.S. government. The Marines hope to reach as many people as possible through a Web site and call center, direct mailings, contacting local and national media and notifying veterans groups.

"More probably could have been done in the past. Fortunately, today we have a lot more resources to get the word out and notify people," said Marine Capt. Amy Malugani.

Those who think they were affected by the tainted water can file a claim by going to www.marines.mil and clicking on "Camp Lejeune Water Study" under links.

For Menard, Alexander and Hartung, efforts by the Marines to reach out to them are too late.

"The Marine Corps motto is Semper Fi. That means always faithful," said Menard. "They're not being faithful. They knew this back in the '80s. They finally got in touch with us in 2008? That's a joke."

PRIEST PLANS BOOK ABOUT VIETNAM EXPIERENCE

By Mike Fishbaugh

From noon till 1800 today, KSCB and surrounding out post received about 70 rounds of incoming, 2 KIA & 8 WIA

(Battalion of Kings- page 251)

The faces drift back to Houston Matthews from across four decades. Marines he fought beside in Vietnam are with him always, especially on Memorial Day, when he salutes fellow riflemen killed at such places as Con Thien and Khe Sanh.

It was during the 1968 Siege of Khe Sanh – one of the most controversial battles of the Vietnam War – that Matthews received the wounds that cost him an eye and a leg.

A retired Episcopal priest from Gastonia, Matthews kept the war bottled up inside for years, haunted by memories of friends who didn't come back.

About nine years ago, he first got professional help for post-traumatic stress. Recently, he started counseling soldiers back from Iraq and Afghanistan. Now, he's about to launch a project friends have been urging him to do for years: Write a book that blends his experiences in war and the ministry.

"I want to encourage any veteran who is still struggling," said Matthews, 62. "I want to help broken people get in better shape emotionally, psychologically and spiritually. To help them get things under control."

Getting his own life under control took years. His first marriage ended in divorce and even after he became an Episcopal priest in 1977 he struggled with suppressed anger.

It helped to talk about the war in an interview he did for the 1990 book "Landing Zones: Southern Veterans Remember Vietnam" by James Wilson.

But the healing process had a long way to go. Memories were still too fresh for him.

Matthews grew up in Gastonia, where his family managed the Belk store that later became Matthews-Belk. After a year at Wingate College, he dropped out.

"I was unsettled and needed a little more maturity," he said. "I needed to do some soul-searching." In January 1967, Matthews joined the Marines; six months later, he was in Vietnam, a demolition specialist with the Third Marine Division. On his first patrol, he tried to help a young Marine who'd been wounded, but the man died within a few minutes.

At Con Thien, a combat base on the Demilitarized Zone, rockets, mortars and artillery shells showered down almost nonstop. On his third day there, sitting a few hundred yards from a command bunker where about six people were talking, he heard "the screaming sound rockets make."

"Then – boom – it landed right on top of the bunker and blew it to smithereens," Matthews said. "Everybody died. People I knew."

Khe Sanh was even worse. The remote base with 5,000 to 6,000 U.S. forces was under siege by a North Vietnamese army of more than 20,000. Matthews arrived in January 1968 at a camp on the base perimeter.

It was a deadly landscape. Matthews helped pick up the bodies of about 60 Marines killed when their outpost was overrun by 400 North Vietnamese soldiers. On March 28, walking back from a bunker, Matthews heard the whistle of an incoming rocket.

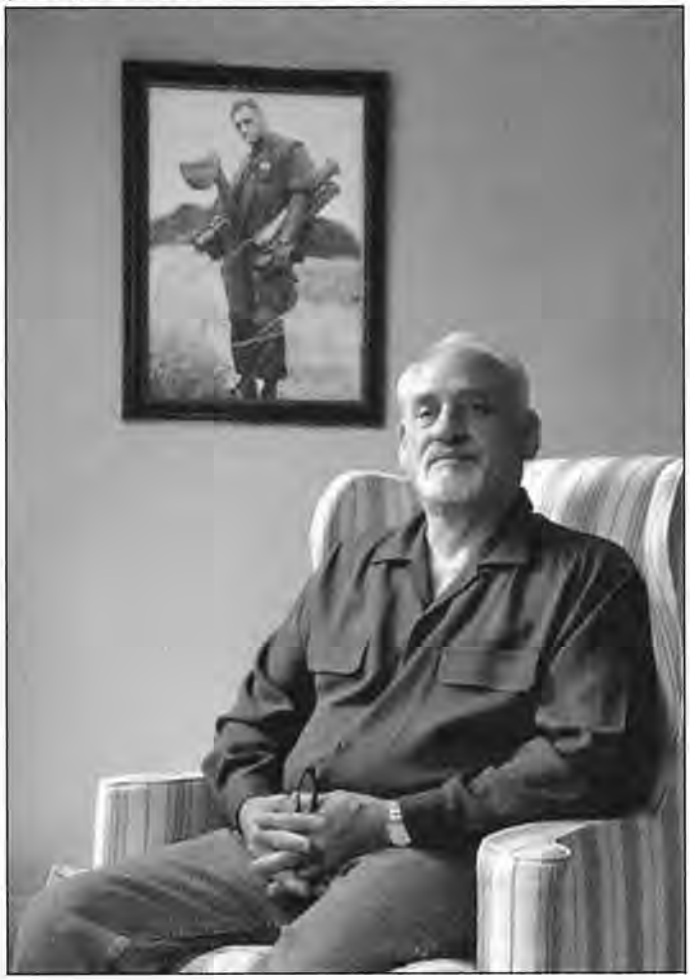
Seconds later, he was on the ground, bleeding. Shrapnel had sprayed the front of his body. Carried by stretcher a mile to the main base, he was evacuated by helicopter while the aircraft came under heavy fire. After surgery aboard the hospital ship Repose, Matthews reached down to feel his left leg and found "it was just a stump."

The loss of his right eye was also a price he paid at Khe Sanh. The physical wounds healed. But the spiritual mending took much longer because Matthews had to reach deep inside and figure out how to move on with life. Starting the book is another step in the journey.

Pat Cheshire is glad his old friend is finally writing about his experiences. In 1971, Cheshire and Matthews taught Sunday school together at Gastonia's All Saints Episcopal Church before Matthews entered seminary. Later Cheshire became an ordained Episcopal deacon and worked with Matthews at All Saints.



Cheshire, 58, has been nagging Matthews to write a book. "I guarantee it'll be deep and passionate," he said. David Burns, who has known Matthews since childhood and joined the Navy the same summer his friend joined the Marines, feels the book will have particular meaning for severely wounded veterans.

"Houston's been through it," said Burns, 62. "He's lived it. He's a good preacher, but he's an even better teacher."

Matthews hopes his story will be a guide for veterans who are still struggling, and also be a memorial to the Marines he fought with and remembers

POETRY

"Angel Wings"
He was an angel
He was a gift
Just when the country
Needed a shift

Cracks in the sidewalk
Buildings reduced to toast
No food when people
Needed it the most

With hands held out
Ready to go
In the distance
A burning glow

A flame shot out
Killed the saint Surrounding people
Could only faint

As they looked Upon the man
All they could see
Was a burnt hand

He had only
Tried to help
But all that he did
Was make them yelp

To this day
We still try
To make that place
Flourish and fly

We don't mean harm
We only give
All we ask
Is for the angels to live

KHE SANH GATEWAY TO HELL 1999

BAS-ACKWARD DAYS AT KHE SANH

By William Crapser
A CO 3RD FORCE RECON

It is quite true what philosophy says: "that life must be under-stood backwards. But then one forgets the other principle: that it must be lived forwards. Which principle, the more one thinks it through, ends exactly with the thought that temporal life can never properly be understood precisely, because I can at no instant find complete rest in which to adopt the position: backwards." - Soren Kierkegaard, Papers and Journals.

I served with the 3rd Marine Division in Vietnam from Oct. '68 to Oct. '69. I'm always amazed that for the past forty years whether I'm watching the History Channel or any Viet-nam documentary that they always jump from the Tet Offensive of 1968, including the siege at Khe Sanh, right to the Cambodian Invasion of 1970. What happened to the year 1969? We all went through one hell-of-a-Tet Offensive ourselves in February, 1969. It was called Operation DEWEY CANYON, and instead of fighting the NVA in the cities like Hue, or allowing some siege somewhere, our Commanding Officer, General Raymond Davis, sent us into the Ashau Valley, to fight the NVA there on their home turf, and keep them on their own turf.

We took horrendous casualties during the year 1969. Yet that entire year doesn't exist, either in books on Vietnam or documentary films. Where'd it go? I was there. I know I was! Because for forty years now I've never been able to forget my bas-akward days of doom in Vietnam!

Let me try to explain myself. Since they were bas-akward days let me start at the end of my tour and work, of course, backwards!

In October, 1969, Richard Nixon was President and he began withdrawing troops from Vietnam. In the case of the 3rd Marine Division and us 'up-northers' he took everybody first who had more than ten months in the bush. I was almost through my twelfth month, so away I was going. I wanted to be bas-akwards, left behind, to be alone, and get blown up with Hill 950.

I just wanted to be destroyed with the rest of it, while drunk of course, while looking down off that hill at the abandoned Khe Sanh airstrip as my last vision, and while looking at it, I was going to be praying for all the Khe Sanh vets, the living and the wounded and the dead. And all the brothers who had died on Hill 950 and Hill 1015 and on Hill 881 North and South, also Hill 861, Hill 861-Alfa, Hill 689, Hill 471, the battle of Khe Sanh Village, and, and-all the hills, and the Special Forces Camp at Lang Vei, too! Well, my friend, let's keep going bas -ackwards, as it really was for me and my comrades.

On my last patrol with Alpha Company, 3rd Recon Bn, I was as usual walking point for my team, and of course because of the high casualties and rotations, I hardly knew the team leader. I didn't know any of the team. Since we never won any ground and we never lost any ground, I was walking and hunting the NVA on the same ground I had walked eleven months before.

When it was near nightfall and time to set up our harbor site for the night, I halted the team and made my way back to the new team leader. I told him I had been there before and we had a good spot near the top of the hill to the right. We went up there and jumped into some abandoned grunts fighting holes.

I ate my C-rations and dug a hole in the corner of my hold to bury them, and there were my rusting C-ration cans I had buried in the exact same spot ten months before! just added my new cans to the old, rusting pile. I was spending the last weeks of my tour of duty up on Hill 950 which was code-named Romeo Relay for the 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion.

I had been with Alpha Company, 3rd Recon until I was short. Since everything was bas-ackwards during my tour, my last month was spent with Headquarters Company, 3rd Recon, and there I was, up on Hill 950, when the so-called withdrawal news arrived.

I wasn't too thrilled by the idea. Too many of my buddies had been killed or horribly maimed by then, and my own head was constantly spinning around inside itself, and I didn't want to give up. I wanted to win that war! But I, along with everybody else, would have to settle for something far less than victory.

So I decided to settle myself down on top of a bunker that was the farthest down, and closest to where I could clearly see the abandoned Khe Sanh airstrip below me, with Army Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD for short) wired up Hill 950 to blow it up after we were all taken off it.

I didn't want to be taken off it. So I took a case of real beer, a warm one at that, and started to get drunk. Real drunk!

I remember that I occasionally glanced back over my shoulder to watch the EOD guys running detonation cord and explosives from bunker to bunker. I even lifted my legs once so the Det Cord wouldn't tie me down in any way.

Now, since we're going bas-ackwards, let me continue my forward to back story, so it stays true as I knew it. As they say, "Marines never retreat! We just relocate to more strategic ground!" I agree. But I must add, "Going bas-ackwards," of course!

When I was on my first or second patrol in late October or early November, 1968, we were out patrolling the small hills in the Khe Sanh valley. At night we set up our harborsite in abandoned NVA trenches that had, just nine months before, been occupied by them. So this is also a sort of bas-ackwards birth of our defeat it seems. The NVA had occupied them as Forward Observers to call in artillery onto Khe Sanh airstrip, occupied by Marines. We were in their trenches to call in artillery on the NVA on Khe Sanh airstrip. Remember, we were far enough away to have to use binoculars. My 3rd Platoon Commander was with us and spotted NVA campfires, small ones; and I looked too, and yep, there they were. I was on the radio; he called out the coordinates and we rained hell down on the Khe Sanh airstrip. The small fires disappeared and there were secondary explosions, so we got them the same way they got us!

But tell me, my friend, what's wrong with this picture? Where did 1969 go? Why am I moving bas-ackwards all the time? Yet this is the truth as I remember it. Backwards of course. That's it, really, except for that being the beginning of my very dizzying tour of duty in Vietnam.

Now for the end of the story. The Army EOD teams had the whole hill wired for the big explosion. Chopper after chopper came in and landed to pick up Marines, CH-46s as well as Huey slicks. This all happened behind me. A chopper would approach and a senior NCO with a bullhorn would announce who they would be picking up and that group would run and board. This went on for a couple of hours.

But then the whole of Hill 950 was strangely quiet. While I, strangely drunk to the gills, was all alone and down to my last three cans. I opened one of them and took a good swallow, and I could only hear the wind rustling the loose shelter halfs, and making ghostly whispering sounds through the wire.

I was the last Marine on Hill 950. I said the Lord's Prayer, then the 23rd Psalm, and waited to go home. But, to my disappointment there was a final overflight by a Huey and they spotted me down there. They landed and dragged me, screaming and kicking, and threw me on board and took off.

When we were directly over Khe Sanh airstrip, flying east, I looked one last time at Hill 950. It blew up like a volcano exploding.

And I never did get to go home. Instead they sent me back to America where I've never found home since. And this is my bas-ackwards story of trying to get high enough to escape the doom of days in Vietnam.

He recently sent Ray Stubbe a manuscript of another book, and gave permission for the proceeding chapter to be published in RED CLAY. It covers the time he was on Hill 950 when it was about to be destroyed.

The following is a review of his first book and included is an essay he had written for a previously published article.

From Publishers Weekly

Crapser joined the Marines in 1967, was assigned to a reconnaissance battalion and eventually became a point man for patrols. Remains is his catharsis for what he witnessed in Vietnam, told with an intensity, a vividness, that gives voice to the terrible absurdity of war. In the prose-poem "The Descent," which opens this remarkable debut collection, a drill instructor at boot camp yells at the young men in training, "Become strong! There's fightin' an' dyin' waitin' for ya!" And Paul Timons, the character that the pieces follow from his induction to after his release from the war when he becomes a self-described malcontent and pacifist, finds the DI's exclamations to be horrifyingly true. The reader will participate vicariously in Timons's "Baptism of Fire" and read his letters home, in which he writes to a friend, "How do we win? . . . I haven't any idea except we're supposed to fight to the death. Death has the clearest meaning here." As a point man, Timons relies on his disciplined fear to stay alive as the sounds of artillery and explosions shatter his sleep, concertina wires slice into unsuspecting soldiers and traps, and mines and the Viet Cong keep up a relentless aggression against the unwanted American soldiers. In "Wild Child," Timons returns home and fights his nightmares, rage and disillusionment without any hope of winning, to find himself, ultimately, in a veterans' hospital under sedation.

ESSAY

By William Crapser

Returning From Vietnam

I had been trying to come home from Vietnam since 1969; more than eighteen years. Over the years it seemed I had been condemned to death in Vietnam, and that I was slowly dying with the nineteen-year-old marine I was when I fought there. Over the years the young marine I was kept a tight hold on me and lived in anguish inside me. He took tighter and tighter control of my life until, toward the end of my refusing him, of my guilt over him, of my refusal to recognize him, his full anger exploded. The doctors told me it was a flashback. But I saw only him.

Still refusing to accept his existence inside me, I took vast amounts of drugs to suppress him, subjected myself to being strapped down and injected with Thorazine. "This will keep him in check!" I thought. But he did not go away.

His anguished screams rose up inside and became mine. My mouth would open and the sound I made was not a grown man's.

The way I conducted my life — living on the edges of society, looking and dressing like an angry nineteen year old, acting out my crisis like and adolescent — only strengthened his grip. I became numb with my own anger, doubled with his anger, the two of us facing down each other inside me, resembling a father and son who don't like each other but are stuck together in their blood.

The first decision I made which led to my recovery was to recognize him as me. That, yes, I was the nineteen -year-old point man lying flat on my face in terror and fear as the enemy rounds impacted around me. That, yes, I was the nineteen-year-old marine who had killed and, at times, killed without remorse. I realized I could not fight him anymore or deny him. I realized I would have to make peace with him and bring him home.

So I began to meditate on him, think about him-the "me" who was a nineteen-year-old in Vietnam-until I could see him very clearly in my mind. He looked sad and he was very tired. When I really focused on him, I too felt sad for what he had gone through and I realized how badly I wanted him out of the war. Then an idea dawned in me.

I decided to bring him home. I began by picturing the nineteen-year-old "me" stopping, then dropping his rucksack, his suspender straps and web-belt, his gas mask and K-bar knife. Then I watched him (in my mind) throw his rifle on top of the pile. Then I watched him take off his camouflage utilities and wipe the camouflage grease-paint off his face. When he was finished, I placed a men's clothing store in front of him (I realized, too, I could really think anything I wanted) and had him go in and pick out some nice civilian clothes. I watched him dress in jeans and a sports shirt and a light jacket (he also picked out a suit). As I watched him dress I could see some of the pain and exhaustion lift from his face. When he was done, I told him he was going home, that he didn't have to fight anymore, that he was being discharged. He burst into laughter and tears and ran toward me, his arms wide as if to embrace me. And inside me we embraced. Then I put him on a plane and sent him to someone I knew would love and care for him, someone who would listen to his stories and calm him through his frights. Someone who would always be there for him.

I sent him home to me.

REVIEWS

"Expendable Warriors reveals a little-known chapter in the story of the siege of Khe Sanh--how the battle really began and who was targeted in the first and biggest North Vietnamese assault in the opening round of an epic clash."

Joseph L. Galloway, co-author: We Were Soldiers Once...and Young and Triumph Without Victory: The History of the Persian Gulf War.*

"Presented here in graphic detail is an autographical account of the preliminary battle of Khe Sanh, the opener for the Tet Offensive of 1968, by the genuine American hero who commanded the American and South Vietnamese side. This under reported and close fought preliminary battle was engaged well outside of the famous Khe Sanh siege perimeter. As such, the work is both a primary historical source and interesting reading material for its own sake."

Military Magazine

"Warrior, professor, deep thinker, and highly engaging and articulate writer, Bruce Clarke has written with compassion and wisdom borne of his personal experience in the village of Khe Sanh, 38 years ago. Good war stories take a long time to write, and this one is worth the wait. I am fascinated by the tale and the wonderful new insights that this major historian and military analyst brings to the reader. His sharing of the battle before the battle, the defeat of an NVA Regiment before the main Khe Sanh battle ever began, is masterfully told. A real page turner. And the lessons learned that he shares are well worth noting at a time when we are again, as a nation, engaged in war."

John K. Swensson, Dean, Language Arts Division; De Anza College and Custodian, The DeCillis Viet Nam Conflict Collection*

"Most books studying the 1968 siege of Khe Sanh focus on the Marine Corps' defense of the base and the hilltops to the north. Other books examine the fall of the nearby Lang Vei Special Forces Camp overrun by North Vietnamese tanks. To most Khe Sanh was a Marine battle. While heavily shelled and the hilltop outposts fought off attacks, the main base experienced only minor ground attacks. There was another battle though, unheralded in most books, the vicious fight for Khe Sanh Village south of the main base. This fight saw 25 Army and Marine advisors and 175 Vietnamese irregular troops fighting off a North Vietnamese regular regiment. Bruce Clarke aptly describes the valor and spirit of the defenders as they beat back repeated assaults with little support from the main base. This is a first person account of a virtually unheard of battle characterized by heroism and dedication to duty."

Gordon L. Rottman, Author, Khe Sanh 1967-68*

I'm honored that Bruce Clarke has portrayed the bravery of not only the Americans but all of us who fought and won the largest ground battle of the siege of Khe Sanh. We believed in our cause and dedicated our lives to it and this book clearly illustrates what many efforts about the Vietnam War do not--the bravery and efforts of the warriors who fought beside the Americans in the Vietnam War. The spirits of the ARVN soldiers who lost their lives at Khe Sanh would smile and say " Cam ơn Đại Ta Clarke (Thank you COL Clarke) because their sacrifice has not been totally forgotten.

Major Tinh-A-Nhi, District Chief Huong Hoa District, RVN, 1966-68.*

"Expendable Warriors' is an autobiographical account of the battle of Khe Sanh by one of the genuine American heroes of the 1968 Tet Offensive. That alone makes the work both a primary historical source and interesting reading material...[B]eyond history and autobiography, Col. Clarke offers two significant criticisms of the way the Vietnam War was fought: the lack of unity of command, and the misguided attempt to measure victory by body count. Professional and amateur historians will appreciate this text, and so will teachers of political and military science, as well as teachers of international relations."

Dr. John L. Safford, Professor of Political Science, University of South Carolina*

Colonel Clarke's analysis of the events around Khe Sanh is must reading for future combat leaders. In fact, it should be read by everyone. We should all heed Bruce s admonition that We need to learn from our mistakes and ensure that we don t repeat them. We owe it to the next generation of brave soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines that they will not have to endure similar tests of their courage and determination.

General Jack Vessey, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff 1982-85, from the forward to Expendable Warriors*

"Clarke's purpose is to set the record straight--clarifying reports and stories that have failed to accurately depict what happened."

ARMY

"Clarke describes the experiences of himself and his colleagues in the battles around the Khe Sanh Combat base in 1968, during the Vietnam War. He looks at the decision-making at multiple levels surrounding the battle, which he judges to have been a bloody tactical victory and a strategic defeat for the United States."

BATTLE ON HILL 564
DUSK ON RIDGE 700

By Joe Beebe
F/Co 2/26

I think today is the right time to share this with my brothers.

Regardless of the senseless command, I stood, and charged across the ridge thinking Sanch was next to me, but he had gone elsewhere. Nothing was making sense. I didn't know where or what I was charging. My mind raced with confusion. Where's my gun teams? Where's the enemy? Who's screaming? Should I keep running? Running to where? I frantically looked about.

Through the dust and morbid desolation, a shadowy figure came into view. He lay on his back, in the open, by himself. I ran toward the body and dove, landing alongside of it. I stared in shock. It was Moses. His left leg had been blown off just below the knee, revealing a jagged bone dripping with reddish, purple flesh. Twisted in an outrageous direction, his right leg was still attached, but his foot was missing.

I let out a violent scream, "Corpsman up! Corpsman up! You're going to be all right, Cliff. We'll get you out of here," I muttered almost crying. I hastily tied a tourniquet around his left thigh and another around his right shin. "There, there Cliff Moses, you're going to be just fine." But I knew he wouldn't make it. I looked into his eyes; he was alone, far from the battlefield. Cradling him in my arms, I again screamed for relief, "where's the ######## corpsman? "Moses was delirious and mumbling. "What, Cliff?" I asked insanely thinking he was getting better. "What is it? Here take some water." I lifted my canteen up to his lips and allowed the water to dribble into his mouth.

Doc Updike finally scrambled over to us but arrived late, much too late. Moses' once muscular body now lay shattered, motionless, and lifeless.

A voice echoed, "let's go Corporal! We've got to get out of here! C'mon, let's go!"

"Who's talking to me? Who's calling me?"

Piercing sounds of teenagers crying and screaming broke through my fog ending the trance. The doc had moved on hoping to squelch some of the wailing. The enemy maintained a ferocious barrage of mortars.

What about Moses, I just can't leave him here. I slung my rifle over my shoulder and wedged my hands under his armpits. His head flopped forward, his sawed-off legs bounced on the earth as I dragged his battered body across the battlefield. I came to the edge of a crater and Moses and I toppled in backwards landing on the floor of the bombed out hole.

We were not alone. The captain, (Divelbiss) radioman, Zimmo, Sanch and a Marine, whom I did not recognize, had found the safety of the crater and shielded themselves against its side.

Taking a chance, I nudged my head above the crater's edge and peeked out over the ridge. Its width and length amazed me. Evil columns of smoke curled up from various locations. No Marines were in sight. I had yet to see the enemy and was completely oblivious of my men's whereabouts. Time had vanished. It had to be early in the evening, maybe six, seven o'clock. I don't know. A ghostly calm settled over the battlefield. The incoming tailed off, only sporadic pops of rifle fire crackled the air with tension.

Captain Divelbiss propped himself on his elbows and peered through his binoculars.

"Corporal, over here!" he called. I slid around next to his side. Sir?""Take a few men and search the ridge for any missing Marines. Battalion wants us off this wretched mountain top before dark," he emphasized. "Yes, Sir," I answered without any thought. I turned and glanced around the crater.

"Take a few men? We only have few men," I murmured.

"Take this Marine with you and go down the right side," I ordered Zimmo, and pointed to the unknown Marine. "Sanch and I will work the left edge. If you find anyone, bring them back to the crater."

"See you dudes when I get back," Zimmo assured us. "Let's go," he said to his new comrade. (Zimmo did make it back, pulling PFC Ford, who had been wounded in the legs, across the ridge using his cartridge belt.) Zimmo didn't hesitate. With a running start, he dashed up the side and over the rim of the crater heading for the open area. His partner tensely waited and then bravely followed. When he reached the top of the pit, a bullet slammed into him spinning him backward to the crater's floor.

Sanch and I shed our rifles and bandoleers, and grabbed a couple of grenades. With some hesitation, I asked, "Ready old friend?" "Ready, Joe."Let's go."

We cautiously crawled over the far rim and slithered along side by side. Unsure of the enemies' whereabouts, we continued our snail-like pace nervously gazing across the ridge looking for bodies and stopping often to hug the ground.
"Joe, we're not going to make it aback, are we?" Sanch whispered.

"Probably not," I expressed in honestly. "Well then, let's just get up and run for it," he offered."What the hell, why not?" I agreed. Surrendering ourselves from the safety of the earth, we rose to our feet and took flight across the ridge. It was probably the single greatest decision I ever made in my life. What made it easy was that we were all in it together. All of us had one thing in common: given the chance, we always put the other guy ahead of ourselves.

My helmet bounced wildly as I pulled ahead of Sanch and raced across the hilltop expecting to be driven back to the ground under the impact of an AK-47 round. Shot, killed. I screamed while dashing in despair, or anger, or maybe in pain. I spotted a slight indentation in a fold of the ridge and dove for cover.

"Over here, Sanch! I screamed. "C'mon, man, you can make it!" I encouraged.

Sanch flew in, landing next to me. Cautiously, I peeked above our semi-protected site and scanned the ridge. "There's Sgt. Connell!" I blurted out.
We're coming to get you, Sarge," I yelled to him.

Sanch and I jumped to our feet and charged across the short distance. Fortunately, we settled into a slight impression directly below the Sarge unharmed.

"Sanch, I'll lay on my stomach and you pull the sarge on top of me. I'll take him back to the crater and meet you back here."

Sanch reached up, grabbed the Sarge by his flak jacket and rolled him toward us. Whoosh! Whoosh!

Two bullets viciously ripped their way into the sergeant's chest. He fell limp on top of me; I struggled to my feet and staggered my way in the direction of the crate.

"You'll be okay, Sarge. I've got you," I mumbled. And, at the same time, I couldn't rid my mind of the terrible sound the bullets had made when they tore into Sergeant Connell. Like stabbing a watermelon.

The distance seemed forever with the refuge finally coming into view. I stumbled to its edge. "Here's the Sarge," I gasped dumping him into the arms of two Marines.

Without delay, I turned to retrace my steps. I wove a jagged pattern, following what I though was my previous route to hook back up with Sanch, but failed. He was nowhere to be found.

Darkness had closed in and almost completely curtained the sun. The ridge looked dead. Dead Marines, dead trees, dead dirt, everything had taken on a silent shrill of death. No rifles sounded. No more thump of mortars. Maybe the enemy was dead too. Everything just lay horribly still.

I was completely void of attitude and felt moderately at peace, like I was the lone survivor in the world and world consisted of only the ridge. I strolled across the wide expanse surrounded by the eerie walls that hemmed me in, heading somewhere, but nowhere in particular.

A Marine appeared on the far side. Or was it a delusion? He lay on his back, waiving one arm aimlessly. I broke into a quivering trot, thinking that maybe it was Sanch. Kneeling at his side, I turned his head to face me. My heart was already at an all-powerful low, yet I still felt a sharp piercing. "Beebe," Corporal Schroeder gurgled. In a panic, I unsnapped his flak jacket, spread it open, and stared in disbelief. I skimmed my hand over his cold, scarlet stained torso and then held it in front of my face. It was dry. Don hemorrhaged from the inside. He was filling up with blood. Drowning in his blood. Poor, Don, far from home, so very far.

"I'm taking you back. You'll be in a nice, comfortable bed tonight," I whispered in his ear. I hoisted him over my shoulder and dizzily tramped on. Tiredness racked my body down to my bones. Physical exhaustion took over causing me to fall and drop my friend. "I'm sorry, Don. I've got you," I muttered picking him back up. I stumbled forward under the weight of my load and at last arrived at the crater.

Corpsman up! Corpsman up!: I called out in a tender scream. "I've got Corporal Schroeder. He's still alive. We've got to get him out of here." My plea bounced off the dirt walls of the cavity and returned to me empty. stared down into the crater. It was empty. Maybe I'm in the wrong place. No, this is right. And then with a cold chill it dawned on me, Foxtrot Company had all left. In the darkness of the night, I sat at the bottom of the gloomy hollow, cradling Don, trying to soothe him. He began to choke and belch up blood. Then his head sagged forward and his body fell lifeless. I tried to revive him, but realized Don had slipped away. Again, thank you men for listening. It feels very good to vomit the Vietnam experience. Peace, Joe (Sanchez, Zimmerman also earned Bronze Stars w/V on this day)

LIONS OF MEDINA

Late afternoon, Thursday, October 12, 1967. Marine Lance Corporal Kevin Cahill stepped onto a trail deep in the Hai Lang National Forest, Republic of South Vietnam. The trail was worn, ominous and disappeared into the dense jungle. All was still. All was quiet. The enemy was there, watching...

In Cahill's footsteps followed the men of Charlie Company, First Battalion, First Marine Regiment, First Marine Division. True patriots. True heroes. True Marines. All held an appointment with destiny at the end of that trail.

In his book, Lions of Medina, historian Doyle Glass tells, through the eyes of the men who fought on Operation Medina, an account of Marine courage at its best. Courage in the face of overwhelming odds. Courage that defined the generation of men who fought in Vietnam.

Lions of Medina is a tribute to those who fought the Vietnam War, a reminder that freedom is never free, and a testament to the valor of the American soul.

FOUR GENERATIONS OF MILITARY

Four generations of Military veterans, including the United States Army, United States Marines and United States Navy.

These veterans come from a military family, which spans four generations. Their father, Sergeant Pedro "A" Provencio, the first generation of military servicemen, served under U.S. Army General John Pershing with the U.S. Cavalry in the 82nd Field Artillery during General Pershing's expeditions into Mexico after the elusive Doroteo Arango. Doroteo Arango was commonly known as Pancho Villa the "Robin Hood" of Mexico during 1916-1919.

The 2nd generation of military servicemen included seven brothers. The first brother, Corporal Luis Provencio a World War II Veteran with the 118th Infantry Regiment, served as an infantryman during WWII and as a Military Policeman escorting German Prisoners during the occupation of Germany after WWII under the famous General Patton. PFC Patricio Provencio a Glider pilot and paratrooper with the 82nd Airborne Division was the second to follow in his father's footsteps in the U.S. Army. Thereafter came the three Korean War Veterans, all former U.S. Marines. Staff Sergeant Ricardo D. Provencio enlisted as a Marine Corps Reservists.

He was activated for duty prior to receiving his recruit training after his high school graduation. He was assigned to B Company 1 st Tank Battalion. Staff Sergeant Ricardo Provencio was sent to Korea where he received his recruit training which turned out to be on the job training (OlT), during the Inchon landing, Wolmi-do, Kimpo Airfield, Seoul, Wonson, Hamhung, and Chinhung-ni. He was transferred to the frozen Chosin for cold weather training between Hagaru-ri, and Koto-ri, where he received his training in extreme freezing temperature survival under heavy enemy fire while surrounded by ten Chinese Divisions to one U. S. Division. After the successful breakout he was shipped down to Pusan to reorganize and then sent out to east central Korea to further his training in North Korean guerrilla warfare. He participated in the mousetrap operations and in the punchbowl. In 1953 he served with the 3rd Antitank company 3rd Marine Division and was on his way to Korea again when the "Truce" was signed. Staff Sergeant Lorenzo Provencio, a reconnaissance and infantryman, was the next to enlist in the Marine Corps and served with the 5th Marines in the battle for the "Hook" (Hill 19). He was wounded when the Chinese and North Koreans attempted to overrun his unit's position in an all out enemy attack and was evacuated to a Hospital Ship.

He was meritoriously promoted to Staff Sergeant and subsequently returned to duty and assigned as a Tank Commander in support of the Turkish Brigade. Master Sergeant Ramon Provencio was the next family member to join the Marine Corps, and was assigned to Marine Helicopter Squadron 161 as a military policeman in Korea for a period of six months, but was later transferred to Japan as an underage Marine. Master Sergeant Provencio (Retired) remained in the Corps and participated in the Cuban Missile Crisis with the 3rd Light Anti-Aircraft Missile Battalion. He also served in Vietnam as the Task Force Hotel Intelligence Chief during the Khe Sanh siege and as the Intelligence Production Chief for the 3rd Marine Division. He participated in Operations Scotland I, Scotland II, and PEGASUS.

Of the two younger brothers, former Corporal Gabriel Provencio, a Field Radio Operator, served with the 2nd Battalion, 26th Marines, 1 st Marine Division in Vietnam. The last brother, Sergeant First Class Pedro "A" Provencio Jr., a retired U.S. Army Medic, was assigned to the 9th Infantry in the Mekong Delta of Vietnam. As a Senior Army Medic, he was responsible for insuring that serious casualties were given the proper care, prior to, and during their transport to the nearest Field Hospital. His wife Julia Theresa Provencio was also a Medic and Specialist 6 Class in the U. S. Army. Both also served with the USAREUR in Germany.

The 3rd generation of servicemen, stem from the children of MSgt Ramon Provencio, which includes 4 sons, a daughter, and a son-in-law. The eldest son CW04 Ramon Provencio Jr., USMC Retired, was an Administrative/Personnel Officer and former Drill Instructor, who served with the 31 st Marine Expeditionary Unit in the Persian Gulf during the Iranian Hostage Crisis. He also served in Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm with VMF A-314. He retired after 24 yearsof service.

Sergeant Pedro J. Provencio, a Motor Transport Operator served with various support units of the 1 st Marine Brigade and MCB Camp Pendleton, CA. He served for 9 years. Gunnery Sergeant Alvaro A. Provencio, USMC Retired, was a Helicopter Mechanic and former Drill Instructor. He served in the Republic of the Philippines in support of MAGTF 4 -90, and participated in earthquake relief operations. He also served in Somalia during Operation Restore Hope, and later retired after 20 years of service. Corporal Robert Provencio served as an administrative clerk/chief with the 1 st Marine Brigade Headquarters, and 3rd Battalion, 3rd Marines as part of the 31 st Marine Expeditionary Unit with his brother CWO Ramon Provencio in the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf during the Iranian Hostage Crisis. He served for 6 years. Captain Sally A. Chand, USMC Retired, worked her way through the ranks as a former Gunnery Sergeant, Chief Warrant Officer 3 and Captain.

She served in the Philippines in support of MAGTF 4-90 with her Brother Gunnery Sergeant Alvaro Provencio and her husband Sergeant Major Michael Chand, and participated in earthquake relief operations. She retired after 22 years of service. Her husband Sergeant Major Michael K. Chand, an Active Duty Infantry Marine, served with various Marine Expeditionary Units in the Persian Gulf, including the Philippines in support of MAGTF 4-90. He was also assigned to 4th Marine Regiment during Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm as part of Task Force Grizzly. His last duty was with Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 163 where he set up security for Camp Rhino and Kandahar in the republic of Afghanistan during operation Enduring Freedom in support of the 15th Marine Expeditionary Unit. He is the latest member of the 3 rd generation to retire from military service after 26 years, retiring on July 31, 2002.

The 4th generation of military is represented by Lance Corporal Anthony J. Provencio U. S. Marine Corps Reserve, son of Sergeant Pedro J. Provencio and the grandson of Master Sergeant Ramon Provencio. Electronic Technician 3rd Class Sean E. Mahon, U.S. Navy, also represents the 4th generation, and is married to Captain Sally Chand, Sergeant Major Michael K. Chand's daughter and granddaughter of Master Sergeant Ramon Provencio, Christina A. Chand.

He is also 2nd generation Navy, and the son of Operations Specialist Master Chief Jess Mahon, U. S. Navy Retired (a former River Patrol Boat Captain in the Mekong Delta of Vietnam). Electronic Technician 3rd Class Mahon recently returned to Japan with his ship, the USS Kittyhawk after serving in support of Operation Enduring Freedom and the liberation of Iraq. He is presently stationed at the U.S. Naval Air Station, North Island, San Diego, California. On July 24, 2006, Michael K. Chand Jr., son of Captain Sally Chand, Sergeant Major Michael K. Chand and grandson of Master Sergeant Ramon Provencio, was sworn into the U. S. Marine Corps and left for Officer Candidate School, Quantico, Virginia on October 7, 2006. He graduated and was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the U. S. Marine Corps on December 15, 2006.

MIKE Jr. is now a 1st Lieutenant and XO of Lima Co 3RD BN 1st Marine Division

I GET LETTERS

Editor, Red Clay Magazine:

Sir,

I read with great interest two of the articles in the Spring 2009 issue of Red Clay. First was the tribute to General Krulak. I met, in a sense, the General on Nov. 10th 1967. I was a Corpsman serving with the 2nd platoon, Bravo Co., of 1/26 on Hill 881 (may have been 861, the years have taken their toll). The word came down that 'Krulak' was coming and the Officers and NCO's were all over us to police up the area, spruce up ourselves, blouse our boots, and be prepared to assemble at the LZ. Now I will have to admit, I didn't know who or what a Krulak was, all I knew was that Krulak was coming, and it was the Marine Corps birthday and this was a big deal.

In due time I figured out that Krulak was General Krulak, and he was coming to address the Marines on the occasion of their 192nd birthday. Ultimately we assembled, the chopper arrived, and the General appeared. I must say I remember a speech that was more like a father talking to his sons about goals, and duty, and honor and the tradition that all Marines share. I was standing with my platoon, and as he finished his talk, and began to walk away, he looked up and must have seen my Corpsman shield on my soft cover, and he looked me in the eye and said, paraphrased, Doc, I want you to know that everything I said today about the Marines includes you because as far as I am concerned you are a Marine just like the rest of these men. Well, after he left I took a little ribbing from the guys, but from that day to this, when November 10th rolls around, I think of 'Krulak' and how proud I felt to wear the EGA and be a Doc, not only then, but every day since. So Marines, if you will permit me, Semper Fi!

Gary 'Doc Slade' Sallade
B CO 1/26, '67-68

Also, I am from Sharon, Mercer County, Pennsylvania, and was pleased to see a VA clinic opening in Hermitage, which borders my home town. When I was growing up, Hermitage was called Hickory, and we played ball against the Hickory Hornets high school teams. I didn't know the Marzano family and I don't remember if he or Doc Cahill served with the 26th Marines at the same time I did, but I do know that bond we share of having served in Viet Nam, and the closeness we feel in times of sorrow or joy. I appreciate the Red Clay and the work that goes into keeping us connected. Thanks.

THE REST OF THE STORY

By HM-2 William "Doc" Miller
L CO 3/26 USN/Ret
Re: Jurate Kazickas These Hills Called Khe Sanh

I read the article Jurate wrote in the Spring edition of Red Clay. It really got my juices going. I remember her being out in the bush with Lima Co. 3/26. According to her story, she was flown to Da Nang after her Marine escort went down. So our Captain Frank Bynum told her no escort, no reporter. She went on to lament about our Captain being killed due to the medivac giving away our position. Jurate, your leaving had nothing to do with his demise. As it happened, we were ordered to assault Hill 689. A patrol from CAC-03 had been involved in an earlier fight and had left several dead an injured Marines behind, after they had withdrawn.

As we assaulted the Hill, all hell broke loose. A sniper hiding in a spider trap, popped up and shot Captain Bynum. The Company gunny quickly unloaded his .45 cal pistol into the spider trap. That brought about an explosion that wounded the gunny. On the way to the top of Hill 689 we ran into more rifle and automatic weapons fire. Several spider holes were found. On top we found two dead NVA along with the remains of the the two CAC-0 Marines. The NVA had escaped through tunnels dug into the hill. A couple of other Marines were wounded. One of them was our 3rd Platoon leader Lt. Frank McCarthy. Our XO was Jaak Aulik who took over the Company until replaced by Captain Camp. Camp's book "Lima 6" tells of his adventures with Lima Co. in the following months.

Me? I wound up on Hill 950 for my last 40 days in country, but that's a whole other story.

I GET MAIL

Dear Tom,

Please accept my donation to help with the printing of Red Clay. I have managed to locate many of my old platoon members through the magazine and members listings. I would like for the membership to become aware of a Liver Disease called P.C.T., which affects many Vietnam Veterans. One of the main symptoms of this disease is "Polycythamia" i.e. too many Red Blood Cells. The VA Does not run a 24 Hour urinalysis which is the only method to discover if the real problem is P.C.T.. They just treat the first symptom.

It took me 20 years for the VA to finally recognize my P.C.T.. It was originally diagnosed at Penn. State Medical Center in Hershey, PA, in 1984. If this disease us not treated properly, it can and will cause liver failure. Please do not take this lightly. Ask the VA to do a 24 Hour urinalysis if you suspect you may have this disease.

LOOKING FOR C BTRY 1/13 MARINES

Tom,

This article recently appeared in my local newspaper. I would appreciate it being published in Red Clay. We are attempting to have more of our brothers from C Btry 1/13 in attendance at the next reunion.

Vietnam veteran Paul Choclis, a Northumberland native, recently attended two reunions, comprising Marines from the Regimental Combat Landing Infantry Team of the Third Battalion 26th Marines and its Artillery Support Unit, . First Battalion, 13th Marines.

Choclis is an original member of the 3/26 Regimental Combat Landing Team. He served as a scout/ forward observer for "C" Battery 1/13 Marines, attached to both Lima and Mike Companies. In addition, he was temporarily attached to 1st Anglico Liaison Naval Gun Fire Unit, 2/9 Marines, and served as a regimental F/O. at the Khe Sanh Combat Base. He is a life member of Khe Sanh Veterans Inc.

For their actions against enemy forces in the Republic of South Vietnam, the Third Battalion 26th Marines were awarded three Presidential Unit citations and the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry.

In June, 2008, Choclis went to Green Bay, Wisconsin, to reunite with original Marines from Charlie Battery 1st Battalion 13th Marines. Charlie Battery was the main supporting arms for 3/26 Marines.

On July 19, 2008 ,Choclis attended a memorial service for 3/26 Marines at Quantico's Base Chapel, followed by a reception and banquet in the Hall of Honor at the National Marine Corps Museum. Former Marine commandant, General Carl Mundy, was the guest speaker.

Plans were made to install a permanent monument at Semper Fi Park, surrounding the National Marine Corps Museum, honoring the service and sacrifice of the 3rd Battalion 26th Marine Regiment.

To My Friends, Thank You

By Earl Clark A Co 1/26

I haven't written anything on our message board in quite awhile. I was taking care of my parents for two years, and after that I was too bummed out and burned out to gather any thoughts. I miss them very much.

The last several months, however, I've occasionally thought about the passing of Dr. Robert Topmiller. I recall the evening when I got on the computer, checked out the message board and read that he had decided to leave this world and continue on his journey. I was in despair, but what occurred soon afterward was something I didn't anticipate.

I left my office and went into the family room to watch TV with my wife. I sat there in silence for a few minutes with "Doc" on my mind, watching the television, but not really. The next thing I know I'm holding my face in my hands, tears falling. My wife came to my side frightened, wondering if I was in some sort of pain. I recall repeating the words, "what happened to us, what happened to us, I don't know what happened to us there," all the while my wife holding me to her shoulder. It was a sad and lonely moment for me.

Introducing myself to Robert "Doc" Topmiller a couple of times at reunions, I recall that our conversations were always interesting and on the lighter side of things. I also remember that I had a smile on my face each time as we parted.

Remembering a particular smile from a particular time is a good thing, don't you think?

To "Doc": Thank you for touching my life ever so briefly.

My reaction to the news of his death was totally unexpected, but I think I know why it happened. During those moments of grief I began to think of some of my friends I have lost in the last several years and it just built up inside of me. A couple of months ago some of us were writing about an HBO film titled Taking Chance, and I believe it was Sam from Kansas who mentioned that tears seem to fall more easily and frequently these days. At least I find that to be true for me.

A couple of years ago I lost two Marine brothers, David Spradlin, an Alpha Company 1/26 brother, and Virgil Crunk from Bravo Company 1/26 within a three week period.

Dave was one of the first Marines to respond to my posting on the Khe Sanh message board in 1997, and he was a Godsend. Dave explained to me many of the emotions and behavioral experiences I was going through. At that particular time I was isolating for about six years and in recovery for alcohol abuse. Everything sucked!

I still don't know if David died from a broken heart or a lonely heart. All I know is that we wrote each other for years, until one day I received an email from him telling me that he was having a tough time and that I wouldn't be hearing from him for a while. There wasn't any communication between us for years until he popped up on the message board a couple of times. He never acted the same again. I think David just wanted to quit living.

To David: Thank you for telling me about the demons within.

Virgil was my friend; we traveled on R&R together to Australia and had a blast. He was also one of the bravest Marines I was privileged to know, performing his duties constantly under fire, and doing the "Khe Sanh Shuffle" on a daily basis throughout the siege.

We lost contact with one another a year or so after we left Vietnam. I didn't get in contact with him again until my friend Mac McNeely gave me his number.
The last couple of years were tough on Virgil. With his body betraying him it was necessary for Virgil to keep returning to the hospital. Medical staff was constantly draining fluids from him, but whenever I spoke to him he always seemed in good spirits and we always talked about Australia and Khe Sanh.

I Miss Him.

To Virgil: Thank you for being the best R&R buddy a Marine could ask for. I know if I had done something stupid you would have been there to get me back on track.

When Donna Elliot posted on the message board that my email buddy Ray Prittie had ended his life, I was stunned and numb for a while after reading the news. Ray and I had written each other many times through the years. I appreciated his sincerity and his ability to make me laugh. What a great human being.

To Ray: Thank you for all the laughs and enjoyable conversations we had via the internet. My days seemed fresh after reading your mail.

There are some things that are just difficult for my mind and heart to process, my buddies dying too soon is one of them.

I know why I'm writing this message. I'm feeling my own mortality. I suppose some, most, if not all of us, are thinking about it at this time in our lives. Perhaps it has to do with the circle of life.

I am sure of one thing, and that is I had the privilege of serving with the some of the bravest Marines, FMF Corpsmen, airmen, and soldiers on the face of the earth. I think when we all joined the Marines we thought we were invincible. But I wonder if something happened to us in Nam and at Khe Sanh. I wonder if somehow we became vulnerable in a way, that perhaps we became more "fragile" in our later years. I'm not a psychologist or a philosopher so it's just a random thought.

God only knows for sure.

The Sanh Veterans, Inc. Scholarship Foundation
A message from the Chairman, Dan Fisher and the Committee

We successfully kicked off our KSV Association's' Scholarship Foundation at the start of 2009. With some hustle on the part of the KSVSF Review Committee the forms and procedures were finalized and in place for the first applicants. The good news is that three applicants came forward to request grants and have met the requirements. Below are short statements from these three young scholars.

We have started 2009 with a financially healthy Scholarship Fund due to the gracious contributions of our members. The 2009 Denver Reunion silent auction will be another source of Fund income so be sure to bid high. That, in turn, increases our grants to applicants in 2010.

What do you want to be when you grow up?" That is a question that almost everyone is asked when he or she is a child. Now that I am in college, this question is becoming more and more important. I began my college career in fall of 2008 attending the University of Wisconsin - Madison, and then transferred to the University of Wisconsin - Stevens Point. I currently have no declared a major, there are many areas I would like to pursue, but it's hard to just pick one or two. Throughout college I want to not only learn about the subjects of my classes, but also I want to learn about myself. I have plans to study abroad and would like to do some volunteer work both locally and internationally. I will be paying for most of my college career with minimal help from my parents, which to me makes sense because it is my education and I think paying for it mostly myself will make me value it even more. So far I have paid for most of my college costs with student loans except for two small scholarships for first semester, but every little bit helps.

I am a sophomore at Murray State University working toward a literature degree. I enjoy writing and hope to work at a publishing house or as a newspaper editor upon graduation. I have extended volunteer experience with seniors, Big Brother, Bible School, Food Drives and nursing homes. I am a member of the National Honor Society.

ED NOTE:

Molly would you please hurry, I need all the help I can get with the magazine. The committee and I also decided to increase the scholarship from $ 300.00 to 500.00, these deserving, beautiful, and smart young ladies will each receive a $ 500.00 check. Good luck.

LATE REUNION NEWS

By Peter Erlandson

I am a Khe Sanh Vets member and live north of Denver. I was Air Force and served in the spring of '67.

I would like to offer something for the upcoming reunion. I have contacted the owners of a local gun range (members only) and I asked them if some of you could use the range when you are in town. They said that they would be honored to host you.

There could be an M-14 (M1A) semi automatic only, and AR-15 semi auto only, an EARLY 1911 (circa 1913), a newer 1911 and some other weapons available.

Ammo will be supplied by me. The range is approximately 25 miles from the hotel.

I emailed Robert Hazlet, whose son just returned from Iraq, and Cy Soto, WHAC president: "I have a really "unique" idea, I wrote.

The Khe Sanh Veterans organization from Vietnam are having their reunion in Denver this year. I am a member, but I have never attended a reunion. These Marines went through hell.

I was thinking of asking some of them if they would like to go to the range for a part of one day, probably during the week. These are the guys who survived the siege. Good men. I will vouch for them. They will be coming from all over the country. This is all that I can offer them. They covered my (arse) several times in Vietnam. Wish that I could do more for them."

"Pete, I think that's a cool idea." Cy answered: "I am sure that I speak for every WHAC (club) member when I say that it would be a true honor to have such a distinguished group of heroes come visit us.

Invite them and, when you do, ask them to RSVP so I know if we need to make any special arrangements to receive them. The only thing that I ask is that they sign a waiver before they handle any firearms at the range. That way, our insurance is aware that this is a club activity and everyone is covered in the unfortunate case of an accident.

The Club is about 10 miles East of the Brighton Justice Center, at mile marker 22. On Hwy 85. just go about nine miles East. There is a large dog leg about 1 mile turning south and then back to the east. The club is the first gate on the left. Turn south and go about 1/2 mile on a dirt road and you are there.

Gary,
Saw your article in Red Clay ... nicely done.

Attached are aerial photos marked up by Dennis Thompson. Do you think you could put a line on it that approximates the new road alignment? I think North is approximately in the direction marked as "Egress." The new road grazes the TOC .. I'm trying to figure what positions would be north of the new highway, and which remain on the piece of plateau where the tank monument is.
Kindest Regards,
Bob Jacobs

Dear Bob,

I received your email of March 27. Also, as attached to your email, thank you for the aerial photograph of Lang Vei and the new highway. I have not seen that photo before now.

The whole Lang Vei area has been changed to the point that even I no longer recognize it from when I first went there in 2000. The Co Roc Mountains still loom ominously in the distance through the mist, early morning fog and dampness of the humid atmosphere. The sometimes dark or grey obscurity of the mountains highlighted only by the faint profile of the ridgelines makes them all the more forbidding. Even through the distance, the mountains still exude a presence over Lang Vei as if they owned the entire valley on both sides of the border. The first time I saw the mountains, so visible, or at least noticeable from the Specials Forces camp on the Lang Vei ridgeline, I recall thinking that these mountains had to be of strategic importance to the NVA. On very clear days or when the wind is just right, the mountains stand out so vividly that valleys, gullies, peaks and other topographical characteristics are clearly discernable. Indeed one might feel the mountains could be touched. (Pic # 1)

The lower hills that surround Lang Vei and the lush, but steamy, green valleys are still there too. The immediate area around the camp location has been mostly destroyed or totally altered. Highway 9 in its new alignment slices through the ridge. The amount of earth and rock removed to make the road cut, the scale of which is beyond human understanding now, has completely changed the topography of the immediate area. In essence the Special Forces camp has been obliterated, forever gone.

A few years ago, Donna Elliott sent me an aerial photo of Lang Vei after the battle. I recognized the valley and the steep hillside sloping into the valley and three or four prominent bomb craters (because when we cleared the area with the bulldozers, the craters were readily visible). But the position of the road completely threw me. I began to wonder if the photo was developed backwards from the negative. It was confusing. Once, I spent a complete Sunday afternoon at Lang Vei just walking around, up and down the roadway with the photo trying to orient myself. The immediate area is not large. I explored pretty far down the hillside. I had one heck of a time climbing back up. Still, although I had a general idea of the location, orienting the photo was not a certainty and remained a bit of a puzzle to me.
(Pic# 2-3)

You see, highway No 9 has been built and rebuilt several times since 1968. The road we replaced supposedly was built by the Cubans. It could be that their alignment altered the alignment from what was in the photo that Donna sent me. I do recall one thing, the road link between the Khe Sanh reservoir west of town and the border station at Lao Bao was extremely bumpy. It seemed to take forever to reach Lang Vei from Khe Sanh due to the need to greatly reduce your speed. Now, you can drive from Khe Sanh to Lang Vei in about ten minutes

In the aerial photos you sent to me on 22 March, I would say the line that has been drawn is a good estimate of the new alignment of the highway.
(Pic # 4) But it sure seems to me that the camp is on the wrong side of the road so I still wonder if the photo was reproduced backwards of the negative. As one faces Lao Bao, the terrain to the left rises sharply and then falls quickly to a deep valley. To the right, the terrain undulates but does not fall as fast and would be more plausible as being able to support an encampment. I am not convinced that the road that is shown in the photo has not been destroyed and re-aligned several times. At one point some contractor had built a rock crushing plant on the north side of the road and had excavated the area to some extent for aggregate. The only way I know to reconcile the terrain and the layout of the old base is from about 3000 feet up in the air. This probably is not much help to you, Bob. Now, with the new alignment and road cuts, it is difficult to remember what the old road looked like or its precise location.

Thanks for the compliment on my article "Last Visit to Khe Sanh" in Red Clay. I am pleased you liked my story. I didn't really know whether anyone would be interested to read it but since I have contributed to Red Clay many times before, I thought I would like to record my last impressions of a place I may never visit again and to document my own last moments there. Perhaps others would enjoy reading about them. I have received "thank yous" from many people so the article must have resonated with the readers and made a good impression. That's all I can ask for.

There is much more I could have included in the story like walking to the water point down the steep, muddy incline from the combat base on the same path used during the siege that is there to this day and coming face to face with a big water buffalo at the stream; or following the defensive trench lines at the very edge of the western part of the base and almost falling into large bomb craters concealed by elephant grass; or how some Vietnamese man holding a palm frond aloft tried to shade me from the sun while I walked on the base; (Pic # 5) or recounting how, half way up Hill 861, I realized I had no water and was parched and all scratched up and bleeding from the cuts but knew I had to complete the climb - that it would be my only chance; or once on top of Hill 861, viewing the distant hills and green valleys and trying to wonder what it was like at the height of the siege; or watching as workers on the road with metal detectors (Pic # 6) walked up and down the road every day scooping up old mortar shells and a few grenades from the excavations or grading and how the workers seemed little concerned; or walking into the ammo dump on the base and seeing so much unexploded ordnance (Pic # 7) only to fully realize how stupid I had been to walk into the pit, (Pic # 8) then, with a bit of nervousness, backed out by retracing my steps; or how at the time of my first visit to the Combat Base, I realized I was seeing something quite special and being so taken I bought 30 dog tags (Pic # 9) that I realized only later through a severe email drubbing from Dennis Mannion that they were fake (still have them); or how a dog chased me on the base and tried to attack but I warded him off; or stopping on the highway to smoke a cigar at a high point overlooking the Quang Tri River as its dark water, funneled into a narrow chasm, rushed straight through the cataracts.

I still have my first Entrance Ticket to the Combat base. It cost 25,000 Dong or, at that time, about $1.30. The monument pictured on the ticket resembled a church to me. (Pic # 10) I would learn later what was transcribed on its sides. I was the only one on the base that day, except for a few souvenir hawkers.

And of course there were the red and white road markers on Quoc Luong 9 that would say Khe Sanh and gave a "distance to" in black print and, depending on the origin of the marking system, a "distance from" in red. (Pic # 11)

At the time of my first visit to the Combat Base in 2000, as I was exploring around through waist-high scrub grass, I was startled to see so many unexploded 105 and 155 shells littering the east end of the base. Shells were literally everywhere on the ground There were hundreds of them, rusted, just lying around and with no coffee plants at that time the ground was void of dense vegetation. Hundreds of shells could be seen everywhere I looked. I had just finished reading Donovan Webster's "Aftermath" about how the landscape is altered after a big battle. Well, I was seeing it first hand.

When I signed the guest book in the dingy, dusty museum, I had no idea what to say so I merely signed the guestbook as sweat rolled down my face. (Pic # 12) Later, Dennis Mannion, who I had yet to meet and who, a few months later, also signed the same book, was much more pointed or at least more colorful. He stated it the way he saw it.

At the beginning of the project, one day I had to leave Dong Ha for Hue/Phu Bai to catch the plane to Hanoi. I called for a taxi. Within an hour one arrived. But I had another plan. I was very early for the airport so I told the driver to take me to Camp Carroll fire support base only about 20 kilometers from Dong Ha. He had no clue where it was but I had a map and I showed it to him. We left Dong Ha on Highway 9 for the turn-off to Camp Carroll. But the problem was my client saw me go, not towards Hue, but towards Khe Sanh. He was curious as to what I was doing since he knew I was returning to Hanoi from Hue/Phu Bai. He followed me. Later he semi-accused me of spying or that I was always a spy who had returned. I had some explaining to do on that one. I don't think he ever stopped thinking I was a spy but the issue never came up again. Perhaps it was the cigarettes and scotch I continued to buy for him.

From the air, it would be easy to spot the original Marine runway. The area is not quite yet that overgrown as to conceal a 3000 feet runway. But I was elated one day when I made a simple discovery. I discovered the compacted rock that had been covered in some tar emulsion. I found compacted rock in many places all in a line and I found the lateral limits of the rock spread or what was quite literally the edge of the runway; and of course this confirmed for me the runway location even though I pretty much knew where it was. Still, regardless of how elementary the discovery was, I felt some satisfaction. (Pic # 13)

I recall one incident specifically that occurred to me at the old museum on the Khe Sanh Combat Base. I believe I have recounted this before. Just before a trip to Vietnam, I received a tiny American flag from Jacob Krygoski. He wanted me to plant it somewhere on the base the next time I returned. I told him I would do that. During my subsequent visit, I decided that yes, I would plant it but I would remove it after I had taken some photos of it. To leave it seemed pointless since some peasant would just take it. So I left the museum and walked not far away to a waist-high red clay berm, probably the remnants of some bunker, and planted the flag. I started to take a picture of it and some guy in the museum came out all in a huff and yelled and gestured at me to remove it. He was adamant and I could not reason with him. OK, I stopped. Silly man. I drove out on the Red Clay runway (not the original USMC runway) and behind some trees, I managed to plant the flag again and this time I was able to take the pictures unbothered.(Pic # 14)

One day, somewhere near Cam Lo, or maybe it was in Da Krong, as I drove to Khe Sanh with my constant companion, Hoang Tran Dung, the traffic slowed. A wedding was in progress. A band played, people were parading, and everyone was dressed in traditional clothes. The scene was very colorful. I told Hoang I wanted to see what could be seen. I wanted to stop. I was invited into the ceremony tent and there stood a lovely young woman elegantly dressed for her wedding. I had to take a picture of her which I did. (Pic # 15)

On another occasion, at the ground breaking ceremonies for Highway 9 (Pic # 16) just west of Cam Lo two days before Christmas 2002, I recall that after all the pomp and ceremony, our shoes and lower legs were literally covered in mud. It had rained heavily just about two hours before the ceremony and the location was just one big mud hole. Nobody seemed to mind or pay attention. I recall I had to prepare a speech. I had to stand in front of 300 people and deliver a speech about Highway 9. What would I say? Finally the words came to me.

I was a bit nervous at the beginning of my speech. I was the next to last speaker. It would not have been good protocol to linger on the war in Quang Tri Province but I felt compelled to make reference to the area's history. I did not know how the audience would respond or react. After all, many in the crowd were my age and had fought the Americans in I corp or the meat grinder as they called it. This was going to be interesting. I knew that because I was the only American present, all eyes would be on me and each person would hang on my words that were interpreted by a young Vietnamese girl named Huong. Dressed formally in traditional blossomy, white silk slacks and a long, purple side-slit, tight-fitting dress cinctured up to just below her chin, known as the Ao Dai, Huong stood beside me while I spoke. After my speech, I recall the applause was long. I was relieved.

This is part of what I said that day.

"Mister Vice Minister, and distinguished ladies and gentlemen, understanding the sorrowful past of this area and a time that must never again occur, let us recognize the historical importance of Quang Tri Province and Highway 9 and take pause to understand and reflect on the significance of this groundbreaking event - for we break ground today not only for the two highways (Highway 9 and the Dong Ha Bypass) but for the future of Quang Tri Province.

Today, we assign to Quang Tri Province and to the people of Vietnam a new chapter and a new role in the economic development of Vietnam. Construction will begin soon and with it a new flourish of economic activity will follow. Citizens of Quang Tri Province will benefit in ways not envisioned before."

That night at the dinner celebration I do recall one thing: the Vietnamese could sure consume alcohol and everyone thought I was their long lost buddy. And they all smoked like chimneys - all of them.

And then, in early summer of 2003, back in the USA, I had made up my mind I would meet the Khe Sanh vets at the annual reunion in Charleston, South Carolina over the Fourth of July weekend. I also remember I would participate in the event with some trepidation because I had no idea how I might be received. I went anyway.

In short, I had a terrific time and met a lot of people not least of which were John Pessoni (Pic # 17) who would not let me buy a beer and Dennis Mannion, smiling,(Pic # 18) who chided me in a good-natured way about those damned dog tags. Man! It was all great fun and well worth the effort and visit.

I visited Ray Stubbe in his home in Wauwatosa, Wisconsin in 2004. I found Ray totally engaging on many topics, not just about Khe Sanh. His home had been turned into a repository of Khe Sanh archives with bankers boxes filled with archival material all related to Khe Sanh sitting in orderly rows. If one reads his book "Valley of Decision" anyone would understand why Ray had so much stuff. In one bedroom of his house, he had a mini-museum dedicated to Khe Sanh. Ray and I maintained a regular correspondence. (Pic # 19)

I still recall the little girl on the combat base who appeared and disappeared as quickly - an apparition. (Pic # 20) I will always remember seeing late one night when I first arrived in Dong Ha the tanks at the tank restaurant. These images are indelibly etched in my mind. (Pic # 21)

Over the years, on several occasions, I wound up driving back to Dong Ha from Khe Sanh at late dusk or immediately after dark. It was a bit spooky. The traffic had died down and of course the road was not lit except on one occasion by a full moon or on another in an isolated location by soft blue light from televisions in the Montagnard huts. My favorite part of the road is just coming off the Khe Sanh Plateau back to Dong Ha, through the switchback over the Rao Quan River and along the Quang Tri River. Sometimes I would stop the vehicle on the cliffs overlooking the river and just listen to the muted roar of the churning water as it sluiced its way towards the sea.

Closer to Cam Lo, the road is very similar to and about as lonely as those found in remote Tama County, Iowa.

I recall on more than one occasion sipping coconut juice through a straw from a coconut at many places between Khe Sanh and Hue. (Pic # 23)

I could have recounted all the above stories in my "Last Visit to Khe Sanh" in Red Clay but alas, the story was already becoming too long. I suppose this letter is too long too.

Yet all of my remembrances of Khe Sanh, Lang Vei and Highway 9 pall in comparison to the experiences and memories of Americans who fought there. To write this letter, I dug into my boxes of Khe Sanh mementos and as I did, I saw all the things I collected over the years – shrapnel, red clay, photos, etc. The assortment of memorabilia is, in itself, quite a collection of junk.

I have no personal account of sweating profusely while carrying an M60 humping around the hills through giant elephant grass knowing I could not see anything even two feet in front of me and at any moment, terror could and did often reign. I was not bombarded or shot at and I sustained no injury as a result of bullets that whizzed through the sky or shrapnel that tore through the humidity and shredded the air and human flesh alike. I have no remembrance of having to leave a wounded comrade behind because of withering gunfire. I didn't suffer from lack of sleep for days on end, knowing that an enemy assault was probably imminent. I didn't dig foxholes or bunkers that would become cesspools after the monsoon rains. My feet didn't rot and I didn't catch malaria (not there anyway) or dysentery. I didn't see a helicopter gunship or the results of an aerial bombardment from B52s flying so high one can't see them. I didn't see a line of American dead, now converted into inert cargo, being readied for evacuation and their final trip home. I never saw a napalm attack and I never shot someone as the battle raged around me. I never dueled with rats as they scurried around in search of food. I never hunkered down in some wet trench during a rocket or artillery attack. I never smelled the rank odor of foul, decomposing, maggot infested NVA bodies that littered the slopes of the hills so close to the wire.

No. I was not there when so many Marines had no option but to stay and fight for their lives against a tenacious enemy for over two months sometimes for days without provisions or water while the enemy dead piled up outside the wire. I can't recall any of these things because I was not present.

But none of us were at Gettysburg either and still we visit the battlefield and we try to conjure up the intangible images of the battle that are recorded for history, never to be experienced today but never to be lost either. I am reminded of a book I just finished about the battle of Cold Harbor during the Civil War. Essentially the outcome of the battle, favorable to the Confederates, was decided before 8 o'clock in the morning in early July, one year after Gettysburg. General Grant charged the entire Confederate line and within less than 30 minutes 10,000 soldiers lay dead or dying. None of us were there. The leaf-covered trenches at Cold Harbor, just like the trenches around the perimeter of the Khe Sanh Combat Base, are still visible and serve now as a mute testament to and a silent reminder of the carnage that occurred.

The Civil War is but a blip as time rushes past weeks and months and consumes years, decades, centuries. Khe Sanh, more recent in historical perspective but now too in the past, is fading into time's deepest recesses, a blip on the calendar of eons. One day there will be none of those who fought there, or me, or anyone who will remember anything about it or who can recount any of the stories first hand. My days there can be measured by nothing more than a blink of the eye when compared against the onrush of time. Infinity erases, washes everything in the past and treats all of us equally. We are returned from where we came: star-dust.

Several people who read "Last Visit to Khe Sanh" felt there was a tinge of sadness, despair, or loneliness in my story. There was. Perhaps it resonated so well because so many people have had the same feelings. And now that have I re-read it in Red Clay, I still feel a pang of alone sadness. Probably because the adventure, now in the past, was so vivid and current for me even though the siege took place so many years before my time there. Yet, it's all still there: the base, the runway, the hills, the river, the water point; the weather, the red clay - dusty when dry, clinging when wet - and the ghosts. Hill 1015 still dominates the landscape and serves as a silent sentinel over the valley. And there is the silence and the silent witness of time punctuated only by the wind as it wisps through the skinny eucalyptus trees that line the runway, their silvery green leaves rustling - a slight wind that wanders through space-time, stops to visit, perhaps to refresh as it caresses our faces, and vanishes without a trace like some lost, wayward spirit.

Tim O'Brien once penned:

Vietnam was full of strange stories, some improbable, some well beyond that, but the stories that will last forever are those that swirl back and forth across the border between trivia and bedlam, the mad and the mundane.

...and of his description of Mary Anne Bell, The Sweetheart of the Song Tra Bong, O'Brien wrote

The war intrigued her. The land too and the mystery... If the girl was nervous, she did not show it. She seemed comfortable and entirely at home, the hostile atmosphere did not seem to register

I was reluctant to think at the time of my last visit - I could not admit the realization - I may never go back. I may never be there again. Why are my memories of Khe Sanh so special? Why would I have such feelings? I have been to many places all over the globe that I will never visit or see again. I doubt I will ever again visit the Kalahari or Goa or Cochabamba or Chittorgarh or the Isle of Dura. I am not bothered by this; in fact give it little thought.

But to know that I may never visit Khe Sanh again is an un-definable, strange realization. Was it the highway? The base? The history? The landscape? Was it the mystery? I doubt anyone can describe or explain the sensation. And I'm Ok with that.

I have no need to ever return to Khe Sanh now. But a part of me, like a part of so many Marines, is still there. I can say, that part, for me at least, is manifested by the road we built, a road and its bridges that will be there for many, many years. No, I did not fight at Khe Sanh. I was not a Marine. But many years after the siege, I did contribute to the recovery of the area and left behind a monument many times more important than the stone slab monument the Vietnamese erected at the intersection of Highway 9 and the road that leads to the Combat Base that commemorates the NVA's purported glorious victory over sorrowful, forlorn, defeated American soldiers.

And of course when I saw the overly-dramatized friezes or carved reliefs on the monument and the image they project, I was reminded of the words that Dennis Mannion wrote in the guestbook in the museum on the combat base about 4 or 5 years ago

"Let me get the facts straight. We, the Marines, left because we were through kicking ass in this area. I have much respect for the 15,000 plus NVA soldiers who died here. They were terrific, brave men---but they lost! Sorry, but that's the way it was."

Dennis signed the guestbook and added "wounded twice." I will never forget reading those words for myself in that hot, airless museum.. (Pic # 22)

The past nine years of visiting Khe Sanh, Lang Vei and Highway 9, in general, has been a great, rewarding and satisfying experience for me. Let's leave it at that. If I contributed to helping find one or two sets of remains of American MIAs due to our excavation at Lang Vei, then what more can I ask for or do?

Highway 9 was a terrific project, my favorite in fact, but with difficult and sometimes rancorous, certainly unorganized contractors. But the project was worth all the sweat and vexations. To have learned, through visiting and reading, something about the area that was the scene of so much drama and bloodshed many years ago was sometimes slightly overwhelming. And then later, to have applied my own small talents and been a part of something much more positive, much more constructive; to meet so many interesting people who fought there; and to have forged so many – well - good friendships, to be very honest, what else is there?

I thank you again for your kind compliments but, perhaps more importantly, I also thank you, and, through you everyone who fought at Khe Sanh, for your steadfast service to and personal sacrifice for our great country.

I send my best personal regards to you, Bob and, with much respect for all who served, to all others as well.

Letter To Jacob Krygoski From Gary Foster

Jacob,

On March 20, I planted your tiny USMC flag at the Khe Sanh Combat Base. I could not get to 558. The clouds were so low that I could put my hand in them over my head while on the base and it rained constantly. I could not see 861, 881, 950, 1015, or 558. So I put your flag on the base and took photos of it.

BUT!I was watched and was told to remove the flag. I did so and went to another spot and replanted it and took more photos of it. But then I thought to myself: I could leave it and someone would take it, or I could bring it home and send it back to you. It is stained with red clay from Khe Sanh. I decided to hell with them and I brought it back with me, but it was planted in the earth on the Khe Sanh Combat Base at several places in your honor. I was the only one on the base after I alluded my spies. Windy and wet and quiet. I visited the ammo dump that blew in 68. Hundreds of 105 shells all over the place. Talk to you soon and best regards.

Hey Gary:

The coincidences that spin around my life continue to blow me away Last night my son Blake sends me an email that says, "Dad is this your handwriting in the attached link?" I try to open the link but it is a Reuters news site and private citizens are not admitted. I try to register (cause you have to be a business person to obtain access) but that won't work cause I have no business address or business email or business phone. I write back to Blake and tell him that. He -- being a modern, computer kid manages to do a "work-around" (or maybe his rugby company employer has access) .. In either case, he sends me the picture and the short text that goes with it. No explanation for what Blake was looking for when he came across it or what the context of the pic was set around. You just be prepared to be stunned! :) :) I hope all is well. Think Easter in CT! Regards,

Dennis Mannion

2009 Jefferson Award Winner Geoffrey Steiner

KSAX hosted the Jefferson Awards banquet, to honor local volunteers. Geoffrey Steiner took home the 2009 Jefferson Award, along with a pretty nice trophy.

Geoffrey will head to Washington D.C. to compete at the national level. We received several letters about Geoffrey volunteering his time with Boy Scouts, kids with disabilities, the Humane Society and helping with suicide victims. Geoffrey is most noted though for his work with Vietnam veterans.

And to this day, Geoffrey has planted over 200,000 trees for every dead and missing soldier from the war He was truly deserving of this award.

I'm not one to sit by and see an injustice. It's in my makeup. If I see hurt – I will do anything to stop it," says Geoffrey Steiner when asked why he volunteers so much of his time. He is a disabled Vietnam Veteran, however, despite his disability, for the past 30 years Steiner has been planting trees for every dead and missing soldier from the Vietnam War. He has planted over 200,000 trees which are displayed on his 100 acre home in Cushing, MN. People come from all over the world to see this living Memorial and to this day, he continues to plant new trees and replace old ones.

Along with planting the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Forrest, Steiner is also dedicated to helping improve the lives of living Vets. As a trained psychotherapist, Steiner has done 33 years of suicide volunteer work. He has received filing cabinets full of letters and hundreds of phone calls from suicidal, hurting vets and their families. Not one person was left unanswered. He made sure to write everyone back and called every single person who had ever left a message – even though it racked up his phone bill so high he couldn't afford to pay it. Vets would come to see him in his small town of 65, many of which were homeless or had just gotten out of prison. No matter whom they were, Steiner would put them up in his house and get them clothes by volunteering at the Little Falls Clothing Review. On top of his work with Veterans, he has also volunteered with Boy Scouts, Sea Scouts, Cadet Squadron, Big Brother of Morrison county and working with mentally Handicap children.

Steiner is the only person to be recognized as an "Unsung Hero" by People Magazine, Newsweek and Readers Digest three years in a row. He has survived alcoholism and suicide attempts in his struggle with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), and is now fighting the debilitating effects of Lime Disease. He says he will still do whatever it takes to educate others on PTSD so they never have to experience the pain he went through.

Ceremony Recognizes Vets Not On The Wall

WASHINGTON (AFRNS)

One-hundred twenty-three American heroes from the Vietnam War era were honored posthumously during the annual In Memory Day ceremony, according to Jan C. Scruggs, founder and president of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund.

In Memory Day was created to pay tribute to those who died prematurely from noncombat injuries and emotional suffering caused directly by the Vietnam War, but who are not eligible to have their names inscribed on the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

The 11th annual In Memory Day ceremony was held at 10 a.m. April 20, 2009 at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Nearly1,000 family members, friends and fellow veterans attended to participate in this year's event.

In Memory Day allows The Wall to do what it does best: provide a healing environment for family members and friends," Mr. Scruggs said. "It also allows all of us to pay tribute to these brave Americans who served and sacrificed for their country."

The Vietnam Veterans Memorial bears the names of 58,260 men and women who died while serving in the U.S. armed forces in the Vietnam War.

"The Department of Defense developed specific parameters that allow only the names of servicemembers who died of wounds suffered in combat zones to be added to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial," Mr. Scruggs said. "The In Memory program recognizes those men and women who have died prematurely as a result of the Vietnam War, but who do not meet the criteria. Many of their deaths are a result of Agent Orange exposure and emotional wounds that never healed."

During the ceremony, family members read aloud their loved ones' names in chronological order by date of death. Following the ceremony, participants laid tributes at the base of The Wall corresponding to the honorees' dates of service in Vietnam.

With the addition of this year's honorees, more than 1,800 people have been honored in the In Memory Honor Roll. Established in 1979, the nonprofit Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund was authorized by Congress to build the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Since then, the memorial fund has evolved into an international nongovernmental organization dedicated to preserving the legacy of The Wall, promoting healing and educating about the impact of the Vietnam War.

Its initiatives include educational programs, a traveling Wall replica that honors veterans and a humanitarian and land mine-removal program in Vietnam. The fund also is building The Education Center at The Wall, an underground educational facility near the memorial.

Here is a list of this years honorees in alphabetical order

"IT WASN'T EASY"
A Khe Sanh Veteran's Wife Fought Hard To Fulfill A Promise.

Otis H. Glenn Jr. was a tough guy, a U.S. Marine who would earn a Purple Heart and a presidential citation for bravery after being shot in the chest and left for dead in a rice paddy in Vietnam. A tall specimen dubbed Big O by his fellow Marines and later his friends and family, he was a man who read everything about World War II that he could get his hands on, loved driving his long-haul rig and soothed his soul creating beautiful treasures from wood But he was also a man who left tender letters of love on his wife's pillow or nightstand on just an ordinary day. You're good to me and for me how could I not help but love such a beautiful person, one of those letters reads. I'll try and complement you in every way I possibly can so that I may hold and cherish you as long as I can, forever and ever. With all the love in me, Big O.

Glenn cherished his wife, Judith, for 27 1/2 years, until the moment he died on Christmas Day 2007 of lung cancer, a disease linked to the Agent Orange he was exposed to in 1967-68 in Southeast Asia. That cancer followed side effects from floating shrapnel, skin cancer and kidney cancer, also linked to the toxic herbicide that killed or maimed thousands of other American troops during and after the war in Vietnam, in addition to the harm it did to the Vietnamese. Before her husband died, Judith Glenn made him a promise: She would honor him for the rest of her life. She went to Washington, D.C., to keep that promise. Judith Glenn and her remaining family members stood in front of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, known as The Wall, and read her husband's name during the annual In Memory ceremony held by the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund.

A certificate bearing Otis Glenn's name, and the personal memorabilia Judith provides, was placed at the memorial, to be collected later by the National Park Service and stored in its permanent archive. His name was also added to the In Memory honor roll book to serve as a lasting reminder of his service and sacrifice.

But although he suffered for 40 years from the injuries that earned him military honors, and may have eventually died as a result, Glenn's name is not one of the 58,195 engraved on The Wall.

The annual In Memory ceremony was created to honor those who died as a result of the Vietnam War but whose deaths do not fit the Department of Defense criteria for inclusion on The Wall.

Judith Glenn, a retired schoolteacher who now lives in Morganton, worked through reams of official paperwork to ensure her husband would be one of just 123 soldiers and the only one from North Carolina to be recognized at this year's ceremony.

The hours of paperwork were a labor of love for Judith Glenn. It was complicated and sometimes frustrating, but I promised him that I would honor him for the rest of my life, Glenn said. When your heart is in it, it's not hard at all. She was anxious about seeing up close the haunting, linear tribute that is The Wall, the somber reminder of the U.S. soldiers who lost their lives in Southeast Asia some 40 years ago. Big O visited the memorial numerous times, always with sheets of paper to take rubbings from the engraved names of his fallen comrades from Bravo Co., 1st Battalion, 9th Marines, 3rd Division.

Judith Glenn was there to acknowledge not only those who died in the war, but also all the others, including her husband, who came home still alive but on borrowed time. The reality hasn't set in yet, she said. When I saw that cold, hard marble, that's going to be very difficult. But I have to think it's full of life, it's actually breathing life, because it has the names of the brave Vietnam veterans who made the ultimate sacrifice. And I'm so proud that we will be able to honor my husband, that he will get the honor and respect he deserves, she said.

And that's long overdue for all Vietnam veterans. Big O Glenn served in Khe Sanh and Con Thien, on the front line at the demilitarized zone so close to the enemy the Marines could look into North Vietnam. He said, We could hear (the Viet Cong), and we could see things moving, but we could never actually see them,' Glenn recalled. He said, We were on their territory, and they knew how to fight in the jungles and rice paddies.' He said that if you ever saw them, it was too late, because it meant that they had shot you.

They did shoot Glenn, in the chest, in August 1968. He was rescued, taken to a medical ship and eventually sent home. But he was never the same. He was so outgoing and personable and very friendly as a man, but he was very, very private as a Marine, Judith Glenn said. He never talked about it, never shared anything about it until years after we were married. He had (post traumatic stress disorder), and that was devastating to him the nightmares and flashbacks never stopped. And it's still taking its toll on all the other veterans who were there.

After he married Judith and my family, she laughed. We breathed new life into him for 27 1/2 years

The couple loved camping together, and both relished the summers when Judith was out of school and they could travel the country together in his rig, covering 40 states in five years. He was like a second son to Judith's mother, and a brother not a brother-in-law to her twin sisters and brother.

He liked to say, "A man is like a fine piece of wood you just have to bring out his character,' Glenn said. Like he always said about bringing out the best in a man, he tried to bring out the best in everybody. Everybody he met, he tried to find the good in them, and he did. He brought out the best in us.

The woman Big O referred to as Kid was by his side during the cancer treatments, the kidney dialysis, the nightmares and flashbacks, as well as the happy times camping under the stars or cruising down America's highways. And she is still with him today, en route to a ceremony that will mix an emotional ####tail of pride, grief, longing and, mostly, love..

He never wanted a brass band. He never wanted a parade. He never wanted the spotlight on him, Judith Glenn said. If he were here, he'd say, You're doing way too much.' And I'd say, No, I'm not doing half enough.' But he would say, You promised me that you would honor me, so I will accept this, Kid, because you're keeping your promise. 'Kid smiled as she wiped tears from her eyes.

I'm doing this for him. I'm keeping my promise.

KHE SANH VETERANS IN THE NEWS ON MEMORIAL DAY ACROSS THE COUNTRY

KHE SANH VETERAN CLIFF TREESE LEADS MEMORIAL DAY PARADE

Armed Forces Day was celebrated in East Penn Township by dedicating the veterans' monument which was removed from the community center to Marvin Gardens by student Hal Resh as a senior project.

The Gardens Park is along Route 895, the main highway through the township. The monument now stands as a beautiful entrance for people entering the township. A car and motorcycle cruise that had been scheduled to precede the dedication was cancelled because of the possibility of rain. The American Legion Riders of Slatington Post 16, founded three years ago, did ride up to participate in the dedication. Cliff Treese, USMC retired, a veteran wounded in the Khe Sanh Siege, trucked his 1978 Malibu from Florida to lead the cruise. His arm swings freely both back and forth with the damage to the elbow and he raises his shirt to show the scar near his waist where he was sewn back together. Treese said he was nearly cut in half. He is a native of Allentown.

Flags, which are lighted and will fly day and night, were raised by Ori Handwerk for the POW flag and Bernie Dugan for the United States flag. Both are members of the Riders. National Guard Unit A Co. 228th BSB of Bethlehem formed an honor guard during the flag raising and singing of the National Anthem. Harold Resh, Hal's father opened the program by introducing Supervisor William Schwab, who was master of ceremonies. Schwab thanked Hal Resh and his family, acknowledged the volunteers who were "everywhere" and the road crew who helped with the landscaping. He said they were recognizing the veterans' service all over again because it had been done at the original dedication at the community center.

Resh went to the supervisors and asked for permission and land to move the monument when the property where it stood was sold by Dinkey Church. We old folks would have said it couldn't be done but young people can do anything," he said. The American Legion Riders donated the flags and flag poles, said Schwab. He concluded by thanking the four veterans in attendance and Hal (Resh Jr.). Resh said he had been taking care of the monument at its former site when he found the land had been sold and the monument was to be knocked down. Because his grandfather's name, Albert S. Wilk, is included, he said, "Absolutely it means a lot to me. It is safe now. It is on township property and will not be moved again."

Wilk was in World War II with the 7th Armored Division He said the monument was taken down in 30 days and stored in the family barn until it could be restored. Stone mason Larry Arndt was hired to put the puzzle back together beginning in fall 2008. Resh thanked 38 people listed in the program who helped in addition to the volunteers. When the township said it could be placed at Marvin Gardens it was considered a fine place. The monument was pressure washed before being sealed. Pencor donated the money raised at a dress-down day. Resh said, "I'm just so thankful this is finished."

He read the names of veterans on the monument, though Joan Frank had asked if she could read her husband's name, Frank "Nick" Frank. There are 14 from WW I and 62 from World War II, four of whom had died in battle. State Senator David Argall said he had read about the monument in the TIMES NEWS but had not realized the scope of the project. "Why keep these memories alive," he asked, and then gave the reason. He had been in Germany and saw where the Berlin Wall had been torn down. We drove through the Brandenburg Gate. Now it is no big deal. I asked a cab driver what it was like and he said, 'I have a whole new life,'" Argall said. That freedom is due to the veterans. He congratulated all of the armed services for the "amazing project." President Denise Reeser of the American Legion Riders said she was the daughter of a veteran and it was an honor to be at the dedication. She called for a moment of silence to honor all in the Armed Forces.

Hal Resh Jr. did a near impossible task. With the support of his family, rebuilding the monument was a "job well done," said Reeser. She called for a round of applause for Resh. Members of the National Guard placed wreaths at the monument. Taps" was played by Henry Long, a bugler with the United Veterans' Organization of Lehighton.

Nancy Resh, Hal's mother, said, "He's amazing. I'm proud of him. He did a great job. It's his grandfather who gave him the initiative."

His sister, Amanda, provided both the opening and closing prayers and, as her senior project at Lehighton High School created the program which includes a history of the project, 26 photographs and a list of the names on the monument. In the opening prayer, she said, "Thank you for the men and women who are fighting for us now."

REMEMBER THIS DAY

By Jerry Giles CO KILO CO 3/9
Submitted By Hank Melanson

I read a news release regarding the astronauts working on the Hubble space telescope and came across this quote: "My friend Leonidas has a couple of words for you guys that are appropriate right now," shuttle commander Scott Altman told the spacewalkers, jokingly referring to the ancient Spartan king. "Remember this day, men, for it will be yours for all time." King Leonidas is said to have died in a battle in 480 B.C. alongside a force of 300 men who held off the Persian army.

The "Remember this day, men, for it will be yours for all time", seemed so appropriate for our journey through Vietnam. For us it was not only just one day but a series of days, weeks, months and for the fortunate too few; a time that will be remembered for all time. "This Day" was April 30th for many, will be May 20th for too many and will be July 4th for many others. After I left Kilo another 'day for Kilo', was Valentine's Day in '68 on Valentine's Ridge.

Before I joined Kilo there was another battle on July 4th, 66 that is another 'day for Kilo' to remember. I'm embarrassed to say to family and friends how much time I spend reliving my days with Kilo – the good, great, bad, and ugly days. Tonight I'm sitting here with music from the 60's playing in my headphones and drifting off to Vietnam. Simon and Garfunkel just played "The Sound of Silence" which Spanky reminded me a few years ago was part of the only record John Krohn had for his record player purchased on Okinawa in January 67. John's "Day for all time" was May 26th. After making it through 881S and Hill 70, an NVA mortar round found his fighting hole just behind the Gunny and me. One of John's first questions he asked me at a reunion was: "Who in the hell stole my record player?" Evidently it was not sent home with his personal belongings. I'm guessing that 'others' in the Headquarters group enjoyed that one record for some time after John was evacuated.

Henry Rose's "day" likely was May 20th as he found himself and his rocket team as the point squad for Kilo leading up the narrow trail to Hill 70. (That happened when we were ordered by battalion to reverse our route of march and "Get our#####on top of Hill 70 – NOW!". So Henry, instead of bringing up the rear became point man with a rocket rather than an M-16. Interesting picture.) Henry was fortunate enough to have passed through the ambush zone and recall looking down the trail and watching grenades sail back and forth through the early evenings hours.

For Orville it was April 30th and he, "Mad Dog" was going to 'take Hill 881S' by himself – if necessary – until I ordered him off the hill. Orville was not impressed or pleased.

For Stew it was also April 30th as he had the "honor" of being the first Kilo Marine wounded on the hill.

For Spanky it was the 'days' of 20 -21 May as he struggled throughout the night taking care of Kilo Marines though he was wounded five times. Typical of corpsman, Spanky still, to this day, believes he should have stayed on the hill the next day to "take care of my Marines" rather than being medevaced.

For Art Gennaro the Day was April 30th. He had been point man but for the assault on Hill 881S he was the 11th man in his squad to crest the hill. All those forward of him were killed or seriously wounded.

For Bob Purro it was April 30th and May 20th. Wounded on Hill 881S "Little Joe" returned in time to join Kilo on the afternoon of May 20th only to be wounded again that night.

For Salty, like Orville, it was likely April 30th as he and Sgt Butterworth crested 881S with leading elements of the 2nd platoon only to discover that they were now alone. Frustrated and with Butterworth now wounded they retired from the hill.

For Ray Felle it was the battle for Valentine's Ridge on February 14th with brave Marines poorly led and families left to wonder about their loved ones for two long weeks.

The stories could go on and on. They are our stories. My request, Remember these days with pride for they are ours for all time." And, if you can, do as Salty recently did, go to the Travelling Wall and say a prayer of respect and love for the brothers of Kilo that did not return.
Semper Fidelis, Kilo 6

Ran across this story and was trying to confirm. I did not see this Marine listed in Rev Rays book, but I may have overlooked it. If correct, he needs to be added to those Heros who died in regards to Khe Sanh.

ABBEVILLE - The Abbeville Cultural and Historical Alliance (Museum & Art Gallery) will add three Silver Star recipients to its Wall of Valor exhibit on Saturday to honor war veterans receiving military service medals for gallantry in battle.

Added to the list are Sgt. 1st Class Ludwest J. Bouillion (Korea-U.S. Army), Lance Cpl. Howard C. Williams (Vietnam-USMC) and Capt. Osborne K. LeBlanc (WWII-USMC). The exhibit includes pictures of the veterans and information on their citations.

The museum, located in the Vermilion Parish Veterans Memorial Building, developed the exhibit in 2007 honoring nine Vermilion Parish war veterans. With the assistance of retired Brigadier General Robert LeBlanc, the permanent display was assembled to honor Vermilion Parish war veterans who received the Army Silver Star, Distinguished Service Cross and Navy Cross medals. These honors rank just below the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Veterans honored in 2007 were: Silver Star recipients Cpl. Henry Mack Creswell (WWII- USMC), Pfc Edward J. LeBlanc (WWII-Army), T5G Jonas D. Nunez (WWII -Army), Capt. Shelton C. Picard (WWII-Army), SP4 Farrell J. Vice (Vietnam-Army) and SP4 Donald R. Wadlington (Vietnam-Army). Navy Cross recipients Sgt. Richard F. Abshire (Vietnam-USMC) and 2nd Lt. Conrad C. Derouen (WWII-USMC), Distinguished Service Cross recipient 1st Lt. Joseph Verbis LaFleur (WWII-USAAC/Chaplain).

In addition to the exhibit honoring the valor award recipients, a Book of Remembrance is also on display. This book includes the names of Vermilion Parish veterans serving in World War I, World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War. Visitors are encouraged to offer additions and corrections to the information listed and to submit photographs of veterans from these wars.

WILLIAMS, HOWARD C. (KIA) Citation:

The President of the United States takes pride in presenting the Silver Star Medal (Posthumously) to Howard C. Williams (2384892), Lance Corporal, U.S. Marine Corps, for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action while serving as a Rifleman with Company A, First Battalion, First Marines, FIRST Marine Division, in connection with operations against the enemy in the Republic of Vietnam.

In the early morning hours of 8 July 1968, during Operation SCOTLAND II in Quang Tri Province, Company A was counterattacking a large North Vietnamese Army force which had penetrated the Marines' defensive perimeter on Hill 689. Informed that one platoon was pinned down by intense automatic weapons fire delivered from an enemy occupied bunker, Lance Corporal Williams and another Marine unhesitatingly volunteered to destroy the position with light antitank assault weapons. Disregarding his own personal safety, Lance Corporal Williams fearlessly commenced maneuvering across the fire- swept terrain toward the hostile emplacement when the enemy suddenly pinpointed his position and attempted to halt his attack with hand grenades and a heavy volume of automatic weapons fire.

Ignoring the hostile rounds impacting near him, he resolutely continued his determined assault and, fearlessly exposing himself to the intense fire, employed his weapon with maximum effectiveness, silencing the hostile fire and killing approximately eight North Vietnamese soldiers.

While attempting to withdraw from the hazardous area and rejoin his squad, Lance Corporal Williams was mortally wounded by enemy fire. His bold initiative and resolute determination inspired all who observed him and were instrumental in his company ejecting the hostile force from the Marines' perimeter. By his courage, aggressive fighting spirit and unwavering devotion to duty, Lance Corporal Williams upheld the highest traditions of the Marine Corps and of the United States Naval Service. He gallantly gave his life for his country.

FIRST CASUALTY FROM OTTAWA COUNTY KILLED IN VIETNAM

By Dick Mullins

William L. Matthews Jr., a Port Clinton native and PCHS graduate of the class of 1966, followed his life-long dream to be a Marine just like his father who fought in the South Pacific battles of WWII.

Bill enlisted in the United States Marine Corps immediately following high school. The Marine Corps trained Bill for combat and to be a wireman in Khe Sanh, Viet Nam, now part of the illustrious Marine Corps History. Khe Sanh was involved in a continuous bombing of the base and surrounding hills for the "77 Day Siege". Most of Bill's time in Khe Sanh was spent at the combat base. He was supposed to rotate within 30 days with other 3rd battalion 26 Marines wireman on the surrounding hills of Khe Sanh. The hill that Bill eventually went to was called Hill 881 South.

With the start of the siege, January 20, 1968, it made it impractical for unnecessary trips from the Khe Sanh base to the outpost hills. It was during this period that Khe Sanh was under siege by a North Vietnamese Army (NVA) force which reached a peak of more than 30,000, or six times the number of US Marines which were garrisoned there. Logistical support by ground had become impossible due to the concentration of NVA forces and the monsoons washing bridges away. Logistical support by air also became so hazardous that only the plight of the Marines and the President's order to 'Hold Khe Sanh' could justify the terrible losses of aircraft encountered in re-supply attempts.

Several C-130s and C-123's were destroyed on Khe Sanh's airstrip while attempting to bring in the supplies required to 'Hold Khe Sanh.' The enemy siege became so tight that C-130s were finally prevented from landing and were forced to resort to paradropping the supplies, some of which fell to earth outside the perimeter of Khe Sanh and became sustenance for the enemy.

Helicopters still had to brave the heavy mortar, artillery, rocket and automatic weapons fire to carry the critical supplies from Khe Sanh to the surrounding outposts. The losses of helicopters in the attempt became so numerous it was obvious a less costly method had to be developed if the outposts were to be held.

An imaginative plan, the "Supergaggle," was developed to re-supply the beleaguered outposts by helicopter from Dong Ha. The plan had one very serious drawback - the heavy monsoon weather prevented VFR (visual flight rules) through the high hazardous terrain between Dong Ha and Khe Sanh. Another detrimental factor was the Khe Sanh TACAN (tactical air navigation) and GCA (ground controlled radar approach) facilities were inoperative most of the time due to constant enemy bombardment.

The plan was a bold one. Fully aware of the aeronautical skill required and the hazards that would be involved, the courageous pilots of HMM-364 a unit called the "Purple Foxes" readily accepted this tremendous challenge. Through their valiant efforts, and only through their efforts, were the outposts around Khe Sanh sustained and provided with the means of holding the area and maintaining constant surveillance of the enemy.

Finally about mid-March during the siege, thanks to the "SuperGaggle", Bill was to relieve his fellow wireman on hill 881 South. He made it through the official (January 20 through April 9th) days of the 77 day Siege. He was about to leave the Hill 881 South when the NVA made a last big go at the hill, a mortar round ended his life on the 15th of April. Bill's name along with 45 other "Warriors of Hill 881 South" are on a plaque dedicated at the National Marine Corps Museum in Quantico, Virginia on November 10th of 2006. No one in Bill's family knew of this dedication until recently. A member of Bill's family, Dick Mullins, Bill's cousin and also a Marine, saw a lonely post on a Khe Sanh Veterans web sight that simply said " KIA". Dick opened the post, it read "L/Cpl William L. Matthews Jr. KIA 15 Apr. 1968 RIP Earl." Dick emailed Earl and asked him how he knew of his cousin Bill. Earl Huse was a fellow wireman and a friend from the Khe Sanh Combat Base. More than likely according to Cpl Earl Huse, Bill was his replacement on Hill 881 South. Earl showed Dick the web sight for the "Warriors of Hill 881 South", and now the entire family knows.

Earl has never forgotten his friend and "Brother" from Khe Sanh. Dick Mullins thought the city of Port Clinton should also know about the first casualty from Ottawa County killed in Viet Nam, L/Cpl William L Matthews Jr. died as a very proud Marine, and "A Warrior on Hill 881 South .

ARROW OF DEATH

TIME MAGAZINE
May 12 2009

Forced to rationalize defeat after defeat in South Viet Nam, the Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese army have been desperately searching for a major military or psychological victory. They have lately been emboldened in the search by highly exaggerated reports from their commanders in the South, who often multiply the number of U.S dead by ten or 15 in order to please their bosses up North.

The Communists have massed troops in unusually large numbers in and around the Demilitarized Zone, have directly threatened the provincial capital of Quang Tri and even the ancient Vietnamese capital of Hue 32 miles to the south. In an area where their strength is great, they gambled on a set battle with the U.S. Marines. Last week they came off second best in one of the war's bloodiest series of battles

In a valley near Khe Sanh in the extreme northwest tip of South Viet Nam, only eight miles from the Laotian border and twelve miles south of the DMZ, North Vietnamese commanders thought that they had found a tactical situation that somewhat resembled Dien bien phu, where they inflicted the decisive defeat on the French in 1954. Before the Communists discovered that they, and not the U.S. Marines, were to share the fate of the French, several fierce battles were fought up and down hills so worthless that they had only numbers (representing elevation in meters above sea level), not names.

In a Korea-like seesaw of hand-to-hand combat, two battalions of Marines took 1,000 casualties: nearly 200 dead and 800 wounded. The cost to Hanoi was 1,200 dead and countless wounded among the North's freshest, best-trained troops.

The Strategy. The terrain looked promising to the North Vietnamese. Near Khe Sanh, a shaft of the Ho Chi Minh trail comes out of Laos, headed by three hills that form an arrow. Hill 861 is the tip, aimed east into the heart of troubled Quang Tri province, around which some 35,000 Communist troops are drawn. Hill 881 North and Hill 881 South form the arrow's flukes.

An area of choice coffee plantations and twelve-foot-high elephant grass, the Khe Sanh Valley was defended by a company of U.S. Marines guarding its airstrip and three companies of South Vietnamese in the Special Forces camp at Lang Vei. The North Vietnamese, hidden from air observation by monsoon clouds and rain, had stealthily and expertly moved in through Laos and fortified the three hills into a vast redoubt for at least two regiments of the 325th NVA Division.

The twelve-day-long battle began when a five-man U.S. forward-observer team went up Hill 861 for a look; only one man came back alive. Two Marine platoons that followed were stopped at the base of the hill by heavy fire. With that, Marine Commander Lieut. General Lewis Walt pulled out all the stops, ordered two battalions into action.

The Army's big 105-mm. and 155-mm. guns swung round to zero in on the enemy hilltops. Marine jets began flying sortie after sortie with 1000-lb. and 2,000-lb. bombs and napalm, eventually dropped more than 1,000 tons on the North Vietnamese. From the outset the Marine strategy was to take the hills at any cost, denying the enemy the killing high ground that would control the entire Khe Sanh area. Hill 861. The first hill the Marines charged was 861.

They reached the top but could not hold it under heavy fire from the entrenched Communists, who refused to break and run as they have so often done in Viet Nam once U.S. troops closed with them. The Marines withdrew and let the air and artillery knock off the top of the hill, blasting away foliage and great chunks of earth and rock. After that, the Marine tactic became, as Lieut. Colonel Gary Wilder explained, "to use just enough Marines to fix a target, then pull back and use our ordnance."

The lethal rain of ordnance that they called in worked on Hill 861; two days later the Marines took it without difficulty. The enemy dead were larger and better fed than usual, and their uniforms were new khaki or tiger suits. Some even wore steel helmets, and many had been using high-powered sniper rifles with scopes.

One battalion of Marines then moved toward Hill 881 South, the other toward 881 North. Both hills had been mercilessly shelled, bombed and burned off, and Wilder's 3rd Battalion moved up the steep slopes of 881 South, fired on only by stray snipers. By early afternoon, one company was moving up a draw to the summit itself when the North Vietnamese struck.

Protected from the bombing in their log-roofed bunkers, the Communists had let the Marines advance into their very midst. Popping out of spider holes and bunkers everywhere, they opened up a murderous crossfire. Those Marines caught out in the open were cut to pieces by small-arms fire, grenades and mortars. One Marine's canteen, found later on the battlefield, had six bullet holes in it. Pinned down, the Americans heard the North Vietnamese calling out in English: "Put on your helmets, Marines; we are coming after you!"

It was several hours before the Marines could shoot their way back down the hill, able to carry with them their wounded but not their dead. Fifty Marines had been killed, another 150 wounded. All the next day the jets streaked in, backed up by 6-525 whose bomb clusters turned hills into volcanoes as they raked along the Laotian border and the DMZ to seal off the area. Next day, Hill 881 South was a blasted moonscape of stumps and craters; the Vietnamese finally withdrew, and the Marines at last claimed the summit and their dead.

A Cold Rain. The northern peak of 881 proved nearly as difficult for Lieut. Colonel Earl ("Pappy") DeLong's 2nd Battalion. Halfway up the slope, the Marines ran into heavy fire from bunkers, and bedded down. A cold rain blew up during the night, and just before dawn the North Vietnamese came charging down from the summit, penetrating a company perimeter. Jerking on their boots, the Marines repulsed the attackers. But 28 Marines were killed and 61 wounded.

Once again, the Marines waited and watched while air and artillery slashed at the Red bunkers dug in above them, reducing the hilltop to a bare burnt knob. A captured prisoner warned that the Communists planned to hit DeLong's line again that night. Instead they hit the Lang Vei Special Forces camp, cutting through its defenses and blowing it up with satchel charges; they killed 39 of its defenders, including two Americans.

The Marines listened helplessly to the attack, unable to leave their own positions to aid. It turned out to be the last North Vietnamese thrust near Khe Sanh. When the Marines stormed up 881 North, twelve days after the battle for the valley had been joined, the Communists had withdrawn into Laos.

The Marines counted 575 enemy bodies on the three hills and estimated that air and artillery had taken at least another 600 Communist lives—a "tremendous" toll, said General William Westmoreland, who visited the battlefield. "I don't think the battle is necessarily over," he added. "I anticipate further fighting in the area."
General Walt helicoptered into Khe Sanh several times in the course of the fighting and came under fire himself— to the extent that he was once forced to dive into a foxhole. The series of battles constituted, he said, the seventh time since the February Tet truce that his Marines had stopped an enemy offensive aborning. From the Laos-supplied arrow of Khe Sanh, the Communists would have had a straight shot east across Quang Tri province. By vigorously denying them that shot, the Marines may well have frustrated an even larger invasion directly southward across the DMZ.

I GET MAIL

I had recent contact from editor of SEABEE magazine, a publication of CEC/Navy Facility Engineering Command. The following link was sent over by the editor showing a Former Marine and Khe Sanh Veteran Marion Stuckey, touring in Viet Nam.

One of Marion Sturkey's photos shows the remains of Liberty Bridge at Song Thu Bon River. The caption indicated that it was built by United States Marines. I had to write and correct that caption. Yes, the Marines supplied the defense perimeter but in 1967 my battalion, USNMCB-4, built the "Liberty Bridge," the longest timber bridge in Asia (See my attached photos) but it's all gone now. It was 4 times the size of the Kwai Bridge in Thailand; seen in the 1957 film, Bridge on the River Kwai.

Marion Sturkey's photo with caption that appeared in the Heritage Press.

Downstream from An Hoa towards Hoi An, the Marines had constructed the huge "Liberty Bridge" across the river. Now, over a quarter-century later, Sturkey stands among the remnants of the bridge pilings. Nothing else remains.

The whole world's war

His innocence was lost
Nineteen and forty-three
Then came the bullets
And his body bag was free

He's just 18
Really just a boy
First came Korea
Then that Vietnam War

His first few hours
Nineteen and seven-one
There was blood on his hands
His friends both lost and won

He's just 18
Sent to a Gulf war
There was a city of Kuwait
Off some distant shore

In a sea of deserts
He was fighting people from there
But he's dying with them now
In darkened oil fields right here

He's just 18
Really just a boy
Sent away from home
Gonna fight a war

In a city of Baghdad
For the price of a gun
He gave it all he had
Then came a friendly's bomb

With just a rifle and a bayonet
Just a bullet in a gun
Now there's body bags filled
Has he lost or has he won

The plane rides home

The only cost is freedom
For a body bag or the mind of a son

DEATHS IN THE NEWS

The Colorado Springs man who designed the black and white POW/MIA flag flown everywhere from federal buildings to Harley-Davidson fenders died Thursday at his home

Newt Heisley was 88 Newt wanted no hoopla. All he wants is a celebration," his fiancee, Donna R. Allison, said That's what he'll get on Flag Day, June 14, from 1-4 p.m. at the American Legion Post 38 in Security. The public is invited. He will be entombed at Shrine of Remembrance next to his wife of 61years, Margaret "Bunny", who died in 2005

The prolific image he sketched in pencil in 1971 has the silhouette of a man under a guard tower and behind barbed wire. It's a symbolic reminder that not every soldier returned from the war in Vietnam.

The flag flew over the White House when resident Ronald Reagan marked the first POW/MIA Recognition Day. Biker groups adopted the flag, tattooing the image on their bodies, patching it on jackets and flying it from their bumpers.

Newt Heisley sported the image on his hat, lapel and license plate "Everyone knew its Newt's flag," Allison said. "He would personally sign them for people, that's what he would do for years .He never dreamed it would be a national icon. He was simply "the ad guy" around town.

He was just working for an ad agency. He came up with the rendition of the flag," said his son, James Heisley. "At first he was almost embarrassed, but he got kind of used to it. It defined his life.

Newt Heisley was proud of what the flag meant. He was a C-46 transport pilot in World War II in the Pacific."It was typical to present it in black-and-white and his idea was to go back and do some color," James Heisley said. They came and looked at it and said, 'That's it.'

Newt Heisley worked in advertising for 25 years in big Manhattan agencies before moving to Colorado Springs to start an his own advertising firm "He decided there had to be greener pastures," James Heisley said. "He almost took a job in Bermuda, but my mom was a little leery of living on an island. They said, 'Let's head West and see what we can see.' They were on the way to California and pulled into a hotel room in Colorado Springs in the dark. In the morning he saw Pikes Peak and said, 'Bunny, we aren't going any further.'"

He retired from Heisley Design and Advertising in 1987."He didn't expect to get any recognition. If he had a nickel for every time that image appeared, he and I'd be multi-multi millionaires," James Heisley said. "Newt always said it was better as public image." He is also is survived by another son, Jeffrey N., who modeled for the silhouette on the flag; daughters-in-law Susan Heisley and Deborah Heisley; and granddaughter Sara Heisley.

History of the National League of POW/MIA Families' POW/MIA Flag

In 1971, Mrs. Michael Hoff, an MIA wife and member of the National League of Families, recognized the need for a symbol of our POW/MIAs. Prompted by an article in the Jacksonville, Florida Times-Union, Mrs. Hoff contacted Norman Rivkees, Vice President of Annin & Company which had made a banner for the newest member of the United Nations, the People's Republic of China, as a part of their policy to provide flags to all United Nations members states.

Mrs. Hoff found Mr. Rivkees very sympathetic to the POW/MIA issue, and he, along with Annin's advertising agency, designed a flag to represent our missing men. Following League approval, the flags were manufactured for distribution. On March 9, 1989, an official League flag, which flew over the White House on 1988 National POW/MIA Recognition Day, was installed in the U.S. Capitol Rotunda as a result of legislation passed overwhelmingly during the 100th Congress.

In a demonstration of bipartisan Congressional support, the leadership of both Houses hosted the installation ceremony.

The League's POW/MIA flag is the only flag ever displayed in the U.S. Capitol Rotunda where it will stand as a powerful symbol of national commitment to America's POW/MIAs until the fullest possible accounting has been achieved for U.S. personnel still missing and unaccounted for from the Vietnam War.

On August 10, 1990, the 101st Congress passed U.S. Public Law 101-355, which recognized the League's POW/MIA flag and designated it "as the symbol of our Nation's concern and commitment to resolving as fully as possible the fates of Americans still prisoner, missing and unaccounted for in Southeast Asia, thus ending the uncertainty for their families and the Nation".

The importance of the League's POW/MIA flag lies in its continued visibility, a constant reminder of the plight of America's POW/MIAs. Other than "Old Glory", the League's POW/MIA flag is the only flag ever to fly over the White House, having been displayed in this place of honor on National POW/MIA Recognition Day since 1982. With passage of Section 1082 of the 1998 Defense Authorization Act during the first term of the 105th Congress, the League's POW/MIA flag will fly each year on Armed Forces Day, Memorial Day, Flag Day, Independence Day, National POW/MIA Recognition Day and Veterans Day on the grounds or in the public lobbies of major military installations as designated by the Secretary of the Defense, all Federal national cemeteries, the national Korean War Veterans Memorial, the National Vietnam Veterans Memorial, the White House, the United States Postal Service post offices and at the official offices of the Secretaries of State, Defense and Veteran's Affairs, and Director of the Selective Service System.

VIETNAM VET FINDS CLOSURE IN RETURN TO VIETNAM

By Jill Moon
The Telegraph

ALTON - Vietnam War veteran Michael Eugene Weber recently revisited the country that broke him, but this time he came home whole. On Memorial Day, Weber thought back on the more than 20 years he spent in the U.S. Army, his harrowing days of service and his recent trip back to Vietnam to help build a school.

Weber graduated from East Alton-Wood River High School in 1969 and joined the Army so that he could further his education. But the education he received was not exactly what he planned. While in the service, Weber went to Northwestern Oklahoma State and received a bachelor's degree in business administration, but he also received lessons in humanity in Vietnam that he would realize later.

"I volunteered for Vietnam," said Weber, who retired as a sergeant major and who recently returned from a sort of pilgrimage to the Southeast Asian country. "I thought I was (in the Army) for a reason, so I volunteered. I was a young 19-year-old from Illinois - like I knew what the world was all about."
Today, the highly educated and militarily decorated Alton man is involved with the Vietnam Veterans Restoration Program through the Veterans Administration Hospital, where he has attended veterans' group sessions for the last six years.
Vietnam Veterans Restoration is a nonprofit, nongovernmental organization that raises funds and builds schools in Vietnam, among other things. Weber returned to Vietnam with a team from the group, and they helped build a school while they were there.

"I think I've always wanted to go back to Vietnam," Weber said. "I felt I left some doors open I needed to close."

For years after his service in Vietnam, Weber suffered from nightmares so intense that his wife, Peggy, would wake him cautiously with a broom handle, in case he woke up swinging.

Weber was in Vietnam for less than 18 months before a Viet Cong mine blew up his tank, killing one of the soldiers on the tank's four-man team that day. Weber belonged to the First Battalion 77th Armored Division in the Demilitarized Zone, up north in Quang Tri Province in South Vietnam. When he entered the conflict, he was an E4 specialist, but Weber became a sergeant by the time he left Vietnam in 1971.

His unit reopened Khe Sanh and Lang Vei. The war was fought in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia from 1959 to 1975."I had more good times than bad. It's just when the bad times came, it was real bad," Weber recalled.

"I had a lot of bravado at the time. It's not until years later it comes back to visit you."

Weber was wounded twice in Vietnam and received two Purple Hearts, as well as a Bronze Star for valor. Even getting shot at did not deter the young soldier from extending his tour of duty for six months and re-enlisting for six years during his tour in Vietnam.

But the mine that blew up his tank ended his tour just a week before he was coming home to East Alton, where he was born and raised."I was sitting in the commander cupola. I always had a flak jacket under me and my legs on the gun shield. If I had my legs down ....." he recalled before quieting the thought. The driver died, while the two side gunners survived.

"Still today, I don't remember their names," said Weber, who ended up with metal shrapnel through-out the back of one of his legs. "It would come out over the years."

The Army sent Weber to Da Nang for medical attention, then to Japan, and finally to Fort Lewis in Washington state. The whole thing took less than a week."Interestingly, when I came home, I was pretty proud and would wear my uniform," He said. "But it didn't take long to realize no one really gave a rat's ass.

Things weren't going well in the war. I began thinking, 'Gee whiz, what did I do?'"

He admits he was not a very good soldier after that while stationed in Fort Hood, Texas, and he wanted nothing to do with tanks. That's when the future environmental science doctorate got into explosive ordnance disposal."EOD kept me on sane footing," said Weber, who suffers from post-traumatic stress disorder. "I believe if I hadn't stayed in the service, I would not have done well. The discipline, focus and organization carried over into civilian life."

In 1983, Weber developed and wrote curriculum for a training program on how to defeat an improvised nuclear device; he has been published repeatedly in journals and magazines. He received a master's degree in environmental science from Chadwick University in Alabama and his doctorate from Loyola University in New Orleans.

When Weber was 38 years old, he woke up one day and decided to get out of the military."It was the biggest mistake of my life," he said. "Twenty-four, 25 years later (after Vietnam), I start having issues because of Vietnam."

Through his involvement with the Vietnam Veterans Restoration Program, he became part of 10-member Team 24 to Vietnam with veterans from all over the United States. Team 24 met in California and flew to Hanoi for a trip that lasted from March 27 to April 22, with nearly three weeks in Vietnam. "I'm glad I didn't go by myself on these tours," Weber said. Team 24 visited Vietnam during the 50th anniversary of the Ho Chi Minh Trail and met the Vietnamese general who created the covert military route to Laos. The same general also helped design the Ho Chi Minh Highway, a two-lane blacktop road from Khe Sanh to the end of the A Shau Valley near Saigon.

While visiting the North Vietnamese prison dubbed the "Hanoi Hilton," where U.S. Sen. John McCain spent time as a prisoner of war, Weber became incensed when he looked up from the prison courtyard to see a Hilton Hotel."The first three days in Hanoi, the anxiety was pretty high," he admitted. "This was so inappropriate of the Hilton (Hotels). I was ready to pack my bags and leave. This didn't help."

Another thing that bothered Weber was what the Vietnamese call "Relics of the American War," which included a monument made from downed U.S. military aircraft. The Vietnamese version of the war in its military museum and on "Hamburger Hill" also agitated Weber, but he stuck it out.

"I did not go there to ask for forgiveness or give forgiveness," he said. "Any animosity I had for North Vietnam disappeared years ago."When he visited youngsters in a Vietnamese school for children with birth defects caused by Agent Orange and injuries because of unexploded ordnance, his emotions began to change.

"We didn't know Agent Orange caused cancer," he said. "At the time, we thought it was just two ingredients used in agriculture, and it worked the best."

Then, Team 24 went to Hue, about 20 kilometers off the coast of the South China Sea. They spent the weekends in Hue but worked during the week in the A Shau Valley, building a school for children ages 3 through 5. Weber gave Frisbees and about 30 piccolos to the children for whom the school was being built and spent much time with them and the chool's teachers.

"My granddaughter is 5 years old, so that's another reason it was special to be building this school," he said. After Hue, the team went to A Luoi, which is 3 kilometers from Hamburger Hill. Weber climbed Hamburger Hill, becoming one of 13 Americans to do so since the end of the war, he said. Eventually, Weber did his final act of closure, although he had performed several small steps throughout Team 24's trip.

He took his jungle fatigue pants from the Vietnam War and buried them in the jungle, where he put a small U.S. flag on the burial site."There's a whole bunch of reasons why people go back," he said. "I love the children. A lot of issues I had, once I was there with these kids, (the issues) just went away. I didn't go back for anything other than closure and the school project. It was better than being on a tour bus, and interacting with the Vietnamese people was fantastic."The Webers will be married 37 years in August. Their son, Michael E. Weber Jr., is married to Erin, and they live in Alton with their daughter, Kaitlin, 5.

REMEMBER HIGH COURAGE BLOODY HILLS OF VIETNAM

Cobb H. Hammond
Memphis Post May 24, 2009

Forty years ago this month, soldiers of the 101st Airborne Division assaulted An Bia mountain -- better known as Hamburger Hill -- for 10 grueling days.

Two years earlier, in May 1967, men of the 3rd Marine Regiment and elements of the 9th Marines fought to claim a lesser-known, but no less contested series of mountaintops. These bloodied hilltops were known only by their height in meters -- Hills 861, 881 South and 881 North.

The desperate battle, which commenced in late April and ended unceremoniously May 11, became known as the "Khe Sanh Hill Fights."

On Memorial Day weekend, when we commemorate those Americans who gave their lives for freedom in all our country's wars, we should remember the almost 170 Marines -- including one Memphian -- who died in the battle for the Khe Sanh Hills.

The three hilltops were defended by two regiments of the North Vietnamese Army, better known as the NVA. They had had approximately six months to build the bunker and trench fortifications that overlooked the growing Khe Sanh combat base several miles away.

The NVA had every intention of defending their strategic vantage point. Their interlocking set of defenses were barely noticeable to the naked eye unless one stumbled into them. Hundreds of bunkers were constructed with much precision for the steep defense that lay astride the Laotion border, allowing easy re-supply for the necessities of battle.

As Marines advanced, sometimes rifle companies abreast, murderous enfilade fire would pour down from light and heavy machine guns from bunkers with up to six feet of overhead protection, seemingly impervious to American supporting fire, except by direct hits from 1,000-pound bombs.

The terrain the leathernecks faced was cloaked by 100-foot-high jungle canopy with dense foliage below, and a combination of undergrowth and vines so thick that it was difficult for machetes to hack through. Elephant grass, 6 to 8 feet tall and razor-sharp, was prevalent. Spider holes dotted the landscape, allowing the enemy to pop up only feet away to release a barrage of fire, only to melt back into the earth. Mortars had pre-positioned fire on most of the tactical advances up the fingers and face of the hills, making the Marines' advance that more treacherous.

By May 4, after two Marine rifle companies had basically been decimated, the overall commander spread his forces to widen the attack, and unleashed the full weight of his arsenal, including B52 strikes, fire from every available artillery battery and dozens of napalm strikes.

It is at this point that the story takes on a local perspective, as a young Marine who had been born in Crenshaw, Miss., and raised in Memphis took his last breath on May 2, 1967. Cpl. Ralph V. Dye Jr. was not the only Memphian present that day, but he was the only one who gave his life for his country.

Born 50 miles south of Memphis, Ralph had lived in Memphis during his formative years and had taken a wife before the draft notice came from Uncle Sam. The Corps was his destiny, and he proudly went and served. He was struck by small-arms fire that hot, humid day, 25 years, two months and one day after he was given the gift of life. Ralph died while attempting to rescue someone in his squad who had been hit earlier.

As the battle continued, heavy, intermittent fog in many cases prevented helicopter fire support and extraction, as the pilots could not see who was who. As different rifle companies neared the various rests in support of engaged units, the maelstrom took on the characteristics of a meat grinder.

When the last skirmishes ended, the final toll was 168 Marines killed and more than 500 wounded, with two missing. Among the North Vietnamese enemy, 940 were killed, with possibly hundreds more killed in collapsed bunkers and in the deadly napalm strikes.

One particular Marine rifle company (Echo, 2/3) was subjected to some of the toughest fighting and exemplified their effort in valor and blood: two Navy Crosses, five Silver and six Bronze Stars and 150 Purple Hearts -- leaving about 30 physically unscarred souls from this group to fight another day. Most of these men would go on to "earn their Heart" in the following weeks and months.

None of the Marines' actions was performed in nationalistic pride, but simply to follow orders, implement the strategic plan and fight for their fellow Marines. And successful these American fighting men were.

On Memorial Day weekend, we should memorialize their sacrifice, courage and honor -- knowing that these men, most of them only 19 or 20 years old, did their duty, and died for their country's call. It was a call that only recently has been fully and legitimately appreciated.

TEAM VIPER 1966 KHE SANH

by Mike Fishbaugh

The following is an excerpt from "Gone Native"; a book by retired Special Forces First Sergeant Alan G. Cornett , who served in Vietnam from 1966 to 1973. This excerpt is located in Chapter 5 from pages 74 to 79.

"Team Viper We're Hit Bad"

The next evening, Wednesday, 29 November 1966, I watched as Sgt. Russ Bott and Sgt. Willie Stark and four Vietnamese loaded into a waiting UH-1H helicopter. Their call sign was Team Viper, and their AO (area of operation) was tucked up close to Laos and North Vietnam. Everybody was camouflaged and dressed to kill.

The weather was "dog*", with rain showers, gusting winds, and a very low cloud ceiling. When the team left to be inserted, the flying weather was marginal, and I thought that the mission should have been aborted, but knowing how many people respected my opinion, I wasn't going to say a thing. I learned later that as the insertion helicopter got closer to the operational area, the higher elevation put the team right into the cloud ceiling. That forced the helicopter to weave around the mountains as the pilot tried to maintain a course to the designated LZ in the growing darkness.

The pilots could have aborted the mission, but they were under intense command pressure to insert the team. From so low a altitude the pilots made a critical navigational error, mistaking a swollen stream for a river checkpoint. When the helicopter pilots returned to base, the consensus was that they must have missed the LZ and inserted the team somewhere in Laos.

At Khe Sanh, the winds howled that night as sheets of rain blasted my tent. Command was in the * because of potentially embarrassing political fallout of having a United States Army helicopter land operating ground forces outside the borders of South Vietnam. An honest mistake made in the midst of high-risk combat operations was being aggravated by distorted politics.

The next morning, Thursday, an Army radio-relay plane from Da Nang arrived on station and reported that the entire operational area was socked in. Team Viper had made contact with the relay and wanted to know its exact position. They had realized that they were in the wrong area, and wanted a forward air controller (FAC) to pinpoint the team's location. During the early morning the team reported a brief contact and firefight with the enemy, but broke the contact and reported that it was moving east and north.

By midmorning at Khe Sanh, the winds had died down to about twenty knots. I could see about two hundred yards, and the clouds were at two hundred feet. A FAC plane, piloted by John Flanagan and carrying a Delta recon sergeant in the backseat, left at midday to try to locate Team Viper. After some exceptional flying by the FAC, the team was pinpointed in Laos but close to the DMZ (demilitarized zone) - and in the center of a suspected North Vietnamese regiment.

On arriving back at Khe Sanh, the pilot pointed out on the operations map that Team Viper was four or five clicks northwest of where we'd thought they were. Flanagan also informed command that he had sighted numerous armed NVA around Team Viper. But the team's mistaken position on the operations map was not changed to reflect the FAC's information. The winds that night were so strong that I had to go out and secure the tent to keep it from blowing away.

Friday dawned to horrendous weather. A thirty-knot wind was blowing clouds across the Khe Sanh plateau . It was raining intermittently, but the rain was coming in horizontally due to the weather. It was extremely bad weather, and my thoughts were with Team Viper and another recon team led by Staff Sergeant St. Laurent that was also out in the storm. The radio relay plane from Da Nang had picked up a garbled radio transmission from Team Viper and understood that they had again made contact with the enemy, and in the ensuing firefight, several members of the team had been wounded.

Just prior to my learning of Team Viper's new problem, one of the Vietnamese rangers had came over to me, and asked if I would remove a cyst from his leg. I removed the cyst, and as I was suturing him up, Master Sergeant Stamper came into the tent, and told me to get my aid bag and be ready to go at a moment's notice. At the same moment, Sgt. Irby Dyer walked into the tent, and Stamper told him that he would have to go, not me. That hurt.

The commander had decided to launch a rescue extraction. Involved were a pickup ship, a spare pickup, a command-and-control (C&C) helicopter, and two gunships. Stamper went back to the TOC to monitor the radios, and Dyer went to the helicopter pad. He was to be the belly man on the extraction helicopter. More important, he would be able to help with the wounded. I quickly finished up with the Ranger, then hurried over to listen with Stamper to the radio transmissions between the rescue ships and Russ Bott. We could only hear the C&C's portion of the radio transmission as it repeated what was being transmitted by Team Viper. The team was asking if the choppers had launched, and reported that one American (Willie Stark) was badly wounded, and that the team was unable to move.

A short time later, we heard another one-sided conversation. Team Viper was receiving sporadic fire. By then they had one seriously wounded, and two others with lesser wounds. That news was fueling our anxieties. Adding to Team Viper's problems was the fact that the rescue ship couldn't locate the team. Occasionally, the team w could hear the sounds of choppers, but they couldn't figure out which of the five helicopters they were hearing. Finally, a radio transmission was relayed back to Khe Sanh, asking if the FAC (John Flanagan) could fly out in his aircraft and pinpoint the team.

Some incredible brave flying was done that day by Flanagan. With Delta recon Sergeant Tommy Tucker outfitted in ass-kicking gear in the backseat, they took off into a vicious shearing wind. The winds at Khe Sanh were gusting to fifty knots. When Flanagan arrived in the operational area, the helicopters had only twenty minutes of fuel left. Talking to Team Viper, Flanagan recognized Russ Bott's voice immediately, and he heard the background chatter of automatic weapons and grenades exploding as a vicious firefight was in progress. Bott told Flanagan that Stark was hit bad, that the Americans had become separated from the three Vietnamese on the team, and were completely surrounded.

Flanagan told Bott to key the handset on his radio so that the FAC could home in on the signal. Guided by the signal, Flanagan overflew Team Viper's position, and Russ Bott gave him the codeword "payoff." Flanagan then told Bott to pop smoke so that he could direct the rescue ship in. Purple smoke was observed and confirmed, and Flanagan saw that the team was located in elephant grass on the crest of a small knoll. When Flanagan overflew the team's position, he drew no ground fire, so he cleared the pickup helicopter in. When a rescue helicopter came to a hover about ten feet above the team, the whole world exploded. The elephant grass parted, and from dozens of camouflaged spider holes and gun emplacements, vicious automatic weapons fire was brought to bear on the helicopter. It had been a trap, and Team Viper had been the bait.

The FAC launched a marking rocket so the gunships could pour fire into the enemy positions to protect the pickup helicopter. But the pickup helicopter rose, banked left into the air for about two hundred feet, then continued banking to the left, finally rolling over , and plunging straight down, auguring nose-first into the ground. It burst into a ball of flames as it continued to roll down the small knoll, killing the two pilots, the two door gunners, and Sgt. Irby Dyer in the process. On the second pass, the lead gunship had its fire control system shot out. That was a bad day for our Project Delta.

Back at Khe Sanh, we were catching bits and pieces of the horrible drama as it unfolded. We heard the commander order Team Viper to break up, and escape and evade. Then the helicopters transmitted that they were at critical fuel levels and returning to base. The team was being abandoned, and not by choice. It was a gut-wrenching moment, and I could see gears churning in Master Sergeant Stamper's head. He looked at me, and voiced something like "We've got to help them." I knew then that I was going to be a part of it.

Meanwhile, above Team Viper's position, Flanagan was witness to a heartbreaking moment. The last radio transmission from Russ Bott was, "FAC, please help us, we're hit bad." It was from a brave soldier that wouldn't abandon his best friend even though he had been told to do so. Alone, armed with only marking rockets, and smoke grenades, Flanagan tried what he already knew was futile, but try he did. He expended his rockets on the active gun emplacements, and then flew a wide turn around back over the team's position. All he saw was trampled grass. He found no sign of the team. When he flew over the downed helicopter, all that he saw was a wisp of smoke rising from the charred hulk of the helicopter wreckage. There was no movement, and no sign of life. Flanagan flew back to Khe Sanh. I witnessed the hair-raising landing he preformed in a vicious fifty-knot crosswind. So many brave men.

THE FALLEN ARE THE HEART OF THIS STORY

When Marine veteran Joseph F. O'Neill of Waterbury rises to represent Vietnam veterans Monday at the National Purple Heart Hall of Honor, he will have 10 minutes to tell the story of what seemed like an eternity on Hill 881 South.

The Hall of Honor, an effort to collect and preserve the stories of Purple Heart recipients from all branches of the military, opened in New Windsor, N.Y., on Nov. 10, 2006. The very next day, O'Neill walked in and sat down for an interview that is now preserved digitally for others to share.

"He came in and was interested in sharing his story," said Tom Lange, coordinator of digital history at the Hall of Honor. "It lasted about 30 minutes. It is a very moving interview."

Lange wasn't on the staff when O'Neill was interviewed, but he has heard O'Neill's accounting of what happened on April 30, 1967, on Hill 881 South in Khe Sanh, not far from the border with Laos.

The hill was the site of heavy fighting. U.S. Marines battled to deny the enemy control of the hill because of its strategic firing position.

Many Marines died in that effort. O'Neill, a fire team leader, was nearly among them. He was awarded a Purple Heart for trying to retrieve Marines from another company who had been injured or killed in the battle.

"There were so many casualties that our unit was affectionately known as Medevac Mike throughout the Ninth Marines," O'Neill said.

O'Neill and another Marine from his unit — Company M, Third Battalion, Ninth Marine Regiment — volunteered to retrieve the soldiers, both living and dead.

"I had just grabbed a dead Marine by the arm when I got shot," said O'Neill, who retired in 2006 after 38 years delivering mail on Wolcott Street in Waterbury for the United States Postal Service.

O'Neill fell face down, gasping to breathe. "I gave myself up for dead. My neck was broken. I didn't know it. I couldn't breathe in or out," said O'Neill, who now delivers flowers for Margot Flower shop in Prospect.

"I thought about my mother and everyone getting bad news. There was a picture of Jesus on the kitchen wall (at home) that came toward me and I yelled, turned, got up and began walking in shock."

He was evacuated by helicopter and taken to the Naval Aid Station at Danang. A fragment of the bullet remains in his neck.

O'Neill, who was 20 at the time, was presented the Purple Heart aboard the hospital ship Repose, off the coast of Vietnam. About six months later, at age 21 he was awarded the Bronze Star Medal.

O'Neill prefers to talk about the Marines who died during battle, which is what he focused on in his speech. He will list the names of the 13 Marines from his unit who were killed on Hill 881 South, and speak about their actions in war. He will recite every name listed on the George Lynch Veterans Memorial Park on Thomaston Avenue in Waterbury.

KSV CARLTON CRENSHAW REMEMBERS ON MEMORIAL DAY

SCOTTSVILLE — More than 100 veterans and family members of military casualties gathered Sunday in Scottsville to remember those sailors, soldiers, airmen and Marines who gave their lives in defense of the United States.

"We offer solemn tribute to all our comrades, wherever they may rest," said Lewis. E. Farrish, commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 8169 in Scottsville. "... To you comrades who have departed, we offer our solemn salute."

Farrish led the Memorial Day service at the old Scottsville School gymnasium. The crowd sang "God Bless America," "The Star Spangled Banner" and listened as former servicemen recited a poem titled "I am a Veteran." Scottsville resident Margaret Tooley recited Johnny Cash's "That Ragged Old Flag." And nearly two dozen officials each presented a red-white-and-blue wreath.

"On behalf of the town of Scottsville, I lay this wreath in memory of those who died in the protection of freedom around the world," said Scottsville Mayor R. Stephen Phipps. Shirley Roundtree of the Fluvanna County NAACP presented a wreath on behalf of her group. "We pay homage to all our veterans — all those who died, all those who were injured and all those who are still at war," she said. "God bless them all."

In the ceremony's invocation, the Rev. Rudy Ramsey of Scottsville thanked all of the men and women who have served in the military, but particularly those who died in combat.

"They have paid the ultimate price for the freedom of this land," Ramsey said. "We don't want to take it for granted." Veteran Carlton Crenshaw of Palmyra told the crowd a couple of stories from his time as a Marine serving in Vietnam during 1967 and '68. Crenshaw told the tale of how he was one of 6,000 troops surrounded by some 35,000 Northern Vietnamese Army members at the Battle of Khe Sanh.

And he spoke about the sacrifices in Vietnam made by his friend Russ Armstrong. Armstrong's platoon walked into heavy artillery and mortar fire. The company commander, the radio operator and a third of the platoon were killed in moments. Fifteen out of 50 Marines were quickly dead, another 15 or 20 were wounded.

"The one thing we don't do is leave Marines," Crenshaw said. "Russ did what he had to do, which was basically circle the wagons — with no cover."

Armstrong pulled his wounded comrades into the center of the area and helped fend off the surrounding attackers. Armstrong took serious wounds in both legs from mortar fire, but continued to coordinate the defense throughout the night until they were rescued in the morning.

"He refused to be evacuated until every single one of his Marines was accounted for," Crenshaw said. "About 40 percent were dead."

Armstrong received the Navy Cross for his actions that day. Armstrong recuperated after 18 months and went on to college and eventually married. He died in 2007 when a truck crashed into his motorcycle.

WASHINGTONIANS CELEBRATE MEMORIAL DAY
KSV BILL JAYNE A KEYNOTE SPEAKER

By LEVI PULKKINEN

"Let no neglect, no ravages of time, testify to the present or to the coming generations that we have forgotten as a people the cost of a free and undivided republic."

That was Gen. John A. Logan's command in 1868, when he ordered that day in May be set aside to remember slain soldiers of the Union Army. Then called Decoration Day, it is now Memorial Day.

Drawing on the spirit of Logan's words, hundreds of veterans joined families and friends Monday at Tahoma National Cemetery in Kent to remember the nation's war dead. Addressing the gathered crowd, Marine Corps Lt. Col. James Stocks called those killed in service "our nation's most precious treasure."

Stocks, commander of the Marine Corps contingent at Fort Lewis, noted that combat casualties now laid to rest at the 12-year-old Kent cemetery span generations. A member of a U.S. Colored Infantry regiment during the Civil War, 2nd Lt. Jesse T. Barrick was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor having been killed in 1863. Barrick is joined at the cemetery by Sgt. 1st Class Nathan Ross Chapman, a Special Forces soldier based at Fort Lewis who became the first American to die from hostile fire early in the war in Afghanistan.

Striking a tone that would be held throughout the 90 -minute remembrance, Stocks asserted that those who died fighting abroad did so to defend liberty at home."They did not choose death, but they accepted death as the cost of these freedoms," Stocks said. "They did not value their lives more than honor, so they did not shrink from death."

The Veterans Administration-run cemetery has seen 26,000 veterans interred there since it opened in 1997. Nearly all of those survived their service before dying later in life. Between interludes of patriotic music during Monday's remembrance, speakers recognized those in the crowd who had served. One, former Veterans of Foreign Wars Auxiliary head Virginia Carman, noted the contributions to the nation's defense made by women; in Iraq alone, Carman said, 99 servicewomen have been killed performing their duties.

Bill Jayne, a Khe Sanh Veteran and V.A. cemetery development coordinator and former Marine infantryman, noted the differing circumstances under which American soldiers, sailors and airmen have served and died. In what he called "an effort to make some sense of the place we find ourselves in," Jayne shared two stories with the crowd.

First was that of his father, who served aboard destroyers in the Pacific Theater during World War II. He then offered that of a man he never knew, a 19-year-old Marine killed during the battle of Khe Sanh.

Our Echo company brother, Joe Roble who survived the siege only to die later in his tour. Joe wrote home to his family before his death in which he says, in effect, he is willing to give his life so that others may have the rights and privileges enjoyed by his younger brother, Bill, who, sorrowfully, has also passed away.

"Joe Roble's idealism enobled us all." Our veterans, especially those who died in service, have given us a heritage to guide us in this dangerous new world

His father and other World War II vets, Jayne said, fought to save and remake the world. Per Jayne's telling, those who served in the nation's later wars fought for something more ephemeral - to allow other peoples the freedoms enjoyed in the United States.

Our world remade, saved and remade is being remade again," Jayne said. "To this new generation of heroes, we say thank you."

LONG OVERDUE HONORS TO KHE SANH VETERAN MARINES

BILLINGS - A Montana Marine received a long overdue military honor Tuesday for bravery during the Vietnam War.

Private First Class Donald A. Hossack was awarded the Silver Star Medal 42 years after serving in Vietnam. Hossack was injured numerous times in the first battle of Khe Sanh, and helped save many men in his platoon by shielding others with his body and radioing information to headquarters. He said, if he had to, he'd do it all over again.

"These are my brothers and we'll always be brothers, every marine in here," Hossack said. "It all goes by the term Semper Fi. That we're always faithful to one another."

Then PFC Hosscak was with M/3/3 in the battle on Donald Hossack was just 18 years old when he led his platoon to safety after his commander was killed.

During the battle, Hossack suffered severe wounds, and was medevaced to a bomb crater. When an enemy grenade landed in the crater, he used his body to shield fellow marines from the blast.

In the end, 38 men died there that day and Donald was wounded three times different times during this battle. Sergeant Hossack said: "It a situation like that you have no regard for your personal safety you just do what ever it takes to get your fellow soldiers home alive because we are all brothers".

Despite intense pain, Hossack assumed command of the company and called for artillery strikes when he realized an enemy attack was imminent. The timing and accuracy of the strikes forced the enemy to retreat and saved the company from certain defeat. Don Hossack. Tommy Wheeler and Lester "Ray" Calhoun were all recently awarded the SS. They were all members of Mike Co, 3/3 and their Stars are for the same date, April 30,1967 for their actions on 881S. At our next reunion there will be an awards ceremony for them.

Hero Finally Gets His Due

Vietnam veteran to receive Silver Star for bravery in battle 42 years ago

By Steve Liewer
Union-Tribune Staff Writer

Nighttime cloaked Hill 881 South in a blackness that filled the Marines of Mike Company with a well-founded dread.

Lance Cpl. Ray Calhoun's platoon had drawn the job of leading an assault in this northwest corner of South Vietnam on the morning of April 30, 1967. They knew the enemy was waiting for them. Some of the North Vietnamese soldiers shouted taunts in accented English.

"All night long, they're telling us: 'Put on your helmets, Marines. You're gonna die in the morning,' " recalled Calhoun, who now lives in Scripps Ranch. The enemy didn't lie. Three-fourths of the men in Calhoun's platoon were killed or wounded.

Throughout the battle, the 19-year-old Calhoun alternately aimed grenades at enemy bunkers and bandaged his dying buddies. Twice he passed out from his own wounds, only to wake up and resume the fight.

Today, nearly 42 years later, Calhoun will receive a Silver Star – the nation's third-highest award for combat bravery – during a ceremony at Marine Corps Recruit Depot in San Diego.

Two of Calhoun's platoon mates also were awarded Silver Stars recently. Don Hossack of Kalispell, Mont., received his medal last month, and Tommy Wheeler of Lutz, Fla., will get his April 13.

The presentations follow six years of Pentagon review, through a process approved by Congress to recognize overlooked valor from past wars. The law has been invoked to credit ethnic or religious minorities whose heroism was ignored or initially downgraded.

In this case, though, the delay happened because the 1967 battle wiped out so many in Calhoun's chain of command.

"There were very few that remained alive to write up the awards," said retired Maj. Gen. John Admire, who commanded Calhoun's platoon until shortly before the battle and who ultimately crafted the three Silver Star nominations. "A lot of Marines did a lot of great things, but they never got the recognition they deserved."

Calhoun's road to Hill 881 started one day in February 1966, when he and seven of his college-football buddies were playing a poker game. They grew angry when they heard an anti-war march outside, and they vowed to join the military. All but one eventually did.

Calhoun, a native of Encino, enlisted in the Marine Corps the next day. Four months later, he arrived for boot camp in San Diego. The first night, a recruit committed suicide in his barracks by slitting his wrists.

"I had no idea what I was getting myself into," Calhoun said.

Assigned that fall to the 3rd Battalion, 3rd Marine Regiment at Camp Pendleton, he was sent to Vietnam almost immediately. Mike Company saw action from the start.

But nothing matched the battle that came the next spring. The North Vietnamese hoped to lay siege to the U.S. military outpost near Khe Sanh, which was on a vital supply route.

The Marines countered with a series of assaults on the uplands surrounding Khe Sanh that came to be called the "Hill Battles." They succeeded, but at a frightful cost.

On April 30, 1967, the men of Mike Company set out through the tall grass about 8 a.m. They reached a saddle between two hilltops, and two platoons fanned out across a clearing.

The North Vietnamese opened fire from bunkers that honeycombed the hillside. Calhoun and his platoon mates took shelter behind some fallen trees, which they quickly realized was a trap when mortar shells started falling directly on top of them.
"They set us up. We were in a killing field," said Joe Cordileone, a San Diego assistant city attorney who was with Calhoun that day. "It was a massacre."

One mortar round killed the platoon's leader, 2nd Lt. Joseph Mitchell; wounded Hossack; and knocked out Calhoun. But he woke up and got to work, dragging survivors into a bomb crater and patching up wounds with battle dressings salvaged from the bodies of the dead.

Calhoun's eagle eye had earned him the job of platoon grenadier. He watched for muzzle flashes, aimed his M79 grenade launcher at them and took out four sniper's nests.

One bullet pierced his helmet, knocking him out a second time and wounding his scalp. But he woke up again and returned to the fight.

"You get so scared, you just start living off of adrenaline," Calhoun said. "You think, 'I'm gonna die, and I'm going to kill as many of these guys as I can first.' "

U.S. bomb strikes pushed the North Vietnamese off the hill, and reinforcements reached the clearing after a few hours. The few wounded survivors left Hill 881 and the war behind.

Calhoun recuperated at China Beach and Camp Pendleton, then left the Marines a few months later. "I kind of wanted to forget about it," he said.

He used his GI Bill benefits to earn a bachelor's in accounting and became a certified public accountant. He married in 1977, and he and his wife, Donna, raised three children in San Diego.

Calhoun also started Beam One, a company that harnesses electron beams for medical uses.

His outward success disguised chronic nightmares and frequent insomnia. The sound of rain set him on edge; it reminded him of the monsoons in Vietnam. He hated the smell of fresh earth. He could be short-tempered and abrasive. Hill 881 never quite left him.

"The first thing you do is you stuff it. . . . (Then) you start looking at your life backward and realize that maybe you aren't truly normal," said Calhoun, who still attends therapy sessions twice a week
He lost touch with all of his Marine buddies. Then in 1996, he read a newspaper article about Admire's appointment as commander of the 1st Marine Division at Camp Pendleton. He sent a congratulatory note, and they reunited.

Over several years, they used the Internet to track down other Mike Company veterans and started to hold reunions. Calhoun and Cordileone, close friends in the Marines, were stunned to learn they had both moved to San Diego.

"We got together, had some beers," Cordileone said. "It was like starting all over again."

Admire came to learn that, despite the heroic conduct on Hill 881, none of the survivors from his old platoon had received awards for their bravery.

"I was fairly convinced there were some significant acts of valor that were not recognized," Admire said.

He compiled statements and submitted Silver Star nomination packets for Hossack, Wheeler and Calhoun. They were reviewed at Marine Corps headquarters in Quantico, Va., and by a board advising the secretary of the Navy. All three nominees won approval this year.
Calhoun had never asked for the honor, but he's proud to return to the recruit depot to receive his medal.

"The nicest thing is that I've had the recognition of my peers," Calhoun said.

Admire said there's another reward: The Silver Star will remind younger generations of what Vietnam War veterans endured.

"The sons and daughters of these Marines will now know that they are true heroes," he said.

HERO FINALLY GETS HIS LONG OVERDUE HONOR SGT. THOMAS WHEELER M CO 3/3

By Doc Rod Hardin - Apr 18, 2009

On Monday, April 13, 2009 The Silver Star Medal was presented to Sgt Thomas C Wheeler, USMC at the Unites States Marine Corps Reserve Training Center on West Gandy Boulevard in Tampa, Florida. At precisely 1300 hours a brief and colorful ceremony took place to properly honor a warrior after forty-two years. The award was presented by Maj. Gen. John H. Admire! (USMC Retired) and Lt. Col. Lewton, commanding officer of the 4th Amphibian Tractor Battalion, who forfeited their day off to honor our 3/3 brother, Tommy.

In attendance were numerous representatives from the Tampa area Marine Corps League, VFW and American Legion, members of the Khe Sanh Association and several of Tommy Wheeler's 3/3 brothers from 1966-67.

There was a reception after the ceremony at the nearby VFW Hall. Doc John "Snake" McBride and his wife Pam were there representing Lima 3/3 and Ripley's Raiders. From Mike 1966-67 second platoon: Thomas Wheeler and his family, Bob Moffatt, Joe Cordileone and then Second Lieutenant John Admire with his lovely daughter Kaitlin.

General Admire was their 2nd Platoon Commander in late 1966 and early 1967 prior to the Hill Fights at Khe Sanh. 1st Platoon Mike 3/3 1966-67 was represented by Paul Benson, Doc Mike Brown who was TAD to 3/9 and was on Hill 881S at the same time as Wheeler, Moffatt and Cordileone April 30,1967.

Doc Rod Hardin and Doc Nathan Jones were also guests in attendance. It was a special honor and privilege for us to be there an see Tommy receive this award.

Doc Nathan Jones, for those who came in late, was an Air Force Tech Sergeant (Medic) at Clark Air Force Base Hospital in the Philippines during the Vietnam era for two of eight years active service. He served on the Neurosurgical Unit for eighteen months and probably cared for a few of our 3/3 medevacs. Tiny Lindholm was probably a patient there when Doc Jones was aboard. Doc Jones had 278 men die on his watch. He also flew some medevac flights in-country.

Tommy and his "Sgt major," Crystal were the consummate hosts at their digs in Lutz, FL. Doc Brown was kind enough to drive us to Florida from RDU. We knew we had the right driveway when we saw the "Keep Out" postings and barbed wire. We expected sandbag bunkers and concertina, actually.

Much love and camaraderie at Fire Base Admire. We were regaled with stories of love, war and peace from Joe C. I have to remember to take a tape recorder to these events. We also need to be there in mid-February next time, so the oranges don't go fallow on the tree. We even got to see Tommy's war wounds. It gives a whole new meaning to "tearing someone a new asshole." HAW!

EDIT NOTE:
I did not know if Tommy Wheeler wanted this letter published, but I thought the family of Mike Kotic would like everyone to know how much Mike meant to Tommy and the rest of the members of M Co 3/3.

To: Anne, Mike, Nick and nephew John.

Enclosed is a Silver Star awarded to me for the battle that took place on 30 April 1967. This is considered one of the Marine Corps' crown jewels. The blood of many are on this star, including my own. The lives of so many were lost. No award can ever replace your loss or bring peace to your sweet mother.

There has never been a day that has passed that I've not thought about the sacrifice your brother made for us on that hill at Khe Sanh all those years ago. Too many lost best friends that day. Your brother was mine. His loss still brings tears and grief even after all this time. If you could accept this star from us as a symbol of the love, respect, and loyalty that all of us have in our hearts for your brother and what he means to us, it would mean so much. How proud I am to have had your brother as a friend. Until the day I die, I'll never forget him. Every day of my life has been a gift, because of his unselfishness and bravery.

Those of us who were lucky enough to have made it home owe a debt to your brother that can never be repaid. There is no one on this earth who deserves this star more than your brother. I would be so proud, if you would accept this with the same spirit in which it is given. If anyone should ever ask me, "Where's the Star?" I'll say it is in good hands. It's where it belongs. It's what your brother would think about this that matters most to me. Looking down from heaven on us, I hope there's a smile on his face. God bless your mother.

The Moving Funeral of Petty Officer Mike Monsoor

At his funeral in San Diego, California, SEALs lined up on both sides of the route of the pallbearers and loudly slapped gold tridents from their uniforms on the wooden casket as a tribute to their fallen comrade who was killed while serving in Iraq on September 29, 2006. He died after throwing himself on a grenade to prevent it from killing others whom he had been assigned to protect on a rooftop. A fellow Navy Seal who knew and trained with Monsoor Stated Michael had already earned a Silver Star for Bravery and a Bronze Star for separate acts of valor.

His funeral took place in October 12, 2006 at Fort Rosecrans National Cemetery in San Diego. Other Navy SEALs lined the procession and slapped the trident devices from their uniforms to affix them onto the casket. The ttrident is a U.S. Navy special warfare badge worn by SEALs. It represents the three aspects of SEAL special operations, sea, air, and land..As his coffin was being moved from the hearse to the grave site at Ft. Rosecrans National Cemetery , SEALs were lined up on both sides of the pallbearers route forming a column of twos, with the coffin moving up the center. As Mike's coffin passed, each SEAL, having removed his gold Trident from his uniform, slapped it down embedding the Trident in the wooden coffin. The slaps were audible from across the cemetery; by the time the coffin arrived grave side, it looked as though it had a gold inlay from all the Tridents pinned to it. This was a fitting send-off for a warrior hero.

CITATION:

For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action against the enemy while serving as a M-79 Grenadier with Company M, Third Battalion, Third Marines, Third Marine Division in connection with combat operations against the enemy in the Republic of Vietnam on 30 April 1967. Lance Corporal Calhoun s company (-) was advancing to secure Hill 881 South in the first Battle of Khe Sanh when a numerically superior enemy force attacked and inflicted heavy casualties on his platoon. Advancing with the Platoon Headquarters, Lance Corporal Calhoun was rendered temporarily unconscious from an enemy mortar barrage that killed the Platoon Leader and severely wounded the Radio Operator. When he regained consciousness he assisted in medevacing casualties to a bomb crater and providing effective counter-fire. Repeated enemy attacks inflicted heavy casualties and created a gap in the Marine defensive line. Recognizing the danger of possible enemy penetration, he attacked an enemy bunker complex and destroyed four positions with accurate M-79 fire. He then advanced to a position too close to fire his M-79, but delivered M-16 suppression fire and threw grenades into more enemy bunkers, thus preserving the line. As Marine artillery strikes temporarily prevented an enemy counterattack, Lance Corporal Calhoun again exposed himself to danger by moving throughout the battlefield to assist the wounded, collect and redistribute weapons and ammunition, and secure battle dressings from the dead to treat the wounded. Lance Corporal Calhoun persevered despite grenade and mortar explosions until receiving a severe head wound that rendered him unconscious for a second time. Amazingly, he recovered yet again and continued to fight the enemy. Lance Corporal Calhoun s courageous actions in disregarding his own safety and collecting and redistributing critical resources enabled his platoon to continue to fight and directly led to the Marine line holding. By his resolute determination, selfless sacrifice, and unwavering dedication to duty, Lance Corporal Calhoun reflected great credit upon himself and upheld the highest traditions of the Marine Corps the United States Naval Service.

DONALD A. HOSSACK

CITATION:

For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action against the enemy as Platoon Radio Operator with Company M, Third Battalion, Third Marines, Third Marine Division in connection with combat operations against the enemy in the Republic of Vietnam on 30 April 1967. Private First Class Hossack s company (-) was advancing to secure Hill 881 South in the first Battle of Khe Sanh when a numerically superior enemy force attacked, killed the Platoon Leader, and inflicted heavy casualties on his platoon. Private First Class Hossack s radio was destroyed by mortar fire in the attack, and he sustained a severe chest wound, broken arm, and multiple shrapnel wounds. Despite the severity of his injuries, Private First Class Hossack secured a squad radio as he was medevaced to a bomb crater. When an enemy grenade landed in the crater, he used his body to shield his fellow Marines from the blast and received a second severe shrapnel wound. Despite intense pain, he assumed command of the company on the hill and coordinated company positions and actions, maintained radio contact with higher headquarters, and controlled supporting fire. Upon realizing an enemy attack was imminent, he called for artillery strikes. The timing and accuracy of these dangerously close strikes inflicted numerous casualties on the enemy, forced them to retreat, and saved the company from certain defeat. Private First Class Hossack was wounded a third time by an AK-47 round when he exposed himself to enemy fire to assist a wounded Marine. Although suffering from three severe wounds and fighting to maintain consciousness, he was able to prevent the deaths of fellow Marines due to friendly-fire by canceling an air strike that would have been too close to his company s position. Private First Class Hossack s courageous actions, total disregard for his own life and unwavering devotion to duty reflected great credit upon him and were in keeping with the highest traditions of the Marine Corps and the United States Naval Service.

EDITOR NOTE:

The reunion in Denver was a great success. I want to personally thank Russ Turner and his lovely wife Kathy for the outstanding job they did with organizing the reunion and taking care of the registration desk. We had almost a hundred walk-in attendees which were handled quickly & efficiently.

Thanks to the efforts of Toby Rushforth (Tass 20) we were honored to host the first get together of the survivors and gallant fighters from the battle of Lang Vei. This was the first time all participants (Ground Troops, Carrier Pilots, FAC's and Rescue Units) were actually together. Their exploits were written about in the book titled "The Night of The Silver Stars" Thanks Toby.

John Pessoni and I had a lot of new items designed for the KSV PX. You responded, and made it a huge success. Those funds are utilized to support our magazine and continually improve the merchandise we purchase.

Our members were also very generous in contributing and purchasing items for the Silent Auction. It brought in almost $2,500 for the newly established scholarship fund.

REUNION COMMITTEE:

Thanks to all who contributed their time to make the Denver Reunion a huge success. Next year we will be in San Antonio and we hope to see all those who made Denver. (But Please Register Early). The membership cast their votes for the years 2011 & 2012. A team from Rochester Minnesota took the time to come to our reunion and present their case with reasons why we should come to their fair city.

They were successful, and the membership voted overwhelmingly to have the 2011 reunion in Rochester Minnesota and the 2012 reunion in Tennessee.

Russ and I traveled to San Antonio to select the hotel for the 2010 reunion. We toured 8 Hotels that fit our criteria. We narrowed the search down to two hotels, and asked the membership for a little help via the KSV website. The majority felt we should stay at a hotel close to the River Walk which is the Cities main attraction.

We finally chose the Newly remodeled flagship of Holiday Inns, the El Tropicana which is located in the heart of San Antonio. The doors open directly onto the River walk. It is a real nice place and very military friendly. The 3rd Mar Div & 2/9 just had their reunion there. The reunion dates are from July 11-18 2010. All the details are included in brochures with this issue of Red clay.

On a personal note I want to thank the family of Forrest Leasure, who unfortunately passed away a short time ago. He was a Gold Star Life member of the KSV. His brother Delbert Leasure was a member of C Btry 1/13 and killed in action by a sniper on Hill 881S on 23 Feb 1968.

Forrest has provided the KSV with a $ 25,000 gift in his will. Our founder Ray Stubbe has written his lovely wife and personal representative Linda to express our deepest gratitude. He will be remembered in the memorial section of each issue of Red Clay.

The 2009 Reunion
By KSV Chaplain Ron Rayner

The 2009 reunion was a true success in my mind. The clearest indication of this was the smiling faces of the majority of the attendees. More than any thing else, and this was mentioned at the Board of Directors meeting, the veteran reunion attendees did an excellent job of greeting and making new attendees feel welcome and comfortable. This was only my third reunion and I felt accepted, as well com-

KSV Chaplain

I showed up for the Khe Sanh Veterans Reunion Memorial Service in Reno, Nevada, ten minutes early and talked to KSV Chaplain Owen Matthews. I mentioned I had been serving as a chaplain for the fire department I had retired from in Pontiac, Michigan. He said he was retiring after five years serving the Khe Sanh Vets as chaplain. Owen explained the job. He then asked if I would take over the job. After a discussion with then KSV President, Tom Eichler, I was then appointed KSV Chaplain by Tom. Newly elected KSV President David "Bulldog" Smith has appointed me to the position of KSV Chaplain for the next year.

I want to thank Tommy Eichler for being a hard working President, inspirational leader, and a great friend.

I am a non-denominational Christian. I believe all people are children of God and as a Christian I should be available to serve them, regardless of their beliefs. As a chaplain for the KSV, I most certainly serve all members and their families. What brings this subject up is the fact that the last prayer I publicly prayed at the 2009 reunion was the Blessing at the Saturday night dinner. I referenced "we" in the prayer, meaning the whole group and I ended the prayer by saying, "In Jesus' name we pray. Amen." Although, as a Christian that is how I normally end my prayers, I do not believe it is proper for me to say that when I pray for the whole group. A non-Christian member of KSV pointed this out to me in a most gracious manner after the prayer. I will strive in the future to pray in a manner that represents all present at the KSV functions.
"A person of character is someone who is respectful of others, their values, their customs, and their traditions."
Robert M. Sherfield, Ph.D.

THE EVERYTHING SELF-ESTEEM BOOK

It is my goal, in human relations is to emphasize everyone's common good traits such as in the Golden Rule. The following was on the program for the Memorial Service at the 2009 reunion. I believe being kind and fair with one another is the one thing that we can pay forward to people in the present and future generations, in memory of all who have sacrificed their lives serving in the Armed Forces of the United State of America. We are free today because of their sacrifices.

Mankind's Golden Rule

A single theme runs through the scriptures of seven of the world's leading religions, expressed in astonishingly similar form.

Brahmanism: This is the sum of duty; Do naught unto others which gives pain if done to you.
Mahabharata 5:1517

Buddhism: Hurt not others in ways that you yourself would find hurtful.
Udanavarga

Christianity: "Do for others what you would like them to do for you. This is a summary of all that is taught in the law and the prophets."
Matthew 7:12 New Living Translation

Confusianism: Is there one maxim which ought to be acted upon throughout one's whole life? Surely it is the maxim of loving-kindness ; Do not unto others what you would not have them do unto you.
Analects: 1523

Islam: No one of you is a believer until he desires for his brother that which he desires for himself.
Sunan

Judaism: What is hateful to you, do not to your fellow man. That is the entire Law; all the rest is commentary.
Talmud, Shabbat 31a

Toaism: Regard your neighbor's gain as your own gain, and your neighbor's loss as your loss.
T'ai-Shang Kan-Ying P'ien

Whenever I speak or write as the KSV Chaplain, I may quote any number of scriptural or secular sources. The criteria are going to be whether or not the quote is helpful and makes sense. The above quotes on the "Golden Rule" are the perfect example. I do not claim to have an abundance of original ideas, and I just plain like using quotes.

"The key to success in life is using the good thoughts of wise people." Leo Tolstoy

In my role as KSV Chaplain I plan the Memorial Service, send sympathy cards, get well cards and provide spiritual support and guidance. It is my job to be available and listen more than anything else. (home phone 248-634-8289, email www.eagleprep) I have found more than anything else, people need to be able to have someone to tell their story to, me included. I listened at this reunion and people listened to me. I have learned much about a major news event that I participated in forty-one years ago.

The knowledge I have gained from reading Battalion of Kings and attending the last two reunions has been tremendous. I want to thank the many reunion attendees who spent time with me and enlightened me on the large picture that was "The Siege."

I also want to thank 1/26 Chaplain and KSV founder Ray Stubbe for all that he has done. I stopped in Wauwatosa, WI and visited Ray on my way to the reunion. Ray was happy, healthy, and preparing to box in Kansas City in a national boxing tournament. He told me that he was tuning 71 years old on August 15 and he would be retiring from the sport. He said that he was planning on attending the 2010 reunion in San Antonio, Texas.

I am looking forward to meeting more Khe Sanh Vets at the next reunion as well as old friends.
May the road rise up to meet you.
May the wind always be at your back.
May the sun shine warm upon your face, the rains fall soft upon your fields and, until we meet again, may God hold you in the palm of his hand.

DOC TOPMILLER REMEMBERED

By Michael Archer

ED NOTE: August 25 th of this year was the anniversary of "DOC" Topmiller's death. Michael Archer (A Patch of Ground) had written a piece for a chapter in a planned sequel to his book, regarding a trip to Hill 881 taken by himself, Doc Topmiller, and Steve Orr. Michael, wishing to again honor Doc Topmiller, has graciously decided to share that experience with our membership.

MICHAEL'S TRIBUTE

Last year, our friend Robert "Doc" Topmiller took his own life just three weeks after returning home to Lexington, Kentucky from the Khe Sanh Veterans Association reunion in Reno. Many in this organization knew and respected Doc and still feel the void his death left in its wake.

August 25, 2009 marks the first anniversary of his loss, and we are still no closer to understanding what happened. Nevertheless, among the outpouring of shock and sympathy I found two messages that proved to be incredibly helpful to me, if not understanding, in better accepting this tragedy.

The first was from Wayne Karlin, former Marine helicopter door gunner in Vietnam, author of both fiction and nonfiction books about the war and its aftermath, and Professor of Literature at the College of Southern Maryland.

"I was shocked and saddened to get your email describing how Doc Topmiller died. Shocked, because I would have thought if there was ever a case of someone who seemed to have pulled through the memories in a positive way, he was that person. Especially, with the work he did, the way he dedicated himself to examining and extracting the significance of that terrible past and using what he learned to promote peace and healing.

We always saw the corpsmen (and that was what he remained as a scholar, so passionate to communicate the complex humanity of the Vietnamese: still a healer) as the strongest, the ones you could turn to. There is some kind of sickening shift in the heart when you realize how each wound they touched, physical or not, became their own. I have always felt--and maintained to others--that the way to truly heal is not to forget, but to bring out the memories, articulate them, examine them, put them into your life in a constructive way. It's disheartening, but necessarily realistic -- a needed, but hated slap in the face -- to realize that there are no pat formulas, not even that one. That the war still has that power to reach over the stretch of 40 years and snatch such a good person back."

The second message was passed along to me by Khe Sanh veteran, and current Police Chief of Lewiston, Idaho, Steve Orr. In the course of training his officers, Steve has come to know and respect Dr. Kevin M. Gilmartin, former Marine, psychologist and author of Emotional Survival for Police who wrote:

"I can only imagine how shocking and painful a loss that was for you. I do hope you do not beat yourself up with a need to reconstruct minute to minute your last visit with Doc in search of seeing if you missed something that might have caused you to do something different. That was not the nature of your friendship with him.

It is also almost impossible to detect suicidal intent with the person who is considering suicide but not from a crisis-situation. I suspect Doc was a deep thinking philosophical man capable of very intense and self- contained contemplation who probably had reviewed and lived with his decision internally for years. This was not a spur of the moment impulse, or knee-jerk act. I guess a man who had seen what he had seen, and thought as deeply as he thought, probably had a psychological checklist of things he completed and when he reached the decision point took whatever action he felt compelled to take.

I imagine being a helper-healer, as he no doubt was, he would not want others feeling responsible for his actions even if others wish he had reached a different conclusion. It was his alone to make and, boy, that can be real hard for survivors to accept. The impulsive, superficial-issue based suicides we are pretty good at intervening with. Doc's situation, I suspect, was not impulsive or superficial, but terribly tragic."

Doc Topmiller was indeed a "helper-healer." His deep sense of dedication to those injured physically and emotionally by the war would manifest itself daily across a broad spectrum, both in the United States and Vietnam. At the time of his death, he was in the midst of writing a book on the history of Department of Veterans' Affairs policies toward disabled veterans. Thanks to the efforts of some of Doc's university colleagues, particularly Professor Kerby Neill, the book will likely be published posthumously in the coming months. It is shaping up to have enormous potential value to policymakers in Washington, D.C. How fitting it is that, even in death, Doc is helping improve conditions for his fellow disabled vets.

Probably no example of Doc's compassion had a more profound impact on me personally, than his effort in 2007 to locate the remains of my high school friend, the last Marine to die on Hill 881S, LCPL Thomas P. Mahoney III. Below is a detailed description of those events, which I hope will further illustrate the enormous scope of Doc Topmiller's humanity.

TO FIND A WANDERING SOUL
By Michael Archer

On December 16, 2007, an extraordinary convergence" of Americans and Vietnamese occurred at the spot on the old Khe Sanh battlefield where Thomas Patrick Mahoney III, a fellow Marine and my childhood friend, met his end. Tom and I enlisted together in the United States Marines and, though assigned to different regiments in Vietnam, both fought at Khe Sanh in 1968.

During the abandonment of the Khe Sanh Combat Base in July 1968, Tom (who had recently received a "Dear John" letter from his girlfriend) inexplicably left the relative safety of the U.S. Marine position on Hill 865 (End Note 1 Page 19) and inadvertently walked into a unit of North Vietnamese Army (NVA) (End Note 2 Page 20) soldiers who were hiding nearby.

Now exposed, the NVA soldiers shot Tom and hastily repositioned his body in front of their fighting holes. When Marines subsequently attempted to reach him, a fierce firefight ensued and lasted into the evening. Several of Tom's buddies were wounded in the rescue attempt. Sixteen others were wounded by enemy mortar fire on another part of the hill. As dusk fell, Lt. Frank Ahearn, Tom's platoon commander, appealed to the company commander Captain Robert Black to be allowed to remain behind with some volunteers and continue their efforts to recover Tom's body. This was an extremely dangerous proposition given the superior number of enemy troops in the area. In addition, Black had recently received a direct order by radio from OPCON regimental commander (End Note 3 Page 19) directing him to abandon the hill immediately and move by helicopter to support other Marines who were being attacked on nearby Hill 689.

As such, Black refused Ahearn's request and the Marines reluctantly obeyed. Evacuation of their many wounded took several hours. The last two off the hill, Captain Black, and an enlisted man responsible for coordinating the movement of aircraft in and out of the landing zone, were finally air lifted from the hilltop well after dark. So close was the enemy mortar and small arms fire to them , the helicopter did not completely touch down, and these two men were required to hang from the aircrafts skids for several hundred feet until the helicopter pilot locate a relatively safer spot on a nearby knoll to land and allow them to scramble onboard.

The only Marine not evacuated that evening was Lance Corporal Tom Mahoney whose lifeless and shattered body could not be retrieved without risking the lives of everyone. Tom would have the sad distinction of being the last U.S. Marine to die on that legendary mountain outpost. Hill 881S had been wrested 14 months earlier from an entrenched North Vietnamese Army regiment in a bloody four-day battle that resulted in hundreds of Marine casualties, and was held at great additional cost of life until the throbbing blades of the last evacuation helicopter receded in to the night of July 6, 1968.

On July 12, 1993, 25 years to the day the U.S. abandonment of the Khe Sanh Combat Base complex was completed after days and nights of fierce combat on Hill 689, a Joint Task Force – Final Accounting (JTFFA) team traveled to the site of Tom's death (at map coordinates XD 773441). After performing a survey of the area, but no digging, the JTFFA concluded that:

> "A surface search of the U.S. record site yielded no remains or burial sites discovered at the site."

No other activity on Mahoney's case (#1224) was recorded again until July 2003, when the Joint Field Activity (JFA) Research and Investigation Team located a text at the People's Army of Vietnam Library in Hanoi entitled The History of the 246th Regiment, 304th Division, 26th Corps, Military Region 1 (Quang Trung, 246), in which there was a distinct reference to Tom Mahoney's death. After listing, on page 193, the names of five of their soldiers who moved into position near the top of Hill 865 on the evening of July 5, 1968, the narrative resumes describing events on page 223:

> "Finally they arrived at the main entrance of the outpost on Hill 845 (End Note 4 Page19 . While sitting in the fortified positions they could clearly hear the voices of the Americans and smell cigarette smoke from the bunkers. They waited for the enemy all night long.
> At 1400 on the following day (July 6, 1968), we saw one American walking outside the entrance to the outpost. His face was red and his eyes were blue like a mean animal. He was looking toward Mr. Luong's team. The sounds of AK weapons roared immediately, and the American fell. Mr. Luong and Mr. Long jumped out of their positions and dragged the American's body down. They placed the body in front of them to create an ambush for the other Americans coming out of their bunkers."

In August 2003, the Office the Secretary of Defense -Defense POW/Missing Personnel Office (OSD-DPMO) made this report available to the public. I obtained a copy of it in late 2004, just in time to include the information in my book A Patch of Ground: Khe Sanh Remembered (Hellgate Press, May 2005). The release of A Patch of Ground, nearly 40 years after Tom's loss, generated an amazing outpouring of interest in his story from around the United States and in Vietnam. Some, who were with Mahoney at the time of his death, and had made valiant efforts that day to retrieve his body, were surprised to learn that Tom's remains had not been recovered by a Marine Reconnaissance unit a few days after his death, as they had been told by their Battalion Headquarters acting administrative officer.

By the end of the first year of the book's release, the series of often-implausible, often-poignant, interpersonal connections had grown so numerous and so complex that it would be impossible for me to adequately describe them here; though I hope to so in the forthcoming sequel to the book.

However, one important "reconnection," occurred in December 2004, when I sent a message to Robert "Doc" Topmiller. Doc had been a corpsman (medic) in the 26th Marines Regimental Aid station during the siege of Khe Sanh, as well as a close friend of mine during our tour in Vietnam. As often happened among veterans of this war, Doc and I lost contact after returning home. Doc had gone on to earn a Ph.D. in history and was now a professor at Eastern Kentucky University. Though our once 19 year-old Khe Sanh "Doc" (a title of respect used by Marines for their Navy corpsman) had now received the academic title of "Doctor" – he clearly delights in being referred to by the former designation.

Topmiller and I resumed our friendship as if the last 36 years had been but the blink of the eye. I soon learned he had earned a reputation as a world-class scholar of Vietnamese history; publishing two books, including a harrowing memoir called Red Clay on My Boots: Encounters with Khe Sanh 1968 to 2005 (Kirk House, 2007). What emerged from the government's search for Tom Mahoney's remains would soon summon us to that country on an improbable journey, which before it was over, would require the full range of Doc's expertise and "connections."

The discovery of The History of the 246th Regiment in July 2003 triggered a second effort to locate Mahoney's remains. During the last week in August 2004, the Vietnam Office for Seeking Missing Persons (VNOSMP) sent Detachment 2 of the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command (JPAC) back to the area. The stated "Investigation requirements" for this mission were to "search for veterans of the 3rd Battalion, 246th Regiment," particularly Messrs. Luong and Long and the three others specifically mentioned in the PAVN military record. The reasoning being that if any of these men could be found, they might recall where Tom's remains were last located and if they buried him.

On August 26, 2004, three members of the VNOSMP went to Huong Tan village near Hill 865 and spoke with Mr. Nguyen Quoc Tru, secretary of the Huong Hoa District Veterans' Association and Mr. Ho Xuan Long, former political officer of the district military unit during the war. However, neither had heard of the men being sought. On August 27, the team met with the Veterans' Association of Quang Tri Province, but none of the soldiers they were looking for was on the rolls of that organization. On August 28, the team went to Military Region 1, in order to learn more about the 246th Regiment, 26th Corps. There, they were informed the 26th Corps had been disbanded long ago, and there was no information about the people named.

In completing his report, the VNOSMP team leader concluded:

> "This is a very difficult case. There are no direct witnesses. The people who fought in this battle were main force troops. When they were done fighting, they left, leaving (responsibility for the area) to the locality. Furthermore the dead American was not buried, so there is no way to find the remains."

The report was transmitted to the DPMO in February 2005 and I became aware of its existence in December of that year.

It became increasingly clear from these three DPMO reports, particularly the most recent; that they appeared to be ignoring some important information. Captain Robert Black, Lt. Frank Ahearn and others who attempted to recover Tom's remains that July afternoon in 1968, had provided a great deal of detailed information regarding the disposition of Mahoney's body and where it was last seen, including precise map coordinates. The information they provided in the days immediately following Tom's loss were included in a comprehensive report prepared by Lt. Stuart Dorow, 1st Battalion, 1st Marine Regiment Assistant Personnel Officer. This report included a map sketched by Dorow (who had not been a witness to the events) showing where he believed Tom's remains to be in relation to other points of reference on the hill. Despite the steepness of the terrain where Mahoney's remains likely existed, the JTFFA's reluctance to dig at the site, as early as 1993, was baffling.

Doc Topmiller had by this time become quite interested in Tom Mahoney's case, and upon reading the final VNOSMP report was exasperated by the results; particularly with their conclusion that "there is no way to find the remains." He was soon on the phone to me. Having been educated in the Catholic schools of Cincinnati, Doc was now a Buddhist and knowing me to be an avowed skeptic, he delicately suggested that we should "now try doing things the Vietnamese way and see what happens."

In researching his book The Lotus Unleashed: The Buddhist Peace Movement in South Vietnam, 1964-1966 (The University of Kentucky Press, 2002), Topmiller spent months living in Vietnam and gained an unusually profound understanding (for a westerner) of the subtle nuances in Vietnamese culture and religion. Their "way," he patiently explained to me, is one of unwavering ancestor worship and works essentially like this: The soul of a deceased person whose remains are not returned to his or her family is always sad and wandering. If the "wandering soul" can be contacted, often though the services of a telepath, there is a good chance that whatever physical remains still exist, can also be located with the assistance of the soul. If physical remains cannot readily be located, the "wandering soul" might then be enticed away from the area it now inhabits among unknown and unfriendly souls (as in the case of a battlefield) and dwell in a happier place where it would be prayed for and loved until the remains were located. Once the remains are found and returned to the family for proper interment, the soul would then reside in that place where family members would honor and care for it in perpetuity. It is then that the once-wandering soul will dwell in peace and happiness — and the surviving family members' duty is fulfilled.

Doc, knowing I had no desire to return to Vietnam, cautiously continued pitching his plan to me: His contacts in Vietnam would make all the arrangements for hotels, guides, translators, drivers, the telepath and necessities for the Buddhist religious services. All I had to do, he urged, was show up — and keep an open mind.

After consulting with my wife Becky, I decided to go (she, was most adamant about not wanting to accompany us "on this one"). I then contacted two people who I strongly felt should join us. The first was Steve Orr, my best friend. Steve and I had survived the siege of Khe Sanh and the remaining eight months of our tours in Vietnam unscathed -- flying back to the U.S. side-by-side on the same Continental Airlines Boeing 707. Defying the norm for combat veterans of the Vietnam War, Orr and I remained close friends after returning.

After I had explained Doc's idea to Steve, who, as fate would have it, had just accepted the job of Chief of Police for the City of Lewiston, Idaho, he unhesitatingly wanted to join us. He would reschedule his reporting date. Three old friends returning to Vietnam together after 40 years in search of the "wandering soul" of a fellow Marine was just too intriguing for him to miss.

The other person I contacted was Claudia Harris, Tom Mahoney's sister. The Buddhists who would be assisting us in Vietnam, Doc advised me, would expect a blood relative to make the journey. Connecting with Tom's wandering soul would be far more difficult without the presence of a close family member. In lieu of that, something from Tom's past which held strong sentimental value, might be of help.

Claudia graciously declined the offer to travel to Vietnam and climb Hill 865. I respect her decision and appreciate the encouragement and genuine appreciation she demonstrated for our efforts. Claudia provided me with Tom's old baseball glove to take to the séance. It is a sad, sweat-stained relic; with a proprietary machine-stamped Ted Williams "autograph" on the front, though more authentically inscribed by Tom on the back strap with a patient redundancy of blue ink strokes; indelibly etched in lettering so large it could have been read from the bleachers. For me, nothing more embodies the hope and longing of an American boy from that era than his own ball glove: the sweet mingling of rawhide, neat's-foot oil and innocence. I tried to slip it on my hand, but it was far too small; suggesting Tom was, perhaps, 12 years old when it was still the stuff of his dreams.

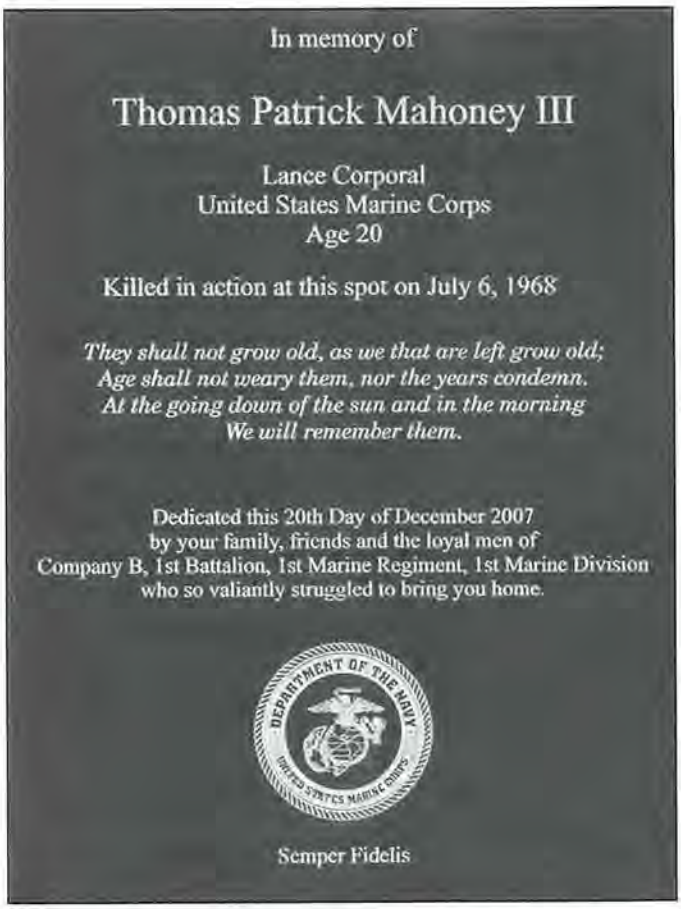
In addition to the glove, I had two plaques made for the trip. One was an 8" x 12"polished black enamel tablet with gold-colored engraved lettering. I intended to bring this back from the hill and present to Lt. Frank Ahearn on behalf of the men of Bravo Company who tried to save Tom that day. The other plaque was an 8" x 6" rectangle of lesser quality, which I intended to bury at the site. Each contained the identical text: (See Picture)



On the morning of December 9, 2007, I found myself squeezed into an economy-class seat between Doc and Steve onboard a United Airlines 747 winging westward on a quest both chillingly familiar and strangely incomprehensible. I could not conjure up even the vaguest imagery of the events to come as I clamped my eyes tightly shut in an unsuccessful effort to sleep. Soon our airplane approached the International Date Line — and into tomorrow.

Shortly after 9 a.m. on December 13, 2007, Dr. Dinh Van Toan (pronounced Twahn) met us in front of our hotel in Hanoi. He had arranged for a taxicab and we were soon on our way to The Center for the Investigation of Human Capabilities (CIHC) at the Vietnam Union of Science and Technology Association Office in north part of the city. (Pic # 1) Toan, in addition to his responsibilities as a professor and head of the Geophysical Department of the Institute of Geological Sciences at the Vietnamese Academy of Science and Technology, also volunteers his time at CIHC and had arranged our meeting with the telepath. Our connection with Toan was the result of his brother having been a professor at the University of Wisconsin – Madison, and Doc Topmiller's Vietnamese language tutor while he was pursuing his doctoral degree.

Not unlike many young Americans in the 1960's, Toan (then age 16) joined the military because he thought it would be a heroic undertaking. He also came to believe that if the North Vietnamese did not stop the Americans in the South, they would soon conquer his native North. Ironically, many young Americans joined the military then (me included) for similar reasons. We had grown up in a society where battle was generally considered a noble and exhilarating enterprise; amid the then widely accepted belief that the fall of China, and more recently Cuba, to communism was a trend that must be reversed at the next opportunity — regardless of where in the world that occurred.

Toan was assigned to the PAVN 24th Regiment as a 40mm antitank gunner and was part of the force that overran the Lang Vei Special Forces camp near Khe Sanh in early February 1968. During the subsequent siege of Khe Sanh Combat Base, he sustained multiple and serious wounds during a B-52 bombing and was completely deafened for nearly a year thereafter. He was subsequently discharged from the army.

As gracious and engaging an individual as I have ever met, Toan is exceptionally fluent in English. After we had spoken for a while about Khe Sanh, he turned to us with an expression of unconcealed sorrow and haltingly uttered: "We are all very lucky to be alive." Toan's words perfectly articulated all our feelings at that moment. This simple yet profound observation, coupled with the knowledge that we had all simultaneously shared the often-horrific experience of the Khe Sanh battleground, was followed by a long silence while each of us fought back the unexpected tears welling in our eyes.

Several cleared throats later, we returned to making small talk and learned, despite his self-effacing demeanor, Toan is a world-renowned geologist currently engaged in seismic wave experiments with colleagues at the University of Texas, El Paso. This project, he explained, requires the team to detonate a series of one-ton explosive devices at different locations throughout Vietnam. Toan bemoaned the fact that there had been several delays in the experiment because it was difficult to find potential sites for the explosions that would not "disturb a local population." I did not say anything, but found that whole idea of people being especially sensitive to loud explosions quite plausible; especially among those "local" citizens who were alive during the war when we Americans virtually "carpet bombed" the country from one end to the other.

We arrived at the university about 9:30 a.m. The CIHC office was located on the same floor as the Department of Physics; an indication, I think, of the Center's stature within the university system. We were met by a female secretary and a professionally dressed woman in her mid-50's by the name of Nguyen Thi Tuyet Mai. Ms. Nguyen is a journalist, who also acts as Deputy Director of the CICH.

Doc, Steve and I were soon led to a meeting room and seated at a long table with Dr. Toan and seven members of the CIHC. Also in attendance, were two videographers, one from a local TV station, two office secretaries and the telepath Mr. Nguyen Buu Thuan (also pronounced Twahn). Doc later pointed out to me that his middle (clan) name of "Buu" indicated he descended from Vietnamese royalty.

Thuan, I would also later learn, is a married 33-year old father of two girls, who became aware of his "gift" only 5 years ago after surviving an illness that nearly took his life. He was a bit vague on exactly what the illness was when I later asked him, but it apparently involved a high fever, listlessness and loss of appetite. It took him some time to understand his new telepathic capabilities, but he now dedicates almost all his time to helping locate the souls of missing civilians and soldiers. He has been hugely successful, and proudly rattled off some figures for me which included his identification of over 3,000 wandering souls and the location of over 1,000 graves. As such, he has earned a level of respect, just short of national celebrity status, among the Vietnamese.

Once Doc, Steve and I were seated at the table, we made our introductions and small talk while tea was served. Many of the older participants spoke English. The group consisted mostly of highly educated professionals, such as journalists, educators and scientists. They were admittedly excited about the prospect of Thuan reaching a wandering American soul. There was to be an international convention of telepaths coming to Hanoi soon and I had the distinct impression this group wanted very much to be able to present to the delegates in attendance at that convention the results of Thuan's "successful" effort to locate Tom Mahoney's soul. Video footage of today's meeting, Ms. Nguyen advised us, would be used as television advertising to promote the upcoming convention. Their excitement also seemed to stem from the fact that, while almost all Vietnamese believe in the ability of telepaths to locate wandering souls, they knew we Americans were, to varying degrees, skeptical. This, then, would represent a unique challenge for Thuan.

During this preliminary conversation, Thuan sat silently; occasionally staring at an atlas which he had opened to a page displaying a map of central Vietnam. Though not rude to us, Thuan had a definite air of detachment about him. It is difficult to explain, but when he looked at me, it was as if his eyes were focusing on something just behind my head. Ms. Nguyen, sensing that I found this a bit disconcerting, explained that Thuan was in the process of communicating with the spirit world and so wasn't really observing much around him at the moment.

After several minutes, Thuan, through an interpreter, asked me several questions about Tom Mahoney including whether he had "a long face." The answer to such a question is, of course, entirely subjective. I did not answer immediately because I was trying to envision Tom's physiognomy. Doc then whispered to Ms. Nguyen that he had observed a folder in front of her which contained, among other documents, the copy of Tom's high school yearbook photo that, he (Doc) had sent to Toan the previous November. Ms. Nguyen, who appeared to have forgotten the photo was there, immediately produced it for Thuan. After studying it briefly, Thuan seemed satisfied that this was the same face as that of the wandering soul with whom he was currently communicating.

Once the face was identified, Thuan then seemed confused about Tom's exact age (The Vietnamese believe everyone is one-year old at birth). When Doc had sent information to Toan in November, he had assumed Mahoney and I were born in the same year — 1948. I then advised Thuan that Tom was born in 1947, but died in 1968 about two months before his 21st birthday. This information seemed to clear up whatever inconsistencies were bothering him.

Soon Thuan was writing what appeared to be driving directions on a piece of plain white typing paper. When he finished, took another piece of paper and drew an elaborate map. This process took about 10 minutes and Ms. Nguyen explained that it was okay for us to talk among ourselves quietly while he drew, because he was so focused now on information he was obtaining from Mahoney's soul; he could not hear us. We used this opportunity to ask questions, which the group was eager to answer. Toan acted as our interpreter for those in the group who did not speak English. Despite the fact that it was the end of the school year and Toan had an enormous amount of work to do back at his office, he decided to attend this meeting. I was delighted Toan stayed because the young man the CICH had originally asked to interpret for us spoke English in such an unusual dialect that I could scarcely understand him (Doc later jokingly speculated that the man appeared to have learned his English from a German who had learned his English from a Cajun).

After Thuan had finished drawing the map, he asked Toan translate it for us. The three of us could clearly see it was a drawing of the Khe Sanh Combat Base and the area south to Route 9. He pinpointed the ammo dump, airstrip, revetments, even the location of Doc's small regimental aid station (in its original location, before it was blown up and collapsed). Thuan pointed out the location of two cannon batteries and even some tanks parked on the southwest side by the U.S. Army Special Forces Forward Operating Base; about where I recalled once seeing them during the siege.

The three of us were asked how accurate we thought the map to be. We all spontaneously agreed it was probably 90 to 95 percent accurate for what it showed and for the relative location of those places. The attendees all seemed visibly elated by that news. Thuan even smiled a bit. I was asked to sign and date the original map and write on it that I believed the map, as described to me, to be about 95 percent accurate.

Thuan then began drawing another map of the area leading up to Hills 865 and 881S from Route 9. Since Doc had just been in that area last May, and had climbed those hills, I asked him to check the completed map for accuracy. Doc replied that as he understood the translation of the points of reference on the map as described to us by Toan, it was 90 percent accurate. I subsequently signed and dated the map and wrote on it that it was 90 percent accurate.

This map showed Tom Mahoney's remains to be at the very base of the hill, near a village not far from the home of a man by the name of Mr. Nguyen. This was at the very bottom of a ravine below Hill 865 and several hundred meters from the spot Tom was last seen. Though this immediately seemed highly improbable to me, I was resolved to keeping an "open mind."

Mr. Thuan than wrote out a list of reference points and the items we would find at the site of his remains. All that remained of Tom, he said, were 3 very small teeth (he illustrated the size by covering up all but the very tip of his right baby finger with his left hand). He said we would also find a canvass ammo pouch with a deteriorated metal M-16 magazine containing the remnants of bullets. Thuan illustrated, by pointing to the left side of his abdomen, that Tom had been wearing the pouch on that part of his utility belt. These items were to be found 1.6 meters below the surface. Thuan then repeated, for emphasis, that the teeth were very small. The significance he placed on the size of the teeth underscores what I had been previously told by others familiar with the search for such remains; to wit, the climate and soil composition of the country have, over the last 40 years, thoroughly decomposed all large bone. Most remains now being located are very small bone fragments, teeth or pieces of durable clothing, like boots. Thuan would later claim to have located many remains that had completely decomposed into only a thin layer of "black earth."

Thuan asked me to close my eyes and think of Tom for five minutes. As I did, my images of Mahoney raced in an unusually rapid manner, like someone quickly riffling through the pages of a book. I felt very calm and heavy-lidded during that time, but had no other unusual sensations such as that of "a presence" or revelation. Doc later told me that Thuan had been staring intently at me, nearly unblinking, for the entire time. When I opened my eyes, after what Doc said was about 4 minutes, Thuan then asked me if I felt unusually warm or hot (it was a relatively cool day in Hanoi). He said that Tom had "visited me" and I would get that same feeling when I was above the spot he believed the remains were located. I told him I was not getting the sensation he described. I was, however, perspiring, though I believed that to be the result of not having yet acclimated to the ubiquitous humidity.

At my reply, Thuan showed no frustration, but instead turned to the group and spoke quietly with them for several minutes. Toan then translated the conversation for us. On the following Sunday, December 16, Thuan was scheduled to escort two families to the same region, one to A Luoi near the infamous A Shau Valley and the other further west into Laos. The trip would take them past Khe Sanh and Thuan was willing to stop there on the way, in order to lead us to the spot where he believed the remains were located and "bring your friend (Tom) to visit you."

We heartily and gratefully accepted his offer. As the meeting ended, Steve and I felt a great sense of relief. Not as familiar with the Vietnamese people as Doc now was, we had no idea how we would be received; particularly by the older ones who survived the war, and most particularly by those here in Hanoi who spent a good part of 9 years living in bomb shelters. The relief we felt soon turned to appreciation for the sincere amity and helpfulness of all those in the room. We cordially shook hands and said our goodbyes. Outside, on our way to catch a cab, we again thanked Toan and hoped he would join us for lunch. Knowing that lunch among men in Vietnam often involves drinking several beers, he gratefully declined — citing the enormous amount of work that required his attention — and hurried off toward his office.

Doc Topmiller was a highly trained and methodical historian renowned for his Vietnam histories. Steve Orr, now the Chief of Police of Lewiston Idaho, was for many years an accomplished police detective. I am a life-long skeptic. We are all veterans of the Khe Sanh battlefield and none of us is prone to what one might call "mass hysteria." With that said, we left the meeting amazed at Thuan's accuracy and knowledge of things known to us, but not otherwise previously published. I suddenly felt that we were being "summoned" to the hills of Khe Sanh by something beyond my recognition.

The three of us flew from Hanoi to Hue the next morning and waited for Sunday. We tried not to discuss things too much to avoid over-anticipating. We did however, set some rules. The most important of these being to avoid presenting Thuan with any verbal or nonverbal cues while on Hill 865. Doc and I both thought we knew precisely where Tom was last seen because of the extraordinary memory of Captain Robert Black. Black had assisted Doc in preparing for his visit to Hill 865 the previous May. It was not that we had any particular reason to be suspicious of Thuan; we only wanted to be sure that we did not inadvertently "taint" the process just in case we had to analyze later how some inexplicable event might have occurred.

On Saturday morning, our travel agent, Nguyen Thi Dieu Van, whose office is in Hue, received an email from Toan containing instructions on where to find Thuan the following day. It was decided we would pick up our own interpreter in Quang Tri City on the way there and then meet Thuan in Dong Ha, which was a few kilometers farther up Highway 1, at the junction of Hwy 9. Dieu Van would also make arrangements for the Buddhist religious ceremony to be held at the site of Tom's remains. This would require her to shop for an assortment of flowers, fruits, prepared foods and beverages to be set out as offering in the hope of enticing Tom's wandering soul from the battlefield.

Toan also wanted to be sure that we understood there was to be no digging at the site located by the telepath. He did not want anyone to get in trouble with the authorities. Technically, we (foreigners) were supposed to check in at a government office in Dong Ha before proceeding to Khe Sanh. There we would be assigned an "official" guide. Doc, however, noticed during his last few visits to this area that the rules had become lax and he and his driver could freely pass the army's gated checkpoint on the highway just east of Khe Sanh town, as long as the vehicle had an unexpired government-issued chauffeur registration tag on the windshield.

Toan need not have worried, because we had never intended doing any digging ourselves, regardless of what happened. Steve, Doc and I had already discussed this issue at great length. Steve, as a veteran crime scene investigator, pointed out that such activity by non-professionals might inadvertently destroy or lose important evidence. In addition, a finding and report by the Joint Task Force would carry far more credibility in official circles than one produced by a group of Tom's friends.

Doc echoed Toan's concern that both the Vietnamese and U.S. governments would frown upon a group of Americans digging up part of Vietnam without permission. He also added that Dieu Van had warned him that our driver, Mr. Phouc, would, for legal, cultural and religious reasons almost assuredly refuse to carry the remains of a dead body in his car back to Hue — regardless of how minuscule they might be. Doc further concluded that smuggling such remains out of Vietnam and back into the U.S. would be problematic. I added to our discussion the practical consideration that we did not have the archeological expertise or proper tools, such as sifting screens, to locate the tiny fragments described by Thuan. Moreover, the thought of banging a shovel blade into an unexploded shell or grenade was most unappealing.

Our driver picked us up in front of the Morin Hotel in Hue at 6 a.m. on Sunday morning December 16. It was raining steadily as we drove north on Highway 1 along the stretch of highway made famous by Bernard Fall as the "Street Without Joy." With the exception of a few houses and shops clustered at intervals along the way, the area appeared to be one long military cemetery. After the war the communists built numerous, elaborate and, to this day, well -maintained cemeteries for their war dead; while at the same time plowing up the cemeteries of their adversaries in the Army of the Republic of Vietnam (ARVN) with bulldozers. Such an act has catastrophic spiritual implications for the Vietnamese because now the ARVN souls will wander forever. Doc informed us that this was nothing new in Vietnamese history. Centuries ago, after a ruler ascended to the throne following an exceptionally bitter war, he ordered the bodies of all his enemies and their families exhumed and had his troops urinate on them.

I wanted to ask Thuan if he also searched for ARVN souls, but knew this was a politically-charged issue and decided to save him the discomfort of having to avoid answering such a question. I had already learned from my short time in communist Vietnam that it was never a good idea to discuss things with the Vietnamese that even remotely carried a political context.

We picked up our interpreter, Mr. Tam, at a travel agency office in Quang Tri City and proceeded further north to Dong Ha. I vividly recalled my last trip along that stretch of road. I was coming back from R&R and had hitch hiked a ride at Dong Ha on an ARVN truck heading south in the direction of my unit's location outside of Quang Tri City. Dressed in my summer service khaki uniform, a garrison cover, often referred to as a "piss cutter," pulled down tight over my head to avoid it blowing away and shiny dress uniform shoes, I sat alone perched high atop a load of grimy 55 gallon drums of diesel fuel — a target even the most myopic Viet Cong couldn't miss if he tried. Fortunately for me, none did.

After about 20 minutes, we arrived in Dong Ha and found Thuan in the parking lot of a hotel with the other group he was leading up to the mountains to find their own lost soldiers. Thuan chose to ride in our van. It is here that I obtained most of my information about him and what he hoped to accomplish. When not in the process of communicating with souls, Mr. Thuan is friendly, confident and informative. During our ride, he advised me that his images of wandering souls were often vague and they sometimes behaved as if reluctant to be found. This is why he always needed to obtain as much information as possible to be sure he was dealing with the soul he was seeking.

When I asked him why he was doing this for us he explained that Vietnam had a "national problem" because there were still too many American remains, and consequently too many American wandering souls remaining there. Thuan then asked me how many U.S. MIAs there were. I told him there were about 1,800. He commented, with no hint of animosity, that this was an extremely low figure compared to the number of missing Vietnamese. He went on to remark that the U.S. government spends millions of dollars each year trying to locate these remains and was seldom successful anymore. He, and other telepaths, would be happy to locate all of them — at no cost.

In fact, telepaths cannot take any money for their efforts or the Lord Buddha will remove their "gift." Over the course of the day, Doc would ask Thuan several times if we could at least help pay the cost of his expenses for food and lodging. Each time he politely refused. The university apparently covers his salary and expenses. Thuan concluded by saying that Tom's was the first American soul he had attempted to reach, and would be pleased if it led to more "unhappy" souls of our war dead returning to happiness back among their families in the United States.

As we drove west on Highway 9, Thuan offered information about the countryside we were passing. As we drove past a large military cemetery west of Cam Lo, Thuan recalled that while once looking for a lost PAVN soul there, he came across three other souls wandering near the place where they had been killed. Two were Vietnamese (he did not clarify whether they were ARVN or PAVN) and the other was the soul of an U.S. Army artilleryman. Also near Cam Lo, I noticed that the rain had stopped. We were later to discover that it had not rained up at Khe Sanh that day and so our hike up the hill would be a mud-free one. This was a relief, because the last December we had spent here (in 1967) the entire area was gelatinous, rust-colored mire.

Highway 9 is a high quality and well-maintained asphalt road (in better repair than most rural highways I have driven in the U.S.) which we cruised along through the less densely populated areas at about 40 miles per hour. As we began, out ascent into the mountains an infamous landmark called "The Rockpile," appeared in our windshield. The sight of this dark, distinctive, lone pinnacle, with its sheer rocky slopes tangled in vegetation, produced a simultaneous sensation of foreboding for us three Khe Sanh veterans. During the siege of Khe Sanh in 1968, The Rockpile had represented the western boundary past which no one ventured. Now, as we sped by it, the words of Dante came to mind: "Abandon all hope, ye who enter here."

Within a few miles Montagnard hamlets began dotting the banks of the Da Krong and Rao Quan Rivers; growing in size and density as we neared Khe Sanh town. There were far more Montagnards, what the Vietnamese refer to as "Minority People," than I recalled having been there in 1967-68. I was elated to learn of their incredible comeback, considering the many thousands who were killed by bombs and artillery during the siege. The Montagnards still reside in clan enclaves, with their traditional houses built on stilts with woven reed walls and few windows. Doc reminded us that the Montagnards were still largely animists (though Christian missionaries had made some progress in converting them) and the architecture of their dwellings is designed to keep the evil spirits who inhabited the tall grass from entering at night and making mischief. Absurdly, nearly every one of these homes now has a TV satellite dish attached to its thatched or corrugated metal roof.

After successfully passing by the army checkpoint east of Khe Sanh, we drove into the town. I was astounded by the size and economic vitality of the place. It was a virtual metropolis compared to what it had been when I had briefly lived there in January 1968. About two kilometers into the town, Thuan ordered our driver to turn right onto a non-descript road that soon changed from asphalt to pounded red earth. After proceeding along the road for about 4 kilometers, Thuan asked our driver to stop at a Montagnard house where he questioned the farmer for several minutes about directions. We then proceeded another 500 meters, where he had us stop at a "Y' in the road, similar to the one he had sketched during our meeting in Hanoi.

Here Thuan appeared lost. He walked up one road for several hundred meters and then back. He apologized to us for the confusion, saying he often became temporarily disoriented when he arrived at a place that he had previously envisioned remotely — but he was confident he would work things out. Thuan now realized the Nguyen house he had described on his map in Hanoi, near where he had believed Tom's remains to be, was not accurate but merely a reference point on the way to the actual location.

Thuan then asked me where the "airfield" was located. When I told him it was about 2 kilometers in the opposite direction from Hill 881S, he politely disagreed (this odd exchange will be explained shortly). We then got back into the van and drove northwest for about another kilometer and into a fertile little valley at the base of both Hill 881S (to the northwest) and Hill 689 (to the south).

Suddenly, while I was not conscious of anything other than the incredibly beautiful scenery passing by my window, I began to weep -- silently, but uncontrollably. My first reaction was to hide this inexplicable onset of emotion from the others in the van. I made quick, surreptitious hand movements to wipe away the tears. However, after a few poorly stifled sobs, I realized everyone else in the car knew I was crying and were avoiding eye contact with me in order to make me feel less uncomfortable. I have no idea why I began weeping at that moment. Only that some vaguely defined yet overpowering sorrow had engulfed me. I was over the episode in about five minutes and later discussed it with Doc and Steve. Both told me they would have been more surprised had I NOT done something like that.

We soon stopped at the Montagnard hamlet of Lang Ta Tuc. While Tuan and Tam were speaking to the Montagnards about leaving our vehicles there, Steve Doc and I noticed a man from the other van who was about our age. He was wearing a 1960's-era gabardine dress uniform of the NVA, necktie and highly polished leather formal dress shoes. There were no medals, insignia of rank or unit on his uniform. We introduced ourselves and learned he was traveling with family members to locate his brother, an NVA soldier who had been killed during the war near the A Shau Valley, about 20 miles south. Doc asked him if he, too, had fought in the war. The man replied that he had, against the Americans at Tay Ninh, located between Saigon and the Cambodian border. Despite the potential for an awkward moment, he was quite friendly and sympathetic with our mission and wanted to join us on our hike up the hill to pay his respects to our fallen friend. We agreed.

Once the group had reassembled, we began the hike up the hill. In addition to the NVA soldier, and we three Americans, our group consisted of Thuan and two fellow telepaths. One, a female, had attended our meeting in Hanoi on the previous Friday. The other, was a man who I had not seen before. Also with us for the climb was our driver Phouc, and Tam the translator. We also hired two Montagnard guides; one armed with a machete and the other a long-handled hoe, who I later each paid 200,000 Vietnamese Dong (about $12 USD). This, Doc later told me, represented more than they might make in an entire month.

After leaving the hamlet and still on relatively level ground, we passed along the rim of several rice paddies and then into a small grove of coffee bushes. After crossing a 30-foot-wide stream, we began ascending a steep jungled trail for about 1500 meters, then on to a somewhat wider dirt road through open grassland for about another 2 kilometers. The road became increasingly steep as we approached the summit. The climb reminded us of how much respect we had for the incredible moxie of those Marine line-company troops who regularly patrolled these hills loaded down with gear; in stifling humidity under a searing summer sun (such imagery makes it clear why they tagged themselves as "grunts").

As we approached the steepest part of the climb, Doc talked of the April 1967 fight to seize this place and we were again humbled by the courage of the Marines who scaled these tortuous slopes in the face of withering enemy gunfire — sustaining nearly 400 casualties before all the hilltops were finally secured.

Doc had made this climb the previous May and, using information from the July 1968 "Dorow investigation" of Tom's loss, found what he believed to be the place where Tom's remains were last seen. As we approached the top of Hill 865 from the west, we made sure not to give Thuan a clue as to where we thought the location might be. Though I had by now concluded that I would not be surprised if Thuan located the exact same site, I still wanted to keep the process as free of doubt as humanly possible.

So the three of us intentionally walked past the position where we believed Mahoney was last seen, part way down into the saddle between Hills 865 and 881S, and waited for the others to arrive. I took the opportunity to walk up to the site of the Marine main position on Hill 881S. Just northeast of that, the trail crossed a knoll before descending the hill roughly in the direction of Hill 881N. This knoll was the one to which the last evacuation helicopter on the evening of July 6, 1968 had carried Captain Black and the enlisted HST man hanging from its skids to safety.

Now, nearly 40 years later, the knoll was covered in a thicket of high trees and an abundance of dense jungle vegetation. It was a bit spooky looking into the shadows of that grove; yet for some reason I decided I needed to be in there - alone. So I left Steve at the top of Hill 881S and walked into the trees. When I was in the densest part, I stopped and said aloud: "Okay Tommy, if there is anything to all this, please make it known to me now." I then peered into the dark recesses of the forest for a few minutes; a bit frightened I would see something; yet unable to stop looking for movement. Nothing happened. It was a strange thing to do and definitely out of character for me. However it was a strange day; one that was about to get even stranger after we returned to Hill 865 where Doc was standing and watching Thuan and his entourage as they approached from the west.

As he passed the point that has been the location of the main gate into the fortification on Hill 865, also called the "western gate," Thuan stopped and squatted by the road and peered intently down the south slope. It was there, on Dorow's sketch, that Tom's body was shown to have been last seen on. Thuan concentrated for about a full minute and then turned his head toward me, smiled enigmatically and gestured down the hill three times with his right forefinger as if to say: He is down there. While Steve was photographing all this, Doc and I remained poker-faced and whispered to each other out of the corners of our mouths like two inept ventriloquists: "Holy crap!"

Thuan then stood up and walked to the opposite, or north, slope, and looked down the hillside for a while. Then, as if confused, he began walking farther up the hill, past us in the saddle, and part of the way to the former Marine main position on Hill 881S. He was clearly looking for something specific. After about five minutes, he came over to me and, as he had done about an hour earlier when we had stopped our van on the road, asked: "Where is the airfield?" This question immediately lowered my expectations. I pointed in the direction of Khe Sanh Combat Base and replied, "Eight kilometers that way." Slightly frustrated now, Thuan asked to see the map he had drawn three days before in Hanoi. I took it out of my backpack and spread it on the ground, holding it down against a steady breeze that was starting to blow in from the southeast.

Thuan pointed to a spot on that map and repeated his question. I gave him the same reply. It seemed to me at the moment that he was confusing the Combat Base with this hill, and I was fast becoming disappointed. Thuan then slightly rephrased his question to the interpreter, who then asked me: "Where did the aircraft land here?"

It immediately occurred to me, Doc and Steve how difficult it is to precisely translate certain expressions from Vietnamese to English. This is exacerbated by the fact that no one in our group, except we three and the NVA soldier, had even been born by the time the war ended and so were unfamiliar with the expressions and jargon of that era. However, it was all now becoming clear and so I replied, "Do you mean the "landing zone (LZ)?" Thuan became excited again, "Yes, was there a landing zone near this spot?" I replied that we were very close to what had once been the western-most LZ on the hill, the very LZ from which the evacuation of the Marines from both Hills 865 and 881S was to have taken place.

Seemingly reenergized, Thuan lept up from where he had been squatting at the map on the ground. His gaze traversed nearly 270 degrees of horizon before facing southwest and coming to an abrupt stop.

He then walked rapidly in that direction, up to the edge of the hill and, without hesitation, started down the slope. Doc, Steve and I watched as he made short switchbacks in the 2-foot high elephant grass. He stopped beside a lone, nearly leafless tree approximately 50 feet down the slope, almost exactly where the Dorow sketch showed Tom's remains were located. Thuan then looked up the hill at me, his eyes revealing no emotion other than earnestness, and said quietly: "Your friend is here."

Having uttered those four words, Thuan turned to his left, curled up on the ground and began to retch violently for several minutes. His assistant, who was standing nearby, advised me that this happened to him after every successful effort. After vomiting, Thuan became noticeably ebullient for the remainder of the day.

I was still confused because the location of Tom's remains, as described by Thuan in Hanoi three days earlier, was much farther down the hill. So I immediately asked him if "the three small teeth and ammo pouch" were at this location next to the tree. He replied that they were, indeed, right here — 1.6 meters under the ground. He then told me a "rocket" (again that could be at translation issue) as well as a bomb had struck Tom. Thuan walked down the slope toward the southwest about 20 meters and called to me, moving his arm over the top of his head in an arc. This, the translator said, was the direction from which the plane with the bomb had arrived.

Being a person who had never given much credence to spiritual or paranormal phenomena, I will admit to be astounded at that moment. Few people in the world knew the location of the 1968 incident, let alone what the area would look like 40 years later.

As if this were not amazing enough, while waiting for the Buddhists to bring their offerings down the slope for the religious service, Steve noticed a large clump of elephant grass, taller than the surrounding vegetation, about 12-15 feet southeast of the site. He asked the Montagnard with the machete to hack down the high grass. As he whacked away the grass, we found ourselves looking down into an old NVA "spider hole." It was about 2 feet wide and measured about 3.5 to four feet deep, using the hoe handle to measure, with perfectly cut perpendicular walls on three sides, (the downhill side of the hole had been eroded away by water). We could clearly see striations on the interior walls of the hole left by the blade of an entrenching tool. What made this find appear so astonishing was that it corroborated the PAVN military record found in 2003 which described Luong and Long dragging Mahoney about 30 feet from the point he was originally shot, to a spot directly in front of their "fortifications," as bait for an ambush.

After everyone finally arrived at the site, we asked a Montagnard guide to hack away some of the elephant grass with his machete. I then laid the plaque on the ground and Doc, Steve and I had a moment of silence for Tom and other the Bravo Company Marines who will never forget the afternoon of July 6, 1968.The Vietnamese then began the Buddhist service, covering the spot around our plaque with an assortment of flowers, fruit, candy and other pleasing foods and smoldering incense sticks, in order to lure Tom's soul from the perpetual misery of the battlefield. Among these offerings were several stacks of imitation paper money, which was burned at the end of the ceremony, ostensibly for Tom's use. One of the two telepaths who accompanied Thuan from Hanoi chose the nearby "spider hole" in which to burn the money. I recall wondering at the time if his using that hole had some ritualistic significance; though more than likely it was selected to prevent the steadily increasing wind from spreading flames along the slope.

Once the makeshift altar of flowers, food, "paper money" and even a bottle of Vietnamese vodka was laid out on the ground, I was asked by Thuan to stand before it and think of Tom in order to help bring his soul to that place. While doing that, several of the Buddhists, including Thuan, Doc and the NVA soldier, sidled up to me and began praying; some rolling the stem of a single burning incense stick between the palms of their hands. I began to weep again, but this time it came on slowly and predictably, unlike the unexpected burst of emotion I had experienced earlier in the day. At the end of the service, while the "money" was still smoldering in the "spider hole," some of the Vietnamese began picking up the offerings to take back, as was customary in the case of such temporary and remote altars.

One of the Montagnard guides began to dig and had gone down about 18 inches before we stopped him. Into that hole I placed, the smaller of the two plaques. The events of the day had so broadened my perspective that I no longer cared if someone knew the location the plaque and returned to dig it up. It now seemed to be such a trivial concern.

As I placed the plaque in the hole, Mr. Tam put the vodka bottle in there for what I guess he thought might make an interesting photo op. However, when he went to remove it, the old NVA piped up sternly and Tam immediately replaced the bottle alongside the plaque. I then asked Tam what the man had just demanded of him, and Tam replied: "He said, 'Leave it for the soldier.'" This NVA soldier's simple and spontaneous words of respect were profoundly moving to us three Khe Sanh veterans.

Standing there amid the waving elephant grass and swirling smoke, honoring the last Marine to die on the murderous slopes of this legendary hill, alongside a former enemy from a war nearly forgotten by most Vietnamese and Americans, was an image none of us will ever forget.

Just as the Montagnard was about to cover the plaque and bottle with dirt, Doc's billed cap, with the USMC emblem on the front, blew off his head in a gust of wind and landed upright in the middle of the hole. As he reflexively leaned down to pick it up, the Vietnamese cried out, as if in a single voice, for him to leave it there. They told us that it was not uncommon for wandering souls to be "playful." Tom, they continued, was happy his friends had come for him and had knocked the hat off Doc's head as a sort of prank (an act definitely in keeping with Tom's personality). So the hat was buried along with the plaque and vodka.

Before leaving that spot, Thuan lit five incense sticks and told me to carry them off the hill so that Tom's soul could follow the smoke. After about 15 minutes, and the incense sticks now being about half burnt, Thuan took them from me and snuffed them out. He advised me to keep them "safe" and I would receive further instructions about what to do with them after returning to Hue. As we straggled off the hill, I looked back at the line of people who had met in this remote place (remote even for most Vietnamese) to help one lost soul among the countless of Vietnam. I will forever be touched by their sincerity and compassion. We stopped back up by the site of the western gate for a water break and to munch on some of the offerings for Tom. Never, in my wildest dreams, did I imagine I would one day be sitting on the ground near the spot of my friend's death, sharing a Ritz cracker with him, and trying to absorb the incredible proceedings I had just witnessed.

As we began to descend the trail to southwest, the ominous mass of Hill 689 comprised most of that horizon. I knew of its long and bloody history, from the day in April 1968 when forty Marines of the 1st Battalion, 9th Marine were killed in battle there, to a similar fate barely avoided by the 1st Battalion, 1st Marine regiment the day after Mahoney was lost. The crest of the hill appeared to be unusually devastated, unlike most of the others in the area; a dark and barren ellipse seemingly denuded of all but the meanest vegetation. I knew it still contained the unrecovered remains of Marines, who had suffered the same fate as Mahoney (even in the same week) and hoped to have the opportunity to ask Thuan if he sensed anything up there. However, Thuan was in a "zone" all the way down the hill, squatting periodically to stare off into the valley below, deep in concentration. At one point, he told me, sweeping his hand across 90 degrees of the small valley: "There are many ghosts down there." In the end, I did not find a propitious moment to ask him about the souls of those abandoned Marines on Hill 689.

On the way down the trail, Doc, Steve and I briefly discussed the possibility of the two Montagnards returning to dig for Tom's remains. Doc, whose Vietnamese language skills are good enough to understand most conversations, believed these Montagnards did not comprehend enough Vietnamese to understand the significance of the spot. They more than likely thought we were there to honor the place of Tom's death, rather than identify the location of his mortal remains. He further conjectured that, as animists, they are highly superstitious and deathly afraid of spirits. As such, they would probably not venture back there if they fully understood the significance of that spot. Bottom line: They would likely go back and dig up the plaque, hat and vodka — but nothing else.

On the way to back to the village, Doc slipped on off a crumbling dike and flopped into a rice paddy. That night, over beers in the courtyard of the Morin Hotel in Hue, he tried to convince us that, as with the loss of his hat, Tom's mischievous spirit was responsible for his awkward plunge. Steve and I think not.

Two days later, on December 18, we visited a Buddhist temple in west Hue to thank the nun, Thich Nu Minh Tanh, for initially urging us to make this trip to Vietnam. She had just received a telephone call from Thuan, who provided her with instructions on what to do next. After removing our shoes and entering the temple, I was amazed to see, immediately off to the right, an elaborate altar dedicated to Tom Mahoney's wandering soul. His black-framed high school graduation photo was surrounded by offerings similar to the one's we had brought to Hill 865. Incense sticks burned perpetually, replaced hourly by young novitiate nuns. Thich Nu Minh Tanh asked me if I had brought along the five half-burned incense sticks from the hill, which I had done. She then proceeded to reignite each of them and have me place them in a holder on the altar. Tom, she said, will now be able to follow them to this place and his soul will reside here among his "friends" until such time as his mortal remains are recovered. If they are not, his soul will remain in this temple forever.

She then asked us to sit on cushions at a low, highly lacquered table that had been set up in the main part of the temple, just in front of the wide-open front doors. A novitiate soon appeared and commenced burning a great deal of incense in a brazier on the front step. Soon a haze of incense smoke floated in the wide doorway. Upon the table was a delightful variety of foods and nectars, including two round western-style layer cakes. One was decorated in frosting with the words "Merry Christmas - A lot of friends." The other read "Happy New Year — A lot of friends." All, a charming effort designed to lure Tom's wandering soul inside. We spent the next several minutes silently contemplating the recent events. Shortly thereafter, eight nuns in yellow and white robes arrived from behind the main altar and for the next 30 minutes chanted an ancient hymn for the safe arrival of Tom's soul. Lost in the soothing cadence of the chant, I finally conceived the thing we had been hoping for all along — a sense of peace after 40 years.

After returning from Vietnam on December 22, 2007, I would receive a telephone call from Captain Robert Black. The Captain advised me that the sketch of the terrain produced in conjunction with the July 1968 investigation of the loss of Tom Mahoney had not been drawn by him, as Doc and I surmised, but probably by Lt. Dorow. While Dorow had not been an eyewitness to the tragic events of that afternoon, records show he had been charged with conducting the subsequent investigation. Black further indicated that this map must be inaccurate because Mahoney had definitely been dragged down the north side of ridgeline, rather than the south. After reexamining Dorow's map in light of Black's observations, it became clear the directional reference arrow of "North" on that map — was actually pointing east. Since Doc Topmiller had used this map during his visit to the hill the previous May, and we were now relying on it again during this December 16, 2007 visit, it is apparent that Mahoney's remains were last seen on the opposite slope, 30-40 meters due north of where we now believed them to be.

Though I was initially skeptical of the telepathic aspects of this journey, I cannot say that I am still — even though it appears Thuan picked the wrong location. During those three days, I forced my mind open to the possibility of there being such a reality beyond the empirical world. It was a good thing for me; one that felt far more logical, in its own way, than I would have earlier imagined. It was not what one might call "a life-altering event," though I do not know if such change would have happened to this "old dog" even if things had concluded on a more miraculous note. Yet the humility, sincerity and quiet dignity of these people and their genuinely compassionate effort to ease the misery of single soul, among millions, made me wonder during the long plane ride back to the United States if Lt.

Dorow's flawed map, with which I so confidently searched in all the wrong places, might not be a metaphor for my journey back to the place where my youth and innocence were lost. Perhaps there were two "wandering souls" on their way home.

The end of this story has yet to be told. If, because of our efforts, Tom's spirit now resides in a more caring and harmonious atmosphere within the pagoda at Hue — it is still but halfway to its final destination. Now that we have made the necessary corrections to Lt. Dorow's sketch and have had that information corroborated by Captain Robert Black, who was within a few meters of Tom's body on the afternoon of July 6, 1968; our next stop is to contact the OSD-DPMO and request they send a Joint Task Force team to the site. I also intend including the information provided by Thuan. While the contribution of a telepath may not have relevance to the Americans on the team, it will to the Vietnamese. Doc Topmiller so strongly feels we are near a resolution to this case, that he has agreed to return to Vietnam, at his own expense, to identify for the Joint Task Force team the exact location of the site, should they wish to dig.

In retrospect, I find it interesting that at our meeting of December 13, 2007 in Hanoi, Thuan's second map showed a hamlet just at the base of Hill 865. He originally said Tom's remains, which consisted of three small teeth and deteriorated M-16 magazine pouch, were near the base of the hill, not far from a farmhouse on the outskirts of that village. When we were extrapolating from Lt. Dorow's sketch that Tom's body was last seen on the southwest slope of Hill 865, then Thuan's map information seemed unreasonable since the nearest village in that direction, Lang Ta Tuc, where we had left our van, is over 2,000 meters away —a ridiculously long distance for human remains to migrate.

However, in light of the new information about Mahoney's last location, that information now appears more realistic. Only 50-75 meters below the steep drop-off near where Tom was actually lying on the north side of the hill is the head of a small and relatively flat valley. About 200-300 meters beyond that is the village of Lang Ruon. In 1996, the JPTFFA team went to "Ruon" and asked villagers there if they knew the whereabouts of Tom's remains. None said they did. However, given the force of the bomb blast that damaged Tom's body, the steepness of the slope and the possibility of a farmer's hut now being on the outskirts of that village near the base of the hill; the location of the remains identified by Thuan on the second map fall within the realm of possibility.

There is not a day that goes by when I do not shake my head in wonder at the remarkable chain of events that has occurred since the publication of A Patch of Ground nearly three years ago. I have been a reluctant participant most of the way. Yet having witnessed for so long now the nobility of spirit demonstrated by Tom Mahoney's family, friends, fellow Marines, total strangers and former adversaries, I have come to relish the opportunity to do whatever I can to speed his destiny on to a successful conclusion — whatever that might be. Perhaps, in the end, we will find the story was never about a tiny piece of Tom still resting on some remote hillside in Vietnam; but rather about the tiny piece of him carried in the hearts of these most human of beings.

1 The westernmost Marine position within the Hill 881S fortification, often referred to as Hill 881A, also has the geographic designation of "Hill 865." To avoid reader confusion in trying to distinguish between Hills 881S, 881A and 881N, I will henceforth refer to this position as Hill 865 (The numeric names given to these hills are based on their elevation in meters above sea level).

2 During the war, Americans most often referred to these troops as being in the North Vietnamese Army (NVA). The proper designation, however, is People's Army of Vietnam (PAVN). While I will continue to use the term most familiar to the reader (NVA), be aware that some quoted references will refer to them as PAVN.

3 Col. Robert H. Barrow, Commanding Officer 9th Marine Regiment, later 27th Commandant of the Marine Corps.

4 The NVA referred to the combination Hills 881S and 865 as a single location they called "Hill 845."

WISHING UPON A SILVER STAR

By Dennis Mannion

They came single file across the top of Hill 861 sometime after first light, passed within 5 feet of me, and headed down slope towards the northwest gate. It wasn't a gate in the literal sense but instead a narrow passageway that zigzagged through the protective barbed wire. As we watched them go, I said to my radio operator, "Screw that business! I'm glad that's not us going out there," and he emphatically agreed.

It was January 26, 1968 -- five days since the hill had been partially overrun by the NVA -- and this was the first combat patrol heading onto the very terrain that had been the NVA's main avenue of approach. The fighting hole that Dave and I occupied was atop 861 -- the FO team needed to be able see as clearly as possible -- and had great, unobstructed views especially to the west and north. Our little section of red clay real-estate was within 5 feet of a huge bomb crater left over from the Hill Fights, and anyone taking the shortest route across the top of the hill would inevitably walk in the narrow space between us and the bomb crater. Had we wanted to, we could have reached up and touched any of those Second Platoon, Alpha 1/26 Marines as they walked by but we did not; nor did we speak with any of them, because, after all, there was nothing to be said. Nor did we make any eye contact because they approached us from behind and our focus was on the dangerous terrain where they'd soon be. From where we stood shoulder-deep in our fighting hole, it was less than 50 yards to the gate, and as the patrol passed, the usual clinks and clunks of their 782 gear was masked by larger, distinctive clicks as charging handles on their M-16's were engaged and safeties thumbed off.

Since the 21st, Dave and I had called in numerous artillery missions northwest of the hill into the exact area this platoon was headed -- active machine guns, RPG's, mortars, and even, we thought, a recoilless rifle. It wouldn't take a combat patrol to convince us -- or anyone else -- that the NVA were still out there in good numbers and still active. However, someone higher up the chain-of-command decided that the location needed to be probed and these Marines from Alpha were given that task.

Along with having unobstructed views, I also had my USMC issued, Bausch & Lomb 7x50 binoculars. The patrol was easy to follow as it moved out the gate, over a small knob of hill, veered to the left, and headed down into a narrow draw. The binocs were a help as the magnification made the Marines appear 7 times closer than they actually were, but they were not essential for me to visualize the trail, because I had made that same trek numerous times in late December and early January. The last time I had been on that same section seven days earlier, I had been so at ease that I wore my Converse Black Low sneakers instead of jungle boots! But that was pre-siege posturing, and this was now the real thing.

The patrol came up out of the draw and headed uphill into an area that had been heavily wooded just a few days earlier. When Kilo took over the defense of 861 in late December that trail was impossible to see once it entered the trees -- nor was it possible to see 861 if you were on that section of trail -- but now, after seemingly constant shelling and air strikes, most of the trees were gone and the trail was easily discernable through the shattered branches. As the line of Marines began their ascent, Dave yelled, "Jeez! Movement! Gooks!" I swung my binocs in the direction of his pointing hand, and 50 yards to the right of the Marines and hidden behind some splintered tree trunks, 2 groups of NVA began to emerge seemingly out of the ground. They were not advancing; instead they began to spread out parallel to the men of Alpha.

To this day I do not know which side fired first, but the Marines reacted quickly, turned to their right, dropped to the ground for cover, and began moving off the trail and up towards the NVA. The intensity of the gunshots from both sides increased. The distance from them to me -- just over 300 meters -- provided a weird, almost time-lapse experience as I'd see a grenade explode or a stream of tracers fired, but it was seconds later that those sounds reached my ears. The AK-47 fire was as intense as ours, but it was only the Marines who began to maneuver forward. They were halted for a time by the withering, return gunfire, pulled back to the trail itself, and then the 81mm FO in the bunker next to mine worked up a fire mission for them. Soon after that, Marines began to move forward again and in my binocs I watched with fascinated horror as one individual stood and fired his M-79 grenade launcher. I expected the gunner to drop back to the ground while he re-loaded, but instead he kept moving forward. Every pull of his trigger sent another grenade in among the uprooted tree trunks and brought him further towards the NVA! He seemed oblivious to the bullets that were stitching the dirt around him as he progressed. Suddenly, he lurched violently backward, arms flailing up, the M-79 falling to his side. He landed on his back and remained motionless. By now, it was hard to see clearly even with the binoculars because the dust and smoke enveloped the entire slope. There was a discernable lull in the gunfire from both sides and the platoon began to move back onto the trail. When they turned to their left, and began to move downhill, I knew they were coming back home.

I closely watched their slow but steady progress towards 861 and it was clear that 4 Marines in the middle of the column were carrying someone. I hoped for a survivable injury but I expected the worst as I had seen his movements when the bullet hit. It was only after the first few Marines zigzagged back through the gate that I lowered the binoculars from my eyes. No longer a combat patrol, the returning Marines began to individually spread out and move across the top of the hill and down towards the LZ. The four men carrying the grenadier passed directly between our position and the bomb crater for the second time that day. There had been no time to place him onto an improvised litter of some sort -- so he was being held off the ground and carried up 861 by his arms and legs -- but I knew instinctively that there was no life left in this young man. He had forfeited everything to help his fellow Marines and I had watched it happen 7 times larger than life and less than 300 yards away. It is one of my specific Hill 861 memories that has never faded or blended with other events from those weeks and months even after forty-one years. Yet, in all that time I never knew his name.

I learned in May of this year -- 2009 -- from John Rauch, 2nd platoon Alpha 1/26, that the Marine's name was PFC Dwight T. Denning and that his actions that day earned him a Silver Star. I have been thinking about that name and that decoration a lot in the last months. I have read many accounts in other Silver Star citations but his is the only one where I actually witnessed the actions that cost him his life and earned him this award.

Growing up, I was taught to wish on the occasional shooting star -- still do -- and if I could wish on this Silver Star, I'd request a simple trade. The medal goes back into a storage container somewhere in the United States and Dwight Denning gets to progress towards old age with memories, holidays, relationships, and a life well-lived.

I know it can't happen, but I do wish……I do wish.

I GET MAIL

Tom,

I would first like to thank you for your efforts on behalf of 1st Sergeant Bill Malcolm and his military service published in this summer's issue of Red Clay (Pages 22-23); I will get copies to his Mother.

On pages 64-66 the article (IN MEMORY DAY), listed the names of 123 veterans from Vietnam who died prematurely from Non-Combat related injuries and emotional suffering caused directly by the Vietnam War. GySgt Carroll Wilke was one of those men, and I felt compelled to pass on his story. Gunny Wilke already with 20 years of service in the Marine Corps, suffered a heart attack in the Danang area on approximately 18 September 1967. He was flown back to the United States but expired on 20 September 1967. Due to the circumstances of his death he was not eligible for his name to be inscribed on the Vietnam Memorial. It obviously has happened to hundreds of other veterans, but was especially frustrating to me, since Gunny Wilke was from my hometown of Clifton, NJ. So it was a pleasure (a small one) to have his name read aloud at the wall where I felt his name should have been added a long time ago.

is with deep sadness that I must post of the passing of my father SSgt Robert H. Zeliff on Thursday September 17th, 2009, after a long battle with heart disease and diabetes. He served in country from 1967 to 1968 with the 5th Marines and with 1/13/ HQ Comms. He was on active duty with the USMC from 1959 to 1969. He also served as a civilian employee at MCLB Barstow from 1975 to 1994, retiring as director of MWR. Semper Fi dad, we love you and will miss you. Chris Zeliff PO2 USCG, 1988-1998.

MOM & DAD

He was a USMC veteran, served 1959-1969 and in Vietnam in '67 and '68. He served at Cam Lo and Khe Sanh combat base. He was at Khe Sanh during the siege and battle in 1968, medvaced out shortly after the offensive started. Dad turned down a purple heart, being 100% Marine he felt that getting peppered by shrapnel from a 120mm rocket was nothing compared to the price many of his mates paid.

He made it through a major heart attack at 38 and kept on trucking. Stroke in 2001 and several other surgeries over the years but time finally caught up with him. Above all he showed me to always stick to your guns and to your word. Integrity was important with pops.

Captain Alec "Jeff" Bodenweiser, USMC Echo Co 2/26 Hill 861A

Ed Note: I had the extreme pleasure of serving with, and fighting alongside 1st Lt Jeff " Bodie" Bodenweiser in Echo Co 2/26 on Hill 861A at Khe Sanh. He was also a personal friend and a wonderful & caring person. I spent time with Jeff at Quantico as his house guest, and to really describe him,"He was a Perfect Gentleman". I will miss him.

Fellow Marines, TB S 6-67 classsmates, and all....My friend, and fellow Marine, A.J..(Jeff) Bodenweiser passed away. His battle was very courageous just as his fight was so many years ago against the NVA at Khe Sanh. We visited many times over the past few years, and I will miss him until the end of my days. Jeff was not only a great Marine, but also just a wonderful human being. His troops in Vietnam fondly called him "mother" because he did care about their welfare.

Bastard Bravo On The Move Again

By Cliff Treese

I want to inform everyone that I am a grandfather again. My youngest daughter had a baby girl on January 16, 2009. Her name is Mikayla Lynn Jean. I flew up to Penna. to be there for the birth. I was honored to feed her the first bottle. Her first daughter is now 2 years old and her name is Summer Rain Jean. Both are healthy and doing fine. (Pic# 1)

I finally got my 1978 Malibu finished and had the graphics put on. I stopped by Hooters of Melbourne, Florida, to get some pictures of my two cars for a flyer they made up for a Car Show we had a few months ago.

As everybody knows we lost Phil Mineer last July. After a lot of red tape and a final DNA test, his family held a funeral service for him in Mays Landing, NJ. (Pic # 2) The members who attended from B 1/13 were Mike Haight, Ron Shouse, Tom Keaton, and myself. Leroy Matlock from Echo Co 2/26 also attended. All of us were friends with Phil and all served in Khe Sanh together. (Pic # 2a) All of our wives attended the services with us. (Pic # 3) We met Phil's sisters and his brother (Pic # 4) along with his twin daughters. It was a nice service and we were hoping that more Khe Sanh Veterans could have attended. Phil was loved by many and will always be remembered by those who knew him.

During the third week of April every year, Wickham Park in Melbourne, Florida host, the Vietnam Veterans "All Veterans Reunion". This year Tom Keaton and Ron Shouse accompanied by their wives, Mary and Lynn respectively came down to enjoy the festivities. Tom's daughter Lisa also attended.

We started the day at the Palm Bay High School where we gave a little talk to the History class regarding Khe Sanh, and our experiences there. One student in the class who was confined to a wheel chair, and was wearing a Marine shirt. This boy was intrigued about Viet Nam and asked more questions than any other student.

By the end of the session he had everybody in tears informing the class how he came to be confined to a wheelchair, and his unbridled wish to become a Marine. After the Reunion ended, we gathered a few things to give to him. I returned to the school and gave him several personal things from the three of us. He was so happy that we thought about him, and that he started crying right in the class room.

Our next project the three of us tackled was something that we started last year, when Phil was at my house for the Reunion. I said that each year we would raise a new USA and Marine flag on my flag pole in front of my house. After the flag raising, (Pic # 5) we went to my back yard, and sat around the bar. Some of us went for a swim in my pool. Tom's nephew who lives in Palm Bay, is a retired Gunny Sgt from the Corps, who came over, while we all sat at the bar, and had a few beers. Ron was very tired and went to bed.

After he fell asleep, we decided to have some fun with him. Ron's Lizard walking stick was placed by his side, and four fox pelts were placed on him, and if anybody remembers the rats from Mobile, Alabama, that was also placed by his head. A very nice photo was taken of him and so he will never be able to forget his little nap. (Pic # 6)

On the 15th we all went to the local Hooters in Melbourne for a Car Cruise that I helped get started a few months before. While we were having a few beers, our wives went to the local Good Will store and did some shopping. My car was one of about 40 or 50 cars there. The week before I had won the best car voted by the Hooter Girls and won a 50 wings dinner and a free t-shirt. The three of us ate the wings while the women went shopping. I then talked to several of the girls and had them stand with Ron and Tom to take a picture.(Pic # 7) We had a great time and the sights weren't to bad either.

On the 19th of April we all went to Cocoa Beach for the Escort of the WALL to Wickham Park in Melbourne, to officially start the Reunion. My Malibu only has two seats, and Tom said he wanted to ride with me. (Pic # 8) So I talked to a friend of mine from Rolling Thunder Chapter 1 in Florida and got Ron a ride on a Harley for the Escort Ride. There was over 1400 motorcycles and more than 60 cars in the run. We came right down US 1 the Police had every intersection blocked for miles, and didn't allow any vehicles to cut in or go around the entire parade. The WALL was transported in a 5th wheel trailer along with an enclosed trailer that housed the Vietnam and All Veterans of Brevard Mobile Museum items. As Tom and I drove down US 1 into Wickham Park, we were greeted with cheers and salutes from Marines and other vets, and civilians. It was a very proud feeling. After it was all over, I asked Tom if he enjoyed it and he said he had a great time.

Because of having the flags on the back of the car, I was one of the last cars in the parade. After some picture taking, all the vehicles were parked. We walked over to the area where the venders, and the beer wagon were set up. Doc Holiday the local DJ, was already playing music at the stage area. We got a beer and started mingling with the Veterans that were milling around. Ron and I met several Khe Sanh Vets whom we had met last year, and introduced them to Tom. They hit it off like they had known each other for years. Since the WALL was escorted on Sunday, and the Reunion actually didn't officially open until Thursday, several vendors were opened for some early bird sales. On Monday volunteers helped assemble the WALL so it would be ready for the official opening.

On the 24th I took my Malibu over to the entrance to the vending area and put my car and my personal memorabilia on display. (Pic # 10, 10a, 10b, 10c I had it set up from 9:00 am until almost 9:00 pm,. Hundreds of people took pictures of the car ,and checked out the things I had on display.

The next day we all went up to Cocoa Beach to the Pier. We walked along the beach and just chilled. Ron, Tom, and I had a picture taken at the display where they make it look like you were surfing. After we left the Pier we drove down to Patrick Air Force Base, and went to the PX. We also drove around the Base and saw all the C-130's on the runway, and the Hueys setting outside the hangers. Last year when Ron came down we were at Patrick and saw Air Force One sitting on the runway.

We made several trips to the Reunion. The nice thing about this reunion is you can come and go as you please. There is no charge for parking, and there is much to do in Central Florida. Disney, Sea World, Universal, Daytona Beach, or any number of places that are within an hours driving distance. Cape Canaveral is just north of Cocoa Beach, and it is a great place to visit. Also by Cape Canaveral is Port Canaveral were there is a lot of very good restaurants, and where many cruise ships sail out from. We all went for an Air Boat ride where we saw over 200 alligators. This place is only about 15 minutes from my house. It is about 100,000 acres of state land with about 200,000 alligators ranging from baby gators to 12-14 feet long. This is an experience that young and old will never forget.

Ron and Tom both had to leave on Saturday and both missed the Marine Charge of the Hill that is only done by Marines every year on the last full day of the Reunion. I went over to the Reunion after they all left and had a great time participating in the Charge and the singing by everybody there of the Marine Hymn. They have a fly over by many different types of Viet Nam era aircraft.

This is a Reunion that if one attended, would be remembered for a long time. It isn't just for the Veterans but their entire family. There are so many Hotels and Motels in the area that accommodations are no problem. There are three airports to fly into: Melbourne Airport, Orlando, and the Orlando Sanford Airport. The Melbourne Airport is local and only about 20 minutes from the Reunion area. The two Orlando Airports are about one hour from Melbourne.

On May 13th I left Florida with my Malibu on my trailer, and went to Pennsylvania for a rededication of a WWI and WWII memorial that a friend of mine and his son rebuilt on a new site. On my way I stopped at Concord, N.C. to see Lowes Motor Speedway. I stopped for lunch at Hooters and when the manager saw my car on the trailer, he had several girls come outside and take a picture up on the trailer by the car. (Pic # 11)

After I left there I drove to Ron's house in Winston-Salem, N.C. where I spent a day with Ron and Lynn, and then drove to Allentown, Pa. I got there on the 15th and went to my brothers house with the truck and trailer for the night. The next morning I drove to Jim Thorpe, Pa. to the Carbon County Votech School where I was met by my buddy Hal Resh who is the auto mechanics shop teacher.

We were met by a local newspaper reporter and photographer from the Morning Call out of Allentown. They were there to do a story and get some pictures of my car, and of the kids in the shop doing some work on the car. They did a front end alignment on the car and checked out a few other odds and ends. From there I took the car to Hals house where I left it on the trailer. The next day we went on a cruise and rededication for the Memorial that was torn down, and relocated to a new site in West Bowmanstown, Pa.

Since it was Armed Forces Day I was supposed to go to the local stock car track at Mahoning Valley Speedway run by an old friend Doug Hoffman and his wife. From the days when I used to race I would be the Pace Car for all the divisions that they had there. Unfortunately it rained and the races were called till the following Saturday. The following Saturday I trailered the car to the race track and unloaded it and parked the car in the staging area. It looked like rain again but I told everybody we were going to have the races. My younger brother races there and he said it was going to rain. It seemed like I was the only one confident about having races that night. I was told to take my car out to the start-finish line after the warm-ups were complete for the National Anthem. A short time after the song the Heat races started. They completed all the heat races, and after intermission I was called to the track for the first feature event. We no sooner got the cars lined up and it started to rain.

I pulled to the infield while the cars continued around the track to dry it off. Luckily the rain only lasted for a few minutes and the track was dry again in no time. Once again I was back out on the track and the races resumed. After pacing the cars for a few laps the starter waved me off and the first feature began. (Pic # 9) I pulled into the pits and waited by the staging area for the rest of the features one at a time. I had a great time and after the races were over many people came down to the pit area to see my car up close.

As I left the track the traffic on the road was all backed up and moving one car at a time. About 1/2 mile up the road I observed a DUI check point. As I got to the check point, there were about 20 cops all around. One of them looked at my truck and immediately said 'pull it over'. I asked him why and he said that my truck didn't have an inspection sticker. I told him that I don't need one that I live in Florida. I must have said something that he didn't like, and he asked me if the truck is registered in Florida. I just looked at him and told him if the plate says Florida that must be where it is registered.

He then walked to the back of the truck and came back and again told me to pull it over. When I asked what for he told me that my tow chains weren't crossed and they have to be crossed in Pennsylvania. I pulled over and got out and crossed the chains and another officer came to me and asked what I was pulled over for. I told her and she said she had to see my license, registration and proof of insurance. After I showed her she told that I was good to go. I took the car to my brothers house and parked it in his driveway for two days. I then went to a WWII Battle of the Bulge luncheon and took the car on the trailer to show Lou Reda from the History Channel who was a guest at the luncheon. I sat and talked with several men who fought in the Battle of the Bulge and it was very interesting to hear some of their stories.

I visited with my children and grandchildren that week and attended my grandaughters second birthday on May 31st before heading back to Florida the following day. I again stopped at Ron's house on my way back to Florida. I got back home on June 2nd and it was great to be home.

Hope to see more of you in Florida at the Vietnam Veterans and All Veterans Reunion next April in Melbourne, Florida.

Sea Knight pilot braved enemy fire to keep Marines supplied during siege at Khe Sanh

By Robert F. Dorr
Special to the Times

The chances of the Marine combat base at Khe Sanh, South Vietnam, surviving the 77-day siege that ended April 15, 1968, would have significantly lessened without Maj. David Althoff's bold flying, say Marines who fought there.

Althoff, now a 71-year-old retired lieutenant colonel in Tempe, Ariz., flew 1,080 combat missions and logged 1,000 combat air hours in Vietnam. He piloted the CH-46A Sea Knight helicopter, the initial version of the CH-46E flown by Marines today.

Althoff and crews from Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 262 nicknamed Tiger Air; flew frequent supply runs to Marine mountain outposts that served as the eyes and ears of embattled Khe Sanh.

The flying was done at low altitude where, as Althoff said in a series of interviews, there was a lot of metal flying around

His aircraft was hit four times so that he had to land immediately and many other times when he could just barely make it back to a base. You could sometimes count 100 or 120 bullet holes in the chopper

Cpl. Travis Flowers, a member of Althoff's helicopter squadron, said, when we inserted a reconnaissance team into a hostile area, Major Althoff would tell the guys to keep their heads and arms inside the chopper because we were going in low and fast and he didn't want any of them getting something knocked off by a tree. He really meant it. You had to look up to see the trees.

Althoff repeatedly credits his crew with his achievements and survival because there would have been no getting out of a hot zone without them. Sea Knight crews shared the constant risk of being hit, something that doesn't come naturally to those trained in aviation.

The CH-46 had superb visibility forward, but there's no visibility aft. You need to rely on the crew chief for that. Althoff said.

You're going into a hot zone, he remembered. They're firing at you from 360 degrees. You start to take hits. You know you're taking hits. The crew chief is telling you, Okay, we're leaking here. The gas lines hit there. If they're shooting into the pit, the gas lines are under the gauges so they're leaking all over your feet. You can hear the bullets cracking into the fuselage.

Second Lt. Michael Mullen, another pilot in HMM-262, said in 1968 that Althoff was the squadrons idol. He would never ask one of his junior pilots to fly a mission he had never flown. When we went on a hairy mission, we went with the knowledge that it could be completed because [Althoff] had already done it several times before.

Althoff earned the first of his three Silver Stars on Feb. 1, 1968, as flight leader of a section of two CH -46s assigned to extract an eight-man reconnaissance team surrounded and pinned down by 100 North Vietnamese soldiers near Dong Ha.

Althoff holds numerous other military awards and was presented the Alfred A. Cunningham Award in 1968, making him the Marine Aviator of the Year.

A decade ago, he was inducted into the Arizona Aviation Hall of Fame. Althoff and his wife, Phyllis, have five grown children.

OBIT

William R. Hartnett, age 64 yrs., died suddenly on December 28, 2008. He was the husband of Carol (Ogden) Hartnett and father of William R. Hartnett II and his wife, Amy; of Charles R. Hartnett; and to stepson Ricardo N. White and his wife, Peggy. Bill was also a loving grandfather to Billy, Cura, Jovanna and Adrian Hartnett. Also to Justin, Rebecca and Isabella White. He is sadly missed by his brothers, John Hartnett and his wife, Jackie; Bernard Hartnett and his Marlene; and James Hartnett and his wife, Mary Ann.

Bill had a real zest for life. He was an extremely positive person with a wide grin and laughter that impacted the lives of all that knew him. Family was always a priority but he had a sincere willingness to offer and help anyone that needed it. He held a deep appreciation for possessions passed down through the family and enjoyed sharing stories about each item. He enjoyed watching NASCAR, spending time with his grandchildren, and fixing things. He was also a good cook and loved to help prepare holiday meals.

Bill retired In 2004 after working 35 years in the pharmaceutical industry. He continued to keep busy with projects and hobbles, the most recent being making beeswax candles with a couple of the grandkids. His kindness, selflessness and caring attitude will be remembered by all that knew and loved him.

Military Service

William R. Hartnett enlisted in the U. S. Navy in 1965. He went to San Diego California for basic training. After testing, they found he was well suited for medical service. The Navy sent him to Bethesda Naval Hospital in Maryland for further training. After intense field training for war causalities, he was sent to camp Lejeune Marine Corps Base, in North Carolina for combat training.

He left in 1967 for Vietnam, and joined Charlie Company,1st Battalion 26th Marines. Bill's battalion was involved in fights with the NVA on hill 950, 861,881N and 881S. One of the longest and fiercest battles was to protect the Khe Sanh Combat Base, which was under very heavy siege by thousands of North Vietnamese. The Marine's held fast under fierce ground attacks of mortars and rocket fire day and night for days.

My brother William R. Hartnett was presented with the Presidential Unit Citation for heroic service along with other awards for bravery and outstanding service to the Marine Corps and his country. He also received the Combat Action Ribbon, National Defense Service Medal, Vietnam Service Medal, and Republic of Vietnam Campaign Medal with two gold stars.

We his family are very proud of his will to endure the great pain and sacrifices he made for us.

THE SALUTE

Raymond Cruz
CBMU 301 Det. Bravo

There are moments in time that make an impression for life. This is one of those moments.

One day this past summer 2005, I was returning from visiting relatives on the other side Washington the State. All should know of that traffic here in the Puget Sound area, is the worst. Driving that late afternoon, northbound on 1-5 between Fort Lewis and Tacoma, there was fairly heavy traffic moving about 50 mph and slower.

I drive an old, used, 1990 F-150 4X4 long Bed, with a canopy, that has huge flat iron bumpers. It can be used for pushing anything out of the way cruising at 50mph in the fast lane. The HOV lane on 1-5 in this part of the state, is on the left side of a 3 lane highway.

I observed a motorcyclist slowly coming up through traffic, in the HOV lane. As he pulls up along side me, I notice the bike is a black Harley softail. On the tank in Gold lettering is USMC. The leather jacket he is wearing has several patches; some are USMC with Semper Fi in red lettering, and on the Black helmet as well. The rider does not look old enough to be a 'Nam vet. but old enough to have possibly served in the first Gulf War. With hair flowing from underneath the helmet, he has the label of a proud Former Marine. Traffic begins to slow in the HOV lane and the motorcyclist is now riding to the rear of my truck. I notice him looking at the sticker on the bumper of my truck.

Now first let me say that almost every American recognizes the USMC logo that hangs on many vehicles. My little Seabee decal goes ignored except by another Seabee. For the most part am usually asked what does the little bee represents. On the rear bumper is also the Khe Sanh Vet "Home is were you dig it" sticker. On the hitch cover I have a cap with the word Seabee and a Seabee decal on the side.

In my mirror I see the leather clad ex-Grunt intensely looking at the stickers, then suddenly he looks forward and guns the bike in and between other vehicles to pull up alongside again. This time he looks directly at me, stands on the pedals of the bike, while still moving in traffic. He faces me and gives me one of the most perfect Marine salutes, nods his head at me, and roars off. I was stunned and overwhelmed with mixed emotions.
That is respect and honor.

I share this with you all, because that episodic moment honors us all.

ODD HAPPENINGS

RECOLLECTIONS OF MY DAYS WITH GOLF 2/26 ON HILLS 558 & 560

By Robert M. Crabb

We move to hill 558, and hill 861. We dig in, running trenches and digging holes. This hill has very little trees or elephant grass cover. to hide our movement from the eyes of the enemy.

One night, an ambush went out at dusk. We had been running them in the gully just down the hill. Another Marine and I are standing in the twilight watching explosions in the gulley near the ambush site. I remarked that our mortar section was doing a good job. We quickly discovered it was not our mortar section, but the NVA attacking the Marines at the ambush site. We dove for cover in our nearby holes.

Fortunately for us, they had changed the previous location where they had been setting up the ambush site, and no one was injured. That was the last ambush to go out until the siege was almost over.

"Get in your holes and just be ready", was the word that came down from headquarters. Two jets came over and blasted a nearby hill where the NVA had Fox Company hung up.

Morton, the name we gave to the mad NVA mortar man, kept dropping 3-6 rounds a day on us. We could actually hear the rounds leaving the enemy's Mortars. When you hear that whoosh, you ran like hell for your hole.

We actually could observe the NVA building bunkers on nearby positions. We waited until they had finished then one of the F/O's would call in an Arty strike and destroy them.

During the early days on 558 and 560 , jets returning from raids on North Vietnam, which still had their ordinance would drop them in the gulley near our hill where the NVA had been observed.

We first came under 122-mm rocket fire, on 558. I was standing with another marine, looking out at the valley. A 122 rocket coming in sounds like a tornado rumble then train crash. We had learned to hit the ground at all unexpected noises.

You lay in the dirt, trying to catch your breath. Slowly, move one arm to check your head, then the other arm, your side, your crouch, and then feel if your legs are still there. Then get up and see if anyone was hit. I hated those damm rockets.

When we first set in on 558, a lot of marines were constantly firing at NVA infiltrators trying to come up through a marshy area. At times a whole line began firing. I think they did it to get some new ammunition since we had been carrying our ammo long before we got to Khe Sanh. This practice continued until we were informed that ammo we brought with us was all we would be getting. Our command group took charge and began rationing out any ammunition we did receive.

I took to throwing empty C-rat cans full of dirt at all noises out front. Once in awhile we would throw a real grenade to keep the NVA guessing.

During the day, I would go to my old position and talk to the Cpl., bragging of my night adventure of throwing clods and cans at the NVA. The first time I said this, four l22-mm rockets hit the trench. Close to where we were standing. I got up, checked myself and ran down the hill.

Next day, I am again BS'ing about the nightly Bob Crabb can attack, when another four 122 rockets hit the hill.

Before I ran off to my to my hole down the trench line I heard the Cpl say "Quit throwing those damm cans, I think you are the one pissing them off". Really, we see 3 or 4 by your wire at night." I then go back to throwing my Cans of dirt. Wishing I had an extra had a grenade or two.

Martin was a marine always hearing things move at night. He became pain waking his Cpl. up every night asking for permission to throw a grenade. Finally, just to keep him quiet, the Cpl said, "OK. Just one."

The noise was as if a heard of elephants were charging down the hill. The "Zero brain" marine was a hero that day, for breaking up a NVA ambush with blood trails leading off the hill.

Martin, looking around one morning sees his Cpl., nude stepping out of a sleeping bunker. I guess the Cpl. was trying to dry out his one pair of UT's or just air out. Martin goes over and tells another Marine, "I think those two are Gay".

I thought you knew about Golf Company replied the grunt, "the Air Force has whole bases that are only for Gay airmen, and so does the Army. I think the Navy keeps all the gay Sailors on a certain ship. So in the Marine Corps most Gay Marines are assigned to Golf Company".

Martin runs down to another old timer who keeps the joke going, telling him, "it used to bother me but it doesn't anymore, it's ok, none of our officers are Gay. So Martin goes to live with the Lt. for a week until the Lt. kicks him out to stay on the lines.

'When C-rations arrived, 3-4 boxes are handed out to each Marine. Usually 4 boxes are good for only 4 meals. Where we where, those 4 boxes had to last 6-8 days! They always tell us, "Re-supply in 4 days."

To extend this, the first day chow comes, it is not handed out until the next day. Marine Corps policy is bullets, bandages and beans. We did not seem to get much of anything.

Some Marines ate all 4 boxes in one day, then survived on coffee packets. Chow was handed out by the Squad leaders. They mixed up the boxes and turned them face down. And each man would pick four meals. Fruit came in 4 of the boxes and pound cake in 2 meals There was always some trading going on. I tried to eat a little each day, big 8 oz can of something one day, crackers and old looking peanut butter the next. Everything was eaten down to the cream packets. I did get to know which suppliers had a better grade of food. Still cold Scrambled egg and grease was hard to choke down .

I was going to take up smoking, your going to die here anyway and it did seem to take the morning chill away but trading C-rat fruit for smokes broke out. I would rather have a small can of peaches than a Marlboro. With little food and a good variety of worms I slimmed down to 155 lbs.

We used a NOD to spot the C-rats supply, which was under Marine guard. They had to stop using grunts from the lines because they would not stop anyone from stealing extra chow. They instead used office personnel to guard the food supply. Threatening them with being transferred to a line company if they left anyone get away with any extra chow.

Our 1st Lt. is checking the minefield and steps on a little mine, which blows his heel off and is medivaced I hear of this and scoot up to the CP not to inquire about the LT. foot but, "when are we dividing up his chow?" The CP thought I was crazy but I thought it was a fine joke.

February and March getting ready to be Over Run

In February-March there was a feeling that we would be over run. We heard rumors that NVA planes stationed in North Vietnam had been moved closer to Khe Sanh so not to be targeted by our bombers, and they could possibly make a run at us under cover of the fog. We begin to build air raid bunkers.

When Tank sounds were heard on the lines. (We set up tank hunter killer teams.) We then get orders to burn everything you can not carry out. Field jackets, ponchos, rain gear, any extra clothes, all should go into the fires. "Stand down from that order", comes the word from headquarters and we go back into our defensive positions still anticipating an attack.

Our artillery begins to fire closer to our positions on the hills. There is nightly H&I fire doing nothing but keeping us awake. One Marine with only 45 days left on his tour stayed in his hole 24 hours a day. He just kept digging deeper and deeper. He said he already used up all his luck when on a previous patrol an NVA machine gun round went through the side of his flak jacket, hit his web gear and just caused a huge burn that resembled a zipper. No work details for him, he spent his time hiding and counting the days.

One foggy night the NVA hit Hill 861A. All hell broke loose, and a heroic helicopter pilot attempted to land on Hill 861A at night under fire. The next day we sent up replacements for their dead and wounded. They had no luck at all after they left their Hill they were down by a water hole , when an NVA rocket killed a whole squad including several corpsman.

I think the most dangerous time was coming back to the hills from the base. The planes did not stop on the runway, you just kicked of your gear, jumped from the plane and ran like hell to the trench line that ran alongside the landing strip. Those new to the experience, who stopped to retrieve their gear right away, were wounded our Killed most of the time.

A MARINE'S CHRISTMAS STORY
That Missed Last Years Red Clay

By Earl Clark
A Co 1/26

I find shopping with my wife excruciatingly painful, and try to avoid it as much as possible. How in the world someone can go into a store and not know what they want is beyond me. When I want something, I'm in and I'm out.

For instance, I was one of the last guys to get a flat screen television. I took note of all the ones I had seen at other people's homes, asked a bunch of questions and decided I didn't want any of them. I saw a commercial on TV about an LG "Scarlet" brand and chose that one. I'm in and I'm out.

Since this is a Christmas story I have to mention that I go with my wife to shop for our little ones, but only with certain parameters in place to keep peace in the family. We have to go in the morning when the doors first open in order to beat the mobs. People in stores at Christmas time are nuts. Ninety nine percent of the people have forgotten what Christmas is about anyway.

I sort of just go through the motions during the holiday season. I get into a blue funk. I think about you guys a lot and the brotherhood we shared when all we had was each other. I miss that. I think about our brothers on the Wall, too. I appreciate solitude and peace, and I enjoy being with my family – nothing more, nothing less.

We know what Christmas is all about.

For years my shopping for the grandchildren consisted of me purchasing or ordering something that had to do with the Yankees, Indy Colts, Arizona State or the Marines, be it clothing, toys or blankets and such. I still get some personal shopping in. I just bought a little T-shirt for my newest grandson that said, "Lean & mean just like grandpa," with a little guy next to a bulldog. Pretty cool!

Anyway, last Christmas we found ourselves pulling up in the parking lot just a few minutes after the doors opened and entered the store. My wife grabbed a cart and we began to walk toward one of the aisles. There were some chairs just inside the entrance with several people sitting in them. I think they had the right idea, let someone else do the shopping while they sit and read, or whatever.

With my wife ahead of me, I had just passed these chairs when I thought I heard in a soft, barely audible voice, "Semper Fi." I kept walking a bit because I still wasn't quite sure what I heard. I had a Marine Corps baseball cap on so I stopped and turned just to be sure. A Marine never ignores or passes up a Semper Fi; I mean we're talking about the brotherhood here. Sure enough there was an elderly gentleman with this very old, beat up cap with the Eagle, Globe and Anchor on the front. I walked toward the gentleman, extended a hand and said, "Semper Fi, Sir." Without a doubt he was World War II Marine and I greeted him with the utmost respect. We had a short conversation about this and that, shook hands and exchanged a Merry Christmas to one another. He mentioned to me that he was here with his grand daughter doing a little shopping. I told him I would stop back by on our way out if he was still there.

After walking around aimlessly we found some items that we thought the children might enjoy wearing. We stood at the check out stand, paid for our merchandise and mercifully headed toward the exit. Sure enough, there was my brother Marine. The wife headed toward the doors while I veered toward him. I knelt down where our eyes could meet so as to not appear that I was standing over him. We both extended our hands to shake but ended up embracing one another. I wished him a Merry Christmas and he said to me, "Merry Christmas and God bless you." I walked away thinking this is one of those special moments you get to have in life when you are a United States Marine.

I caught up with the wife just as she was entering the parking lot. She asked me, "Who was that gentleman you were speaking with?" I put my arm around her and just said, 'one of my heroes.' She smiled at me and nothing else was said as we walked to the car. She knew.

I want to wish all my brothers and sisters a happy holiday season.

Peace.

ORDINATION CEREMONY FOR KHE SANH VETERAN RICH AHO-DELTA CO 1/26

Five Khe Sanh Veterans of Delta Company 1/26 came together to celebrate the ordination of one of their own to Deacon of the Catholic Church on August 22, 2009 in Winona, Minnesota. A total of eleven deacons were ordained in the packed Cathedral of the Sacred Heart. Among the Deacons ordained was Khe Sanh Veteran, Rich Aho. The witnesses included Rich's wife Joann, his immediate and extended family including four of his Delta brothers, Tom "Moose Russomano, Chuck Tomer, Ron Bellantone and Dan Fisher and their spouses Connie Bellantone and Geri Fisher.

These five Marines originally came together as replacements to 1st Platoon, Delta Company, 1/26 in late 1966 at Hill 55, and served together throughout their tours to Khe Sanh. Thirty years of professional careers and raising families separated them until finding each other at the Khe Sanh Veterans' reunions in Dallas, Chicago Mobile and Washington, DC.

Joann and Rich hosted a fine reception at their home following the ordination ceremony. At Sunday Morning Mass they listened to Rich's first sermon and as they left the Church an eagle soared high above the parking lot. A good sign

STILL SAVING LIVES
CORPSMAN RECEIVES PURPLE HEART

By Sarah Fortney, National Naval Medical Center Public Affairs

BETHESDA, Md. (NNS) -- A Hospital Corpsman assigned to National Naval Medical Center (NNMC) received a Purple Heart Medal presented Sept. 14 by the Marine officer whose live he saved when their convoy was ambushed in Afghanistan.

Holding back tears, Marine Corps Lt. Col. Ty Edwards presented Hospital Corpsman 2nd Class Stephen Albright with the Purple Heart at the NNMC's Command Suite. "You're my hero," Edwards told Albright.

On Oct. 18, 2008, Edwards and Albright were on a routine mission to deliver supplies in Afghanistan when the humvee they were riding in was ambushed. At the time, Albright was driving the vehicle and Edwards was the team commander.

During the ambush, Albright saw Edwards on the ground, not moving — he had been shot in the head. Albright attempted to push the vehicle in front of Edwards to offer protection from the heavy rounds of fire.

Albright, who was shot in his lower left leg in the attack, treated Edwards, bandaging and applying pressure on his head wound and checking him for further injuries. As he continued to monitor Edwards' vital signs, Albright constructed a makeshift litter and a C-collar to stabilize his neck during the bumpy trek to a nearby helicopter pad. "Without him, I wouldn't be here," Edwards said.

Albright, who now works in Health Promotion Office at NNMC, was honored to accept the Purple Heart, he said, but didn't believe his war wounds constituted him receiving the award. Therefore, he chose to have Edwards present him with the award.

Edwards pinned the purple-clothed military decoration on Albright's uniform in front of family members and NNMC staff.

Albright's wife, Emily Albright, said it was difficult when he deployed to Afghanistan, but knowing he was able to use his skills to help others and make such an impact made it all worthwhile.

I was really scared for him when we heard the news [about the ambush]," Emily said. Over the last year, she has kept track of Edwards' progress while he was in treatment at NNMC and the Tampa Polytrauma Rehabilitation Center. She said she is amazed at how well he has recovered.

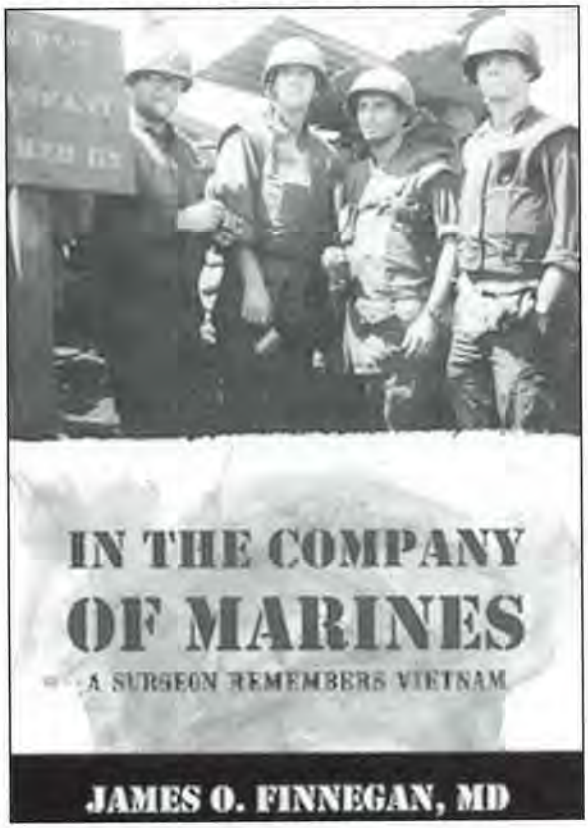
Anna Edwards, Edwards' wife, said she couldn't have asked for better treatment and support. She brought their children, Mason, 8, and Alaina, 6, and Edwards' father to watch him present the award to Albright. "It has been a challenging and difficult year," Anna said. "It's wonderful to see them together again and to know how much [this award] means to both of them."

NNMC Commander Rear Adm. Matthew Nathan congratulated Albright on his achievement and noted that the two are now both Purple Heart recipients, having both shed blood for their country.

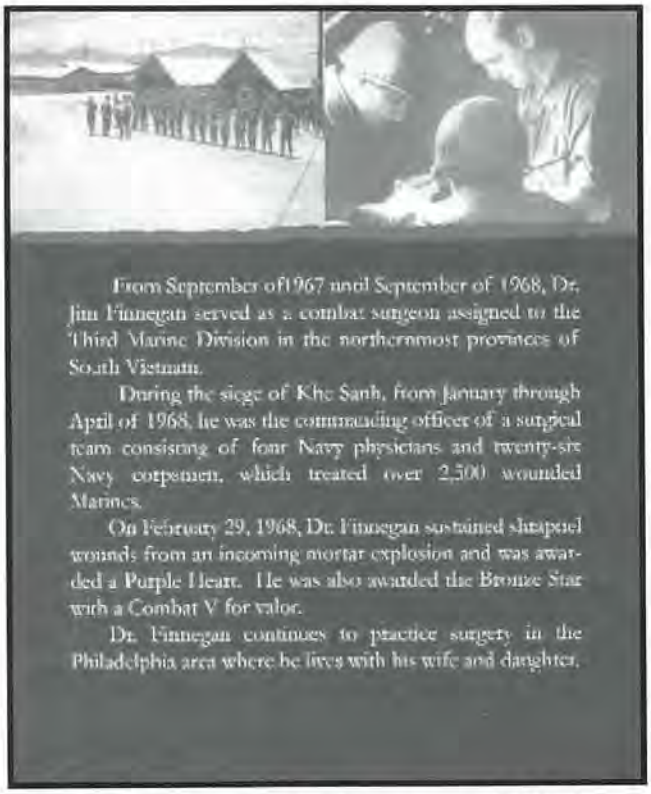
"They are why I stay in the service, to work alongside heroes like these two," Nathan said. "What a great opportunity it is to have you here now … God bless you for what you do."

BOOK REVIEW

" IN THE COMPANY OF MARINES"



James Finnegan, M.D., says one of the happiest moments in his life was seeing the cover of his recently



From September of 1967 until September of 1968, Dr. Jim Finnegan served as a combat surgeon assigned to the Third Marine Division in the northernmost provinces of South Vietnam.

During the siege of Khe Sanh, from January through April of 1968, he was the commanding officer of a surgical team consisting of four Navy physicians and twenty-six Navy corpsmen, which treated over 2,500 wounded Marines.

On February 29, 1968, Dr. Finnegan sustained shrapnel wounds from an incoming mortar explosion and was awarded a Purple Heart. He was also awarded the Bronze Star with a Combat V for valor.

Dr. Finnegan continues to practice surgery in the Philadelphia area where he lives with his wife and daughter.

published book, "In the Company of Marines: A Surgeon Remembers Vietnam." The practicing surgeon, whose previous publishing has been limited to medical journals, has printed some of his stories and reflections from his year serving as a combat surgeon in the Vietnam War, part of which was during the famous battle of Khe Sanh. Over the years Finnegan occasionally wrote down the moments and memories from his year in Vietnam as a Navy surgeon assigned to treat members of the Third Marine Division in the northernmost provinces of South Vietnam.

The book was written for a small audience of family and friends but has gained interest from outside parties, including the National Museum of the Marine Corps in Quantico, Va. At a dinner a few years ago, Finnegan found himself talking about his experiences in Vietnam from September 1967 to September 1968. His daughter commented that it was the first time she heard him talking about that time. "My own kids didn't know what I did," Finnegan said, adding that he then realized that "I really do want everyone to know" about his year as a combat surgeon.

That year included serving as the commanding officer of a surgical team in the heart of the siege of Khe Sanh, where he encountered daily bombardments, constant danger, and saved, and lost, uncountable young American men. Finnegan, still a full-time surgeon at a medial clinic in Camden, N.J., harkens back to Vietnam as a "pivotal point" and "watershed moment" in his life and the lives of his friends with whom he still keeps in touch.

At that time in America, social unrest was at a boiling point, and although there are many unanswered questions about the war in Vietnam and the siege at Khe Sanh, which accounted for hundreds of U.S. deaths and thousands of injuries, Finnegan's book focuses on his individual experiences and those of the men he encountered. At "Charlie Med," the term used for some bases medical unit, Finnegan recollects, the doctors were always well-stocked with medical supplies. Navy corpsmen and those fighting on the lines all worked together for a common cause, even if they didn't quite understand the whole picture. The cause was to keep each other alive.

Writing about the siege, which took place roughly from January to April 1968, Finnegan writes, "It soon became difficult to distinguish one day from another. The wounded arrived at all hours, sometimes one or two at a time and other times one or two dozen, totaling over 2,500 during the three months of the siege. It seems impossible to believe today, but we took care of each one of them in a timely and appropriate fashion. To this day we repeatedly affirm and reaffirm that no wounded Marine ever received anything but the best possible treatment even under unrelenting incoming fire.

I fear I may overuse the phrase 'incoming fire,' but it would be impossible to tell the true story of Charlie Med without emphasizing that much of the story unfolds while the base underwent almost constant bombardment by enemy gunners." Finnegan was a Navy physician assigned to the Marines (standard as the Marines don't technically have their own medical staff) but states in his book that he has always felt like a Marine, even if he can't say that he really was one.

Still, many have recognized what he and other Navy physicians and corpsmen did in those jungles of Vietnam. Finnegan served in the Third Medical Battalion of the 3rd Marine Division. Recently, a man at Finnegan's golf club whom he has known for years saw his book in the golf shop and approached him, saying, "I'll call you a Marine, and I was a Marine," Finnegan said.

The war in Vietnam marked an advanced stage of helicopter technology in war, in which many casualties could be brought in at same time, and the quick transportation ushered in a new era of combat casualties – those who might have died earlier in the field were rescued, but sometimes in unthinkable, unsalvageable conditions. Still, holding Khe Sanh was so important to those overseeing the war that the medical unit was well stocked, even when it came to blood. If they needed something, they got it, Finnegan said, adding that once the Marines flew jets to Okinawa to get them some catheters.

Death didn't happen because of lack of care in the medical combat base, which included a triage bunker, operating rooms, helo pad and graves-registration tent. During this year of his life, death was all around Finnegan – inexplicable, gut-wrenching death. No doubt this included the possibility of his own and those to whom he had grown close. "The message is certainly there, but you can't let that paralyze you," he said of the chance of being killed. "You do what everyone else does." And that is to get their jobs done while dodging artillery.

To this day, Finnegan keeps in touch with many men he knew back in that watershed year. The Marine magazines he subscribes to are filled with men and loved ones trying to find someone who knew them or their relative in Vietnam, and in reunions, so many people just trying to reconnect to those who can understand, those who were there. As for Finnegan, "I'm trying to get my act together and write another book because there are so many stories left out," he said. "So many untold stories." In the epilogue to his book, Finnegan writes, "Here's what I know. Nineteen-year-old corporals do not declare war. Young lieutenants and captains who lead platoons and companies into battle do not choose those battles. They just fight them. Presidents and senators and congressman declare or authorize war. They seldom ever fight them. They love making speeches about them. Many of them have never served in the military. The majority have never seen combat. "Here's what I wish. I wish there would never be another war."

Vietnam was a helicopter war. Choppers were the main trans-ports for food, ammunition, mail and men. Get in fast. Get out fast. That was the helicopter pilots' mantra. If the bad guys zeroed in on a landing zone with their rockets and mortars, the helicopters wouldn't land, not even to pick up our dead.

One day, during the siege of Khe Sanh, two of our guys got hit real bad. When that happens what you do is take the Marine who's seriously wounded and put him in a poncho, maybe 100 feet from the landing

One guy takes the poncho by the feet and the other guy gets it by the head and you run to the Medivac chopper. You try to coordinate it so you get there just as the helicopter touches down.

I was holding one of our wounded guys by the head end of his poncho, making eye contact with him. His entire body was soaked with blood. How he was still breathing I don't know. He was turned inside out. All of his organs were exposed, but he was still alive, and his eyes were fixed into mine.

"You're going to be fine; you're going back to the world," I said to him. "You're making it back fine. Back home. You'll be fine. You'll be fine."

But I was thinking, "Just die already," because the guy was already in shock, and he wasn't going to make it.

The helicopter was on approach and four of us ran out carrying the two wounded Marines. We were catching heavy fire from mortars and rockets. The two guys carrying the first Marine scurried straight inside the helicopter. I was last on the ramp, and as soon as I got there, the pilot started taking off because the helicopter was being riddled with shrapnel. The cockpit glass was a mess. Pieces of it were in the co-pilot's face. Mortar shrapnel sliced through the hull of the chopper.

I was barely on the ramp and the helicopter started lifting off. Next thing I knew, I was dangling from the ramp clinging to the poncho, and I couldn't reach anything else to hold.

I lost my grip. For one quick second, I opened my eyes and actually saw the tops of trees. I was falling from the sky, and the only thing I could think of was that I was above the trees.

I had enough time to tell myself to curl in a ball, like doing a cannonball at the swimming pool, and close my eyes and wait to hit the ground.

That's what I remember, waiting, waiting for the pain ... But when I hit I bounced straight up. Swear to God, just like a trampoline.

I was thinking, "What the ... ?!" I had no idea what I had landed on.

The first time, I must have bounced 10, 15 feet, but it felt like jumping out of a six-story building onto a trampoline. Like I hit and bounced up three floors, then two floors, then one.

At the same time my helmet flew off, and-how I was thinking to do all of this, I don't know-I tried to flatten myself out so I wouldn't be such an easy target for the enemy.

I was still wondering what I had landed on by the time I reached cover. Well, for about six weeks, none of us had wanted to get our mailbags. The helicopters would come and drop mailbags, but no one wanted to run out the hundred feet under fire to get them. We had to get our ammunition and food, but screw the mailbags. We weren't gonna get killed for mailbags.

So the mailbags piled up. They must've been stacked four, five feet high, and I'd landed right in the middle of them. That's why I bounced:
Those mailbags that nobody wanted to risk their lives for saved, me.

The three guys who got stuck on the chopper made it back the next afternoon while I was eating C-rations in one of the trench bunkers where we slept. They thought I was dead. I could hear them talking to the other guys.

"We seen Fix get blown out of the helicopter! We seen Fix get blown apart." Their eyes saw me fly out the back of a helicopter in mid-air while under heavy fire, so they assumed I was dead. When they finally saw me sitting in the bunker they looked like they'd seen a ghost.

"But we saw you get blown out of the helicopter!" "That's right, but I'm right here. Yo! I'm fine." We always appreciated the mail.

This entertaining, sometimes disturbing and always honest military memoir, Barry Fixler, the mild-mannered jeweler whose Valentine's Day shootout with armed robbers captured the nation's attention, tells his uncensored war stories from some of the deadliest battles of Vietnam.

At 9:05 AM on February 14, 2005, Fixler found himself facing the wrong end of a loaded gun, again. Even though almost 40 years had passed since his last patrol as a squad leader in Vietnam, Fixler's combat instincts were still razor sharp. The widely broadcast surveillance tape shows Fixler turn the tables on his would-be killers and go on the attack.

To Fixler, the shootout wasn't heroic despite the numerous awards and citations he received, but rather a result of mental toughness he gained fighting in the trenches of Khe Sanh, rice paddies of Con Thein and Quang Tri, and jungles just south of the DMZ.

This is a story about a young man who enlisted in the Marines to gain his father's respect and discovered the value of life, extraordinary examples of brotherly love, and core values of America: leadership, responsibility, sacrifice, service, honor, and optimism.

EDIT NOTE: I ran the story in Red Clay with pictures of the Heroic shootout Barry had with the two Armed Robbers. He was just as Heroic when he served in my weapons Platoon on Hill 861A with E Co 2/26.

Barry is donating profits from the sale of the book to the wounded warriors program. He is a generous supporter of the program and holds many events at his place of business to raise funds.

RANDOM THOUGHTS ON A SUMMER NIGHT

By Earl Clark

The other day I was watching my ten-year-old grand daughter's fast-pitch softball team play for their league championship. The name of her team is the Funky Monkeys. Their uniforms are black and pink with little pink monkey faces on their white knee socks. It's just about the sweetest thing you'll ever want to see. The sun was just beginning to set as the game began, and what had been a warm day turned in to a gorgeous Arizona evening. I was at peace.

My mind acts like a tape recorder, many times in the fast-forward position, with images and thoughts racing past my eyes with lightning speed.

Does this happen to any of you, or is it just me? Sometimes I get into trouble when engaged in conversation and I lose track of the subject, or I move on to another subject without the other person knowing what the hell, I'm talking about. It drives my wife and sister crazy, and I'm sure I've seemed rude toward family friends, but I think they know what's going on.

Anyway, this occurred for a few moments during an inning of the game. I traveled far distances without leaving my chair.

The tape begins: My first thought was that it was good to be breathing and able to take in all the excitement around me, little girls with ponytails playing softball in America. How Norman Rockwell is that?

I then traveled back to Washington D.C., to 2004, when I had gone there with Operation Freedom Bird for the Marine Corps Birthday and Veterans' Day. I had the honor and privilege of being with Bruce Geiger and Tom Ford as we placed the Khe Sanh Veterans' Wreath at the Wall, but the night before I had been to the Wall to talk with our fallen brothers because there was something that was eating at me and I had to tell them.

I told them I was sorry for pissing away twenty some years of my life while looking at the world through the distorted, abstract visual presented by the bottom of a bottle, and not leading the sort of life they would want me to. I was ashamed that I was given the opportunity to live my life, and blew it, when they were not able to.

I promised them I would change my life; I promised them I would be a better grand parent than I was a parent; I promised them I would be a better person and always try and do the right thing. I also promised them I would try and help people who needed it.

These thoughts are always with me each day. I knew just making these promises wasn't going to hack it with these guys. I had to do it. That moment has had a profound effect on my life.

My final thought the other night--while the tape's still playing--was to give thanks to My Shield for protecting me from being blown into oblivion by a 152mm artillery round.

The next thing I heard was the sound of my daughter's voice saying, "Dad, Dad, Mia's up to bat," and I returned to the present. She looked at me knowing what had just happened and held my hand. My children have witnessed this sort of thing before. It never goes away.

For those of you who took the time to read all this, I thank you and hope I didn't intrude on your day. I know some of this has nothing to do with Khe Sanh; yet for me it has everything to do with Khe Sanh.

Oh, by the way, my grand daughter had a single and an RBI. The Funky Monkeys won the game 3 to 2 in extra innings to win the league championship. Proud grandpa, indeed!
Semper Fidelis to all my brothers.

PROMISE FULFILLED

By Bruce Geiger

It had been nearly 41 years to the day I left the embattled combat base at Khe Sanh on 14 April 1968. The harrowing and deadly ordeal was finally over, although in the months that followed, new seedlings in my dark forest of nightmares would continue to emerge.

Seven weeks earlier I met Sgt. Manuel Floyd Martinez for the first time since transferring into A Btry/1st Bn/44th Artillery as 2nd Platoon CO. I had flown into the besieged Marine base in February with supplies and several replacements to take command of the two Duster and two Quad 50 crews that had defended the northern perimeter of the base since the 77 day siege began. Sgt. Martinez was a sharp, confident, 22 year old squad leader who was admired and respected by the men he served with. My instincts told me I could count on this young NCO to effectively lead his crew despite the daily pounding by NVA artillery, rockets and mortars. Along with the other Duster and Quad 50 crews, he would stand fast providing the heavy direct fire support critical to the Marine effort to defend against overwhelming NVA ground forces planning to overrun the base.

After the grueling convoy back to Dong Ha, my men and I got a much needed break before we took on new assignments escorting convoys and mine sweeps and providing fire support for Marine and ARVN operations. Little did I know that exactly eight weeks later on a Sunday morning, Sgt. Martinez would be struck down by a sniper's bullet.

On the morning of Sunday 6 June 1968, Pfc. Morris Johnson was talking with Sgt. Martinez as they waited for word to 'saddle up' at Dong Ha. Sgt. Martinez was supposed to be off duty that morning but had been asked to fill in for someone else. He proudly showed Johnson a small wallet sized photo of his newborn daughter that he had just received in a letter from his wife. As they talked, they heard the music of 'Amazing Grace' being played on speakers by the Chaplain at the small chapel across the road from A Btry. Headquarters. Sgt. Martinez said he would sure like to go to church. At that moment, Lt. Nelson gave the word to mount up and climbed into the commander's hatch as Pfc. Johnson drove the Duster to his position in the convoy. Sgt. Martinez took a position inside the gun turret atop the other Duster.

About halfway between Dong Ha and Gio Linh, the operation took the tracks east off Hwy. 1 into the sand flats and small sand dunes. Not far off the road, they took enemy fire from an old village. As Johnson's track turned their guns to fire over the engine compartment, Lt. Nelson climbed out of the hatch in order to direct their fire. They had walked into a vicious trap, a horse shoe shaped ambush. They were pinned down; the ARVN soldiers in chaos were of little help. Seconds later, their sister track radioed they had taken a KIA. Sgt. Martinez had been sitting in the fold-down seat to the right of the guns when a sniper, tucked behind a mud wall beside a pagoda, fired a shot that struck him in the head, killing him instantly. Morris Johnson listened to the radio message in disbelief.

Lt. Nelson had just moved around to the M60 machine gun when Johnson heard a snap. As he looked up, Lt. Nelson opened his flack jacket to look at his upper chest where a neat, small red hole appeared. He closed his jacket and then fell off the side of the track.

Sgt. Davis and Johnson dragged him to the protected area in front of the track where a medic checked him. Johnson was ordered back into the driver's compartment; Lt. Nelson was hoisted onto the front of the track to protect him from enemy fire. His shoulders lay over Johnson's head with his knees over the commander's hatch. Johnson drove the Duster out of the kill zone to an area where Lt. Nelson was unloaded onto a stretcher and medevaced by chopper within five minutes. The sister track, driven by Pfc. Monroe 'Barney' Barron, made its way back where Sgt. Martinez was lifted from the floor of the turret and handed to others on the ground. He was laid on a stretcher with a body bag draped over it. After a brief examination by the medical staff, the bag was zipped closed.

It took three different air strikes to break the attack that morning. F-4 Phantoms dropped napalm, scorching the enemy positions. Cobra gunships strafed and rocketed the area and ARVN prop-driven A-1 Skyraiders dive bombed and destroyed the pagoda and dug-in NVA positions.

Morris Johnson recalled the last words he heard from Sgt. Manuel Martinez were of the love he had for his family, especially his newborn daughter. He was touched by the music from the chapel as they sat and talked early that morning. It was so peaceful. Within a matter of minutes Sgt. Martinez would be dead, leaving behind a young wife and a precious child who would never know her father.

I felt terrible guilt upon learning of the death of my young squad leader. A feeling of helplessness consumed me. The circumstances that placed me with another section that day were of no consolation. If I had only been there the events might have been different; he might still be alive. Most disturbing to me was the fact that I never got the chance to say goodbye. I promised myself that when I returned home I would visit with his family and pay my respects at his gravesite.

Over the years, not a week went by that I didn't think of Sgt. Martinez. Over the years I tried to locate his family but was never able to track them down. When 'The Wall' in Washington, DC was being built I visited the site whenever a business trip took me to the area. I remember standing in the rain before the walkway was finished, mud up to my ankles, tears streaming down my face, searching desperately to find his name.

It wasn't until a visit years later that the addition of locator directories led me to his name on Panel 58W, Row 11. I have visited that panel on Veterans Day every year since, to touch his name etched in the shiny black granite and to tell him that I miss him and will never forget him. I will continue to do so for as long as I am physically able. Although I have lost too many brothers in combat, and visit to touch their names on 'The Wall', it is the memory of Sgt. Manuel Floyd Martinez that holds the most meaning for me.

Now 41 years later, I made my reservations to attend the Khe Sanh Veterans reunion in Denver, CO. After an internet search a few weeks earlier, I had confirmed that Sgt. Manuel Floyd Martinez was laid to rest at the Ft. Logan National Cemetery in Denver. I printed a map showing the location of his gravesite; the opportunity to visit and fulfill a promise I made so many years ago was finally at hand. I was apprehensive but remained determined on that Friday morning in July when I had hoped to borrow a friend's vehicle to make the ten mile trip from our hotel to the cemetery. Although my plan was to make the trip alone, my Marine friends Craig Tourte and David Tonick insisted on accompanying me on my pilgrimage.

Ft. Logan National Cemetery was much larger than I had expected, with nearly 100,000 internments. It was beautiful and well maintained. After a few minutes of searching we located the gravesite at a peaceful spot beside the shelter of a shade tree. A rush of emotion came over me; I was thankful my Marine buddies were with me. I reached into my pocket to retrieve a shiny new Khe Sanh Veterans challenge coin, protected in a vinyl pouch, to leave as a remembrance. With the help of Craig's pocket knife I dug out a small slit at the base of Manuel's headstone and pushed the coin deep beneath the sod.

We stayed for a while gazing out over the legions of white markers that stood row after row at attention, on the vast green parade ground. We thought of those we served with who did not return and wondered who, if not us, would be there to remember these many thousands of brave men. After all these years I had finally stood at the gravesite of my brother Sgt. Manuel Floyd Martinez, to shed tears for his loss and to honor him for his bravery. I had finally fulfilled my promise.

During the subsequent siege of Khe Sanh Combat Base, Toan sustained multiple and serious wounds from a B-52 bombing and was also completely deafened for nearly a year thereafter.

The group is just outside what was once the western gate into the Marine fortification on the western ridge of Hill 881S (often called Hill 881A and which I will refer to by its geographic name Hill 865 to avoid confusion by readers trying to understand the difference between Hills 881S, 881A and 881N). Tom Mahoney, was mortally wounded on this trail close to the spot where the people in this photo are standing. Two NVA soldiers immediately dragged his body off to the right and about eight meters down the draw. Because of an error in directions on a map drawn in late July 1968 for the USMC investigation of Tom's loss, we ended up holding his memorial service about 10-15 meters down the opposite (left) slope, near the last barren tree at the far left. ANOTHER ONE BITES THE DUST
Alleged Marine Faker Kept High Profile

September 22, 2009
Associated Press

SABILLASVILLE, Md. - On a sultry day in July 2008, Marine Sgt. David W. Budwah strode in his battle fatigues to the front of a picnic pavilion to tell three dozen young boys what he did during the war. With his clear gaze, rigid posture and muscled, tattooed arms, Budwah looked every inch the hero he claimed to be. He said he was on his second tour of duty in Afghanistan when a homemade grenade exploded, wounding his face and arm when he dove to shield a buddy from the blast.

"We're here to make sure of the freedom you have every day," Budwah told his audience at Camp West Mar, a wooded American Legion compound about 60 miles northwest of Washington.

But the Marines say Budwah is a liar, a fraud and a thief. They are court-martialing the 34-year-old Springhill, La., native, alleging he was never in Afghanistan, wasn't wounded and didn't earn the combat medals he wore - or the many privileges he enjoyed.

Budwah joined the Marines in October 1999 and spent nearly all of the next six years with a radio communications unit in Okinawa, Japan, according to the Marine Corps Base in Quantico, Va., where Budwah has been stationed since February 2006.

Phony heroes aren't unusual. Thousands of complaints pour in annually to the FBI and civilian groups about impostors flaunting store-bought medals. Their very prevalence exposes something else - a nation so eager to embrace its war fighters, especially the wounded, that it sometimes fails to discern between the real heroes and the fakes.

"In every society in history, the warrior is glorified," said phony-hero debunker B.G. "Jug" Burkett of Plano, Texas. "The second you say you're a warrior who has performed heroically in combat, everybody perceives you differently."

Burkett, 65, a Vietnam veteran and author of the 1998 book, "Stolen Valor," said the urge to honor the wounded can cloud a person's judgment.

"I tell reporters that when you've got a guy who's vocal - 'Let me tell you how I won my Silver Star' - your antenna should go up," Burkett said. "The real guys typically don't talk about it."

Budwah's case is remarkable because he is an active-duty Marine facing military justice, not a civilian charged with wearing unearned medals. Of nearly 3,100 courts-martial last year in the four major armed services, only 27 were trials for wearing illegal decorations. Just two involved Marines.

Prosecutors say Budwah wore unauthorized medals and accepted VIP invitations to rock concerts, major-league baseball games, banquets and other events meant to fete wounded warriors.

He faked post-traumatic stress disorder in hopes of leaving service early and was sent to the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, where he bluffed his way into 33 events from late July through November 2008, according to charges obtained by The Associated Press through an appeal of its Freedom of Information Act request.

Bethesda hospital spokesman Chris Walz said the staff tries to involve as many patients as possible in such activities, which range from free NFL tickets to speaking engagements like Budwah's at Camp West Mar.

The charges include making false official statements, malingering, misconduct, and larceny. Budwah faces up to 31 1/2 years in prison and a dishonorable discharge if convicted on all eight counts at a trial set for Oct. 20. at Quantico.

Budwah, who declined to enter a plea at his Aug. 5 arraignment, denied wrongdoing in a brief telephone interview in April. "The allegation is not even true," he said, declining to comment further.

Defense attorney Marine Capt. Kelly Repair and prosecutor Marine Capt. Thomas Liu also have declined to comment.

Recent prosecutions of active-duty service members include Dontae L. Tazewell, a Navy hospital corpsman sentenced in January 2008 in Norfolk, Va., to two years in prison for wearing an unearned Purple Heart and other decorations. Tazewell falsely claimed he had rescued six Marines and recovered the bodies of four others in Iraq.

Prosecutors portrayed him as a failing sailor so desperate to remain in service that he fabricated the story.

Navy corpsman Robert White, got 45 days in the brig after pleading guilty in December at Great Lakes Naval Station, Ill., to wearing a Purple Heart he bought. A former girlfriend testified White obtained the medal after he was shunned by his peers for assaulting her, the Navy Times reported.

People fabricate military injuries for many reasons, including laziness, greed, sympathy and psychosis, said Loren Pankratz of Oregon Health & Science University, who wrote about PTSD impostors in his book, "Patients Who Deceive."

"A more common theme would be somebody who would represent sort of the antihero - the guy who's given his all and yet been abused and misunderstood," Pankratz said.

Burkett said others are simply con men.

Walter E. Boomer, who served as assistant commandant of the Marine Corps from 1992 to 1994, vaguely remembers meeting Budwah in November when they were guests at a Grand National Waterfowl Association benefit on Maryland's Eastern Shore. They shot at ducks, drank and dined with other VIPs and shotgun manufacturing executives.

"I accepted his story at face value," Boomer said. "Nothing that I recall would have set off alarm bells."

Budwah again managed his way to the center of attention at a September 2008 boxing event in Glen Burnie, Md. Organizer Scott Wagner said the highlight of the night was when he brought Budwah and dozens of other military hospital patients into the ring for a standing ovation.

"Were they injured or not? I don't know and I really don't care. If half of them were injured, I still feel good about it," he said.

A year after Budwah's speech to the youngsters at the American Legion camp, Spencer Shoemaker sat stunned in the family's kitchen as he read the charges against his Marine idol for the first time.

Shoemaker, then 10, was so impressed he had his picture taken with Budwah and kept a treasured newspaper clipping about the visit. He said Budwah's talk made him want to join the Marines.

"Well, it's better that I know," the boy said after a long silence. "It did tear me down, but I'll still join the Marines."

His father Michael, a construction worker, seethed at the news about Budwah.

"He scammed America," Shoemaker said. "He scammed a kid."

BOOK REVIEW

ED NOTE: Jeremiah Workman was An honored guest at the Khe Sanh Veterans Washington DC Reunion, and I sincerely believe he finally came to grips with the demons that were troubling him, after being with our members and realizing he was not alone.

"SHADOW OF THE SWORD"

A MARINE'S JOURNEY OF WAR, HEROISM AND REDEMPTION

By Jeremiah Workman with John R. Burning
Presidio Press, $26, 272 pages

REVIEWED BY JAMES C. ROBERTS
Marine Staff Sgt. Jeremiah Workman's "Shadow of the Sword" is the story of two battles.

The first battle was intense, but, compared to the second, relatively brief. On Dec. 23, 2004, during the Battle of Fallujah, then-Cpl. Workman's platoon came upon a house occupied by 40 heavily armed insurgents.

Five of the Marines climbed the stairs to the second floor and were immediately pinned down by superior forces. Workman led his squad in three separate assaults to rescue the five trapped Marines, repeatedly exposing himself to enemy fire during the hours-long battle. In his second assault, he was seriously wounded by an enemy grenade that left his arms and legs lacerated by shrapnel. Despite his wounds, Workman led a third attack. Here is how he describes his situation after hours of battling the insurgents:

"I feel myself falling down the stairs. I hit a step two or three above the landing, unable to breathe. A sudden onrush of smoke fills the landing. Everything flammable now burns with a hellish glow. It casts crazy shadows through the smoke. … "Allah Akbar!" An insurgent's victory cry. Where's my weapon? I still can't breathe. My lungs feel compressed, like a balloon a child has squeezed hard and drained of all helium. …

"I try to get to my feet, but I slip and fall. I have no balance. I'm reduced to crawling on my hands and knees. I tumble to the landing and sprawl chin-first into the broken glass under the window. …

"The shouting fades until it merges with the sound of my heartbeat in my ear. … Like a dream, a scream pierces the background noise. They're coming for you, Jeremiah. … I try to breathe but my muscles refuse to work. I'm suffocating. The last of my strength starts to flow away. … I'm left in darkness now, unable to even gasp for air … Finish this. Get up there and die as you intended. Don't let them shoot you like a dog, on all fours … my cammies are torn and blackened. My hands and arms are slick with blood. The hum of background noise becomes a staccato melody of gunfire. I listen to it, unable to find the will to move, unsure if I am even conscious. … Am I dying?… Consciousness slips away like a ship in its death throes. A wave cascades over me. I feel loose, adrift. Free. I float away into the blackness."

Exhausted and only semi-coherent at this point, Workman was dragged from the building by a Marine officer. Workman's efforts contributed to the elimination of 24 jihadists, and his heroic actions saved two of the five trapped Marines, but three were killed.

In recognition of his heroic action, Cpl. Workman was awarded the Navy Cross, the nation's second highest award for valor.

Although celebrated in the Marine Corps, in his hometown and indeed nationally as a hero, Cpl. (now Sgt.) Workman was engaged in a second, desperate battle, however. The enemy this time was as lethal in its own corrosive way as the jihadists he had faced in Fallujah — post traumatic stress disorder (PTSD). It is a battle that continues to this day, almost five years later.

Much of the book is a brutally honest account of Workman's daily struggle against this insidious disorder which, as the author reveals, has destroyed or crippled the lives of hundreds of thousands of combat veterans of America's wars.

In the aftermath of the battle of Fallujah, the specter of the three dead buddies he was unable to save came to haunt Workman, causing first nightmares, then persistent insomnia, anxiety and depression.

He resorted to self medication with alcohol, then prescription drugs, including the powerful sedative Clonopin, that enabled him to sleep but left him groggy and dazed much of the time.

Workman became subject to wild mood swings when the Clonopin wore off, going from passivity to wild rages. He was relieved of his duties as a drill instructor and was ostracized by fellow Marines. His pregnant wife, traumatized and exasperated by the ordeal their marriage had become, left him.

Then, on a cross-country heroes bus tour with Vets for Freedom, Workman discovered that many of his fellow heroes were suffering from PTSD as well.

His feelings of isolation lessened, he sought counseling and focused on saving his marriage and becoming a dad to the son he had fathered. With enormous effort, he broke his dependence on Clonopin and gradually got control of his anger. He and his wife began talking on the phone with increasing frequency and they eventually confessed that they still loved each other.

The story has a happy ending, at least provisionally. Jeremiah and his wife, Jessica, have reunited and he dotes on his son, Devon. He has an associate college degree (the first in his family to achieve this) and hopes to have his bachelor's degree in two years.

Professionally, things are going well for Workman as well. He has been assigned to work with a program at the at Marine Corps base in Quantico, Va., that treats injured Marines including those suffering from PTSD. He has become an expert on the disorder and the statistics he cites are astonishing.

Workman notes that 25,000 World War II veterans are still being treated for PTSD, 65 years after the war's end. Thirty percent of Korean War combat veterans continue to suffer from PTSD and almost 500,000 Vietnam War veterans — 30 percent of those who saw combat — were affected by PTSD. "For a shocking number of our veterans," Workman writes, "The wars they fought never ended. Never." The percentages for Iraq and Afghanistan veterans are even worse. Workman reports that approximately 300,000 of the veterans of these conflicts suffer from PTSD or major depression while another 320,000 have suffered from traumatic brain injuries that often cause symptoms akin to those of PTSD.

The military had prepared to treat only 8,000 cases, however, rather than the almost 700,000 cases that actually resulted. As a result, the system was overwhelmed, with the VA reporting 600,000 unprocessed claims at one point. That situation, fortunately, has improved dramatically as a result of a policy change at the top. The military has dramatically expanded its treatment program for PTSD and aggressively encourages those who have the symptoms to seek treatment. The Marine Corps has adopted an official policy that no Marine suffering from PTSD will be denied a promotion because of it.

Still, Workman notes, because of the stigma of PTSD, an estimated 60 percent of PTSD sufferers decline to seek help, insisting on fighting "the shadow war" in solitude, in many cases self-medicating themselves with drugs and alcohol. Workman's mission is to battle this stigma by speaking about PTSD around the country — and by writing this book.

"They called me a hero, and yet, I needed help," he writes, hoping by his candor to encourage others suffering from PTSD to come out of the shadows. Despite his struggles, however, he refuses to succumb to victim status. He has no use for political correctness, is a staunch defender of the U.S. mission in Iraq and Afghanistan and is proud of his service in the Marine Corps and would do it again. The way to deal with PTSD, he shows, is to acknowledge the problem and confront it.

For Jeremiah Workman, the battle against PTSD continues on a daily basis, yet he is optimistic about the long-term outcome, made more determined by the love for his wife and son.

At the end of the book, he recalls kissing his infant son on the forehead and vowing, "I will never give up the fight, Devon. That's my promise to you."

Then he adds, "I follow my son into a deep and comforting sleep."

FAC Support 1968: Battle for Lang Vei - Khe Sanh Hill 64!

By Toby Rushforth (Charles P. Rushforth III)
20th TASS, 1967-1968

It was late last Century, in fact, late in 1999, that I first became aware of the Khe Sanh Veterans' Association. I couldn't imagine how I missed it over all those years. I had been a Forward Air Controller, flying O-2 aircraft out of Hue Citadel and Danang AB in 1967-68. That was a very vital time in my life, as it certainly was for all of us.

I looked forward to my first Khe Sanh Veterans Association Reunion in San Diego, during September, 2000. In preparation, I had a baseball cap embroidered with a FAC badge and my radio call signs. The idea was to help anyone who might have something in common, come up and talk. That way I wouldn't have to go around tapping everyone on the shoulder to introduce myself and explain how an AF FAC ended up at a mainly Marine and Army/ Special Ops type Reunion. I was somewhat prepared, because I had traded some correspondence with Ray Stubbe about the Association and about combat operations in and around Khe Sanh. I had also read his book, "Valley of Decision," and recognized a number of operations in which I had taken part. So, the idea of maybe getting to talk to guys that were on the ground during the Siege, while I was overhead, was curious and exciting.

My first KSV Reunion:

After I had checked into the Hotel in San Diego, I prepared for the cocktail hour around the pool in the courtyard. As I passed a profusion of guys, with lots of red on hats and shirts, bearing unit designations, it was a very comfortable feeling (for a guy who was virtually a total stranger to all). As I strode out by the pool, I hadn't gone more than 25 steps before I heard someone yell "Covey!" Geez! Did that feel good. I turned to be greeted by Jim Speer who had been on the USAF Combat Control Team there at KS. He was well acquainted with a number of FACs that we knew mutually, who had been in and out of KS early in the Siege. It was a neat way to start out the Reunion, as I noted with some satisfaction, that my "hat trick" had worked. Jim had apparently been to previous Reunions and quickly began to fill me in.

As the conversation moved between people, places and events, I mentioned that I had been at Lang Vei the morning it was overrun. Jim quickly pointed out a fellow a couple of tables away and said he was there during the battle. I thanked Jim and quickly moved over to stand next to this fellow who was engaged in conversation with a couple others. There was a certain intensity, yet off-handedness about him. I must have moved in such a way that he got a hint I was waiting to talk with him. He briefly paused and looked up at me. I asked if he had been at Lang Vei when it was overrun. He looked at me with both surprise and curiosity and said, "Why yes I was." I explained that I was an AF Forward Air Controller who had been there that morning after the North Vietnamese had overrun the camp. As we ran through a quick Battle chronology of that fateful morning of 7 February, 1968, he talked about how he had evaded during the battle, and showed up later in the PM after much of the process of evacuating survivors was about concluded. At that point, I blurted out: "Wait a minute, you aren't 'Spunky Hanson 28 Bravo' are you?" He looked startled and said "yes I am." I paused, then said "we had assumed you were killed by the North Vietnamese!" It's hard to explain, but this turned into quite an emotional moment. Who knows how and where that wells up from? Let's go back to recount events long past.

My FAC perspective of the Battle for Lang Vei:

I had been in country and at Danang AB for a few months and by that time, was feeling pretty confident about myself as a Forward Air Controller. By that I mean I had not only survived getting shot at pretty regularly, but managed to live through some episodes of "the stupids" in which I was lucky not to have killed myself. Early in the tour, I sometimes even wondered if I wasn't as much a threat to friend as to foe. In any event, at this point, Captain Rushforth was more of a steely-eyed predator (in his own mind).

In January '68, along with other FACs, I was shifted from the "Tally Ho" mission, above the DMZ to "Operation Niagra" over Khe Sanh and its approaches. As we became better acquainted with our new mission area, it was clear that something unusual was in the offing. Signs of enemy activity on the approaches from the North and West were particularly revealing.

On the night of 25 January, the Laotian community at Ban Houaysan (otherwise called "Elephant") was overrun [several miles West of Lang Vei, along Route 9]. Among the intelligence reported by us FACs was that there were tracked vehicle impressions all along Route 9, both East and West of "Elephant." In fact, it was later reported by a FAC that we had killed a tank during that battle (however, the tank quickly disappeared). After the battle, the Laotians and their Vietnamese (ARVN) Ranger liaison retreated to the Special Forces Camp at Lang Vei.

7 February, 1968: Lang Vei:

This account of happenings on 7 and 8 February, 1968 is from my diary and reflects the facts as I knew them and my feelings at the moment.

Well! Gerry Harrington and John Buckles had their work cut out for them last night. Lang Vei was being overrun by a large enemy force supported by at least 9 tanks. They said it was an unbelievable sight, walls of tracers, explosions, what looked like flame throwers, yelling on the radios and tanks rolling right over the tops of friendly bunkers. They had difficulty sorting out targets on the ground, but said they did have a B-57 drop some what we called "funny bombs" (a frag and hot chemical explosive pattern) on tanks breaching the Camp's Southwestern perimeter. They thought the tanks were disabled by that strike?

I got up about 0500. After a fairly inclusive Intelligence briefing on what little was known about the battle, I moved quickly for the flight line and finished the preflight. Aircraft # 396 was in good shape. It had a standard wing load, two pods of 2.75" white phosphorous rockets, a total of 14. The sense of urgency began to grow as I made the radio calls and taxied for takeoff at Danang. The weather was not that good. I'd have to climb on instruments to get on top and cruise to the Khe Sanh area, then figure out how to get under the clouds and over to Lang Vei. I took off at 0710. After about 40 anxious minutes enroute I used heading time and distance to get down through the clouds West of Lang Vei. Cloud bases were ragged at about 1000 feet above the terrain. Following Route 9 back to the East, I approached the Camp, and checked in with "Covey 688," a FAC from Ubon, Thailand who was currently in charge of air operations over the battle area. I could see his O-2 ahead, between cloud layers (forming a sort of fishbowl), circling over patches of occasional trees and brush, which were intermittently visible. Columns of smoke drifted up through the low clouds that were virtually settled on the Camp and the rolling terrain around it. It was about 0800 as I fell into loose trail formation with 688 to listen and try to figure out what was happening. I would be taking over shortly.

Our Special Ops personnel, call sign "Spunky Hanson," were holed up in their Tactical Operations Center (TOC). They were talking to 688 via FM radio. The NVA were swarming all over the TOC, throwing satchel charges, plus smoke and frag grenades down the ventilation shafts and any place they could find access. Spunky Hanson 15A and some CIDG, who had stormed the Camp to rescue the troops, were pinned down by machine gun fire. 688 told them to withdraw so he could bring in some A-1, Skyraiders (Canasta Flight) with lots of guns and ordnance to get the NVA off the TOC. He had the A-1s hold while he dove his O-2 through a "sucker hole" to see if the A-1s could work under these conditions. The terrain was actually in and out of the clouds, an extremely treacherous operation to attempt. I virtually held my breath waiting for him to pop up through the clouds, all the while fearing a flash and column of black smoke would appear instead.

After what seemed like forever, his O-2 popped up through the clouds and he began to talk with the A-1s. It was very risky. They would be in and out of the clouds and in the tree-tops. All the Canasta pilots (4) agreed to give it a try. They formed a "daisy chain" behind 688 and one after the other, dove through the hole in the clouds to see if 688 could lead them close enough to engage the NVA on the TOC. After a short time 688 came back up through the cloud deck. Now we had four A-1s in a tree-top free for all, ripping up the landscape, mainly with their guns, strafing the TOC and area around it. I again held my breath, while from an altitude of about 800 feet, except for the drone of my engines things seemed ghostly quiet. Time was suspended. Again, the tell-tale smoke of an air ground disaster was almost an expectation. When the A-1s came back above the clouds, time started again.

Spunky Hanson, in a quiet tone, said they were apparently successful, as the enemy activity on the TOC had ceased, at least temporarily. I was greatly relieved that the Canasta flight got the job done and were all still flying. It was an amazing feat of airmanship. The A-1 guys were all balls. It was not hard to envision those four A-1s ripping through the treetops, in and out of the cloud bases, high-G turns at treetop level, firing away at the TOC and somehow not hitting each other.

By now, the inside of my cockpit windows was getting pretty well covered with my grease pencil notes about what was going on and who all the players were. That was a pretty standard practice for FACs, trying to keep track of what is happening on the ground while managing all aspects of the air support.

The clouds were beginning to break up, revealing much of the Camp. The TOC had a tank on its side adjacent to it, and the trail/road coming up from the river, down by Route 9 (at the Laos border) had two tanks knocked out at about the Camp perimeter. I took pictures of the Camp and the tanks with my Intel Nikon Telephoto. At about this point, 688 had an engine acting up and had to depart for home. I took over the air operation. The A-1s, bless 'em, were still able to loiter and had napalm and 250/500 lb. bombs remaining.

Meanwhile, we had been trying to coordinate a rescue effort from Khe Sanh. First word was that a ground team would not be sent, because the NVA had certainly set up ambushes at advantageous points along the way. It was also stated that a Helo-Assault Evacuation would not be attempted for awhile due to weather conditions. As disappointing as this was to us, it made our course of action clear. We had to conduct a holding action to keep the NVA away from the TOC until help arrived. Perhaps Spunky Hanson 15A and the local troops could fight their way in?

It wasn't long before Spunky Hanson (SH) came up on "Fox Mike" (FM) again, relating that the NVA were back. "They're all over us out there. Give 'em everything you've got," SH said. At this point, he seemed calm and almost resigned to his fate. Initially the fighters were pressing so hard to be effective that after release, the bombs didn't even have time to arm and hit the ground as duds. In one case that may have saved us an A-1. I had aligned myself, coming right "down the chute" behind him on his bomb run. His bomb release was very close to the ground, a dud, which kicked up the dirt. The dirt then briefly swirled behind as the A-1 flew through the dirt plume. If it had gone off, it might have nailed him. The A-1 pilots quickly adjusted and managed to keep the NVA occupied with their remaining ordnance.

I asked SH if they could come out and make a run for it. "We've got badly wounded people down here that can't move, some may even be dead. We're not coming out until you come and get us." We periodically continued our calls for reinforcements and hoped for a helo evacuation task force. It wasn't happening and we were hearing words like it wasn't going to happen for awhile. I couldn't understand what the problem was? It was frustrating!

Meanwhile, Spunky Hanson 15A was having a hell of a time getting the CIDG and Elephant people to move against that machine gun and mortar fire. SH15A, a Sgt Ashley, went back to get a 37MM Recoilless Rifle to bring fires upon the NVA positions. He subsequently knocked out at least two of the NVA gun positions with the weapon. Even then, he and the Bru / Elephant troops were again driven back. At about this time, I noted a green smoke on the Northeast perimeter of the Camp. Even from 500 ft., I couldn't determine its origin. Was it a friendly trying to let me know he was there? Was it the NVA trying to spoof me so I wouldn't bomb him/them? I never did figure that one out, but elected not to bomb that area unless I determined it to be the enemy, or absolutely had to.

Hobo 01 and 02 then arrived to replace the Canasta Flight. I had them work on the West side of the compound, around the TOC with CBU (cluster bombs), napalm and strafe. They did a terrific job, but the NVA were still not ready to back off.

At this point, my own front engine overheated, coughing and sputtering from being run at full throttle for hours. That really caught me in the gut. I could just see a forced landing among the NVA down there, after beating them up all morning. Not good!

Major John Seats, another Covey FAC (Bruce Goodhue I believe) took over for me and continued the holding action, while waiting for the reinforcements we assumed would be coming sometime soon. The engine continued to shudder and sputter, but held together well enough to climb out of the area enroute to Danang.

The landing was uneventful, and I proceeded directly to the Intelligence debriefing room where I was told to call directly to Headquarters 7th Air Force in Saigon. A Colonel answered the phone and began the debriefing. When I mentioned tanks, he fired off and as much as called Captain Rushforth a liar or maybe just mistaken? After all we had been reporting that day and for weeks prior, I thought it incredible that he was questioning me like this. He was so adamant I became adversarial in tone, if not in words, and described the vehicles as "ya know, they have tracks on both sides, this thing that looked just like a turret on top, with a big long thing sticking out of it (like maybe a big gun)!?" Not only that, I was only 500ft. above them. To my amazement, he still wasn't buying it? I played my Ace of Spades -- "I have pictures!" "Pictures," he shouted! You get them right over to the photo lab and we'll divert a plane to pick them up immediately! I did, and he did, like within the hour. I'm sure the pictures were great on the briefing circuit (they came out well), but we never heard about them again.

Note: So far, the most comprehensive account I have read, of what happened on the ground during this battle is "The Night of the Silver Stars," by William R. Phillips, published in 1997 as part of the Naval Institute Special Warfare Series. It was indeed a night of heroism and gallantry. Among decorations the defenders received: a Medal of Honor, a Distinguished Service Cross, 19 Silver Stars and 3 Bronze Stars with "V" for valor as well as numerous other awards and decorations.

8 February, 1968: Hill 64, Alpha 1 Firefight and day after Lang Vei:

These are the thoughts and experiences recorded on 8 February, the day after the Lang Vei Battle. Back in my quarters at 2200, after a full day at Khe Sanh, then debriefings and planning.

0550: It was hard getting up. The bed (eat your heart out guys) really felt good. Got mission briefing for the KS area and things had apparently gotten quiet. The expectation was that the NVA were repositioning for another direct assault in strength, on Khe Sanh. The weather at Danang, enroute and on the Khe Sanh plateau was poor. At Personal Equipment, Scottie, was in rough shape, really bleary eyed. He'd been up for about 24 hours. I had some maintenance problems, but pressed on. Aircraft #331 was really in pretty good shape. (Note: this is the O-2 currently on display at the USAF Air Museum at Wright Patterson AFB.)

0645: Take off and climb enroute was all weather until on top at 10,000 feet. Using the same procedure as yesterday, I went out into the flatlands in Laos so I could let down through the clouds without hitting anything. I broke out of the clouds at about 1000 feet above the terrain, found Route 9, and followed it back toward Lang Vei. Joe Johnson, Covey 251, was in the area ahead of me and we began to coordinate areas to Recce so we wouldn't be hitting each other in the low clouds.

Lang Vei appeared to be abandoned. There were several hundred refugees on Route 9 between Khe Sanh City and Lang Vei, headed West? Guess they know where the action will be. The Marines didn't know who they were and were seriously thinking of putting artillery on them. I had to make sure - low pass on the tree tops - ooops! Damn trees all around me, zipping by the wings. The tops were defoliated and I hadn't seen them - very tall. The refugees were mainly women & children carrying belongings, etc. - old men, some younger. That sure tore at me. Those poor people just don't know where to go - getting it from both sides, one way or another. So - so sad! I felt as though I could actually see it on their faces.

Garden Valley 14 Actual at Khe Sanh called - need air to hit mortar and rocket positions just WSW, off the runway, on the ridgeline. Joe Johnson, Covey 251, went out to the West, along Route 9 at about the border to escort some fighters into the area through the cloud layers. We got Canasta 403, a flight of 4 A-1Hs (Navy). They were loaded with bombs (250lb & 500lb) and 20MM strafe. After pre -briefing the fighters, and discussing tactics, I marked the ridgeline targets with one of my 2.75" "Willie Pete" (white phosphorous) rockets and cleared them in "hot." We quickly got two secondary explosions indicating that the bombs had indeed found worthy targets. However, at this point, Garden Valley 14 Actual asked us to hold off on the airstrike and to my amazement, briefed me on a firefight on a nearby hill last night.

HILL 64: Garden Valley 14 Actual described the hill and events as they knew them. The hill wasn't apparent on my map, but there was no doubt that there was still a firefight of some sort going on just to my South. The NVA assaulted the hill in force during the night (mortars, rockets and ground assault) and there was ferocious hand to hand combat as the night wore on. The main base supported the marines in the hilltop defensive positions with direct fire on the East face of the hill (toward the main base) from heavy weapons. However, the NVA simply moved to the back side of the hill to continue the assault.

Garden Valley 14 Actual had not talked to the defenders for some time. Apparently their radios were destroyed or lost in the battle. GV14A said " We don't know what is going on up there. We don't know if our guys are still defending in the trenches, or whether they were driven out of the trenches and are trying to get back in?" My immediate reaction was "How come you didn't tell me this sooner? Here we were dropping bombs on a ridgeline, when we had nearby troops in contact?" Couldn't dwell on that. Had to get busy.

I decided that the only way to sort out who was where, was to make a low pass and look in the trenches. From about 1500 feet, I could see explosions and tracers on the hill, but not much more. I planned to get that little sucker going as fast as I could, in a dive from the base side of the Hill where there were fewer NVA. I dove, at full power, on the Eastern base of the hill, then snapped it up over the defensive trench lines in about 90 degrees of bank at about 150-200 feet. As I flashed over the trenches at about 230 knots I saw troops in hand to hand combat, grenades going off in the trenches, and about a grand total of 60 troops. The NVA were caught off guard by the pass, but hosed me down real good anyway. As I dove down the opposite side of the hill I thought, "how do I get back to altitude with this little thing without giving the bad guys a great tail shot at me hanging on a sky hook? I flew away for a while, dodging trees, then began my climb while I tried to digest what I had seen.

The predominance of the guys in the trenches were wearing flak vests, and a number had on US style helmets. "That's it!" The good guys are still dukeing it out in the trenches with the bad guys. I notified GV14A of my conclusions and told them we were going to start putting the fighters on the exterior of the hill and its North and West approaches. I briefed the A-1s on the situation and what we were going to do about it. I had them come in from the North to strafe the bases of the hill and work the strafe up the hill toward the trench lines. These guys really got down in the weeds for this one, so they could see the whites of their eyes. The A-1s looked beautiful, terrific, skimming through the treetops, blazing away. Sure wish I had one of them. Next it was the bombs in the trees and brush along the Western base of the hill. Seemed like this suppressed the NVA for awhile, but they were soon up and at it again. I know we got a mess of 'em, but they were still ready to join the fight.

We had put in an emergency request for prop aircraft that could operate in these mountains, ridges, valleys in this weather. The A-1s were always preferred, because they could carry so much ordnance and loiter for 4 hours or so (depending upon how far they had to travel). Joe Johnson, again went West to rendezvous and escort them back to the battle area. However, we were getting short on fuel.

Bruce Goodhue, Covey 226, arrived and took over air support for the Hill. He had some A-26s en-route (twin engine, WWII, Korea vintage). They are also great for close air support, working close in bad weather, and being able to hang around for awhile.

As Joe Johnson and I were preparing to leave, we spotted some troops in the open on the backside of the hill headed for the adjacent ridge to the West. With great satisfaction we both unloaded 27, 2.75" white phosphorous rockets on them. We were on target, but had to RTB (Return to Base) due to lack of fuel, and did not get a good assessment of the situation after our attack.

En-route Danang: I get a crazy feeling flying around watching those poor guys in the trenches getting blown up. How would I feel if I was down there. Hard to think about. Got a touch of that invincibility complex again too - I was awful low and they were shooting like hell. I'd have given anything for a mini -gun. I was about fired up enough to strafe with my M-16 out the cockpit window. Maybe we shoulda gone to Dong Ha for a load of HE rockets from the Army guys? Hell! For awhile there we were about the only ones that could fly in that weather (500'-1000' overcast, scattered to broken scud from 500' to 1700').

Had trouble letting down into Danang for landing. The base was shrouded in a thick overcast. Their radar was overloaded, so I had "Panama" GCI Radar vector me down over the South China Sea. Broke out of the clouds at about 500' above the water. Hmmm! An aircraft Carrier right over there! If I had come through the clouds a little further to the left, I might have made a real mess. Really had to piss bad - went right there on the O-2 maintenance ramp.

Called the Tac Air Control Center to debrief, got something to eat and went back to Intel for a detailed debrief for the rest of the troops. My pictures of the tanks at Lang Vei yesterday came out very well and are a great hit on the briefing circuit. Blah!

Yesterday, Spunky Hanson 15A, a Sgt Ashley, was killed on the 5th assault to rescue the troops in the TOC at Lang Vei. There were more than 9 guys rescued, not sure exactly. Tony Sazanovics was the FAC in charge for the chopper evac, yesterday afternoon. He did a hell of a job. They got the crap shot out of them, but got all but one of the troops out? They also got some CIDG and Elephant people out, though I understand it was ugly. Initially the Helos couldn't take off because they were overweight with people hanging on the skids. Had to knock (shoot?) some off or lose the whole mission and get everyone killed.

During all this Tony Sazanovics was contacted by a Special Ops troop who had apparently been evading after the Camp was overrun. His call sign was "Spunky Hanson 28 Bravo." SH28B came out of the trees at the old Lang Vei Camp to where Tony could see him. The Helo Evac force was already fully (over) loaded and pulling out to head for Khe Sanh. It became apparent that the Helos were out of the picture and Tony was preparing to land on the torn up, bombed out, airstrip at the old Camp. However, a large number of NVA arrived first and chased SH28B back into the trees and brush. Tony related that it looked like a lot of shooting during the chase. Last transmission from SH28B was "They're coming up from the other side of the strip." No way SH28B will come out of that alive. If Tony had tried to land for SH28B, it would have been nothing short of a miracle if they made it off the ground. The front prop had only 10" clearance and the ground was too irregular. It would have caught in the dirt and debris.

Meanwhile, today on the hill West of Khe Sanh, Bruce Goodhue worked some more A-1s (Canasta flight), A-26s (Nimrods) and T-28s (Zorro) on the NVA around the hill. They did a great job. When it was over, the good guys were able to get up, clear the outpost, and walk off the hill. After discussions with the relief force from the main base, they went up and reoccupied the hill. After the battle, first glance showed about 50 NVA bodies, plus plenty of captured weapons. [Understand that later a total of 150 NVA bodies were found, along with a number of machine guns, etc.]

Fingerpaint 50 (Marine FAC) did trap 2 tanks in the river Southwest of Lang Vei, and Covey 672 had some "tracked vehicles" pinned down near "Elephant." Hope this weather breaks soon. If it does, we could really clean their clock.

POSTLOG: At the KSV Reunion in San Diego - September, 2000

So here I am, with a lump in my throat and a tear in my eye, shaking hands with Spunky Hanson 28 Bravo - after all these years. His name is Dennis Thompson. I have since found out that he was captured and escaped several times during the next few days. He was a rather belligerent cuss and not amenable to being a prisoner. For this, he got lots of broken bones and worse. After a nightmarish 6 month trek to Hanoi, he was incarcerated with the other POWs, until the end of the war.

Dennis is a retired Command Sergeant Major of the Special Operations Command and, wouldn't ya' know, he was the featured speaker at our KSV Reunion Banquet. We've gotten a lot better acquainted since then. Dennis has a line on all the survivors of the Lang Vei Battle and some of us who supported in one way or another. We plan to meet this September in Las Vegas.

On the other hand, we have been trying very hard to find Tony Sazanovics, the FAC who was flying over Dennis when he was captured. No luck yet. We'd also like to find that "Covey 688," from Ubon, who was there at Lang Vei that morning.

So why do I like Reunions? Gee, hard to figger out! This is only one story.

Note: For those that haven't read it, the best account I've found of the Battle for Hill 64, on 8 February 1968, is in Chapter 16 of Eric Hammel's book, "KHE SANH, Siege in the Clouds." It was only during the reading of this book that I began to realize that the 8 February, 1968 entry in my diary was about "Alpha-1" in this Battle.

Battle for Lang Vei Special Forces Camp, RVN Survivors' Reunion, Denver Colorado, In Conjunction with the Khe Sanh Veterans' Reunion, 21-23 July 2009.

SUMMARY/OVERVIEW:

This is an account of the "Reunion" of U.S. Forces involved in the Battle for the Lang Vei Special Forces Camp on 6-7 February, 2009. A main feature of this "Reunion" is that although some attendees had fought together over 40 years ago, they had never met personally. In particular, the A-1 Skyraider pilots had never met any of the people they supported and worked with in that battle. There was an initial Reunion of many involved in the battle in Las Vegas in 2004. Most of the Special Forces survivors attended, as well as a few who provided Forward Air Control (FAC), Helo assault and artillery support. As at this second Reunion, this account begins with some summary and background information on Lang Vei and the forces that fought in that Battle. This provides an initial idea of who was at the Reunion.

Next, there is some information on how the Reunion actually happened. The Reunion attendees then related their experiences during the battle in the following order: A briefing on the history of the area and the events leading up to the current war was given by Jay Stone, the Air Intelligence Officer from VA-25 (the A-1 Squadron aboard the carrier, "Coral Sea"); The Special Forces in the ground battle, The Forward Air Controllers (FACs) who directed the air support, the A-1 Skyraider pilots that provided direct air support, the transition part of the battle as the survivors repositioned for rescue, and the helo rescue assault team that actually pulled survivors of the battle out of Lang Vei. Note: In this account, of the Battle at the Reunion, there is really no attempt to rewrite the book on the Battle for Lang Vei in any detail. That would be impossible. This article is simply to characterize the Reunion and what it meant to those that attended. Similarly, only a few of those who fought in the Battle are mentioned by name. The real (7 hours of) detail of the Battle related by the Reunion attendees, has been captured on a set of DVDs that will be provided to veterans of the Battle. Each individual story told at the Reunion was remarkable, even spell -binding.

BACKGROUND:

In January, 1968, the Lang Vei Special Forces Camp, on the Laos border West of Khe Sanh, was preparing for a pending assault by North Vietnamese (NVA) troops. It was seen as potentially the beginning of the major NVA assault of the Khe Sanh "Siege" in early 1968. Lang Vei was defended by 24 Special Forces and several hundred indigenous personnel. That assault began late at night on 6 February 1968 and lasted for about 20 hours. The assault was conducted by a very large force of NVA regulars, led by about a dozen NVA PT 76 (Russian built) tanks. It was the first time the NVA used tanks in the Vietnam War. They ultimately overwhelmed the troops in the camp. This account provides some brief highlights of how portions of that battle were recounted at the Reunion by the men that fought in it.

THE SECOND LANG VEI REUNION, July 2009:

After the first Reunion in 2004 it seemed that another would eventually happen, but it wasn't really coming together until, in early 2008, a "Skyraider" pilot named "Speed" Ritzman, found the website http://www.langvei.com/, established by (Sgt.) Rich Allen, one of the Lang Vei vets. In subsequent emails it became clear that the Skyraider pilots of VA-25, from the carrier, "Coral Sea" were indeed the A-1 support provided to Lang Vei all day on 7 Feb 09. Eventually it evolved to a proposed Reunion associated with the Khe Sanh Vets (KSV) Reunion in Denver during July 2009.

Tom Eichler, the KSV Association President, made an offer we couldn't refuse. The Association would host the Lang Vei Reunion during the few days prior to most Khe Sanh Vets arrival. The Lang Vei Reunion would likely not have happened if Tom hadn't offered KSV Association hosting of the room, the set ups, the lunch, the video recording (Msgt Dave Meyer) of the several hours of discussion and a photographer (Sid Patricio) to capture some still photos of the event - even the name tag registrations for which Tom is so well known. The Lang Vei troops were deeply and uniformly grateful for this wonderful, heart warming support.

Attendees:

In the end, many, but not all Lang Vei Vets were able to attend. Five Special Forces survivors (2 of which had been POWs), Two O-2, Forward Air Controllers (FACs), 7 A-1 Skyraider pilots (one of which had been a POW) and their Intel Officer, plus 5 or the Helo "Hatchett" force that conducted the rescue assault in the late afternoon of 7 Feb 09. That totals 20 vets performing various air and ground missions during the Lang Vei Battle.

THE GROUND TROOPS PERSPECTIVE (from 5 USSF Survivors):

Weather: Overcast clouds near the surface, and layered up to about 10,000 feet. The clouds over the battle, were prohibitive for initial close air support. It was only after about an hour of daylight that they began to slowly disperse.

The Battle began late at night on 6 Feb 09, when tracked vehicles were heard and subsequently tanks were discovered "in the wire," followed by NVA assault forces. Defenses were quickly breached and the battle ensued within the Camp. There were problems with "Light Anti-Tank weapons (LAWS)" that often misfired and/or were ineffective at stopping the tanks. As the Battle progressed, the cohesion of the Camp defenses was fractured and the USSF and indigenous troops ended up providing individual pockets of resistance that apparently confused and even delayed subsequent NVA ground operations. In the end, while some friendly troops became holed up in the Tactical Operations Center (TOC) bunker, others were separated and evading on the Camp perimeter. Meanwhile, several of the USSF and a number of indigenous troops were located outside the Battle at the main Camp in the nearby "Old Lang Vei Camp." After daylight, they made a total of 5 assaults throughout the day of 7 Feb in an attempt to rescue those that were trapped in the TOC. Sfc. Eugene Ashley was subsequently posthumously awarded the "Medal of Honor" for his part in that action. This was one of three major thrusts of the ground battle after the Camp had been overrun. 1. The friendly troops trapped in the TOC 2. The troops from Old Lang Vei trying to rescue them. 3. USSF troops and other "friendlies," evading in and about the perimeter of the main Camp. There were US Special Forces troops from each of these portions of the battle present at the Reunion to relate their part of the story.

The most desperate situation was in the (mostly underground) TOC bunker where, through the early morning, the NVA were swarming like ants at all points of access, with: grenades, small arms fire, explosives, gas, the works.

FAC - AIR SUPPORT PERSPECTIVE (from 2 FACs that were there):

The two FACs at the Reunion each supported air ops at Lang Vei, for up to 3 hours. Covey 252 for most of the morning, starting at dawn, and Covey 685, in the late afternoon leading up to the rescue assault at about 1700. The on scene FAC, directing air ops at dawn, was Covey 688, along with a "Canasta Fight" of A-1 Skyraiders. Covey 688 was in contact with the friendly forces in the TOC, when (Sp4c) Frank Dooms radioed that the aircraft must attack the NVA on the TOC right away or they were finished. Covey 252, an attendee at the Reunion, was also flying overhead and captured some telling pictures of this part of the battle. At that point, Covey 688 led the Canasta flight (led by "Zip Rausa") down into the lower clouds to accomplish this task. While in and out of the clouds at tree top level, the A-1s strafed the NVA forces until they withdrew. This was a particularly impressive close air support feat!

Since, for a number of reasons, there was no immediate prospect of a rescue operation, the entire air support operation for the rest of the day was to shoot up and bomb the NVA to keep them away from the TOC until there was a prospect of rescue forces arrival. It was also to support the several assaults by the troops from the "Old Camp" that unsuccessfully attempted to reach the TOC to evacuate the troops trapped there. Throughout this period, it was not known in the TOC, that there were additional USSF survivors of the battle evading outside the TOC.

CANASTA FLIGHTS - A-1s FROM THE CORAL SEA: (7 PILOTS and the Squadron Intel Officer attended the Reunion)

This portion of the Reunion was led off with special recognition of "Speed" Ritzman, the A-1 pilot who, with great anticipation, helped initiate the process for, and coordination of the Reunion. He passed away on 16 June, just prior to the Reunion.

The A-1s from the Coral Sea were providing the primary air support for the Lang Vei battle, starting at about day break on 7 February, 1968.

Initially it was Zip Rausa , with his flight's first attack on the NVA besieging the TOC, then a scheduled progression of A-1s from the "Coral Sea" throughout the day. There were also a few other fighter aircraft dispersed throughout the rest of the day. During this part of the battle, the A-1s responded to FAC directions by chasing the NVA away from the TOC and by supporting the assault force from "Old Lang Vei," attempting to relieve the TOC. When the troops trapped in the TOC decided to make their move to escape (rather than spend another night in the TOC), the A-1s were for the most part out of ammunition, or "Winchester" as fighter pilots often refer to it. That being the case, the A-1s were put into the mode of making "dry runs" to chase off the NVA as the troops from the TOC tried to make their way to "Old Lang Vei" to rendezvous with the Helo rescue "hatchett" force.

TRANSITION TO THE RESCUE EFFORT:

In later afternoon, when HHQ suggested that the troops in the TOC might need to remain there for another night, Lt Longgrear, the senior officer in the TOC, emotionally stated with lots of expletives, that they are not going to do that. They are coming out (of the TOC) NOW!

One of the very memorable moments of the Reunion is when Paul Longgrear, the first to exit the TOC, related making eye contact with an A-1 pilot, Ron Post, that was just then passing by the TOC entrance, in a bank at ground level. Paul said that at the moment, he "knew" they were going to make it. Just after that, Paul experienced another life changing event that was virtually spellbinding to those present. Due to his wounds and exhaustion, he had fallen and was having trouble getting moving again. Only Paul can tell it, but he had an encounter with GOD, in which, he was twice asked, "What are you going to do now Paul?" Overcoming paralyzing fear, Paul got up and continued. At the time, he took note that the NVA on both sides of the route were just watching, not shooting!? Fear of the A-1s? Intervention? Professional respect? All of that? Who knows?

THE HELO FORCE RESCUE ASSAULT (5 Rescue force personnel attended):

After much procrastination, maybe even confusion at senior staff levels, a grass roots "helo force" pulled itself together for the rescue assault. Three USSF SOG helo crewmembers from FOB 3 at Khe Sanh and 2 USMC crewmembers from VMO-6 recounted their rescue attempt. One pilot reflected that as they made their approach to land for the pickup, a young NVA troop stepped out, right under their nose and sprayed them with a clip from his AK -47. Fortunately, none of the hits were vital and they pulled the helo out of what would certainly have been their "final landing."

The rescue itself was heart rending. Although the surviving USSF troops were loaded on the helos, the indigenous troops swarmed the helos and grabbed anything they could to survive. The helicopters were all overloaded and unable to take off as the NVA ground fire increased in intensity. The aircraft were taking many hits. To save the mission, those hanging on to the helos had to be beaten, even shot off the skids.

Dennis Thompson, one of the troops who had been evading outside the TOC almost made it to the rescue helos. He was perhaps within 60 feet of the helo when a force of fresh NVA troops arrived, chasing him away, to be captured later and held as a POW in Hanoi. Dennis' recollection of the rescue force departure creates quite a mental image: The overloaded helos, trying to become airborne and get away from the ground fire were thrashing through the trees and brush like wild animals. Stuff was flying off the rotors all over the place. Then bodies were falling like rain.

REUNION WRAP UP:

The proceedings of the Reunion were indeed captured in 7 hours of video and numerous still photos. These will be provided to Lang Vei vets as soon as they are finalized into a set of 3 DVDs.

The Reunion was very meaningful to attendees. Typical comments were:

"As one of the VA-25 guys present at the reunion I must tell you it was a life changing event. Hearing in detail the ordeal the USSF men had to deal with is the stuff of legend. The fact that they were so beholden to the Spads for helping clear their way to freedom made all of us feel very humble and very proud. I can't speak for all the Canastas but for me the reunion was a singular event which I, and my family, will never forget. "

"I have nothing but admiration and respect to everyone that participated in the battle for Lang Vei. I just wish we could have had this meeting at Lang Vei on or about 10 Feb 68. Thanks to each of you that came. You are my heroes."

As William Phillips, in his book "The Battle of Lang Vei -- The Night of the Silver Stars" related: "The United States Army expressed its thanks for a job well done during the Battle. Every one of the Special Forces present received an award for valor. The 24 Green Berets received one Medal of Honor, one Distinguished Service Cross, nineteen Silver Stars, and Three Bronze Stars with Combat V. The rescue force from MACV-SOG at FOB-3 received recognition for their heroism with one Distinguished Service Cross, Two Silver Stars, seven Bronze Stars with Combat V and two army Commendation Medals with Combat V.

The DVDs on which the entire Reunion was captured are in the final stages of editing, by Msgt Dave Meyer, USMC, Retired, who filmed the entire days activities. They will be distributed to veterans of the Battle.

ED NOTE: Toby Rushforth sent the following information from Lt Commander William "Speed" Ritzman which was posted on Rich Allen's Lang Vei Website. Speed had a lot to do with the planning of the Lang Vei Reunion prior to his death on 16 June 2009, just 5 weeks before the Denver Reunion.

William H. Ritzmann, Jr. Lieutenant Commander, USN(Ret), for which "thank you" is far insufficient.... If it wasn't for the air support from these fine men, I would not be typing this today. (RA)

Last November, Attack Squadron 25, (VA-25), United States Navy, held a reunion in Pensacola, Florida. We, the veterans of the squadron, are under the impression that VA-25, (now re-designated VFA-25), has the longest continuous service of any squadron serving aboard Aircraft Carriers in the Navy today. The history of the squadron may be found at; http://www.fistofthefleet.org/

First, although I ventured into "Harms Way" periodically, ("it was my job"), I always considered; Medics/Corpsman, Rescue Helo Pilots and Crewmen, Special Forces/Seals, and Forward Air Controllers on a higher rung of the "Ladder of Risk" than I ever was. Again, thank you for your service to our country.

Secondly, the research of the on-line documentation, (including the post war testimony of the North Vietnamese), that we did to prepare our presentation at last Novembers Reunion, persuaded some of us that the Battle of Lang Vei was arguably as pivotal as say, the Battle of the Bulge in WWII. Therefore, we are kind of proud we were able to do what we were trained for in support of your efforts.

Sadly, I do not have any photos of the Lang Vei area on the battle day. Nor do I think any of my squadron mates had any time to snap any pics either. The type of runs we made under the overcast were too much of a handful to permit me the use of a camera. Due to the number of assets that were there when I arrived, I was directed to make a single pass, and salvo my two Mk 117's and six Mk71's "on the bunker". I did however, notice two of the tanks that were destroyed and numerous bodies on the ground. I could not tell whether those bodies were friendly, enemy, or alive during my one pass.

I have attached a pic, "NL405onCVA43". I believe it was taken to recognize the young man, Ltjg. Ted Hill, as the pilot of the last A-1 Skyraider attack mission in the U.S. Navy. After his mission on February 20, 1968, all other Close Air Support and Rescue Combat Air Patrol missions were flown by the USAF Sandy Skyraiders. A few days later, the Coral Sea and its Air Wing departed for home via The Sea of Japan to "show the flag" during the USS Pueblo incident.

The picture is from the USS Coral Sea, CVA-43, taken circa February 21, 1968. The occasion was a presentation to Ltjg. Ted Hill, for piloting the final combat mission of VA-25, in the last U.S Navy, A-1H/J Skyraider, Canasta 405, Bureau (Serial) Number 135300. The pic includes all the VA-25 squadron pilots and the other officers in the squadron.

Presenting the award to Ltjg. Ted Hill, (6-4,1500), (standing center), are (standing left), Cdr. Cliff Church, CO VA-25, (3-1-0945) and (standing right), Capt Bill Shawcross CO, USS Coral Sea, CVA-43.

In the picture I have been able to identify the fourteen squadron pilots who flew in the six missions in support of the battle. I've italicized the numbers of their flight, the position in that flight and a time. (ie. "(1-2-0100)", indicates the first flight - wing position - approximate time each flight came under the FAC's control). The listing below, identifies each pilot that flew in our six support missions.

Standing in same order, CDR Stu Skelton, XO, (6-1-1500), Lt. Zip Rausa, (1-1-0730), Ltjg. Dale Pellot, (2-2-0930), Lcdr Speed Ritzmann, (4-1-1215), Ltjg. Larry Gardiner, (1-2-0730), Ltjg. Chuck Thom, (2-1-0930), Lcdr. Ron Bolt, (6-3-1500), Lcdr. Jack McDermott, and Ltjg Jay Stone. Missing from the photo is Lt. Jack Jordan, (6-2-1500).

As an aside, that airplane was in the flight that scored the first air-to-air cannon kill of a North Vietnamese MiG in June of 1965. Since Canasta 405, (Bureau Number 135300), flew the last Skyraider attack mission, it was retired and now sits in the Museum of Naval Aviation in Pensacola. (They still allow us that flew her to climb into the cockpit when we visit.)

Toby, It would appear from your e-mail that Bruce Marcus and I checked in with the FAC about 1215, which would be after you departed at 1100. It's doubtful we shared air space with you then. My log book indicates I flew Canasta 405 in the pic above on that mission.

THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO HONORS THE KHE SANH VETERANS WITH A SCENIC HISTORICAL MARKER LISTING THOSE SONS FROM NEW MEXICO WHO PERISHED, DURING THE BATTLE OF KHE SANH, DURING THE VIETNAM WAR. ARTICLE ON PAGES 40-43

FROM THE DESK OF THE EDITOR

Due to the numerous changes in the Khe Sanh Veterans Unit Directory, it was necessary to upgrade and print Edition # 4. I sent out notifications asking the membership to complete a new personal history form, and if possible donate $ 5.00 for printing & Postage.

The response was outstanding, not only were there sufficient funds to print & mail the Directory, I was also able to Print & Send out Issue # 75 of Red Clay. In addition we were able to purchase numerous, outstanding new items for our PX. Your generosity is beyond belief. I want to personally thank each and every member whether you sent the minimum $ 5.00 or Hundreds of dollars which some did.

I also went through my data base and wrote a memo to over 1,500 members who had kind of dropped out of sight in the last 6 years. Through this effort we now have 500 more current active members. The new Directory should be at this point about 85 % accurate, and I am still working with a goal of over 90% Accuracy. The active membership is now at 65%, and still growing. (Not Bad for a Bunch of Old Farts.)

REUNION COMMITTEE

Don't look now, but the Khe Sanh Veterans 2010 Reunion in San Antonio Texas, is right around the corner. Please try to get your registration forms in ASAP. It makes it a little easier on the committee who have to plan events which require the amount of attendees be known in advance.

It is a great Hotel, very military friendly, and within walking distance of almost every sight San Antonio has to offer. We have a FREE Luau planned for Friday night, so bring your Hawaiian outfits. They have a Straw Hut outdoor venue which fits the event to a Tee.

Please call the Hotel ASAP and make your reservations. Remember, you can always cancel if something comes up at the last minute. With all the little notes members have been sending with their yearly dues, it looks like we are going a have a large attendance this year.

FROM THE DESK OF THE VP

Due to the membership's outstanding support of our PX, and generosity with their contributions we have been able to design and purchase many new items for the PX. We have strived to produce high quality, affordable items. All the items we have designed for are members, Navy, Marines, Army & Air Force, our one of a kind, manufactured strictly for Khe Sanh Veterans.

We are also contemplating purchasing Hats Like the American Legion & MCL wear. They would have a new KSV Logo Embroidered on one side and the newly designed Branch of Service Pin on the other. Our supplier has agreed to manufacture Pins designating the various reunions each member has attended. We need advice, and recommendations for this idea so please contact John Pessoni At 732-948-9803, or Tom Eichler 773-625-2101.

Remembering
Bob Arrotta &Terry Smith

Like many of my Khe Sanh brothers, I was shocked and saddened by the death of Bob Arrotta. My friendship with Bob was separated by a gap of over thirty years. (I know a lot of you knew him as Bobby, but I met him as Bob, so that's what I continued to call him and will do so here.) We shared a bunker on Hill 881 South from February 10, 1968, until we rotated off the Hill on April 15. I got to know Bob pretty well during that time, but we lost track of each other, because shortly after we got to Quang Tri I was medevaced to the naval hospital in Guam. Needless to say, I was floored several years back when I got a phone call from Bob. He had tracked me down through the Khe Sanh Vets Directory. He wanted to tell me about his then recent return to the Khe Sanh and Hill 881 with Dennis Mannion, Paul Knight, and Glenn Prentice. We had a nice long talk and caught up on what had happened to us after we left Vietnam. Bob told me about the cancer that eventually took his life, but he downplayed its seriousness then, and every time we talked after that first call.

As a result of that call, Bob sent me the footage he shot on the trip to Vietnam along with the raw footage of what would become the fine documentary of the trip produced by Dennis's former student David Kneiss. We also exchanged photographs of our time together at Khe Sanh and on 881. When we last talked, about ten months ago, Bob told me that he was working on an article for Red Clay about the day Terry Smith was killed in an LZ on 881. We talked about what we remembered about that day, and Bob told me that he would send me the story for any editing I felt was necessary. That was the last time that we spoke, and I regret the number of times I put off a phone call to see how he was doing and how the story was coming. I don't know what Bob's finished piece would look like, but I want to honor him by saying what I can about Terry and the day he died. I have puzzled over how to do this because so much of my experience up to the day Terry died is intertwined with both men. The most logical approach, I decided, is the brief narrative that follows.

When I arrived on 881, I was fortunate enough to be placed in a bunker with Bob and a wireman named Higgins, if I ever knew his first name I forgot it long ago. I believe that Terry Smith also lived in that bunker; at least he spent a lot of time there in the short time I knew him. My good fortune wasn't just related to the good companions I lucked upon. It was also related to the bunker itself, which was palatial by the housing norms on the hill. Many of the men on 881 lived in "bunny holes" carved into the sides of the trench that circled the hill. (Some good pictures of the bunny holes can be found on the Hill 881 Warriors website: http://www.hmm-364.org/warriors.html.)

Forty-plus years have clouded my memory, but I believe that I was sent up to 881 to take over for Terry while he went on R&R. Terry was the first person I encountered on my arrival because he was working the LZ the day I arrived. When I was pushed out of the door of the UH-34 by the crew chief, I was carrying two batteries for the PRC-41 Bob was using in directing close air support, and I was also carrying my willy-peter bag. My rucksack carried four batteries for the PRC-25 used by Terry. When I was exiting the chopper, someone on a stretcher was being shoved into the chopper. I was trying to maintain my balance and turn back to look into the chopper, which was already lifting off, when Terry shoved me into a shallow trench in the LZ and told me to stay down. He jumped into the trench in front of me. I soon saw why when a couple of mortar rounds landed in the LZ. Over the next few days, Terry and Bob showed me how to estimate the time between a chopper landing in one of the three LZs on the hill, and mortar rounds landing in the LZ. This was an important skill because the sound of the incoming chopper was often used by the NVA to hide the sound of a tube popping.

I spent my first nine days on the hill mostly shadowing Terry or sitting on the battalion radio net in the COC. Two important skills Terry taught me related to hooking up the cargo nets that had brought food and material up to the hill, and which needed to be returned for future use. First, he showed me how to keep from getting tangled up in the nets and lifted off with them. Next, he taught me how to use the shoulder of my flak jacket to cancel out the static electricity that could knock me on my ass when the metal rings of the cargo net hit the cargo hook on the chopper.

The few times that we had the chance to sit around and shoot the bull, Terry told me about his home in Tennessee, his sister, his girl, and his upcoming R&R trip to Hawaii to see his girl. During our talks, Terry often sharpened his Bowie knife, which he called his Tennessee toothpick. (Years later, his mother told me that she was disappointed that his knife and some other things were missing from his personal effects. I like to think that it was someone way back in the rear that stole them.)

On February 20th, I was in the bunker finishing up a letter that I started the night before on radio watch. Terry and Bob were working the LZ. I heard a chopper coming in and shortly after that, I heard a mortar round land. Then Bob ran into the bunker and yelled at me to grab my radio and follow him, that Terry had been hit. Terry's Silver Star citation covers the situation better than I can, so I'll repeat it here:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

The President of the United States takes pride in presenting the SILVER STAR MEDAL posthumously to

CORPORAL TERRY L. SMITH

for service as set forth in the following CITATION:

For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidty in action while serving as a radio operator with Company "M", Third Battalion, Twenty-sixth Marines, Third Marine Division, Fleet Marine Force in the Republic of Vietnam. On 20 February 1968, on Hill 881S near Khe Sanh, Corporal Smith observed a Marine helicopter landing in a zone on which he knew North Vietnamese Army gunners had registered heavy mortars. He realized that the aircraft would almost certainly be destroyed if it remained in the landing zone, and attempted unsuccessfully to contact the pilot by radio. Aware that the enemy rounds were probably already on the way, he restrained a Marine junior to him from going out on to the zone, and leaving the safety of his bunker, ran across the open ground signaling manually to the helicopter crew to take off immediately. As the helicopter took off and before Corporal Smith could reach cover, he was fatally wounded by mortar fragments, gallantly sacrificing his life so that the crew might live. By his extraordinary courage in the face of over whelming odds, his uncommon concern for others, and his self sacrificing efforts, Corporal Smith reflected great credit upon himself and upheld the highest traditions of the Marine Corps and the United States Naval Service.

For the President,
J. William Middendorf
Secretary of the Navy

I helped to put Terry on the chopper. Although I had been in country since late November, Terry was the first person I had seen who had been seriously wounded. As we were loading him into the chopper, all I could think of was how colorless he seemed to be. He died before reaching the combat base.

After Terry's death, I spent most of my time working the LZs under Bob's guidance and hauling the PRC-41 around the hill for him and learning the trade of close-air support. I had gone to Air and Naval Gunfire School in Hawaii before starting my tour in Vietnam. I learned the theory of close air support there, but Bob taught me the reality of close-air support in a combat zone. When he felt that I was ready, he let me call in some close-air missions while standing next to him.

I'm not sure what Bob had in mind for his article on Terry, but Terry's death affected us both deeply. Bob was the Marine whose life was saved by Terry, and I'm sure that he had some survivor's guilt. For me, Terry was the first person that I really knew who was killed in Vietnam, and his was the first body I really saw. I know that when we talked about that day we talked around it more than about it. I think that maybe Bob felt that if he could get it down on paper it would help us both rest a little easier.

I haven't said much about Bob's service on the hill, but much has already been said about that on the Khe Sanh Vet's website. Also, the Warriors of Hill 881 site mentioned above has a lot about Bob there (and also some good pictures). Along with Glenn Prentice, Bob also worked recently with Marine air and ground forces in training sessions and workshops, but that has also been covered on the website. Bob was both proud and a bit embarrassed when the title "mightiest corporal in the world" was hung on him by a reporter covering Hill 881, but those of us who had the honor to serve with him and to know him, understand his true greatness.

Ron Smith

ROBERT ARROTA

Dubbed the "Mightiest Corporal" by Newsweek and his fellow Marines, Robert Arrotta was born on June 22, 1946 and grew up in Bethesda, Maryland. He enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1966. Upon his arrival in Vietnam, Bobby saw action at Con Thien where he witnessed first hand what the North Vietnamese could do in battle. He would later arrive in Khe Sanh on Hill 881S where he served as a forward air controller with India Company, 3rd Battalion, 26th Marines, under the command of Captain Bill Dabney.

Bill Dabney, Colonel USMC (Ret), comments on Robert Arrotta "Cpl." Arrotta had the official tactical call sign of "India 14" which identified him as the close air support (CAS) representative of the company. The troops, in recognition of the tremendous amount of fire power he was capable of calling to bear on the NVA, referred to him as "The Mightiest Corporal in the World." Corporal Arrotta remained our Forward Air Controller (FAC) for the entire Siege, directed about 300 CAS missions, all Supergaggles, and in coordination with the helicopter support team (HST), all medical evacuations. Hell of a Marine! Got end-of-tour Bronze Star. Deserved better. Did captain's job superbly under fire for three months."
Robert Arrotta died on November 7, 2009.

OBIT
ROLAND F. BEHNKE USAF
314TH TAW

Roland F. Behnke, 77, a retired Air Force major who became the president of a plant nursery and chain of gardening centers, died Jan. 16 at his home in the St. Mary's County town of St. Inigoes. He had corticobasal degeneration, a neurological disorder similar to Parkinson's disease. From 1980 until his retirement in 1995, Mr. Behnke was president of the Behnke Nurseries Co., a family-owned chain of gardening centers and flower shops that his parents began in 1930. At its peak in the late 1980s, Behnke's was the largest chain of gardening centers in Maryland, employed more than 200 workers and grossed more than $6 million a year.

It still has outlets in Beltsville and Potomac and a plant-growing facility in Lothian. Roland Frederick Behnke was born in Washington and grew up in Beltsville. Early on, the floral business struggled, and the family lived in a tarpaper shanty without electricity or running water, according to a 1986 Washington Post article. They got by with oil lamps and water drawn from a neighbor's well. After World War II, the nursery expanded and eventually became one of the largest in the country, according to the article.

Mr. Behnke graduated from Beltsville High School in 1950 and joined the Air Force. After several years piloting B-47 bombers, he left the Air Force and graduated from the University of Maryland in 1961 with a bachelor's degree in history. During the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, Mr. Behnke was recalled to active duty. He flew cargo planes during the Vietnam War and stayed in the Air Force until his retirement in 1976. His military decorations included the Silver Star and Distinguished Flying Cross.

While stationed in Puerto Rico, Mr. Behnke built a small plane in his garage. He never flew it but later donated it to the flying club at Laurel High School, according to his family. He was a member of Good Samaritan Lutheran Church in Lexington Park. Survivors include his wife of 52 years, Eleanor Fitter Behnke of St. Inigoes; three children, Jeanne B. Byrnes of Glenn Dale, Mark Behnke of Perry Hall and Carl Behnke of Lafayette, Ind.; and 11 grandchildren

BEHNKE's ACTIONS WHERE HE WAS AWARDED THE SILVER STAR

Per the 1989 Article Airlift to Khe Sanh By John L. Frisbee, Contributing Editor: It definitely was not a day like any other for Howard Dallman and his crew. Khe Sanh will go down in history as a great victory for the isolated, surrounded, and outnumbered Marines who, from late January to early April 1968, defended an outpost some 10 miles from the DMZ in western South Vietnam. It was a victory made possible by air resupply. Of the more than 1,100 missions to Khe Sanh flown by tactical airlift, one of the most remarkable was that of Lt. Col. Howard Dallman and his C-130E crew.

In his monumental 1983 study of tactical airlift in Southeast Asia, Col. Ray Bowers wrote: "Lt. Col. Howard M. Dallman was an experienced pilot who was admired for his personal qualities by the younger officers serving under him." In World War II, Dallman had flown 45 missions as a bomber pilot in Italy before he was shot down on Oct. 23, 1944. The morning of Feb. 5, 1968, Dallman's C-130, assigned to the 345th Tactical Airlift Squadron, left its temporary base at Tuy Hoa for Da Nang, where a load of ammunition and a medical evacuation team awaited.

The weather at Khe Sanh, Dallman's destination about thirty minutes' flight time to the northwest, was forecast to be at minimums, which made landing at the mountain-girded strip a challenge. The first of several unpleasant surprises came as copilot Capt. Roland Behnke checked in with Khe Sanh control. The GCA was out for an indefinite period. Navigator Major Gerald Johnson was confident he could find the runway with an airborne radar approach, though none of the crew had landed there before. Dallman and Behnke started their letdown. At a sweaty 300 feet they broke out of the overcast, the strip directly ahead. Then as the C-130 ground and bucked to a stop, the big bird was hit by a shell that ignited ammunition boxes in the cargo compartment. Johnson and loadmaster SSgt. Wade Green immediately began fighting the fire, assisted by Behnke, who had called the tower for a fire truck, and flight engineer SSgt. Charles Brault. Seventeen tons of ammunition could explode at any moment, closing the runway and flattening the built-up area of Khe Sanh, with many casualties. Dallman began backing the Hercules to a safer area at the far end of the runway, where the five-man crew, with help from the fire truck, finally extinguished the fire and helped offload still smoking ammo boxes.

All was not yet over. As the last pallet of ammunition was unloaded, one of the tires was blown by a sniper's bullet, and a mortar attack bracketed the C-130. Dallman told the crew to leave the plane, which was drawing most of the fire, but every man remained with the aircraft as it was towed for a short distance, then taxied to a maintenance area. There Brault repaired an aircraft jack and managed to change the damaged wheel, all the time under fire from mortars, rockets, artillery, and heavy machine guns. While the wheel was being changed, Dallman agreed to fly a Marine corporal and his out-of-commission bulldozer back to Da Nang. The 'dozer was loaded and the aircraft positioned for takeoff when one engine, which had ingested debris from an exploding mortar round, quit. The 20,000-pound bulldozer and a disappointed corporal were unloaded and Dallman left the bird to get permission for a three-engine takeoff. In the 10 minutes it took to get clearance from Airlift Control Center, Behnke and Brault got the fourth engine started. Dallman sprinted back to the C-130 as Behnke, a qualified aircraft commander, opened the throttles for takeoff.

The Herk was hit again as it took off, but without serious damage. Dallman and his crew had saved a valuable transport plane, delivered a load of ammunition to the surrounded Marines, and prevented major damage to a battered outpost. For dealing heroically with a series of crises that day, Dallman was awarded the Air Force Cross, the first tactical airlift crewman to be so honored. "I was well aware," he said..... that an equal part of the award belonged" to the other four crew members, all of whom received the Silver Star. The tactical airliners lost 122 aircraft and 230 crewmen while supporting US and allied forces in Southeast Asia. Without them, there would have been few successful campaigns in that long, bitter war. Dallman and his crew set an example of teamwork and valor by their determination to complete a mission under circumstances that would have justified abandoning their aircraft and its perilous, but desperately needed cargo. As the Marines at Khe Sanh would have put it, "Semper fi!"

PHINEAS E. SMITH USMC L CO 3/26 KHE SANH VETERAN

Phineas E. Smith, a Santa Rosa youth sports coach and umpire who served in the Marine Corps in the Vietnam War, has died. He was 60.

Smith was a Santa Rosa Stallions football coach and Little League and softball umpire from the late 1980s until recently, said his son, Jordan McGowan-Smith of Santa Rosa.

He enlisted in the Marines in 1967 and was in the 1968 siege at Khe Sanh with his unit, Lima Company, 3rd Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment, said his friend and fellow Vietnam War veteran, Neil Kenny.

He was all heart, said Kenny. He would do anything to help a brother. And he was very proud to be a Marine. Smith died Oct. 30 at his Santa Rosa home from multiple ailments including congestive heart failure and hypertension, Kenny said.

He was buried with full military honors at the Sacramento Valley National Cemetery in Dixon. A memorial service was held at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Santa Rosa Veterans Memorial Hall, 1351 Maple Ave. Smith was born and raised in San Francisco. He graduated from Balboa High School in 1966 and enlisted in the Marines the next year.

In Vietnam, he saw heavy combat and was awarded the Purple Heart for a shrapnel injury, Kenny said. He said Smith also suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder and exposure to Agent Orange, a toxic herbicide used to remove leaves from trees that provided cover for enemy forces.

Smith returned to civilian life in the Bay Area and worked as an operating engineer. In the 1980s, he moved north to Cotati and earned a degree at Sonoma State University.

He became disabled in 1987 but was able to pursue his love of coaching and umpiring. He never married but had a son in 1990. He was very charming, a people person, his son said. He loved to talk and he was very sociable. Starting about 10 years ago, he began to suffer other health problems and traveled frequently to the Veterans Administration hospital in San Francisco, Kenny said.

In addition to his son, he is survived by a grandson, his sister Kim Daniels of Tracy and brother Charles Smith of San Francisco.

Craig Tourte

I don't want to make this a long story, to step on Neil's toes here. I know he would like to tell his own story. Some of us did attend the remembrance at the National Cemetery on Friday November 27th for Neil's dear friend and Lima brother, Phineas E. Smith. Tom Horchler (HQ 1/13) and Lucy drove down from Chico, David Tonick (A/1/26) came and Steve Wiese (B/1/26) drove over with me. Marco Soto (A/1/26) attended with his wife and their son. Neil introduced us to Phineas's son Jordan and to Jordan's wife and mother. It was a simple remembrance, hence intimate and personal. With minimal suppressed emotion, Neil expressed what affection and respect he had for Phineas. Where and when he met his friend and the importance of their friendship, for all these many years. The only one of the Khe Sanh Veterans present who knew Phineas personally was Neil, but we knew Phineas's spirit and soul. It is the same spirit I have noticed in all of the Khe Sanh Veterans I have met over the years. Unexplainable to the outsider, but we know deep in our hearts what it is.

During the short remembrance, Neil was recalling an event and said something like, and I'll paraphrase here, "When I first met Phineas, he was standing in the trench on the Lima line...." and of course, that pretty much said it all. It explained the loss, the void, the emptiness we were all feeling. All of us had soul-stirrings emotions. The emotions we felt were for the loss of Phineas, but also I think for the too many of our brothers who have gone before us, for those who stood in the trench line with us, for their memories, for our youth and for our own destiny.

CHAPLAINS CORNER

By Chaplain Ron Rayner

The KSV Chaplain has found a new helper to help him do his job better. The message board at www.khesanh.org I have saved most of my Red Clay magazines over the years but apparently I had not read them closely enough to catch on about the message board.

A sad part of my job as chaplain is sending sympathy cards, flowers and memorials. The message board has helped me do this in a more efficient manner. It also helped me to realize that I need to make the most of each day. It has helped me realize I am not the only one fighting PTSD on a daily basis.

The loss of Khe Sanh veteran Roland F. Behnke reminded me of the following poem written by a member of my VVA Chapter in Oakland County Michigan.

Soldiers
By Lindsay Wynn

Soldiers grumble, soldiers wait, soldiers stand and face their fate.

Soldiers young, soldiers old, soldiers do as they are told.

Soldiers watch, soldiers see, soldiers forge history.

Soldiers listen, soldiers note, soldiers remember when they vote.

Soldiers wander, soldiers stay, soldiers work and soldiers play.

Soldiers laugh, soldiers love, soldiers pray to God above.

Soldiers march, soldiers sing, soldiers do so many things.

Soldiers wound, soldiers heal, soldiers know the battlefield.

Soldiers kill, soldiers save, soldiers mourn beside the grave.

Soldiers struggle, soldiers die, soldiers live...and wonder why.

Lindsay Wynn served with the 1st Combat Evaluation Group directing B-52 Bombers over Khe Sanh, South Vietnam during the siege. He and the B-52 bombers played a major role in keeping the North Vietnamese Army from overrunning my position on the east end of the runway. I was manning a M-60 and I had been told to expect approximately 20,000 of the enemy to come visiting.

I wish to thank Lindsay and all the supporting units for their efforts during the siege of Khe Sanh.

The story of Roland Behnke, Howard Dallman and their crew was posted by Mike Fishbaugh on the message board. Dallman received a DFC and the rest of the crew received Silver Stars for landing and taking off at Khe Sanh in impossible conditions on Feb. 5, 1968.

I learn more and more about the siege daily through the message board, Red Clay and most importantly the friendships that have developed through the last two reunions. Mike Fishbaugh is a fabulous resource for info on most anything.

The last line of the aforementioned poem; "Soldiers struggle, soldiers die, soldiers live...and wonder why." covers a lot of territory in what is going on with the Khe Sanh Vets I have corresponded with. Many wonder why many are dying; I for one was struggling, living in a shell.

One of the keys to handling depression and PTSD is getting inner thoughts out in the open. Everybody needs to share their good and bad thoughts with somebody. Fellow Khe Sanh Vets who have had similar experiences are someplace to start. Your county veteran services can point you in the right direction for professional mental health providers. I know I keep repeating the same message but holding in misery does not help. The last two reunions have helped me tremendously.

The New Orleans Saints' mantra for their Super Bowl winning season was "Finish Strong". That is my wish for all of us. "...may your strength match the length of your days." Deuteronomy 33:25

I GET LETTERS

Tom, Enclosed find a donation to help with the cost of our Red Clay Magazine. Through our magazine I was able to locate our company corpsman William "Doc" Miller. Doc had located several members of Lima Co 3/26, 2nd Platoon. Before we received orders to Khe Sanh, Lima Company spent several months at Cobi Thanh Tan Valley, during the monsoon rains of 1966-67.

That experience was a nightmare for the 2nd Platoon. We had operated for weeks without bathing, having hot food, or a decent nights rest. When we finally emerged from the shadow of that valley, due to our assignment we earned the nickname: "The Filthy Few."

Doc Millers efforts in locating members of the second platoon, led to us holding several Mini-reunions in the mountains and forest of Central Pennsylvania. There, we finally had the chance to hear the words we were previously denied: "Welcome Home Marine."

HOUSE OF BROKEN DREAMS

By Craig W. Tourte

I always feel compelled this time of year to post something related to the events of January 21st. This posting thing for me started around 2003 and as you well know, I have posted hundreds of stories and little antidotes and responses. The posts around this time primarily pay tribute to the ones we lost, the ones we remember and reflect the heartbreak and pain we continue to feel in our hearts. I pulled out the folder I keep my past articles in and looked through them to see if I could find something of interest and perhaps just post that as my tribute, but I have moved on now and what I have written in the past was just not sufficient for today. You have read it all before, the where I was, what I was doing things I thought, and the ones we lost the first day the rockets made their way over the top of 881N screaming across the open sky onto the little base at Khe Sanh. You know because you were there, and there is nothing new to tell. I considered my return home from Vietnam and Khe Sanh, thinking it was all behind me. I never thought about Khe Sanh and the war in Vietnam.

Ron Main said in a recent post that he hardly remembered the 70s. Thinking back now I too hardly remember that decade after my return. A foggy blur of bar stools, graveyard shifts, depression, anger, marriage and divorce, and a house I lived in where Veterans of that war came and went between jobs and marriages, a house we called the House of Broken Dreams. One of my roommates who had been in the army was dating a girl who later was on the morning Today show for many years - no I'm not going to tell you who it is. A classy girl even then, between marriages like the rest of us, he liked to laugh, and like the rest of us, she found this dead beat interesting and funny. It's been decades now since I lived in the House of Broken Dreams and I'd like to think I have moved on from all of that left over pain.

A little more stable, not quite so angry and now I can now remember the few bar stools I have occasionally occupied. Some from the House of Broken Dreams were not so lucky. My friend who dated - at that time - a future star of the Today show went on to get married again, and again divorce, another killed in an automobile accident, still another after attempting marriage a few more times just gave up and drowned in the river. Many more gave marriage another shot to find happiness, but most failed, others just kind of drifted away. I envy the life of youth, with hopes, aspirations, thoughts of getting married, settling down, having children. For others, rockets screaming over a mountain changed all of that. No longer innocent, no more pleasant dreams of girls, of home and mom, a future - now just broken dreams, even after all these many years. Not all of course, but too many.

Craig,

Everyone of us fits the above scenario perfectly. Shattered dreams, hopes, failing of marriages, job changes and the like. I don't know about placing blame, I do have anger towards our Congress and Senate who gave us the orders to march, and then labeled us "BABY KILLERS" when we came home. That weighed a lot on everyone. I mean look America, I just did the job requested of me. Why then did you despise me so? And why have you so diligently worked against me when I came to you asking for help? I don't have an answer. I do know that people like you, Dennis Mannion, Neil, and many others, are very successful in life by helping their fellow Khe Sanh brothers. You guys need to know how encouraging your words are, and how you bring people back from the edge of despair!! Finally, I don't know how you look at yourselves as successful, but to me you are heroes in my eyes, and I thank you for every time you stepped up to the Plate.

SMALL WORLD STORIES

Hospital Appointment

By Craig W. Tourte

I was at the VA Hospital in Mather California yesterday getting my monthly vitamin B-12 shot; I wore my Khe Sanh ball cap and not my Delta Company hat which I sometimes wear. The Delta hat is one of my favorites; it's the old red and black hat that Mike Powers gave to me a few years ago. If asked, I'd mention that I was not in Delta Company - a frightening thought by them if I had been - but that I am only an associate - meaning paid - member, but that has never come up yet, and rest assured I'm always sober and an exemplifier representative of Delta when I do wear their hat.

Now moving along here, as I'm in the waiting room another guy sits next to me and tells me he was at Dong Ha with 3rd Recon during the Siege, and says he had a friend by the name of Donald Niemeyer who served with Delta Company 3rd Recon at Khe Sanh, and he asks me if I knew him. Of course I did not, but I told him I'd look up the name in the Khe Sanh Directory and see if he was a member of our Association - I did and his name was not listed. Before I leave the hospital I head down the hallway towards the rest room and happen to meet a rather attractive lady about my age walking towards me from the other direction. She walks up to me and asks - seeing my ball cap - if I had been at Khe Sanh of which I respond in the affirmative. She then asks me if I happen to know a rather tall, blond - here we go, she almost blurted out the word good looking but managed get control of herself before she said it - man who was also at Khe Sanh, and I interrupt her and say Steve Wiese, (B/1/26) Why yes, she says.

We talk about Steve for around twenty minutes; Steve was on a local television station a couple of years ago with some other veterans relating their Vietnam experiences, a fine piece which was a positive for our veterans and community education. I confirm to her and we agree that Steve walks on water and tell her that Steve is a close friend. Turns out the lady is second it charge of the hospital and tells me that if I ever need anything or have any problems to come and see her personally. All because I happened to be wearing my Khe Sanh ball cap, you just never know.

Craig,

I love these kinds of "small world" stories. You tell them better than any of us. We all have them, and there seems to be a kind of magic when it comes to Khe Sanh. On March 28th, I was waiting to leave Khe Sanh, still not sure if it was going to be on a 46 to Quang Tri, or a C-123 to Dong Ha. As I waited, I briefly spoke with a marine also from Long Island, NY, doing the same. Five minutes. Most.. A year and a half later I was in a West Islip, Long Island bar that Ronny Vivona G/2/26 and I hung out at before, and after the war is called The Yellow Bird.

I was with a Corpsman, "Doc Casey" who had served with 1/26 in late 69 and 70 and had come to visit Ronnie, and I. Doc Casey had been Ronny's Doc at the Philly Navy Hospital 7th Floor in 68 before going to Nam. Anyway.. Doc and I are at the bar, and Doc says:" There's a guy over there at the pool table staring at you. I turned and looked, and he was already on his way over to me. You guessed it. It was the Khe Sanh Marine I'd spent a few moments with on March 28. Tossed down a few that night. Never saw each other again. Don't recall his name. Long time ago..

LUCK
THE FINAL ARBITRATOR

Submitted By Craig W. Tourte

This article showed up in our local newspaper on Sunday, and it was a heart stopping read. I spent a few minutes reflecting on the article which was written by a C. J. Chivers from the New York Times and in a few lines I'll tell you why. I've spent more than a few hours wondering why some of us survived Khe Sanh and why others did not.

Fate, luck, predestination or just the simple will of God. I speak often of my friend Steve Wiese who survived the Ghost Patrol while with Bravo Company. What many don't know, is that patrol for Steve was just one incident in many very close calls he had during his 18 month service in Vietnam as a Combat Infantryman. Ernie Spencer (CO D/1/26) once told me that in his opinion Steve had more trigger time in Vietnam than almost anyone else he knew. Meaning of course, that Steve most probably experienced more direct combat than many others.

Not often, but on occasion, Steve has shared with me some of those horrific experiences. I am sure there are many men like Steve who, for what ever reason, survived the brutality of war and wonder why me. Of course no one has an answer to that question because there just isn't any, at least an answer known to us mortals. Like why we survived Khe Sanh and other battles and close calls, the why me question is never answered except by the use of some philosophical phraseology - no one knows why, they just learn to live their lives without the answer.

Now back to the article - The first sentence in the article titled: Luck Aids Marines in Afghanistan, reads like this - If luck is the battlefields final arbiter - the wild card that can trump fitness, training, teamwork and skill - then Lance Cpl. Ryan Mathison has experienced its purest form.

No, that does not answer the why me question, but it comes darn close. For you see luck can mean many things to different people. It can mean fate, predestination or just simply, the will of God. But above all, like the author of this article states, luck is the final arbiter.

SUBJECT OF STORY:

On a marine foot patrol through the predawn chill of Friday morning, Lance Cpl Ryan Mathison stepped on a pressure plate rigged explosive device enough to destroy a pick up truck or tear apart several men. The powerful device filled with Eastern Bloc mortar rounds, and homemade explosives spiked with motorcycle parts, rusty spark plugs and jagged chunks of steel, gave off an audible " Pop, " and tossing small stones it... failed to ignite.

LONG OVERDUE HONOR

Vietnam War veteran Lory Segawa will finally receive his Purple Heart 42 years after he was wounded in battle.

Segawa, 61, of Mililani, tried to get the medal three times without success over the last seven years. A reunion with a fellow Vietnam veteran in September unexpectedly led to Segawa getting help from city and congressional officials to expedite the application process. To his surprise, he recently received a call from a staff member of Sen. Dan Inouye's office who told him he will be presented with the medal by Inouye tomorrow.

"I was just really ecstatic," he said.

In May 1968, Segawa, then 19, was in Khe Sanh when a grenade exploded while he was in the trenchline. He suffered injuries to his neck and face from a few pieces of shrapnel.

He entered Khe Sanh with 140 men of the Delta Company, 1st Battalion, 1st Marine Regiment and left with 40.

"It was the worst," he said.

Three months later, he and other veterans headed to Leatherneck Square, an area with four Marine outposts just south of the demilitarized zone along the border with North Vietnam.

While there, a bullet grazed his chest and went through his right arm during an attack that occurred 15 feet away. "We were really getting blasted," he said, recalling his platoon commander was one of the casualties in the attack.

Segawa had only 55 days left before returning to Hawaii when he was shot in the arm. He was transported to Quang Tri before he was flown to Tripler Army Medical Center.

During a reunion with fellow Vietnam veteran Jaime Vazquez at Honolulu Hale in September, Segawa mentioned that he never received his medal.

Segawa recalled that a fellow injured veteran told him officials were distributing Purple Heart medals after he was released from Tripler.

His first attempt was seven years ago when he sent a application form to the U.S. Department of Veteran Affairs in St. Louis, Mo. He received a letter that he was eligible for a Purple Heart, but he never received it. He tried again, but still no medal arrived. In his last attempt, Segawa was told they were out of stock.

City managing director Kirk Caldwell heard about the conversation between Segawa and Vazquez, who is the Jersey City director of veterans affairs and a former deputy mayor. Caldwell then called Inouye's office for assistance.

Segawa said he is honored to be presented with the medal by Inouye, of whom his late father, Peter Segawa, veteran of the 100th Battalion, spoke highly. "I was always proud of my dad. My dad was always proud of me. To receive the Purple Heart from Sen. Dan Inouye, I just wish my dad was around," he said.

"That would make his day."

SOME GOOD MEMORIES
Thank You, Mr. Kerr
By Dave Rogers

My wife and I wish to extend our condolences to the family of Mr. Kerr, and will keep in our thoughts and prayers his wife of 66 years, Millie. Mr. Kerr certainly was a man of character who influenced the lives of several thousand students and athletes over the course of his long teaching and coaching career in Marion County. He served his family, community and country, and was a highly respected person. Many thought of him as a quiet person, but once you became familiar with him he was a jovial, talkative, charismatic individual who could bring out the best in others, be it in a classroom environment, coaching situation, or simply socializing. His passing saddens all of us, but he will always be remembered by the many people he touched during his 90 years of productive and meaningful life.

The success of the football, track and wrestling teams at Fairmont Senior High School were the result of his superior coaching and motivational skills. In football practice I remember he would start with basic fundamentals for the linemen. Among his sayings was, "Head up, neck bulled, bend the knees, not the back, and Wilson made the pads for the shoulders, not the arms." Then he would drill, drill, and drill his athletes until the fundamentals became natural instincts. Next he would mold his athletes to play together as a team. I still recall him saying more than once, "If we have 4 or 5 who really want to play football, we'll have a good team. But if we have 11 who really want to play, there won't be another team in the valley who will beat us." He expected his athletes to always give it 100% and play together as a team -- slackers and grand-standers need not even consider trying out for his teams.

Mr. Kerr produced many winning teams during his coaching career at FSHS. However, on one occasion we were losing rather badly in football, and I will never forget his composure and comments. Having upset Moundsville 20-18 at home the year before after they were ranked fifth in the state, the game was one of revenge on their home turf my senior year. Three members of the backfield later became starting varsity players for WVU. At halftime he addressed the team by saying we should continue playing our hearts out if for nothing more than pride. Take pride in the fact that you are a football player who won't just lie down and acknowledge defeat no matter the circumstances. Without playing with pride there would be no self-respect, and certainly no respect from our opponent. Although we lost 37-6, I have always carried that lesson with me.

I always admired Mr. Kerr not only for his coaching abilities, but also for how far he climbed the ladder of success. During my junior year at Fairmont State College in 1963, he was hired as an assistant football coach and head wrestling coach after having coached and taught at the junior and senior high school levels and performing assistant principal and principal duties. One could sense back then that the football program and coaching staff had just gotten a tremendous boost and big things were about to happen. The football teams continued to be more and more successful under the helm of head coach "Deacon" Duvall and Mr. Kerr that resulted in a NAIA national championship for FSC in 1967. They put FSC on the map and sports pages that year. One can imagine what it was like to play football for two of the best college coaches in the country. Later Mr. Kerr became head football coach and continued to have successful teams, one of which won the conference championship in 1974. He truly went a long way in his career after starting off in his small home-town of Mannington.

There were plenty of memorable experiences while playing sports for Mr. Kerr and working for him and Millie at the municipal swimming pool. I kept in contact with the Kerr's for many years afterwards. We exchanged Christmas cards and letters yearly until failing health prevented further correspondence by them. They visited my wife and me in our new home in Arlington, TX in 1989, and were our first overnight house guests during a trip to Arizona. While dining together the question was asked of Mrs. Kerr, "How did you two meet?" Her reply was quite lengthy, most of the details of which have been forgotten. However, towards the end of her answer she said, "I knew a good man the first time I spotted him and beat out the other girls." The always observant Mr. Kerr teasingly replied, "Listen to her. Are you going to believe everything she said?" We all four burst into laughter after his comments.

As the years passed by I felt Mr. Kerr and I had become good friends. During my yearly visits to Fairmont we would meet on occasion, greeting each other with a handshake and engaging in congenial conversation. The coach/mentor/teacher days had all but disappeared, and a different type of relationship had evolved. I guess I could have addressed him as "Bill" like many of his friends and peers. Instead, I chose to always address him as I did when he first became my coach out of sheer respect.

So how does one say a final farewell to somebody whom you've respected for nearly 50 years? In all those years I had really never said thank-you to him for being the great person he was. For being a Navy veteran of World War II; for being an outstanding coach and mentor to the many young athletes; for bringing community pride to Fairmont because of successful sports programs; for being a family man; for being an educator; for inspiring young people to do their best; for always having time to talk to his former students and athletes; for being a good listener; for being an example for others to follow; for providing many memories of times past. Thank you, Mr. Kerr.

DONALD A. SLATE: A REMEMBRANCE

By David G. Rogers

The year 1995 has been a major year for anniversaries, pilgrimages, reunions and remembrances of various historical events: witness the 50th anniversary since the dropping of the first atomic bomb, the end of World War II and the 20th year after the communist takeover of South Vietnam. These events have been covered extensively by the news media during the year.

Unfortunately these tragedies resulted in the deaths of millions of people involving both combatants and innocent civilians. On a more personal level for me is the fact that one of those victims was a former Fairmont native as I am. The date November 29, 1995, marked the 25th anniversary of his death. His name was Donald Slate, and he was one of 26 servicemen from Marion County to lose their lives in Southeast Asia in a conflict called the Vietnam War. Having known Donald in my youth and being a veteran of that war, I submit the following as a memorial tribute to him.

I still remember receiving a telephone call from my mother 25 years ago in late 1970 and being informed that Donald had been killed in the war in South Vietnam. Few details were provided during the conversation, but I still recall my reaction to learning about his death. Although I had not seen or talked to him in the past few years, I remembered him as a very pleasant, personable individual. Why had life been cut short for such a fine person? In short, I was shocked and did not want to accept the reality of his death.

Of the ten Vietnam War casualties from Fairmont, Donald was the only one I knew personally. Being three years older than Donald, I had different friends and never ran around with him. Rather, I would occasionally see him at a baseball or football game or elsewhere. He was always very friendly to me and everyone around him so he was popular among his peers.

Donald Anthony Slate was born in Fairmont on June 3, 1946, the son of Patsy and Mary Ross Slate who resided on Beverly Road, now known as Mary Lou Retton Drive. During his younger years, "Donnie" attended Watson Elementary and Fairmont Junior High School, and in 1964 he graduated from Fairmont Senior High School. Interested in athletics among other things, he was a member of the West Fairmont Polar Bear football and baseball teams. During his senior year at FSHS, Donald was co-captain of the football team and selected as the "Senior Player of the Year." While playing a halfback position at 5' 8" and weighing 148 lbs., he led the team in scoring during the second half of the season and was an honorable mention choice on the All-Big Ten Team. Donald also excelled at playing right field on the baseball team.

I recall attending several high school football games in which my younger brother Jim and Donald played as teammates; Donald was one grade ahead of Jim. My other brother John, a twin to Jim, was a manager of the team. As this was some 30 years ago, I've forgotten most of the highlights of the games. I do remember, however, a game played against Philip Barbour High School in which Donald intercepted a pass while playing defensive back and had excited Polar Bear fans on their feet screaming and rooting excitedly. "Duck," a nickname he was tagged with in his early years, scrambled down the sidelines with the football for a long return.

After graduating from high school, Donald attended Fairmont State College and graduated in May 1968 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration. While a student at FSC, he was a member of the Tau Beta Iota fraternity and recipient of TBI's "Man of the Year" award.

In October 1969, Donald entered the Army and received orders for overseas duty in early 1970. On March 14, 1970, he arrived in South Vietnam and was assigned duty as a Personnel Specialist. At the time of his death, he had obtained the rank of SP4 (Specialist 4). According to information received from the National Archives located in College Park, Maryland, Donald was killed outright in a plane which crash-landed while he was flying as a non-crew member. The exact location of this non-hostile incident within Ninh Thuan Province was not given, and no further pertinent details were provided. This province is located on the South China Sea southwest of Cam Ranh Bay in the southern portion of the country. Its capital city is Phan Rang, a small seaside town of about 50,000 people.

In 1985 I was working temporarily in Washington, D.C., and spent one weekend with my wife and daughter touring the downtown area and viewing the local sights. We made our first visit to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial located on two acres of land in Washington's Constitution Gardens near the Lincoln Memorial. By that time "The Wall," dedicated on November 13, 1982, had become one of Washington's most popular and visited monuments. As we joined the crowd of people filing past the names engraved on the chevron-shaped black granite walls, we soon found ourselves at the memorial's midsection at Panel 6W, Line 95, where one of the names read "Donald A Slate." Preceding his name was a diamond symbol indicating confirmation of death. It turned out to be a solemn, reflective moment standing at that location.

The past 25 years have seemingly gone by at a quick pace since Donald unfortunately became a Gold Star serviceman. Surviving him are his mother and two older sisters, Patti Slate Koon and Carol Slate Bock. He was only 24 years old at the time of his death. His name became one of 58,196 names inscribed on "The Wall." These names represent many of America's finest men and women whose lives were never allowed to be completely lived out. I wish for all those who pass by and read his name today that they could have experienced his friendliness. Yes, Donald was among the best the United States sent to fight the war in South Vietnam, and even after 25 years I remember him and wish he were still here with us.

YOUTH SETS AN EXAMPLE

Eagle Scout John Morse, 18, has painted four murals to honor veterans at the Veteran's Restoration Quarters. He officially presented the murals at a dedication ceremony on Dec. 29.

Morse is a member of Troop 53, based at East Asheville United Methodist Church, and the murals were painted for his Eagle project. He said he wanted to do something to honor and show respect for the veterans dedication and for the work that Asheville-Buncombe Community Christian Ministry does to help veterans in need at its Restoration Quarters.

Morse spent 225 hours on the project. Lowes donated all the paint.

Morse is the son of True and Jane Morse, of Asheville, and a senior at Reynolds High. He is the brother of an Eagle Scout and grandson of an Eagle Scout. He plans to attend college in the fall and major in graphic design.

The Veteran's Restoration Center is the first nationally chartered center for homeless veterans. The murals were mounted on the wall of the cafeteria.

THREE SHINING SILVER STARS

By Dave Rogers

The recent awarding of three Silver Stars to Khe Sanh Veterans Donald Hossack, Ray Calhoun and Tommy Wheeler for their heroic actions on Hill 881 South on April 30, 1967 was most deserving. I would like to express my congratulations to them, and thank General John Admire for his efforts to pursue the nominations of these gentlemen for such a high honor. All three attended the fortieth anniversary ceremonies at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial on April 30, 2007 in front of the bronze statue titled "Hill 881 South" at Veterans Plaza in San Antonio. It was a pleasure to see the three of them participating in reunion activities after having fought together as Marines in Vietnam.

Twenty years earlier I attended the first of three reunions of veterans from the Hill Fights of 1967. Before the ceremony began, I was asked to stand inside a building close by while my wife and daughter mixed in with the crowd of people attending. As I walked in I met a person who identified himself as Donald Hossack. I had read earlier about the dedication of the memorial in a local newspaper and was familiar with the name Donald Hossack, the Marine depicted in the statue as the individual rendering aid to dying Marine PFC James Arthur Randall. We started talking about our experiences from 20 years earlier. As we talked we kind of stared at each other for at least five minutes. He explained that he had been 2nd Lt. "Bussy" Mitchell's radioman. Then his face starting coming back to me and I said, "Yes, I remember you." And then he said like words to me. Except for one person, I never thought I would ever meet a veteran of the battle except by chance.

We participated as members of the stage party in the memorial service conducted with military honors on April 30, 1987, six months after the Vietnam Veterans Memorial was dedicated. We were in attendance as invited guests of John Baines, National Co-Chairman of the Vietnam Veterans Leadership Program, as were several others. The memorial service included a musical salute from a military band, uniformed military personnel in formation from nearby Lackland Air Force Base, a wreath-laying ceremony, and the playing of Taps. Colonel Harry W. Jenkins, Jr., USMC, was the guest speaker.

After the ceremony I met Joe Cialone, who was the executive officer of M/3/3 the day of the battle. The three of us, Donald's wife, my wife and daughter later had dinner on the San Antonio Riverwalk. Needless to say, the primary topic of discussion revolved around the events of that infamous day when life and death became more than mere words. We were survivors of a horrific battle, now dining together in peacefulness twenty years later, and bonded in a way only fellow veterans would understand.

Donald suggested we have a thirtieth reunion. He was going to locate, or perhaps had already located, Ray Calhoun and Tommy Wheeler so that they too, and hopefully others, would be a part of the next memorial service and reunion activities. Also, he was interested to see if veterans from K/3/9 would like to have a combined reunion with veterans from M/3/3. He was very interested in preserving the history of the battle and remembering those who had fought in it. We left San Antonio with high expectations of having another reunion with more veterans attending.

During the years between reunions, we exchanged

Christmas cards and contacted each other to say hello and wish one another merry Christmas. We would discuss how our families were doing in Kalispell, Montana and Arlington, TX. He would also provide me with updates as to his success about making new contacts. And always, as was to be expected, we would discuss the battle. Each time we talked he would tell another interesting fact or two about what took place or something he had witnessed or read about, or who did what during the deadly fighting.

The thirtieth reunion was within a year or so of taking place in 1997. Donald had located Ray Calhoun who told Donald that he would attend the reunion. During a discussion with Donald I mentioned how fulfilling it would be to invite "Bussy" Mitchell's wife and daughter to the reunion. Donald started searching around for possible family contacts. He was able to get the telephone number of somebody who knew Bussy's daughter, Laurie, who she had worked for in Alabama, who was also a Marine. Using that contact, we were able to locate his wife and daughter at the same time since his wife just happened to be visiting Laurie in North Carolina. It was less than a month before the reunion when the telephone call was made. That was short notice, but I called Laurie back a few days later and yes, they wanted to come to the reunion to hear first-hand from the Marines he served with as to how Bussy became a casualty. Needless to say, there was closure for the family when we all met and told our separate stories about Bussy. Donald had been at Bussy's side when he was killed, and the same mortar round also wounded him.

During then next decade Donald made contact with former members of K/3/9 and Jerry Giles, commanding officer of K/3/9 at the time of the battle. A reunion of both companies, which had fought together at Hill 881 South, was organized by Donald and others from K/3/9 and was held on April 30, 2007 in San Antonio. After forty years, members of both companies met and exchanged war stories and experienced the camaraderie of true combat veterans. Recent Silver Star recipients Ray Calhoun and Tommy Wheeler were present. In attendance were the mother and another family member of PFC James Arthur Randall, who is depicted as the dying young black Marine in the statue, being cared for by Donald. Former Marine combat artist Austin Deuel, who witnessed the combat scene depicted in the statue he sculpted, was also present.

Having been a participant in the battle, I will never forget people like Donald Hossack, Ray Calhoun and Tommy Wheeler, and many others who received little or no recognition for their heroic actions during their tour of duty in Vietnam and after they returned home. The belated citations of all three recent recipients speak for themselves as they describe the terror and brutality of warfare. Their courage, honor, and tenacity during those trying times are noteworthy. Albeit late coming, their heroic actions are now publicly recognized and will always be a part of Marine Corps history.

Beaches , Peaches, and Leaches

It's sometimes hard to stay alert as you're plodding along, humpin through some swamp trying not to think of sandy beaches.
Struggling through the muck and the bush, looking forward to eating your stash of pound cake and peaches.
At last you stop for the day and all you want to do is rest and eat, but first you have to strip down and get rid of the those not so friendly leaches.
You know you had a pretty good day, when the biggest events were beaches , peaches, and leaches.
If you weren't there you can't understand the importance, of the simple things likes beaches peaches, and yes, even leaches.
At night before going out on an ambush patrol, you listen to your lieutenants worn out speeches.
Well sort of, because you're head is still, back in the world thinking of beaches.
Maybe tomorrow if you make it back, you can have some more pound cake and peaches.
If you're lucky there won't be any muddy murky water, so you don't even have to think of leaches.
Oh how sweet those very few days were, those days of beaches, peaches, and leaches.

A NOTEWORTHY DATE

By LtCol David S. Harmon
314TAW

February 29, 2008, marked the 10th anniversary of one memorable day in a 31-year military career. It occurred during what became known as "The Tet Offensive" in the Vietnam War. That battle now celebrates its 40th anniversary.

My C-130E crew was stationed at CCK Air Base, Taiwan and flying out of a forward operating location in Tuy Hoa Air Base, Republic of South Vietnam. Our mission was to fly Airland and Airdrop missions delivering personnel and equipment throughout Southeast Asia.

We reported to Operations at "O'Dark Thirty" for mission assignment and briefing, and were told we would be dead-heading up the coast to Da Nang and flying three round-trip "B3" (Bullets, Beans and Band-Aids) Airland sorties from there to Khe Sanh. We had flown the same mission six months earlier (while flying out of Cam Ranh Bay) without a hitch; but this was different.

I said to the briefing officer that I thought C-130 landings at Khe Sanh had been suspended due to the intensity of the attack being waged against it by the North Vietnamese Army (NVA). I was told that 834th Air Division (Air Force tactical airlift command and control in Saigon) had decided to try a "test" mission to see if it might be successful. We finished the ops and intel/threat briefings, checked out extra flak jackets (to put under our seat cushions) and got underway.

Air Force Aerial Port units are responsible for preparing cargo and passengers for transport, rigging airdrop loads and the on-loading/off-loading of aircraft. Upon our arrival at DaNang the Aerial-Porters were ready for us and we were quickly loaded and on our way. Khe Sanh was manned by components of the 3rd Marine Division and other various attached units. It was located on a small plateau in the mountainous northwest corner of South Vietnam and positioned as an interdict on one of the main Communist infiltration routes into South Vietnam. North Vietnamese General Giap had committed several Divisions in the attempt to do to our forces at Khe Sanh what had been done to the French 34 years earlier in the siege of Bien Dien Phu. He surrounded Khe Sanh and began a series of continuous bombardments and attacks. However, he did not reckon on two differences: modern air support and the character of the US Marine Corps.

B-52's, fighters and helicopter gun ships rained death on the NVA forces surrounding Khe Sanh and the Marines gave as good as they got with outbound firepower and ground attacks. Key to the Marines' effort was aerial resupply, without which they would have been defenseless, since all ground lines of communication had been severed. That is where Tactical Airlift came in.

In the years before the Vietnam War, Tactical Airlift forces (C-130's, C-123's and all the supporting adjuncts for battlefield aerial delivery) had been improving tactics, equipment and training for a mission that all planning indicated would become a major factor in modern warfare. A number of exercises were carried out in Florida, the Carolinas, Missouri and the desert Southwest, developing new formation. Short-field landing tactics and aerial delivery methods such as the Ground Proximity Extraction System (GPES), the Low Altitude Parachute Extraction System (LAPES), the Container Delivery System (CDS), the Parachute Low Altitude Delivery System (PLADS), and improved personnel and heavy equipment airdrop capability were developing as well.

Unfortunately, one factor missing in these exercises was a ground force willing to place its logistics requirement in the hands of aerial resupply in order to stress the Tactical Airlift system to the point of realism. Army trucks were organic, plentiful, and unhampered, so ground commanders (with other agendas) preferred surface resupply in these exercises. The result was a lack of the realism of a Bastogne or a Khe Sanh scenario. (Fifteen years later, I tried to get ground forces participating in a "Century Independence" exercise to agree to such a scenario and it was still like pulling teeth.)

Fortunately, early in the Vietnam War, a situation was reported to have occurred when cargo was seriously backlogged in the marshalling yard of Tan Son Nhut Airport in Saigon. A visiting Four-Star General asked the Aerial Port Chief Master Sergeant how many more C-130s were needed to move the cargo to all the forward locations in South Vietnam that needed it. It was rumored that the Chief told the General that if one more C-130 were sent to Tan Son Nhut, they would have to begin vertical parking. It was a good thing that the wrong question was posed to the right person. The Chief took the General to the Aerial Port Squadron loading equipment yard and showed him the broken loading equipment awaiting replacement parts and repairs. The General got the message and that was the beginning of a new look at how to use the C130 in a combat theater. The answer was simple: do whatever you have to do to minimize ground time between sorties. That meant that aircraft maintenance, refueling, and loading capabilities would have to be supported first if they were to be able to support the airlift mission.

(At this point, I am sure some of you "snow on the roof" types are thinking: "good grief, didn't we learn anything from the Berlin Airlift?" Well, the wheel does have to be reinvented from time to time now, doesn't it?)

By the time the siege of Khe Sanh and the Tet Offensive came about, the Tactical Airlift system may not have been a "well oiled machine," but it was pretty close. Even at Khe Sanh we had a hard surface planked runway over 3,000 feet long with an adjacent hard surface ramp and a Marine, radar Ground Controlled Approach (GCA) in operation. When the weather was lousy (which was most of the time) we could get an instrument approach for a landing or extraction. A procedure was even developed to get a GCA approach to the drop zone (DZ) west of the runway when the weather was too low to land or the threat level was too high for Airland ops. It was a really fluid situation. Our side didn't always own the entire DZ and the GCA would adjust a flight path accordingly. Considering the environment they were operating in, these GCA controllers were the best I have ever seen.

My Squadron (776th TAS) lost one crew and aircraft, on a GCA to Khe Sanh in bad weather, when they hit the upslope just short of the runway and skidded onto the runway on the side of the aircraft. A picture of a Marine fire fighter trying to chop his way into the cockpit appeared in Life Magazine; but only one crewmember made it out of a forward window.

As I mentioned above, my crew was not without Khe Sanh experience before the day that has kept so much of this era vivid in my memory. We had flown Airland missions into Khe Sanh in August and December of 1967, and had made four heavy equipment airdrops at an outpost (Lang Vie) west of Khe Sanh. The materials we airdropped there were used to build a bunker which enabled the unit to survive a subsequent armored attack and make it back to Khe Sanh during the initial phase of the siege. We also made GCA-guided, CDS airdrops to the Khe Sanh DZ during the siege.

As I recall, the weather at Khe Sanh on this Leap Year day was about 4,000 foot overcast with good visibility. We broke out several miles east of the field with a clear view of something that looked to be out of a movie set. There was smoke in several locations from incoming ordinance, pieces of this and that here and there, a badly damaged C-123 along side the runway and another on the runway. There were also people, shooting at us from off the east side of the field. The tower said it would be a few minutes before the C-123 would be clear of the runway and we would have to go around.

As we were making the go-around, we were still taking hits from the ground fire. I tried as much evasive maneuvering as possible as I pulled up to the right. The field was under attack, the runway was blocked and we had unknown battle damage. No one would have faulted us for aborting the mission at that point. But a quick query of my crew showed that they still wanted to try to land and off-load as much as I did. So we came around again on a steep approach with a lot of side slipping to attempt to get the folks shooting at us to aim at where they thought we were going as opposed to our actual flight path.

This worked somewhat and we made it to touchdown on the runway end where I applied full reverse and stomped on the anti-skid braking in order to make the mid-field turnoff into the off-load ramp. Everything at Khe Sanh sloped uphill from east to west so that all that had to be done in the off-load area was for the loadmaster to open the aft ramp and door and pull the emergency cargo release handle while the pilot taxied out from under the palletized load.

As I turned into the ramp, I saw a Marine motioning us towards him. I was distracted by something (I think it was noticing our Cargo Door Open light coming on) and looked away from him momentarily. As I looked back, all I saw was a large explosion just in front and on the left side of the aircraft, which rocked the aircraft to the right. Stunned, I instinctively made a quick inventory of my personal parts, glanced over my shoulder at my crew and made a quick scan of the engine instruments; everything appeared OK and then I thought, "Oh shit, that Marine." I looked out to the left and, as the smoke cleared a little, on the other side of a newly formed 10 to 12-foot wide crater a foot or two deep in the ramp (more than likely from a 122mm rocket) was that Marine giving us the "get that mortar magnet out of here" wave-off. He must have heard or seen the incoming rocket and dove for cover behind one of the metal Conex Containers along the ramp. That seemed like good advice since more incoming could be on the way and they seemed to have us pretty well zeroed in. I taxied onto the west end of the runway and advanced power to the BTTW position. Somewhere in all this our loadmaster got the ramp and door closed and I elected to accelerate in ground effect and fly off the east end of the field at brushing-the-tree-top level, dropping down into the valley to the east and getting out of the immediate area before climbing out. I guess this tactic worked, since we didn't feel ourselves taking any more hits. However, while beginning the climb-out I discovered that I couldn't get nose-up elevator control much beyond neutral.

We set up a long straight-in approach for a landing to the south back at Da Nang using trim, flaps and power to help with pitch control and made an uneventful landing. Post-flight inspection revealed evidence of a fire in the right aux tank and lots of holes. One of our maintenance officers later gave me a note listing 104 hits in the aircraft.

Airland operations were once again suspended at Khe Sanh, but a successful Air Drop/Extraction program continued until the siege was finally broken.

The DFC I received for flying this mission did not mean as much to me as another medal I received for that mission, even though it ranked below the DFC. The 3rd Marine Division took the time to find the names of other service members who had been on the ground at Khe Sanh during the siege and allowed us to share the Navy Presidential Unit Citation, which the Division was awarded. Wow, a Navy medal for a "Blue Suiter."

I transitioned to the C-130A model and flew another Southeast Asia tour out of Naha AB, Okinawa. By the end of the Vietnam War I had flown in 9 of the 11 Air Campaigns into which the conflict was divided. But every Leap Year day since then (and 2008 is the 10th since 1968) my thoughts go back to the 3rd Marine Division and the Siege of Khe Sanh.

WE WILL NEVER FORGET THEIR SACRIFICE

On July 13, 1968, 1st Lieutenant Leonard Adrian Bird, while serving aboard an F-4 Phantom jet, out of Chu Lai, was killed when his aircraft was struck by enemy ground fire, crashed and exploded. He left behind his parents, a wife, 2 brothers and many friends and relatives in both Clifton and Wilmington. A letter from his commanding office to his parents is included with this article.

Although what happened to Lenny is obvious, the Department of Defense was never able to recover his remains. Because of this, Lt. Bird and his pilot are listed as being "Missing in Action". Lt Bird is one of 3 men from Delaware that are listed as being MIA. Finally, the New Jersey Viet Nam Veterans Memorial in Holmdel, lists 57 men from NJ as being MIA to this day.

Lenny was born at Passaic General Hospital in 1943. His father's parents had moved to Clifton's Dutch Hill section many years earlier from Holland and had even changed their last name from De Vogel to Bird to become more Americanized. The Bird family lived at 215 and then 261 Madison Avenue until the 50's when they moved to Wilmington Delaware. Lenny finished his secondary education here, and then enrolled at the University of Delaware to study engineering. He swam on the freshman swimming team, became president of his fraternity, and married his college sweetheart. He spent the summer of 1965 at Quantico, Virginia in an officer training program. Upon his graduation from college he began advanced training and then flight school as a radar intercept officer.

His brother Tom served in the Air Force in Korea, and he and Lenny had many" ... service arguments, as to which branch was better", this according to his mother, Mrs. Wilhelmina Bird, now of Holland Michigan. Mrs. Bird remembers Lenny as a " wonderful, loving son, always happy, who could only see the good in all his friends." Lenny hoped to attend the Wharton School of Business after his discharge. He received his orders and arrived in Viet Nam in January 1968.

MARINE FIGHTER/ATTACK SQUADRON 115
Marine Aircraft Group 13
1st Marine Aircraft Wing, FMF, Pacific
FPO San Francisco 96602

It is most difficult for me to express the regret and sorrow felt by myself and the Marines of Marine Fighter/Attack Squadron 115 over the loss of your son, First Lieutenant Leonard A. Bird, U. S. Marine Corps Reserve, on July 13th, 1968, in the vicinity of Khe Sanh, Quang Tri Province, Republic of Vietnam.

Len was flying as lead Radar Intercept Officer with his pilot, Captain John C. Hurst, as they attacked an enemy mortar position. The aircraft was hit by enemy ground fire just as the bombs were released on the target and was observed to be on fire as it continued across the target in a shallow dive and exploded on impact with the ground. This sequence of events occurred in just a matter of seconds, and there was not enough time for either Len or his pilot to eject. They both were killed instantly.

Len was a promising young officer whose cheerful personality, devotion to duty, and courageous acceptance of the hazards he encountered while flying two-hundred and fifty-three missions in the defense of his ideals earned for him the deepest respect and admiration of all those who knew him.

I realize that words can do little to console you at a time like this, however, I do want you to know that every Marine in this Squadron shares with you the sorrow and grief of this tragic loss.

A memorial service is planned for Len, to be held in the Marine Aircraft Group 13 Chapel at 10 A.M.. on July 15th, 1968, so that his many friends here may pay their final respects.

Please, if I can be of assistance in any possible way, let me know.

Sincerely Yours,
G.W. Vaughan

WAR BUDDIES, LOCALS GIVE ANOTHER BRAVE CORPSMAN THE GRAVE DISTICTION HE EARNED

Powell rushed into a Vietnam battlefield to aid wounded and was killed.

By Harold Gwin
VINDICATOR STAFF WRITER

YOUNGSTOWN -. Richard Powell may have died 41 years ago in Vietnam, but memories of him and what he sacrificed for others remain as fresh for some as the day he was killed.

On Aug. 29, 2009 Marines who served with Navy Corpsman "Doc" Powell, his 1965 Chaney High School classmates and family gathered at Lake Park Cemetery on Midlothian Boulevard in Boardman to dedicate a new stone on Powell's grave - one that bears the notation that he was awarded the Navy Cross.

It will be 41 years to the day that Powell was killed while aiding wounded Marines in a battle in an area of Vietnam Just south of DaNang called "Dodge City." He was two weeks shy of his 21st birthday. He had enlisted in May 1966 when he was 18.

The Navy Cross, second only to the Medal of

CORRECTED HEADSTONE

Honor in this country, was a posthumous recognition, presented to his family in April 1969, eight months after his death, said his sister, Pattie Powell Scoville.

By that time, Veterans Affairs had already placed a stone on his grave, minus the Navy Cross designation, she recalled. George Adams of Cortland, a Marine who served in the same unit as Powell's, visited Powell's grave regularly for 25 years to pay his respects.

Adams, who grew up in Struthers, said he never had any contact with the men with whom he served in Vietnam until about 14 months ago when he came across his former commander, Byron Weber on the Internet.

Adams said he took a photo of Powell's gravestone and sent it to Weber, who noticed it bore no mention of the Navy Cross.

"That started all of this," Adams said, explaining that he contacted the local Veterans Affairs office and was told he would need to find a member of the Powell family to make a request for a new marker.

That proved difficult, he said. He was aware that someone was periodically placing flowers on the grave, so he left a note there asking for that person to contact him:

He didn't get a response but learned later that Pattie Scoville was living in West Middlesex, Pa., where he was finally able to contact her.

Scoville said she didn't realize the designation was supposed to be on the gravestone, and she was surprised by the sudden, recent outpouring of support to have a new stone placed. She'll participate in the dedication ceremony by placing a wreath on her brother's grave, she said.

Adams said the occasion was expanded to include a reunion, perhaps the first, for Lima Company, Third Battalion, Seventh Marines, First Marine Division.

About three dozen Lima Company veterans and corpsmen were there, based at the Holiday Inn in Boardman, they came from as far away as Florida and Oregon, for an Aug. 28 reunion and the dedication the next day. Many of them were in the field with Powell the day he died.

About the same number of Chaney Class of 1965 graduates, many of them also veterans, were at the dedication as well, said Kathleen Seifert of Youngstown, class secretary. "

She remembers Powell as being "gentle, very soft spoken with ,an astute sense of humor."

Many of those classmates coming for the ceremony were unaware of what Powell had done, she said.

The citation accompanying Powell's Navy Cross recognizes his "extraordinary heroism" Aug. 29, 1968.

The unit to which he was assigned came under heavy fire as it crossed a large field during a battle. They sustained numerous casualties.

"With complete disregard for his own safety, Hospitalman Powell unhesitatingly rushed forward and commenced treating the men," the citation said.

He moved through the field of fire from one injured man to another, and at one point was hit by enemy machine-gun fire that immobilized one of his arms. "He ignored his painful injuries as he steadfastly continued to render life sustaining fist aid to his fallen comrades," the citation read.

"Observing a casualty who lay within 15 meters of an enemy machine-gun position, Hospitalman Powell fearlessly advanced into the hazardous area and was mortally wounded by hostile fire while providing vital medical treatment to the injured Marine."

the citation said.

Six marines died in that battle, and about two dozen others were injured.

"I was a member of his squad. I was with him the day he died." Adams said. He saw what Powell was doing and realized the risk.

"I wanted to stop him because I knew he was going to get killed. I told him, 'Don't do it: He just took off and did it," Adams recalled.

Jeff Lannan of Newark. Ohio, the platoon squad leader, was there as well. Lannan said he took to Powell right away because they were both from Ohio and he saw Doc as a "homeboy."

"He was just a very, very nice fellow," Lannan said'. "We became good friends," adding that the images of what happened that day still haunt him.

"He was helping everybody, exposing himself. It cost him his life," Lannan said.

Powell ignored calls from others to return to safety. Even after he was shot in the arm, he was tying a guy's bandage using one arm and his teeth, Lannan said. Lannan said he reached Powell moments after the medic suffered a fatal head wound. "Doc died in my arms. He was trying to tell me something. He couldn't get it out. That haunts me to this day," he said.

Lannan was also wounded in that battle and said he didn't find out until a few months ago that Powell had been awarded the Navy Cross.

That event meant a lot to me," he said of the reunion and dedication ceremony. "I'm just tickled to death they had it for him."

That Powell died during an act of helping others didn't come as a surprise to classmate Alfred "Skip" Brocious, who now lives in Debary, Fla,., but came back to Youngstown for the ceremony.

"That's just the kind of guy he was," Brocious said, explaining that he essentially grew up with "Dick" Powell from first grade through high school and Bible classes at St. Andrews.

"It's not surprising what he did," Brocious said, recalling an early example of Dick's character.

When volunteers were needed to help collect Lenten boxes that children had filled with coins to provide help to needy children, Dick, who was in first or second grade, stood up immediately while most kids were trying to shrink out of sight to avoid the task.

"I went with him. That was really unexpected for me," Brocious said. "He just kind of brought that out in people. It was a sign of his character very early,"

Brocious said she didn't see Powell after high school but learned that he had been killed in Vietnam, only recently learning of the details.

Doug Dobransky of Los Angeles, another classmate and also a veteran who came for the dedication, said he remembers Powell as being small in stature. He came across the Navy Cross award while working on a class reunion in 2007.

"When I began to read the account of how Powell came to be awarded the Navy Cross, our nation's second-highest decoration for bravery, I Stood there sobbing visualizing his last minutes, and how he went about serving fallen buddies on that hill in Vietnam," Dobransky said.

"Richard was taller and braver than any other person in our class that day," he said, adding that he wrote an account of Powell's death for the class reunion program.

"His great sacrifice that day should be made known," he said.

"We're not finished," Seifert said, explaining that there will be additional efforts to make the community aware of Powell's sacrifice.

Both she and Adams said they would like to see a highway interchange, perhaps along 1-680, named in his honor.

"This is an all-American story that can be repeated across this country," Seifert said ..

NEW HOPE EASES DECADES OF GRIEF
VIETNAM WAR MIA HONORED AT FUNERAL

By JOSEPH AX
STAFF WRITER

1st Lt. Albert Graf

The mourners made their way to the white grave marker one by one to pay their respects to a man long gone, and still missing - but not forgotten.

Marianne Graf Thomas remained motionless for a moment, clutching a folded American flag to her chest, her eyes fixed upon the name etched in the tombstone: Albert Stephen Graf, lst Lt.

Forty years ago, the Bogota native was shot down in an F-4B Phantom II above a Vietnamese jungle. He was honored with a full military fu-neral at Arlington National Cemetery, as those who loved him paid tribute to a man whose irrepressible optimism and indomitable will remain undimmed by the passing decades.

"I feel like a cocoon that has been wrapped so tightly, and now the cocoon has opened, and I get to be a butterfly," Graf Thomas, his widow, said.

One thing has always eluded his family and friends however: a body to mourn. There is no grave underneath the marker. The remains of Graf, 24, a radio in-tercept officer, and Jerry Zimmer, a 25-year-old pilot from upstate New York, were never recovered.

All hope of finding them appeared lost forever - until now. Thanks to the efforts of Graf Thomas and "Elaine Zimmer Davis, Zimmer's widow, the military agency assigned the task of locating missing American servicemen and servicewomen has reopened their case and sent an investigative team to what is believed be the crash site in search of their remains, Zimmer Davis said.

"I've lived for all these years linking they were not recoverable," Zimmer Davis said. "I would like to think that we have a chance now to do something for the guys. If they're not recoverable, I will know that we all did our very best to try to make this happen."

Graf Thomas still remembers the day that a black car pulled into her driveway bringing the news of her husband's presumed death.

"I met them on my knees at the door, begging them not to tell me e was gone," the Georgia native said. "The hardest part was when I asked them, 'When will you bring him home?' And they said, 'We are not."

But last year, when Graf Thomas visited Vietnam with an experienced tour guide, retired Marine Bob Burke, it became clear that the original coordinates did not match the crash site described in the 1993 report that declared the Zimmer Graf case in the "No Further Pursuit" category, Zimmer Davis explained.

Burke's expertise in the local topography led him to conclude that the crash site was elsewhere. With the help of a declassified report written days after the crash, Burke determined that the. site was actually 6,000 meters - about 3-1/2 miles - from the place where It was previously thought to be, she said.

Headstone that marks 1st Lt. Albert Graf's Grave

Earlier this year, Zimmer Davis and an old friend and former Marine comrade of her husband, Gene Mares, traveled to Vietnam as well Though Zimmer Davis was forced to turn back during the arduous hike through thick vegetation and 100-degree heat, Mares was able to make it to what they believe is the crash site.

He and their Vietnamese guide a former Viet Cong , recovered half a dozen pieces of a jet. Zimmer Davis' husband, Ron Davis, also a retired Marine, sent pictures of the debris to a network of Marine plane experts, who concluded that five of the six pieces belonged to an F-4B Phantom II.

No other F-4Bs were shot down in the area, said Zimmer Davis, who lives in San Diego. Combined with Burke's analysis, the findings were enough to persuade the Joint POW-MIA Accounting Command to reopen the case and send a team to the site, she said.

The results of that team's visit are not yet known. Officials at JPAC did not return calls for comment, and a spokeswoman said she did not have any information to release regarding the case.

Zimmer received his own full military funeral service at Arlington, nine days before the 40th anniversary of the Aug. 29, 1969, crash. His marker stands beside Graf's in a section of the cemetery dedicated to those still missing.

Gunnery Sgt. William Dixon, the Marine Corps funeral director for Arlington and for the Washington region, said many families are not aware that they are entitled to a full honors service if their relatives' bodies were not recovered.

"It's a blessing for those families to have some closure," he said.

The ceremony took place on what would have been Graf's 65th birthday, drew some of his closest friends, who reminisced about a man whose name is still known in Bogota.

High School, where Graf was a standout in track. There was Rusty McInerney, who roomed with Graf in flight school and recalled their lives as carefree, confident young men. Graf bought a Pontiac GTO, McInerney a Corvette, and the two friends would chat up single ladies at the local bars.

There was Bernie Fowler, who ran track with Graf at Bogota High and remembered Graf's infectious smile.

"He was the most upbeat person I've ever met in my life," Fowler said. "I was always unhappy - but you couldn't be that way with AL. He just wouldn't allow it."

There was Dave Ells, Graf's childhood friend, who helped organize the ceremony and was happy to be around to see this day. He suffers from emphysema and was given three to five years to live. That was 10 years ago.

"I resolved to live my life as they would have lived," he said of all his friends who died in the war. "Now I can put AL to rest. 1 know he's in a good place."

But most of all, there was Marianne Graf Thomas, who may finally have found the healing she has awaited for 40 years - even if she never has a chance to bury her late husband's body.

"There was such a peace that came over me," she said. "I saw all these people that loved AL and respected him. 1 thanked him for our life together, and grieved that we were not together now.

POETRY

My Officer, My Gentleman

on a new soft sofa in blank beige rooms you call home
I found you
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

concocting canned foods, fare like Marine C-rations eating all alone
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

sleep wracked with wretched dreams haunted by terror
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

war too real warping Now's mysteries present far away
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

42 years later thoughts straying there every single day
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me
a forever wounded heart sears your soul
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

here we could not know life as it was there
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

Khe Sanh
with no escape
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

77 days of bombs blasting but 100 feet away shrapnel spewing everywhere
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

I rallied to end the war to bring you home you fought fearlessly
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

I never imagined seeing hearing tasting feeling beside us buddies blowing up
My officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

huddling in rat-infested dank dark airless tunnels eating only fear
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

42 years with new bare beige rooms far from that place so long ago
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

as winter slips to spring summer surges submerge yourself today playing softball
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

play like a warrior every day for sport for fun be the best
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

our chance encounter auspicious mystery one autumn day
My officer, My Gentleman

waiting for me

our eyes lock briefly soul searching soul warrior meets dreamer
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

I see your wounded heart lover of living
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

Love born in an instant grows opening one another
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

your hands warm mine your breath tingles your touch ignites
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

with you finally no judgments criticisms just me here now
My Officer, My Gentleman
waiting for me

for the first time I surrender to receive to give

LZ LAMBEAU MAY 21-23, 2010 WELCOMING HOME WISCONSIN'S VIETNAM VETERANS

L.Z. ™
LAMBEAU
WELCOME HOME MAY 2010

A wide-reaching statewide effort to honor Wisconsin Vietnam War Veterans culminates in a weekend of recognition and celebration of their service and sacrifice for veterans and their families at Lambeau Field in Green Bay.

All veterans, family members, friends and other Wisconsin residents are invited to attend.

Find event details, local information and details on the statewide kick-off motorcycle rally from La Crosse to Green Bay and more online at LZLambeau.org.

LZ Lambeau is a partnership of the Wisconsin Department of Veterans Affairs, the Wisconsin Historical Society and Wisconsin Public Television, along with an extensive group of veterans organizations statewide.

Initial major funding for Wisconsin Vietnam War Stories and LZ Lambeau has been provided by Don and Roxanne Weber of La Crosse, Associated Bank, Wisconsin Public Service Foundation, Oneida Nation, Ho Chunk Nation, and Ron and Colleen Weyers.

ED NOTE: This is a great Event, and I will be attending with our founder, Reverend Ray W. Stubbe. Lambeau Field in the State of Wisconsin, is just an hours ride from the City of Chicago. For those who have not met Reverend Stubbe this will be a great opportunity to do so.

ANOTHER GREAT COMING EVENT IN THE CHICAGOLAND AREA

The 25th year Anniversary of the Chicago Vietnam Veterans Welcome Home Parade that took place in June of 1986will again grace Chicago next year. It will be a three Day event: June 11th Saturday, June 12th Sunday, June13th Monday, 2011. These dates are not locked in.

This is what is being planned or being talked about for those days, not in any particular order:

1) Art Show - pictures taken by Vietnam Veterans and their families during the June 13th, 1986 Parade in Chicago - they will be CD's or 11 X 14 photos.

These displays will be at the Vietnam Veterans Art Museum 1801 S. Indiana, and a very good possibility at other venues in the City of Chicago and surrounding Suburbs.

Samle locations: Oak Park, IL. Library, The Chicago Cultural Center at Randolph & Michigan, and other areas to yet be determined.

2) A Dinner to honor Tom Stack, Gene Connell, Col. Plummer - who have since passed, but were on the executive committee of the Welcome Parade. To be done at a major hotel in downtown Chicago.

3) A Concert at Millieum Park - with bands such as Dennis DeYoung. Lt. Dan Band, The four Tops and others. This will be the Vietnam Veterans tying together the Welcome Home of the Iraqi/ Afghanistan Veterans, and passing the torch to the next generation of Veterans, and the Never Again One Generation forgetting the next Generation of Veterans. Now this might also take place at Navy Pier - it will depend on a lot of things.

ED NOTE: I will keep the membership apprised with the schedules for this event. Those of you who attended the Chicago Welcome Home Parade, know how great our City opens itself to our veterans, both past and present.

Good morning students of Jay County High School, staff, administra-tors and guests.

I count it a privilege and honor to stand before you today and present this year's recipient of the Star of Character Award for Citizenship.

This award honors a person who has one, but generally all, of the traits of a person of character-trust worthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring and citizenship. This year's winner joins Jeffery McLochlin and Andrew Whitacre in receiving this award at JCHS.

Nominated by the student council, our honoree was born in Jay County, educated at Dunkirk High school, and attended Hanover College, where he played baseball and worked his way through school by waiting on cafeteria tables.

He was recruited by the U.S. Peace Corps, and spent two years volunteering in Kenya, Indonesia and the Bahamas.
He spent two years at the University of Missouri and another at Penn State gaining more knowledge in social and biological sciences. He received his love of learning from his mother Jean and work ethic from his father, Karl Ed.

He is the father of two children: Sarah, a teacher in California, and Andrew, a helicopter pilot in Montana. He is husband to Anita, who helped make his swine and farming operation a success.

He has served on numerous boards including, but not limited to, the Jay County Hospital Board, Jay County Soil and Water Conservation District board of supervisors, Jay County Arts Council, Limberlost Wetlands committee and the Jay County Council.

He spent 30 years teaching in the Jay School Corporation, with 25 of those in the biology department at JCHS.

His elocution, rhetoric and loquaciousness will forever be legendary in the halls of JCHS. He is a consummate supporter of Jay County athletics, arts and academics, and has attended nearly every home football and basketball game for 35 years. He can be found sitting near the home basketball bench, generally wearing a red sweater.

After serving in the Peace Corps, Uncle Sam requested his service during the Vietnam war. The Marine Corps had something called the pacification and protection of the population program. You would guard the villagers by night and assist them. with farming during the day. This sounded like a worthwhile program, so he signed up.

Wars have a way of changing things, and things changed on Jan 21, 1968. He found himself, with 6,000 other Marines, surrounded by a force of 30,000 North Vietnamese in a remote air base called Khe Sanh.

Enemy soldiers began a continuous artillery, mortar and rocket shelling of up to 150 rounds per hour. In the first few hours the main fuel supply, tear gas, C4 supply and ammo dump were hit.

With all above ground buildings destroyed, the Marines dug in. For 77 days, under constant harassment from mortar attack, he lived in a hole he had dug in the side of a hill.

The only supplies to reach the embattled soldiers had to be dropped from the air and with intense anti-aircraft fire, only 10 percent of the intended supplies actually reached the defenders..

He changed his uniform once during those 77 days, and his mission was staying alive.

On April 1, 1968, he was called upon to carry a wounded soldier from an underground aid station to a medivac helicopter. As he was helping carry the stretcher to the waiting helicopter, an artillery round exploded close by. You need to understand that the enemy had the entire based zeroed in. with their artillery and any object that landed on the runway was an easy target. Under those circumstances, leaving the safety of an underground facility just wasn't in one's best interest. But he was a Marine and he had a duty to help save the other soldier's life.

Seriously wounded by the shrapnel from the blast, he then had to be medivaced to an aid station, then to a hospital ship, and eventually back to the U.S. for weeks of rehab. For his service during this battle, he was awarded two Purple Hearts.

The battle of Khe Sanh lasted seven more days. The enemy had been repelled, often with intense hand-to-hand combat. Finally, Marines broke through enemy lines and ended the Siege. The Marines who fought at Khe Sanh suffered a high casualty rate.

It can be said that you will be remembered for the sacrifices you make for yourself, sacrifices you make for you, or you can be remembered by the sacrifices made by those in whom you have made a difference.

Ladies and gentlemen, I'd like to present the winner of the 2009 Star of Character Award for Citizenship, a man who has made and continues to make a difference: Dan Orr.

Cross tangible symbol of the presence of God; Enlisted men take comfort, gain strength through prayer in the battlefield

Pastor Ray Stubbe served as Chaplain to the Navy during the Vietnam War. Recently in preparation for the publication of a book as well as a Vietnam veterans celebration at Lambeau Field in Green Bay, Pastor Stubbe was asked to be photographed with an object from his time of service that held special meaning for him. The cross he holds was used several times during worship and prayer in Vietnam with the enlisted men he served. James Gill of Wisconsin Public Television took the photo. The photo on the right shows one of the times that Pastor Stubbe used the cross, Christmas Day of 1968 in DaNang, atop one of the Marble Mountains.

RAYS CORNER

Tommy,

"Bagpipes" Jim Taylor, of the CAC unit at Khe Sanh, called me yesterday and said that he discovered I was on U Tube--the boxing event from a couple of years ago when I fought Mike Tarnoff. It was my first fight and Mike's 12th or so. Mike was a southpaw who had trained with Gleason's in New York and had fought there and also England.

I wasn't intimidated, however having sparred with him previously. I know my competition. Although he won by points, most there told me at the time (and since) that they thought I had won. Be that as it may, when I watched the replay on U Tube, I was a bit ashamed of my performance, seeing how slow I was. Nevertheless, I was the aggressive one and used proper techniques. It sort of surprised me, however, that someone still is able to view this! Taylor thought I had done quite well, and that lessened my embarrassment over the fight.

On another subject, our organization should petition the United States Postal Service to issue a stamp, perhaps part of a set remembering Tet that might include Khe Sanh, Hue City, and the Tet Offensive in general.

The reunion for 2018, the 50th anniversary year, might appropriately be a time to invite prominent people to give an address. If they're still around, people like General James L. Jones, for example, might be a good choice Suggestions for stamp subjects should be sent to: Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee U.S. Postal Service 1735 North Lynn St., STE 5013 Arlington VA 22209-6432. The timing of the request would involve submission a year or two before it was due to be issued (in this case, 2016). They do the design.

ED NOTE: Ray attached an article outlaying the requesting and submission requirements for having a stamp issued. Due to space availability I will post it in the next issue.

So it was, it was grim and it was unfeeling grimness. Marines had asked me, "Where is God in all of this?" I talk about the humor in maintaining life in a situation of death. I guess because we knew we were going to die anyway, we were somewhat free to live. You don't have to worry about getting wounded or worrying about dying. So some guy's out there by himself, wounded, and the rounds are going off. Well, you just go run out, dash, and drag him in. I tell people, "God gives us courage to go on. God gives life, and by having humor, by having courage in death situations, God is giving us life. God is present in sharing and caring for each other. Everyone who was there knows about that. God is present in ways-not in a spectacular show of force, but blessing us with life and courage and love of each other, Love is always an action, not an emotion, basically, biblically anyway.

"LITTLE SAIGON"

By Craig W. Tourte

See, the problem is that I am just a sensitive guy. I happened to notice in the newspaper this morning a full page article about the local Vietnamese community, their trials and tribulations, and contribution to the local community in the form of restaurants, etc. and that they have established themselves in a part of town that at one time was filled with crime and gangs. Oh sure there continues to be problems, but at least they were giving it a shot. One of the politicians recalled seeing that "Little Saigon" sign down in Santa Ana (Ca) along the freeway and thought it would be a wonderful idea to place a similar sign along the roadway as one entered the area where the Vietnamese are now the majority of residence.

I tried, but I just couldn't help myself and shot off a "Letter to the Editor", you know, something like this: "City Councilman Kevin McCarty initiated the campaign after seeing a 'Welcome to Little Saigon' freeway sign in Santa Ana." "A few years ago I drove to San Diego and visited the Marine Corps Recruit Depot where I had spent a number of grueling weeks in 1966. I was overwhelmed with memories, as I stood alone on the huge parade ground recalling the young men I had trained with who were looking forward to serving their country and becoming Marines.

On my drive back to Northern California I too noticed the sign in Santa Ana that read "Little Saigon." I knew why the sign was posted there; it denoted a portion of that city which had welcomed the multitudes of Vietnamese who had settled there after the war. The Vietnamese prospered, raised their families, started successful businesses and sent their children off to the finest American schools. I'm sure the ceremony was well attended when the sign was set in place, as it will be when a similar sign is set in place along Stockton Boulevard. When the sign in Santa Ana was placed, there must have been quite a show of politicians and proud community leaders, all saying wonderful things about the opportunities America had to offer.

I wonder if anything was said about the thousands of Americans who made the ultimate sacrifice which allowed these new immigrants to come here and live their American dream. I am not aware of a Little Italy, Little Korea, Little Russia, or Little China sign in honor of the hundred of thousands of other immigrants who have migrated to the Sacramento area, nor am I aware of any type of official government sanctioned sign along the various downtown corridors denoting the many contributions of our Gay and Lesbian communities. Perhaps the Vietnamese community is special, or perhaps it's just another political gimmick."

Of course I can't write anything less than 500 words and I was forced to cut this down to 200 which was much like cutting my wrists , but I did my best. I was lucky enough to take the majority of the story from the one I had written about my trip to Albuquerque, New Mexico at the unveiling of the Khe Sanh road memorial and twist it a little to match this story. Look, we all know the "Little Saigon" sign is going to be a big hit with the local politicians and do gooders and not one word will be said about the thousands who sacrificed and bled for the opportunity given the Vietnamese to come here. I have to tell you, I am terribly small minded and unforgiving when it comes to certain issues, and I'm afraid, this is one of them.

NEW MEXICO HONORS KHE SANH VETERANS WITH HISTORICAL MARKER ON NW 124.

By Helen Davis
Cibola County Bureau
The Independent, Thursday Nov 12, 2009

BUDVILLLE -Just east of tiny Budville on N.M. Highway 124, on the day before Veterans Day, the New Mexico Department of Transportation helped to set a memorial to the often forgotten.

The department, working with Khe Sanh Veterans, Inc., and Kirkland Air Force Base, unveiled a monument to veterans Tuesday, at mile marker 16.3 on the road also known as Historic Old Road 66.

The Official Scenic Historic Marker is dedicated to the memory of 10 New Mexico servicemen killed in the Battle of Khe Sanh, Vietnam. Delane Baros, media officer for the District 6 NMDOT said.

"The ultimate sacrifice of these 10 servicemen will remain In our hearts forever. This historic marker will remind us of the sacrifices our veterans have given, and the sacrifices our military continues to give while defending our country."

The small battle memorial speaks for many more than the American soldiers killed in the battle or who died later of wounds Sustained. Baros said in a news release, that the battle killed 2,097 U.S. servicemen.

District 6 Transportation Commissioner Jackson Gibson underlined debts owed to service personnel in saying "Many New Mexicans from all walks of life served in war-torn countries, and many paid with their lives, so we can remain free. like many, I am proud to be a Vietnam Veteran, but we need to recognize, and remember all those who served, not only In Vietnam, but elsewhere in the world at different times and in different conflicts, and wars."

Transportation officials, Sergeant of Arms Harold Lockwood of the National American Indian Veterans Organization, Tom Eichler, Past president of Khe Sanh Veterans,. Inc. as well as representatives of the United States Legislature attended the public ceremony unveiling the historic marker. Tom Eichler acted as emcee for the ceremony.

NMDOT Transportation Commissioner Gibson, a Vietnam veteran himself, was presented the American flag folded in the traditional 13-fold triangle, Baros said. District 3 Transportation Commissioner Doug Peterson and NMDOT Adjutant Secretary Rebecca Montoya spoke for the unveiling.

New Mexico's United State senators and congressmen were represented by Sarah Cobb for Senator Tom Udall, and Dan Armijo for Congressman Harry Teague, who both spoke.

After speakers concluded, the Laguna Elementary School Dancers performed for those assembled.

At a reception following the unveiling, the Grants High School Marine Corps Junior ROTC performed at the Silver City Casino Pinon Room. The event also honored the Marine Corps' 234th Birthday, with traditional cake, and other refreshments, Baros, said. The Marines were established November 10, 1775, at Tun's Tavern in Philadelphia.

Baros added that approximately 300 people, including veterans from many parts of New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, and California, among others, attended the events.

The Khe Sanh Veterans, Inc was established on Christmas Eve 1983 by retired United States Navy Chaplain, Ray W. Stubbe.

ED NOTE:
When I was invited to New Mexico to emcee the dedication of the Historical Marker honoring the Khe Sanh Veterans, and those 10 members from New Mexico who perished there, I was deeply honored. I was also undecided on what I would say to the multitude that I anticipated would attend.

I then remembered a short piece Craig Tourte had written regarding Highway Markers and what they meant to him. I felt the same way and his feelings did echo those of Khe Sanh Veterans. I was deeply moved by his story and asked him to expand on it and represent the Khe Sanh Veterans at the unveiling.

He graciously Accepted and the following is his presentation of what this monument means to the Khe Sanh Veterans.

"A PLACE THAT ALWAYS WAS"

On Tuesday, November 10, 2009, the state of New Mexico dedicated and unveiled an Official Scenic Historic Road Marker honoring those who died at "The Battle of Khe Sanh, Vietnam 1968." The beautiful wooden marker is inscribed: "The Battle of Khe Sanh claimed the lives of 2,097 United States servicemen. This historic marker is dedicated to honor and preserve the memory of New Mexico servicemen who were killed in action or later died of their wounds. The Khe Sanh Vietnam veterans will forever live in each others' hearts." In addition, the marker is inscribed with the names of nine of those who were killed from the State of New Mexico. I am sure more names will eventually be included, as that information becomes available.

I, Tom Eichler, David Tonick, Bob Greenwood and numerous other Khe Sanh Veterans assembled at the ceremonial site, along with a gathering of several hundred, including but not limited to, Rebecca Montoya representing Transportation Commissioner Gary L.J. Giron, Sarah Cobb representing U.S. Senator Tom Udall, Dan Armijo representing Congressman Harry Teague, and National American Indian Veterans Commander Don Loudner. It was a privilege and honor for me to have been introduced as a Khe Sanh Veteran and afforded the opportunity to offer a few remarks.

"A few years ago I drove to San Diego and visited the Marine Corps Recruit Depot where I had spent a number of grueling weeks in 1966. It was the first time I had returned since I earned the right to wear the coveted Eagle, Glove and Anchor of the United States Marine Corps. As I stood alone on the huge parade ground I was overwhelmed with memories recalling the young men I had trained with. They came from all over this great nation and were looking forward to becoming Marines and serving their country. It was evening when I started my drive back to Northern California, and was dark when I reached the West side of Los Angeles on the 408 Freeway. As my mind wandered back to the Recruit Depot, Quonset huts and drill instructors, I happened to glance to my right and noticed a road sign caught in the beams of my headlights that read "Little Saigon." I knew why the sign was posted there. It denoted a portion of that city which had welcomed the multitudes of Vietnamese who had settled there after the war.

The Vietnamese prospered, raised their families, started successful businesses and sent their children off to the finest American Schools. I'm sure the ceremony was well attended when the "Little Saigon" sign was set in place, and there must have been quite a showing of politicians and proud community leaders, all saying wonderful things about the opportunities America had to offer. I wonder if anything was said that day about the thousands of Americans who made the ultimate sacrifice which allowed these new immigrants to live their American Dream."

"When I saw photographs of these Historic Markers honoring fallen Khe Sanh heroes erected along the roadway in this wonderful and great state of New Mexico, I thought of that sign I had observed near the Los Angeles freeway and I knew I had to come here and attend this dedication to America's finest. I had to stand alongside this highway and in some small way join the souls of those whose names are inscribed here. I had to hear their names recognized and I wanted their surviving families to know that the greatest sacrifice made by their loved ones truly mattered.

The mention of Khe Sanh along with the great battles of Concord, Gettysburg and Normandy in the president's inaugural address, forever confirms to our nation and the world that the Battle of Khe Sanh holds a significant place in American history. Though many years have passed, we will always remember and we will forever mourn those we lost, from all branches of the military. We'll never forget the one's we stood shoulder-to-shoulder with in the trench lines, those who faced incredible hardships on the surrounding hills, those who flew above in desperate attempts to extract our wounded and dead and supply us with the critical material necessary for us to persevere. All will be forever cherished in our hearts. We survivors of that long and horrific battle will never forget the fallen. We will never forget how and why they sacrificed for us, for you, and for our wonderful country. We will never forget where they served or who they are. The fallen hero's of Khe Sanh will continue to be a part of who we are, for the rest of our lives."

CRAIG FURTHER WROTE OF HIS EXPERIENCE

"As a representative of the Khe Sanh Veterans, I am proud to have been a part of this special dedication - whose primary sponsor, recognition and driving force has been this area's Native American Community."

The location of the "Official Scenic Historic Marker" is identified as being at New Mexico 124, Mile Marker 16.5. In actuality, it sits along the old Historic Route 66 Highway, North of Interstate 40 at the 104 Exit in an area identified as Acoma, New Mexico. It was an approximate 50 mile drive along Interstate 40 from the City of Albuquerque to reach an area known as "The Sky City." The Sky City is actually an area where the Acoma people lived centuries ago atop a mesa to protect themselves from enemy attacks by neighboring bands. The Native American's who live in the area are identified as the

"Acoma" which means "Place of readiness." According to a little research, "Native American legend" describes Acoma as a "place that always was." Native history says "...it was first inhabited about 700 A.D." "Archaeologists agree that it has been continuously occupied from at least 1150 A.D. to the present." Acoma, New Mexico is generally considered "America's oldest continually inhabited city."

The drive from Albuquerque to "The Sky City" where the Historic Marker is located is not unlike any other drive I have taken along a desolated high desert highway. Long, straight and lonely for the bored and weary traveler who too often focuses attention on what's over the next rise. One could pass Acoma in the blink of an eye and never know anything was there except sand, sagebrush and red dirt. I wondered why a monument honoring these heroes would be erected in such a desolate location and not in a more densely populated area.

It was early evening when Tom, David and I drove out to the site of the Historic Road Marker where I met Harold E. Lockwood (HMH-CH-53 Sea Stallions) for the first time. Harold is a tall, proud Native American, former Marine and Vietnam Veteran who is the Sergeant at Arms of the National American Indian Veterans. We stood together as darkness approached, surrounded by red sky with a few wispy clouds off in the distance and tall red table top mountains rising up from the desert floor. Harold identified his house a quarter mile or so away from where we were standing. With the swing of his arm in a wide arc he told me about his cousins, friends, other relatives and Native Americans who lived nearby and identified those who had served and those who had made the ultimate sacrifice, all from the Reservations. We talked about the arrival of the early Missionaries, the Native American children who had been taken from their parents and even to this day, the hardships his people face.

We spent a few minutes talking about his service in the United States Marine Corps and the three years he served in Vietnam. The tragically brutal injuries and death he had observed as a helicopter machine gunner, too often recovering the dead and wounded. The missions off of ships made by young boys who eagerly entered combat for the first time, all dressed in new green uniforms and combat gear and his painful recovery of their remains after the battles. Harold remembered all of these events clearly and with great sadness as he looked up into that red evening sky, silently remembering the pain that is often overwhelming, as he searched for the words that would somehow explain to the outsider, the horrors he had witnessed. Remembrances I knew were still prevalent.

The following day during the dedication ceremony there were a group of young children from one of the local Native American schools who preformed a dance. Adorned in Native American costume, I observed they all had very intense looks on their faces. I realized that the dance these children performed was a serious cultural interpretation of events and beliefs that had been handed down from one generation to the next. The dance was significant to the Native People and fitting in that it was performed in memory of those who had sacrificed for their people and our country.

As I stood alone looking out across the Acoma, viewing the red earth color of the valley and hills, not so dissimilar in color to the red clay of Khe Sanh, I glanced up into the very wide open sky and understood why fate had brought "The Battle of Khe Sanh" marker here. Somehow fate had brought this remembrance marker to this spot, because this place is a "Place That Always Was," A "Place of Readiness" and in a way, a place of safety for those who we will never forget.

Along with Tom Eichler and David Tonick we assisted Harold Lockwood (National American Indian Veterans Sergeant of Arms) and Jackson Gibson (District Six Transportation Commissioner) with removing the American Flag from the marker and presenting the ceremonial flag to the New Mexico Department of Transportation in recognition of their dedication to Khe Sanh Veterans and to those Veterans from the great state of New Mexico whose loss will be forever recognized and mourned.

Tom Eichler emceed the ceremony and introduced the various speakers, honored guests and provided Certificates of Appreciation from the Khe Sanh Veterans Association to all involved with making this historic event possible. In addition to those mentioned, Tom's effort included recognizing individual transportation employees who worked so hard on this project along with the 377th Force Support Squadron, Kirkland Air Force Base and the Grants High School Marine Corps Junior ROTC program, along with many other participants and supporters. Tom's generous effort as an ambassador and representative of the Khe Sanh Veterans Association, was nothing short of Herculean as he worked late into the evening hours coordinating speakers and honored guests, gathering those participating in the ceremony in preparation of the flag unveiling, obtaining the necessary material to be included in the various Certificates presented, and reading the name's of the deceased inscribed on the Historic Marker. This event was a testament to Tom's dedication to our Association and I was proud to have been a participant.

UPCOMING DEDICATION OF THE KHE SANH VETERANS BRIDGE NEAR THE SITE OF OUR NEWLY DEDICATED HISTORICAL MARKER IN THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO

ED NOTE:
I recently received the following notification from Johnny Gallegos who was greatly instrumental in obtaining the KSV Historical Highway Marker in the State of New Mexico on November 10th 2009. It is addressed to I, and Harold Lockwood (KSV) who came up with the whole original concept

Tom/Harold

I spoke with Commissioner Jackson Gibson today and the preliminary approval to name the 104 Bridge "KHE SANH BRIDGE" went well. According to Mr. Gibson the approval will be announced on April 15th, 2010, during the Commission meeting in Albuquerque NM. Mr. Gibson would like to have both of you at this meeting when the announcement is made if possible. Also, we are looking at having the dedication for the Bridge on Friday May 21st, 2010. We only have about 2 1/2 months to prepare so we have to get busy and we will keep you posted.

It looks like we will have an approval by April. We will start getting things together for the dedication possibly on July 2.

Thanks for all you help,

Johnny Gallegos

ED NOTE:When we were planning the dedication of the Historical Marker I personally notified all the members of the KSV who resided in the State of New Mexico, and kept them informed of plans, and dates for the event. I will do the same thing for the upcoming Bridge Dedication. Any member of the KSV or the general Public is invited to the event. We had a great turnout for the highway marker as you can see, and read from the afore written article.

THE HIGH GROUND

By Robert Clark

A couple of years ago someone asked me if I still thought about Vietnam. I nearly laughed in their face. How do you stop thinking about it? Every day for years, I wake up with it, and go to bed with it. But this is what I said "Yea, I think about it,. I can't quit thinking about it. I never will. But, I've learned to live with it. I'm comfortable with the memories. I've learned to stop trying to forget and learned instead to embrace it. It just doesn't scare me anymore. A psychologist once told me that not being affected by the experience over there would be abnormal. When he told me that, it was like he's just given me a pardon. It was as if he said, " Go ahead and feel something about the place, Bob. It ain't going nowhere. You're gonna wear it for the rest of your life. Might as well get to know it." A lot of my "brothers" haven't been so lucky. For them the memories are too painful, their sense of loss too great. My sister told me of a friend she has whose husband was in Nam. She asked this guy when he was there. Here's what he said, " Just last night." It took my sister a while to figure out what he was talking about. Just last night. Yeah, I was in Nam. When? Just last night. During sex with my wife. And on my way to work this morning. Over my lunch hour. Yeah, I was there. My sister says I am not the same brother that went to Vietnam. My wife says I won't let people get close to me, not even her. They are probably both right.

Ask a vet about making friends in Nam. It was risky. Why? Because we were in the business of death, and death was with us all the time. It wasn't the death of, "If I die before I wake." This was the real thing. The kind where boys scream for their mothers. The kind that lingers in your mind and become more real each time you cheat it. You don't want to make a lot of friends when the possibility of dying is that real, that close. When you do, friends become a liability.

A guy named Bob Flanigan was my best friend Bob Flanigan is dead. I put him in a body bag one sunny day, April 29, 1969. We'd been talking, only a few minutes before he was shot, about what we were going to do when we got back to the world. Now, this was a guy who had come in country the same time as myself A guy who was loveable and generous. He had blue eyes and sandy blonde hair. When he talked, it was with a soft drawl, Flanigan was a hick and he knew it. That was part of his charm. He didn't care.

Man, I loved this guy like the brother I never had. But, I screwed up. I got too close to him. Maybe I didn't know any better. But I broke one of the unwritten rules of war. Don't get close to people who are going to die. Sometimes you can't help it. You hear vet's use the term "buddy" when they refer to a guy they spend war with.

"Me and this buddy of mine" "Friend" sounds too intimate, doesn't it. "Friend" calls up images of being close. If he's a friend, then you are going to be hurt if he dies, and war hurts enough without adding to the pain. Get close, get hurt. It's as simple as that. In war you learn to keep people at that distance my wife talks about. You become so good at it, that forty years after the war, you still do it without thinking. You won't allow yourself to be vulnerable again. My wife knows two people who can get into the soft spots inside me. My daughters .. I know it probably bothers her that they can do this. It's not that I don't love my wife, I do. She's put up with a lot from me. She'll tell you that when she signed on for better or worse she had no idea there was going to be so much of the latter.

But with my daughters it's different. My girls are mine. They'll always be my kids. Not marriage, not distance, not even death can change that. They are something on this earth that can never be taken away from me. I belong to them. Nothing can change that. I can have an ex-wife, but my girls can never have an ex-father. There's the difference.

I can still see the faces, though they all seem to have the same eyes. When I think of us I always see a line of "dirty grunts" sitting on a paddy dike. We were caught in the first gray silver between darkness and light. The first moment when we know we've survived another night, and the business of staying alive for one more day is about to begin. There was so much hope in that brief space of time. It's what we used to pray for "One more day, God. One more day." And I can hear our conversations as if they'd only just been spoken. I still hear the way we sounded, the hard cynical jokes, our morbid senses of humor. We were scared to death of dying, and trying our best not to show it.

I recall the smells, too. Like the way cordite hangs on the air after a fire-fight. Or the pungent odor of rice paddy mud. The mud of Nam smells ancient, somehow. Like it's always been there. And I'll never forget the way blood smells, sticky and drying on my hands. I spent a long night that way once. That memory isn't going anywhere. I remember how the night jungle appears almost dream like as the pilot of a Cessna buzzes overhead, dropping parachute Hares until morning. That artificial sun would flicker and make shadows run through the jungle. It was worse than not being able to see what was out there sometimes. I remember once looking at the man next to me as a flare floated overhead. The shadows around his eyes were so deep that it looked like his eyes were gone. I reached over and touched him on the arm; without looking at me he touched my hand. "I know man, I know." That's what he said. It was a human moment. Two guys a long way from home and scared shitless. "I know man" and at that moment he did. God I loved those guys. I hurt every time one of them died. We all did. Despite our posturing. Despite our desire to stay disconnected, we couldn't help ourselves. I know why Tim O'Brien writes his stories.

I know what gives Bruce Weigle the words to create poems so honest I cry at their horrible beauty. It's love. Love for those guys we shared the experience with. We did our jobs like good soldiers, and we tried our best not to become as hard as our surroundings. We touched each other and said "I know." Like a mother holding a child in the middle of a nightmare, "It's going to be all right." We tried not to lose touch with our humanity. We tried to walk that line. To be the good boys our parents had raised and not to give into that unnamed thing we knew was inside us all. You want to know what frightening is? It's a nineteen-year-old boy who's had a sip of that power over life and death that war gives you. It's a boy who, despite all the things he's been taught, knows that he likes it. It's a nineteen-year-old boy who's just lost a friend, and is angry and scared and, determined that, some @@%@#*s gonna pay". To this day, the thought of that boy can wake me from a sound sleep and leave me staring at the ceiling.

As I write this, I have a picture in front of me. It's of two young men. On their laps are tablets. One is smoking a cigarette. Both stare without expression at the camera. They're writing letters. Staying in touch with places they would rather be. Places and people they hope to see again. The picture shares space in a frame with the one of my wife. She doesn't mind. She knows she's been included in special company. She knows I'll always love those guys who shared that part of my life, a part she never can. And she understands how I feel about the ones I know are out there yet. The ones who answer the question, "when were you in Vietnam?" "Hey, man, I was there just last night."

By Willie RO Yates W/1/13

The best I remember, Mitchell White and I were sitting near the back row in a small mill village Church in La Grange, Georgia, called Dunson Baptist Church. I'm guessing that, like me, Mitchell didn't want to sit near the front when Pastor Buddy York started walking the isles during his sermons. It seemed like he was talking directly to us when he did that.

This squared away young man dressed in a sharp uniform walked in and sat down. I did not know his name due to the fact that he was 5 years my senior. Asking questions, I learned his name was Jimmy Rogers, United States Marine Corps, on his way to Vietnam. Wow! The uniform, the stripes, USMC!

Mitchell had a brother-in-law in the Marine Corps, and had mentioned to me about going after we graduated high school in 1967. Thanks but no thanks was my answer.

Same situation only one year later, Jimmy has more stripes. He was home on leave before returning to Vietnam. I had just graduated, and was wondering, had this thing called USMC affected his mind? He was going back because he wanted to?

Less than a month later I was wondered about my own mind.

Life is strange, after having a disagreement with my girl friend, I decided to punish her, I joined the Marine Corps. You figure that out...

The last part of January of 1968, I was in Khe Sanh with Whisky 1/13. Someone had to go up to hill 861. I was the new man and Khe Sanh was too hot for me, so I was sent to hill 861.

Forty years have passed, I ran across some of Jimmy's family and I asked about him. Where was he in Vietnam, and who was he with. They told me he was on some hill. Well, there are thousands of hills in Vietnam.

L-R Jimmy Rogers and Willie Ro Yates

About a year later after that, I crossed paths with his family member again. He had just returned from West Virginia visiting Jimmy. "Jimmy was on hill 861," said Hollis." "When, and with what outfit?' I shout. He got there in 1967, and left the later part of March in 1968. He was with Kilo 3/26. It was so hard to believe. I was there the same time, 10,000 miles away from Dunson Baptist Church. Hollis and Glen both said, "I don't understand why you didn't see each other and talk." Well, you don't just go bouncing around in the open looking for someone you might know. Especially if you didn't know they were there.

Thanksgiving 2009, Jimmy is in Georgia visiting. He and I got together. It was great! We shed some tears, had some laughs, and opened our hearts to each other. I played some music, one being, "Nowhere to run Nowhere to hide."

That small Church prayed both of us home safely but, unfortunately, one was lost. His name was Mitchell White, USMC, he was killed in action May first 1968 at Cau Viet with 2/4. Two out of three ain't bad, I guess? It would have been better if it could have been three out of three. I sure wish Mitchell could have been with us to celebrate Thanksgiving this year. That would have been a greater reunion.

THE GHOSTRIDER FOUNDATION

By Tim DeWolf
H&S & E CO 2/9

Tom,

As usual my renewal is a little late but I have enclosed a donation in memory of Lt. John H. Carson, CO of Echo 2/9. John was my CO and my friend and he died just west of a little bridge on the road between LZ Stud and KSCB. June 1968 - he was there and then he wasn't. Isn't that the way it was in those days?

I read the newsletter in little spurts mostly because I can only take in so much at one time - the memories and emotions seem stronger now than they did years before. Judging from what I read there are many who see things as I do.

I have another anniversary to remember now - January 6th 2007. Sgt. Joe Lorek a 3 tour (2nd LAR) OIF vet took his own life. He was like a little brother to me - I taught him to shoot while he was in High School. He wanted to date my daughter. We rode in the same motorcycle club.

I was a mentor to him as he entered the USMC and while he was active. Later when he was discharged I was a mentor as he went through struggles with PTSD. We made promises to each other but sadly he couldn't keep his last promise to me.

He went out for a few drinks, gassed up his car, bought some cigarettes and then went home and shot himself. Just before he killed himself he called his brother and his brother called me - it took us less than 15 minutes to get to Joe but it was already too late - eternally too late.

Joe's road name was Ghostrider - it was the only song he could play on his guitar without moving his lips and counting. We laughed about that a lot before.

We (my family) started a foundation to work with returning vets from all services. Right now we are just local and although we have a 501c3 IRS registration I don't feel we have done all we can. The website has some good information and although we operate just in NE Ohio now maybe we can expand.

It took me 30 years to recognize my problems and accept the cause was based in my memories and experiences from Vietnam. I suppose that in memory of Ghostrider I hope I can make a small difference in another vets life before he gets to where Joe and I went.

Visit our foundation for more information. This is not a solicitation, we are pretty good at funding ourselves.

THE VALLEY OF BLUE LIGHT

By Gary Foster
May 14, 2003

The week in Quang Tri Province promised to be beautiful. Such a welcome change from my previous visit. The farther I drove south from Vinh and the closer I got to Dong Ha, the more excited I became. As usual the weather in Vinh was lousy and due to the high humidity there, I felt wet all the time. But now, as I drove south on National Highway No.1, the air roared through the car as I rolled down the windows to feel the much drier sunshine-filled air. My spirits began to soar as the sun rose higher, lingering at its apex before starting its slow descent back to the horizon, all the while causing shadows to lengthen, shorten, and lengthen again. I drove across the Ben Hai River, stopping briefly to reflect on the significance of an American driving across the DMZ unescorted. I had arrived in Quang Tri Province, Leatherneck square, the geographical top of Eye Corps. I was in the meat grinder.

Not much longer, at around two in the afternoon, I arrived in Dong Ha. The date was March 19, 2003. This date is important only to me because it was one week short of three years when I arrived, for the first time, at close to midnight, in Quang Tri Province. Since that time, my company had been working on the design and construction tendering of Highway No. 9 from Dong Ha to Lao Bao, and a bypass that swung north of Dong Ha from Cam Lo to access the Cua Viet Port directly. The total project entailed some 98 kilometers of two lane asphalt road and about 20 new bridges. Finally, construction on the highway had begun in February 2003, just a month before my arrival. I wanted to see the progress for myself on this historic – in some ways the most historic highway in Vietnam, even arguably, throughout the world. But I also had other interests for being there. I wanted to try to locate any remnants of the USMC bridge over the Rao Quan River. I had seen photos of Bridge Number 9 on the KS Veterans web site and I wanted to see the actual site myself. I also had another mission: I wanted to try to climb hills 861 and 558 and place a tiny USMC flag on the latter.

My previous trip to the hills was spoiled due to gloomy, rather doubtful weather and I was so pressed for time that I was precluded from making the necessary effort. Now, I had two days (today and tomorrow) to myself so I was looking forward to this return. In addition to the two objectives, I would also continue to help Donna Elliot find information about her brother if I could, though I knew there was not much that I could do.

After a quick lunch of french fries and onions, I drove straight to the Rao Quan River where Highway 9 makes a sharp left turn into a horseshoe bend across the river and just below the Khe Sanh Plateau. But along the way, I had to stop at Dau Mau and try to orient myself with a photo taken during the NVA attack on that South Vietnam military base in 1972. I identified ridgelines, but everything else had changed and I found no evidence of any occupation, NVA or otherwise. I drove on. I passed the cable-stayed bridge across the Quang Tri River that leads south along Highway No. 14 to the A Shau Valley. It was under construction three years ago but has been completed for over a year. I like the bridge but I must admit, it is out of proportion to the surrounding scenery and environment. The sign pointing the way to the "Vestige of Tacon Base" (Khe Sanh) is still there.

The weather continued delightful, but it was getting late. As I drove, I thought back to the many lengthy telephone conversations I had with Dennis Mannion weeks before regarding photos seen on the KS web site. Dennis asked me many questions about the landmarks and where KS was in relation to the bridge and vice versa. The places in the photos I had seen were so familiar that I told Dennis I knew and had stood exactly where each shot was taken. Dennis sent me copies of his old military maps and after I received them, we had very lengthy, lively telephone conversations. His wife Joan and his family must think we are totally nuts. Dennis recounted so many stories and places. Because of that and some other photos I had sent to KS Vets taken on previous trips, I had stirred up some lengthy e-mails and telephone calls, mostly with Dennis. The photo that intrigued me the most was that of the pontoon bridge over the Rao Quan River. I knew I could find the exact location of the bridge. I wanted to see if I could match the exact spot from where the photo had been taken showing the pontoon bridge placed next to old bridge piers. I decided I had to see the place for myself. Even if I had been there a number of times, my memory precisely of the landmarks was a little tarnished. I confused the Rao Quan and Quang Tri Rivers at their junction and farther downstream; me thinking that the Quang Tri River was a continuation of the Rao Quan River. But I did not mistake the Rao Quan bridge crossing and I went directly there.

I stopped at several places along the Quang Tri River and along the short Rao Quan River. Finally I reached the bridge, labeled by kilometer (km56) in the Vietnamese system and labeled number 9 in the USMC or Seabees designation – at any rate a famous bridge and one that cannot be missed. I walked down the embankment on both sides. I could see the remains of an old road that was bulldozed down to the water from the main road. There was no evidence of anyone having been there at anytime other than the road which had eroded over time. After considerable stomping around and looking, and searching, and adjusting positions, I finally located the exact spot from which the original photograph was taken and I took a photo in the same direction. Again, like at Dau Mau, except for the ridgelines and the old abandoned bridge piers built by the French, much had changed. I would send these photos to Dennis. I spotted a 12x12 piece of lumber that was badly deteriorated so I supposed this was part of a bunker at one time or another. Traffic was minimal as I walked back up to the main road, now paved. There were no sounds at this time of the evening, and there was no breeze. The sun shone brightly, so I had nothing to worry about for the next day.

I had only a little more than an hour of sunlight left so I decided to drive hurriedly on to Khe Sanh Ville and then on to Lang Vei. I had heard that recent construction on Highway 9 had begun ironically at Lang Vei. I knew I could not make it to the Khe Sanh Combat Base that evening before nightfall, and would not try.

I drove through Khe Sanh Ville, not veering off the highway towards the base but kept on towards Lang Vei. It does not take long to drive there. Sure enough as I topped a hill, I could see the Lang Vei Vietnamese tank monument and some construction equipment. The crews were simply scraping the ground, beginning their initial earthwork cuts, and clearing the vegetation for the alignment survey and cross sections. "Interesting," I mused to myself. I pulled off the road and stopped the car next to the tank monument and opened the door and climbed down on the ground. Then it hit me: I stopped dead in my tracks. Right there in front of me, the bulldozers had unearthed what had to be the rectangular concrete roofs of concrete bunkers from the Special Forces camp that was overwhelmed by attacking NVA on February 7, 1968. This date marked the first time tanks were used by the NVA in the war. The two concrete slabs were positioned at an angle to one another. So surprised, I thought "This couldn't be the Special Forces bunkers." But sure enough, just in front of me, totally uncovered, there they were. Logic told me I was looking at history, literally being uncovered, before my very eyes. I did not know whether I was seeing the roofs or the floors but the concrete slabs, scraped bare, were completely smooth and there were no wall stems or protruding reinforcing steel that would indicate a wall or a remnant of a wall. "Had to be the bunkers," I said audibly, then looked around to see if anyone was in earshot. I didn't know how many bunkers there were, but I had heard a rumor that there were remains of an American MIA, James Leslie Moreland, possibly still inside one of the bunkers. I had no way of knowing, and do not know now whether there were any American MIA remains there, but I have regretted, ever since this visit, that I myself could not take the time to explore the situation further. It still bothers me that I was not able to do so. The whole issue of MIAs in Vietnam is not a welcome topic among the Vietnamese, and one has to be careful.

I walked around the denuded site and spotted three very large bomb craters behind the tank monument on the ridgeline facing Laos. I was to learn that the equipment operator had almost toppled his bulldozer into the largest one (25 feet in diameter and 10 feet deep).

I have always wondered how de-miners work and what equipment they use. Not far from the tank monument, emerging from behind a small hill, a Vietnamese man was waving a metal detector in front of him just a few inches above the ground. He made long sweeps from left to right and back again as he walked slowly forward. He was de-mining. I walked over to him and tried to take his picture but he was a little wary of this and kept turning away. Finally I was able to take a shot of him as he worked. Then he waved me over to the side of the hill and pointed at 2 mortar shells. I was to learn later these were 40mm and 60 mm shells. We also found a 105mm shell and lots of metal fragments. I told him I wanted a piece of shrapnel and he took me to a place and waved his detector just above the ground and reached down and scooped up some dirt with his small crooked shovel and, bingo, up came a sizeable piece of shrapnel. He handed me the piece of rusting metal, which I pocketed and decided I would bring home and give to Frank Willoughby, the Special Forces commander of Lang Vei during the siege in 1968 (I learned later that Mr. Willoughby passed away in 1998, so I sent the shrapnel to Ray Stubbe for his Khe Sanh archival collection). I returned to the tank monument and then back to the bomb craters. I began spotting mortar shells everywhere and I saw one in the bottom of the largest bomb crater. It had evidently rolled down there when the bulldozers cleared the area. I walked into the crater and, much to my surprise, had a very difficult time climbing back out – another one of those life experiences out of the way, with no need to repeat it.

The sun began to close with the horizon and I loaded back into the car, but just before doing so, I noticed a large billboard sign, dominated by the smiling face of an obviously optimistic Vietnamese woman, placed by the Vietnam National Administration of Tourism across the road from the tank monument. The sign read half in Vietnamese and half in English, the English version stating, "Vietnam – A Destination for the New Millennium." Yup, right here in Quang Tri Province, central Vietnam, next to Laos, adjacent to the Ho Chi Minh Trail, down the road from Khe Sanh; yes sir, right here on top of a ridgeline at Lang Vei. I stopped and pondered the irony of such a sign.

I drove back to Khe Sanh Ville as it was getting late, in fact now already dark. I decided to return straight to Dong Ha. The weather remained balmy so surely the weather would be as pleasant the next day as it had been today. I enjoyed the drive on Highway 9. There is hardly any traffic to speak of and the scenic vistas are wonderful to behold. I cruised along, not slowly but not at a fast pace either. It was a very pleasant drive. Along the banks of the Quang Tri River as I approached a small Bru village, I noticed a vague blue-azure tint along the roadway. I did not pay much attention to it and basically forgot about it. I would be reminded of it the next day. I drove on. Back past Dau Mau and the Rockpile, through Da Krong, past the turn off to Camp Carroll (still have not found the fire base), and through Cam Lo, finally arriving in Dong Ha. The day was over and I looked forward to the next day when I would visit the combat base again and try to climb Hill 558 and maybe some of 861. But the weather was not to be.

To back up, through e-mail correspondence, I had made promises to two US Marine KS Vets: John Pessoni and Jacob Krygowski. Now I reminded myself that the next day I had to carry out the promises. These were not big acts of skill, or sacrifice, or courage or bravery, or deeds that would place me in harm's way. The promises were more symbolic than physical so they should present no problem for me. For John or "Big John" I promised to bring back to the USA some red clay from the base. Before I left the states, I made sure to include in my luggage some plastic zipper-locking sandwich baggies with which to collect the red dirt. For Jacob, I promised to place on top of hill 558 a small USMC flag that he had sent to me. That evening in Dong Ha, I collected the plastic bags and located Jacob's letter containing the rolled up miniature flag.

There isn't much for one to do in Dong Ha, but there was one nice bar about 200 feet up the street from the hotel. The beer was so cold, I consumed it in 5 seconds flat, or so it seemed, and ordered another one. But the second beer was as warm as the first beer was cold. What a disappointment. But that is how things work in Vietnam. The bartender replaced the cold beer with a warm beer in the frige, and then when he received an order for another beer, merely grabbed the one he had just put in the frige. Beer is beer, right!? But the third beer was cold again. Two out of three. Not bad.

My hopes of good weather were dashed as soon as I woke up the next day. The morning dawned gray. So dark was it that I became depressed thinking that it would ruin my day and interfere with my planned trip back to the Khe Sanh Plateau. I had only one free day remaining. For the second trip in a row to KSCB, the day would probably be murky and wet, the base muddy. Disappointed, I consoled myself with the thought that, "Well maybe up on the Khe Sanh Plateau it would be clearer…maybe….."

After the usual four cups of very bitter coffee, brewed Vietnamese style - using a small aluminum percolator, really more of a strainer, placed over the mouth of the glass - at a small café outside the Dong Ha Guest House, sitting on a piece of concrete sidewalk listening to the truck traffic and watching the kids walk to school with their backpacks slung over their backs, I drank my coffee and shuddered somewhat against the cool early morning wind. Why it seemed so cold to me was a mystery. Anyway it did. Must have been the dampness.

In the courtyard of the Dong Ha Guest House, I met an American woman named Sandy Northrop. She is an independent film maker and was filming a documentary about Vietnam people under thirty years of age and their lives after a war they don't remember. I was to meet Sandy later the next morning and we exchanged many stories about Vietnam and Africa. She made a documentary film about Pete Peterson, who was shot down over North Vietnam, became a POW for a number of years, and later served as the American Ambassador to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, eventually marrying a Vietnamese woman from Hanoi.

I left Dong Ha for Khe Sanh at around 8AM and soon passed again the familiar sounding place names, Cam Lo, Da Krong, etc. I have been that way and on that road now so many times within the last three years but I never tire of reciting the place names out loud when I see them, especially as they appear on the red and white concrete road markers: Khe Sanh - 56 kilometers, Lao Bao - 83 kilometers, Da Krong - 20 kilometers, Cam Lo -12 kilometers, Lang Vei – 35 kilometers, and so on. I remain attentive to the landmarks and constantly remind myself of the grim history that ensued here 35 years ago. In a very real sense, I have convinced myself, all of Quang Tri Province is hallowed ground, just as much and to the same extent as is Gettysburg. To the Vietnamese, it's haunted - and I'm not so sure it's not, as I was to sense and feel later.

To my increasing chagrin, the weather seemed to be deteriorating the farther west I drove. "The Rockpile should be about here, right?" But where was it?

Very low clouds and dense fog just above the roadway. Headlights on. Now to the Quang Tri River, water low in its banks. Cloudy. Not looking good. Turning to the right to diverge from the Quang Tri River and merge with the Rao Quan River, still no visibility. Over the Rao Quan Bridge where I had visited the day before and start uphill towards the plateau. Ears feeling the pressure change just like the first trip three years ago. The weather now - well, quite literally, to use a pilot's vernacular - was finally and quite "on its ass." "Dammit!" Reach the plateau, passed the new customs station and into Khe Sanh Ville. Clouds sprinkling rain. Turn right on the road to the base, make my way to the entrance, see sign pointing the way. Site appears abandoned. No one in sight. I park in front of the new museum: an A-frame structure, its concrete floor elevated about 10 feet above the ground. It appears still unused. Strange. Then I see a person emerge from the door of the old museum located adjacent to the new elevated museum. I pay my 25,000 Dong and talk to the curator. His English is quite good.

I go into the museum room. It has not changed one inch in three years. All the junk is still there. I pick up the same M16 that Paul Knight picked up a few years ago. I am alone and I find the guest registry and thumb through it; and this time I leave a message for Donna Elliot, who would return to Khe Sanh at the end of April in search of her brother Jerry, MIA, as a result of a downed helicopter near Khe Sanh, since January 68. "Donna: Welcome to Khe Sanh," I wrote and signed my name (The recent SARS epidemic got in the way of Donna's plans and Donna postponed her April trip with Danny Williams until later.)

The man inside the museum accompanies me to unlock and open the gate to allow me to enter the area of the base that has been fenced off behind the old and new museum buildings. The fence was not here three years ago. The new museum will open in June at some Vietnamese ceremony commemorating their imagined victory, I suppose. The man follows me some distance but I quickly elude him only to be met by the omnipresent souvenir hawkers – "Ah, no dog tags this time buddy." – ever reminded of the chiding I received from Dennis Mannion over my having bought, what were probably phony dog tags there three years earlier. "Yo Bro. Not this time, Dennis."

I indicate with an abrupt gesticulation that I am not interested and the souvenir man walks back to the museum. Now I am really alone. Where to go? And what's with this weather anyway? Wind, clouds, fog, and thunder in the valley below the base. The hills. Where are the hills? In the clouds. Cannot see them, any of them - 950, 1015, 861 and 861Alpha, 881N and 881S, 558, all concealed, or perhaps they disappeared.

Resigned now to the fact that my chances of standing on top of 558 are ruined, I reflected on my previous visit there. I could not make it to the top of 558, but on the road to and from the hill (same road to 861), I encountered about 30 ex-Vietnamese soldiers, NVA to be sure. They were dressed in their best uniforms complete with medals. They were having a reunion. I stopped and I talked with many of them. They could not speak English but Hoang helped me. At first he was hesitant to stop. He told me he did not know how they would react to me – I never hesitate to say I am an American, and Hoang knows that. I said "Stop the car." After only ten minutes, we were drinking tea and beer and each man shook my hand many times and showed me where he fought. They were all old men now, scrawny, and looking hungry. I posted a photo of them on the KS website and an ex-Marine said in an e-mail "The only thing holding up their uniform is their pride." A fitting comment.

I decide to explore the base. But it was going to rain. Unlike my first trip there, I now know exactly where I am. I decide to find the water point in the valley between the base and the Rao Quan River. Easy. I crossed the USMC runway – the real runway, not the red clay, or what I termed the imposter runway. The path descending to the water point is still there and I begin the muddy, slippery descent. I encounter a man with a machete and, for some reason, with a sudden cutting swipe of his arm, buries the machete in the side of a tree. He smiles and indicates he will join me. It does not take long to walk to the water point down the steep incline where steps have been carved in the dirt, now mud, to make walking a little easier. Once there, I was struck by its simple scenic beauty. The miniature, enclosed area is pastoral, serene, and very green – a world of its own. Across the stream, widened in places to grow rice, a small boy stood holding a long pole. He was herding his cows (only a few) into the stream. They stood peacefully and drank from the stream unconcerned that I was there. The young boy crossed the stream and stood motionless in the opening where I am sure the Marines had placed pump equipment many years earlier. I could see up and down the small valley for a short distance. I could also see the clouds were descending even more. It was time to make my way back up the hill to the base. The man who had buried his machete in the tree trunk followed me chattering about something. He retrieved his machete and, with a wave of his free hand, went his own way towards the west, towards the helicopter revetments. Alone again. Wind starting to kick up, clouds racing over the base. The eucalyptus trees begin to sway, their leaves rustling. It's going to rain now for sure, I thought. No raincoat. I would get soaked. Time to get Big John some red clay dirt. I crossed back over the USMC runway and walked back towards the red clay runway (parallel to the USMC runway) and then turned east and walked towards the ammunition dump. I found remnants of trenches and I supposed small bunkers with shreds of sand bag material all around. I noticed that where I was now standing, the ground remained dry, unlike elsewhere on the base. If I was going to get some dirt for John, I preferred it to be dry. I knelt down and scooped red dirt into the self-locking baggie that I had not forgotten to bring with me, and tried to put it in my pocket. It wouldn't fit so I carried it in my hand Now my hands were stained dirty red and, as I was to find out later, it seemed I could not get the stain out for a couple of days. But now at the west end of the base, the heavens had opened up and I could see sheets of rain slicing earthward at a wind induced slant. I was dry but would I stay that way? Well, I still had some things to do, so to hell with it.

I retraced my steps and walked back to the USMC runway. I wanted to find the ammo dump from the perspective of that runway, not from the perspective I had originally found it three years earlier - from the red clay runway. Walking back towards the perpendicular path to the water point, at the junction of the runway and the path, I passed two huts that had been built side by side. A dog started to run after me and was barking. I lived in Africa for 7 years and have been in the company of more than a few lions. One thing I learned: never run from a lion. If near a resting lion, and for some crazy reason you want to get closer to him, turn your back on him and you can walk backwards towards the lion to almost within touching range; just don't turn around. If you do, you're dead. But, if at a distance and being stalked or eyed, never run. It just entices and emboldens the animal and he will get you. Never run from a dog either. It encourages them more. I stopped cold and just looked at the animal and, as I thought would happen, it stopped in its tracks and merely continued to bark at me. No big deal.

I walked again along the path to the water point and then turned right, onto the USMC runway, heading east. I was the only person on the base. There was no trace of anyone near me. Not quite true of course. Another herd of cows was sauntering along the runway towards me and they were being herded this time by an older man, unlike the small boy at the water point. I let them pass and they continued on. I myself continued on towards the ammo dump along the tarmac. I spotted what appeared to be the tread marks probably of a tank. The parallel lines of the tank tread indented into the cemented crushed stone reminded me of the ruts left by chariots in the stone streets of Pompei. Those are clearly visible after thousands of years. So here too, is visible evidence of military occupation of the site at some point in the past. I walked on to find the ammo dump.

And there it was, off my right shoulder. A deep depression in the ground, unchanged from when I was there before: the remains of the ammunition dump that was struck by NVA artillery during the siege in 1968. One Oh Five and One Five Five shells everywhere. There were more shells lying on the ground than what I had remembered from before, but there they were, still scattered all over the place. I walked down into the depression and walked around gingerly. A little scary here. I was reminded of Lang Vei the day before: one never knows what is under foot in the meat grinder. I stayed for about 15 minutes and then climbed out of the depression the same way in which I had entered it. I stood on the edge of the crater and noticed that the wind had stopped, the rain farther west having also ceased. The base was silent, absolutely silent. Not a sound. Quiet as a tomb. I looked west along the runway and I saw a solid layer of clouds not more than 8 feet above the runway deck. The delineation of the clouds parallel to the earth was so remarkably clear, and without any other landmarks visible, I was transfixed. I was in a strange place filled with such ominous foreboding that it created an aura of suspense, a feeling of unknowing, subterfuge, the calm before the storm, a land filled with deep mystery and mystique - the heart of darkness. I raised my arm and could put my hand into the thick dark cloud just above my head.

I stood gazing westward at the upside down horizon along the entire length of the runway as far as I could see, which could not have been more than 500 feet or so due to the height of the trees the tops of which themselves were enveloped in the horizontal grayness. The base remained quiet, eerily so, and I continued to stand motionless, turning my head to see if there was a whisper of a breeze. Nothing. Then I turned around and faced the east end of the runway, and was startled to see a young girl not more than 20 feet from me wearing a purple jacket and a hat. She was staring right at me. She neither smiled nor did she move. She didn't seem afraid but she didn't seem overly curious either. I waved at her and said "Tsien Chao," meaning hello, but she did not respond. Her skin was dark like most Vietnamese and her hair escaping from beneath her hat was unruly. But her expressionless eyes were penetrating. We stood staring at each other for about 20 seconds. I knelt and placed the bag of dirt on the ground and adjusted my camera and took a couple of photos of her. She did not flinch or react. I stood up and then she raised her right arm and pointed in the direction of hills 950 and 1015. I turned around to see what she may be pointing at and when I turned back to look at her, she had disappeared like a phantom, I supposed into the coffee plants. At that precise moment the leaves in the trees in the area in which I was standing began to stir as evidently the wind once again picked up. Interestingly, I did not feel the wind, but I saw it move the leaves on the trees. The clouds began to move again, perpendicular to the runway. Now, without question, it was going to rain at this end of the base. It was going to pour buckets. I headed back to the cover of the museum, a long walk or run in the face of imminent downpours. I made it to the new museum and walked under the elevated floor slab out of the rain that was beginning to stream, in big droplets, from the clouds. I was safe from the deluge.

The man in the old museum, braving the intense rain, came out and walked towards me and asked me "You American?" I said, "Yes." He said to me. "America now bombing Iraq." Not surprised by the timing of events - everyone had known for months that time for Saddam Hussein was coming to an end - but taken by the irony of where I was in relationship to world events, I looked away and said back to him "So, it starts again."

After awhile the rain stopped. I had one mission left before I returned to Dong Ha. I could not see hill 558 but I could not return without placing Jacob's tiny USMC flag somewhere on the base. But this turned out to be tricky. From the museum, I walked to a secluded place, or rather what I assumed to be a secluded place. I bent down and unfurled the flag and stuck it in the red clay, then I stood back to take a picture of it for Jacob at which time a Vietnamese man, who I had not seen before, approached me from behind talking loudly. I knew instantly what he was talking about. I gestured that all was OK. And he said "No! No! No!" So I tried to indicate I just wanted to take a picture. He yelled at me some more. So I said, "Ah, OK," retrieved the flag, and acted as if I understood. Satisfied, he returned to the empty museum. Undaunted, I walked about a hundred yards away towards the east behind some trees, well out of sight, and placed the flag in the red muddy Khe Sanh soil again and this time succeeded to take several pictures of it. But then, the decision: do I leave it there, knowing it's not been placed on 558 as Jacob had requested, or do I bring it back with me to the USA? I decided that, if I left it there, someone would find it and simply take it, so what's the point? Decision made, I pulled the flag out of the ground - the bottom of the slim wood flagpole now stained red - rolled it back up and put it in my pocket. I would bring it home and mail it back to Jacob. As Jacob later wrote to me in an e-mail after he had received the flag: "To Khe Sanh and back. Thank you, Gary." Precisely. And, thank you Jacob.

Believe it or not, I had been on the base all day and now evening was approaching. I climbed in the car, and drove out of the base onto Highway 14 and turned left towards Khe Sanh Ville. At the intersection I stopped at a small café to have a beer and entered a small room. The family living there were all watching TV. So I saw with my own eyes right there in Khe Sanh Ville, on a CNN, or perhaps BBC, feed to Vietnam national television, bombs exploding in Baghdad. The TV showed B52s leaving an English airbase and I thought to myself, "The Vietnamese are no strangers to these things." Darkness was falling fast now and the area was foggy and still rainy. I paid for my refreshment and I got back into the car and started back towards Dong Ha, about an hour's drive. Down off the Khe Sanh Plateau, past the smugglers who ply the back jungle paths between Laos and Dong Ha sitting nonplussed on the side of the road on their Honda motorbikes (the passenger is usually a beautiful woman), down the hill and around the Rao Quan corner, and back along the Quang Tri River. The air was misty, dark, and still somewhat foggy, though not like up on top.

My thoughts returned to the girl in purple and how she had disappeared as suddenly as she had appeared. I wondered what it was she was pointing towards. I have heard stories that the area has taken on mystical proportions and is inhabited by ghosts. Even my usual traveling companion Hoang Tran Dung, is uneasy in Khe Sanh or Con Thien after dark. Sometimes he is very quiet. He would prefer to be out of the bush at night. I wondered to myself: was she an apparition? Thinking about it as I drove, I couldn't remember whether I had noticed if her feet left any marks in the damp spoil. Apparitions, even purple ones, float, they don't walk – and they don't need parkas, right? She was no ghost but she did appear very stealthily from nowhere and disappear equally as fast, apparently also to nowhere. I sensed I was never alone on the base, but rather was being closely watched. Of course I didn't try to look for her. I just thought she lived there somehow in one of the shanty houses constructed from odds and ends on the base. How weird.

And to add another dimension to the weirdness, I noticed again the same intriguing, surreal, certainly alluring phenomenon I had observed the night before while returning to Dong Ha. While approaching and entering the same Bru village along the Quang Tri valley that I had passed through the night before, the same strange light-blue tint suffused the road and surrounding area - a faint azure hue - but it seemed to be more intense than the night before, like it was glowing. And as I drove closer, the intensity increased, seemingly beckoning me closer, deeper - as if there would be no escape. Couldn't be the sun. It's long down. No moon. There aren't any lights, there's no traffic. What is this slight, but increasing blue glow that I see enveloping the area? I drove on and approached the village and drove into the blue light. It was like a blue fog.

I was hesitant to divert my eyes from the road but caught sight of something interesting. As if by chance, I looked to my right and could see right into the doorway of a Bru home. The inhabitants were watching TV. I could see the images on the screen clearly; the hut was that close to the road. Of course! It dawned on me in an instant. There were no supernatural forces at work. The light that bathed the area in blueness was just the collective glow from the television sets in each hut. Amazing. Each and every single Bru hut had a small television set! And, all the sets were turned on! Probably everyone was watching the war. I had never noticed that before, and never even thought they had access to such conveniences. Soon I emerged from the valley of blue light and, continuing on to Dong Ha, saw the light fade in the mist in the rearview mirror. I continued on alone on Highway No. 9 in the darkness towards the Rockpile in Quang Tri Province. The day was over. In some ways it was disappointing but in many other ways very enlightening and completely unforgettable. The rain continued to fall. America was at war again. Go USA!

MACHINE GUN FIRE SUPPRESSSES ATTACKING ENEMY ON HILL 861

KHE SANH-"Yeah, it was hell ... there 'ain't' no getting around that," said LCpl. Billy R. Moffett (Henryetta, Okla.), describing a battle on Hill 861. "Everyone may not have been as calm as they could have," he added, "but everyone did their best, and we beat them NVA good."

The battle erupted at 3:30 a.m. when an estimated battalion of North Vietnamese regulars assaulted the positions of the 26th Marines. The Marine rifle com -pany was dug in on the slopes of Hill 861, the strategic ridge northwest of the Khe Sanh Combat Base. Moffett was manning 50 Cal machinegun assigned to his 4.2 inch area hardest hit by the NVA. His assistant gunner was killed beside him, and the NVA broke through and came upon his position from the rear-but he managed to keep his gun in action throughout the battle.

"If it weren't for Billy, things might have gotten real bad," said his platoon sergeant, Sgt. 'Mike Stahl (Del Rio, Tex.), "that big machinegun really held the enemy back."

The NVA had struck with an intensive barrage of mortar and RPG rounds directed primarily at a small section of the company's perimeter. The sector was located next to a deep, jungle-covered ravine on the northwest part of Hill 861. Moffett's heavy machinegun was located about 20 meters above the main perimeter on the steep slopes of the hill.

"It was real foggy that night," he said. "We started firing down along our own lines, over the heads of our troops. The NVA spotted our position right off. They began firing RPG Rockets at us. About 20 to 30 landed in our sector.

But, the NVA managed to break the lines by concentrating their heavy weapons fire at one point of the perimeter. Moffett kept firing. Suddenly, his assistant gunner pitched forward after being shot from behind by infiltrating enemy soldiers. Moffett saw the NVA standing a few feet in back of his emplacement, but he couldn't move the big gun, so he grabbed his own rifle and opened up on him.

The Marine returned to the .50 cal. and fired into the breech the NVA had made In the lines He stayed on the gun until the enemy broke contact early that morning.

In the morning 14 enemy dead were found and another seven were captured. The break through had been mended before daylight.

A MIRACLE AT KHE SANH

KHE SANH - A well-placed miracle here and there during an enemy rocket attack never does any harm. One such 'miracle' occurred at Khe Sanh, late January, in the Twenty-sixth Marine Regiment's aid station, according to HM3 Robert J. Topmiller (Cincinnati, Ohio).

An artillery round detonated as it hit roof of the aid station in which a doctor and six corpsmen were treating three wounded Marines. The explosion knocked down some of the medical personnel and dropped the roof into the room, however, there were no casualties from the blast.

The aid station had been hit at least twice before. The first time a white phosphorus shell started a fire in a medical store room.

A chief hospitalman dashed into the burning room and extinguished the blaze to prevent serious damage to the supplies

A second round struck a combined living and storage area The living quarters were shambles but cabinets, built by the Seabees only a week earlier, prevented serious loss to the medical supplies.

CLOUD COVER, ENEMY MORTARS MAKE MISSION ON 881 ROUGH

QUANG TRI-Marine resupply helicopter's operating from Quang Tri found flying conditions difficult when diverted to pick up a wounded Marine near Hill 881.

Two C46 Sea Knights of Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 262 flew under almost impossible weather conditions.

Two separate attempts were made by HMM-262 pilots to get into the landing zone. The first was by Capt. S. Dickey (Tacoma, Wash.). "The area we were called into was so cloudy that you could hardly see he said

We made three attempts to get into the zone but just couldn't make it. I brought the copter to the base of the hill and as trying to hover my way up to the landing zone when we started receiving fire. Two mortars went off below us and as we were pulling off, a third just missed, he continued. After the unsuccessful attempts by Dickey and his crew, another try was made to reach the Marine by another HMM-262 helicopter.

The pilot, Capt. R.F. Yeager (Roslyn Heights, N.Y.), and his co-pilot, 1stLt. C.L. Corookall (Staten Island, N.Y.), under the cover of darkness, tried to locate the landing zone-this time with success.

"By flying at night we had hoped that the clouds would have lifted and we would have no problem getting in and getting the wounded man," said Corookall.

"When we arrived in the area," he continued, we" found it almost impossible to see. We had some idea of the zone's location but we weren't sure. After making three passes at the area we finally spotted the zone, thanks to the help of a flareship and illumination by. Marines on the ground.

The wounded Marine was then transported to Khe Sanh and later taken to Dong Ha for treatment. A Marine helicopter crew at-tempted to evade North Vietnamese mortar rounds on Hill 881 to medevac Leatherneck casualties. They ended up displaying more heroics when a round trapped them on the hill, gaining the gratitude of the casualties' friends.

1stLts. Russell E. Hohman (Colorado Springs, Colo.), the pilot, and co-pilot Anthony M. Davitt (Des Moines, Iowa), were flying a UH-34D helicopter while resupplying the Marines at Khe Sanh and surrounding hill outposts.

A emergency medevac call found the Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 362 aircraft nearest to 881.

The Marines on the hill advised Hohman of the situation and that every copter that had landed there that day had drawn NVA mortar fire.

Immediately after the copter landed, Marines were lifting one casualty aboard when a well placed mortar round landed behind the aircraft. It sent fragments into the tail section and wounded Cpls. David W. Routon (Corpus Christi, Tex.), the crew chief, and Ronald A. Johnson (Bow, Wash.), the gunner. Hohman tried to take off but discovered that the controls were damaged. The wounded corporals grabbed the Marine ground casualty and moved him to safety. Johnson collapsed from his wounds and efforts of moving the casualty.

Later, another helicopter was able to safely land to evacuate the casualties, including Johnson. As the remaining three crew members waited for a third air craft to pick them up, Marines individually crawled to them to offer thanks for the effort of trying to evacuate their friends.

The three crew members have returned to duty at Phu Bai Johnson is expected to recover and be on duty within a week.

SNIPER ROUNDS HAMPER REPAIR

Leathernecks of Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron-463 had to weather the Khe Sanh barrages to repair a downed CH-53 Sea Stallion for return flight to Marble Mountain.

Major Donald A. Dalrymple (West Yarmouth, Mass.), and a crew of four maintenance men plus a crew chief, left the air facility to repair the Sea Stallion.

For the major, it was his first trip to the northwestern-most combat base in I Corps. The maintenance crew had been working in the Khe Sanh area for three days on the disabled helicopter.

GySgts. Charles Fields (Fulton, N.Y.), and Jerril H. Davis (Birmingham, Ala.), headed the repair section consisting of Sgt. Duane W. Petree (Indianapolis, Ind.), Cpls. Harold J. Blappert (New Orleans, La.), and Daniel Charillo (Utica, N.Y.), crew chief of the downed helicopter.

These men had begun work othe CH-53 before the attacks on Khe Sanh. Although they returned to Marble Mountain each evening, they volunteered to return to Khe Sanh to perform the repairs necessary to fly the aircraft.

"At one time, the crew was standing on pallets on top of a fork lift, replacing the blades while sniper rounds were coming in," Dalrymple said. He found two holes in the aircraft caused by snipers.

The Sea Stallion was in a revetment near the runway during three separate rocket attacks. Because of the action the Marines were not able to use the proper hoist to place the new blades on the helicopter but managed to complete the job. It was dark at 7 p.m. when they were ready for a test hop to determine whether the Sea Stallion could be flown back to Da Nang.

"We got up power and lifted," Dalrymple said, "but as we knew we might get hit at any moment. Things looked pretty good so we just kept right on going."

FROM NEWSWEEK, MARCH 4, 1968 AN INTERVIEW WITH OUR OWN KHE SANH VETERAN Retired Colonel Toby Rushforth USAF Tass 20

Though few of the 6,000 U.S. marines besieged at Khe Sanh are really aware of it, they owe much of what scant security they have these days to the forward air controllers (FAC's) of the U.S. Air Force-men who prowl over enemy-held territory in small propeller-driven planes, gathering intelligence and calling in air strikes on promising targets. Last week, Newsweek's Robert Stokes flew with a FAC pilot on his daily rounds and cabled this report:

In the past month, the wild mountains around Khe Sanh have taken a terrific pounding from American planes and artillery. Raw scabs of red earth slash across the green ridges, and the jungle is streaked with ashen scars left by defoliant chemicals. But the thick canopy of banyan trees still gives the enemy plenty of cover, and the keen-eyed pilots of the spotter planes depend almost as much on intuition as on eyesight to find their hidden targets.

Circling our 0-2 "Bird Dog" over an area northwest of Khe Sanh, the pilot, Capt. Charles (Toby) Rushforth, 29, of Wethersfield, Conn., suddenly spotted fresh tire tracks on a dirt road. Taking his little plane almost to treetop level, he marked the spot with a white smoke rocket and called in the waiting jets. Swooping down out of the sun, three F-8 Crusaders pasted the suspected enemy position with rockets, 750-pound bombs and 20-mm. cannon, adjusting their fire to Rushforth's directions.

When the strike was over, Rushforth. explained: "I look for new ruts in the road, dust in the trees, trails that seem to disappear into thin air. The North Vietnamese are art-ists at camouflage, and when you can catch them at it, you're really beginning to know the terrain."

The FAC planes have assumed new importance in recent weeks. The massive North Vietnamese buildup around Khe Sanh and the capture of the U.S. Special Forces camp at Lang Vei have made it all but impossible for the Americans to send out ground patrols around Khe Sanh. Thus, American intelligence now must rely heavily on the FACs for information about enemy activities there.

From FAC reports and other sources, the U.S. command has pieced together what it thinks is a fairly complete picture of the enemy's order of battle in the northern provinces of South Vietnam.

Deployment: Khe Sanh is surrounded by the 304th North Vietnamese Army Division, the 325C Division and elements of two more NVA regiments. Further east, the 324B North Vietnamese Di-vision has taken up positions near the U.S. bases at Con Thien, Cio Linh and Camp Carroll. The North Vietnamese have also placed a fourth division-size force near the coast of the South China Sea. All told, these Communist units number about 50,000 men. Against them are arrayed some 40,000 American Soldiers and Marines.

No one on the U.S. side can say for sure why the North Vietnamese have n not yet launched a major assault against Khe Sanh. One theory is that the Communists are building up their stocks of food and ammunition while the current bad weather prevents extensive U.S. air strikes.

Whatever the explanation, the Marine defenses at Khe Sanh have gained little from the delay. Many of the trenches are still shallow, there is a a shortage of barbed wire, and most of the bunkers lack adequate overhead protection. And Communist guns constantly probe these weaknesses; late last week, in the enemy's biggest bombard-ment of the siege, 1,300 shells slammed into the base in a single day.

Most American officers expect a major attack before March 15, when the monsoon clouds will begin to lift. Khe Sanh will probably be the focal point, but the enemy offensive may well have an even more ambitious objective. In addition to the NVA troops already in South Vietnam, U.S. intelligence reports that another two or three enemy divisions are lurking just north of the Demilitarized Zone.

All these units could be flung at Khe Sanh, but the gut feeling of most Ameri-can officers is that the enemy forces in the DMZ area will aim to seize the two northern provinces-Quang Tri and Thua Thien-and then try to hold the ground. American commanders are relying on their planes and guns to chew up the attackers. ("I'd bet the casualty rate will be at least six to one in our favor," says one Marine officer.) But the ugly fact remains that U.S. ground forces are spread painfully thin trying to protect all the potential targets. The situation in the northern provinces, in short, it's critical-and it may get worse.

NICE STORY

The short essay below is by Jordan Blashek, Princeton 2009, who decided to turn down acceptance to medical school to join the U.S. Marine Corps and enter its Officer Candidate School, from which he graduated in December 2009. Written originally as an explanation of his decision for his high school classmates, it is worth reading – and appreciating – by us all.

"You Joined Us" -- That phrase is carved into a steel plaque that tauntingly guards the entrance to the Officers' barracks at Camp Barrett in Quantico, VA. As I hobbled inside, exhausted from another 15-hour day, my roommate half-jokingly pointed to the plaque, "Why did we do that again?"

I smiled. Today had been a long day. Waking at 4 AM, we spent the next 9 hours outside in the pouring rain learning hand-to-hand combat and outdated bayonet techniques. Without warming layers, hats or gloves, our hands quickly went numb and our bodies started shaking uncontrollably in the 30-degree temperature. Finally, we were sent back inside to clean our rifles, which must be spotless before we can wash off our bodies. As 8 PM rolled around and we were still cleaning on a Friday night – when my high school and college friends were out at Happy Hours – I thought about that plaque on the wall: Why exactly did I join, again?

It's a question I have tried to answer many times for my family and friends, but never feel as though I have fully conveyed my reasons. I made the decision to join the U.S. Marine Corps at the start of my senior year at Princeton, turning down an acceptance to medical school in the process. I kept the decision to myself until I broke the news to my shocked parents over Christmas Break. I ran through the litany of justifications for them: I wanted to serve my country. I wanted the camaraderie and the pride of being in the Marine Corps brotherhood. I needed the challenge to test my true capabilities and strength. I would receive the best leadership training on the planet, which would help me in any future career I chose. I wanted adventure and the chance to be a part of history in Iraq or Afghanistan. I wanted to exude that same confidence that I saw in every Marine officer I have met. Whether I convinced them or not, in the end, none of these "reasons" alleviated my parents' understandable anxiety.

When I told my plans to anyone else, I felt as though I were talking to a brick wall – the Military, especially the Marine Corps, was simply outside their reality. My closer friends would nod their heads and say something to the effect of "Wow, that's cool;" but since I was the perennial flake of the group, most did not take my decision very seriously. And to be honest, even I was not quite sure that I would follow through with the choice. In the comfort of my college dorm, the decision to become a Marine Corps officer seemed glamorously abstract. However, on October 1, 2009 my decision suddenly became very real when I arrived at the Marine Corps' Officer Candidate School (OCS) in Quantico, VA.

My OCS experience was surreal. Along with 407 other "Candidates" – all college graduates with newly shaved heads – I ran around for 10 weeks carrying an M16 rifle, while the Marine Corps' famous drill instructors screamed increasingly creative insults at us. In reality, we were beginning the painful, yet deliberate process of transforming from civilians into Marine officers through some of the most intense training that exists in the US military. Meanwhile, the drill instructors continually evaluated our leadership potential as part of the time-honored tradition whereby enlisted Marines select the officers that will eventually lead them in combat. After nearly half of the officer candidates were dropped or dropped out on their own, we emerged from OCS standing a little taller and a little straighter on graduation day, December 11, 2009. That afternoon, I raised my right hand to swear the oath of office and receive my commission as a second lieutenant. That oath obligates me to serve a minimum of four years in uniform.

Ultimately, I joined the US Marine Corps because I believe that officers bear the most solemn responsibility in our nation, and that was a duty I could not, and should not, leave for others to assume. To say that I wanted that responsibility is not quite right, because being a Marine officer is not about one's self, wants or needs; it is about guiding the young 18 and 19 year-old Marines fighting this country's wars on our behalf. I decided that serving them was the highest honor and responsibility I could have at this point in my life. As one speaker at my commissioning ceremony explained:

"As second lieutenants, you must have a strong sense of the great responsibility of your office; the resources which you will expend in war are human lives. This is not about you anymore. This is about the young Marines who will place their lives in your hands. It is your job to take care of them, even when that means placing them in mortal danger. That awesome responsibility – the weight which now rests on you – is reflected in those gold bars which you will soon place on your shoulders."

That is why the plaque hangs in every portal through which we pass – You Joined Us. We chose to bear this responsibility and we must make absolutely sure we are prepared to fulfill it, because young American lives are at stake. If that means being cold and miserable; studying for ungodly hours; and going for days without sleep, then so be it. That is the price of the salute we receive from our Marines.

Five months into my service commitment, I have not regretted my decision for a moment. I already have unforgettable memories from my experience and new friendships with diverse and exceptional peers from all over the country. We have had moments of pure fun together and laughed harder than I ever thought possible. We have also been humbled by the stories and portraits of brave Lieutenants – those who fought and died after roaming the very halls where we now stand and their portraits hang. Most of all, I am immensely proud to bear the title of 'United States Marine,' an honor that I will carry with me my entire life. Semper Fi.

1st Sgt F . King and MGen J.O. Butcher greeted Julius Foster at Camp Lejeune after he walked 404 miles to re-enlist

February 21, 1968

A young Marine who walked 400 miles in 30 days to attract support for the United States effort in Vietnam has been killed in the Fighting there.

The Marine, Lance Corporal Julius C. (Corky) Foster, 28 walked from his home at Welch, West Virginia, to Camp Lejeune last summer with a 40 pound pack on his back

A Marine reservist, Foster was going to Lejeune to re-enlist for active duty in hope of being assigned to Vietnam

He said he decided to take the hike " to emphasize the effort being made by other Americans. I hope to register the intent of the American people to win the war-not to talk about it or buy it, but to win it."

Word of Foster's death came from Captain Richard Titus, the Marine officer who swore in Foster at Raleigh after he completed his hike to Lejeune.

FEBRUARY BRINGS BAD MEMORIES

By Larry McCartney
E Co 2/26 Hill 861A

February 22nd of every year since 1968 brings back a flood of memories, not just for those lost that day, but for all those lost in the following days through the end of the month; Lance Corporal J. C. "Corky" Foster from Echo Company, Fr. Brett and Lance Corporal Chinn from H & S Company on the 22nd, the Echo Company XO, Second Lieutenant Ferdinando Distefano, Corporal Carlos C. "CC" Aguirre, Lance Corporal Gerrie Jeffries, Lance Corporal Max Nelson, and PFC Cliff Borrell, on the 24th, Lance Corporal Jim Wood on the 25th, PFC Mike Wright on the 26th, and PFC Earl Harris, who was WIA on the 26th and DOW on the 28th.

There were of course many other casualties before as well as after that, but the last week of February was particularly intense on Hill 861-A. While I'm sure all the deaths and injuries impacted all of us, the death of Julius "Corky" Foster was significant for me since he was the first person I had actually known "back in the world." After he had completed his four hundred (400) mile walk to Camp Le-Jeune—Camp Geiger—North Carolina for Infantry Training (ITR), he was assigned to Camp Pendleton—Camp Horno—California for Basic Infantry Training Specialty (BITS), where he was our Student Company Gunny in Zulu Company.

Corky Foster took an interest in all the Zulu Company Marines as we trained together during those three (3) short weeks. We then parted ways, me for "Boot Leave" and he for Vietnam. Upon my assignment to Echo, 2/26 in Vietnam, I was surprised to see Corky, who immediately recognized me; he greeted me with a smile. Over the few months, during patrols in the Phu Bai area as well as at Khe Sanh, he was a constant source of encouragement; after all he was ten (10) years older than most of us. Corky Foster took a medivac off Hill 861-A on the 22nd, the same "bird" Fr. Brett and Lance Corporal Chinn used after spending three (3) or so days with us, as well as with the Marines of 3/26 who were on Hill 861. We heard later that day that Corky was killed with Fr. Brett and Lance Corporal Chinn shortly after their arrival at the Combat Base.

What a hollow, empty, feeling; so many fine young men lost that month. The realization that men I knew were now dead; human mortality was slowly starting to sink in. While I had known others who were KIA previously, the death of Corky Foster was the first of someone I could call my friend. A year or so later the main road into Camp Geiger was rededicated and named Foster Boulevard in Corky's honor. Every time I've been to Camp LeJeune since then I make the trip to Camp Geiger to pay my respects to him at the memorial marker near the main gate. God bless and keep you Corky Foster. God bless and keep all those fine young men who gave so selflessly of themselves; those who paid the ultimate price as well as those who survived the events of January through April, 1968 only to die later, or suffer the physical and/or mental infirmities of war. Rest in Peace Marine!!! ~~ Semper Fidelis!!!

Cpl. Hellwig was a fine man and Marine, a professional, fearless, loyal and a Charger. We survivors of the Command Group remember and cherish his memory to this day. Steve was among the first to go down on the morning that the Siege began. His younger Brother enlisted in the Marines several months later. Like Steve he went to Comm School, then to RVN--he was, like his older brother, assigned to the H & S Company, Comm Platoon 1/26 and, as I recall, become the Comm Operatior for--B 1/26--just like Steve--all un-planned.

Today, Steve Hellwig Jr. is a Marine Rifleman in the Third Marine Regiment, has returned from Iraq and is now in Hawaii training up to deploy the Afghanistan--Three Generations--May our Lord Bless and protect Steve, Jr. as he, like his Father and Uncle, prepares to go, once more into the breach Article which appeared in Seattle Times, Seattle WA, 24 Jan 1968 "Seattle Man Killed at Khe Sanh"

Marine Lance Cpl Steve Hellwig, 19, was killed in action Sunday in Khe Sanh, Vietnam. Hellwig was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hellwig 1809 N. E. 171st St. Hellwig, a Seattle native was a 1966 Shorecrest High School graduate. He enlisted last February and went to Vietnam in August. He was a radioman. Surviving, besides his parents are two brothers, a sister, and his grandparents.

Prepared to Give Life "Letter From Marine Recalled At School After Death Report"

I can think of no thought which makes me prouder that I am an American citizen fighting for God, Corps and Country. The feeling that I am fighting for the freedom of fellowmen is equally strong. "For these I am prepared to give my life if need be... We will not run from the fight we face. "Those words were written in November by Marine Lance Cpl. Steven L. Hellwig, 19, in an open letter to Shorecrest High School, from which he graduated in 1966."

His letter was recalled poignantly after his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hellwig, 1809 N. E. 171st, were notified that he was killed in action at the Khe Sanh, Vietnam, last Sunday.

Young Hellwig had written the letter after reading of the violence at the anti-war demonstration at the Pentagon. "To us here," Hellwig wrote, 'these protesters and 'draft card burners' are cowards with no national pride. They hide their lack of courage behind the words, 'The war is wrong.' "They don't deserve the right to be called an American. Does it not say in the laws governing our country open acts against our country are 'treason'? "We here are just as afraid to die as they are -- maybe more since we are here. But do you hear us crying? No! We have confidence enough to fight for what we think is right."

To add to the totality of this conversation, is this bit of information most of you know nothing about. LtCol Pipes who wrote the words in the original post has kept touch with Cpl Hellwig's brother for quite some time. Isn't it ironic he would serve at the same station with 1/26 at a later date?

About this time last year I was at Ken's visiting. Shortly after I left his youngest son Tim had been in a serious motorcycle accident. Tim had been living and working in the Port Angeles area north of Seattle at that time. Tim is a very gifted woodworker and had gone up to that area in search of work. He was doing cabinet work on some of those multi-million dollar yachts. He had to be airlifted to Seattle and #### near lost his leg. It would be some time before Ken and his wife Sharon could go to Seattle to help Tim tie up his affairs and get back to San Diego.

He was hospitalized for quite some time. Mike MCCauley, from Bravo Co paid a number of visits to see Tim in Seattle to check on him for Ken, but it was Ray Hellwig who was there virtually every day seeing what Tim needed if anything and keeping the intel heading south on a regular basis. I know from the many conversations I have had with Ken how deeply appreciative he was for everything Mike and Ray did until such time as Ken and Sharon could arrive on sight to tend to family business. Three generations of Marines in the Hellwig family and they have never forgotten their oath of Semper Fidelis. I think it would behoove us all to keep the youngest Hellwig Marine in our prayers. They have given way more than their share now. And God Bless Cpl Steven Hellwig Bravo 1/26

A NOTE OF THANKS

Neil Kenny
L CO 3/26

I want to personally thank everyone for their response and contribution to my request to raise some funds for Jordan. Thank You.

Jordan is the son of the best friend I have ever had and in all probability ever shall. Phineas and I met at Khe Sanh early on in the siege. Through thick and thin we remained true to each other from that time till this.

At the end of his life Phineas was beset with many ailments as a result of a life lived hard and the aftermath of his military service. I can tell you that while Phineas served his country well, his country did not always serve him so well. I am not spreading sour grapes, just saying how it was.

He dedicated his life to Jordan and raised him as a single-dad for the last seventeen of Jordy's nineteen years. I can tell you that you wou'ld be proud of my and your Brother Phineas, as Jordan is a fine young man.

These past four years have been quite the adventure. We lost Charlie Fox in August of 2005, his beautiful and only daughter Lynn less then four years later, this past June Eighth. Both had a form of leukemia that somehow isn't connected to 'Agent Orange'. Go figure.

On October Thirtieth Phineas lost his struggle against the 'war' and was called home, and just recently on November Seventh we watched as sadly Bob Arrotta joined the ranks of those who with dignity, honor, and valor fought the 'war' to its bitter end.

I say this not so much to stand and curse the inevitable mortality that we all face, but rather; to stress that how important it is for each of us to treasure each day with our Brothers who stood shoulder to shoulder with us at the pinnacle of our youth.

I am reminded, how it is incumbent upon each of us to share our love not only with the families we have today, but also with those from that family that we shared while our darkest hours covered us with 'fog' and we faced eternity side by side.

Ours board and our reunions are a vital link for each to find the other on every level, especially on the Spiritual level.

THE JORDANS THANK YOU

I wanted to thank everyone for the donations they made to my family and I, during our hard time. I know many of you did not know my father personally so I'd like to give you a little background. He grew up in San Francisco and joined the Marine-Corps in 1967. After boot camp he was sent to Nam, where he met Neil Kenny. I'm sure you all know him, he is a real character. They formed a bond few will ever know. At Khe Sanh pops was wounded and received the purple heart and I believe 2 PUC's.

After returning home dad bounced around from city to city until he met my mother. I was born shortly after. My dad never left my side, we stayed together while my mother struggled with a drug addiction, and eventually left us. My father raised me as a single-parent from the time I was two years of age, until I graduated high school.

My father was very strict but also very loving; like I'm sure any Marine father would and should be. He was my role-model, and even with him gone, he is still someone I look to as an example of how I should raise my 3 sons. The same discipline, values and morals dad established in me which his mother, and the corps established in him. It has all played a huge role in my life, which I would not change for the world.

In conclusion, I would just like to again thank everyone for the generosity you all extended my family and I. We are all in school at this time. My wife does hair, and recently returned to finish her degree and become a teacher. I am a full-time student-athlete. With the costs of 3 boys, school books, bills and paying for storage for my father's things and the memorial , things were awful tough, The donations you made gave us huge financial relief.

ORDINARY PEOPLE

By Craig W. Tourte

My protagonist has always been the ordinary person who has done the extraordinary. We see these ordinary people all the time, we stand in line with them at the grocery store, they are filling their cars at the next gas pump, they're with their families at the table near us at the restaurant and they sit next to us at the movies. We pass hundreds and perhaps thousands of them each day in our comings and goings. Ordinary people just like ourselves; trying to get through this thing we call life, as best they can. Although ordinary, some have done extraordinary things. Most are just small things; some would not even give these events a second thought, perhaps not even aware that it was extraordinary. It was my privilege today to sit and have lunch with four ordinary men.

Why if you didn't know them, you wouldn't even remember they were there. Just five older men, sitting, talking, and having lunch together. Four ordinary men, each one having done something extraordinary. Before I go any further let me say that all of these men do have one thing in common, and that is that they are all veterans of the war in Vietnam and served on the Marine Corps Combat Base of Khe Sanh during the 77 day Siege in 1968. That fact alone makes each extraordinary, but many who served during that conflict experienced difficult and horrific events, they too are extraordinary, none of which has much to do with this story other than it has brought all of us together. As we sat and talked about events and people we knew, talking together as if we do this often instead of seldom, I took a few minutes and thought about each one of them, and how individually special and extraordinary each of them were.

I met Tom Horchler (H.Q. 1/13) at Khe Sanh and through these many years, I have gotten to know Tom quite well. Tom is one of those guys who lives his life for Veterans, which is way too simple of a statement. How can I put this; my association with Tom has changed who I am, how I think and relate to others. I certainly don't have enough room here to tell the full story but I will say that Tom looks at life and Veterans just a little different than others. If you were to listen to him closely and see how he reacts and supports and cares about so many others, and askes for absolutely nothing in return, you too would see that Tom is extraordinary.

Dave Tonick (A/1/26) is one of those guys who shows up. Dave flew to New Mexico with me for the roadside Khe Sanh sign dedication which was a personally expensive venture. Dave has driven hundred of miles to attend the funerals of those veterans he never knew. He is one of those guys who just knows how to get stuff done and is happy to lend you a hand. Where ever there is a need, Dave shows up. Not because he is asked, but because that is who Dave is - one of those who rushed into the burning building types, who would think it strange if you thanked him for sticking his neck out for you. Dave is extraordinary, doing what others will not do.

Steve Wiese (B/1/26) is one of those quiet fascinating and interesting guys,whom others just like to be around. There has always been something about Steve that I haven't quite been able to put my finger on. Steve carries a lot of weight in his heart - and he understands the pain others feel. I think they know that he understands what is often indescribable. Steve is extraordinary because of his silent bravery, compassion, and his ability to understand the pain of others. Most importantly, he provides support; few are truly able to do that for others. I'll conclude with who I think was the most extraordinary of all of us who were sitting at this table.

He isLloyd "Shortround" Scudder (B/1/26) whom most know him by his physical issues, and why? now here is the story. The conversation turned to prosthetics and a new hand that has recently been developed which allows an individual to manipulate their fingers and wrist. Lloyd said that he had been offered a fitting for this device. I thought it was a wonderful thing and was stunned when Lloyd told me that he had lived so many years with the way things are, and that perhaps it was time for younger men, who have suffered so much, to be fitted first. He would wait a little longer for his. A chill ran down my back and it was all I could do to keep the tears from running down my cheeks. Lloyd is certainly a most extraordinary man.

Just five old guys sitting down for lunch, four were extraordinary and what was most interesting, all expressed the guilt they have carried these many years, of not having done enough.

OUR CORPSMEN, STILL AT THEIR BEST

Medals mark Navy corpsman's courage By Matt Orr, Stars and Stripes Pacific edition, Thursday, February 4, 2010

Hospital Corpsman 2nd Class William J. Harris is congratulated by a fellow service member after receiving two Bronze Star Medals, a Navy Commendation Medal and a meritorious promotion during a ceremony Monday at Marine Corps Air Station Futenma, Okinawa.

Two Bronze Stars and a Navy Commendation Medal, all for Valor, are commonplace at awards ceremonies these days. But when the three medals are pinned on the chest of a single person - who also is meritoriously promoted- people notice.

"HM3 Harris proves you can not only do the right thing once, but you can do it continually," Maj. Gen. Raymond C. Fox, commanding general of 1st Marine Air Wing, told the more than 200 Marines and sailors in attendance.

The three medals were for separate actions against hostile forces while Harris was assigned to Embedded Training Team 5-4 to assist the Afghanistan National Army.

According to his first Bronze Star citation, Harris participated in more than 60 combat operations and was involved in more than 50 engagements with enemy forces On Jan. 17, 2009, Harris provided heavy machine gun fire to ward off insurgents who were closing in on a downed CH-47 in the Korengal Valley. "The insurgents rushed the aircraft to see if there were any survivors, "the 24-year-old Monroe, Petty Officer 3rd Class William Harris, a hospital corpsman with Marine Air Control Squadron 4, salutes Lt. Col. Daniel Fennell (middle), commanding officer, MACS 4, Marine Air Control Group 18, 1st Marine Aircraft Wing, III Marine Expeditionary Force after being promoted to Petty Officer 2nd Class and awarded two Bronze Stars with Combat V devices and a Navy and Marine Corps Commendation Medal with a Combat V device. Harris was deployed to Afghanistan as an embedded advisor with Embedded Training Team (ETT) 5-4, 3rd Kandak, 2nd Brigade, 201st Corps, Afghan National Army. (Photo by LCpl. Abigail M. Wharton).

Mich., native recalled Monday He "jumped up on the guns" and kept the enemy at bay, allowing helicopters to evacuate the casualties.

The Navy Commendation Medal was pinned on for moving an Afghan National Army element "to a safe and covered location allowing them more effective engagements with numerous enemy force positions" during a firefight July 1, according to the citation. During the same battle, he treated a wounded Afghan soldier and brought him to safety.

But Harris wasn't done. On July 30 he "risked his own life to move 400 meters under heavy fire to secure and treat a wounded U.S. Army soldier," his second Bronze Star citation reads. He then organized a litter team and led it more than 500 meters, again under heavy fire, to a secure location where he provided first aid until the soldier could be evacuated.

"Harris was an astonishing warrior and sailor throughout his entire ETT deployment to Afghanistan," Capt. John Farris, Harris' officer in charge in Afghanistan, said in an e-mail from Hawaii. "The bottom line is that what led Harris to his receiving three awards at once was his leadership and courage during the most ferocious of times." After the ceremony, the newly frocked Petty Officer 2nd Class Harris reflected on his time in Afghanistan. "I loved it out there," Harris said. "I loved working alongside the ANA. I ate, worked and slept alongside them. If there was another billet opening up, you can sign me up."

THE GROUND

They appeared out of no where,
they looked dirty, weathered and worn.
No one knew where they came from,
their clothes were stained and torn.
They walked slowly, deliberately, with purpose;
they stopped in front of a dirt mound.
Their eyes looked hallow and sad,
not one of them made a sound.
One took a rifle and fixed the bayonet;
he stuck its barrel down on top of that dirt mound.
Another put a helmet on the butt of that gun,
still another went down on one knee.
Strangers stopped to see what they were doing and watched, soon everyone stopped everything so they could see.
The one on his knee put his head in in his hand, some who were watching started to cry.
No one knew who they were,
but everyone knew that was hallowed ground.
Suddenly I recognized them,
it brought a tear to my eye.
You see I realized they were us,
its true we were them.

MEDICAL NEWS

AUSTIN, Texas — Drugs known as HDAC inhibitors may prove useful in treating post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), according to a study conducted by faculty at The University of Texas at Austin's Waggoner Center for Alcohol and Addiction Research.

The study, the results of which were recently published in Neuropsychopharmacology, may point the way toward new treatments for PTSD, a severe anxiety disorder which is estimated to afflict as many as one in eight returning Iraq and Afghanistan War veterans.

"The HDAC inhibitors are already being used in clinical trials, but in relation to other neurological diseases, like Alzheimer's and Huntington's," says Igor Ponomarey a research assistant professor in the College of Pharmacy and the Waggoner Center. "They've never been tested in PTSD. The results of this study suggest that they should be."

PTSD occurs as a result of exposure to severe stress—from battle, for example, or a natural disaster—and its symptoms, including flashbacks, an excessive startle response, depression, anxiety, and insomnia, can persist over long periods of time.

Researchers believe that PTSD occurs when the brain's system for regulating stress overloads to the point where it can no longer revert to a normal state, even after the cause of the stress disappears. Particularly affected is the amygdala, which is one of the critical structures in the brain related to learning and memory, and in particular to fear-related learning and memory.

Those suffering from PTSD can end up with an amygdala that is on high alert for mild stressors and stimuli that are evocative of the original source of the stress.

Ponomarev and co-author R. Adron Harris a professor of neurobiology, used a rat model of PTSD to trace these broad changes in the amygdala down to the level of gene expression.

"What we found were that genes that are known to be involved in excitation and inhibition changed their expression three weeks after stress," says Ponomarev. "The overall result is an amygdala that's unable to normally respond to stressors."

One of the most potentially useful findings of the study is that severe stress—like the kind that produces PTSD—can result in the increased expression of certain genetic elements that had, until recently, been dismissed by neuroscientists as "junk DNA."

These particular DNA sequences may prove significant, says Ponomarev, because they seem to be involved in, or indicative of, a process known as "chromatin remodeling," which helps determine which genes are or are not expressed in a given cell. It's precisely this process that seems to be responsive to the HDAC inhibitors.

"It's a hot area in neuropsychiatric disorders," he says, "because there are some pharmacological compounds that can block or promote chromatin remodeling. It's possible to imagine that some of the long-term changes in gene expression, which we've seen result from severe stress, could be reversed or modulated by the drugs."

KHE SANH

By Ray William Stubbe

[The following are the first two chapters of my manuscript on Khe Sanh, completed 06 June 1989, per my input to John Prados who reworked it into the book, published with my suggested title, Valley of Decision. Khe Sanh was attacked on Sunday, 21 January. One week later, 28 January, two photographers took a picture of me conducting worship for Marines of C/1/26 on the BLUE sector. At the time, I had a 100 degree fever. On 30 Jan, Lt John Kaheny called me on the LIMA LIMA; I got up too quickly and collapsed. Corpsmen from C Med manhandled me onto a stretcher, and I was medevaced to DaNang. My weight had gone from 185 when I arrived in July to 142 (and was to go to about 129). As I tell people, "The 'battlefield diet' really works, but I don't recommend it; it has too many side-effects!" By 3 Feb, my protests at being away from Khe Sanh convinced the doctor,DR Vokonis at NSA Hospital, DaNang, to release me. My medical record states: "At his request, the patient was released to duty, to return to the Khe Sanh area." , The doctors wanted to do more tests, but I was anxious to return to Khe Sanh, and was able to return on 5 February 68.

CHAPTER 1
THE ENCOUNTER

It was as though he were from a different land, even a different world or different dimension, an alien who had emerged from being a border-person, from the border of Laos/Vietnam, to the border of life/death. This borderers of consciousness/unconsciousness--of feelings, the border of sanity/insanity and peace/fragmentation.

He was caked full of the mud so red that it blended with the stains of the blood of his buddies. The deep red clay of Khe Sanh, violently volcanic, so stained that weeks of showers never really seemed to remove it entirely from his body. It seemed to penetrate through skin pores into the very soul with a sort of interpenetration of natures producing something related, but not entirely of this world. Perhaps it was a mud soaked with the blood of centuries of centurions, and their blood cried so desperately from it, from within us who had been so stained.

He had not showered for over a month; like his brothers, he lived on a canteen cup of water a day. A gas mask dangled at his lower side, and a helmet emblazoned with a large cross made of fleshettes--those small darts, 9,000 of them in a single "Beehive" round of 106mm that were to be fired at the hoards of enemy troops in the event of an assault. Hundreds and thousands of some sort of anti-personnel nails that nailed to invisible crosses of pain of those sacrificed in war--were a sort of symbol of the pain and suffering and sacrifices of war, which seemed a fitting symbol for this chaplain. He wore lower body armor, a flexible diaper-like item to protect one's rear and one's manhood, and a flak jacket with the usual extra battle dressing in the pocket. Jungle boots caked with mud, rotting trousers appearing like oil-cloth since they had not been removed in over a month and a half, and eyes that opened any on-looker into a soul cavern light-years deep, completed the impressions of this surrealistic presence. He was the presence of Khe Sanh.

The room was the Officer's Mess at the hospital of the Naval Support Activity in Da Nang. It was time for lunch. There were small tables covered with white table cloths. There was silverware and plates and real glass glasses. There were people discussing the banalities of everydayness and everyone was dressed so properly.

None of the accoutrements were removed. That which defended one in war was never easily shed upon leaving the actual area of conflict, if ever. Those who fight in a war never really leave the war, and many retain their defenses--such as not getting really too close to other people because they too may die, and it's just too painful, even dangerous, or they were unable to feel emotions because they'd get in the way of survival, or instantly reacting to certain sounds. The gas mask, helmet, flak vest, and lower torso armor were not easily removed, and this "creature from another world" became an object for photographs to be taken of by the curious medical staff seated there for their lunch. No one came and sat with him or talked with him. And he felt so very alone, so rejected, and like the biblical leper, so unclean and defiled by the violence, the good and evil he now knew, were objects of fear and abhorrence that made it impossible to reenter paradise to a man who saw through the illusions of everyday life. The life, of clean linen table cloths and glass glasses, of polished boots and smart appearances, seem to be a shadow side accompanying the reality that is mud, blood, pain, horror, and terror. Polished boots and military smartness were indeed the shadows that everyone in the cave of the world knew; corpses without heads, limbs that detached from bodies left on the battlefield for several weeks to rot away, fearful First Sergeants wearing a dozen Saint Christopher Medals--these were the realities behind the shadows. When one reentered the caves to proclaim the reality, such a one was in far more danger of his life than on the battlefield!

Only a few months earlier, the day he first arrived in "the Nam," he recalled two Marines standing at the Air Force Airbase in DaNang. It was 14 July 1967. Their difference made them conspicuously present, like characters on a stage illuminated by a spotlight. The highly-polished stateside leather boots and brass of everyone else there who spoke of the safety of the place, were dull, inconspicuous, and artificial, compared with these two very dirty-looking, grit-impregnated, brownish-red-skinned men, wearing no skivvy shirts under their half unbuttoned blouse. Their jungle boots caked with mud shined far more than the highly-polished stateside leather boots of the others in the sense that they attracted more eyes, more soul-doors into heart halls. They were from Khe Sanh and did not talk of safety at all, but of eagerness to return there so they could be part of a planned operation to assault Hill 918, an assumed stronghold of the enemy force there. They were the young men of every generation on their quest to slay the dragons.

We departed Da Nang about 2312H in the safety of a large C-130 "Herky Bird" aircraft. A minute or two later, this secure and "safe" area of Da Nang was violated with shrieks of rockets and screams of men as fifty rounds of 120mm and 140mm rockets from two different directions and with pin-point accuracy, killed at least a dozen Americans and destroyed three C-130s standing there.

CHAPTER 2
THE DREAMSCAPE

As if having departed the United States and arrival at Vietnam were not enough to disorient totally any new-comer, the vast half-way around the globe and the hours upon hours of air-travel crossing the international Date Line, was the immediate entrance into a different reality. Even to the point of not being able to purchase a soda in all the oppressive heat with normal American money. One had to use "Funny money" or MPC (Military Payment Certificate). Indeed, what was so evident to anyone traveling over this area of northern South Vietnam were the contrasts--blinding, sun-reflecting sands in the eastern Phu Bai area, and dark, very dark forests near Khe Sanh, with low flat lands in the east and precipitous cliffs and torturously twisted gorges in the west at Khe Sanh, Vietnamese in the east and the very primitive Bru mountain tribesmen near Khe Sanh with their twisted faces, seemed to be the outward expression of an inner tortured, anguished soul that lived in constant fear. Cities with their centuries-----old art work which miraculously survived centuries of warfare such as the six-foot high porcelain vases and gold throne in Hue City in the east, to savage beasts and caves in Khe Sanh, existed. Debilitating heat in the east, in contrast and coolness at Khe Sanh--cold, in fact, could be compared to one who grew up in the mean winters of the upper American Midwest,yet it never felt as cold as in Khe Sanh. For several months during the monsoons, one could never be dry and warm, with snow that even fell on the hills!

Most evident was the reality of the Viet Nam experience not usually portrayed by the manufactured images of it--the polarity of peace and serenity and the absolute terror, horror, and fear in battle that one could suddenly experience as fast as flicking on and off the light switch. Periods when nothing seemed to happen other than the dull daily routine of long patrols and digging deeper holes, suddenly transformed into frantic frenzy of deafening loud explosions and the facing of one's own death. Thus there emerged the consequent contrast of 18 year-olds becoming 60 year-olds in an instant, as they faced their own death. The contrasts and polarities created energy, with the area being a place of extreme violence, a plateau of terror, a terrain of the soul on which one seemed stuck for awhile that seemed forever. Likeness the red planet named for the Greek god of war, Mars, and the two moons of that planet, the sons of Mars, Phobos and Deimos (Greek words for "fear" and "terror").

To observe the area from the distance of a flying helicopter, left one with an impression of the beauty of it all. Rolling hills with a greenish-velvet-like covering. An occasional stream visible between the thick vegetation, even small waterfalls off the eastern end of the runway at Khe Sanh Combat Base--all made this place so different, so special. One young Marine Lieutenant recalls: "There were some powerful, almost spiritual ties to the place we were in. I thought I was in a magical kingdom. It was sacred. And when we walked out after the siege on that operation and we did the sweep back up to 881, literally would take us a day or more to get through what we walked in a couple of hours. As I looked at that moonscape, and remember all the wild boar and deer, I saw what we had done. I mean it drove me crazy! It was a spiritual place." [Comments of Ernest Spencer to the author, 4Jan87].

Here, lungs breathed-in welcomed air with delightful satisfaction because it was remarkably cooler here than at other places in Viet Nam. Here, there was the strength of peaceful quiet, with only the soothing loud chorus sound of locusts in the jungles. Here was a beauty that made Khe Sanh a place of fantasy; it was like being in a dream. It was our dreamscape.

The name of the District, "Huong Hoa," referred to "pretty flower." No one there could not but be deeply impressed with the colors--the luxuriant green, the rich, red soil, the magnificent clouds and sharply-rising mountains, the beauty of red hibiscus flowers at the nearby French coffee planter's house.

For some, Khe Sanh was a Garden of Eden, a paradise. It was beautiful and innocent, like the people who were there who saw the beauty because it was what they were--one sees by what one is. For the Marines who lived in the hamlets as part of Combined Action Company OSCAR or the Army personnel of the MACV Advisory Team #4 who lived in Khe Sanh Village itself, a walk in the nearby area was a matter of sheer delight. If one were hungry, a banana was picked off a nearby tree, usually one of the pigmy types that although sweeter than those "in the world," contained unsuspected very hard seeds. One Could pick the equivalent of our grapefruit, and munch on the sweet, large, meaty tidbits. One could lay down in one of the numerous streams and let the water flow over one's body.

We were to learn that evil is dressed in awesome beauty. Life feeds on life, and the lush, luxuriant vegetation meant a lot of death in order for there to be so much life. It was our destiny too, once we entered into this ecosystem. We were never to feel more alive than in the presence of this beauty, and later, the probability of our death. Speaking for many others, one Marine said, "I've never been more alive." [Comments of Frank Iodice to the author 30 Oct84], and another, "I lived more a year there than I've lived anywhere." [Comments of Michael R. James to the author, 13Oct84]. An Army soldier recalls: "When we were there, we would walk into the bush and it was so magnificently beautiful--I mean the colors, the bushes, everything about that land was beautiful one minute, and the next minute it could be so horrible, you would lose your breath over it. Every bush, every leaf, everything had its own color. And one of the things that I noticed in particular was immediately after a rain: we'd get a quick rain shower--how everything would illuminate with such beauty. Then five minutes later it might turn into a living hell." [Comments later it might turn into a living hell." [Comments of Phil Montaldo to the author, 23 Jul86]. A thing of beauty is not a joy forever--when it is Khe Sanh!

The only way to know Khe Sanh was to descend from the heights of the plane and live there. It was always the feeling of those there, that these others in the "rear" echelons, called "pogues," never appreciated our situation our need for food, bunkering materials, support The bravery of what we accomplished each and every day was invisible to them and went unrecognized. This angered us. We weren't understood by those who didn't share our experience. Those in the rear gazed at their maps in their operations centers and briefing rooms, but as the philosopher Wittgenstein once wrote, "The map is not the terrain."

Upon descending and living there, suddenly the pleasant sight of a green-blanketed, rolling hill became a matter of standing in grass taller than people, called "elephant grass," which restricted visibility and cut into the skin of hands and arms with its razor-sharp edges loaded with bacteria that later festered into large red and seemingly incurable sores. We were always told to keep an interval of fifteen feet while on patrol so that a single mortar round would not kill and wound more than one person. But this meant easily becoming lost, not being able to see the person ahead in order to know where to go, and the anxiety of keeping the person behind in sight, lest all the others following become detached, lost, or find himself the "tail end Charlie." We were all responsible for each other, dependent on each other. We were our brother's keeper. It was a commitment forever. The tall grass shrouded any enemy who might be lurking in an ambush site ready to fire on any passerby, so we always moved with apprehension. The enemy was invisible, almost a spiritual force. Cover and concealment could not have been better.

The gentle rolling hills were not gentle at all. With slopes of hills generally between 40 and 60 degrees and often 100. [3rdMarDiv, Spec Intel Study 4-67, 10Jun67, p. 2]. For those who were required to climb them day after day after day, it was a strenuous exercise in controlled falling down or pulling oneself up mud-slicked slopes, grabbing a large rotten or banana tree only to have the whole tree give-way as though it were a single blade of grass., Often frantically in exhausted delirium, one grabbed onto a bush with long spiked thorns, or perhaps grabbed a buddy's rifle held out to pull up the next person. Sometimes it was a matter of climbing down a tree and, upon reaching its base, grabbing onto the top of an adjacent tree and going down that way--so steep was the cliff. There were numerous vines that caught in one's boots and legs, causing one to fall as though tackled, and bamboo thickets like so many rods of steel bunched up, almost impenetrable. There were waist-high fallen logs, wet and slippery, with too much underbrush under them to move, requiring strenuous effort to climb over them again and again. There were numerous caves throughout the area, like so many openings through which the subterranean contents of the underworld and the unconscious spewed volcanically into the area.

Then there were the streams that appeared as small strips of tinsel from the air or a small blue lines on a tactical map. To the man on the ground, however, they were raging, violent rapids, full of cube-shaped boulders five or six foot in size. Many times there were no river banks, only slippery rocks or muck that oozed over the top of the boot and clung to the bottom of the sole until each foot picked up twenty pounds with each step. Khe Sanh clung to the soul. [The foot in green mythology referred to one's soul, for example, Oedipus, whose foot was injured.] It was frequently necessary to move along a narrow stream by stretching out both arms and legs and move along a ledge four or five inches wide. The main river in the area just north of the Khe Sanh Combat Base (KSCB), the Riviere de Rao Quan, killed two Marines in late 1967.

Many areas do not contain streams, and there is little water while on patrol. In the heat and in the exhaustion of climbing the hills, one learns to ration very carefully and to savor each precious mouthful of water. When the canteen is empty, one is offered a swallow from another man's, for out here we all take care of each other. We are one with each other.

The daily patrols in this area devour all of one's strength. The body tells us it cannot possibly move another step--after only the first hour of a patrol--and then continues on for eight more hours of the same. One learns very quickly that it is possible to do far more than what is merely thought possible. After returning to the hill outposts after a patrol, there are watches to be stood and positions to be improved--more digging in the hard clay. One feels like diarrhea or vomiting, but nothing emerges. One battalion commander noted, after being in Khe Sanh a couple months:

"Commanders must insure that only the very ablest and fit personnel are allowed to participate in a jungle operation. Known weaklings must be singled out because they create evacuation problems as non-battle casualties. They will not be able to keep up. Over a six-day period, weight loss per man averages 12 - 15 pounds."

What does all this mean? Being shot at isn't enough; the daily routine rigor of the life here is so demanding in itself. These are those who deserve daily showers but only can clean their bodies every six weeks or so. These are those who deserve sodas and beers, but none are received. These are those who deserve so much and receive so little. Who appreciates their effort?

There are several significant hills in the area near KSCB. Dong Tri Mountain looms north of the base with its inverted coffee-cup shape. The Marines refer to it as Hill 1015, being 1015 meters above sea level. All the hills were referred to by numbers. This was the war where only numbers-quantities, were regarded by those in the rear as real--where abstractions were reality and reality was abstractions, where "body count" and killing ratios were the realities for those in the rear and had nothing to do with the reality the trooper experienced.

About a "click" (that is, one grid square on the tactical map, or 1000 meters) west of 1015 was hill 950, the end of a mountain range that we always felt to be infested with enemy forward observers gazing down on our every movement on the combat base. Hill 950 was the site of a radio-relay station. The radios used on patrol, the PRC-25 (called "Prick-25") were "FOX MIKE" ("FM"), and line-of-sight. While in valleys, it was as difficult to communicate with others as it is for those who are in the valleys of life, when in a depression. A large, nearby hill solved this problem.

From Hill 950 one could look directly down at Khe Sanh Combat Base, and frequently see it shrouded in a blanket of clouds. Locals of the area frequently asked why we had built an airstrip there since there was frequently a cloud layer there while other areas nearby were usually clearly visible. Mr. John There was what the Air Force called a "fog factory" off the eastern end of the airstrip--a ravine which dropped some 800 feet forming a trough through which the prevailing winds carried the warmer moist air to the airstrip. One of the Recon radiomen, Kevin Macaulay, perched atop Hill 950 for many weeks, frequently saw the sun rising in the east over the base, blanketed with fog. He used to remind those with problems that they were like that scene: temporarily the warmth of life and the light of understanding of the sun was blocked out, but it is still shining, and when the layer of cloud burns off, the sun will shed its warmth as usual.

Significantly higher hills stood further north and not too distant, one as high as 1739, a granite mass called "Dent du Tigre" ("Fang of Tiger," or simply "Tiger Tooth"), but these were not seen from the Combat Base, being blocked by hills of lesser height--lesser things and people blocking our awareness of the greater that is always there. When climbing a hill like 881-South from the southern slope, or 471 from the eastern slope for the first time, after a very long patrol, one looks at what he assumes to be the summit. Upon reaching that point, however, it is seen that there is another peak further that was not previously visible.

To the west and a little north of the Combat Base was Hill 861 and to its west, Hill 881-South. From May of 1967 to about May of 1968, both 861 and 881S were usually manned with sizeable infantry units to protect the Combat Base itself. And there were many more hills, remembered by the officials only by their numbers, but remembered by those who were there in terms of desperation, death, anxiety, spookiness--471, 552, 689, 918, and perhaps the most spooky of all, the one recon teams never like to stay on overnight, Hill 881-North.

Note: Many hills are erroneously designated, which indicates all the more how "unreal" such numerical designations are, not referring to the reality of the hill itself! After our artillery did not clear Hill 950 to strike targets on its northern slope or in the valley to its north [This happened on 26 July 1967], a topographic unit arrived in August, 1967, and determined that 950 was really 963.29. At the same time, the blasting of hills we fought for earlier that year had made 881S really 856 and 861 really 837. The Combat Base at the main gate was 495 and at the eastern end, at the garbage dump, 475, making an odd rise in the airstrip for landing planes which flew uphill after touchdown. In terms of feet, multiplying the meters by 3.28, the Combat Base at the main gate was 1623.6 ft.; 950 (really 963.28) was 3139 ft.; 1015 was 3329.2 ft.; Hill 881S (really 856) was 2807.68 ft.; 861 (really 837) was 2745.36 ft.; and Hill 1939 was 5703.92 ft., or over a mile high.

In the midst of twisted and torturous terrain were five valley or plateau approaches to the Combat Base, avenues through which an enemy force could attack: (1) from the northwest of the camp at the Laos/South Viet Nam border near XD 6653 along the stream and valley that join the Riviere de Rao Quan at XD 7949 and continuing southeast to Route 9 at XD 9140; (2) Also from the northwest of the camp, from the Laos/South Viet Nam border at XD 6646 and then southeast along the ridgeline to Hill 881S (XD 7743); (3) Along Route 9 itself; (4) Southeast of the camp from the Da Krong Valley which enters the Area of Operations (AO) at YD 0035 and then northwest until it joins Route 9 at XD 9241; and (5) Northeast of the camp from just south of Hill 1123 (XD 8551) and running southwest along the Khe Xa Bai River to a point just north of Hill 558 (XD 8245). [26MAR AAR CROCKETT p. 6].

Note: From a need to be accurate and specific within a geographical area, and also to indicate the "strangeness" and difference from what is normally experienced "in the world," the designations of location are indicated by a group of letters and numbers as they appear on military maps. The Khe Sanh area lies within a 100,000 meter square on the surface of the earth designated as 48QXD, according to the Universal Transverse Mercator Grid (UTM) in which the world is divided into large geographical areas extending 6° in longitude and 8° in latitude.

These areas are subdivided into 100,000 meter squares. Since interest is rarely focused in two fairly distant areas simultaneously, only the identification "XD" is used. To the east of XD lies another 100,000 meter square, "YD." Each of these squares is further divided by imaginary vertical and horizontal lines, each of the 100 lines indicating 1,000 meters. To locate the number indicating a location on the map, one reads from left to right and bottom to top. Thus, Hill 558's location (at the center of the map) is indicated as XD 8245. Since most places do not lie at the intersection of the designated grid lines, and since it is desirable to provide a location accurate to within 100 meters, each grid square is further divided (in the map-reader's imagination) by ten additional criss-cross lines. Thus, Hill 881-South lies a little more than halfway between lines 77 and 78, or at 777, and it lies slightly above the mid-point between lines 43 and 44, or at 438. Its location, within 100 meters accuracy is indicated as XD 777438. This is the usual designation for infantry usage. Artillery and intelligence usually desires designation to be accurate within 10 meters, and therefore provides an 8-digit number. [Dept. of Army and Air Force, TM 5-241, The Universal Grid Systems, Aug51, pp. 9-13; Dept. of the Army, FM 21-26, Map Reading, Jan69].

The next chapter deals with the exotic animal life in the area followed by a chapter on the Bru, then a chapter on the French coffee plantations, and so on.

WOUNDED WARRIOR MARINE DOWN

By Chad Harris
B CO 1/26

I was sent to war when I was 18 years old. I was a Fire Team Leader, running patrols. I was sent over to a camp called Khe Sanh. The Siege lasted 77 days. The way a battle is fought is to hammer hard in the beginning. I was in the beginning and got medivaced out on the third day of the 77 day Siege. A battle that had no mercy. A battle that remains in the minds of those wounded warriors that survived .

Those wounded warriors still suffer with (PTSD). This Disorder is still trying to be understood by the medical profession, and seeks a means to treat it without meds and psychotropes. Some of the effects of PTSD are button words, triggers, or sounds. A smell, a sight, a certain sound can trigger me right back to Khe Sanh. When that happens it causes me to lock up and revisit the war. The images and emotional stressors that were endured at the battle are not meant for humans to endure, and the effects are lifelong.

My cry to America is this: of all the charitable organizations that people contribute to, whether it be to hurricane disasters, the Red Cross American Heart Association, etc., the, disabled combat veterans are the ones that are forgotten. Even though there are organizations within the VA that are set up to work with veterans that are disabled, there are still numerous vets that are homeless and diving in dumpsters. These individuals, the ones that put their lives on the line for the American Dream, to own a home and a piece of property some place, what we would call a piece of the pie.

The VA took 15 years to acknowledge the fact that besides the physical limitations I have, there is something more. Because the eye cannot see into the mind, it seems to be a difficult place for people to understand the mental anguishes and struggles that are in some cases more limiting than the physical.

My decision maker is broke. I was told to do something when I was at Khe Sanh, and when I returned, to America, was told something else. As a result, I checked out of society for eight years. I lived under bridges, out of my car. and avoided any interactions with people at all costs. The decision maker is still broke. Sometimes one decision can take me out a whole week.

I came back trying to find America, trying to find freedom. I came back with medals that you cannot eat, you cannot live in them.

On the wall are the names of the dead in Washington; we cannot help them. We cannot do anything for those folks. The POW-MIA's are not forgotten, but these guys, these wounded warriors are forgotten. I was a leader of men. I still often wonder what happened.

The people that served in the military and came out without any injuries, and got their education ... they do not need your help. But the wounded warrior does.

There has been discussion on whether some of these guys that are living under the bridge don't want your help; maybe they are caught up in alcohol and don't want to be helped. If they are thrown a life jacket, they will receive it. There is enough land in this country, and they would gladly accept their piece of the pie.

If one person has a candy bar and there are six that are hungry, and you give each one a little piece and they have to make it for a month, they will probably all die. But if you give the candy bar to one and he eats it and then expends his energy to run get help to bring back, it will probably work for everyone. Each wounded warrior needs to take his story or his card and get his help from a local church or a community of people. The help has to be adequate for it to really work.

A book has been published by author Michael Archer, named A Patch of Ground. Please read the book for further understanding about wounded warriors.

THE UNCOUNTED
By Craig W. Tourte

Start of Tour: Wednesday, July 26, 1967
Date of Casualty: Monday, March 4, 1968
Age at time of loss: 20
Casualty type: (A1) Hostile, died Reason: Artillery, rocket, mortar (Ground casualty)
Country: South Vietnam Province: Quang Tri

So said the official documents given to Maisie & Williams Saunders that cold March day in 1968, notifying them that their son, United States Marine Donald Baron Saunders had been killed while fighting in Vietnam, was just a piece of paper with the date, province and country of death, and nothing else. Just a simple notification that their son had been killed - some how - by one of the following; artillery, rocket or mortar.

I wonder how many other families received similar notifications of the loss of their loved one. You know, just kind of like, well he's gone, and that's all the detail we are going to give you. Somehow I don't think that would suffice today - a few simple lines announcing a loss like that. Now more is demanded and more details to be given - but then, times were different. I've heard many estimates and different accountings of the number of causalities at Khe Sanh. Something tells me the official count - if there truly was one - of those killed at Khe Sanh may not reflect the accurate number of losses. Some were wounded at Khe Sanh, and medically evacuated to triage before they died of their wounds. Others survived for many months and sometimes years before their horrible wounds took their short lives. All listed as a causality of Khe Sanh as if they had been killed outright.

Still others like Donald Saunders were killed immediate when a mortar landed at his feet while he selflessly exposed himself to incoming, while assisting other Marines in fortifying their bunker from the continuing onslaught of the enemy's guns, ever raining down upon the base. Given that the President mentioned Khe Sanh during his inaugural address, I think that it is important his family, friends and community know a little more about the death of their son and brother. Information that Donald was killed at Khe Sanh is noted someplace, because it is a significant location and historic battle. I wonder how many others were not counted as a causality of that epic Siege and how many families wonder to this day - what really happened those many years ago. I wonder how many others weren't counted as one who stood with us, but are simply included as another casuality.

ED NOTE: Since so many new Khe Sanh veterans have joined our organization in the last several years, I have decided to reprint articles from past editions of Red Clay which I felt were memorable.

Our Historian Mike Fishbaugh, has researched and found a previous article written by Craig Tourte which significantly fits this endeavor.

The article, relates to THE UNCOUNTED which appears above. So I guess this is the right time to began.

DONALD BARON SAUNDERS (KIA)
March 05, 2005 (Red Clay)
By Craig W. Tourte

I told myself I was not going to do this because every single one is important and all should be remembered. All that died there continue to affect us to this day. How can we forget, and should we forget. While we remember them all, there are the personal ones, men who we were with, that we can still see in our thoughts and dreams. The ones whose young faces we still see and whose voices we still hear.

Their quick death was a reminder that it could come to us just as suddenly. We're the ones who now speak for those who cannot. We're the ones who can tell our story while they cannot. We're the ones who can try to make the others understand, because they cannot. We're the ones who can tell their families that they loved them and thought about them every day, because they cannot.

Donald Baron Saunders was just another Marine private at Khe Sanh who died on today's date, as did many others. I would like to post a small piece taken from the Belleville Sons Honor Roll (New Jersey) Dated March 14, 1968.

"Since "he had to leave this world, I'm glad he left it the way he did, with courage and fighting for his country." There was little else for William D. Saunders of High Street, Belleville, to say. He is the father of PFC Donald Saunders who was killed in action in Vietnam recently. The young Saunders, only 20, died of wounds to the head and body from enemy mortar fire in Quang Tri (Khe Sanh) last week.

Saunders enlisted in the Marines two years ago on September 28th. It was a day that William Saunders will never forget as it was the elder Saunders' birthday. Donald completed his basic training at Parris Island, and advanced Infantry training at Camp Lejeune N.C. He volunteered for duty In Vietnam.

'When asked why, Mrs. Maisie Saunders, his mother, said, "Donald was never to talkative, he made his own decisions. I think he felt the boys were doing a good job and he should back them up." "It was a job that had to be done for him," added Saunders, and he never complained.

In all his letters there was never a word of complaint. He tried to reassure us, in fact." Mrs. Saunders states that Donald did mention in one letter that he did not know whether it was the last letter or not and that they were surrounded by the enemy."

Of course the article goes on, but what I wanted to tell you was that I went through what little personal belongings he had which they sent home to his family. When I got home I wrote his family a letter and they returned a letter to me, thanking me for my thoughts.

I have not heard from the family again, but I often think about them. You have read items from Tom Horchler on this board. Tom put Donald's body into his truck end drove him to graves registrations. Although that chapter in Donald's life ended that day at Khe Sanh, it did not end for us, and in fact started a new chapter in our lives.

The point is, we all have personal accounts like this. And to us their loss is not just a number or a name, but a real hit you in the gut memory. I think a lot of us are still waiting to see how this is going to turn out as we continue to turn the pages in our lives.

WEB BRIEFS
"Were There Seabees At Khe Sanh? "
Larry McCartney E Co 2/26

Since the 2008 reunion in Reno, Nevada I've had a good time ribbing Mike "Animal" Preston by asking; "Were there any Seabees at Khe Sanh?" Knowing full well the Seabees were not only there, but did one hell of a job. I've related my personal experience and appreciation for how the Seabees helped me when I was on my way back to Khe Sanh after a brief hospital visit in March of 1968; so my ribbing has ALWAYS been with admiration and gratitude; just hope it was taken that way.

Well today I was surprised when I stopped at Wal-Mart on Jefferson Davis Highway, just north of the Marine Corps Base at Quantico, Virginia. Something I SELDOM do, was getting a real lesson regarding the Seabees. I Was wearing a Khe Sanh Veterans Eternally Bonded shirt—thank you Big John—as I walked to the automotive section, I needed a mat for the bed of my new pick-up truck, when I heard "Hey Khe Sanh!" Looking around, I saw an elderly gentleman spryly walking towards me. He stuck his hand out and introduced himself, he was a retired Seabee Master Chief with several tours in Vietnam, having served with Detachment B-301 at Khe Sanh early during the war, and also serving with a Special Forces detachment.

During the course of our conversation I learned this gentleman, who retired after thirty (30) years as a Seabee in 1977, was the Assistant Officer-in-Charge (AOIC) for Seabee Detachment STAT 1104 at Dong Xoai; he was there and participated in the battle in which Construction Mechanic Third Class Marvin G. Shields became the ONLY Seabee in the history of the United States Navy to receive the Medal of Honor.

I Did some research when I got home and found a photo of the Master Chief, next to Petty Officer Shields. I Also found a photo of the Master Chief at another site at a memorial service on 04 July 2010. There is no question; I was in the presence of, and learned from a true hero. I Have the contact information for the Master Chief, Johnny McCully, should any of the Seabees know him personally and want to reconnect, or want to invite him to join the Khe Sanh Veterans.

Here is that story of the Seabees Heroic stand at the battle of the Special Forces Camp Dong Xoai.

Veteran's Story: The Last American Out

Written by REBECCA KOMPPA

Matt Mattick and his wife Jane reside in rural Menahga. Recently Matt shared his military experience in Vietnam at the battle of Dong Xoai.

Matt Mattick and three fellow American soldiers quickly loaded their wounded comrade onto the first "chopper." The plan was that as soon as the critically injured Seabee was safely stored away, they would make a dash for the second chopper and get

Mattick, who found himself as the last man in the dash, was waved away from the second chopper. They were full, overloaded in fact. No big deal, Mattick thought, he would just get in the third chopper.

He quickly discovered, however, that there was no third chopper. It had been shot down enroute to rescue them.

Mattick stood there, small arms fire from the Vietcong kicking up dust all around him. As far as he knew, he was the last American soldier – alive, that is – standing in the midst of the battle at Dong Xoai.

It was the last and only battle he would fight in as a U.S. Navy Seabee.

Douglas Martin "Matt" Mattick was less than a year out of high school and 18 years old by only a month when he joined the Seabees in January 1961. He had graduated from Albert Lea High School the summer before.

His four and half years of naval duty would carry him all over the world – Bermuda, Puerto Rico,

MATT MATTICK & WIFE JANE

Antarctica, Okinawa, and Vietnam. He traveled back and forth between the East and West coasts as well, receiving training. As a Seabee he was trained to build, but he was also trained well to fight. The motto of the Seabees is "We build. We fight. Can do!"

He built ammo dumps in the jungles of Puerto Rico, corrals and cages for Wendell seals in Antarctica for a zoologist, and renovated quonsets at Okinawa. He helped build everything from barracks to gymnasiums. He was trained to be a carpenter, but in the 1960's being a carpenter meant you "did it all," from the foundation up.

Mattick was stationed in Puerto Rico, when his battalion was awakened in the middle of a night in October 1962. It seems President Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev "had gotten into a shouting match" over some Russian nuclear missiles placed in Cuba. The Cuban Missile Crisis had put all U.S. military on high alert.

After being briefed, guns were issued to all the soldiers and the ammo handed out to the squad leaders. Mattick's squad leader was away at the time, and as assistant squad leader, the 19-year-old suddenly found himself coping with the reality of possible, imminent war.

The next night found all the soldiers and Seabees moved from the barracks to the beaches, and the following day he was on a LST (Landing Ship, Tank) headed for Cuba. Mattick said they were expecting to unload on the southern shoreline, as they were coming up from the south, but Kennedy and Khrushchev resolved their "disagreement" and the LSTs were turned around at sea. They went instead to USMC Camp Lejeune in North Carolina for six weeks of military training.

From Lejeune he was transferred to the Seabees base at Davisville, Rhode Island. While stationed there, he applied for a transfer to the Antarctic Support Activities. His transfer was approved and after four more months of training, he left in September 1963 for New Zealand and from there onto Antarctica. He served the summer there (September to March 1964), where the Minnesota farm boy found himself herding seals instead of cows.

On a return trip to Antarctica from New Zealand for some R&R, Mattick experienced his first plane crash. The pilot, believing he could make it in before "whiteout" conditions covered Antarctica, butwasn't that lucky.

The whiteout was not caused by a snowstorm, but by diffused lighting from overcast skies that causes all surface outlines to disappear. It becomes impossible to tell how far away the snowy surface is and whole snow-covered mountains can become invisible against the backdrop of white clouds.

The radio tower crew tried unsuccessfully to "talk" the pilot through a safe landing. It was too far to return to New Zealand on the plane's fuel, so when finally the fuel was exhausted, the C-130 cargo plane basically fell from the sky and skidded to a stop just yards from the base's fuel station. Mattick and his fellow travelers exited out the back of the plane the moment it touched ground. The pilot and co-pilot, on the other hand, had to ride it out.

Leaving Antarctica before winter set in, Mattick was sent to San Francisco in March (1964) for new orders. He was assigned to Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 11, which was stationed in Okinawa. By now Mattick had become what is known as a "short-timer." With his tour of duty with the Navy set to end in January (1965), renovation work on Okinawa seemed an easy way to end his Navy service. He was eager to get home to Minnesota and go to college.

Lt. Frank Peterlin was heading up a Seabee Technical Assistance Team to go into Vietnam. He harangued Mattick about joining his group. Peterlin needed a "builder" to finish out his 13-man team. BUH2 Mattick had the qualifications he needed, but Mattick resisted until a "Dear John" letter arrived from back home. The day after the letter arrived, he volunteered for Peterlin's S.T.A.T. 1104.

Four more months of training followed. This time it included survival training in the mountains of California and intensive physical conditioning. In January, when he would have been getting his discharge from the Navy, he was instead flying into Vietnam. It was the early days of the Vietnam War. There were not many U.S. soldiers in the country (only about 16,000), and most were assigned to advisory roles over US-trained South Vietnamese special forces (Luc Luong Dac Biet, LLDB) and militiamen (Civil Irregular Defense Force, CIDG).

The first month was spent readying equipment left by the previous team at an airport near Saigon. Their first building assignment was at Ben Soi where they built gun ports, barracks, and ammo structures at the Special Forces camp there. Sniper fire could be heard, but they didn't take part in any combat, although the Army lost two soldiers.

Their next job was at a Special Forces camp at Dong Xoai, about 60 miles north of Saigon. The camp was manned by LLDB and CIDG, with only 11 Americans – 10 Special Forces officers and one warfare psychiatric officer. The camp was formed like a lazy L, with the CDIG and Vietnamese Special Forces in the Ranger Camp to the east (upper camp) and the district headquarters camp to the west (lower camp).

Mattick and three other S.T.A.T. members arrived there June 4, after another harrowing plane trip. This time the plane didn't crash, but Mattick got to watch the tops of 50-ft. trees pass by his plane window. The Seabees had underestimated the weight of the cargo and the plane fully loaded with fuel and taking off on a 2,000 ft. runway, was barely able to lift over the trees. The pilot was not a happy man.

Seabees and equipment continued to filter into the Special Forces (SF) camp at Dong Xoai for several days. However, two members were on R&R in Bangkok and two others were still in Ben Soi overseeing the convoy to move their heavy equipment to the new camp.

The A-Team, overseeing the camp improvements, had commissioned the Seabees to expand the building complex into a mine field that had been laid by the South Vietnamese adjacent to the camp. The Seabees finished removing all the mines sometime in the afternoon of June 9.

Prior to the attack, the Seabees heard small arms fire and occasionally a mortar round landed in the camp. But the night of June 9 – at a quarter to midnight – the Vietcong (VC) hit and hit hard. Within seconds, four or five bombs struck the upper camp. The first mortar took out the first aid bunker where the supplies were; next the communication shack blew; one bomb landed in the barracks killing one American asleep in a bunk.

Seabee Johnny McCully had just finished rounds and was having a cup of coffee with Army Sergeant 1st Class James Taylor when the mortars struck without warning. McCully grabbed his M14 rifle and 300 rounds of ammunition. He ran to where fellow Seabees William Hoover, Lawrence Eyman, and Marvin Shields were returning fire. Both Hoover and Shields had already sustained injuries.

Lt. Peterlin, awakened by the blast, grabbed his weapons and ammo and was soon engaged in the fight. For nearly an hour, the compound was pummeled by machine-gun fire, heavy mortar and grenades. During a lull, Shields sprinted to a burning shed to retrieve more ammo. McCully took a .50-caliber round through his shoulder but managed to keep his 57mm recoilless rifle in action.

At 02:45 June 10, waves of VC accompanied by flamethrowers overran the upper camp. Shields, Eyman and Taylor, along with two U.S. Army soldiers, withdrew, sprinting through enemy fire. Shields and Taylor carried a gravely injured Army officer. Peterlin, Hoover and SF Staff Sgt. Donald Dedmon became separated from the others. As they maneuvered across the camp, Peterlin was knocked to the ground by an explosion and wounded in the foot by a bullet. He managed to crawl through barbed wire, where he found a foxhole outside of camp and burrowed into it. He remained hidden away there until he was rescued on June 11. Hoover and Dedmon, unable to find foxholes, died fighting.

At the lower camp, Mattick, Dale Brakken, Jim Wilson, and James Keenan (corpsman) were fighting furiously. Shields and Eyman were able to reach the lower camp to join them, but Eyman was seriously wounded in the process.

McCully and two CIDG troops moved to the east in hopes of locating a buried cache of weapons and a radio. Instead they found 500 VC sitting over the cache, eating breakfast and having a "good time." Heavy fire prevented them from returning to their original positions, so they pulled back and hid under a house in the nearby village. The CIDG troops had rifles and fired on the enemy until their ammo was exhausted. McCully passed out from his wounds.

Even after being wounded twice, Shields volunteered to accompany the commander to knock out an enemy machine gun placement. They were successful, but Shields was mortally wounded. Five of the 20 Americans at the camp were killed (two Seabees and three Special Forces); all the rest were wounded.

During the night, Mattick reports that they were given phenomenal air support. Mostly it was flares to keep the battlefield in light so the Americans could see their enemy to shoot. The Navy and Marine fighters offered the best ground support, Mattick said, adding that he believes if he had a 20-ft. stick he could have touched their planes – they flew that low to the ground bombing and strafing the enemy with their machine guns. It continued all night.

With morning light, the air support pulled back. Two companies of South Vietnamese sent as relief were met by the VC and annihilated. With no ground support available for hours, word was received that three helicopters were coming in to pick up the surviving Americans. Carrying Shields on a poncho, the Seabees and soldiers pulled him under the barbed wire fence with them and reached the landing site for the choppers. Only two choppers made it, and left Mattick stranded.

On board the choppers, Mattick's buddies asked the pilot to return for him. They couldn't; they're were overloaded, but they would make sure help was sent.

Standing alone in the field with bullets flying all around him, Mattick ran back to the pit and found the field radio they were using to communicate. Not knowing if the voice on the other end of the conversation was friend or foe, Mattick told him he was the last American left in the battle. The response was an astonished "holy cow," which assured Mattick that the speaker was American.

Mattick was told it would take the choppers a hour and half to return. His response: I can't make an hour and half; 10-15 minutes at the very best. I can't hold out by myself.

Then Mattick got some good news: there were five Huey helicopters in the area. The radioman assured Mattick that they would come in over the area and one would come down to pick him up.

The Hueys came in five abreast, noses pointed to the ground and their 40 mm cannons laying down a wall of fire. Just before they reached Mattick, the two Hueys on the outside made a circle and started laying down a wall of napalm. The flames quickly formed a chimney out of the napalm and the middle chopper came down the chimney Mattick took off from his pit, but stopped and ran back to get his hat, then with his adrenalin pumping, he ran as fast as an Olympic sprinter toward the Huey. Seeing the dust in front of him riddled with VC bullets, he jumped the last 20 feet and landed belly high in the chopper. The gunner grabbed him by the belt and pulled him in, all the while his machine-gun blazing.

Mattick saw the middle Huey hit on its nose, rock back to the end of its skid, and then hit on the nose again, but by that time he was on board and the chopper was off. It never had to land. Mattick heard later that the chopper had 80 bullet holes in it when it reached its home base, but no one inside was hit. They had gotten the last American out safely. On June 11, American forces regained control of the Special Forces camp at Dong Xoai from the fleeing VC. At that time, Peterlin and McCully were also rescued from their hiding places. Mattick estimates that 1,000 South Vietnamese troops and 2,000 VC were killed in the fight.

S.T.A.T. 1104 became the most decorated Seabee unit in the history of the Bees. Their unit received one Congressional Medal of Honor, two Silver Stars, seven Bronze Stars with Combat V's, 13 Navy Unit Commendations (the smallest unit to ever be awarded this), 11 Purple Hearts, 13 National Defense Service medals, 13 Vietnam Service medals with Bronze Stars, 13 Combat Ac- tion ribbons, 13 Republic of Vietnam Campaign medals with Device, and 13 Republic of Vietnam Gallantry Cross medals with Palms.

Construction Mechanic Third Class Marvin G. Shields (picture, right) died on board the evac chopper. He is the only Seabee to ever receive the Congressional Medal of Honor for conspicuous gallantry above and beyond the call of duty. A destroyer escort has been named after him, the USS Marvin Shields*, as well as new barracks at the naval Great Lakes Training Center in Illinois.

The seven Seabees surviving the battle plus the other four in the unit have been honored many times for their service and deservedly so.

"We did not do anything that any other Seabee or soldier would have done if placed in the same circumstances," Mattick said. Like other veterans, he shies away from the label "hero."

"We had a job to do, we did it," said Mattick. and that is in the finest tradition of a U.S. Navy Seabee.

Here Is The Ceremony Attended By Retired Master Chief Johnny McCully

Veteran's Day, Washington, DC

Nov. 11, 2009

There was a smaller than usual turn out for the Annual Veterans Ceremonies sponsored by the Navy Seabee Veterans of America , but for what we lacked in attendance we made up in patriotism, in front of the SEABEE Memorial.

The weather was once again cooperating with us with temperatures in the 40 degree range. Commander David J. Buchanan had welcoming remarks for everyone and Admiral Shear addressed the gathering. Three wreaths were laid, one by the Viet Nam Veterans, one by the Navy Seabee Veterans of America and one by NSVA members Admiral Shear and Force Master Chief of the Seabees James Fairbanks representing the CEC.

At the close of our ceremony we assembled at the Tomb of the Unknown for the presentation of the wreath by Vice President Cheney, and in the Rotunda where the Vice President addressed the Veterans. The SEABEE flag and American flag were carried by Joe Tack of New York and Rick Abernathy of Michigan, both men retired Master Chiefs volunteering to carry the flags.

The last ceremony to attend was the laying of a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown by the various Service Organizations. This year it was my great honor to represent the NSVA along with Vice Commander Bear Holland in presenting the NAVY SEABEE VETERANS of AMERICA's wreath to the guard at the Tomb.

This is a very special day commemorating VETERANS all over the world for their contributions to keeping the world a safer place for us and generations to come. If you have never had the opportunity to attend the Washington D. C. Veterans Day Ceremony please make arrangements to do so, you will be impressed.
David J. Buchanan, Cmdr.

FOND MEMORIES
By Neil Kenny L Co 3/26

LYNN MARIE FOX

"Never blame the rainbows for the rain
And learn to forget the memories
That cause you pain
The last whispered wish of age
Is to live it all again.
So never blame the rainbows for the rain"

Sitting alone with only my thoughts and the music of the universe, I have come to reflect upon the lives of two of our Khe Sanh Family.

In this journey we call life we each encounter many different people, places and things. I have come to the conclusion that the places and things, while of interest, are merely the accoutrements of the important part of life, that being the people.

Having said this I have the remorseful task to report the passing of our family members. In living as in dying, we each go through the circle of life. Every part of the journey has its great tragedies and indescribable joys.

Knowing this we celebrate the rainbows of each life when we recall the radiant smile that only they could generate. Remember too the many birthdays and holidays when we gathered as one and glowed within the light of love. The school years, the formative time of each path we choose to travel, and thus at the end of the journey we come to pass.

Those of us who are left behind inevitably state that we wanted just a moment more and that these great loves of ours have gone from us all to soon.

Two of the people who I have had the wonderful pleasure of knowing and loving in this life have gone to their final rest.

On the morning of June 8, 2009 at the tender age of Twenty- eight Lynn Marie Fox passed away after a gallant struggle against a debilitating form of Leukemia and a bone marrow transplant.

Lynn was, and is, the light in the eyes of her late father Charles 'Scott' Fox of Charlie 1/26, and her Mom Kathy. She was the iron fist behind her Little Brother Grant, and the best Little Sister to her Big Brother Todd.

Many of the members of the Khe Sanh Family have grown to know and love the 'Little Foxes' as more than any family I have known in my association with this organization; they are the Kids we have all watched grow up.

The Fox Family in some configuration or other, has been to every reunion that I have been to since 2000. This is more than many, if not most of our present membership.

Lynn was always an inspiration to me as we traveled back and forth to her chemo and medical appointments. I can honestly state that I never once heard her complain. Quite the opposite, Lynn would always ask, "How are you?"

If it is possible to have a daughter whom you love and care for as much as any child of your own – then that would be and is – Our Lynn.

When we lost Charlie, I wrote how so many members of the Khe Sanh Family attended his services. I have to tell you that we were present in equal numbers for Lynn's services as well. It was amazing to see how many young girls, as well as their parents, lamented the loss of their beloved Cheerleader Coach. Like her father before, and her Brothers now, Lynn was an integral part of the Redland Midget Football Organization here in the heart of South Central Pennsylvania.

While Lynn is sorely missed, I know that she shall never be forgotten.

PHINEAS E. SMITH
L CO 3/26

On the evening of October 30, 2009, I received the call I had been dreading. Jordan called to tell me that Dad had passed quietly. His Dad was, and shall be forevermore, the very Best friend and Brother I have ever had.

Phineas Everett Smith is someone whom most people feel they know if they know me. I can state without any question that the same was and is true, of the many people who knew him when it came to me.

We met in the trench line of Khe Sanh. From the moment we met till this, our Spiritual bond hasn't been, nor shall it be broken. It is, as we say, and more importantly, as we live: 'Semper Fidelis'.

Phin had been sick from Nam related injuries and service connected illnesses since the early nineties. After Nam he obtained an Associates Degree and went on to be an Operating Engineer up until the time when he became disabled.

He raised his son Jordan as a single parent from the time he was two. He was a really Great Father and dedicated his life to Jordan.

Phineas was only able to attend one of our reunions as travel was a tremendous burden due to his illness. If you spent any time with me however, you also spent it with Phin. LOL.

I am grateful that as we talked prior to his passing, he thanked me for keeping the promise we had each made to one another, to always be there for each other. That is truly the bond of Brothers who have walked hand in hand toward eternity in a very distant past, which somehow seems like only yesterday.

The day after Thanksgiving we laid Phineas to rest. The ceremony was a small but significant and meaningful experience for Jordan.

We arrived at the Sacramento National cemetery at around eleven a.m. As we exited the offices, having filed the necessary paper work (it is a government operation), we were approached by Marc Soto, his wife and son who had come to pay respect, to a fallen Brother. I was moved by their presence. The director informed us that we had to wait till eleven-thirty to commence with the ceremony.

At exactly eleven-twenty-nine, I looked to my right and observed a small convoy of vehicles rolling gently but affirmatively through the main gate. Bounding from their vehicles were Craig Tourte, Steve Weiss, Tom Horchler, Lucy Horchler, and Dave Tonick.

The director said, "It is eleven-thirty and we must proceed." So without further delay and interrupted introductions, I bellowed, "Saddle Up!" Like a well oiled machine we each returned to our vehicles and proceeded to the area for the final pass and review.

A Marine Honor Guard folded the Flag and presented it to Jordan, followed by Taps.

A few words were spoken and of course the only interruption was my cell phone ringing – but alas – it was merely another Brother calling to be present and accounted for, as 'Little John' (as Phin always called him) reported in.

Jordan declined the offer for lunch with the troops more out of stunned disbelief than any other explanation, as the full realization had finally hit home, that Dad his best friend, mentor, counselor, pain in the ass, and true love was not going to answer his calls anymore.

It was a quiet ride back to Santa Rosa.While there is much to say and even more to think about, I am left with only the thoughts from so long, long ago. Life is for living and into that future I shall travel. I realize that I am a better person for having the joy of knowing and loving Lynn and Phineas in this life. They are the brilliant color within my rainbow, and they shall shine again, but alas now they appear as but a gray rainstorm in my heart.

I shall see you both in the Morning and as each of you had the Twenty-third Psalm in your service, I too, "… shall fear no evil: For thou art with me…"

"So never blame the rainbows for the rain
Never blame the rainbows
Never blame the rainbows for the rain"

MAJOR GENERAL NORMAN J. ANDERSON USMC, INOVATOR, SUPER GAGGLE CONCEPT KHE SANH

Norman J. Anderson, 96, a retired Major General in the United States Marine Corps, who served for 37 years, and then ran the MacArthur Memorial Foundation after his retirement, died on September 6, 2009 in Virginia Beach, Virginia. Although he had a distinguished career, and was a pioneer in close air support in three wars, his military career was nearly aborted before it began - shorter than the minimum required height, he was initially rejected by the recruiters, and was only accepted after a friend whacked him on the head with a flat piece of wood hard enough to bump him up to the required height! General Anderson, the son of an engineer and a piano teacher, was born in Manitowoc, Wisconsin on February 7, 1913.

He was raised in Wisconsin and Florida, and graduated from high school in Glendale California. He then attended the University of California at Los Angeles where he was a member of the ROTC unit, and graduated in 1934 with a B.A. degree in History. He also completed one term of postgraduate study in East Asian Affairs at Stanford University. One of the original pilots of American Airlines, he was an aviation pioneer for nearly 40 years, focusing an innovative mindset on developing (and defending) Marine Air's team approach to the support of ground troops. On Guadalcanal he led the famous SCAT effort to resupply Marines on the ground at a time when Japan controlled the sea around the island. As memorialized in a 1992 article in the Marine Corps Gazette, "When this, the first of the SCAT aircraft, rolled to a stop..., the U.S. Marines had inaugurated a totally unique combat air service." SCAT also set a world record for the longest mass flight of twin engine aircraft in history. Later, he flew over 100 bombing missions as Commanding Officer, Marine Bombing Squadron 423, in the Bismarck Archipelago, and Philippine campaigns.

For heroism and distinguished service during this period, he was awarded three Distinguished Flying Crosses and seven Air Medals. He was promoted to lieutenant colonel at the age of 31, in March 1944. In Korea, he led air cover during General MacArthur's famous Inchon landing -- executing the close air support tactics, based on decentralized decision-making, that characterized Marine Air's approach to war. As a pilot flying with VMF-323 based aboard the Badoeng Strait (affectionately known as the Bing Ding), he was famous for endurance, often landing only to refuel and take off again. He earned the Silver Star Medal, his 4th DFC, and his 8th through 10th Air Medals.

His approach was the Marine approach, making sure that troops on the ground were safe, well-supplied and successful. In 1956 he was appointed to the Hogaboom Board, overseeing a re-design of the Marine force structure, particularly including the optimal role of helicopters in supporting ground troops. In the early 1960's he was named Director of Marine Corps Aviation, and stationed at Headquarters Marine Corps. General Anderson was also active in Vietnam, arriving in June 1967, he assumed duty as Deputy Commander for Air, Ill MAF and CG, 1st MAW, and earned the Distinguished Service Medal and his 11th Air Medal.

He was instrumental in the Marines successful defense of Khe Sanh during the 1968 Tet offensive, brainstorming with close friends from World War II and Korea the razzle-dazzle Super Gaggle concept which saved countless lives, and brought helicopter capacity safely into the contested battlefield in a new way. The idea of the Super Gaggle "was to establish a small task force consisting of 8 to 16 resupply CH-46 helicopters, about a dozen A-4 Skyhawks and four Huey gunships to fly cover, a Marine KC-130 to refuel the aircraft, and a TA-4F with a TAC (A) in the backseat to orchestrate the entire affair." Once again, as with SCAT at Guadalcanal 24 years earlier, he brought mission critical benefits of air power to Marines on the ground. "If it weren't for the Gaggle most of us probably wouldn't be here today," according to Bill Dabney, probably the most shot at Marine at Khe Sanh.

General Anderson had a strong moralistic streak throughout his life. He famously fought William Westmoreland in defense of the Marine's approach to close air support, with the backing of his superiors winning the day for Marine Air's decentralized, team, approach to the battlefield. Westmoreland noted that this was the one point in the war when he seriously thought of resigning, and later recalled that General Anderson became 'very emotional' in pressing his argument. And in mid-1941 he lent the famous ace and close friend Greg "Pappy" Boyington $1000 so that he could go to China and fight with the Flying Tigers, money that, he proudly recalled, 'was paid back in full and on time.'

After retiring from the Marine Corps in August 1972 he authored a series of articles on close air support with soaring titles like "Marine Aviation Ready for any Emergency: Air-Ground Team Concept Value is Hailed," and "Laurels at Low Tide," describing the Inchon landings." After retirement he was involved with the MacArthur Memorial Foundation in Norfolk, Virginia, for 28 years - for the first 10 years as Executive Director, and then as a member of the board, helping to turn what had been a forgotten museum into a civic center for the rebirth of a dilapidated downtown area, as well as a world-class memorial for one of America's greatest warriors. He remained a Director Emeritus until his death.

Major General Anderson's medals and decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal with gold star; the Silver Star; the Distinguished Flying Cross with three gold stars in lieu of subsequent awards; the Presidential Unit Citation with two bronze stars in lieu of second and third awards; and 22 additional awards. He was predeceased by his brother, Dr. Thomas F. Anderson, a pioneer in the use of electron microscopy, and is survived by his sister Amy Duling, and his wife of 55 years, Irene Fernandez Anderson, a former professor of Romance Languages at Middlebury College and Syracuse University, and later an employee of the CIA. Survivors also include two sons, Norman F. Anderson, of Fairfax, VA, and Dr. Kirk C. Anderson, of Flagstaff, AZ; and four grandchildren. A Memorial Mass was at 10:00 AM, Wednesday at St. Gregory the Great Catholic Church. Burial with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery. MOS AND CASUALITIES

Craig W. Tourte

Wilbur Stovall was the H.Q. 1/13 Company Clerk. Tom Horchler - from the book Battalion of Kings - "..remembers (he) was tall, thin, Willie was a short-timer, having only about 15 days to go until he rotated back. One of my last memories of him was his statement, 'I can't wait to get some of Ma's fried chicken.' He was really excited and anxious to get back to his family. Paul Turnbull and I ended up taking Willie to graves registration and helped to survey his gear." MOS AND CASUALITIES Marines are pretty much Marines, regardless of any particular Military Occupational Specialty (MOS). I never fixed my bayonet like Marines Mike Powers and John Rowland who served with Delta Company, 1st Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment. I never charged an entrenched enemy bunker or ridge line like Marine Steve Wiese who served with Bravo Company, 1st Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment, did during his 18 month Vietnam combat tour.

I never sat month after cold isolated month on the top of a lonely hill in an isolated corner of Vietnam, like Marine Phil Nuchereno, watching his friends being picked off one at a time, wondering when and how his time would come. I never commanded men on an isolated entrenched hilltop, like Lieutenant Ernie Spencer, Commanding Officer of Delta Company, 1st Battalion, 26th Marine Regiment. To say that I was particularly brave or extraordinary would be a stretch. After all, I was just a private and did the job the Marine Corps assigned to me; I was just a regular Joe.

I knew a lot of just regular Joes at the Marine Corps Combat Base of Khe Sanh in 1967 and during the terrible 77 day Siege of that base in 1968. Marines like Bill Poland and Beryl Bushaw who went about their very dangerous job with little sleep and little food. Men who fought their own battles for survival everday and somehow, perhaps through just plain luck, persevered. Some are surprised to learn that there were, "other than infantry (grunts) at Khe Sanh." Marines like Donald Saunders, Ken Williams, and Wilbur Stovall, the Company Clerk of Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 13th Marine Regiment. All Killed in Action at Khe Sanh during that long and bloody Siege.

None assigned to infantry units, but all three were Marines. Although my personal knowledge of the Marine Corps Combat Base at Khe Sanh is somewhat limited to the period of time I was there, roughly August 1967 to sometime in April 1968, as I look back it seems like I was there forever. To this day, certain experiences remain vivid in my memory and dreams. I have read extensively about the events of the Siege and have spoken to numerous individuals who were there with me. Each recalls a somewhat different, yet similar experience. Certainly the Military Occupational Specialty of the men in the various services were dissimilar, however I am quite sure infantry and supporting arms made up the majority of those on the base and surrounding hills. As such, it would make sense that most causalities were to those that held the MOS of an infantryman or related combat specialty.

It is generally assumed, there were anywhere from 5,000 to 6,000 men at the Khe Sanh Combat Base in late 1967, a fair amount of military personnel, at least by Marine Corps standards. But regardless of the exact number of U.S. and allied personal at Khe Sanh, it is accepted that the number of North Vietnamese Army troops in the area was somewhere in the neighborhood of 40,000 men with supporting arms including tanks (Attack of the Lang Vi Special Forces Base by NVA tanks.) I don't know the ratio of infantry to other Military Occupational Specialties on the base, but there were certainly many different and varied military specialties present among the Marine, Army, Navy, and Air Force personnel. Cooks, truck drivers, office clerks, engineers, Navy Seabees, medical personnel, electricians, mechanics, wiremen, artillery, forward observers, graves registration, supply, radar, fork lift drivers, heavy equipment operators, air traffic control, tanks,and supporting arms (50's and twin 40's), to name just a few.

To look at those who were present, you could not tell one from the other, they all looked the same. Each carrying their individual weapon wherever they went. Red clay stained ratty green uniforms, tired, scared, skinny, undernourished and exhausted, grunts, clerks and cooks. Each MOS took casualties and all faced the same dangers together. All had their time in the V ring, not one safer nor job easier than the other. Marine Tom Horchler was a truck driver with Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 13th Marine Regiment, who risked his life daily, taking rounds while he drove his truck to the dump, hauling water, C rations, sandbags, and artillery shells from the landing strip to the guns, and picking up the dead, gently transporting their lifeless bodies to Grave Registration.

A moving exposed high value target, no trench, armor, sandbags, or overhead to protect him, unable to hear the rounds leaving the guns of the enemy, unable to run, hide, or even hope, all he had was just luck and a prayer. Continuing his very dangerous duty all day and then standing guard half the night in the trench line waiting for the expected ground attack. Tom Horchler knew he had a dangerous job; no one had to tell him it was dangerous and no one had to thank him for his effort at supporting "them."

It was the job the Marine Corps assigned to him, and at the Marine Corps Combat Base of Khe Sanh, it was just as valuable, just as necessary and just as dangerous as any other. There were many at Khe Sanh during the 77 day Siege of 1968 just like Tom Horchler, not an infantrymen, but a Marine, doing a job which was just as dangerous, just as dirty, and just as necessary as the rest of the jobs that had to be done.

At Khe Sanh we were all the same and it did not matter what MOS the military had given us. There were no safe places, no place to rest, to hide or sleep, no place safer than another. We were all the same at Khe Sanh no matter the MOS, officer, enlisted or civilian contractor. We all shared in the danger equally and our casualties reflected our presence.

THIS VIETNAM MEMORIAL IS A FIVE MINUTE WALK FROM OUR HOTEL IN SAN ANTONIO

Vietnam Veterans Memorial San Antonio's Vietnam Veterans Memorial was dedicated Nov. 9, 1986, in a ceremony attended by about 6,000 persons, including the former commander of ground forces in Vietnam, retired Army Gen. William C. Westmoreland. The war's top soldier said it was one of the most impressive and largest crowds he had seen. Westmoreland gave the keynote address at the event, stating that the memorial's unveiling represented a coming home for veterans. "Before, they were physically at home but didn't feel accepted -- now it's a reality," he said. The memorial depicts a radio operator comforting a wounded comrade while anxiously searching the sky for a medevac helicopter. The bronze sculpture stands about 10 feet tall at its highest point and is 23 feet long and 12 feet wide. With a weight of more than 10 tons, it is the largest sculpture of its kind in the country. The memorial is located in front of Municipal Auditorium, in a portion of the facility's parking lot that has been transformed into the Veterans Memorial Plaza. A monument to Korean War veterans was added later at the other end of the plaza. "Hill 881 South," as the memorial is officially called, was created by Scottsdale, Ariz., artist Austin Deuel who served as a Marine illustrator during the war.

On April 30, 1967, the dramatic sight of radioman Donald Hassock helping an injured soldier inspired Deuel to draw the picture that 19 years later would become the model for San Antonio's memorial. Businessman and Vietnam veteran John Baines, chairman of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial of San Antonio Inc., led the effort to establish a monument to honor the area's war veterans. In January 1986 Deuel and his staff in Arizona began working on the sculpture, and on May 2, 1986, the San Antonio City Council approved the memorial's construction plans. But funds were still needed to pay for the sculpture and the surrounding plaza.

So San Antonians went to work, taking part in a number of events to raise the money. A radio station held a radiothon and groups sponsored a Walk for the Vietnam Veterans, during which participants raised money by taking pledges for each mile they walked. Comedian Bob Hope performed at a benefit show held in the auditorium. These activities eventually raised the $600,000 that was needed. On Nov. 4, 1986, the sculpture left Scottsdale on a flatbed truck and arrived in San Antonio three days later. It was dedicated on Nov. 9, just two days shy of Veterans Day. This is what is inscribed on the front of the sculpture's base: "Permanently encased within the memorial is an air tight compartment that contains a complete list of the names, serial numbers, branches of the military and dates of service of the men and women from the San Antonio area who served in the Vietnam War. Over 60,000 fine young Americans from our community served in Vietnam. This memorial is a tribute to all of them." On the other side of the base is a poem titled "Death at My Door

Day is over and danger hastens
Young Marines at their battle stations
Instruments of war outline the sky
Means of death are standing by
Can it be true on this high hill
Forces will clash only to kill?
Silence fills the near moonless night
Restless thoughts of a bloody fight
Endless memories for those awake
Meaningful discussions experience would make
Though silent world in which we live
Permit only God's comfort to give Somewhere through the darkness creeping
A date with death is in the keeping Alone I sit and question why
Life itself to be born to merely die?

OTHER NEARBY VIETNAM MEMORIALS OF INTEREST

The Kelly AFB Veterans Monument

The Veterans Monument at Kelly AFB in San Antonio was dedicated in May of 1992. It was originally meant to honor service members who took part in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, but, later, base officials decided that it should be dedicated to all veterans. The monument is located near the main gate to the Southwest San Antonio base.

The metal monument is designed in the shape of the U.S. flag and rests on a black marble base on which are inscribed these words from Oliver Wendell Holmes: "One flag, one land, one heart, one hand, one nation evermore." At night, the flag's stars light up and the silhouette of a colonial minuteman with musket appears on the face of the monument.

The floor of the small plaza where the monument sits is covered with 16x16 inch bricks. Kelly employees raised funds for construction of the monument by selling the bricks, which buyers could then have inscribed with their names or the name of a vet. Information on the brick includes the veteran's branch, rank and dates of service.

LEAL MIDDLE SCHOOL

In the same general area of town where the Edgewood and Kelly monuments stand is another memorial -- perhaps the best kind. It is Leal Middle School, a living monument dedicated to education and progress. Formerly called Southcross Junior High School, after the street on which it is located, Leal was renamed in honor of a former student who was killed in Vietnam. The school is in the Harlandale Independent School District, a working-class area of South San Antonio. Leal Middle School is the first and, so far, only institution in the city to bear the name of a Vietnam vet.

I understand that Armando G. Leal Jr. was well-liked and considered a "good guy" around his tough Southside neighborhood. A photo of the smiling young man posing proudly in his Navy uniform is displayed in a glass case near the school's main office. Also displayed is a copy of the citation that accompanied Leal's Navy Cross.

The citation reads in part: "Armando G. Leal, Jr., Hospital Corpsman Third Class, U.S. Navy, awarded the Navy Cross posthumously for extraordinary heroism on 4 Sep 67 while serving as a corpsman with the 2nd platoon, Company "M", 3rd Battalion, 5th Marines, 1st Marine Division (REIN), FMF . . . "

The citation goes on to describe how Leal went to the aid of Marines who had been cut down in an ambush during Operation Swift. Although he suffered a number of wounds himself he refused any treatment and continued to work on his comrades. But in helping others he left himself vulnerable to attack and was killed by an North Vietnamese Army machine gunner.

I want to apologize to all of those members who contributed so generously to the KSV. FROM THE PUBLISHER & REUNION COMMITTEE

We hope everyone had a good time at the reunion. There were a few glitches here and there, but as several of our members have said: the reunion is not really about the size of a room, activities that did not go as planned, a bad meal etc. They are about good friends getting together, reliving past adventures (Good or Bad), and making new friends. If that is the criteria for a good time, we had a great reunion.

We did use a T shirt printer who obviously did not pay attention in spelling class. On this same note, I have had the reunion T Shirts redone and any member who wants a corrected version can Email or call me, and I will get you out a new one. Remember to add your size to the request. Also You can purchase additional corrected shirts from our PX.

We want to personally thank the following members for their invaluable assistance at the reunion. Dave Meyer & His lovely wife Carol, Tom & Evelyn Ford, and Sid "Fish" Patricio, and Michael Fishbaugh. As always, thanks to the beautiful Kathy Turner who really puts it all together. A shout out to Russ & Fay Evans for setting up the static display and organizing the Ladies Luncheon, which was a great success; and to Ken & Betty Rodgers for setting up the Bravo Co Interviews.

We are also grateful to the men and women from VFW Post 76, who held a welcome home party and barbeque for our membership, everyone had a great time. Pictures are on pages 67-74.

We are in the process of planning events for the 2011 reunion in Minnesota. We will have a Luncheon on the Riverboat, and a fantastic Memorial service at one of the best Memorials we have ever visited. It is called the Soldiers Memorial, which you really have to see in person. It is unbelievable and the service (Candle Light) will include live videos of those who have past, with our members to be invited to speak while photos of their honorees are being shown. The ceremony will have a lot more effect, which we would rather have the membership experience in addition to being read about.

We had an election to fill two vacant seats on the KSV Board of Directors, due to resignations. Craig Tourte & Jack Haigwood, the only members who submitted nominating letters, assumed those two positions; no vote was required from the membership. We want to thank Robert Moxley, Dale Pack, and Frank Taggart for their service to the Khe Sanh Veterans.

All other board members whose terms had expired, will also serve another term since no one had filed to run for their positions. Next year there will be an election for President, Treasurer, and Member-At-Large Positions. All those who wish to run for any of those positions must notify the Secretary, Jack Haigwood of their intentions, prior to the Minnesota reunion.

A real big thank you to our Vice President John Pessoni, for the outstanding job he did with the Khe Sanh Veterans PX. With all the new items he purchased, and the generosity of our Members, we raised over $12,000 for our general fund, which supports the Red Clay Magazine, and other amenities, we provide to our members at our reunions, which helps keep our cost to a bare minimum.

Chaplain's Corner

By Chaplain Ron Rayner

The message board at www.khesanh.org has provided a wonderful picture of this year's reunion and the people who attended it. This is just as I am sure Ray Stubbe intended when he started The Khe Sanh Veterans, it sounds like everyone was positive and encouraging to one another.

As I write this article Larkin Spivey's daily devotional for July 24 in his WWII Battlefields and Blessings provides the perfect quote for how the reunion has been described on the message board; "To have your work judged positively by someone you respect is one of life's great rewards."

I am sure that Tommy Eichler, Russ Turner, Big John, Fish, and the rest of the committee appreciate the applause that they have received.

It was with great disappointment that I had to cancel my flight reservations on Tuesday July 13. I had received a phone call that morning from my cousin telling me that my Uncle Bob had moved on to his reward in heaven. We visited the funeral that afternoon and made the arrangements for the visitations and the service.

During the visitations I reflected on how everyone would enter rather somber but within moments have smiles on their faces or be or laughing out loud. The funeral service brought many happy memories. That is just how Uncle Bob would have wanted it. He had lived 91 happy years even though he had more than his share of unhappy days.

Uncle Bob spent more than 60 years as a Boy Scout and Boy Scout leader. As a teenager he became the main provider for his family when his father died at an early age before the depression was over. He flew over 50 missions as a waist gunner on a B-17 in Europe and was wounded in the head. He lost three of his four children at childbirth. He lost his beloved wife 4 years ago.

I performed the funeral service for Uncle Bob as I had for his wife, my Aunt Glenden.

Four years ago I was taking care of my father, who had Alzheimer's disease, one day a week. After my aunt died, Uncle Bob joined me in that task. After my dad passed away Uncle Bob and I still found something to do together at least one day a week. Quite often we would help at a local charity picking up food or clothes from donors. Even though Uncle Bob walked like Tim Conway playing the little old man, not taking a step over 6 inches, he was a big help. He was a tremendous help in teaching me that I needed assistance in keeping my PTSD mind headed in the right direction. He showed me that one can find ways to be helpful to others, even in your 91st year. He attended almost every one of the reunions for his bomber group and he was instrumental in getting me to attend the KSV reunions.

The following scripture give us all a very good reason to attend future reunions.

"Without wavering, let us hold tightly to the hope we say we have, for God can be trusted to keep his promise. Think of ways to encourage one another to outbursts of love and good deeds. And let us not neglect our meeting together, as some people do, but encourage and warn each other, especially now that the day of his coming back again is drawing near." Hebrews 10:23-25 (New Living Translation)

The message board has mentioned many fond memories of our group who have passed on. Many of those memories included past reunions.

I personally have met only one person at a reunion that I knew from 1968. I have met and made many new friends with people who I shared an experience with over 42 years ago. Old friends and new friends are what the reunions are about. I try to encourage more old friends to attend but the new friends I have made at the reunions make them worthwhile.

I used the following prayer at my Uncle Bob's funeral. I have used it in sympathy cards for our members and at numerous other military funerals.

O Loving God, please be with us as we honor the life of one who served our nation, for Bob has been taken from our midst and is now in your care. We are pained by the gap in our lives. Yet love is strong as death; the bonds love creates are eternal. And ours is the blessing of memory, through which the lives of our departed continue to be with us.

Please accept our prayers on behalf of Bob. May he rest in peace, and may light perpetual shine upon him. Look with mercy upon those among us, family, friends, and comrades, who are bereaved by this passing. Please comfort and console us all with your presence and tenderness. Amen.

When I think of my Uncle Bob, I smile. I believe the legacy of the Khe Sanh Veterans reunions will always be friendship, love, laughter and smiles.

"... Let every thing you say be good and helpful, so that your words will be an encouragement to those who hear them...Get rid of all bitterness, rage, anger, harsh words, and slander, as well as all types of malicious behavior. Instead be kind to each other, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, just as God through Christ has forgiven you." Ephesians 4:29-32 (New Living Translation)

"We Are Eternally Bonded." It is my prayer that I will see old friends and meet many new friends in Rochester, Minnesota next year.

Augusta Marine Still reflects on Khe Sanh Siege, 40 Years later

By Keith Edwards, Staff Writer
Kennebec Journal

AUGUSTA -- On March 9, 1968, a North Vietnamese rocket struck the headquarters tent where Ralph Sargent usually spent most of his waking hours in Khe Sanh, Vietnam, injuring three Marines and killing a soldier due to return home in 13 days.

But Sargent, an Augusta resident and one of about 6,000 Marines who fought in the 77-day siege of Khe Sanh against an estimated 34,000 North Vietnamese, wasn't there.

Instead, he had jumped -- literally -- onto the back of a moving C-130 cargo plane nine days earlier on emergency leave so he could help his family back in Maine deal with the death of his brother-in-law, Guy Robert Bean, who was killed in combat in Vietnam at the age of 21.

Monday, the 40th anniversary of the start of the siege of Khe Sanh, Sargent plans to do what he usually does on that day every year. He'll flip through some of his old photo albums and books of mementos and commendations and think about his experiences and lost buddies in the Vietnam War.

He figures he's lucky to be around to reflect, and not just because of the rocket that killed his unit's machine gunner, Lance Cpl. Wilbur Stovall, whom Sargent said was like a son to him.

Sargent, now 72, almost didn't make it out for his emergency leave.

Due to persistent incoming enemy rocket and mortar fire, the few planes that did land on the crater-marked airstrip at Khe Sanh usually never came to a full stop. Their loads of supplies were attached to parachutes, which pulled the pallets of supplies out the back of the C-130s. Then the planes, after touching down, without stopping, would take back off. So Sargent had to run onto the airstrip to board a plane out.

"I ran and jumped for the tail, but my pistol belt got held up on the ramp," Sargent said. "It was stuck. I couldn't get in and I couldn't get out."

Another service member saw what was happening, grabbed Sargent and pushed him up into the plane. But in so doing, the man was left hanging from the ramp as the plane began to takeoff and left the ground. That soldier fell to the ground.

"The last thing I saw was him landing and rolling on the ground," Sargent said of the other service member. "I don't know if he made it or not. I still see that guy, rolling on the ground, today."

Another close call came when a 152-millimeter artillery shell flew over his foxhole, close enough so he could feel the heat coming off it.

Other than a touch of shell shock which caused Sargent, for a time even after he'd left a combat area, to yell "Incoming!" and dive to the ground when he heard loud, explosive-sounding noises, he made it out of Khe Sanh without getting injured.

Randy Worthley, of Winslow, a past commander of the state Veterans of Foreign Wars and current commander of the VFW in Winslow, wasn't fortunate enough to escape injury in Khe Sanh.

Worthley, 62, took shrapnel in his neck and upper leg during heavy enemy shelling in a June 27, 1967 attack that killed two of his five fellow Marines assigned to their 105 millimeter howitzer.

He was treated in an underground hospital on the Marine base at Khe Sanh and returned to duty shortly thereafter. He said he still has nerve damage, and lacks feeling in much of his thigh.

"I'd say I came out OK, physically," said Worthley, who received the Purple Heart. "It could have been a lot worse. We lost what, 58,000 there?"

Worthley, who left the Marine Corps in October of 1968 and is now a master electrician, also received the Presidential Unit Citation and Combat Action Ribbon for his service in Vietnam.

Both Worthley and Sargent spent most of their time on the base, as most fighting at Khe Sanh consisted of exchanges of artillery fire, not direct, face-to-face combat.

Both Marines said the defensive assignment of holding the base while under siege was frustrating for many of their fellow Marines because, they said, Marines are used to being on the offensive.

The steady barrage of enemy shelling led to them spending most of their time underground in bunkers.

Worthley said they filled large wooden ammunition boxes with dirt to build up their walls and strengthen their bunkers from attack.

Sargent, a Gardiner High School graduate, said they used anything they could find, because proper supplies were hard to come by in Khe Sanh, which was surrounded by the enemy and reachable only by aircraft.

"We didn't have proper protection for our bunkers," Sargent said. "All of our corrugated steel went to the north, thanks to Robert McNamara (U.S. Secretary of Defense from 1961-1968). We had nothing to stop anything more than an 82 millimeter mortar. They (the North Vietnamese) were using heavier shells than that."

Sargent said sometimes they were short on supplies so weren't allowed to use water to shower, and were limited to two C-ration meals per day.
The first wave of what many consider the official siege of Khe Sanh started with a major attack at 5:30 a.m., Jan. 21, 1968.

"They hit us with rockets, mortars, everything," Sargent said. "The third round hit our ammo dump. We had all kinds of stuff in there, it was quite a Fourth of July display. It was two or three days before it settled down."

Sargent was battery gunnery sergeant and platoon sergeant of a 36-man reactionary platoon. During his service in Vietnam he was awarded a Navy Commendation and the Bronze Star with a Combat V for heroic achievement, for his role in an attack not at Khe Sanh. He said he didn't want the award because he received it for his actions in an attack in which 35 Marines died.

"I did nothing but do my job and get the wounded out of there," he said of the Bronze Star. "I didn't want it, I wear it in memory of the Marines who got killed that night."

Marines made up the bulk of forces at Khe Sanh but all branches were represented.

Worthley served at Khe Sanh from June of 1967 until January of 1968, before the "official," 77-day siege of Khe Sanh occurred between Jan. 21 and April 8, 1968.

But that doesn't mean Khe Sanh was a peaceful place when he was there, as his wounds can attest.
"We were some of the first troops sent there to beef it up," Worthley said. "We fired thousands and thousands of rounds there -- 1,200 in one mission."
Being in artillery, when enemy fire came in, rather than hiding out in bunkers, his unit's job was to go out to their howitzers and return fire. Their targets were often enemy troops moving ammunition on the Ho Chi Minh Trail.

Worthley came into and left Khe Sanh, which is on a plateau surrounded by the Coroc Mountains located near the North Vietnam and Laos borders, by helicopter. Bullets were coming through the bottom of the helicopter when he was flown out.

Worthley, a native of Mexico, Maine., attended technical school on the GI bill after the Marines and became a master electrician. He and his wife Carol have two adult daughters.

Sargent was in Khe Sanh from September of 1967 to April 18, 1968.

He was in the Marines until he retired from the Corps Sept. 30, 1976. Later he worked for the state and Digital in Augusta, before retiring.

He's been married to his wife and high school sweetheart, Onise, 53 years. They have two daughters and five grandchildren. One grandson joined the Marines, though Sargent noted he did not pressure him to do so.

The number of casualties suffered by both sides at Khe Sanh has long been disputed. The official count of deaths released by the Marines counts 205 deaths and 1,668 wounded.

The Khe Sanh Veterans Association, founded by Vietnam historian Ray W. Stubbe, a Navy Chaplain at Khe Sanh and founder of Khe Sanh Veterans Association, estimates there were 730 Americans killed in action in Khe Sanh.

More than 2,500 were injured, according to multiple accounts.

Khe Sanh was abandoned by U.S. troops and leveled by July of 1968.

"The powers that be decided it wasn't of important strategic use," Sargent said. "All this waste of blood and human lives, and they turn around and level it."

MARINES LAST REQUEST

Oldest Post Fulfills Marine's Last Wish No Evening Parade but gift of pageantry
By Timothy Wilson

Julian Galindo wanted one last memorable moment with his wife, but he had grown so weak from a debilitating brain disease that even holding a telephone for a few minutes made him tremble uncontrollably.

Galindo, 51, a former Marine warrant officer, found it difficult to eat or bathe without his wife's help. Even getting out of bed some days seemed to be a painful chore.

So traveling about 1,200 miles from Nebraska to the District to visit the Marine Corps' oldest active post seemed just the place to allow them to experience their last ooh-rah.

The Dream Foundation, a wish-granting organization for adults battling life-threatening illnesses, made it possible for Galindo and his wife, Vicky, to attend the Evening Parade. The free ceremonial event is Friday evenings at Marine Barracks Washington, also known as "8th & I," in Southeast. But the Galindos were not able to experience the pageantry of the parade. The performance they attended was canceled because of a severe thunderstorm. Officials said that lightning posed a danger to the Marines and audience members, who sit on aluminum bleachers.

"It was a little disappointing, but I was still in awe of being at 8th and I," Galindo said.

Although the parade was called off, the Galindos were invited to stay afterward and sat in the library of Center House. From time to time, Julian Galindo would be approached by a Marine with whom he would share the purpose of his visit.

He told them he suffered from progressive supranuclear palsy, a degenerative brain disease that affects nerve cells that control balance, mobility, vision, speech and swallowing. His doctors had given him a limited prognosis for survival. They were stunned when he revealed that his last wish was to visit 8th & I.

Capt. Michael Deal, commander of the marching company scheduled to perform, wondered whether anything could be done to salvage Galindo's trip. An opportunity occurred when the storm stopped. "Let's see if we can pull off the Silent Drill Platoon," Deal said.

Sensing the significance of the occasion, Col. Andrew H. Smith, commanding officer at the barracks, granted Deal's request for the 24-person platoon to perform.

Galindo and his wife were escorted from Center House to an area on the grounds where the commandant of the Marine Corps sits.

The performance featured the Marines in a series of calculated drill movements while handling their rifles with precision. The routine ended with an unusual rifle inspection sequence, complete with elaborate rifle spins and tosses.

"For them to come back and give up their time, that was something that touched my heart," said Galindo, who shook each platoon member's hand after the performance. "I can never say how grateful I was for that."

Vicky Galindo, 46, said she saw something that she hadn't seen from her husband in almost 20 years, since a training accident exposed him to a live nerve agent that they think caused his illness.

"It gave him some peace," she said. "It's like the Marine Corps wrapped their arms around him again. I don't think I've seen him that happy in a long time."

The parade, which can draw hundreds of spectators, features music and precise marching from the U.S. Marine Band, Drum and Bugle Corps, Color Guard, Silent Drill Platoon, and Ceremonial Marchers on the grounds of the barracks. The event has been held Friday evenings from April to November for more than 50 years.

"This is the home of the corps," said Capt. Lisa Lawrence, a barracks spokesman. "To see the impact we have on people who come here, its unreal."

VIETNAM VETERANS FIND FRIENDLY LZ

By Reverend Ray W. Stubbe

Dear Tom:

Last weekend's Vietnam reunion at LZ Lambeau in Green Bay, Wisconsin, blew me away. There were numerous hugs and a few tears as everyone was emotionally moved and, I'm sure, given a good dose of healing medicine to their spirit and soul. The entire time was filled with happiness and healing.

Many met friends they hadn't seen in a very long time. I personally met Donna Elliott, whose brother, Jerry, was lost as a MIA at Khe Sanh. We had corresponded for well over a decade, but I had never met her. She has just completed a book and was able to give me a copy of the printed book--along with some coffee grown at Khe Sanh! I met Bill Maves, a former FO with E/2/26 on Hill 861-Alfa (your unit, Tom!) and who also served in Iraq. He said, "They not only tried to kill me at Khe Sanh; they tried to kill me in Iraq, too!" Now, I've heard the phrase: "For those who fight in a war, it never ends," but in Bill's case, this is a matter of reality and not simply old wars still exerting their influence, like the effects of a microwave oven lingering long after the microwaves have turned off. I met again Bruce "T-Bone" Jones and Carl Oxney! Carl, as you might recall, so proudly and aptly represented Khe Sanh Veterans and reminded the general public of us through his mobile PX many years ago.

The several-day event was filled with surprises and opportunities. There was an immense map in the parking lot of Lambeau Field, on which one could write his name with a magic marker. There was a static display of memorabilia from Vietnam. included was a display that had my combat jungle boots still caked with Khe Sanh mud and my helmet on which I had made a cross from numerous fleshettes I came across while moving about the shambles of the base following our Sunday morning fireworks display with our ammo dump going up. There were, of course, the usual opportunities to purchase T-shirts, caps, patches, etc., and information booths to give helpful information on benefits to veterans. There was one of our new "Dry Hootch" places. These are coffee-house, non-alcoholic, places where vets can gather together socially in a safe place, and there is one in downtown Milwaukee--and perhaps others of which I'm unaware.

There was a ceremonial parade of Native Americans, Lao, and Hmong veterans, in colorful regalia. There was music. There was a static display of Vietnam-time vehicles (quarter ton, jeep, mule, jeep with 106, quad 50s, etc., and even a Lister bag and water buffalo!). There were numerous Iraq and Afghanistan soldiers in their utilities (or "fatigues" for Army) and I was moved to tell many of them "thank you for your service." I was amazed that younger people took an interest in us old farts. I'm going to be 72 this August and most of the rest of my brothers there were in their 60s. But they seemed perfectly at home. There is a bond between brothers (and now, sisters) in arms that breaks boundaries of age and other social classifications!

I got up every morning at 0530 and had the distinct pleasure of running about 45 minutes in a route that included circling the Lambeau stadium. Oddly (I thought), I encountered NO other runners--and I'll be 72 on 15 August, and most everyone else was obviously so much younger! The run was invigorating not only physically but there was a certain thrill of being in proximity to the football stadium and running through our Vietnam area--large map, motor "T" area, tents, etc.

The high point was a special gathering inside Lambeau Field of some 30,000. I was asked to give the prayer and did. It's the first time I did some religious "thing" for so many! What impressed me was that the next day, dozens came up to me recalling specific lines or phrases from it and saying that it was "right on." One man even had tears in his eyes as he expressed thanks.

The next day, Sunday, I conducted a worship service there for several hundred. We had, at my invitation, a Roman Catholic priest and also a Jewish lady (who has a son going off to Afghanistan this summer and another son graduating from USAF training, and whose husband is a Vietnam veteran). We had a bag piper and a girls chorus. We had several dozen members of Patriot Guard Riders standing on three sides with American flags. These men provide the Colors at funerals for the KIA of Iraq and Afghanistan and also are present at "send-off" and "welcome home" events of Iraq and Afghanistan soldiers and Marines. Some Wisconsin National Guard members served as ushers. I conducted the service and gave the sermon, focusing on Khe Sanh and some Biblical texts that seemed to apply to our situation at Khe Sanh and Vietnam, generally.

Tom, I'm not sure you were there since I didn't see you but knew you had planned to be there. There were so many tens of thousands, of course. It's miraculous that I connected with Donna Elliott, Bill Maves, Bruce "T-Bone" Jones, and Carl Oksnee!

Semper Fi,

REVEREND RAY W. STUBBE LZ LAMBEAU
Bruce "T-Bone" Jones

Bill Maves(E/2/26) and I met Rev. Ray at LZ Lambeau also and it was great to see him. He had a "shinner" in one of his eyes from his last boxing match (BTW...he won it!) and he looked very good. He gave the benediction at the Sat evening event and then he led the memorial service on Sun morning. He was magnificent! I spoke to him after the memorial service and in his very self-deprecating manner he asked me if he "did good". I responded with tears in my eyes; "yes, you always do a great job; it was beautiful, Ray". What a fine man and such a wonderful representative to KSV. Semper Fi; and enjoy the Memorial weekend. "RENUNION STORY(SIC)"

By Craig Tourte

You'll note the intentionally misspelled word "Renunion" and I am not going to tell you why. If you were one of the fortunate who attended the outstanding reunion in San Antonio you would get the soon to be known, and I am sure to become quite popular, inside joke. That aside, let's gets down to some serious business. I expect this to be one of more than a few articles I'll write about this reunion.

I'll start with the first story which involves a trip to the Alamo. Although a commonly hot and muggy San Antonio Saturday morning, Tom Horchler (H.Q. 1/13) and Lucy, David Tonick (A/1/26), Marco Soto (A/1/26) and myself, paid a visit to the Alamo before the crowds arrived. There is not much that remains of the original structure but what has been preserved and rebuilt allows the visitor to get a sense of the mission as it was in 1836. There are the usual rusted artifacts, trinkets one can purchase in the gift store, photographs to be viewed and articles of historical importance.

The real story at the Alamo is contained in various plaques, markers and monuments displayed on the grounds, for example the letter to Major General Sam Houston dated February 24, 1836, attributed to William Barret Travis, LtCol., Commanding, which reads in part. "...Our numbers are few and the enemy still continues to approximate his works to ours. I have every reason to apprehend an attack from his whole force very soon; but I still hold out to the last extremity, hoping to secure reinforcements in a day or two. Do hasten on aid to me as rapidly as possible, as from the superior numbers of the enemy, it will be impossible for us to keep them out much longer. If they overpower us, we fall a sacrifice at the shrine of our country, and we hope prosperity and our country will do our memory justice. Give me help, oh my Country! Victory or Death!"

As I stood on the grounds of the Alamo, now with crowds and traffic starting to settle around me, circling humanity taking photographs of the structures, family and friends, so many looking in and few looking out, I stood still and heard the hooves of a thousand horses and felt the dusty ground beneath my feet and saw the two hundred brave men of the Alamo standing, facing the enemy who outnumbered their small command 300 to 1. I saw the line in the dirt and heard the offer, that any who chose to leave could step over and knew, not one boot moved. As if from an old grainy black and white newsreel film, I reflected on a time not so long ago of a few thousand men who stood shoulder to shoulder, facing overwhelming odds with no choice to leave, no line to cross, no where to run or hide. Men who also stood, knowing that the enemy was superior in number. I saw the many thousands in the hills and the few on the plateau who stood facing a "superior number of the enemy" and I understood the fear, anticipation of battle and desperate defense these men of the Alamo faced 174 years ago, as did those who defended that little Marine Corps Combat Base of Khe Sanh.

Moving along to another marker titled "The Defense of The Alamo" my eyes filled with tears as I read the final few lines. "...It was here that a gallant few, the bravest of the brave, threw themselves between the enemy and the settlements, determined never to surrender nor retreat they redeemed their pledge to Texas with the forfeit of their lives - they fell the chosen sacrifice to Texas Freedom." Knowing in reality these words were spoken about the defenders of the Alamo, my heart was reading defenders of the small Marine Corps outpost of Khe Sanh.

Saturday evening as we all sang the National Anthem, most with voices cracking and tears running our cheeks, I stood in the back of the room and peered over those ever fewer aging defenders of Khe Sanh and thought to myself, these few men, these gallant few, the bravest of the brave threw themselves at the enemy, determined never to surrender nor retreat and all were willing to forfeit their lives for their comrades and their country and I was proud to be standing with them. I recalled the letter written by William Travis, "...If they overpower us, we fall a sacrifice at the shrine of our country, and we hope prosperity and our country will do our memory justice..."

I pray our country remembers those fine brave men who defended the hills and combat base at Khe Sanh and "...will do our memory justice."

CRAIG,

Great piece of writing Craig! You brought back probably my fondest memory of this reunion. I will never forget standing in the rear at the banquet, while 'God Bless America' played (After 'The ANTHEM' & 'TAPS'), watching one of our members struggle to get out of his scooter to stand at attention, while at another table a member was putting his arm around his buddy who appeared overcome with emotion. And I thought I was the only one.....
Tom Ford

CRAIG,

I always read your postings and I always look for your next. Tho' I was unable to take part in this year's reunion of Brothers, thoughts of all you Brother's walked in my mind. Thank you for sharing your thoughts with me Craig and I look forward to your next.

KHE SANH VETERANS IN THE NEWS
BILL WEBER MCB-4 SEABEES

The Record
STAFF WRITER
BY JUSTO BAUTISTA

Students who've been to the wall never forget it. The wall at the New Jersey Vietnam Veterans Memorial and Vietnam Era Education Center in Holmdel, which recently celebrated its 15th anniversary, pays tribute to the 1,562 New Jerseyans who were killed or listed as missing in America's longest and most controversial war.

May is the center's busiest month, but each year, almost 9,000 students, from New Jersey and around the country, take the 45-minute tour of the center, guided by Vietnam veterans like Bill Weber, 62, of Little Ferry.

And most leave with a better understanding of what their fathers or uncles or aunts who served in the war went through.

"I understand the emotion of war now," a Clifton High School student said. "Coming here today was more moving that we could have ever imagined," said a student from Long Branch. "A beautiful remembrance of those who gave their all," said a student from Fairfax, Va.

What I find is that it's a life-changing event for many of the kids who come through," said Bill Linderman, a Vietnam veteran and the center's executive director.

"Most of the students are only a year or so younger than the guys whose names are on the wall," Weber said.

Unlike many veterans who returned from the war, Weber doesn't mind talking about it. Weber, who served in the Navy Seabees, is only one of 36 Vietnam veterans who volunteer as tour guides at the center.

Some Vietnam veterans volunteer as tour guides only to find that their war memories are too painful. They decide they can't be volunteers. For others, volunteering has had a cathartic effect. They open up after years of silence.

"My daughters ask me about the war, I tell them," Weber said. "Some guys don't like to talk about it. Some go to the other extreme. All they want to do is talk about it, embellish a little. Then you have the wannabes."

Weber was wounded in a rocket attack at the big Marine base at Khe Sanh in June 1967. He was sleeping in a tent that took a direct hit.

"That was a wake-up call," he said. Two buddies were killed and a dozen others were wounded in the attack.

Weber's specialty in the Seabees was plumbing. "Our first project was a jail for the 1st Marine Division," he said. "I remember we had to do it 24/7. The only thing you could see were big bright lights while working. We were out in the middle of nowhere, west of Danang. It was like a big target, but nothing ever happened."

Marines welcomed the Seabees because they built rest and recreation centers, USO buildings, PX buildings and airstrips.

Again, unlike some of his Vietnam brethren, Weber, who retired from the Bergen County Police Department last January after 30 years, didn't shun military fraternal organizations such as the VFW or American Legion. In fact, he joined the local VFW post while he was still in Vietnam. Weber will be the new commander of VFW Post 809 in Little Ferry, and is the commander of the Military Order of the Purple Heart Chapter 522 in Paramus.

Weber admits that he sometimes "gets choked up" on the tours. "But you recover right away, hopefully."

I AM A NAVY CORPSMAN

By Mark A. Wright, HMC(SS) USN

I am a navy corpsman. I possess the stamina and enthusiasm of youth and the wisdom and experience of an old man.

I am 3 parts doctor, 1 part nurse, 2 parts marine, 1 part yeoman and 3 parts mom, yet I am 100% sailor.

I am unemployable to the civilian world in my given profession yet have been the very life line for countless marines, soldiers and sailors since 1778.

I have carried marines from the battle field ... and have been carried reverently myself by marines who mourned my passing like that of a brother or sister.

I am young. I am old. brave, scared and scarred. my title has changed over the years: loblolly boy, surgeons steward, pharmacist mate, hospital corpsman, IDC, yet with all the changes I am still simply know as "doc".

I have celebrated peace; yet felt the sting of war on the seas, in jungles, in foreign cities, in Washington D.C. and on beaches of every shade of sand... white, tan, coral and black.

I have raised hell on liberty; hope in the midst of battle .... and Old Glory on Iwo Jima.

I have removed appendixes on submarines and limbs in the midst of battle and many other procedures far above and beyond what I am expected to do by the normal practice of medicine because it had to be done in order to save the life of a marine or sailor in battle or under the ice, far from a doctors care.

I have ignored my own wounds to the point of death in order to stay at my station treating the wounded of my nations Navy, Marine Corp, Army and Air Force.

I have the highest number of Medal of Honor recipients of any corp in the Navy .....most of them presented to my wife, child or mother because I was already in heaven at the time.

I am proud to know in my heart that every marine who has ever fought and every sailor who has gone to sea on ships owe their very lives to those they simply, yet respectfully know as "doc"

Combat Entry: Arrival in Baghdad

By Gary Foster
Vice President, Stanley Consultants

"Attention! Secure your gear, bring your seatbacks to the upright, stow your tables and secure your seatbelts. Prepare for combat entry beginning in three zero minutes." The loudspeaker in the cold, cramped passenger deck of the Air Force cargo plane crackled sharply to life interrupting the monotonous drone of the four cruising jet engines and shattering the dark silence that prevailed within the passenger cabin. My alarm clock at home in the early morning hours is bad enough. However, after more than six hours torturously jammed into the upper deck of a plane that had winged its way east through the night over the Mediterranean, north up through Turkish airspace, and then south, deep into Iraq crossing over the Tigris and Euphrates rivers unseen below us, finally descending into the Baghdad area, the young service woman's piercing voice, acutely amplified by the loudspeaker, and the foreboding, onerous, in-your-face message she intoned caused a worse awakening.

Not really asleep, I nonetheless bolted straight up in my seat along with everyone else and looked all around - nothing to see. Dark, no lights, except the light behind the female sergeant who was standing facing us and issuing more instructions, none of which I listened to. Having tied her hair up behind her head, she was wearing earphones and a mouthpiece both of which were attached to a cord that connected her audibly to a small control panel on the interior wall of the dark fuselage. Her silhouette, made rumpled by her oversized utility fatigue-type uniform, was clearly outlined by a single yellow/amber backdrop light. "What? Combat entry?" I asked myself. "What does that mean? This isn't a fighter plane or a bomber. This is a cargo transport plane. And we're going into combat?! What are we supposed to do besides strap in?" At the same time I rather supposed, hoped, that the crew knew what they were doing. Evidently, by the young woman's composure, she must have done this more than a few times before and I assumed she knew what to expect. I certainly didn't know what to expect. How could I? I've never flown into a combat zone and in this instance I couldn't even see out. I took solace in her casual, almost serene disposition that we would land safely. Nonetheless, the frank baldness of the words was more than a little unsettling. Any chance the refreshment cart could come down the aisle? – I looked around furtively - just one more time? Just a thought, not a clever one. There wasn't a refreshment cart on this plane, hadn't been one on the entire flight from Dover, Delaware, or earlier from Charleston, for that matter. "Prepare for combat entry." I will never forget these words or the ironically calm manner in which the young Air Force woman spoke them.

While she stood in front of us aloof, unmoving, non-plussed, her instructions were the catalyst that caused turmoil around her. The issuance of those words transformed the passengers from an inert sleeping mass to a heightened peripatetic state of transience characterized by some chaos and certainly lots of confusion, like so many sub-atomic particles that had been agitated by some exogenous force. Everyone immediately bustled quickly about: sorting, stowing, packing, putting away, moving around, murmuring, standing, sitting then standing again, sneezing, coughing, the running sound of zippers on bags being zipped open and then zipped shut again, the ripping sound of velcro as flaps other bags were being secured, people talking, searching for lost items, yawning, flashlights turned on, their precise beams cutting across the interior of the cabin casting incongruous shadows, people stretching, person gets hit by outstretched arms, another person stumbles on a bag that had been placed at his feet that was not there earlier, hats put on, hats taken off, poncho liners rolled up, pandemonium, etc., and finally, buckling up in our seats. Calm again. An ignoble end overshadowing an even more ignoble beginning. After so long an arduously long, tedious journey from Muscatine, Iowa and Virginia via South Carolina several days earlier, now ending at Baghdad, our dubious arrival terminated a trip that held little more than the promise of the unknown. The improbable flight had ended. But the beginning of the voyage to Baghdad ten days earlier was seemingly as strange.

My vacation in Chicago in late September 2003 was cut short when the telephone rang in my hotel room, with a seeming tone of urgency. It was Chris Broders, International Coordinator for Stanley Consultants, telling me in an anxious, quickened voice to call Jim Hollatz (Senior Vice President) immediately. When I asked if the call involved something to do with Iraq, she replied "Yes. Call Jim right now. You're going to Iraq immediately!" Events in Iraq were unfolding at a fast pace and Stanley Consultants was destined to be part of it.

I knew I may become involved in Iraq with the company but didn't know to what extent. My sojourn to Iraq had begun in early September. Jim told me he needed my help and asked me whether I would be interested in going to Iraq for an unspecified length of time. Without hesitation, I said "Yes, of course." Now as I talked to Jim from Chicago, he told me to be in Baghdad within one week for a stay of as long as perhaps six months. The company had received the mobilization order on a recently awarded government task order to assist the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) to identify and develop infrastructure projects for the reconstruction of Iraq. Stanley Consultants, and an associate firm, Baker Engineering, would be sending 15 people to Iraq within 2 weeks. I was to be the lead person. I agreed that I could go and I would be ready to leave Muscatine for the Middle East on Monday morning.

Having checked out of my Hotel on the Chicago River, I left Chicago driving west on I88 on a cloudless Sunday morning at 4AM, arriving back in Muscatine about three hours later. I was flying. I had lots to do and my mind was spinning and I had no time to lose. I had made a list of things that had to be taken care of and I kept adding to the list as I drove west. The CD changer was at full blast with an eclectic of CDs: Foreigner, Madonna, Fleetwood Mac, Britney (love OOPS!). Then somewhere just west of DeKalb past the last toll booth on I88, I hit the button for CD No. 5 - Crosby Stills and Nash: "On the Midnight watch I realized why twice you ran away..." I pulled into Muscatine, and stopped for breakfast at HyVee. My first stop was the Stanley office on Iowa Avenue where I picked up my briefcase, computer and an electronic ticket confirmation that Melanie Koch had arranged for me through Muscatine Travel. Debbie Martin, my secretary, had arranged notes and messages and left them tidily arranged on my otherwise untidy desk. My mind continued to race, I had less than 24 hours to pack, get ready, make all arrangements, and pay bills before I was to leave on a plane for Washington, DC, and then on to Iraq. Any traveler knows that the biggest pain of traveling is making sure your bills are paid while you are away and maintaining continuity of one's personal administrative responsibilities. How was I going to do this for three, to possibly six months? I made arrangements to automatically prepay all bills and I contacted Tim Nelson and Sandy Bean at First National Bank to help me. I contacted various individuals to take care of my house, my cars, leaf and snow removal, and in general look after things. Kevin McCauley agreed to look after my house and cars. Bill McGowan would take care of my yard. I prepaid him. I asked Chris and Melanie to make contact with my parents on a regular basis to check on their health. I called my sister and folks and told them I was leaving the next day which caused lots of anxiety, but they understood, and in fact were great supporters. I called Kathy Keane and Tom Bankhead to say goodbye and to tell them to keep bourbon on the shelf for when I returned. Then I bundled my things up and left the office, only to abruptly stop myself, turn around, and state out loud "What a mess!"

I spent the next hour cleaning my office and arranging it neatly. Now, back home, I turned my attention to packing. What should I take with me? The temperature in Iraq would be in excess of 125 degrees so I would need light clothes, but I will be there through winter so I will need heavier, warmer clothes too. I would most likely meet with high level ministerial or CPA officials so I would need a suit or two and some ties. Shoes? Let's see. I need two pairs of dress shoes, sneakers, work boots – no, not those. And shirts, plenty of shirts. Shaving cream, toothpaste, razors, and a few bottles of cologne - well maybe only three on this trip. Books, yep – I learned long ago, always travel with something to read. Now for the house, need to secure all doors and windows, keep heat low, AC off, each room cleaned and straightened, make sure all floor drains in the basement are full of water, furnace turned down, cars secured, house locked.

Next morning, after a hug from Chris, Melanie, and Debbie, saying goodbye to Jim Hollatz, Julie Graham, Steve Teraberry, Rich Stump, Larissa Wilson, Dick Hutmacher, Molly McGuire, Tim Edwards, Gayle McCauley, and Schooners, and after giving a big African handshake to Gregs Thomopulos, I left the Stanley office by the back door and was off to Iraq. But my first stop was Washington DC, then Winchester, Virginia for my processing and what would be a subtle, well not so subtle, indoctrination to the military way of things.

Key members of the team including Bennett Reischauer, Senior Vice President of Stanley Consultants, met at the Baker offices in Alexandria, Virginia for one day and then the next day I drove a rental car to Winchester, Virginia. I had learned that the Stanley team would include John Sayles, Brian Roth, George Gardner, Don Bain, who would become my roommate in Baghdad, Dean Stange, a Muscatine native now working for Stanley in Denver, and two people from Stanley's Minneapolis office: Alan Palmer and Craig Johnson who would serve as Team Leader.

Leaving Arlington on I66 at 6AM, I made my way through Roslyn and on to Manassas. The Virginia countryside was as I had remembered it from years before. The vegetation, still green in mid-September, was as lush as I had ever seen it but the development of the rolling countryside that is northern Virginia was, quite frankly, alarming. I eventually arrived in the Shenandoah Valley and, turning right, thirty minutes later I arrived in Winchester, Virginia to begin my processing.

Processing would entail inoculations (shots), being issued military gear and some equipment, obtaining a government identification card, receiving a complete physical, and receiving some instruction as to emergency procedures. I had to accomplish all this in only three days. It would be easy to accomplish all this in one day, but as soon as I arrived at the offices, I realized I was just another person in the multitudes waiting in line for processing. This facility was processing hundreds of people all bound for Iraq. I had to take my turn.

On the second day, after my physical, I was scheduled for my shots. The nurse had laid out on the table before her a series of syringes and for the next ten minutes both my arms were like dartboards. "And this one is a general flu shot," she said, as she held the syringe with the thin shiny needle vertical in the air. I told her, "If it's OK, I really don't want a flu shot," to which she responded, "I don't care what you want," and boom, she plunged the needle into my right arm. And then the gamma globulin shot - or whatever it's called - right in the butt. All I know is that afterwards the thick, molasses like serum doesn't dissipate through one's body that fast and it's like sitting on a golf ball. By the time I left I had been given every type of inoculation imaginable including anthrax. Everyone of the team would experience the same ordeal.

Now for my gear. "Here," the sergeant said, "hold the duffle bag and follow me." Gas mask and filter, canteens, cup, poncho liner, and sleeping bag, and more gear. My arms were full and the duffle bag was overflowing with stuff. "What about a uniform?" I asked. The sergeant looked at his list and said "Nope, no uniform for you." "What about a hat or a camouflaged shirt?' "Nope." Stopping at the last bin, the sergeant said "Here, try this on. It may stop a nine millimeter, but doubt it will stop an AK." Looking at me, he said "Fits fine." "I guess," I said as I slung the twenty pound flak jacket over my shoulders. "Try this on," he said as he placed a kevlar helmet on my head. Slamming the palm of his hand down on top of the helmet, shaking my whole body, he said "You look great. Sign this sheet and you're outta here." Now fully loaded down, I was ready, or at least I thought I was ready. On to Iraq. But first a steak at an Irish Pub on the promenade in historic downtown Winchester. Located in the northern Shenandoah Valley, Winchester is historic because, I am told, the city changed hands over one hundred times during the civil war, and sometimes several times in one day. I had set the alarm in the room of my hotel located not far from the city center and closer to USACE headquarters for midnight. I packed some items, or, rather, I laid them out on the second bed for packing later and drove into the city center to enjoy dinner. The meal and wine and the conversation with some English people at the end of the bar were delightful. But I couldn't stay for long and I returned to the hotel to finish packing and to get some sleep.

After I returned, however, I could not sleep – usually can't on days that I travel - and at 11:00PM, or twenty-three hundred (got to get used to that) I decided to just continue on with the day, even though one day was ending and the next one, marked by the sunrise, would not happen, in theory, for another six hours. I prepared to depart. I packed all the things I had not packed earlier in the evening, and began lugging the bags to the car which I had parked near the hotel entrance. I was weighed down with items with which I usually do not travel, namely, a duffle bag filled with a sleeping bag, canteens, cooking utensils, a poncho liner, and a few other odd assortment of things that were alien to me. But on top of all this, I had to carry my newly acquired flak jacket and helmet (without a chin strap), camouflage cover, liner and a foam rubber doughnut that fit inside the helmet that would cradle the top of my head. All issued to me by the US Army. Where was I going to pack all this stuff? How was I going to carry two suitcases, a garment bag, a computer, brief case, duffle bag, helmet, and a flak jacket all at once? I didn't have a clue. Taking everything to the car would be easy – one item or two at a time - but what about transiting through airports? I loaded all this into the trunk of the car and returned to check out. The man behind the counter said "You're off to Baghdad, aren't you?" "Yes," I said. "Many people come through here on their way to Baghdad with the Corps of Engineers." I nodded my head as I realized I was another person, another number sent into the void. In fact, I was nothing more than a social security number: 242-76-6485, a number I have had since I was 12. "Good luck." the man said. I thanked him and walked through the doors to my rental car. Time was oh-one-hundred. I drove to a seven-eleven and bought coffee and then drove to the Army Corps of Engineers building to meet Lt. Colonel Victoria Mouras (pronounced the same as Morris) at the well lit main gate. Lt. Colonel. Mouras would lead the team to Iraq for the US Army Corps of Engineers and, for traveling purposes, because I was on another USACE contract, I was attached to her group until my arrival in Baghdad.

I had made arrangements to meet her at the main gate prior to our departure. She was picking up her weapon and I was going to leave my rental car behind in the Corps' compound and then ride with her to the departure point. The Corps people would take care of the car and return it for me. I transferred all my gear into the Lt. Colonel's car while she collected her weapon. I thought she was going to be issued an M16, but she picked up a 9 millimeter Beretta pistol instead, a pistol the deployment of which is not without controversy. We drove to the Sleep Inn not far away to meet the rest of the troops and to board the bus. The bus to where, exactly? Charleston AFB in Charleston, South Carolina; that's where. Imagine, an eleven-hour bus ride to catch a United States Air Force plane to Baghdad. So we loaded all our gear in the bottom storage bay of the bus. There were 35 people in all on the passenger manifest: 34 Army types and 1 civilian – me. I was in the latter group.

The bus driver, accompanied by his granddaughter wrapped in a blanket in a seat, closed the big bus door and started the diesel engine. A minute later, after he prepared some notes and put them away, he put the bus' transmission into gear and we departed from beneath the hotel portico on our way to Charleston. The bus with 35 Iraq-bound SOBs (Souls on Board) left Winchester, Virginia at 2:00AM, or oh-two-hundred, right on time. We left Winchester driving south down the Shenandoah Valley on Interstate 81 south to Roanoke, then somewhere near there we would intercept I-77 and on to Charlotte, then Colombia, and then southeast on I-26 towards Charleston. Not much happened on the trip. Everyone slept. Everyone except me. I was too keyed up. We passed through Roanoke with its famous Roanoke Hotel brightly lit up.

We continued on reaching Charlotte just before sunrise. Of course now we were not far from the state line. We stopped in South Carolina for breakfast at a Cracker Barrel. We invaded the restaurant all at once and overwhelmed the staff. I remembered that my brother-in-law likes to purchase ice tea with tons of sugar in it especially from Cracker Barrel. I think he knows where every Cracker Barrel in the country is located. And does he ever have a sweet tooth! Me too, to a lesser degree. I bought a jar of fireballs. Why not? Loaded up again and on to Columbia. We passed Columbia airport on our right and made our way to Charleston. I remembered I had made the same trip with my folks when I was 15. At that time the road was two lane concrete and the constant noise from the tires hitting the joints in the pavement slabs drove us crazy.

We arrived at Charleston Air Force Base around 11:00AM. The bus pulled into a vacant lot across from the terminal building and everyone climbed out. We received instructions from the Lt. Colonel as to where to place our things. "Over there on the grass, lined up. Keep everything tight. The pallets will be here soon." I put everything where I was told, along with everyone else and looked around. "Hey buddy," I called out, "Any beer on the base?" "Over at the bowling alley," he yells back, pointing behind me through some tall trees with whispy Spanish moss, typical of the south, hanging down from the limbs. "That's for me." The Lt. Colonel instructed us to return to the air terminal no later than "fifteen hunnert" for the flight at "eighteen hunnert." Again, the twenty-four hour clock. I thought "NLT fifteen hundred hours for ETD eighteen hundred hours." I was catching on. We had time for a leisurely lunch. But not to be. One hour later, halfway through my burger - no onions - and my second beer - I think, a Busch - the Lt. Colonel entered the building and made exaggerated sweeping circular movements of her arms over her head. "Time to go: flight is early! Hoowuh!" Hoowah? From where did this expression spring?

Those of us in the bowling alley restaurant, having already paid for our lunch, wolfed down what was on our paper plates and virtually sprinted for the terminal through the moss laden trees and across an open field, which we had originally avoided, soggy from the previous night's rain. My loafers became soaking wet. I worried that I would fall and damage my computer or drop my briefcase in the water. I did neither. A lieutenant next to me slipped, however, and almost fell down. The bus on which we had arrived was long gone and our bags, palletized and covered with plastic, had been moved to the aircraft and loaded on board. Where we had arrived and deposited our things, there was now nothing. But wait a minute, where is my helmet and bullet proof vest? I became disconcerted because if I lost either one or both, believe it or not, I had to pay for them. And, if I arrived in Baghdad without both of them, I would not be allowed to deplane, or so I was told, or be allowed to ride into town without them on. I would be stranded at BIAP (pronounced By-Op, meaning Baghdad International Airport). This would be a small embarrassment.

All helmets and vests looked the same and, not knowing originally how the luggage would be carried or transported, I had failed to identify helmet and vest. I thought I would carry them with me, but no. Everything was now on a pallet on board a cargo plane located somewhere behind the terminal on the Charleston AFB flight ramp. I immediately recognized I was the new kid on the block, a "newbie" as they say, because everyone else, I had noticed, had expertly identified theirs. In an attempt to console myself, I thought if all vests and helmets are identified, then the ones that aren't must be mine. Still, I didn't know for sure. I put the whole issue behind me, recognizing further there were many things new to me that were outside my control and this would probably be the case for the next several months. Just get used to it and deal with it.

We lugged our hand luggage through the door, through security, and into the terminal waiting room. Pretty austere place compared to other terminals I have been in. After thirty minutes, we were herded onto buses and driven to the flight ramp and to our waiting plane. Whoa! A C5A Galaxy. "I'm gonna fly to Baghdad in a C5A?" All new to me. Good Lord, was it ever big. I've only ever seen one in pictures.

Everyone disembarked from the bus. We lined up perpendicular to the C5 under the South Carolina sun, the sky dotted with white puffy semi-tropical clouds, to board the aft door located low on the fuselage. There I was in the middle, but more towards the end of the line, with US Army personnel in front and behind. I was wearing blue slacks and a light blue shirt, which contrasted markedly with the desert tan of the fatigue uniforms of the troops who would be my traveling companions for the next many hours. At least my sleeves were rolled up just like theirs. I was trying my best to fit in but failing miserably. Standing there in the shadow of the monster cargo plane, its lifeless engines slung below its drooping wings and with people milling all about under it and to its side, I knew now I was on my way. There was no turning back. The trip would happen and me with it. The line, momentarily still, shuffled, its people grabbing their belongings and inching forward to board the colossal plane.

One by one, we clambered aboard, up some stairs and inside the aircraft. The pallets carrying our gear were placed at the back of the plane. But what about our hand gear? The loadmaster told us to leave it on the deck at the extreme end of the plane, on the ramp. He would secure it. So we threw whatever we were carrying to the rear deck and climbed another single ladder up to the upper deck and this is when it became interesting. Some of the people who, let's just say, were a little wide, had difficulty climbing the steep narrow steel stairs. It was surreal in effect and I seemed transfixed in this new capacious environment, as if I could not escape. I was being swallowed by this monster. I climbed the steel internal stairs to the top - stairway to heaven – and climbed up through, what appeared to be a wire-meshed cage type structure with a gate that served as a protective door. As I climbed above the pallets, I noticed the Lt. Colonel's duffle bag had been placed on top of the pile of bags on the pallet and strapped down securely. Her bag was placed on top because she was carrying a weapon and although she was not allowed to carry it on her person, she had to know where it was at all times. No one else carried a weapon so I assumed everyone was to receive theirs "down range" or in "theater" and not in CONUS, meaning Continental United States (new expressions for me). Of course, continuing with the logic of acronyms, if a person were outside CONUS, he would be OCONUS.

At the top of the ladder, we entered the passenger deck and I noticed the seats were facing backwards. Now why would that be? This was strange for me because all other airplanes I have ever ridden in, the seats face forward. But then, how would one know front from back? There are no windows. So it makes no difference. The passenger deck is anything but first class, or business class, or even economy class. The only good thing is that there was little leg room, somewhat anyway. The flight time to Dover – are we going to Dover? – was about 1 hour thirty minutes. Dover?! I thought we were going to Baghdad. Seems we were to make a stop at Dover before proceeding on to Baghdad. The upper deck was cold and I remembered what the Lt. Colonel had said. The poncho liner is a man's best friend. Even women say "man's best friend." So the poncho liner must not be a woman's best friend… well, not quite like diamonds anyway. Her point was that the poncho liner can serve as a wrap or a blanket or a shawl or whatever to keep a person warm. I needed it on that flight and regretted I had not carried it with me.

The inside of a C5 is incredible. It is nothing more than a flying box, long in length and short in width, but still wide enough to carry a tank and a few other things. The plane was full of pallets of material and equipment all enshrouded in plastic, netting, tarps, and what have you. On this flight we were carrying trailers, tires, steel in varying shapes, large wood boxes, helicopter blades, bundles, odd shaped boxes, more boxes, bins filled with parts, etc. Each container or box was marked with just a unit number and some sort of coding, and destination in Iraq and other indecipherable numbers. No one knew their contents. Our gear was the least of volume and weight. The cavernous insides were lit with small lights and gave the appearance of a large warehouse at night with industrial lights providing a blanket of light but without illuminating anything in particular. There are all kinds of interesting statistics about the C5: world's largest airplane, 20 (or is it 30?) stories tall, longer in length than the distance of the Wright brother's first flight at Kitty Hawk, and on and on. I think until a person stands next to a C5, these statistics are lost and really impart little meaning as to the overwhelming size of the aircraft. When one sees a person standing in the opening of the fuselage door accessing the upper deck, and realizes that above him the tail towers another 60 feet, the dimensions and magnitude of the aircraft really make an impression and only then does one realize just how extra-human the outsized scale truly is. The tiny windows at the front of the aircraft that denote the cockpit area are nothing more than tiny slits when compared to the overwhelming size of the behemoth. Straight out of Star Wars, it's not difficult to imagine that the C5 is a giant star ship type machine big enough for sustained communities traveling through the universe and into deep time/space.

As it is, the plane is so big, 20, maybe 30 families could live inside comfortably, assuming proper plumbing were installed. The floor is difficult to stand on firmly because it's covered with swiveling rollers that allow pallets to be slid in any direction, and for that same reason, walking fore and aft of the flying warehouse is not easy. There are gizmos that spin, and latch and turn and secure, hooks and rings and ropes and slides and gadgets and whissits and tie points with their designated location numbers, and piping and tubes, and cords, and cables, and signs and switches and panel boxes, and more latches and handles and pulleys, tie down points, and swivels and rollers, shackles, pins, clamps, on and on. Upstairs, the passenger deck, dimly lit, is equipped with two bathrooms, a kitchen (or rather a galley), seats, life vests, ropes, and other things that I could not identify. The insides did not bespeak of luxury or comfort but rather utility. Painted military gray, or some officious special-use colors, etc., the interior imbued a business ambiance about it.

The engines are about the size of those on a 747. One airman pointed out to me that they are much more powerful. I was soon to learn how much more powerful when we rolled down the runway and lifted into the sky.

We all strapped in backwards, and received our flight and safety briefing – on civilian planes, it's called a demonstration - and the young woman read aloud each item that we were to learn. I still have no idea how to inflate a raft or even a life vest. The seatbelt and the location of the bathroom, those, I had down cold. Everything else was a blur to me.

The pilots started the engines one by one and slowly the low howl of the turbines and compressors of each engine began to increase and resonate through the metal fuselage. First the right engines, then those on the left came to spinning life. Finally all engines, alive, were turning, consuming fuel, spitting out hot gases, shaking the plane, and filling the plane's guts with a hint of burnt jet fuel and an interminable hum over which nothing could be heard. We taxied and taxied. It seemed that we crawled along the taxiway forever before finally feeling the plane turn onto the end of the runway. We could see nothing, could only imagine our existence through other senses. The plane sat still for a few moments with the engines running. The smell of the jet engine exhaust of burnt kerosene was more pronounced. We sat, I imagined, each of us thinking about what we were doing, why we were there, and could we get off the plane. Too late. No one spoke. The silence was broken by the immediate increase in high pitched whines as the turbines spooled up and then the sound became a screeching horrendous roar. The plane was restrained fully against its brakes, shuddering, when all of a sudden, with brakes released and the engines taking full command, we were rocketing down the runway gaining speed with every ten feet of distance. The plane shook and bounced along the uneven runway before lifting off heavily into the South Carolina sky. We saw nothing but we new we were airborne. The rest of the flight was smooth.

Not long it seemed, we were lowering the landing gears and flaps and making our approach to Dover Air Force Base. We turned final - at least I think it was final because I do not recall any other turns - landed on the runway with a long sustained thud that was more like rolling thunder or a train wreck as the plane's landing gears hit the tarmac, either singly or in tandem. The sound was a low rumble that seemed to get closer and louder as more of the gears and tires collided with the concrete. The crunching sound of the landing ended abruptly, it being replaced with a steady deep rolling sound as we sped down the runway. Then the high whine and roar of the engines began again as the throttles were pushed forward and the thrust reversers of each engine actuated to slow our forward progress. With the physics of inertia ever an influence, we were pushed into the back of our seats now as the forward moving plane decelerated. Finally, everything seemed to stabilize but we were still rolling forward. The flight was over. We taxied to a slot in the flight line and stopped, the engines shut down.

We were informed we would disembark from the top portal via a motorized extendable staircase. Actually that was a relief because descending the C5's internal steel stairway would be more dangerous than the ascent. But once on the ground again I was amazed at how dwarfed we were next to this starship. I turned and watched the people exiting from the top portal at the rear, they looked like puppets as opposed to people, they way Captain Ahab must have looked trapped by harpoon ropes on the back of Moby Dick. I noticed for the first time, the front landing gears had four wheels. Not one or two, but four. Incredible.

Arriving at Gate 2, we were told departure would be in four hours. That is, the turn around time for the next flight is a standard 4 hours. Even with the urgency of war, schedules prevail. We were told not to leave the area. After a couple of hours of wandering between Gates 2 and 3, and the vending machines, and the USO for coffee, we sensed the situation was deteriorating. Three hours slipped to four, slipped to five, then to six. Lt. Col Mouras decided to investigate and was told the plane was delayed but that we would be going soon. And soon, it happened. The bus pulled up in front of the terminal and we were all told to board the bus. Away we went back to the flight line. We pulled up to the back of the plane and, uh oh, there were mechanics inside the wheel well with an access plate off and another batch of mechanics working on something behind the wheel wells. I have flown enough to know this spells delay, if not disaster. As it turned out, I would be proved right. Events would not be different here. We sat on the bus for an hour as the APU started up, filling the air with a high pitched shrill turbine sound and burnt fuel fumes, then shut down, then re-started, and then shut down. A mechanic, using both arms and with the help of a mate, removed a large cowling from the lower side of the fuselage and poured some fluid from a can into some opening on the APU. I said out loud in perfectly incorrect English, but barely audibly, "This is it. We ain't goin' nowhere." Sure enough, after another hour, the bus, with us sitting in it, turned around and started back towards Gate 2 behind and past the tail sections of about 15 C5s lined up and illuminated by the stark white light of the flight ramp. We drove past a 747 being loaded with jet engines. We entered the holding area, and waited. Four more hours we were told. Three hours, four hours, then five hours slid by – same scenario as before. An Air Force officer entered the waiting room and told us the situation was fixed, BUT – oh no, here it comes again - there was a new problem. Wouldn't you know it? The pilot had spotted a hydraulic leak in the front landing gear. Well, this sounded strange. But what did I know? Would it be unreasonable to assume these guys just don't want to fly? Then the bus arrived again and further instructions were issued: "We are going to the aircraft to collect your belongings and return to the gate. The load is being taken off and reloaded onto another C5. This will take three hours." Three Hours? I thought, no way! It'll take all day. No, all night. Back to the plane. We all climbed on board to collect our gear.

It was an amazing experience. There were loud thuds, and bangs, more bangs, as the heavy locking latches were being unlocked. The sound emanated from nowhere in particular but seemed isolated at the aft end of the plane. The mammoth cargo doors were being unlocked and were about to be opened. As a result of loud continued knocking sounds and deep metallic thuds, the back end of the airplane opened like a clamshell and voila, the plane opened to the flight ramp and the outside lights. It was like stepping outside of a beach house through large French doors. The hot humid swamp-smelling air rushed into the back of the plane and the entire world opened before our eyes. Some people had to move quickly because they were standing on the ramp as it began its slow descent to the pavement below, even when they were told to "Stand Clear." Pretty amazing watching this thing open up in preparation for unloading its contents. It would take more than three hours to transfer all this material and pallets, I thought.

We un-strapped our belongings. Lt. Colonel Mouras, being sure to retrieve her duffle bag (the weapon you know), told everyone what to do. One by one, each computer, briefcase, suitcase, vest, helmet and bag was passed along a human fire-bucket line to a waiting truck. It took an hour to unload our things. That left two hours for the rest of the cargo. "No Way." I told the Lt. Colonel. "We aren't going anywhere soon." It was midnight. Back to Gate No. 2.

In situations like these, there are two options: Try to sleep or forget about it. I chose the second option. I ate four apples, had two cokes, six cups of coffee, chewed gum and watched the TV monitor for departing flights. Our flight to Baghdad was listed as leaving "on time." This listing never changed but of course was totally inaccurate.

It was interesting to see how creative people can be when sleep overcomes them. Chairs were pulled together, poncho liners - man's best friend - were pulled out, beds were made on the floor, in the chairs in the corners, everywhere. The Lt. Colonel bounced from place to place to try to find a place to lie down. She finally curled up on some chairs in the corner of the waiting room with her legs protruding through the arms of the assembled chairs with her poncho liner over her head. Snoring in the room was inevitable and it drove one to distraction. The sun came up finally. But Dover was overcast, cool, gray, and threatening rain. We never knew the exact departure time for Baghdad but the Lt. Colonel established a time when we had to be back in the gate area, and gave everyone leave to take a shower and find something to eat. I didn't find anything for breakfast but I did manage a shower at the base health club

"Hey!" I yelled at a guy standing in a doorway. "You open?" I asked. "Not yet," came the reply. "We don't open till eleven." "Eleven!? That late!?" I was incredulous "Man, I'll be gone by then." It had taken me an hour walking around on foot and many requests for directions to find the place, but I succeeded. The guy I was talking too was the bartender and I was standing in front of the Dover AFB Officers Club. After lots of talking, pleading, supplicating, I convinced him I was an "OK" guy and that after a very long night at Gate 2, and an even longer journey to Baghdad, it would be only fitting for him to provide me with a refreshment. "Come on in," he says. He closed the door and locked it. What could be better than a cold Becks at Dover AFB on a Sunday morning at 9AM after a sleepless night? I ordered a second one. "But you haven't gotten your first one yet," he said, raising his eyebrows. "Never mind," I said as I moved closer to the bar, ever on the offensive, "Just give me two." I consumed them in rapid order and paid up.

I walked back to the terminal. It had begun to rain, the sky was cloudy and the eastern horizon even more so. The tall, lonely looking tails of the C5s on the flight line stuck up above the low-lying buildings, their profile as gray as the sky. The flight had been delayed even longer, due to the change out of aircraft, and now we were scheduled to leave at 8PM – twenty hundred hours. We would arrive in Moron, Spain the next morning sometime around 5AM – oh-five-hundred. The bus came, we climbed on board, drove down the flight line, got off the bus, walked up the telescoping stairways, secured our belongings and strapped in. The pilots started the plane's big engines. With the high pitched whine, we rolled slowly down the taxiways, turned onto the runway and accelerated. Sitting backwards, we felt the plane lift off. It shuddered and moaned as it began its slice through the sky and we heard creaks and felt the shudders when, not far out over the Atlantic Ocean, the flaps, slats, and landing gears were retracted. Within a short while, we were above thirty-five thousand feet flying basically east.

After a couple of hours, we were fed a meatloaf dinner with soft drinks. The meal, in fact, was not bad, or maybe I was just starved, or bored, or both. No wine but plenty of Sprite. The flight was uneventful. We could see nothing. Of course over the ocean, there is nothing to see anyway. Most everyone fell asleep, but I could not. I tried to sleep but each time I fell into some unconscious state, I would almost immediately wake up to the drone of the engines which continued to propel us toward the rising sun. I wondered what my life would be like over the next several months. As a result of my volunteering to go to Iraq for my company, my life back home was placed on hold. I walked around and looked at all the sleeping bodies, more like odd-shaped irregular lumps, and realized that although my life had been disrupted, I was not alone - a thought that would reoccur to me several times. As I met more and more people bound for Baghdad over the next many days, I took solace in the fact that we are all in the same boat, if not the same plane. The mix of people included almost as many women as men but in their military uniform everyone looked identical, except me, as I was not issued BDUs (Battle Dress Uniform, or what used to be called fatigues).

I listened to the engines churn as I have on so many trans-oceanic flights. They are all the same regardless of flight, that constant hum and sound of rushing air. I have sat in economy in a window, aisle and middle seat, in business class, and in first class. Obviously first class is the best, but as long as I have an aisle seat, economy class is tolerable, especially on a 747 because the size and space of the interior allows one to roam around. Not so, on the C5. The passenger deck is really quite small and access to the cargo deck is restricted to passengers. There is nowhere to walk or roam around. And the lighting is very poor. So I sat and thought. About what really, I can't remember, but mostly about trivial things. I was to recall other previous adventures of my going to Australia, Zaire, Israel, and other destinations. The fact that I have traveled all my life stemmed from a trip I made as a young boy of 6 with my mother and sister to California through the Mojave desert and how we left home at 4:00AM under a partially full moon that beamed light into the car, a light green 1954 Chevy to be exact, as we trundled west along Highway 66.

I was captivated by New Mexico and Arizona and the desert, having never seen anything like it. Still love the desert. So Iraq is a desert, right? Should be OK there. With my mind really wandering now, I thought about what I had brought with me and what I had failed to bring. As much as I have traveled I never seem to bring the right thing. I always carry a knife and scissors – but not in my briefcase these days - a small flashlight, and aspirin, etc. I like the clean taste of Listerine so I had purchased a large plastic quart bottle of Listerine, and fearing it would split open in my suitcase, lugged it with me. Hard to imagine. But these sort of logistical issues become major considerations when one travels. It can't be any different from going to the moon. One takes what one needs and packs it accordingly, commensurate with the length of trip and what's available at the other end. One finds that storage space in suitcases becomes an issue, a scarce resource. To be expert at packing is essential to a traveler. What did Marco Polo do? He had servants of course.

I worried about my mother and father and their health, and guilt began to creep into my mind when I realized I would not be close to them for a period of time. But my sis would be there to help them. Not that my parents are a burden or are in very bad shape or can't get around, it's just that they are not that mobile these days, and they like our company, and my sis and I like to be around them too. Why not?

I worried about my house and the leaves and the grass, all this nonsensical, inconsequential stuff. Did I bring Q-tips? Damn, I packed a bottle of cologne in my soft side suitcase. It'll get broken and everything will smell like Monsieur Rochas. The plastic bottle of rubbing alcohol! I left it in my suitcase. It'll leak and it's flammable. Stupid me. Listerine, well protected with me, not flammable, and rubbing alcohol, unprotected in my bags, flammable. Bad arrangement: bad decision. Further, all this liquid but, neglectful me, not a drop of bourbon. Stupid me again. Where was my brain? Where were my calculator and my palm pilot? I remembered packing them. Did I bring my charger for my digital camera? Oh yeah. I remember. I put the charger in the second suitcase. That's good - whew. My passport, wallet, and traveler checks are secure. That much I knew. What was the temperature at our current cruising altitude? About 57 degrees below zero, I thought. I worried about a package I sent to a friend. Would it arrive? I supposed it would. How would I submit my timesheets for work? Did I unload the dishwasher before leaving home? Couldn't remember. Does Kevin have my keys? Inconsequential thoughts with which to concern and amuse myself while at idle.

Bucephalus! I had been wrangling with the name for hours but could not remember it. Bucephalus was the name of Alexander the Great's horse. Alexander died in Babylon, south of Baghdad in 332 BC, or there about. Historians are not sure exactly how he died, from what malady, but to me, having had the disease, the descriptions of the symptoms indicated he died from malaria. But what was the name of his horse? Don't know why I thought of that, just not too much to ponder inside the plane at forty thousand feet. Robert E. Lee's horse was named Traveler, then there was Seabiscuit – just saw the movie – then there was Trigger, and Rosenante, Don Quixote's horse. At the Battle of Barasino in Russia, just south of Moscow, Napoleon's horse was named Marengo and Wellington's horse was named Copenhagen. But the name of Alexander's horse, for the life of me, I could not remember. The name escaped me. Then bingo: Bucephalus, that's it! Wide awake, rubbing my face and scratching my head. Looking around. Everyone asleep. No lights, cold inside. No noise except the engines. No voices. Perpetually dark.

I thought of my patio in late summer and the many dinners I have had there. The barbeque always ablaze, steaks and mushrooms, music, the table set with crystal and silverware and a tablecloth, great food and great friends. I remembered Kathy Keane and Tom and Alex, their grandson jumping on the pillows he had placed on the floor. I remembered the many times Tim and Hootie or Kevin would come by for coffee or beer, walking across the street to the Club, and the snow and the leaves, those, I would not miss. I thought of the Blooms next door and the deer in the yard. I thought of the parties I had given and how the police would come by to arrest drunken teenagers who, as they would discover, were older than the police.

My mind turned to my Afla Romeo – Alfa's can only be red, no other color -and how I would miss Sunday afternoons in August or early morning drives through the countryside, shifting through the gears at just the right RPM, listening to the engine, and how I have yet to perfect the gear transition from 5th down to 2nd and back up in a particularly tight "S" curve culminating in a sweeping left turn slightly uphill that I discovered on a secluded road in western Illinois. Like driving at Watkins Glen. Already in second gear having shifted down from 5th so that the torque of the engine as it's transferred to the rear wheels will carry me through the turn, I am accelerating with RPMs increasing to a matchpoint to begin shifting upwards again, first into 3rd and then, just at the apex of the exiting curve but just before exiting, into 4th. RPMs should be about 4500. But the turn is so acute and the shifting sequence so tight, I have never mastered it. Well, I almost did once but almost spun the car. Hope Kevin takes good care of the cars, especially the Alfa - it does leak oil a bit. Kevin always takes good care of the cars and my house so should be OK.

Regardless of all those idle thoughts and concerns, with which I entertained myself, I was on a C5 at forty one or forty two thousand feet; west to east, should be at an odd or even altitude, can't remember. Then again, the realization: none of these thoughts are consequential, and in fact are rendered moot. Nothing I can do now. Surely as Bucephalus carried Alexander east from Greece through Iraq to the Indus River and beyond 2300 years ago, in an attempt to capture the eastern sun and conquer everything beneath it, my own Pegasus was now carrying me and 34 other people plus a crew of about 10 east towards the rising sun too. But we had nothing to capture, nothing to conquer. All we had to do was our job and return home safely.

Still, my mind continued to ramble, stillness everywhere, can't read, nothing to drink, no cashew nuts, nothing to do but sit. The darkness pervaded. The plane droned on.

I looked at all the lumps in the seats. Some were moving, some were not. One soldier arose and stumbled to the bathroom tripping over gear and duffle bags and other things. Slowly, more people began to wake up. I looked at my watch, couldn't see it in the dark and couldn't remember which little button I had to depress to illuminate the dial. I couldn't tell if it was light or dark outside. All I knew was that we had not changed altitude. Regardless of how well I sleep on a plane, the slightest change in flight attitude or altitude, I am awake. So far, we were level. The USAF flight attendants – airmen, or rather air women – were awake and stirring around and I could smell something cooking in the ovens. Breakfast was soon to be served. I arose from my seat, and made my way to the galley for some coffee. No breakfast for me - not that early, whatever time it was - but coffee definitely. I tripped over the same bags that the soldier had tripped on. For such a big plane, there was so little room in the passenger deck. Breakfast was served and consumed by the uniformed passengers and quickly taken away. Pretty efficient. After breakfast and the long line for the bathroom, the air woman said through the loudspeaker laconically, "We will begin our descent in two zero minutes, landing in four zero minutes. Secure your belongings." With that the cabin came to life with everyone busy rearranging their things. Poncho liners were being rolled up, bags were re-packed, and in general everyone was in everyone's way. There was no riot – no need for that - but there was chaos as each of us tried to find our way in the dim light and find things and store belongings. But in time, we all settled back into our seats, with everything restored. We felt the change in altitude in our ears, and we could sense the plane's attitude as it dipped and leveled off and dipped again, and turn to new headings. Then the loudspeaker spoke to us again "Secure your seatbelts, we will be landing in Moron, Spain in one five minutes." I never felt the plane turn to its downwind or base leg of the landing approach but I heard the variable whines of the engines as the pilot made power setting adjustments on the big engines to control altitude and descent. Up and down, then down more, then up again to maintain the plane on its landing glide slope. I heard the flaps and leading slats being extended and then I heard the wheel bay doors open and the large clunking noise of the landing gears themselves being extended and locked into position. There was a loud rushing sound as the air swirled around the wheel wells and landing gears. Spain. What a way to come to Spain, I thought. The song: "Blue Spanish Eyes." How long will we be here? I wondered to myself. Warm weather, Barcelona, Spanish taverns, Spanish days, beaches, bright sun, wine, more beaches, elegant clothes, Sitges, Las Pampas, guitar music, warm Mediterranean sea, more beaches, …my mind was on fire. Spain! I was ready.

The C5 touched down on the runway as it had done in Dover. But C5s don't really touch down. That is, they don't exactly kiss the runway. They impose themselves upon it, they thunder onto it making the ground beneath it shudder, with swirls of vortices spinning off the wingtips making tornado-like noises, moving the air mass to the side with a sudden rush, stirring up dust, scaring all the birds, and making itself known, inserting itself on an otherwise tranquil scene. Smoke from the tires, I imagined, would bathe the entire area in blue smoke. Spain. We had arrived in Spain. Let me out. Which way to the beach?

We deplaned via the steep metal stairway, still dangerous but everyone made it out safely and we were loaded onto a bus and taken to the transit terminal. I had heard we would be there 12 hours. Fantastic! Where's the beach and where are the women? I sat right behind the bus driver and asked him, what there was to do here. "Nothing." "What?" I was incredulous! Spain? Nothing? Can't be. "Transit passengers can't get off the base." "Can't get off the base?" "Nope" "You mean I am in Spain for twelve hours and can't get off this base?" "You got it buddy. That's what I said" Ever resourceful, I asked, "Any Cerveza? "Not till noon at the restaurant around the corner." "Not till noon?" What kind of country is this?" The day was not starting very well for ole Gar.

The Lt. Colonel rounded us all up and, pointing over her shoulder, said "Breakfast is over there," and pointing in another direction, continued "showers are way over there across the courtyard. Be back at this location no later than eighteen hundred hours for a twenty-one hundred hour departure." I looked at my watch. Useless. I had not changed time to account for the time zone difference. What time is it? I asked. "It's oh-six-thirty," came the reply from an airman, or rather a ground man. My mind wasn't working. I, as well as everyone else on the plane, had a half day to kill in Spain, at a nowhere place called Moron, on a joint US/ Spanish military air base. This would be a long day. Make the most of it. Stashed my things, along with everyone else, in a corner of the terminal, sought out the showers. Found some nearer than across the courtyard. "Are you an officer, sir?" "You bet." "Right this way, towels are on the shelf." "Thanks." I was really getting in to this. Back for some more coffee, had a coke instead and walk around. Lots of US military people. Another C5 landed from the east, having entered the landing pattern at a classic 45 degree angle, turning downwind to the west, then onto its base leg, and final landing with the usual thunder. Then another. Now there were two C5s from Dover and one from Travis AFB all in single file. I could tell where the planes were from because the markings on the tail spelled out their home base. There were more aviation assets in one place here than in most air forces in the world. Not by number, but by value and certainly by size.

I walked around the entire base and stopped to look at two airplanes on display. One was an F5 trainer sitting at a slight upward angle on a concrete pedestal. What a tiny airplane. The other was some sort of sea-capable albatross, so low to the ground the grounds people could not cut the grass from beneath the fuselage. I looked at my watch that I had corrected for the correct time zone. Two hours to go: two hours to cerveza. Some guy had a satellite phone. I asked to use it and called Melanie at her home and told her where I was. "How are the beaches?' she asked. "Can't get off the base," I responded. "You're in Spain and can't get off the base? Maybe you're too old," she said. "Nope, no can do." She laughed. I inquired about her new house and her bowling game. "I don't bowl until Wednesday night," she said. I knew that. I just like to rib her and make her laugh.

By 10:00AM I had had enough. It worked in Dover, it'll work here. I strolled around the main terminal building and across a wood bridge that spans a very tiny creek, dry, and around another corner to the café. There it was, in typical European style: small Mediterranean-type tables outside, red and white table cloths - there's hardly a restaurant in the States that has table cloths anymore - condiments placed on the tables, and the door to the café open with more tables and a revolving ceiling fan. This is looking good. "Aberto?" No, that's not right. That's Italian. C'est Ouvre?" Can I say that here? Not correct in either language. What is Spanish for "Are you open?" A waiter, or maybe he was the maitre d', with a mustache and a white apron wrapped about his waist, asked me in perfect English "Would you like to have a beer?" Surprised, I asked "But are you open?" "No, came the response, but if you would like to have beer, I'll get you one. Have a seat." "Fantastic. Is it cold?" "Sir, I have been around you Americans here too long not to know that you all like your beer cold." What a treat. "Large or small?" he asked. Silly question. "Large please, or should I say por favor?" He smiled, went inside while I took a seat at one of the small tables outside. He returned with a cold mug and a large bottle of Spanish beer. Then he said "Actually the bar is not open. If you wanted draft beer you would have had to wait, but with bottle beer, there is no time limit." "You mean to tell me I have been walking all around here with not a thing to do and I could have come here before now and had a beer?"

"Si Senor."

By noon all 35 of us were congregated around the outside tables enjoying one cold beer after another. The steak lunch with French Fries was, of itself, not bad. By one o'clock, the place was packed with Americans and Spaniards alike in various uniforms and civilians clothes. Love the European style of dining. The Americans rushed in, wolfed down their meals, while the Europeans sat about drinking wine, liqueurs, and smoked a variety of cigars and cigarettes. Meals are a social affair. Europeans never seem as uptight as do we Americans. I wonder why that is. With all the freedom we have, why are we so uptight? Though we were far from the beach, the scene resembled a beach side café at a small resort. Had to use my imagination, admittedly. We stayed there all afternoon. The camaraderie was great and to be honest, I think that's what we all needed. The previous days had been hectic and sleepless and very inconvenient and we all needed a break. I didn't feel sleepy.

We eventually boarded the bus for the short trip to the plane and went through the same routine to find our seats on the upper deck, dark as usual, same smells, same dingy paint scheme, same utilitarian environment. We were in the same dark passenger area, with the same dimly lit capacious cargo bay below and same crew. All on board, seated, same safety briefing, seatbelts, life preservers. No one was listening. With the scream of the engines shattering our ears, we blasted down the runway, lifted into the dark sky, finally this time, to Baghdad.

Never one for boredom and always seeking some sort of adventure, I asked an airman if it was possible to see the cockpit. He called forward on the intercom and then nodded that it was OK. We unlocked the gate to the stairway and, step by step, descended the stairs. We crept along in between the cargo to the front of the plane and up another flight of steel stairs to the control center of the airship (you know, a C5A is really not an airplane, it's a flying ship).

We entered the cockpit through a narrow door. The cockpit was dark, being illuminated only by green, yellow, and red lights from the gages and other smaller lights of various other colors around the cockpit denoting the position of this or that. It was all business. The flight engineer's massive panel with thousands of gauges for the engines and other flight systems and panel switches and diagrams sat to the right. Two flight engineers sat at the console. One was in training. In front of the flight engineer's deck sat the pilot and the copilot separated by a large console filled with more switches and the four throttles and other levers. In front of them were TV screens filled with all sorts of visual flight data surrounded by intricate hi-tech stuff. The pilot handed me a set of headphones so I could talk to and hear them. I put them on, and the pilot showed me how to key the mike with a button on the cord. I keyed it and said "How are you guys?" It's always strange to hear my own voice through a headset. The pilot answered, "Fine sir, how are you?" The pitch of the voice surprised me. The pilot was a woman. I have met women pilots before, mostly on commercial flights: the first one being Laura Boswell on an American Airlines Flight, a Boeing 757, between Chicago and Miami 10 years ago. Then of course there was that female B52 pilot, Kelly Flynn, I believe, or some such name, who was surplussed a few years ago for having an affair with another officer. This, when Clinton was in office, I think. Maybe not. Wasn't he in office then? Seems like it. Can't remember exactly. But a C5A pilot? Wow! I was startled to hear a "her" voice and not a "him" voice in the cockpit of the C5. It was more or less unexpected. The pilot showed me all the instruments, some I knew, some I didn't, and told me about the flight path, etc. All very interesting. There was a huge lightning storm to our left over Sicily that would light up the entire night sky. We plowed along across the Mediterranean Sea forever and inexorably towards Iraq and fate of the unknown.

I stayed in the cockpit for about an hour and then returned to my seat; down the stairs from the cockpit, along the cargo deck, back up the stairs, and back into the tunnel which I came to call it, because it was always so dark. Found my seat, and tried to sleep but still could not. Nothing else to do and nothing to see.

I was still awake when we entered Iraq Air space from Turkey by my watch, lit now by my flashlight I had retrieved. Estimating, I somehow figured we had just maybe two hours or so to go, maybe less. There was some coffee - well instant coffee - and I had a few cups. No more meals were to be served.

The engines continued their low song and the plane jostled slightly.

Then came the startling combat entry announcement that would signal the end of the long voyage. Seeing nothing, we felt the plane lose altitude and then plunge. The sudden drop forced our bodies up in the seatbelts as the pull of gravity was lessened and we became lighter in our seats. The plane twisted left and right, not violently, but very noticeably. We were wing high on the left (my right) and wing low on the right (my left). Then the pilot pushed the throttles forward and we were now out of the free fall and climbing fast, then left wing down, then right, then left again, then right again, the power off and down we went, left and right, then descending very quickly, we were now slipping along at a fast pace. I could tell because the engines accelerated and we felt the plane lunge ahead. Left, then right, then left again. Jesus, a person could become air sick up here, especially since there was no reference horizon. Quite frankly, we were along for the ride. Seems to me I have used that expression to describe the situation a friend of mine found himself in over Thanh Hoa, Vietnam in 1967 As the backseater of an F4 that had been hit, he then, like me now, was along for the ride. The landing gear doors opened and the wheels were extended. I could hear the motors as they actuated the mechanical screws to move the flaps and the slats out from the body of the wing. We maintained a high speed and I could feel the plane dip, then flare slightly and the familiar thunder of the landing enveloped our senses, sending shudders through each of our bodies as we sat strapped inside. Then the brakes and the reversers as the throttles revved the engines up to slow us down; and then stop. We had landed at BIAP – Baghdad International Airport- BIAP. There was no denying that the woman major who flew the plane was an expert. She had done that many times before. She knew what she was doing every inch of the way and we landed safely. There was also no denying that we were here. The trip was over. We were in Baghdad. The date was September 30, 2003. Time: oh-three hundred.

The C5 taxied to what I assumed would be the terminal and parked. Engines shut down, for a moment there was stunned quiet. I think no one was particularly ready to disembark from the plane. But within the next few seconds, the Lt. Colonel made a brief announcement that a) we had arrived, b) be sure to collect all your things, and c) be safe when descending the stairs. Again, we would not be descending from the top portal like normal human beings. We would be exiting the plane down the internal stairs more or less like monkeys swinging through threes with all of our things encumbering each of us. Had to be careful. The door opened and one by one we left the C5 from dark into dark. There were no lights. We were not parked even near the terminal. In fact we were on the extreme other side of the airport. The silhouette of the terminal could be slightly discerned. The dry night air was redolent of the desert. I could smell it.

Once on the ground, the Lt. Colonel gathered us all up, and we climbed onto a waiting bus and other military vehicles that would take us to the "other" terminal. We rode for about 2 minutes, without headlights, to a small area that was a cross between a deserted dilapidated ranch, a ramshackle junkyard, and a dump like what one may imagine might exist in Nogales. But, the dump was inhabited with strange people in uniform with an American flag on their right upper arm. We climbed down from the bus and other vehicles and stood wondering where we were. To the right there were big pallets. Behind, some conex boxes, to the right, more conex boxes, and in front, the processing place. I would like to say processing hall or room, but it was neither. The tent that posed as a building with screen doors and plywood floor was so covered in dust that it looked like a brown façade building. We went inside for no real reason and were immediately met with a large screen TV with CNN – have come to dislike CNN – and chairs for comfortable viewing, chairs covered with dust and footprints from soldiers sleeping on the them as they waited for a flight to some other destination.

There was a counter with soldiers and computers behind it and opposite the counter, there was a bank of 4 or 5 telephones that connected to no one. Next door was another tent for passenger services. And in between the two there were make-shift tents with cots on the ground and soldiers sprawled all over them, some stripped to their t-shirts. It was that hot at 3AM. Guns, helmets, and vests were strewn about but no doubt they were all accounted for. It was difficult walking in between the cots because there were soldiers sleeping on the ground too. They must be exhausted. Dust was so thick that in a matter of moments everyone was coughing and sneezing. Me too. There were few lights and the light inside the tent rooms was very dim and eerie. Soldiers came through and processed. Processed for what I am not sure. Outside, the team of soldiers with whom I had arrived had found places to lie down. Some in the chairs, some on pallets, and one on a broken cot. The Lt. Colonel laid down on an empty pallet and was out like a light but her hand was on her weapon. We all knew where she was and no one disturbed her. The C5 was being unloaded and the only lights on the tarmac were those provided by the internal light systems of the plane. Forklifts began bringing the pallets to the marshalling area stirring up the dust even more, and there was a constant stream of vehicles between where we were and the plane.

After about 2 hours, the crew closed the cargo doors of the C5 and began its start up procedures. Now for the first time I heard the engines from outside the plane. The plane lumbered to the end of the runway with its landing lights on and turned and immediately accelerated and lifted off the runway. The pilots extinguished all lights and the plane disappeared in the darkness of the Iraqi night.

An amazing site to behold: a MIG 25 sans wings and tail was being loaded into a C17 cargo plane. The MIG-25 was designed and built to counter the SR71 spy plane. The engines are 5 feet in diameter and the plane must be 80 feet long. What an amazing piece of machinery. The plane was found wrapped in plastic and buried along with three other MiG-25s somewhere in the desert. This one would find a new home in Ohio at Wright Patterson AFB. I imagine the wings and tail section were shipped on another flight. I walked all around the plane as the crew was tying it down with cables and chains. The only other cargo item in the plane was a mountain bike. After awhile, the C17 closed its doors and taxied and lifted off into the air and disappeared in the darkness of the Iraqi sky, bound for the USA via Spain.

The earth, rotating east, rendered the post-midnight sky dark gray and then a lighter shade. Finally, snoring lumps could be seen clearly spread all over the place and soon these lumps began to rise, and yawn and cough and stagger around. What was the name of that book by James Jones? "The Thin Red Line" In it, he states there is no sound equal to that of a rifle company waking up in the early morning. What a racket!

Dawn was here and not long afterwards the sun slipped up over the horizon and suffused the area with a yellow glow. The true essence of the cargo and passenger receiving point was revealed by the dawn. The area was a mess with debris and disorganization of things: pallets, equipment, material, vehicles, piles of debris, piles of gravel and sand, wires, pipes, shipping containers, barbed wire, revetments of sorts, everything. Helicopters began to land and take off and the dust in the air became thicker due to the rotor blades and ground vehicles that met the landing helicopters. The relative quiet of the early pre-dawn morning was now a stir with the noise of various pieces of equipment and aircraft departing and helicopters landing. The closest thing I ever came to this scene was the movie "MASH." Flies were now awake and aggressively flying around our faces. A pall of smog hung over what I supposed was the city located to the east (I at least knew the airport was west of the city). How bizarre everything was. What a strange environment I now found myself in. The Lt. Colonel advised us we would convoy into town at ten hundred hours and we had to "form up" at oh nine hundred. By eight o'clock, there were so many vehicles that the dust became intolerable. Everyone was carrying a rifle or machine gun. Lots of military people were milling around and we civilians – me - looked totally out of place with flak jacket and helmet but no uniforms – not that I wanted one, but hey, gotta fit in.

"Everyone gather around," came the instructions. We met Sergeant Major Gary Thompson replete with a Clint Eastwood type cigar dangling from his mouth. Actually, I was told he's not a sergeant major at all, he just plays the role. He began: "You do as I say and you will arrive safe in Baghdad." Not safely, but rather, safe. Then he looks at me. "You with this chalk?" (I know what "chalk" means. It means group or squad or platoon. They used to say "stick," I think, but now its "chalk." I'm a quick learner.) "Yes sir," I say. He looks me up and down taking careful notice of my attire, and then continues, "This is a six vehicle convoy into town with humvees fore and aft of the chalk (chalk again). We have 50 calibers in front and M240s behind and I think a grenade launcher bringing up the rear. Is this right, Major Cory? All drivers are expected to maintain their positions. Everyone will wear their kevlars. Put all your things in the truck There is no room in the bus or the other vehicles. You can collect your gear when we arrive at IPC. Now let's see…," as he points to me. "You there, you come with me. I'll have to drop you off at another place but we need to take these people to their billets first." The sergeant major stood slumped shoulder, smoking his cigar and looked at me as he scratched the stubble on his face, and, with the cigar still in his mouth, said in my face "You got BDUs?" "No sir," I said, "They didn't give me any in the States, but I have my helmet and my vest." The temperature was already 90 degrees. I wondered whether I should salute. Not going to. And just how does one assemble this helmet? I had a problem. My gear was issued in Virginia, but I was not issued a chin strap. A person has to be resourceful in moments like this. Undaunted, I walked around and approached a soldier who had worked through the night. He was sitting on a pallet. "Say, do you know where I can get a chin strap for my helmet?" Sure," he says. "Come with me." He took me to a shipping container and opened the door. About a hundred things fell out. Like a scene straight out of MASH, he says "Lost and Found." The container contained abandoned equipment. He rummages through the container and finds a helmet and takes the chin strap off of it and gives it to me. "There you go, guy. Be cool." "Thanks," I said. Back to my formation and within 20 minutes we were loaded into buses and SUVs for the ride into Baghdad from BIAP.

I was with the sergeant major and the Lt. Colonel and Major Cory Spencer who were wearing all their gear. I think he even had a canteen. With his M16 loaded, the Major climbed into the SUV, closed the door and then turned to us in the backseat. We will go fast, if anything happens we will drive through it. Get as low as possible. Fasten your seatbelts." Then turning to the sergeant major, seated behind the steering wheel, he asked, "Do you have anything Mr. Thompson?" Throwing the cigar out the window, the sergeant major just said "Keep your head down. Let's go." He threw the SUV into gear and we formed up within the convoy: a 50 caliber machine gun mounted on the humvee in front, then the bus, then us, one other vehicle, and then the rest of the military vehicles. Never saw the humvee with the grenade launcher. Away we went into Baghdad. We left the airport cantonment area and we were among them: Iraqis were everywhere, unbelievable traffic, noise, dust, confusion, traffic, exhaust fumes, more dust, and heat. The major turned to the Lt. Colonel and asks "Mam , do you have a weapon?" "Yeah, but I don't have any rounds." And with that response, the major takes from his pocket a clip of 9mm bullets and hands the clip backwards over his right shoulder to the Lt. Colonel, who smartly inserts it into the handle of her Beretta. Oh man. An M16 out the window a Beretta pistol next to me, and a 50 caliber machine gun up ahead. This is the real McCoy, I thought. We literally bounced through traffic, around road blocks manned by Americans, past a waiting M1 Abrams tanks, past other humvees, and up on curbs, on the shoulders, and around traffic. We caused a small collision but kept on going.
